Again, Some take the word Gold here metaphorically for any precious thing, take the word North metaphorically alſo for any evil thing, that is, for any affliction, trouble, or ſorrow which we meet with in this World; theſe are indeed as a cold chilling North-wind, and ſo they will needs give the ſence of this Scripture myſtically thus, Out of the North cometh precious things; that is, afflictions (which are as a chilling North-wind) make us more precious; or, through cold chilling afflictions, we are made more and more precious. Job ſaith, and this Text may have ſuch an alluſion (and I give it no further) to that (Chap. 23.10.) When he hath tried me, I ſhall come forth Gold; that is, I ſhall come forth precious. Whether God doth try us by the North or by the South, whether by the heat of proſperity, or by the cold of adverſity, if we are under his tryal, and are faithful, we come out Gold, we come out more precious from our tryals, than we came in. The Apoſtle hath a like alluſion (1 *Pet.*1.6,7.) Ye are now for a ſeaſon in heavineſs (if need be) through manifold temptations, (that is, troubles, tribulations and afflictions) That the tryal of your faith, being much more precious than of Gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found to praiſe, &c. Thus Out of the North comes Gold, or this precious thing, a tried faith. That's a truth from the allegorical ſenſe of this place; but I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

The proper meaning is, Elihu would have Job, and all men know, God hath his ſeveral Climates or places, out of which he ſends and diſpenſeth fair atd foul weather; foul weather cometh out of the South, and fair out of the North.

Out of the North cometh fair weather.

צפן Abſcondit, occultavit, hinc צפון ſeptentrio, aquilo, quaſi abſcondita, quia ſol ibi multo per annum tempore non conſpiciatur.

The Hebrew word rendred North, ſignifieth hiding, becauſe the remote parts of the North are much hidden from the Sun, a great part of the year being quite dark; and therefore the Northern Climate may well be called the hidden part of the World. Some put a Queſtion upon thoſe words of David (Pſal.75.6.) Promotion cometh neither out of the Eaſt, nor out of the Weſt, nor from the South: Here are three of the four Winds ſpecified, and it is ſaid, Promotion comes from neither of them. But why is it not alſo ſaid, that Promotion comes not from the North? That's the Queſtion. I anſwer, It were anſwer enough to ſay, that we ought not to put queſtions curiouſly about ſuch things; it ſhou'd ſatisfie us that the Spirit of God is pleaſed to ſay it is ſo, and no more. Yet ſome tell us, the reaſon why it is not ſaid, Promotion cometh not from the North, is, becauſe indeed it cometh out of the North, which, ſay they, is intimated in the Hebrew word for the North, which ſignifieth hidden or ſecret. Promotion comes not from the Eaſt, nor Weſt, nor South, but from the North, (ſaith this Author) it comes from the North in a figure or myſtery, that is, it comes from ſome hidden providence or ſecret hand, which many take no more notice of, than we do of the furtheſt part of the North. God promotes many in this World to power, and ſends them great proſperity, we ſee not how or which way: The cauſes and contrivances of it are hidden cloſe, and in the breaſt of God. This alſo is a truth; in that ſence we may ſay, Fair weather cometh from the North. Promotion is viſible, but the manner of it is a ſecret, we ſee not the cauſes for which, nor the ways in which it cometh. It is enough to touch theſe niceties, and to touch them can do no hurt, while the matter ariſing from them, hath the clear conſent of, and is harmonious with other plain places of Scripture. Fair weather cometh out of the North, and (as it followeth)

With God is terrible Majeſty.

This is the Epiphonema, the exulting concluſion of both theſe verſes, yea, of Elihu's large diſcourſe concerning the works of God in Naturals. As if Elihu had ſaid, All theſe things God doth; and tell me then, is not terrible Majeſty with God? In God, or with God is terrible Majeſty. The word which we render Majeſty, comes (ſay Grammarians) from a root which ſignifies to confeſs, to acknowledg, to celebrate, becauſe Majeſty, Greatneſs, or Excellency is and ought to be much acknowledged, confeſt, and celebrated: The word notes in general, any laudable or praiſe-worthy thing. With God all that is, which is worthy to be and ought to be commended, praiſed, honoured by men and Angels. We tranſlate well, With God is Majeſty: Others, With God is praiſe. Jacob ſaith of Judah, the Kingly Tribe (Gen. 49. 8.) Thou art he whom thy Brethren ſhall praiſe. The Vulgar Latine expreſſeth it thus;

הוד Celſitudo, Majeſtas; à ידה quidem deducunt, quod eſt confiteri, celebrare, laudare. ἐπὶ τῷ θεῷ μεγάλη ἡ δόξα. Theod. ἐπὶ δὲ θεῷ φοβερὸς αἶνος. Symmach.

With God is fearful praiſe. Some read the words as a Doxology, or giving of glory unto God, not as we, with God is terrible Majeſty, but, unto God be reverent or terrible Majeſty; that is, let the Glory and Majeſty of God be acknowledged in all theſe things, which have been ſpoken of, in all thoſe ſtrange changes and impreſſions which he works in the Air, and which are obvious unto the eyes of the Children of men. With God is Majeſty; with God is praiſe, or unto God be praiſe for all his works; and not only praiſe and Majeſty, but Ad Deum formidoloſa laudatio. Vulg.

Terrible Majeſty.] Majeſty to be feared, to be reverenced, to be dreaded, to be trembled at. With God is terrible Majeſty.

Hence Note, Firſt, Majeſty belongs eminently unto God.

With God is Majeſty. As the Scripture, ſpeaking of power, ſaith, Power belongeth unto God (Pſal. 62. 11.) that is, properly, and fundamentally all power is in God; whatever power is in the Creature, it is but a derivative from Gods power. So Majeſty is originally and fundamentally in God, what-ever the Majeſty of the Kings and Princes of this World is, it is but a ſtream, a ray iſſuing from the Majeſty of God, or, as the Greek verſion hath it, from his Magnificence. We may diſcern the Majeſty of God in every thing that he is, or is ſpoken of him; the Majeſty of God is in his Greatneſs, his is a Great Majeſty: the Majeſty of God is in his Highneſs, his is a High Majeſty, the Majeſty of God is in his Honour, his is a moſt Honourable Majeſty, the Majeſty of God is in his Word, he ſpeaks with Majeſty, his is a moſt Majeſtical Word; the Majeſty of God is in his Works, Majeſty is ſtampt and printed upon all that he doth. What ſhall I ſay? There is Majeſty in the Wiſdom of God, and Majeſty in the Juſtice of God, and Majeſty in the Goodneſs of God, and Majeſty in the Power of God, there is Majeſty in the Love of God, and there is Majeſty in the Wrath of God, there is Majeſty in the Truth and Faithfulneſs of God; every thing God hath, hath a Majeſty in it; therefore he is ſaid (Pſal. 93. 1.) to be clothed with Majeſty, (Pſal. 96. 6.) Honour and Majeſty are before him. I, ſaith David (Pſal. 145. 5.) will ſpeak of the Glorious Honour of thy Majeſty, and of thy wondrous works. Every where the Scripture ſets forth the Majeſty, the wonderful Majeſty of God.

Μεγαλοπρέπεια. Magnificentia.

Note, Secondly, Gods Majeſty is a terrible Majeſty.

The Majeſty of Kings is dreadful and terrible; but I may ſay, the Majeſty of Kings, the Majeſty of Solomon, and of Ahaſhuerus, the Majeſty of Nebuchadnezzar, and of Alexander, either, firſt, in their Robes; or, ſecondly, in their Buildings; or, thirdly, in their Feaſtings; or, fourthly, in their Followers and Attendants (which four do chiefly hold out the Majeſty of Princes) is but a mean thing, a very little thing, a nothing, in compariſon of the Majeſty, the Glorious Majeſty, the terrible Majeſty of God: His is a terrible Majeſty indeed. And therefore they are rebuked (Iſa. 26. 10.) Who will not behold the Majeſty of the Lord. What? Not behold ſuch a dreadful Majeſty! Such a terrible Majeſty! The Scripture ſets forth not only the Majeſty, but the terribleneſs of the Majeſty of God; read at leiſure, (Deut. 7. 21. Nehem. 9. 32. Pſal. 47. 2.) Therefore ſay unto God, how terrible art thou in thy works! (Pſal. 66. 3.) Say this unto God, for (verſ. 5.) He is terrible in his doings towards the Children of men, even to all ſorts of men, to the great as well as to the ſmall, to the high as well as to the low, to Princes as well as to the People (Pſal. 76. 12.) He is terrible to the Kings of the Earth. God is terrible in his Majeſty to thoſe who have the moſt terrible Majeſty. And as the Lord can appear terrible out of all places, ſo he is moſt terrible out of his holy places (Pſal. 68. 35.) that is, terrible Judgments are ſent by God out of his Sanctuaries or holy places, upon all them who prophane or deſpiſe, who pollute or abuſe his holy things. Take theſe two Inferences from the conſideration of the terrible Majeſty of God.

Firſt, We need not fear the terribleneſs of any Creature, while we have the terrible Majeſty of God with us. As he hath been, ſo ſtill he is (as the Prophet ſpake, Iſa. 25. 4, 5.) A ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat, when the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm againſt the wall. And therefore the Prophet concluded in the latter end of verſe 5. The branch of the terribles one ſhall be brought low.

Secondly, If God hath ſuch terrible Majeſty, then, as it is a comfort to his people againſt the terrible ones, ſo what a terrour ſhould this to be to thoſe who are not his people, eſpecially to thoſe who are openly rebellious, who kick againſt his Majeſty, and will not behold with reverence the Majeſty of the Lord! Let them remember, With God is terrible Majeſty. The Prophet foretels a day, wherein the Majeſty of the Lord will teſtifie the moſt potent ſinners, and make them at their wits end (Iſa. 2. 10, 12, 19, 21.) Enter into the Rock, and hide thee in the duſt, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty. For the day of the Lord of Hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he ſhall be brought low; it ſhall be upon the Cedars of Lebanon, &c. that is upon thoſe that are high like the Cedars of Lebanon, and ſtrong like the Oaks of Baſhan: And they ſhall go into the holes of the Rocks, and into the Caves of the Earth, &c. And why all this? The Text anſwers (verſe 19.) For fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ſhall ariſe to ſhake terribly the Earth. O the terribleneſs of Gods Majeſty, to all thoſe who tremble not at his Majeſty! To the proud, who are lifted up in their own thoughts, who are high in their own imaginations! Yea, the Majeſty of the Lord will be terrible to all impenitent ſinners in that day, I may ſay, more diſtinctly, in theſe four days.

Firſt, In the day of Conſcience, or when their own Conſciences are a terrour to them. How ſad is it for a man to have God and his own Conſcience terrible to him at once! When ſinners are awakened, When God ſets their ſins in order before them, they are a terrour to themſelves, as it is ſaid of Paſhur (Jer. 20. 3.) The Lord hath not called thy name Paſhur, but Magor Miſſabib, that is, fear round about; I will make thee a terror to thy ſelf, thy own Conſcience ſhall be terrible to thee. A man had better fall into the hands of the moſt cruel Tyrants in the World, than into the hands of his own Conſcience. But when a man is a terror to himſelf, then to have the Lord a terror to him likewiſe, to have God appearing in terrible Majeſty, how dreadful is it! The awakened Conſcience of a ſinner carrieth in it, as a thouſand witneſſes, ſo a thouſand terrors; and God in his anger is more terrible than a thouſand Conſciences.

Secondly, God is terrible to ſinners, in the day of outward trouble, when, as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 65. 5.) By terrible things in righteouſneſs he anſwereth the prayers of his People. When God is doing terrible things in the World, how miſerable is their caſe, to whom God alſo is a terror in that day! A godly man when God is doing the moſt terrible things, ſhaking Heaven and Earth, and (as it were) pulling the World about our ears, yet, becauſe he finds God at peace with him, he is well enough. But as for impenitent ſinners, when God is doing terrible things, what will become of them? I may beſpeak them in the words of the Prophet (Iſa. 10. 3.) What will ye do in the day of your viſitation, and in the deſolation which ſhall come from far? To whom will ye flee for help, and where will ye leave your glory? As if he had ſaid, who, or what can be a comfort to you, when God is a terror to you? And therefore, another Prophet fore-ſeeing ſuch a terrible day coming, makes this earneſt deprecating prayer (Jer. 17. 13.) O Lord, be not thou a terror to me in the evil day. I know an evil, a terrible day is at hand, but Lord I beg this of thee, that thou wilt not be a terror to me in that day; if men ſhould be a terror to me, and God a terror too, it would be inſupportable. Yet thus it will be with the unrighteous, when God doth terrible things in righteouſneſs, and ſuch things he will do in the latter days. Take heed, leſt God appear with terrible Majeſty to you, in ſuch a day.

Thirdly, How terrible is God to impenitent ſinners (when awakened) in the day of Death! What is Death? In this Book Death is called The King of Terrors. Now, if when Death is making its approaches to a perſon, who lives in a contempt of the ways and word of God, if when his breath ſits upon his lips, ready to depart, and the King of Terrors is ready to tear his caul, and to rend his heart-ſtrings aſunder, if then, I ſay, God appears in terrible Majeſty, what condition will ſuch a one be in? To have Death the King of Terrors, and the Living, the ever-living God in terrible Maieſty falling upon a poor Creature at once, is a thouſand deaths at once.

Fourthly, What will ſinners do in the day of Judgment: That will be a terrible day indeed. The Apoſtle (2*Cor.*5. 10.) having ſaid, We muſt all appear before the Judgment ſeat of Chriſt, to receive according to what we have done in the Body, whether good or bad; preſently adds, knowing therefore the terrour of the Lord, we perſwade men; that is, knowing how terrible the Lord will be to impenitent ſinners, to all whom he finds in their ſins, knowing this terror of the Lord, and how terrible the Majeſty of the Lord will be to ſuch, in that day, we perſwade men, we do all we can to pluck them out of their ſins, and turn them to God in Chriſt Jeſus, who ſaves his people from their ſins; for, to be ſure, that will be a moſt dreadful day to ſinners. Thus the Majeſty of God will be terrible to the wicked and ungodly, eſpecially in theſe four days. Only they who fear the Lord and take hold of his name by faith, ſhall be able to ſtand before his terrible Majeſty. God will not be a terror, but a comfort, to them that fear him in every evil day.

Further, The word (as was ſhewed before) ſignifies not only Majeſty, but Praiſe, With God is terrible praiſe, dreadful praiſe.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Lord is moſt praiſe-worthy.

With the Lord is praiſe. The Pſalmiſt every where ſets forth the praiſe-worthineſs of God, and preſſes this duty upon us. I ſhall not ſtay upon it, only remember, with the Lord is praiſe, that is, he is to be praiſed. And from the attribute of his praiſe, or that, with the Lord is terrible praiſe,

Note, Secondly, Even in thoſe things which the Lord doth moſt graciouſly for us, and is to be highly praiſed by us (even in thoſe) he is to be feared, dreaded, and reverenced.

God is to be praiſed, not only with joy and thankfulneſs, but with fear and reverence; for with him is terrible praiſe. It is the expreſs word of Moſes, in his ſong after the deſtruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea (Exod. 15.11.) Who is a God like unto thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes? We ſhould not be afraid to praiſe God, no, we ſhould be moſt forward to praiſe him, but we ſhould have a holy fear upon our hearts, when we praiſe him. Praiſe is the work of Heaven, from whence fear ſhall for ever be baniſhed; there will be perfect love, and perfect love caſts out fear, (1 John 4.18.) What-ever fear hath torment in it (as all fear out of Chriſt hath) we ſhall have nothing to do with in that bleſſed life: And even in this life, praiſe, which is the work of Heaven on Earth, ſhould be performed with ſuch a Spirit of love, and joy as is without all baſe, tormenting fear; we ſhould have ſo much love to God in, and for all the good things he doth, for our Souls eſpecially, yea and for our Bodies too, in dealing out daily mercies, that it ſhould caſt out all that fear which hath torment in it. Yet there is a fear which ſhould poſſeſs our Spirits while we are praiſing God, a fear of reverence I mean, which fear (I doubt not) will remain in Heaven for ever; glorified Saints ſhall praiſe God with that fear, that is, having an everlaſting awe of the Majeſty of God upon their hearts. He is fearful in praiſes; and therefore let us ſo praiſe him, as remembering our diſtance, ſo praiſe him, as to be afraid of miſcarrying in the duty, and ſo inſtead of praiſing, diſpleaſe him, in ſtead of honouring, grieve him. This duty of praiſe is very dreadful. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, there is mercy; or forgiveneſs, with thee, O Lord, that thou mayeſt be feared (Pſal. 130.4.) Not only is the Lord to be feared in his wrath and in the executions of his Juſtice, but he is to be feared in his mercy, and in that greateſt expreſſion of his favour towards us, the forgiveneſs of our ſins. When we are in the higheſt exaltations of the mercy of God, and of the God of our mercies, yet then ſhould our hearts be affected with his fear. It is both our duty and our commendation ſo to fear God, as not to ſin againſt him, or to be kept from ſinning againſt God by the fear of God, that is, leſt God ſhould puniſh us for our ſins, and give us to eat the bitter fruit of our own evil doings: But to fear God, becauſe we hear, and are aſſured, that he is ready to pardon our ſins, eſpecially, to fear him when he hath given us a comfortable aſſurance, that our ſins are pardoned; or, even then to be filled with the fear of his great and reverend Name, when we are actually praiſing him, and magnifying his free grace in Chriſt, for the pardon of them; this ſhews a truly gracious Spirit indeed. With God is terrible Majeſty, and with God is terrible praiſe; he is at once to be praiſed and feared. All this Elihu would fix upon the heart of Job, from the conſideration of the works of God, his providential works, in the Air; how much more ſhould this fear affect us, when we behold his terrible works of providence upon the Earth? Turning the World, as it were, upſide down, by the wonderful viciſſitudes and revolutions which his hand brings to paſs, reſpecting either Perſons and private Families, or whole Kingdoms and Nations. With God is terrible Majeſty.

VERS. 23, 24.

Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out; he is excellent in Power, and in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice: He will not afflict.

Men do therefore fear him: He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe of heart.

These two verſes conclude the whole diſcourſe of Elihu with Job. The verſe 23. is Doctrinal, the 24. is the Uſe or Application of the Doctrine.

In the verſe 23. we have a four-fold Doctrine held out concerning God.

Firſt, The Doctrine of his Incomprehenſibleneſs, We cannot find him out.

Secondly, Of his Power, He is the Almighty, he is excellent in Power.

Thirdly, Of his Righteouſneſs, he excells in Judgment, and plenty of Juſtice. But though he is thus full of Juſtice, yet he is alſo very Gracious, and therefore,

Fourthly, We have the Doctrine of his Mercy and Tenderneſs towards the Creature in the laſt words of the Verſe, He will not afflict. God is infinitely above man in Power and in Wiſdom, yet he never uſeth either the one or the other to the oppreſſion or wrong of any man; He will not afflict. This is a very ſuitable peroration of the whole Narrative or matter declared, which Elihu had ſo long inſiſted upon.

And having laid down this four-fold Doctrine concerning God, he ſhews us the uſe of it in verſe 24. where we have a practical Inference from what was before aſſerted concerning God; Men do therefore fear him, or, therefore men ought to fear him. As if he had ſaid, Seeing God is thus incomprehenſible, thus powerful, ſeeing he is thus excellent in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice, as alſo in Goodneſs and Mercy; therefore good men do, and all men ſhould fear him. This is a very natural and undeniable Inference, yet Elihu doth not leave it bare, but adds a ſtrong inforcement in the cloſe of the verſe, why all men, the greateſt of men, the wiſeſt of men ſhould fear God, For he reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart. The wiſeſt, the greateſt of men cannot carry it with God, by their wiſdom or policy, by their greatneſs or power, therefore let them fear him. This is the ſum and ſcope of theſe of theſe two verſes.

Verſe 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out.

That is, He is unſearchable and incomprehenſible. The Original ſtrictly read is, The Almighty, we cannot find him out. The Almighty, is a Nominative abſolute, as Grammarians ſpeak; we ſupply that word (Touching) As if he had ſaid, ſhould we enter upon a diſcourſe of the Almighty, we cannot find him out. Touching the Almighty. That, God is Almighty, and what the word Shaddai, here rendred Almighty, doth import, hath been ſhewed and opened already in other places of this Book, eſpecially in the fifth Chapter at verſe 17. and in the eight Chapter at the 3. and 5. verſes; thither I refer the Reader for further ſatisfaction in that matter, and paſs from it here; Touching the Almighty

שדי
Omnipotens nominativus abſolutè poſitus. Piſc.

We cannot find him out.] This alſo I ſhall paſs over in a word, having ſpoken to it more fully (*Chap.*11.7.) where Zophar puts this Queſtion, Canſt thou by ſearching find out God? Canſt thou find him out unto perfection? In which Queſtions, Zophar challenged Job, or any man elſe, to ſet their underſtandings upon the tenters, to put all their abilities to the utmoſt ſtretch, to find out God if they could, being aſſured they could not find him out unto perfection. So then, this aſſertion in the Text, We cannot find him out, bearing the ſame ſence with thoſe Queſtions, I ſhall not ſtay upon it. Only,

Note, God cannot be compaſt by the enquiries of man.

Touching the Almighty, we have but this to ſay of him, We cannot ſay much of him, or, how much ſoever we ſay of him, we ſay but a little of what he is, or of what may be ſaid of him, for we cannot find him out. We may find God, but we cannot find him out. God is to be found by every humble, faithful ſeeker of him. The Prophet (*Iſa.*55.6.) calls us to that duty of ſeeking with an aſſurance of finding, Seek ye the Lord whilſt he may be found; and ſo doth David (Pſ. 32.5.) For this, that is, for pardon of ſin, for grace and mercy, or, for this, that is, upon the experience which I have had of thy readineſs, O Lord, to pardon my ſins, even as ſoon as I confeſſed and acknowledged them, for this (I ſay) ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayeſt be found. God may be found to do us good, and ſhew us mercy, when we ſeek him rightly; there is a finding time, or a time when God may be found. Some give no other limit to this while, or finding time, than the limit of this life; and to be ſure if he be not found while we are in this Life, he can neither be ſought nor found after this Life. Yet more ſtrictly, to ſeek him while he may be found (as one of the Rabbins ſloſſeth that place) is to ſeek him before the Decree comes forth, as the Prophet Zephany ſpeaks (*Chap.*2.2.) It is poſſible we may ſeek God, and ſeek him too late, and then there's no finding of him; only they ſhall ſeek and find him, who ſeek him in the finding time, and they who do ſo ſhall certainly find, as was ſaid before, God ready to do them good, and ſhew them mercy.

Dum adhuc in hac vita eſtis. Rab. Jonath.
Deus invenire poteſt ubique & quovis tempore ante obſignata decreta. Aben-ezra.

But how much ſoever, or how early ſoever we ſeek him, we cannot find him out, that is, we cannot find out how good, how merciful God is, or the utmoſt extent of his goodneſs and mercy, which Zophar in the place before cited, calleth a finding of him out to perfection. I may give you a five fold Negative to ſhew wherein God cannot be found out.

Firſt, We cannot find him out as to the infiniteneſs of his Eſſence and Being, that's beyond the line of a created Underſtanding.

Secondly, We cannot find him out, as to the excellency of his Attributes, or the manner of his Being; who can tell how wiſe God is, how holy, how juſt, how powerful, how good! We may eaſily find his divine perfections all the World over, we may find them in every leaf of the Book of the Scripture, yea, in every leaf of the Book of the Creature, but we cannot find them out any where to perfection.

Thirdly, We cannot find out the depth of his Counſels. God hath ſome (Arcana) ſecrets which he hath reſerved in his own power, as Chriſt told his Diſciples in the firſt of the Acts (verſ. 6) when they would needs be prying into that ſecret of his counſel, the time of reſtoring the Kingdom to Iſrael. There are many counſels of God lockt up in his own boſom, which we cannot find out, nor muſt we be bold and curious in ſearching into them.

Fourthly, The Lord cannot be found out, no not in his works of Providence, which are acted outwardly, or by which he brings forth his counſels to act (*Pſ.*77.19.) His foot-ſteps are not known; not only are not any of his ſecret counſels known, but ſome of his very foot-ſteps, his treadings, his goings are not fully known. God goeth ſo that we cannot find where he goeth, he leaves no track (as we ſay) behind him (*Rom.*11.33.) How unſearchable are his Judgments (not only his counſels, but, how unſearchable are his Judgments) and his ways paſt finding out. That's the very expreſſion of the Text. There are many providences of God, which we find and feel, which we ſee, and cannot but ſee, yet we cannot find them out, that is, we are not able to give a direct anſwer why God doth this or that, nor how this or that was done. Conſider that Scripture (2*Chron.*31.20,21.) where we have a moſt ſingular character of Hezekiah, and of his government; Thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and wrought that which was good, and right, and truth, before the Lord his God; and in every work that he began in the ſervice of the Houſe of God, he did it with all his heart, and proſpered. So the 31. Chapter concludes; yet the 32. begins thus, After theſe things, and the eſtabliſhment thereof, Sennacherib King of Aſſyria came and entred into Judah, and encamped againſt the fenced Cities. One would have thought, Hezekiah being thus zealous for the Reformation of the Church of God, in Judah and Jeruſalem, and having done all that concerned it with a perfect heart, that ſurely ſuch a Prince ſhould have lived in peace and proſpered all his days; yet, preſently his Kingdom was invaded by a potent enemy, Sennacherib comes againſt him, and fills him, and all his people, with fear of utter ſubverſion. This was a ſecret of providence, very hard to find out, a depth, which who can fathom? That when a good King with his Counſel, had been indeavouring a true Reformation, and that with a perfect heart, he ſhould preſently ſee War at his Gates. Solomon ſaith (*Prov.*16.7.) When a mans ways pleaſe the Lord, he makes his enemies to be at peace with him: Yet it was no ſooner ſaid of King Hezekiah that his ways pleaſed the Lord, but the very next paragraph of his Chronicle reports an enemy making War upon him.

Fifthly, Take this alſo; we cannot find out God in the diſpenſations of his Free Grace in the Goſpel; there are ſuch mazes, ſuch myſteries of love, and goodneſs, and kindneſs in Jeſus Chriſt, as (though it be our duty to be ſearching after them, and in them, all our days, though we ought to be continually digging in thoſe Golden Mines to find out the treaſures hidden there, yet) we can never find them out. Therefore the Apoſtle (*Epeſ.*3.8.) calls them, The unſearchable riches of Chriſt; not, unſearchable, becauſe it is unlawful to ſearch after them, but, unſearchable, becauſe when we have ſearched to the utmoſt we cannot find them out; as he ſpeaks in the cloſe of that Chapter; that we may be able to comprehend with all Saints, the height and depth, and length, and breadth, and to know the love of Chriſt that paſſeth knowledg. Under all theſe conſiderations (and many, many more) God is paſt finding out. Whence take three brief Inferences.

Firſt, Do not ſearch too far (that is, beyond what is written) into the counſels of God, no nor into the works of God. For though, as it is ſaid (*Pſal.*111.2.) the works of God are great, ſought out by all them that have pleaſure therein; yet they that have the greateſt pleaſure in them, cannot in all points find them out. It is our duty to ſearch the works of God, but to think we can find out the bottom of his works would be our ſin.

Secondly, If the Almighty cannot be found out, no not in his works of providence, then, Take heed of cenſuring or finding fault with his works. Shall we cenſure what we cannot know, and find fault with that which we cannot find? He that cenſures what another doth, ſhould firſt have the full compaſs of what he doth, and be able to look quite through it, which the moſt eagle-eyed Soul in the World cannot, as to what God doth in this World. And therefore though you ſee no reaſon for what is done, do not complain, for there may be a reaſon for the doing of it, which you do not ſee; and the reaſon is often ſuch, and lies ſo deep, that you cannot ſee it. And know this is reaſon enough, why you ſhould forbear cenſuring what is done, becauſe God doth it, though you can give no other reaſon why it is done.

Thirdly, If God be paſt finding out in his works, and much more in himſelf then be not ſo much as diſcontented with his works. You are not yet come to the bottom, you have not ſeen the laſt man born (as we ſay) you know not what God will make of it, till he hath done all; therefore take heed of murmuring and diſcontent, (Zech. 2.13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord, for he is riſen out of his holy habitation. Though his riſing be viſible, yet we cannot ſee all the concernments and intendments of his riſing; therefore be ſilent altogether from fear and diſcontents, and though not from all enquiries about it, yet from a preſumption of finding out all by enquiries: For, As touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out. That's the firſt.

He is excellent in power.] That's the ſecond. Mr. Broughton reads, He is huge of ſtrength. The word rendred excellent, שגיא כח lent, properly ſignifies, to increaſe. There is no increaſe of the ſtrength of God; what he is, he ever was, and ever will be; there is neither increaſe nor diminution of his ſtrength. But becauſe things which are always increaſing grow to a huge bigneſs and ſtrength, therefore he is ſaid to increaſe in ſtrength, or (as our tranſlation imports) to excel in power. He that excels in power is excellent in power. The word rendred power, implieth the power of doing (the Greeks call it δύναμις) or, of activity, a power put forth in working; he is excellent in power, that is, in ability to do whatſoever he pleaſeth; and when 'tis ſaid he is excellent in power, in this kind of power, it notes, that the power of God in doing, doth wonderfully excel all that ever he hath done. The effects or acts of the power of God are nothing, as I may ſay, to the faculty of his Power; he can do more than he hath done: He is ſo far from having over-acted himſelf, I mean from having done more than he can do again (which hath been the caſe of many mighty men, and may be the caſe of any man, how mighty a doer ſoever he is) that he can do infinitely more than he hath done, if he himſelf pleaſeth; he is excellent in power, or of excelling power. I have (as was lately ſaid) opened this point, of the power of God, in other places of this Book, whither I refer the Reader; yet taking the power of God (as the word is properly here intended) for his working power,

Ejus virtus in infinitum excedit omnes effectus ſuos. Aquin.

Note, The working power of God is excellent, ſo excellent that it exceeds the apprehenſion of man.

There is a two-fold power of God, and in both he is excellent.

Firſt, His commanding power, his power of Soveraignty, or Authority; that's a moſt excellent power, 'tis a power over all, whether things or perſons.

Secondly, His power of working or effecting that which he commands. Some have a power of commanding, yet want a power of working, they want a power to effect that which they command: But whatſoever God hath a mind to command, he hath an hand to effect and bring it about; he can carry on his work through all the difficulties and deficiencies which it meets with in or by the Creature; he can do his work though there be none to help him in it, though all forſake him, and with-draw from his work; yea, he often worketh though there be not ſo much as an Interceſſor to move him to work (*Iſa.*59.16.) He ſaw that there was no man (to do any thing) and wondred that there was no Interceſſor to intreat him to do ſomewhat for them. Things were in a great exigency, and there was not only no man that would put forth a hand, but there was no man that would beſtow a word for redreſs, no man would beſpeak either God or men for help: What then? Muſt the work ſtand ſtill or miſcarry? No, ſaith the Text, His own arm brought ſalvation unto him, that is, ſet it ready at hand for him to beſtow upon his people; or, his own arm brought that ſalvation to his people, which they greatly needed, and he graciouſly intended, though he had not the contribution of a word towards it from any Creature here below, one or other. God alone is ſelf-ſufficient, and to man All-ſufficient. Such is the working power of God, that he can work, not only when he hath but a little help, but when he hath no help at all.

Secondly, The excellency of the working power of God appears in this, that he can and will produce the deſired effect, and bring his work to paſs, though many, though all men oppoſe it and riſe up againſt it, though they ſet both heart and hand, wit and will, power and policy, to croſs, yea to cruſh it. The Lord is ſo excellent in power, that he both can and will do his work through all oppoſition; though Mountains ſtand in his way, though Rocks ſtand in his way, he will remove them, or work through them. (Iſa. 43.13.) I will work, and who ſhall lett it? Neither ſtrength nor craft, neither multitude nor magnitude, neither the many nor the mighty can lett it, if the Load undertake it. Take a double Inference from this.

Firſt, 'Tis matter of great comfort to all that fear God in their weakeſt condition and loweſt reducements, when they are fatherleſs, and have none to help them. As the Lord is excellent in his working power, ſo he uſually takes that time, yea ſtays that time, till his Servants are under the greateſt diſadvantages, till they are at worſt, before he will put forth his power and work. The Apoſtle ſaith of himſelf (2 Cor. 12.10.) When am I weak, then I am ſtrong, that is, then have I the ſtrength of the Lord coming into my help. And as it with reſpect to particular perſons, ſo to the whole generation of his Children, when they are weak, then are they ſtrong, that is, then they have the ſtrong God, the God excellent in power, appearing and working for them.

Secondly, This alſo is a ſad word to all that ſtand in the way of Gods working power; his working power quickly works through all power, and can work it down. Babylon is a mighty powerful enemy, but (Rev. 18.8.) we read of the downfal of Babylon, and that her ruine ſhall come as in one day: But, how ſhall this be effected? The anſwer is given in the cloſe of the verſe, For ſtrong is the Lord God which Judgeth her. Suppoſe there ſhould be no power in the World ſtrong enough to pull down Babylon, yea, ſuppoſe all the powers in the World ſhould ſtand up for Babylon; 'tis otherwiſe propheſied, for, the Kings of the Earth ſhall hate the Whore and ſhall make her deſolate, and naked, and eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire; but ſuppoſe, I ſay, all Earthly power ſhall appear for, rather than againſt Babylon, yet this is enough for us to reſt in, ſtrong is the Lord which Judgeth her. He is excellent in power, and as it followeth,

In Judgment.] This comes in, leſt any ſhould think, becauſe God is ſo excellent in power, ſo mighty in ſtrength, that therefore he would carry things by violence or by meer force, as the Sons of men, the mighty Nimrods of the World ſometimes do: If they have ſtrength and power to do ſuch or ſuch things, they regard not Judgment nor Juſtice, they look not whether right or wrong; therefore Elihu, when he had ſaid, God is excellent in power, preſently adds, and in Judgment. As if he had ſaid, Though the Lord excel all in power, and is able to cruſh the mightieſt as a moth, yet he will not oppreſs any by his power; the worſt of men ſhall find the Lord as much in Judgment and righteouſneſs, as he is in ſtrength and power. And therefore, O Job, be aſſured, God hath not done thee any wrong, nor ever will. This I conceive to be the ſcope of Elihu in the connexion of theſe two, the excellency of God in Judgment, as well as in Power.

But what are we to underſtand by Judgment, in which Elihu ſaith God excels? In anſwer to this Querie I ſhall firſt ſhew that Judgment is taken four ways in Scripture, and then prove that God is excellent in Judgment, with reſpect to every one of them.

Firſt, Judgment is an ability of judging. A man of Judgment, and a wiſe man are the ſame. When we ſay, ſuch a man, is a man of Judgment, or a judicious man, we mean, he is a prudent man, he is able to diſcern things that differ, he knows how to order, ſtate and determine doubtful things aright. In this ſenſe we are to underſtand it here, the Lord is excellent in Judgment, that is, in wiſdom and prudence to ſet things right, and to give every one his right, he ſees clearly how to mannage all his affairs and purpoſes by righteous means to right ends. The Prophet gives God the glory of this title expreſly (Iſa. 30.18.) The Lord is a God of Judgment: Bleſſed are they that wait for him. That is, the Lord is infinitely furniſhed with wiſdom, he knows exactly, not only what ought to be done, but how and when to do it; therefore wait for him. And 'tis encouragement to wait, when we have a perſon of judgment and underſtanding, a diſcreet and prudent perſon to wait upon. God is a God of Judgment, in this ſenſe, therefore bleſſed are they that wait for him.

Secondly, Judgment in Scripture is taken for that moderation, or due meaſure, which is obſerved in any thing that is done. This follows the former; for unleſs a man have a Judgment or true underſtanding in the thing it ſelf, he can never hit a right meaſure of it. Thus, I conceive, that Scripture is to be underſtood (*Matth.*23.23.) where Chriſt denouncing or thundering out woes thick and threefold againſt the proud hypocritical Phariſees, he tells them, Ye pay tythe of Aniſe and Cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the Law, Judgment, Mercy; that is, either they did not give a right judgment according to Law, or their legal Judgments were given with rigour, not at all attemper'd, mixt, and moderated with mercy. Or ſuch the Apoſtle James ſpeaketh (Chap. 2.13.)

He ſhall have Judgment without mercy that hath ſhewed no mercy, and mercy rejoyceth againſt Judgment. In this ſence the Lord is excellent in Judgment; for as he hath wiſdom and underſtanding to ſee what is juſt and right, ſo in Judgment he remembers Mercy: His patience is great before he gives Judgment; and his moderation is great when he gives it. He dealeth not with us according to our ſins, nor rewardeth us according to our iniquities, (Pſal. 103. 10.) that is, his Judgments are not proportion'd to the greatneſs of our ſins and iniquities; For (as it follows in that Pſalm verſe 11.) as high as the Heaven is above the Earth, ſo great is his mercy towards them that fear him. Therefore the Prophet brings in the Church praying thus (Jer. 10. 24.) O Lord, Correct me (I conceive it is not a direct prayer for Correction, but a ſubmiſſion to it: As if he had ſaid, I will not murmur, nor rebel againſt thy Correction; O Lord, Correct me) but with Judgment, that is, with due moderation: It cannot be meant of Judgment, as it notes the effect of divine diſpleaſure, but, Correct me moderately, or, as another Text hath it, in meaſure, as thou uſeſt to correct thy people. This meaning, is plain from the oppoſition in the next words, Not in thine anger, leſt thou bring me to nothing. Anger tranſports men to do things undecently and without moderation; we quickly exceed our limits, if carried out in paſſion; and though, that anger which the Scripture attributes often to God, never tranſports him beyond the due bounds of his Wiſdom and Juſtice, yet when God is ſaid to do a thing in anger, it notes his going, as it were, to the utmoſt bounds of Juſtice; this cauſed the Church to pray, O Lord, if the cup may not paſs from me, if it cannot be, but I muſt be corrected, then I humbly and earneſtly beg, thou wouldſt be pleaſed to correct me in Judgment, not in anger, leſt thou bring me to nothing. What the Church prayed for here, the Lord promiſed elſewhere (Jer. 30. 11.) I will not make a full end of thee, but I will correct thee in meaſure, and will not leave thee altogether unpuniſhed. Thus God is excellent in Judgment; He abates the ſeverity of his proceedings, and allays the bitterneſs of the cup by ſome ingredients of mercy.

Thirdly, Judgment in Scripture is put for the reformation of things when they are out of order. In this ſence it is uſed (John 12. 31.) Now is the Judgment of this World. Our late Annotators tell us, that by Judgment is meant reformation: As if Chriſt had ſaid, I am come to ſet all things in order, that have been out of order and disjointed in the Jewiſh Church, and every where elſe; Now is the Judgment of this World. In this ſenſe God is excellent in Judgment, or he excells in his Judgment, that is, he is for reformation, he will ſet all things right, he will make crooked things ſtrait, he will make the rough places plain. John the Baptiſt came before Chriſt in this work, yet in this work Chriſt is before or exceeds John the Baptiſt. The Lord (Iſa. 4. 4.) will purge away the iniquity of the Daughter of Zion with a Spirit of Judgment, and with a Spirit of burning, that is, with a reforming and a refining Spirit: And the Lord will ſent forth his Judgment unto victory (Matth. 12. 20.) that is, he will do it throughly, he will overcome all the difficulties, and put by all the obſtacles which hinder the perfect reformation of things as well as of perſons. That's the importance alſo of that great promiſe (Iſa. 1. 25, 26.) I (ſaith the Lord) will turn my hand upon thee (or take thee in hand) and purely purge away thy droſs, and take away all thy Tin, (that is, all thoſe corruptions which have crept in upon thee) and I will reſtore thy Judges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellors as at the beginning. Things and perſons are uſually beſt at firſt. The new broom (ſay we) ſweeps clean. As time conſumes all things here below, ſo it corrupts moſt things; and therefore when the Lord promiſeth to reſtore them to a primitive purity, he promiſeth the pureſt reſtauration; all which is ſumm'd up in verſe 27. Sion ſhall be redeemed with Judgment; which is not only, if at all, intended of a redemption by Judgment on her enemies, but by that reformation which God would work upon themſelves, in taking away their droſs and Tin, Reſtoring their Judges as at the firſt, and their Counſellers as at the beginning. Such a Judgment is ſpoken of (Iſa. 30. 22.) Te ſhall defile alſo (that is, utterly diſgrace and deface) the Covering of thy graven Images of Silver, and the Ornament of thy molten Images of Gold; thou ſhalt caſt them away as a menſtruous cloth, thou ſhalt ſay unto it, get thee hence. This is the Judgment of reformation, which God hath and will further work among his people, till Sion be built up in perfect beauty, and Jeruſalem become the praiſe of the whole Earth. Thus alſo God is excellent both in Power and in Judgment.

Fourthly, Judgment ſignifies thoſe evils which God brings upon impenitent ſinners; that's a very frequent notion of Judgment in Scripture, as the Lord is excellent in this Judgment; and that

Firſt, Upon his own people, when they provoke him and ſin againſt him (1 Pet. 4. 17.) If Judgment begin at the Houſe of God, what ſhall the end be of them that obey not the Goſpel. There's Judgment beginning at the Houſe of God, that is, God will bring evil upon his own Houſe, the Church, even ſore troubles and perſecutions. The Lord will not ſpare them, who have been ſlight with him, forgetful of him, formal in profeſſion, or wanton and vain in converſation. This is a great part of the Lords excellency in Judgment, he brings Judgment upon his own Houſe. The Lord, ſaith the Prophet (Iſa. 5. 16.) ſhall be exalted in Judgment, and God that is Holy ſhall be ſanctified in righteouſneſs, that is, in bringing his righteous Judgments upon Iſrael, his peculiar people. We find that Goſpel-Prophet Iſaiah often interweaving the wyre and whipcord of corporal bondage, with the ſilk and ſcarlet thread of Sions deliverances,

Secondly, In Judgment towards his enemies (Pſal. 149. 9.) He will execute on them the Judgment that is written, and that is no inconſiderable, nor eaſie Judgment. The ſervants of God may ſmart ſorely under theſe Judgments, but the wicked and rebellious ſhall periſh, and ſink under them. How dreadful is that profeſſion or proteſtation which the Lord made by Moſes (Deut. 32. 41.) If I whet my glittering Sword, and my hand take hold of Judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me.

Some, poſſibly, may object, Surely there is no ſuch appearance of Gods excellency in Judgment upon the wicked of the World, the enemies of his name and ways. It grew to a Proverb (Mal. 2. 17.) Ye ſay, every one that doth evil is good in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, or where is the God of Judgment? Evil men ſeem to be good in the eyes of the Lord when they enjoy good; and if it be ſo, (ſaid ſome) Where is the God of Judgment?

I anſwer, Firſt, the Lord hath left teſtimony enough upon Record, and written it in the blood of many thouſands, to juſtifie himſelf, that he is excellent in Judgment, by taking vengeance on the wicked. Did he not excel in Judgment upon the ſinning Angels? (2 Pet. 2. 8. Jude 6.) Was he not excellent in Judgment, when he deſtroyed the whole World for ſin? When he burnt Sodom and Gomorrah with fire for ſin? How many inſtances might I give of this from Scripture? God hath ſufficiently declared himſelf excellent in this punitive Judgment.

I anſwer, Secondly, God indeed doth not preſently execute Judgment upon all the wicked; we ſhould rather be led by ſence than by faith, if he ſhould do ſo, if he ſhould ſmite ſinners as ſoon as they provoke him; yea, if God ſhould take that courſe, he muſt even break the World to pieces, and deſtroy whole generations at once.

Thirdly, God ſuffers ſinners a while, that his counſels may be fulfilled; for though the wicked obey not the command of God, yet they fulfil the counſel of God (Acts 4. 28.) and they do it chiefly when he with-holdeth Judgment from them.

Fourthly, Unleſs the Lord did a little give ſtop to the execution of Judgment in this kind, it would neither appear how good, nor how bad ſome men are. Let ſome have but a little power in their hands, and the World at will, then you ſhall ſee whither they will go, and what they will do. And when bad men are ſuffered to go on unpuniſhed, and to be a puniſhment to others, then it appears more fully how good ſome are, and that in a twofold reſpect. Firſt, becauſe they refrain from evil, though they ſee that they alſo poſſibly might do it (impune) and not ſuffer in this World. Secondly, becauſe they hold faſt both their profeſſion and practice of Godlineſs, how much ſoever they ſuffer for it in this World from evil men.

Fifthly, God is executing Judgments upon wicked men, while he ſeems to ſpare them from Judgment (Prov. 1.32.) The proſperity of fools ſlayeth them. Some think a wicked man is mightily favoured when he is in proſperity, no, that proſperity is his deſtruction, and deſtruction is Judgment in perfection. The Table of a wicked man is made his ſnare, his full Table fattens his heart, which is the ſoreſt of all Judgments. To be unſenſible is worſe than any puniſhment of ſenſe; to be hardned or heartned in doing evil, is more penal than the ſuffering of any evil. Now while wicked men eſcape the ſuffering of evil, they grow reſolved, that is, hardned and heartned in doing it, or to do it. Take Solomon's Obſervation or experience in the caſe (*Eccleſ.*8.11.) Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not ſpeedily executed (upon themſelves or others) therefore the heart of the Sons of men is fully ſet in them to do miſchief. So then, there are many inviſible Judgments upon wicked men, when we ſee no hand touch them, nor Judgment near them; God gives them up to vile affections, and to a reprobate mind (Rom. 1.26,28.) to their own counſels (Pſal. 81.12.) and to ſtrong deluſions by others (2 Theſ. 2.11.) Theſe heavy loads of Judgment may be on their hearts, upon whoſe backs we ſee not ſo much as a grain weight of Judgment. Thus the Lord is excellent in Judgment in all the notions of it; I have inſtanced four.

Now, leſt any ſhould think that God at any time breaks the rule of Juſtice in his zeal, for this latter ſort of Judgment, or while he is pouring out vengeance upon the wicked, therefore it followeth in the next place;

ורב צדקה
Juſtitia eſt conſtans & perpetua voluntas ſuum cuiq; tribuendi. Juſtin.

And in plenty of Juſtice.] God executes great wrath upon ſinners, but there is great Juſtice, plenty of Juſtice in it. There is ſtore and abundance of Juſtice and righteouſneſs in his moſt rigorous Judgments. A little Juſtice is a moſt precious thing; how precious then is plenty of Juſtice! Juſtice in it ſelf is the giving of every one his due; and where Juſtice is in any man, it conſtantly bends and inclines his heart to do ſo, his eſpecially with whom there is (as in God) plenty of Juſtice. And indeed, what-ever God hath, he hath plenty of it; he hath mercy, and plenty of it, he is plenteous in mercy (Pſal.103.8.) And with him is plenteous redemption, (Pſal.130.7.) There is alſo plenty of Juſtice in him.

Some men have no Juſtice at all in them; though their office and place be to do Juſtice, yet they have nothing of Juſtice, no tincture of it in them; They neither fear God nor regard man, to do him any Juſtice, as the unjuſt Judg is deſcribed (Luk. 18.2.) and with moſt Juſtice is a very ſcarce Commodity, they have but a very little of it, and they diſtribute it very poorly and ſparingly. Where almoſt is the man to be found that hath plenty of Juſtice in himſelf, and diſtributes it plentifully to others? There was ſurely a great ſcarcity of Juſtice in the Juſticers of Jeruſalem, when the Lord by his Prophet (*Jer.*5.1.) offered to pardon the whole City, if upon the ſending forth of his Writ of Enquiry, the name of any one man could be returned that executed Judgment. O that Dearth of Juſtice! And in what place may we hope to find plenty of Juſtice among men, when ſo little of it was to be found in Jeruſalem, the City of God? Yet this may comfort us, that though there be little of it in or among men, there is plenty of it in God. And that there is plenty of Juſtice in God, I would demonſtrate theſe five ways.

Firſt, He hath plenty of Juſtice, who deals juſtly with every man. God giveth every man his due, all his due, and nothing but his due. More diſtinctly, take this in two branches. Firſt, he that rewards all that are good, with good, not this or that man, not his kinſman, or his friend only, but every man that is good, with good; he hath plenty of Juſtice: Thus doth God. The reſpect which God hath to the perſons of good men, is like the reſpect which good men have to the commands of God, it is univerſal, he reſpects them all. As they give him plentiful obedience, having a reſpect to all his Commandments, ſo he gives them plentiful Juſtice, he hath reſpect to all their perſons, to all their workings, to all their ways, which are holy, juſt, and good. Again, Secondly, He hath plenty of Juſtice, who puniſheth all that do evil, not winking at, nor ſparing friends or kindred. Surely then there is plenty of Juſtice in God; for as he rewards all the good with good, ſo he rewards all evil men with evil; that's all the reward they ſhall have, and they ſhall have plenty of it (*Pſal.*31.23.) He plenteouſly rewardeth the proud doer. The proud ſhall have and drink up the laſt, the reſidue, the remainder, the very dregs of the bitter cup, of the cup of trembling, as the Hebrew elegancy uſed by the Pſalmiſt intimates. Tribulation and anguiſh upon every Soul of man that doth evil; for there is no reſpect of perſons with God, (*Rom.*2.9,11.) As he will puniſh none but evil-doers, ſo he will puniſh them every one, except they repent.

Secondly, With the Lord is plenty of Juſtice, for he knows the whole Compaſs of Juſtice, he hath the clear Idea of it in his underſtanding, he knows all the rules of it, or rather is the rule of it. All the rules of Juſtice came out from him, and are but the ſignification of his own mind, therefore he muſt needs know them, and be well skilled in them. Some men have a good mind to do Juſtice, yet have no plenty of it, becauſe they are unskilful in the rule of it, the Laws both of God and man. A Judg that is blind through ignorance, and hath not a gift of knowledg and underſtanding in the Law, faulters in doing, or is unfit to do Juſtice, as much as he that is blinded with gifts, or byas'd by relations and private paſſions; he that is blind the former way cannot have, and he that is blinded by any of the latter ways will never do plenty of Juſtice. But as the Lord hath an infinitely clear eye as to the rule, ſo no gift can blind him, nor can any relation put out his eyes from ſeeing a fault, nor divert him from puniſhing it (*Iſa.*27.11.) It is a people of no underſtanding (either to do good, or to depart from evil) therefore he that made them (that's a near relation) will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them (that's the ſame) will ſhew them no favour. As if the Lord had ſaid, Juſtice ſhall be done, though the work of my own hands be undone by it; there's plenty of Juſtice. And as God knows the rule of the Law perfectly, and will not be turned aſide from it; ſo he knows the matter of fact perfectly, and cannot be miſlead about that; upon which miſtake ſome, who have great knowledg of the rule of the Law, yet do not plenty of Juſtice: They often condemn the innocent, and acquit the nocent, becauſe they find not out the truth of their cauſe, but are miſinformed about it. But, the Lord is a God of knowledg, by him actions are weighed; he knows not only the matter of Law, but the matter of fact too, and therefore with him there is plenty of Juſtice.

Thirdly, There muſt needs be plenty of Juſtice with God, becauſe he knows the Spirit and heart with which every man acts, he knoweth whether a thing be done maliciouſly, or meerly by a ſurpriſe of paſſion (Juſtice is guided much by that conſideration in ſome caſes) the Lord knows the heart, wherewith every thing is done, and the deſign or aim of every man in doing it. As he will make manifeſt the Counſels of the heart, at laſt to all, ſo now the Counſels of the heart are manifeſt to him; therefore he muſt needs be plentiful in Juſtice.

Fourthly, God is clothed with ſufficient power to execute Juſtice, therefore with him there is plenty of it. Some have a good mind to do Juſtice, they know the Law and the fact too, yet are ſhortned and ſtraitned in doing Juſtice, becauſe they have not power, or are not able to carry it out againſt potent offenders, but are forced to forbear the doing of Juſtice, becauſe at preſent they cannot. The doing of Juſtice requireth ſtrength of hand, as well as ſtrength of Law, and integrity of heart. David had a good mind to do Juſtice upon Joab (though nearly related to him) when he had, under a pretence of friendſhip, ſlain Abner; but he ſaw himſelf under a neceſſity of forbearance at that time, and therefore ſaid, I am this day weak (though annointed King) and theſe Sons of Zerviah be too hard for me. But there are no Sons of Zerviah too hard for the Lord, he can call them to an account at any time: David knew that very well, and therefore he referred Joab to Gods Juſtice in the cloſe of that verſe (2 *Sam.*2.39.) The Lord ſhall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedneſs. Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be ſtrong in the days that I ſhall deal with thee? Saith the Lord by his Prophet (Ezek. 22.14.) They cannot, therefore with him is plenty of Juſtice.

Fifthly, The Lord cannot but have plenty of Juſtice, for his very Nature is Juſtice. Man doth that readily and plentifully which it doth naturally; it is as impoſſible for God not to do Juſtice, as it is for him not to be. A man may be unjuſt, and yet be a man, but God cannot be God, and not do juſtly. Seeing then it is his Nature to do Juſtice, there muſt needs be plenty of Juſtice with him: And how ſevere ſoever the Judgments of God are, there is nothing but Juſtice in them. Juſtice, Juſtice, ſhalt thou follow, was the command to the Judges of Iſrael by Moſes, that is, as we tranſlate, that which is altogether juſt ſhalt thou follow (Deut. 16.20.) As that promiſe of peace, peace, notes plenty of peace (Iſa. 26.3.) ſo this command of doing Juſtice, Juſtice, notes plenty of Juſtice. Certainly then the Lord himſelf will do Juſtice plentifully. Juſtice, Juſtice will he do. Take two Inferences from this aſſertion.

Firſt, This truth is matter of comfort to, and ſweetly ſmiles upon the Juſt, that the Lord hath plenty of Juſtice in him; for then, doubtleſs, he will perform all his good words of promiſe to them. 'Tis the part of a juſt man to perform his word; God is faithful to his word, what-ever men are. It hath been ſaid, If you would know what ſome men mean never to do, then look to their promiſes. It was a very diſhonorable Character which Suidas gave of the Roman Emperour Tiberius; He never made ſhew of having what he deſired, or had a mind to, nor ever minded to do what he had promiſed. But God, the great God, is ſo true and juſt to his word or promiſe, that his people may take ſtrong conſolation from every word of promiſe. (Tit. 1.2.) In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie hath promiſed. No man could ever challenge God of any failure in promiſe. There are four things aſcribed to God in Scripture, which may aſſure us that he will be juſt in performing all his promiſes. Firſt, He remembers them all (Pſal. 111. 5. Pſal. 115. 12.) Secondly, He is unchangeable and in one mind, (Job 23.13, 14.) Thirdly, He is the Almighty, and ever furniſht with power to perform them. Fourthly, He is moſt faithful, and will not deny nor falſifie them (Heb. 10. 23.)

Eorum quæ appetebat ne quicquam præ ſe ferebat, & eorum quæ dicebat ne quicquam facere volebat. Suidas de Tiberio.

Secondly, This truth hath a moſt dreadful aſpect and frowns terribly upon the ungodly and unjuſt. That God hath plenty of Juſtice, Juſtice enough to beſtow among them all, is enough to confound them all; though they make a Covenant with Death, and with Hell are at agreement, yet their Covenant and agreement ſhall be diſſolved, (Iſa. 28. 15, 16.) The Scripture ſpeaks Juſtice often to ſinners, ſpecially to thoſe unjuſt ones, who weigh the violence of their hands (Pſal. 58. 1, 2.) that is, who oppreſs with a kind of exactneſs, who do not tumble it out palpably, or in a lump, but weigh it out, now a little, and then a little: The Lord knoweth how to deal with ſuch cunning perverters of Juſtice, and will at laſt make them acknowledg, both that themſelves had no Juſtice in them, and that himſelf had plenty of it. And who now, laying theſe five conſiderations together, will not acknowledg, that the Lord hath plenty of Juſtice? But the inference which Elihu makes from it in the cloſe of the verſe, ſeems, if not a kind of denial, yet a great abatement of it, for having ſaid, He is excellent in plenty of Juſtice, the next words are,

He will not afflict.] This may ſeem at firſt hearing, a ſtrange connection; will he not afflict? How then hath he plenty of Juſtice? Doth not God afflict? Who afflicts then? Have men the power of affliction in their hands? Or hath Satan the power of affliction in his hand? Affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground, ſaid Eliphaz (Chap. 5. 6.) Saith not the Scripture every where, affliction comes down from Heaven, or that 'tis of God? Did not Job ſay (Chap. 1. 21.) The Lord hath taken, that is, afflicted me, by taking away my all of this World? And doth not God himſelf ſay (Pſal. 89. 30, 31, 32.) If his Children forget my Law, I will puniſh their tranſgreſſions with a rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes? How then ſaith Elihu, God will not afflict?

I anſwer, Firſt, In general, Elihu ſpeaks thus in anſwer to a doubt, or to remove a fear ariſing upon the whole, of what had been ſaid of God. For if God be ſuch a God, ſo excellent in Power, and in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice, then ſurely our caſe is very ſad, may ſome ſay, who can abide to be near or ſtand before ſuch a God? O, ſaith Elihu, fear not, He will not afflict. More particularly, I anſwer, Firſt, Though God be excellent in Judgment, and plenty of Juſtice, yet it may be ſaid, he will not afflict, becauſe in ſome ſenſe, he hath a will to afflict, or he doth not afflict with his will, that is, he delights not to afflict, he hath declared himſelf more ready to ſhew mercy, then to execute Judgment. In one Prophet he ſaith, I have no pleaſure in the death of him that dieth (Ezek. 18. 32.) and another Prophet ſaith of him, He doth not willingly afflict, nor grieve the Children of men (Lam. 3. 33.) This Prophet was there bemoaning the greateſt affliction that ever befell the people of God, yet, ſaith he, God doth not afflict willingly, he doth not afflict with his heart, as the word there is expreſſed in the Margin; when he afflicts, it is as it were a work of his hand, not of his heart, yea a work that he would gladly rid his hands of. When once that cruel Tyrant Nero ſaid when he was to ſign a Warrant for the Execution of an offender, How glad ſhould I be if I could not write my name! (This ſpake he, poſſibly, when his heart was as full of blood as it could hold) yet thus he ſpake to ſignifie a great unwillingneſs to afflict. This is moſt true of the great God; though he be a God of excellent Power and Judgment, and plenty of Juſtice, yet he doth not afflict willingly; he could be glad, that he might never have an occaſion to afflict, that he might never be provoked to draw his Sword, no not ſo much as to uſe his rod in this World.

Ex corde. Heb. ex animo libens. Vatabl.

O quam vellem neſcire literas.

Secondly, It may be ſaid, God will not afflict, becauſe he never afflicteth without a juſt cauſe; his unlimited power never tempts him, nor doth any paſſion tranſport him to a deſire of taking undue revenge upon any; he hath plenty of Juſtice, and therefore cannot afflict, but when he ſees great reaſon for it. Did not our ſin call for our affliction, were there not ſome great provocation on our part, or ſome profit to come to us by it, we ſhould never hear of, nor feel his rod. The Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 12. 9, 10.) We have had Fathers of our fleſh, who for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure, they to eaſe themſelves, have put us to pain, but the Lord doth it for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. There is juſt cauſe we ſhould be afflicted, when we provoke God by ſin, or when he would purge us from our ſin, or make us more holy. And as it may be ſaid, God will not afflict, becauſe he doth not afflict us but when there is cauſe for it, ſo

Thirdly, Becauſe he doth not afflict us but when there is need (1 Pet. 1. 6.) nor more than there is need; we ſhall not be afflicted an hour longer, nor have a grain more of weight in the burden of our croſs, nor a drop more of gall and wormwood in the cup of our ſorrows than we have need of (Iſa. 27. 7, 8, 9.) Hath he ſmitten him, as he ſmote thoſe that ſmote him? In meaſure, when it ſhooteth forth thou wilt debate with him. As if it had been ſaid, he ſhall have no greater a meaſure than is both uſeful and needful; firſt, to humble him for his ſin; ſecondly, to ſubdue and mortifie his ſin; thirdly, he ſhall have no more than is needful to exerciſe his graces, his faith and patience; no more, fourthly, than is needful to make him thankful for deliverance, and ſenſible of mercy when it comes. Thus, as God, who hath plenty of Juſtice, will not afflict us, but when there is need, ſo not more than is need.

Fourthly, It may be ſaid, He will not afflict, becauſe he doth not afflict us more than we can bear; he tenderly conſiders our ſtrength, what we are able to ſtand under, and how long we are able to ſtand under it; he will not break our backs nor our hearts (unleſs by godly ſorrow for, or from ſin) by affliction. God (ſaith the Apoſtle 1 Cor. 10. 13.) is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what you are able, but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. Hence when it is ſaid (Lam. 3. 33.) He doth not afflict willingly, &c. it followeth (verſ. 34.) to cruſh under his feet all the priſoners of the Earth. The Lord makes many his priſoners, yet then his bowels are opened towards them, he will not cruſh, nor tread them down, as mire in the ſtreets. I (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 57. 16.) will not contend for ever, &c. For (if I ſhould) the Spirit ſhould fail before me, and the Souls which I have made. I know what your Spirits can bear, and I will contend no longer than I know you are able to bear it. Hence that promiſe (Pſal. 125. 3.) The rod of the wicked ſhall not reſt upon the lot of the righteous, leſt he put forth his hands to evil. The Lord knows the rod may prevail over us ſo, as to put us upon the doing of evil, and therefore he will take order that it ſhall not.

Thus we may ſafely underſtand this aſſertion, He will not afflict, that is, he afflicts not willingly; he afflicts not till there is need, nor will he afflict more than needs, nor more than we are able, or himſelf will enable us to bear; he will either ſupport us under, or give us deliverance out of all our afflictions in due time.

I might hence, or from the whole, infer a double duty.

Firſt, Be Patient under affliction.

Secondly, Be Comforted in affliction.

For God doth ſo afflict, that he may be truly ſaid not to afflict, but having met with occaſions for the miniſtring of ſuch like counſels to the afflicted, from other paſſages in this Book, it may ſuffice only to mind the Reader of them here.

This ſpake Elihu in the cloſe or peroration of his diſcourſe, to ſtir up Job to conſider all the dealings of God with him; he would have him ſit down with theſe four Doctrinal Concluſions upon his heart, that God is Excellent in Power, and in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice, he will not afflict. Surely he will not afflict more in meaſure, nor longer in time than is need, as Job ſeemed in his paſſion, to intimate and charge God, for which he had ſeveral reproofs before.

Thus far I have opened theſe words, as they ſtand in our tranſlation. There are two or three different readings, eſpecially of the latter part of the verſe, which would not be altogether omitted, and therefore I ſhall touch at them, and then proceed to the next and laſt verſe of this Chapter, which is alſo Elihu's parting word, or the concluſion of his large and cloſe diſcourſe with Job.

Omnipotens quem non aſſequimur amplus eſt virtute, ſed judicio & magnitudine juſtitiæ non affliget. Merc.

The firſt different reading is much inſiſted upon by ſome Interpreters. Take it thus; The Almighty, whom we cannot find out, is great in power, but he will not afflict in Judgment and plenty of Juſtice. This tranſlation tranſpoſeth thoſe words which we place in the end of the verſe, he will not afflict, to the middle of it, and it renders the copulative particle And, by the adverſative But: This makes the ſence of the whole verſe more plain and eaſie than the former, as alſo to riſe up more fully to the purpoſe of Elihu. As if he had thus ſummed up all that he ſpoke before, or had contracted it into this ſum.

Which things, ſeeing they are ſo, as I have declared, we may certainly conclude, that the Almighty is ſo full of Majeſty and Power, that we are no way able to reach, compaſs and find him out: Yet notwithſtanding he is ſo full of goodneſs and mercy, that he is very ſparing towards men, and will not afflict them according to their demerits, nor up to the extremity of Juſtice. This expoſition holds out clearly that temperament of the Power and Juſtice, with the Goodneſs and Mercy of God, which Elihu undertook to demonſtrate, at the fifth verſe of the thirty ſixth Chapter, and ſo forwards; He is great in Power, but he will not afflict in Judgment.

Quamvis ſit potentiſſimus, tamen homines ante creatos tanti facit ut non utatur omnipotentia ſua ad eos ſummo jure & pro meritis eorum affligendes. Jun.

Take this Note from it, How great ſoever the power of God is, yet he doth not afflict ſinful man according to the greatneſs of his power, nor the utmoſt line of his Juſtice.

The Lord is full of mercy, full of ſparing mercy, he ſpareth his people, as a man ſpareth his own Son that ſerveth him (Mal. 3.17.) And indeed if God ſhould afflict in plenty, that is, in extremity of Juſtice, what would become of the beſt, of the holieſt of men? Who can withſtand the power of the great God? Who can ſtand in Judgment before him, if he ſhould mark iniquities? (Pſal. 130.3.) Woe to the moſt innocent man alive, if God ſhould mark iniquities, and not forgive iniquities. And therefore it follows in the next or fourth verſe of that Pſalm, But with thee is forgiveneſs. As God is moſt bountiful in giving, ſo is he moſt merciful in forgiving. This holds the head of believing and repenting ſinners above water, and keeps them from ſinking into the bottomleſs Gulf of deſpair, that they have a forgiving God to go unto, and that there is none like him in forgiving (Mich. 7.18.) None forgiving ſo freely (Iſa. 42.25.) ſo abundantly (Iſa. 55.7.) none ſo conſtantly and continually as he. There is forgiveneſs with thee; 'tis a continued a perpetual act. Now becauſe God pardons ſo freely, he doth not, he will not, he cannot becauſe he will not, puniſh extreamly. God dealeth with ſinners in meaſure, becauſe he dealeth with them in a Mediator. Though he be great in power, yet he will not afflict according to the greatneſs of his power or the plenty of his Juſtice.

Secondly, Some of the Jewiſh Doctors render the latter part of the verſe thus; whereas we ſay, He is excellent in Judgment, and in plenty of Juſtice, he will not afflict, they ſay, He will not afflict Judgment and plenty of Juſtice; that is, as they give the gloſs, Though he be great in power, yet he will not pervert Juſtice. We may well ſay Juſtice is afflicted, when it is perverted; and then Juſtice is perverted, when any man is wronged, or when at any time the wronged, or wrongfully afflicted, are not righted and relieved. Thus God will not afflict Juſtice. Theſe tranſlators do not join the word afflict (as we) to the perſon of man, but to the Juſtice of God, or the actings of his Juſtice. He is great in power, but he will not afflict, he will not oppreſs Judgment and Juſtice. This is doubtleſs a great truth in it ſelf, yet, I doubt whether it be the truth intended by Elihu in this place. Certainly, God will not do any man wrong, though he hath power enough, all power in his hand, yea, God will do all men right; though he be great in power, yet whatſoever he layeth upon the Creature ſhall be no affliction to Juſtice or Judgment, to that Juſtice or Judgment with which God is clothed, and will declare by executing it among the Children of men. But I paſs this as over-nice.

Judicium & copiam juſtitiæ non affliget i.e. jus non pervertet. Merc. ex Rabbinis.

Thirdly, Others render thus, He is excellent in power, and in Judgment, and plenty in Juſtice, he will not anſwer. The word which we tranſlate, to afflict, with ſome alteration in the Hebrew pointing, ſignifie alſo to anſwer; and ſo the words carry a ſence of the abſolute ſoveraignty of God, who is ſo great in power, and in Judgment, and plenty of Juſtice, that he will not anſwer; that is, though men complain of his Juſtice, or think he hath done them wrong, or at leaſt is over ſevere towards them, yet he will not come to anſwer, he will give no man a reaſon of his ways. Of this Elihu ſpake expreſly (Chap. 33.13.) He giveth not account of any of his matters. God is ſo powerful that no man can call him to an account, and ſo juſt in the uſe or exerciſe of his power, that there is no reaſon why any ſhould. But though this alſo be a great truth, yet becauſe Elihu had aſſerted it fully before, as alſo becauſe this tranſlation is grounded upon the change in the ordinary pointing of the Hebrew word, from which I conceive, with others, we ought not eaſily to recede, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

Non reſpondebit. Tygur. Probarem ſi eſſet יענה in fonte nunc cum ſit יענה non poteſt aliter legi, quam affligit, vexat. Druſ. Merc.

Nor ſhall I more than mention that apprehenſion of ſome Rabbins, who thus give out a fourth ſence or interpretation of the words; whereas we ſay, As touching the Almighty we cannot find him out, he is excellent in power, and in Judgment, &c. They ſay thus, although the Almighty be great in power and in Judgment, and plenty of Juſtice, yet we find him not ſo; That is, we do not find him putting out the greatneſs of his power, or the exactneſs of his Juſtice, in the commands which he hath laid upon us, or in the duties which he hath required of us; he doth not over-burthen us, nor exact hard things of us. And they inſtance the rules which God gave about offerings and Sacrifices; he required (ſay they) of ſome only a turtle Dove, or a pair of young Pigeons, of others but a Lamb, or a Bullock, ſuch things he required for ſacrifice as were of eaſie price, and might eaſily be obtained, he did not put us upon the getting of ſtrange and rare Beaſts, as Buffs, or Unicorns, or any ſort of Creature which may put us to much pains in getting them, or to much expence in buying them. And as in theſe, ſo in other things God hath graciouſly condeſcended to our weakneſs, as appears every where in the Law. Thus the Jewiſh Writers make out their tranſlation: And though it be a truth, that in one ſenſe the Ceremonial Law was (as St. Peter, in that Council at Jeruſalem declared Acts 15.10.) A Yoak, which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, yet there was much favour mixed with it, which cauſed the Lord to appeal in that point to their own Conſciences, or to make themſelves the Judges (Mich. 6.3.) O my people what have I done unto thee, or wherein have I wearied thee? Teſtifie againſt me. And as God, though great in power, did not over-lay the Jews, ſo much leſs hath he over-laid us Chriſtians with duty (1 John 5.3.) His Commandments are not grievous. And Chriſt ſaid of his yoke and burden (Math. 11.10.) My yoke is eaſie, and my burden is light. Chriſt may lay what burdens he pleaſeth upon us, but he is not pleaſed to lay any grievous burdens upon us. This therefore is a truth, both as to them and us, yet I conceive it beſide the deſign of Elihu in this place, and I only mind the Reader of theſe different Interpretations, of all which ſome good improvement may be made. So much of this Verſe: The whole diſcourſe of Elihu concludes in the next.

Omnipotentem non invenimus multum robore & judicio; & tali ſit, tamen talem eum non experimur in mandatis ſuis ut immodice nos oneret, aut immodicam à nobis exiget juſtitiam, &c. RabbiSelemoth & Rambam.

Verſ. 24. Men do therefore fear him: He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart.

This Verſe containeth two things.

Firſt, A practical inference, by way of uſe, from that fourfold Doctrine held forth in the former Verſe, concerning God. As if Elihu had ſaid, For as much as the Almighty is incomprehenſible, ſo that we cannot find him out; for as much as he is mighty in power, and judgment, and plenty of juſtice, ſo that we can neither avoid him nor delude him, therefore men do fear him.

Secondly, We have an enforcement of this Inference, by a cogent reaſon, For he reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart, Who theſe wiſe-hearted ones are, whom God reſpecteth not, will appear in the opening thoſe words.

Men do therefore fear him.] The word rendered Men, properly ſignifieth, weak or feeble men, as alſo men in affliction, men under the afflicting hand, or rod of God. This ſtrict acception of the word, renders the oppoſition more clear, ſetting the loweſt of humane frailty, againſt the higheſt divine power. Yet we need not ſtand ſtrictly upon the Grammatical ſignification of the word, but may take men, in all their diviſions and forms; men, be they high or low, afflicted or in proſperity, ought therefore to fear him.

אנש Vir miſer & imbecillus.

Only, It may ſeem moſt ſutable, in way of application, to Job, for Elihu to uſe this word in that reſtrained ſence; Afflicted feeble men do fear him, As if he had ſaid. O Job, thou art a weak man, a man greatly afflicted, thou haſt been long under the rod and chaſtning hand of God, therefore thou oughteſt to fear him, and not expoſtulate the matter with him, as thou haſt done. Men do

Therefore fear him.] This illative, Therefore, hath reference (as was intimated) to all that was ſaid in the former Verſe, yet we may take it ſpecially in theſe two particulars. Therefore men do fear him; Why?

Firſt, Becauſe he is ſo great, ſo immenſe, ſo incomprehenſible, ſo powerful, ſo juſt, becauſe he hath ſuch plenty of juſtice, Therefore men do fear him.

Secondly, Therefore men do fear him; Why? Becauſe, though he be clothed with power, juſtice and judgment, ye he will not afflict, that is, he will not afflict extreamly. in any of thoſe four ſences before given; he moderates his power by compaſſion in his ſharpeſt diſpenſations towards his people; there is a great mixture of love and mercy with his juſtice, therefore men do fear him. As if Elihu had thus beſpoken Job; Others fear God becauſe they experience or find him kind and good to them, even in affliction, how then cometh it to paſs, that thou haſt from the beginning carried it, as if God mixt no kindneſs nor ſhewed any tenderneſs in his afflicting of thee? Why is it that thou haſt curſed thy day? That thou haſt complained that ever thou waſt born, that thou haſt ſo often wiſhed for death? Why haſt thou ſaid that thou art not only preſſed, but even oppreſſed, that though thy cauſe be good, yet thou haſt born the heavieſt loads of evil? Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? Theſe are no arguments of thy fear, but of an impatient and fretful ſpirit, if not of a kind of rage and fury againſt God himſelf; Theſe are no proofs that thou doeſt acknowledg his goodneſs in afflicting thee, and ſo fear him, for by theſe thou doſt rather charge and accuſe him of harſhneſs and ſeverity.

Now though it may be ſaid (as it hath often in the opening this Book) that Job ſpake ſuch words partly in the heat of his paſſion, partly through the greatneſs of his pain, partly through the infirmity of his fleſh, as alſo being much moved and provoked by the grievous cenſures of his friends: yet notwithſtanding all this, his words were ſuch as neither could, nor ought to be wholly excuſed; ſo that Elihu might ſay, Men do therefore fear him. But, O Job, thou haſt carried it, as if thou didſt not fear him, thou haſt not behaved thy ſelf like other men, under the ſame, or a like afflicting hand of God. For though Job is to be reckoned among men that feared God, yea, in the higheſt form of thoſe that feared him, yet he failed much in his affliction, as to the expreſſion of this holy fear.

Thus we have that two-fold reference, in which Elihu ſaith, Therefore do men fear him.

Firſt, Becauſe of his great power.

Secondly, Becauſe of that great tenderneſs which he uſeth in the exerciſe of his power: Which yet Job did ſcarce acknowledg, as appeared by his complainings and murmurings about the dealings of God.

Men do therefore fear him.] So we render, yet 'tis conſiderable, that the Hebrew runs in the future time, Men will therefore fear him, that is, men ſhould therefore fear him, or men therefore ought to fear him. Words in the Hebrew of a future ſignification, bear the importance of a preſent duty; what good 'tis ſaid men will do, is as if it had been ſaid, they do, or ought to do. And as to the duty here ſpoken of, the fear of God, we may make this concluſion, All good men do fear God upon thoſe accounts, and all men ſhould, or ought to fear him. The thing is to be done, whether men do it or no. Where an expreſs command is given, every man concerned is bound to obey; and where, or who is the man that is not concern'd in this command, fear the great and gracious God? Men do therefore

Ideo timebunt tum homines. Mont. Verbum futuri temporis ſolet denotari id quod debet, quod expedit fieri, quare timebunt idem erit, quod timere debent, timere jubentur

Fear him.] What it is to fear God, was ſhewed largely at the Twenty-eighth Chapter of this Book and the laſt Verſe, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here: Only remember the word ſignifieth, a gracious, a child-like fear, not a ſervile ſlaviſh fear. There are two words, by which the fear of God is expreſſed in the Latine tongue, which we may expreſs thus, to fear God, or, to be afraid of God. Good men fear God, but wicked men are afraid of God. Now though the words are often uſed promiſcuouſly, and to fear, is ſometimes taken in the worſer, ſometimes in the better ſence, yet, here we are to take it in the beſt ſence, Therefore do men fear him, that is, they ought to ſtand in awe and not ſin againſt him, they ſhould ſubmit to, not diſpute his dealings. The fear of God, in the general notion of it, is nothing elſe, but Piety and Religion, or the whole worſhip of God. To ſay a man is godly or religious, is all one as to ſay, he is a man fearing God. Now, whereas uſually a general rule is urged to lead in a general practice, here a general practice is urged as leading to a general rule. Men do therefore fear him.

Deum vereri. Deum timere. Proprie veretur Deum pius, timet ſuperſtitioſus. Tamen hanc differentiam interpretes non obſervant; nam paſſim timere uſurpant pro vereri. Druſ.

Whence we may take this general Obſervation; It is the duty of all men, of every man, to fear God.

Men, one or other, ought to have high and honourable thoughts of God, they ought to have holy and reverential thoughts of God, they ought to put far away from them all ſlightneſs, and vanity of ſpirit, when they think or ſpeak of God, they ought to put far from them all boldneſs and preſumption, when they have to do with God. To put away all ſlight and bold thoughts of God, to take up high and reverential thoughts of God, this is to fear God. Yet a little further, and more diſtinctly, I conceive here in this place, to fear God, ſtands in a four-fold oppoſition.

Firſt, Men ſhould fear him, and not murmure at what he doth.

Secondly, They ſhould fear him, and not lightly paſs by what he doth.

Thirdly, They ſhould fear him, and not queſtion him about what he doth.

Fourthly, They ſhould fear him, and not curiouſly ſearch or pry into what he doth.

The Lord having ſuch power to do, ſuch wiſdom in doing, ſuch a mixture of mercy with juſtice in all that he doth, men ſhould only admire and improve his doings, nor murmure at, nor lightly paſs by, nor queſtion nor curiouſly pry into what he doth. Thus to fear God as faithful in all his works, and to fear offending him in any of our own works, is the ſum of Godlineſs. Hear the concluſion of all (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 12.13.) Fear God, and keep his Commandments: This is the whole of man, that is (as we tranſlate) the whole duty of man.

Secondly, Taking the word Men more ſtrictly, as ſignifying, not ſtrong, or mighty men, but weak, afflicted men;

Note, When God is afflicting us, we ought to be much in the fear of God.

What? When the hand of God is upon us, ſhall our hearts be lifted up againſt him? Or in our ſelves? What! Shall not our hearts ſtoop when our backs are burdened with ſorrows, and bowed down with a croſs? Not to fear God when we are at furtheſt remove from fear, or trouble in the world, is an argument of a very bad heart; but not to fear him when fear is round about us, or, when himſelf is chaſtening and correcting of us, argueth a much worſe frame of heart. Holy David gave this Character of his Enemies (*Pſal.*55.19.) Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they fear not God. What ſhall we ſay of them who fear not God though they have many changes? Such changes, I mean, as Job felt, and cryed out of the bitterneſs of his ſoul (*Chap.*10.17.) Changes and war are againſt me: And 'tis conceived, that Elihu aimed particularly at Job in this paſſage, as if he were the man, who, though under great changes, and in great troubles, yet behaved himſelf unlike thoſe who truly fear the Lord.

Thirdly, Note; It is ſo much the duty of man to fear God, that it may well be ſuppoſed of all men, that they fear him.

He can ſcarce be looked upon as a man, who doth not fear God. Doth he know himſelf to be a weak man, who doth not tremble at the remembrance of the Almighty God? Doth he know himſelf to be a ſinful man who doth not tremble at the remembrance of the holy, of the moſt holy God? This duty of fear is due to God upon ſo many accounts (even common accounts) from man, that we may conclude, ſurely, every man feareth God. Shall we not fear him who is incomprehenſibly great in power and in judgment, and in plenty of juſtice? What! not fear him who made us, and preſerveth us, who feeds and cloaths us? What! nor fear him in whoſe hand our breath is, and all our ways? Theſe, and many more, are common accounts, upon which all men may ſee both reaſon and their own engagement to fear God. So then, as becauſe it is ſo much the, duty of a Son to honour his Father, and of a Servant to fear his Maſter, therefore the Scripture ſuppoſeth all Sons and Servants doing it (*Mal.*1.6.) A Son honoureth his Father, and a Servant his Maſter. He doth not ſay, a Son ought to honour his Father, and a Servant his Maſter, but, he honoureth, or doth honour. That perſon deſerveth not the name of a Son that doth not honour his Father, nor is he worthy the name of a Servant that doth not honour his Maſter. Now, I ſay, as the Scripture takes it for granted, upon this ground, the naturalneſs of the duty, that every Son honours his Father, and every Servant his Maſter, ſo it doth, and ſo may we, that every man feareth God. And doubtleſs, if a Son or Servant deſerves not to bear the name of theſe relations, unleſs they honour and fear Father and Maſter, how much leſs do they deſerve to be called Men, who do not fear God, the Almighty God, Again, From thoſe two particular heads, upon which this fear is grounded; Firſt, Therefore, with reſpect to the power and juſtice of God; Secondly, Therefore, with reſpect to the mercy and tenderneſs of God.

Note, Firſt; God is to be feared becauſe he is ſo full of power and juſtice, then eſpecially, when by ſome eminent and ſpecial act of providence, he declares his power, and is doing juſtice.

By how much the more God puts himſelf forth in his power and juſtice, by ſo much the more he is to be feared. 'Tis propheſied (*Rev.*15.3.) that when God ſhall ſhew forth his great power, and execute the ſeverity of his juſtice upon Antichriſt, then, they who ſhall get the victory over the beaſt, and over his image, &c. Shall ſing the Song of Moſes, the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints. What followeth? Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name? The vengeance to be poured upon Babylon will be ſo great a demonſtration of Gods power and juſtice, that it will give occaſion to all men, the faithful eſpecially, yea, it will call upon them aloud to fear God: Who ſhall not fear thee? As if he had ſaid, ſurely there is no man ſo ſtupid, ſo ſtout-hearted, or ſo hard hearted, but if he ſee God in, or at this work, he will have dreadful apprehenſions of him, and fear before him. Yet this is not ſpoken of ſuch a fear as Chriſt hath fore told ſhall ſeize upon and poſſeſs the hearts of men before his glorions appearing (Luke 21.25,26.) There ſhall be ſigns in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, and upon the Earth, diſtreſs of Nations with perplexity, the Sea and the Waters roaring, mens hearts failing them for fear, &c. It ſhall not be (I ſay) ſuch a fear, a heart-failing, but a heart-enlarging fear; not ſuch a fear as they have, or rather, as hath them, who have their hope only in this life (theſe ſhall fear with an amazing, deſponding, deſpairing fear) but ſuch a fear as they have, who, through grace, have riſen up to a full aſſurance of hope, or, are begotten again unto a lively hope, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for them.

The ſecond ground of this fear, is the mercy and goodneſs of God, who though he be thus powerful and juſt, yet he will not afflict, that is, he will not afflict without mercy and tenderneſs to his people.

Hence Obſerve; God is to be feared becauſe he is ſo gracious and full of compaſſion, even while he doth afflict.

There is mercy with God not to afflict, that's ſparing mercy, and therefore he is to be feared; there is mercy alſo with God in moderating our afflictions, that's ſparing mercy too, and therefore he is to be feared. The graciouſneſs of God manifeſted ſomtimes in ſparing to afflict us, and often in afflicting us ſparingly, ſhould move us to fear him both greatly and always: and if ſparing mercy ſhould move us to fear him, then much more ſhould forgiving and pardoning mercy. When the Lord (*Exod.*34.6,7.) Paſſed by before Moſes, and proclaimed, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, &c. At this proclamation of grace, Moſes (Verſ.8.) made haſt, and bowed his head towards the earth and worſhipped. How graceleſs then are they, who when they hear that God is gracious, merciful, and abundant in goodneſs, fear him not, but grow wanton and abuſe his kindneſs!

Now they who fear God, upon the due conſideration, either of his power or goodneſs, find their hearts,

Firſt, Much enlarged in the ſervice of God, or in doing the work, and walking in the ways of God (Iſa. 60. 5.)

Secondly, This fear keeps their hearts to a cloſe communion with God (*Jer.*32.32.) I will put my fear in their heart, and they ſhall not depart from me. We uſually not only depart, but run from thoſe whom we fear; but the true fear of God, Covenant-fear makes us cling about, and keep cloſe to him.

Thirdly, This fear keeps up good thoughts, and high eſtimations of God in the worſt times, or when he is pleaſed to bring the greateſt troubles upon us. An Iſraelite indeed, who feareth the Lord and his goodneſs (Hoſ.3.5.) will ſay (let God do what he will with him) Truly God is good to Iſrael (Pſal.73.1.) Let us conſider whether we have theſe effects of a gracious fear working in our hearts upon the remembrance both of the power and mercy of God. Men do therefore fear him:

He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart.

Theſe words (as was touched before) preſs the former duty of fearing God, inferred from the greatneſs and excellency of his power, judgment, juſtice, and mercy, yet further upon us. As if he had ſaid, men do therefore fear him; Why? Becauſe, He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart, that is, in general, he reſpects none who are ſo wiſe, or wiſe in ſuch a way, as not to fear him upon thoſe fore-mentioned grounds.

ראה Videre.
ירא Timere.

He reſpecteth not.] The word is, ſeeth not. There is an elegant paranomaſie in this verſe, the words which ſignifie to fear and to reſpect or ſee, being very near in ſound. God doth not ſee them with reſpect, who do not ſee him with fear: He ſeeth not any that are wiſe in heart. It cannot be meant of the ordinary ſight of the eye, that, he ſeeth not the wiſe in heart; God ſeeth clearly who they are: Nor can it be meant of the common apprehenſion of the mind, that, he knoweth not the wiſe in heart; God underſtands fully what they are; It muſt be meant then of a ſeeing with liking, or ſpecial approbation: God ſeeth not the wiſe in heart ſo, as to like or approve them. Our tranſlation is full and clear to that ſenſe, He reſpecteth not, or he regardeth not any that are wiſe in heart, that is, he takes no notice of them, they are not pleaſing to him. Or thus, He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart, that is, as they fear not him, ſo he is not afraid of them. He reſpecteth not any that are,

Wiſe in heart.] Or, wiſe of heart. But ſome may ſay, Doth not God reſpect nor regard, doth not he take notice of thoſe that are wiſe of heart? Whom then doth he reſpect or regard? Of whom will he take notice, if not of the wiſe in heart? Hath the Lord any reſpect for fools, for ignorant men, for ideots, for ſotts? Surely men that are wiſe in heart, are not only very amiable but honourable in the eyes of God; Why then is it ſaid, He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart?

I anſwer, The wiſe in heart, are of two ſorts.

Firſt, there are ſome wiſe in heart, who are ſo only in their own opinion, in their own conceits or eyes; they have great thoughts of their own wiſdom, and therefore as they are apt to deſpiſe men, ſo they are far from the fear of God. There is a wiſdom in ſome men oppoſed to the fear of God, whereas true wiſdom in any man is the beginning of that fear, as that fear is called the beginning of wiſdom (Pſal. 111.10.) The vulgar Latin varieth the former part of the verſe, yet renders this latter part by way of gloſs, rather than tranſlation, They that ſeem to themſelves to be wiſe; and indeed the wiſe in heart, whom God reſpecteth not, are the proudly wiſe, the ſelfiſhly wiſe, ſuch as are wiſe only in themſelves and to themſelves, ſuch as have only that wiſdom which the Apoſtle calleth, the wiſdom of the fleſh, or, the carnal mind (Rom. 8.7.) which is not ſubject to the Law of God, nor indeed (till mortified) can be. He that is carnally wiſe diſputes the commands of God, and takes the boldneſs to cenſure his works; ſuch wiſe men God reſpecteth not, yea, they are under his greateſt diſreſpect.

Qui ſibi videntur eſſe ſapientes. Vulg.

Secondly, Others are truly wiſe, graciouſly wiſe, wiſe for their ſouls, wiſe for Heaven, wiſe for happineſs, ſubmitting their wiſdom to the will of God, and doing his will: They that are thus wiſe in heart, the Lord reſpects, and highly reſpects; how can he do otherwiſe? Seeing this is the character of God himſelf (Job 9.4.) He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength. And as God is wiſe in heart, ſo according to their line and meaſure, they that are godly, are wiſe in heart too. Therefore taking our tranſlation, the wiſe in heart intended by Elihu, muſt needs be thoſe that are only carnally wiſe, politickly wiſe, naturally wiſe, that is, wickedly wiſe, or at beſt vainly, or vain-gloriouſly wiſe.

Further, ſhould we take the wiſe in heart, for thoſe that are truly wiſe, graciouſly wiſe, yet it muſt be acknowledged, that even they may ſo miſ-behave themſelves, as to miſs preſent reſpect from God. And doubtleſs, Elihu obſerving that Job had ſpoken ſomewhat highly of himſelf, and did not carry it humbly enough under the hand of God (though his ſpirit was broken and brought down at laſt) checks him here, by telling him, God reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart, no not him, in that caſe and frame of ſpirit, as lifted up in his own wiſdom.

Yea, Taking wiſe in heart, in this beſt ſenſe, for the graciouſly wiſe, it is not for their wiſdom and holineſs that God reſpecteth or favoureth them. As he will not chaſtiſe them without cauſe, nor correct them but for their good; ſo when he doth them good or raiſeth them up, when he ſheweth them any favour, or giveth them any mercy, he doth it not for their wiſdom-ſake, or holineſs-ſake, but for his Sons ſake, or for his own Name ſake. Acts of favour from God, are purely from his free grace, not from any deſert in man; ſo that every way his mercy is from himſelf, and undeſerved by us. He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart.

Firſt, As the wiſe in heart ſtand in oppoſition to thoſe that fear God, ſpoken of before, being ſo ſtout that they do not humble themſelves in his fear,

Note; True wiſdom is always joyned with the fear of God.

Yea, as Job concluded (Chap. 28.28.) The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil (which none do but they who fear the Lord) is underſtanding.

Secondly, Note; God regardeth no man for his wiſdom, who doth not fear him.

Let men be never ſo learned and wiſe, never ſo prudent and politick, if they have not the true fear of God before their eyes, he values them not, he will not caſt an eye of favour upon them, they ſhall have no countenance with him, no honour from him. The moſt wiſe, the only wiſe God cares not for the wiſeſt of men, who ſtand ſo much upon their own underſtanding, as to ſtout it out with him. He is not at all moved (unleſs to diſpleaſure) by their wiſdom, who are puffed up with a conceit of their wiſdom.

Thirdly, When 'tis ſaid, He reſpecteth not any that are wiſe in heart,

Note; Wiſdom, without the fear of God, will do no man good at laſt, nor can it keep him off from evil.

Let no man think by his wiſdom, policy, or ſubtilty, to keep himſelf out of the reach of God. If men will not fear and honour him, he knoweth well enough how to deal with them, and to recover his honour upon them.

Note Fourthly; Let men be as wiſe and crafty as they will, God is not afraid of them, as if they could do him any hurt, or ſpoil his deſigns, as if they could out-wit him, and over-throw his counſels.

Some take upon them, as if they by their wiſdom could hinder Gods purpoſes, and counter-work him, as if they could over-reach or undermine him. We are much afraid of wiſe men; If ſuch a wiſe man, if ſuch a head-piece, be againſt us, we think ſurely he will work us a great deal of miſchief. When David found his ſon Abſolom rebelling againſt him, and Achitophel joyning with him, he prayed that God would turn his counſel into fooliſhneſs (2 Sam. 15. 31.) David feared that Achitophels going over to Abſalom, might have carryed the whole buſineſs againſt him: But God doth not regard a whole conclave of Achitophels, he cares not a ſtraw for their plottings and contrivings. The Lord is ſo far from fearing the counſels of the wiſe in heart, that he can deſtroy them by their own wiſdom, and not only undo their counſels, but undo them by their counſels: The pit which they have digged, they ſhall fall into it themſelves, and be entangled in the lime-twiggs which they have ſet up for others. All this the holy Prophet intended when he ſaid of God (Iſa. 44.25.) He fruſtrateth the tokens of the lyers, and maketh the diviners mad: He turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledg fooliſh. Diviners grow mad when they ſee things iſſuing quite contrary to their predictions and expectations. He that can deſtroy the wiſe with their own wiſdom, needs not fear the wiſdom of the wiſeſt. 'Tis the nobleſt way of vanquiſhing an enemy, when we wound him with his own weapons, and turn his own Artillery upon him. Thus God dealeth with the wiſe in heart; they are nothing in his hands, they cannot put the leaſt ſtop to what he hath a purpoſe to do; but he can put a ſtop to all their purpoſes. The fooliſhneſs of God (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1.25.) is wiſer than men. He ſaith alſo in the third Chapter of the ſame Epiſtle (Verſ. 19.) The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God; for it is written (and that writing is taken out of this Book of Job, Chap. 5.13.) He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs. And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wiſe, that they are vain; and vain he knoweth them to be in a twofold reſpect: Firſt, becauſe ſinful or evil in themſelves; Secondly, becauſe he knows how to make them barren or abortive, ſucceſleſs and ineffectual unto the wiſe: So that they all become like moſt Adventurers at a Lottery, going out with their hearts full of hopes, but returning with their hands full of blanks, Diſappointment, Diſappointment, being written upon all their counſels and undertakings.

Again, Taking the wiſe in heart for thoſe who are truly wiſe, godly wiſe,

Learn, Fifthly; God will not forbear, when he ſeeth cauſe to afflict thoſe who are indeed the wiſeſt and holieſt of men.

Let no man think, that becauſe he is wiſe or holy, he muſt not therefore be touched or medled with. Some conceive the chief deſign of writing this Book, was to let us ſee this truth, That let men be never ſo holy, never ſo upright, or godly, yet they muſt not claime priviledge from the croſs, nor complain when they are under it, that God deals not well with them. In this Job over-acted, ſuppoſing there was no cauſe why ſuch a man as he, ſhould have ſuch ſevere chaſtenings and rebukes;. but let men be never ſo wiſe, never ſo good, God may ſee cauſe to lay his chaſtening rods upon them; and had the Lord nothing elſe to ſay for it, his Soveraignty will bear him out in it againſt the beſt of men. The clay muſt neither ſay to the Potter, why haſt thou made me ſo? Nor why haſt thou marr'd me ſo? Be ſilent O all fleſh (good as well as bad) before the Lord.

Laſtly, Obſerve; What-ever favour, what-ever mercy God beſtoweth upon the holieſt and wiſeſt of men, he doth it not with reſpect to any wiſdom, holineſs, or goodneſs in them, but for his own Name ſake, or becauſe he will.

He reſpecteth not the wiſe in heart. No man can merit the leaſt favour from God; his is free grace. All good cometh to us through the Son of his love, and it was meerly of his love, that ever his Son came to us and dyed for us. Therefore let us not ſay, ſuch a one was a good man, ſuch a one was an holy man, therefore it was ſo and ſo with him. As what we are or can do cannot oblige him (when he ſees cauſe) from giving us correction, ſo he is unobliged as to what we are or can do, in giving us Salvation, whether temporal or eternal. He reſpecteth not the wiſe in heart.

There are yet two other readings of the words, which I ſhall ſet before the Reader, and then conclude all.

The word which we tranſlate reſpecteth, ſignifying properly to ſee, ſome keep to that propriety of it, and render the Text thus; He ſeeth not all wiſe in heart; That is, when the Lord looketh among the Children of Men, he doth not find many, yea ſcarce any of them wiſe. Thus the ſenſe runs in connection with the former part of the verſe, Men ſhould be ſo wiſe as to fear God, and not diſpute any of his proceedings; But he ſeeth or knoweth that all are not ſo; yea he findeth that a great many, even the moſt of men by much are very fools. The truth is, all men naturally are no better (Pſal. 14.2.) The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the Children of Men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand and ſeek God; but he did not find one wiſe in heart among all the Children of Men, as Deſcendants from the firſt Adam. And when he cometh among the beſt of men, men of a ſecond birth, the ſeed and Deſcendants of the ſecond Adam, he doth not ſee them ſo wiſe as to give him glory in every condition, nor under every diſpenſation, yea, he finds a great deal of folly in their hearts. Taking this ſenſe of the words, Elihu ſeems here again to give Job a cloſe rebuke, as not having behaved himſelf ſo wiſely under his ſufferings, as became a man profeſſing the fear of God. 'Tis rare to find a man wiſe throughout, a man having true wiſdom of heart, and ordering himſelf according to the rules of that wiſdom, in all the turns and changes of his life.

Is certe non invenit ſapientes, quoſcunq; intuetur. Bez.

Secondly, The latter part of the verſe is Tranſlated thus; Men, though never ſo wiſe in heart, cannot ſee him. This reading runs the conſtruction of the words quite another way: The former ſaid, He ſeeth not all wiſe in heart; this ſaith, Men wiſe in heart cannot ſee him. The ſenſe of which reading may be thus conceived; The wiſeſt men cannot ſee God, he is both inviſible and incomprehenſible. As men cannot ſee him at all by ſenſe, ſo neither can they comprehend him by reaſon; As the eye cannot take him in who is inviſible, ſo neither can a finite underſtanding take him in, who is infinite in underſtanding. We have a ſight of God through faith in this life: Thus Moſes ſaw him who is inviſible (Heb.11.27.) We ſee him here darkly, through a glaſs, the glaſs of his word and works, of his ordinances and providences (1 *Cor.*13.12.) But the clear ſight of him face to face, the ſight of him as he is, is reſerved to hereafter (1 Cor. 13.12. 1 John 3.2.) Theſe two latter readings of this latter part of the verſe, hold out uſeful truths for further meditation; but I adhere to our own as more clear in the original, as alſo more ſutable to the ſcope and intendment of the foregoing diſcourſe.

Non videbit eum omnis ſapiens corde, vel non videbunt eum ſc. Deum, omnes ſapientes corde. q. d. nullus eorum ipſum videbit. Druſ.

Elihu having ſaid this, ſits down and is ſilent, leaving Job to meditate upon and conſider what he had ſaid.

And now, no ſooner had Elihu wound up his bottom, and made an end, but behold, God began and took Job in hand; he ſpake to him out of the whirlwind, at the beginning of the next Chapter, and brought him upon his knees before he had done with him, as will appear further, if the patience of God give time and opportunity to go ſo far. To him be all the praiſe and glory, who hath helped thus far. Amen.

AN

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations

UPON THE

THIRTY-EIGHTH, THIRTY-NINTH,
FORTYETH, FORTY-FISRT AND FORTY-
SECOND (being the Laſt)

CHAPTERS

Of the Book of JOB.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER;
TO
Thoſe eſpecially of this CITY of LONDON, who have been the PROMOTERS of this WORK.

SIRS,

THE end of a thing (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 7.8.) is better than the beginning thereof. Not that all things end better than they begin: ſome perſons begin well, and ſome things are begun well, which end, and are ended not ſo well, that I ſay not very ill.

Through the All-diſpoſing providence of God; and the importunate call of not a few worthy friends, I began this Work; and now, after twenty-four years travel, making twelve Stages (in ſo many parts, the whole is come forth) I am come to the end of it; And truly, I might juſtly be reproved, at leaſt, for dulneſs and indiligence, or counted a very ſlow-paced Traveller, had I ſpent that twenty-four years (the beſt of my time and Strength) in meaſuring ſo ſhort a journey. But, as I have this to ſay towards an Apology for my over-long Stay in this Work, that I have had frequent diverſions, for a conſiderable part of that time, quite from it; ſo the whole time which I have ſpent in it, hath been but a diverſion, or time (I hope, honeſtly) Stoln, either from my reſt, or from that which was my more proper Work.

And, now that I have, at laſt, ended what I began, all that I ſhall ſay of it, is, that I have ended it. Whether I began it well, or have ended it well, and whether or no the end be better then the beginning, is not for me to ſay. Should I ſay, that I began it well, and have ended it well, or that the end is better than the beginning, it were a piece of moſt immodeſt pride; and ſhould I ſay the contrary of both, or of either, it might deſervedly be called more than a piece of proudeſt modeſty. Such as it is, from the beginning to the end, 'tis what my weakneſs, with the Strength of Chriſt given in; what my ſmall induſtriouſneſs, with the bleſſing given down from above, could attain unto. And I humbly give thanks to the Father of lights, from whom every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh, for any light received or held out towards the underſtanding of this Book; in which (who ſees not?) there are many things (as the Apoſtle Peter ſaith of St. Pauls Epiſtles) hard to be underſtood, ſo hard to be underſtood, that, though I am confident (through the grace of God with me) I have not wreſted them to my own hurt, or the hurt (much leſs deſtruction) of others, (as 'tis there ſaid, the ignorant and unſtable do the other Scriptures, to their own deſtruction) yet I am not aſhamed to acknowledg, that I fear I have not attained ſo clear an underſtanding about ſome of them, as to clear them (which hath been my deſire) with ſatisfaction to the underſtanding of others. However, if what I have attained to, may be in any meaſure ſerviceable to the Church of God, or helpful to any poor ſoul in an afflicted condition (ſuch was Job*'s) I have reached one great end aimed at; and if God have any glory by it, I have reached the greateſt end which can be aimed at. And though the work ſhould be found to have many defects, poſſibly miſtakes, in it, yet the ingenuous Reader will candidly interpret them, or charitably cover them, knowing that failings are common to human frailty, in the beſt of men, how much more in the meaneſt of them! And I ſhall account it a great kindneſs, if I may be friendly minded of thoſe defects; that ſo, if ever any of theſe Pieces ſhall be admitted to come out again, an amendment may be made, and the Work grow up to more perfection.*

This laſt Part, now coming forth, contains the whole tranſaction (from firſt to laſt) between God and Job, none ſpeaking but they two, and Job but very little. Elihu having finiſht his ſpeech in the cloſe of the thirty ſeventh Chapter, the Lord himſelf appeared at the entrance of the thirty eighth, in a Majeſtick and tremendous manner, beſpeaking Job out of a vehement and tempeſtuous whirlwind; and taking up the ſame argument which Elihu had ſo much inſiſted upon before, for the conviction of Job, carrieth him in diſcourſe, quite through the univerſe, thereby farther to convince him, by the view and conſideration of his mighty and admirable works of creation and providence, how ignorant and weak he was in himſelf, how altogether unable and incompetent to contend with God, and therefore how raſh and inconſiderate he had been, in not ſubmitting (how great ſoever his ſufferings were) more quietly to him. And, as Elihu ſaid (Chap.35 11.) That God teacheth us more than the beaſts of the Earth, and maketh us wiſer than the fowls of Heaven : ſo doubtleſs, one great ſcope which the Lord had in his eye throughout that diſcourſe, was to teach Job, and with him us, that his care was much more over him, and is over us, than over the beaſts of the earth, or the fowls of Heaven. And hereupon having ſhewed his own infinite power and wiſdom, as alſo his goodneſs and tender compaſſions, in providing for all ſorts of irrational living creatures, he left Job, and leaves us to make the Inference, how watchful he is over, how reſpectful to man, a rational as well as a living creature. Our bleſſed Saviour Preaching upon the ſame ſubject to his Diſciples, expreſſeth the Inference (Matth.6.26.) Behold the fowls of the air, for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet your heavenly father feedeth them : are ye not much better than they ? And again (Verſ.30.) Wherefore if God ſo cloath the graſs of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is caſt into the oven : ſhall he not much more cloath you, O ye of little faith ? Jeſus Chriſt ſaw it neceſſary to make theſe expreſs applications to his Diſciples, who, at that time, were both of little faith, and of little underſtanding. But here the Lord left Job (a wiſe and knowing man) to pick or ſpell out his meaning, and make application to himſelf, while he told him ſo particularly, how his providence at once over-ruled and maintained, The roaring Lion, the wild Goat, the wild Aſs, the ſtubborn Unicorn, the ſtrong Horſe, the mighty Behemoth among the beaſts of the Earth ; the devouring Raven, the proud Peacock, the fooliſh Oſtrich, the ſwift winged Hawk, and the high-ſoaring Eagle, among the fowls of the air ; as alſo, the formidable Leviathan, among, or rather repreſenting all the fiſhes of the Sea.

Job having with ſteddy, yet trembling attention, heard all theſe words ſpoken to him, with irrefragable authority, by the Lord himſelf out of the whirlwind, ſate down convinced, that ſurely the great God, the Creator of the ends of the earth, who had ſo exact an eye upon all thoſe creatures, both for the continuance of their ſpecies or kinds, and the preſervation of their individuals or particulars, could not poſſibly caſt off the care of man-kind, nor of him in particular, no nor put any man to any hardſhip or ſuffering, but for ſome great end or ends, glorious always to himſelf, and in the iſſue good for the wiſe and patient ſufferer. He was alſo convinced, that himſelf not well underſtanding the miſteries of providence (nor indeed could any more fully underſtand them, than he did the miſteries of creation, or the manner how God laid the foundations of the Earth, and ſhut up the Sea with doors ; he, I ſay, not well underſtanding the miſteries of providence, was convinced that he) had done very ill, to make ſuch long and loud complaints about it, that is, about the ſeverity of Gods dealings with him ; as if like an enemy he intended him nothing but pain and ſorrow, by the pains and ſorrows which he endured.

Thus, at laſt, Job began to ſee, that as being himſelf Gods creature, God might do with him what he pleaſed ; and, that God, being his abſolute Soveraign, could not wrong him, whatever he was pleaſed to do with him : ſo that, foraſmuch as God was ſo careful of, and kind to thoſe inferior, reaſonleſs creatures, there was no ſhadow of a reaſon, why he ſhould have the leaſt jealouſie of Gods kindneſs to him and regard of him, much leſs make ſuch an out-cry, that God was unkind to, and regardleſs of Him, whom he had not only ennobled, as the reſt of mankind, with reaſon, but renewed by grace, and filled with the holy fear of his great and glorious name.

The impreſſions being made upon Job, by the mighty power of God ſpeaking to him out of the whirlwind, he preſently cryed out as faſt againſt himſelf, and againſt his own ignorance and raſhneſs, as he had done before concerning the harſhneſs of his ſufferings under the hand of God ; confeſſing (Chap.40.4.) Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee ? And (Chap 42.3,6.) I have uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not ; wherefore, I abhor my ſelf and repent in duſt and aſhes.

Job being thus humbled and melted down, Job who was lately in the duſt of diſhonour and almoſt in the duſt of death, being thus brought to the duſt of repentance ; the Lord ſuffered him not to lie long there, but quickly raiſed him up out of all his ſufferings ; and, paſſing by all his miſpeakings, while ſufferings lay heavy upon him, he (the Lord) paſſed ſentence upon, or gave judgment againſt Eliphaz and his two friends, as not having ſpoken of him the thing that was right, as his ſervant Job : and not only ſo, but commanded them to do him right, by acknowledging that they had wronged him ; why elſe were they Ordered by the Lord to go unto him as a mediator for their peace ? why elſe were they Ordered by the Lord to bring their ſacrifice unto him, that he Offering it up, and praying for them, the wrath of God which was kindled againſt them, might be quenched, and they received into favour? All theſe offices of love Job freely did for them; and no ſooner had he done them, but God heaped favours upon him, doubling his former ſubſtance, and cauſing all his former friends, who had carried it unfriendly, unhandſomely towards him, and would not own him in the day of his diſtreſs, to haſten their addreſſes, to bring him honourable preſents, and redintegrate their broken friendſhip with him. In all theſe things God bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning, and he found by comfortable experience (which was mentioned at the beginning of this prefatory Epiſtle out of Solomon*'s* Eccleſiaſtes) that the end of a thing is better than the beginning of it; the latter end of his life being fuller of peace, riches, and honour, than the former; and he not ending his life in this world, till he was full of days, fuller of grace, and fully fitted for an endleſs life in glory.

Thus, as in the foregoing parts of this Book, we have heard of the patience of Job, ſo in this we may ſee (as the Apoſtle James ſaith, Chap. 5. 11.) the end of the Lord. But what was that end of the Lord? Any man of ordinary capacity, reading the holy ſtory, may reſolve it in the common way, that, The Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before, that (being reſtored) his ſeven thouſand ſheep were multiplyed to fourteen thouſand, his three thouſand camels to ſix thouſand, his five hundred yoke of Oxen to a thouſand, and his five hundred ſhe-aſſes to as many. This end of the Lord with Job is obvious, and runs in ſight to every Reader; nor can it be denied, but that this was a very good and an honourable end: yet, behold, the Lord made a much better, and more honourable end for Job than this. This was the end of Job*'s croſs; that, was not only ſo, but alſo of his controverſie. Satan charged* Job as an Hypocrite, his friends joyned with Satan in that, yet ſtayed not there, they charged him likewiſe as Heterodox, as a man not only unſincere in his profeſſion of religion, but unſound in the principles of it. The Lord made an end for Job in this matter alſo, abetting his opinion in that great and difficult problem of providence rather than theirs, giving him the day, and putting the crown of victory upon his head in that diſpute, while he ſaid to Eliphaz and his two friends, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job. This, this was the end of the Lord. To bear this gracious determination from the mouth of the ſupream and infallible moderator of all controverſies, was (without controverſie) a thouſand times more pleaſing and ſatisfactory to Job*'s ſpirit, not only than the double cattle, which the Lord gave him, but, than if the Lord had given him all the cattle upon a thouſand hills; or than if all the fowls of the Air, and fiſhes of the Sea, had been given to him.*

In this end of the Lord for Job, we may ſee not only that the Lord is infinitely wiſe and juſt, but (as it followeth in that place of the Apoſtle James) very pitiful and of tender mercy. The Lord ſhews himſelf very pitiful and of tender mercy, when he puts an end to the croſſes of his ſervants, by doubling their outward comforts; he doth ſo too, when he puts an end to the controverſies of his ſervants, by vindicating their credit, and making it appear, that they have ſpoken of him, and of his ways, the thing that is right, or more rightly than their oppoſers and reproachers. This example of the Lords pity and tender mercy in doing both for Job, may ſtrengthen our faith in believing that he will, and lengthen out our patience in waiting, till he doth make both theſe deſirable ends for all thoſe, who like Job have lay'n long under the preſſing burdens of hard afflictions, and harſh conſtructions.

Now, that the Lord would finiſh this work of mercy, and cut it ſhort in righteouſneſs, wiping tears from off all faces, and taking away the rebuke of his people from off the earth, by a timely reſtitution of them to their loſt enjoyments, and blaſted credits (which yet will not be fully done, until the times of the reſtitution of all things, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets ſince the world began; that the Lord (I ſay) would finiſh this work) ſhould be our unceſſant cry to God in prayer, for all his ſorrowing Job*'s, even for all thoſe, who are any where* companions in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus Chriſt. To his bleſſing, and the effectual working of his holy Spirit, I commend you in the peruſal of this enſuing commentary, that, reading ye may underſtand, believe, and profit to ſanctification, conſolation, and ſalvation, according to the will of God, and the hearts deſire of,

YOUR AFFECTIONATE FRIEND AND SERVANT,

May 10.
1666.

JOSEPH CARYL.

AN EXPOSITION WITH Practical Obſervations UPON THE THIRTY-EIGHTH, THIRTY-NINTH, FORTYETH, FORTY-FISRT AND FORTY-SECOND (being the Laſt) CHAPTERS Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlwind, and ſaid,

Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg?

Gird up now thy loins like a man: for I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me.

This Chapter begins the laſt Act, or Concluſion of that great Diſputation between Job and his three Friends, held forth in this Book. We have heard Job's three Friends ſtrongly charging him: We have heard Job ſtiffly defending himſelf: We have heard Elihu, though moderating the matter between them, yet ſharply reproving him. Elihu was indeed a quick, but a neceſſary reprover, provided and ſent by God:

Firſt, To calm and cool Job's ſpirit diſquieted by enduring ſharp afflictions from the hand of God, and heated by hearing thoſe ſharper accuſations from the tongues of men.

Secondly, To reclaim him from thoſe over-eager defences of his own integrity, and likewiſe from thoſe over-paſſionate complaints about the dealings of God, to a better and more ſubmiſſive temper of ſpirit towards him, as alſo to lower thoughts of himſelf.

Elihu fell upon the uſeful point, and hit (as I may ſay) the Nail on the head, he ſtruck the right Vein, and met with the peccant Humour: yet being young, and wanting gravity to ſet all home, and make it work; or, to make the impreſſion deep enough upon Job, it was but need that God himſelf ſhould ſecond him, and he did it to purpoſe, or with full effect; preſſing the ſame Arguments, for the main, which Elihu had begun; yet ſo, that we may manifeſtly diſcern a wide difference, whether we reſpect words or things, matter or manner, between men, how much ſoever aſſiſted by the ſpirit of God, and God himſelf in ſpeaking.

Here the Eternal God Jehovah, having ſeen his faithful ſervant, and ſtout Champion Job, contending and wraſtling long with Satan, his profeſſed enemy, and with his harſh and cenſorious, though both profeſſed and real Friends, foreſeeing alſo that if Job and his Friends (who had alſo been provoked by Elihu) ſhould have proceeded to anſwer him, a new broil muſt needs begin; God (I ſay) who never fails, nor forſakes his in their extreamity, or in time of their greateſt need, ſeeing and fore-ſeeing all this, ſtept in moſt ſeaſonably, and moſt graciouſly to undertake the deciſion of this great Controverſie between Job and his Friends, in perſon, raiſing a ſtormy Wind, as a witneſs of his mighty preſence, or to teſtifie who was there, as alſo (though with a Fatherly love and affection, yet) impartially and plainly to convince Job of his errour, ſhewing him wherein he had offended, and bringing him at laſt upon his knees, in a ſelf-abhorrence and repentance in duſt and aſhes.

Thus God the chief Judg, the great Arbitrator, and Determiner of all doubts and queſtions, and of all matters and things; the great God (I ſay) declared himſelf, to whom Job had made ſo many appeals, whom he ſo earneſtly deſired to take further and fuller cogniſance of his Cauſe, He, even He comes forth as a juſt and righteous Judg, and lets him and his Friends know his mind and judgment in the caſe. So then,

The Queſtion ventilated in this Book, is not ſtated according to the judgment of a man, who is ſubject to error, but according to the infinite wiſdom and underſtanding of the great God, who ſearcheth the heart, and knoweth all ſecrets, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all.

And indeed, in the latter part of this Book, we may well conceive God himſelf ſpeaking, he ſpeaks ſo like himſelf: For here the underſtanding Reader may perceive a wonderful copiouſneſs of ſpeech, and largeneſs of diſcourſe, ſtrengthened with the exacteſt and weightieſt reaſons, ſet forth with ſuch variety of matter, with ſuch gravity of expreſſions, with ſuch preſſing queries and interrogations, that it very much excels all that had been ſpoken either by the Diſputants or the Moderator.

And ſuch was the condeſcenſion of God, that he ſeems to take the words out of Elihu's mouth, and urge over his Arguments anew, before he would give the final ſentence in this caſe; from which, as there could be no appeal, ſo, in which, there could be no miſtake. All this the Lord contracts into two Orations, or Speeches, to each of which Job Anſwers, and ſubſcribes by an humble ſubmiſſion.

The firſt of theſe Speeches, is contained in this thirty-eighth Chapter, and to the end of the thirty-ninth: To which God calls for an Anſwer in the two firſt verſes of the fortieth Chapter; and Job gives his Anſwer in the third, fourth, and fifth verſes of that Chapter.

The ſecond Speech or Diſcourſe of God with Job begins at the ſixth verſe of the fortieth Chapter, and is continued to the end of the one and fortieth Chapter; to which we have Job's Anſwer at the beginning of the forty ſecond Chapter, to the end of the ſixth verſe; and then the Chapter cloſeth with Gods ſpecial and irrefragable Judgment upon, or determination of the Queſtion between Job and his Friends, as alſo with a deſcription of Job's bleſſed reſtauration after his fall, to a higher condition of outward proſperity and tranquility then ever he enjoyed before. Thus you have the ſum of what's behind of the whole Book.

This Chapter with the next hold out the Lords firſt Argumentation or diſcourſe with Job, and in it we may conſider three things.

Firſt, The Preface or Introduction, in the firſt, ſecond, and third verſes of this Chapter.

Secondly, The Speech it ſelf, to the end of the thirty-ninth Chapter.

Thirdly, Gods demand of an Anſwer, or that Job ſhould give him an account of himſelf, or of what he had ſaid at the beginning of the fortieth Chapter.

The words under preſent conſideration are a Preface or Introduction, leading to the whole buſineſs, and in them we may conſider three things.

Firſt, The Hiſtorians tranſition, or, an Hiſtorical tranſition, (Verſ. 1.) Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind, and ſaid. This the Hiſtorian or Pen-man of this Book inſerts to connect the matter of this Chapter with that which went before; he connects the diſcourſe of Elihu, which ended at the thirty-ſeventh Chapter, with the diſcourſe of God at the beginning of this: Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind, and ſaid.

Secondly, We have here what the Lord ſaid, in form of Preface, leading in the intended matter; and that,

Firſt, By way of reprehenſion, or by a chiding Queſtion about what Job had ſaid (Verſ. 2.) Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg? This is it which the Lord ſaid, when he began with Job; Who is this that darkeneth counſel, by words without knowledg? As if he had ſaid, let me ſee the man, or, who is the man that ſpeaketh thus? I know there is a Queſtion (and I ſhall ſpeak ſomewhat to it afterwards) Whether theſe words were directed to Job or Elihu; yea, ſome Queſtion, whether this whole Chapter be not intended to Elihu rather than to Job, (I ſhall anſwer that Queſtion alſo afterwards) but I give it now in the analyſis of the context, as I purpoſe, God willing, to ſtate it when I come to the Anſwer of that queſtion: And therefore I ſay the reproof falls upon Job, whom God thus beſpake, beginning with a chiding, Who is this that darkeneth counſel, by words without knowledg.

Secondly, by way of provocation to anſwer; or, we have here the Lords command given Job to prepare himſelf for an Anſwer, as well as he could, to what himſelf ſhould ſay (Verſ. 3.) Gird up now thy loins like a man, for I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me. As the Lord reproved and chid him for what he had ſaid, ſo the Lord exhorted and encouraged him to ſet and fit himſelf the beſt he was able, to anſwer what himſelf had to ſay unto him.

Thus we have the intendment of theſe three verſes; and if you would have in one word, a Proſpect of the whole following Diſcourſe, of God with Job, the Sum of it may be given and taken thus:

That as Elihu before, ſo now the Lord would have Job know and confeſs, that no man muſt preſume to be ſo bold with him as to queſtion his doings; that's the great mark at which God aimed in all he ſaid to Job. And the confirmation or proof of it is taken up from this unqueſtionable ground; No man muſt Queſtion any thing which God doth to him or with him, for this very reaſon, Becauſe God doth it; or, becauſe God often alone, always in chief, hath done and doth all things. God is the alone Creator of all things, he hath given all things their Being, he hath put all things into the Order in which they ſtand, and he preſerves them in their ſtanding; and if any evil befal man, the hand of God hath done it much more then the hand of any man: what then hath any man to do to Queſtion his doings?

Now that God alone hath Created and doth order all things, he himſelf proves, by calling Job to ſhew where he was When the Foundation of the Earth was laid, and Bounds were ſet to the Sea, &c. And ſo proceeds to aſſert and hold forth his ſole Power in furniſhing the Earth with Beaſts, the Air with Fowls, and the Sea with Fiſh.

The Lord having thus given Job to underſtand, that the whole World is his Work, and that he gave Being to all the Creatures in the World for the help of man, without the help of man, would have him thereby alſo underſtand and be convinced, that he and all men ought to adore, and quietly ſubmit to his providential workings, or the products of his Providence all the World over.

That's (as was ſaid) the general Point carried through this whole Diſcourſe of God with Job, the particulars whereof yield much matter both of Meditation and Admiration. I begin with the Preface:

Verſ. 1. Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid.

In this Verſe we have three things.

Firſt, The Perſon anſwering.

Secondly, The Perſon anſwered.

Thirdly, The manner of his Anſwer.

The Perſon anſwering is, the Lord; the Perſon anſwered, is Job; the manner of the Anſwer is, out of a Whirl-wind; Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind.

In the firſt word of the Text, we have (that which our Tranſlation makes emphatical) an intimation of the time or ſeaſon of this Divine interpoſition; then the Lord anſwered, &c. The Hebrew Text doth not expreſs this Adverb of time, there 'tis only, the Lord anſwered, but we well ſupply it, rendering, then the Lord anſwered; as if the Penman had ſaid, at that very nick, inſtant or juncture of time, the Lord came in; the words were no ſooner out of the mouth of Elihu, he had no ſooner concluded his ſpeech with Job, but the Lord began, and anſwered Job; and if the Lord had not juſt then interpoſed, poſſibly Job might have replyed, and a new heat might have riſen, to the increaſing of his troubles, and the inflaming of all their Spirits (as was hinted before) therefore the Lord to ſtop all further proceedings, or ſpeech between them two, began preſently to ſpeak himſelf. Then the Lord anſwered. Take this Obſervation from it;

The Lord will appear in the fitteſt ſeaſon.

It was time for the Lord to appear, leſt this poor man ſhould have been utterly ſwallowed up with ſorrows, and over-whelmed with his affliction, or leſt he ſhould have been drawn out too long and too far in his bitter complainings and impatiency. The Lord is a God of judgment; bleſſed are they that wait for him (Iſa.30.18.) He is a wiſe God, and knows how to time every action; he knows when to appear, when to ſhew himſelf. As he himſelf will not contend for ever (Iſa.57.16.) ſo neither will he let others contend overlong, leſt the Spirit ſhould fail before him, and the ſouls which he hath made. This is a comfortable truth with reſpect both to Nations, and Perſons, both to the caſe of the Church of God in general, and of every believer in particular. The Apoſtle Peter having counſelled the afflicted to humble themſelves under the mighty hand of God (1Pet.5.6.) adds this encouragement (in the next words) to do ſo, that he may exalt you in due time: though not in your time, nor at your day, the day when you would have him do it; yet he will do it in time, and in due time, that is, when it ſhall be moſt fit and beſt for you. Thus he appeared to and for Job in the Text, when the ſorrows of his heart were enlarged, and when he had moſt need of ſuch an appearance. The Lord knows how at any time, and when 'tis the moſt proper time, to relieve his ſervants. Then

The Lord anſwered Job.

The word here uſed is Jehovah; and ſeveral of the Learned take notice, that it is here uſed with a ſpecial ſignificancy: for in the diſcourſes of Job and his friends throughout this Book, other names of God are, if not univerſally, yet moſtly uſed, as Elſhaddai, Eloah, &c. In the firſt Chapter indeed, where God is ſpoken of by the divine Hiſtorian or ſacred Penman of this Hiſtory, he is named Jehovah, as alſo in ſome other ſuch like places; but in the body of the diſpute not ſo: And two reaſons may be given of it.

Firſt, The name Jehovah imports the Being of God; and therefore God himſelf, being about to ſpeak of his giving a Being to the whole Creation, and to ſeveral ſorts of creatures, he is moſt properly repreſented by his name Jehovah, which, as it implyeth that he is the Firſt Being, the Fountain of his own Being, or that he is of himſelf, ſo, that he gives a Being to all things, and that in him (as the Apoſtle told the great Philoſophers of Athens, Acts 17.) we live, and move, and have our being.

Secondly, The Lord (though he came in a Whirl-wind, yet) maniſeſted himſelf in a clearer light to Job, than ever he had done before. Now, as in the third of Exodus, when the Lord ſent Moſes to the people of Iſrael to bring them up out of Egypt, to Canaan (which was a great work, one of the greateſt that was ever done in the world, and in which the Lord made the moſt glorious diſcovery of his Power, Juſtice, and Mercy; when God I ſay, ſent Moſes upon this ſervice) he ſaid unto him (Exod. 6.2,3.) I am the Lord, I am Jehovah, and I appeared unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob by the Name of God Almighty; but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. God being about to make himſelf more known in the world, then he had been to that day, by his dreadful plagues upon Pharaoh, and the miraculous deliverance of his people out of Egypt (as he ſaid *Chap.*9.16.) And in very deed, for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power, and that my name may be declared in all the earth. The Lord, I ſay, (being about to do theſe great things for the manifeſtation of his own greatneſs) gave this charge to Moſes at the ſixth verſe of the ſixth chapter before mentioned; Wherefore ſay unto the Children of Iſrael, I am Jehovah, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, &c. Thus in this latter part of the Book of Job, the Lord being about to looſen the bonds of Job's affliction, and to eaſe him of his burden, as alſo to declare and manifeſt himſelf more clearly to him than formerly (as he confeſſed *Chap.*42.5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eyes have ſeen thee) he therefore aſſumed his great name Jehovah. Then the Lord

Anſwered Job, &c.] But ſome may ſay, Job had not ſpoken lately, much leſs laſt. Elihu ſpake out ſix whoſe Chapters ſince Job ſpake a word; and though Elihu gave him the liberty, yea almoſt provoked him to ſpeak, yet he laid his hand upon his mouth, he ſpake not a word: How then can it be ſaid The Lord anſwered Job? To avoid this difficulty,

Some render, Then the Lord anſwered concerning, or about Job; And theſe turn the whole diſcourſe of God in this and the next Chapter upon Elihu, in favour of Job. I ſhall touch upon that opinion and interpretation (as was ſaid) afterwards: but at preſent affirm, that Job was the perſon to whom the Lord here directed his Anſwer; and to take off this doubt, how the Lord could be ſaid to anſwer Job, when Job had not ſpoken laſt, but Elihu,

I anſwer (as upon a like occaſion it hath been elſewhere ſhewed in this Book *Chap.*3.2.) that ſometimes in Scripture, a Speech begun is called an Anſwer, where nothing had been ſpoken before, to which that ſpeech could be applied in way of anſwer, *Matth.*11.25. *Matth.*17.4. The reaſon of this Hebraiſm, is becauſe ſuch as begin to ſpeak, do either anſwer the neceſſity of the matter, or the deſire of the hearers; and ſo they give a real and vertual, though not a formal Anſwer. Yet there are two conſiderations, in which we may apply the word Anſwer, formally and ſtrictly taken, to Job.

Firſt, If we conſider Job's wiſhes and requeſts.

Secondly, If we conſider Job's complaints, and (though the word be ſomewhat hard) his murmurings: The Lord may be ſaid to anſwer Job, as to his wiſh, deſire, or requeſt; becauſe Job had earneſtly deſired and requeſted more than once, that God would take his Cauſe in hand, or that he would have the hearing of it. Thus he ſpake at the third verſe of the three and twentieth Chapter: O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his Seat: I would order my Cauſe before him, and fill my mouth with arguments. Zophar alſo, one of Job's friends, made the ſame requeſt concerning Job (*Chap.*11.2.) O that God would ſpeak, and open his lips againſt thee: As if he had ſaid, Eliphaz hath been ſpeaking, and Bildad hath been ſpeaking, and I am now about to ſpeak, but O that God would ſpeak. It was the wiſh of Job that God would ſpeak, and it was the wiſh of this his friend, and now behold God appears, poſſibly beyond their expectation, though not beſide their wiſh; for 'tis like they had not faith enough to believe that God would anſwer thoſe wiſhes. So then, God may be ſaid here to anſwer, becauſe (as it was prayed) he now took the matter into his own hand, and in perſon (as I may ſay) argued the Caſe with Job, and finally determined his Cauſe.

Hence Note; The wiſhes, requeſts, and prayers of good men have ſometimes been heard, though they were over-bold in making them, or had no clear ground to make them.

Job had no rule for ſuch a Petition, that he might preſently have a trial at the Tribunal of God; yet God was ſo gracious as to anſwer him in it, not only to his reproof, but to his comfort. The Name of God is, O thou that heareſt prayer, (Pſalm 65. 2.) If carnal men have their extravagant prayers and wiſhes granted, 'tis in wrath; but if the Lord grant the paſſionate prayers and wiſhes of a godly man, it proves, though ſometimes a preſent affliction, yet alwayes, upon one account or other, a mercy in the iſſue. When the luſting Iſraelites wiſht for fleſh, the Lord heard their wiſhes; take Quails your bellies full, till they come out at your Noſtrils; but while the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of God fell upon them. If the Lord grants what luſt asketh, ſuch pay dear for what they have for the asking. It hath been anciently ſaid, many have their prayers heard in meer anger; ſo are all theirs who pray for what they have not, in meer diſcontent with what they have. The Lord heard Job, and not in anger, but in favour and condeſcenſion to him. Now if ſome not well grounded nor warranted requeſts of good men may be granted and anſwered (the Lord pitying their weakneſs, and eyeing their uprightneſs) in favour; how much more may the be confident, that their gracious and humble requeſts, ſuch requeſts as are every way ſutable to the Word and Will of God, ſhall be graciouſly anſwered!

Multi irato Deo exaudiuntur.

Secondly, The Lord anſwered, as the Prayer and Wiſh, ſo the Complaints of Job; he had complained ſometimes (though he were a mirror of patience) impatiently. Theſe complaints the Lord anſwered, but it was with ſevere and ſharp reproofs, as we find in the next Verſe.

To conclude this Query, we may ſay, God had two great ends or deſigns in anſwering both the wiſhes and complaints of Job.

Firſt, That he might humble and convince him, that he might ſtop his mouth and ſilence his complainings for ever, as he did moſt effectually.

Secondly, That after his humiliation, and repentance, he might juſtifie and acquit him, and alſo reſtore him to his former comforts and enjoyments, as he did moſt mercifully. This being the deſign of the Lord in ſpeaking to Job, what he ſaid, may well be called an Anſwer.

But how or in what mannner did the Lord anſwer him? Surely in ſuch a manner, as never man was anſwered. The Lord anſwered Job

Out of the Whirlwind.

He anſwered him (as we ſay) to ſome Tune. A Whirlwind makes ſtrange kind of Muſick. A Whirlwind is a ſudden mighty loud-bluſtring Wind, taking away, or bearing down all before it. A Whirlwind is a Wind which moves whirling, and gyring about all the points of the compaſs, no man knows where to have it, nor how to ſhelter himſelf from it. I have had occaſion to ſpeak of the Wind, and of the Natural ordinary Whirlwind in the former Chapter. But here's a Whirlwind extraordinary, if not ſupernatural. There's much queſtioning among ſome Interpreters how we are to conceive of this Whirlwind. I would anſwer that point a little, and then give ſome account, why the Lord ſpake to Job out of ſuch a Whirlwind.

Firſt, Some affirm that it was only a Viſional Whirlwind: As if the Lord appeared (as it were) in a Tempeſt or Whirlwind to Job in a deep ſleep, ſuch as was upon Adam (Gen. 2. 21.) when the Lord took one of his Ribs, and made the Woman. In ſuch a deep ſleep, ſay they, Job ſaw a Whirlwind, and heard the Lord ſpeaking to him out of it: As Ezekiel, who in a Viſion looked, and behold a Whirlwind came out of the North; as we read in the firſt Chapter of that Propheſie, (Verſ. 4.)

Secondly, Others conceive that it was not a Viſional, but a Metaphorical Whirlwind, or a Whirlwind in a figure; and we may give you a threefold Metaphor, or three things, to which this paſſage of Providence may allude to a ſpeaking out of a Whirlwind.

Firſt, God anſwered Job of the Whirlwind; that is, when there was a great buſle or a ſtorm amomg the Diſputants, conflicting about Job's caſe; one moving this way, another that, all being toſſed about (as it were) with the wind of their ſeveral opinions in ventilating his condition. Out of this Whirlwind it was (ſay ſome) or while all were thus diſcompoſed in their ſpirits, and could not compoſe the matter in difference between them and Job, during this hurry or troubleſome ſtate of things and minds, the Lord aroſe and anſwered Job.

Secondly, The Lord may be ſaid to anſwer Job out of the Whirlwind, becauſe he ſpake to him angrily, diſpleaſedly, and reprovingly. Anger, eſpecially the Lords anger or Diſpleaſure, is often in Scripture compared to a Storm or Tempeſt: As if this Whirlwind were nothing elſe but a ſharp angry chiding. When a man chides, we ſay, The man's in a ſtorm; and we may ſay with reverence, when the Lord ſpeaks chidingly (as he did to Job) he is in a ſtorm, or (according to the Text) ſpeaks out of a ſtormy Whirlwind: Thus alſo, when the Lord ſpeaks pleaſingly, and gently, then he may be ſaid to ſpeak in a calm. There's a truth in that.

Thirdly, The Lord anſwered in a Whirlwind; that is, while Job, both as to his outward condition and inward diſpoſition, or the frame of his ſpirit, was evidently in a great ſtorm or toſs. For doubtleſs, his ſpirit was very ſtormy and toſſed up and down at that time, that is, much troubled and diſquieted, upon the with-drawings of God, and the unkindneſs of his friends. Now when Job had this Storm, this Whirlwind in his ſpirit, the Lord appeared and anſwered him. Thus ſome conceive it, though not a Viſional Whirlwind, yet a Metaphorical Whirlwind in thoſe three ſences opened. But Thirdly, (with others) I take the Whirlwind here in proper ſence, that is, for ſuch a Whirlwind as is often heard and felt, ſounding, bluſtering, and making great diſturbance in the Air, blowing up Trees by the roots, and overthrowing Houſes to the very foundation. One of the Rabbins calls it a dark Cloud; ſeveral of the Moderns expreſs it by a Rainy or watry Cloud, out of which iſſued that dreadful Storm, called a Whirlwind. Doubtleſs, ſome ſudden extraordinary Wind, exceeding the conſtant order and common courſe of Nature, gathered the Clouds at that time. Thus God at once hid the glory of his Majeſty, and teſtified it (much after the ſame manner as he did at the promulgation of the Law upon Mount Sinai) when he anſwered Job out of the Whirlwind.

Ex nube obſcura. Rab. Levi. Ex Nimbo. Bez. Ex procella & venti turbine horrifico. E turbine, i. e. à nube è qua erupit turba ſeu ventus turbineus. Piſc. Et nube aliqua præter naturæ ordinem facta. Grot. De ipſa caligine, in qua ſc. videtur nobis Deus deliteſcere. Vatabl.

But it may be queſtioned, why did God anſwer Job out of a Whirlwind?

Firſt, Such a way of anſwering was moſt proper to the diſpenſation of thoſe Old Teſtament Times, when the Covenant of Grace lay covered with Legal ſhadows, and was uſually adminiſtred in a clothing or ſhew of terror; eſpecially (as was ſaid before) at the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai (Exod. 19. Deut. 4. 12.) when, ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake (Heb. 12. 21.) And ſurely the Lord appeared and ſpake very dreadfully to ſome of the Prophets in thoſe Elder times; eſpecially to the Prophet Habakkuk, who thus reports the conſternation of his mind (Chap, 3. 16.) When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenneſs entred into my bones, and I trembled in my ſelf, that I might reſt in the day of trouble. Now, Goſpel times being more clear and calm, Chriſt ſpeaks more clearly and calmly; as it was propheſied (Iſa. 42. 2, 3.) He ſhall not cry nor lift up his voice in the ſtreet: (Chriſt did not ſpeak out of a Whirlwind) A bruiſed reed he ſhall not break, and the ſmoking Flax ſhall he not quench; he ſhall bring forth Judgment unto Victory: That is, he ſhall with all tenderneſs condeſcend to the weakeſt Souls, and deal with them moſt ſweetly, gently, and compaſſionately.

Secondly, The Lord ſpake in a Whirlwind, that he might ſhew the greater State and Majeſty, to awaken Job yet more, or to make him more attentive; as alſo to affect him yet more deeply with the apprehenſion of his Power and Glory; and to leave a greater impreſſion upon his ſpirit of his own vileneſs, weakneſs; and nothingneſs. Job was yet too big in his own eyes, the Lord would annihilate or make him nothing; the Lord would beat him out of all conceit with himſelf, out of an opinion of his own integrity and righteouſneſs, that he might ſee and confeſs there was no way but to lie at his foot, abhorring himſelf, and repenting in duſt and aſhes. Such to this day is the pride and ſtupidneſs of mans fleſh, that he hardly attends the Word or Works of God; unleſs awed by ſome extraordinary Miniſtration.

Ærumnoſo homini conformem exhibens aſpectum. Munſt.

Thirdly, We may conceive the Lord appeared and ſpake in this Whirlwind, that he might therein ſuit his appearance to the ſtate and condition of Job at that time, or that he might (as it were) ſymbolize with Job's troubled eſtate. Job, as I toucht before, was in a Storm, and now God declares himſelf in a Storm: And that is the reaſon, which ſome give, why the Lord appeared to Moſes (Exod. 3. 2.) in a burning buſh; it was (ſay they) that his apparition might anſwer their preſent condition. The Children of Iſrael were then in the fire of affliction, and entangled in the buſh of cruel bondage, they were ſcratcht and torn with briars and thorns; and the Lord ſpake out of a burning buſh to Moſes, as here to Job out of the Whirlwind.

De turbine indignationis indice.

Fourthly, and laſtly; I conceive the reaſon why the Lord ſpake to him in a Storm, or Whirlwind, was to let him know that he was not well pleaſed with him, but purpoſed to reprove and chide him. Though Job was a precious Servant of God, yet God was not well pleaſed with many paſſages under his affliction, and therefore he would not flatter but humble him: For though Job ſpake from an honeſt heart, and what he ſaid was truth, yet God did not like his manner of defence and pleading for himſelf: He was not pleaſed to ſee him hold up the Bucklers ſo long, when he ſhould have laid them down rather, and ſubmitted. David to ſhew how greatly the Lord was diſpleaſed with his enemies, tells us what dreadful effects followed the hearing and granting of his prayer againſt them, (Pſal. 18. 7, 8, 9, &c.) Then the Earth ſhook and trembled, the foundations alſo of the Hills moved and were ſhaken, becauſe he was wroth; there went a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured, coals alſo were kindled by it: He bowed the Heavens alſo and came down, and darkneſs was under his feet, &c. Thus the Lord appeared in an Earthquake, in ſmoke, in fire, and darkneſs, to make the proud oppoſers of his faithful Servant David, know how much his anger was kindled againſt them. Thus alſo when the Lord revealed himſelf to Elijah (1 Kings 19. 11.) its ſaid, a great and ſtrong wind rent the Mountains and brake the Rocks; and after the wind, an Earthquake; and after the Earthquake, a fire, before the ſtill voice was heard: And why all this, but to ſhew that the Lord was highly diſpleaſed with the doings of the Kings of Iſrael at that time, and with that Idolatrous generation; therefore he appeared in ſuch a dreadful manner, while he purpoſed to conclude all in a ſtill voice. Though the Lord was not in the Wind, in the Earthquake, nor in the Fire, yet theſe were fore-runners of his appearance, and ſignified that the Lord would ſhake that people with a mighty Wind and Earthquake of Judgment, yea even conſume them with the fire of his wrathful jealouſie, for their ſuperſtitious following after Baal, and deſerting his appointed worſhip. When the Luſts of wicked men grow fiery and ſtormy, God will convince them with fire and ſtorms; and if his own Servants grow too bold with him, he will make them ſenſible of it, as here he did Job, by ſpeaking to them out of a Whirlwind; though he be intended to ſpeak to them at laſt as he did to Elijah, in a ſtill voice, and to Job, with favour and approbation.

Thus much for the opening of theſe words, Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The great goodneſs of God, who condeſcends or lets himſelf down to ſpeak and treat with duſt and aſhes!

What a wonder is it, that the Lord of Heaven and Earth, ſhould admit, and enter into a parly with man, who is but a well ſhaped clod of Earth! Solomon was in a kind of amazement at the mercy, when he ſaid at the Dedication of the Temple (1 Kings 8. 22.) But will God indeed dwell on Earth! And may not we, that God ſhould come down to confer with an afflicted Bed-rid man on Earth! I know ſome are of opinion, that the Lord ſpake by an Angel to Job; however, here was the Lords preſence, it was Jehovah, who manifeſted himſelf to Job, what Miniſtry ſoever he uſed: Thus the Lord is pleaſed often to interpoſe in the caſe and cauſe of his afflicted Servants, though we ſee him not, nor have ſuch formal apparitions, as here in the Text. The Lord, the high and lofty One, who dwelleth in the high and holy Place, dwelleth alſo with him that is of a contrite and humble Spirit; and he dwelleth with him to revive him, (Iſa. 57. 15.) Therefore ſurely he manifeſts himſelf to him in his loving-kindneſs, which is better than life, and the very life of our lives. The Lord who hath Heaven for his Throne, and the Earth his foot-ſtool, ſaith by the ſame Prophet (Iſa. 66. 1, 2.) To this man will I look, (and leſt any ſhould take this man to be one of the mighty ones of this World, he giveth us both a ſignal ſpecification, and clear character of this man to whom he looketh) even to him that is poor, and of a contrite Spirit, and that trembleth at my Word. And if the Lord look to ſuch a man, if he vouchſafe him him his gracious eye, doubleſs he alſo reveals himſelf graciouſly and freely to him.

Secondly, The Lord came here to inſtruct and teach Job. Several perſons had dealt with him before, and they very worthy, good, and learned perſons, and they came with a purpoſe to do him good; yet all would not do: All that his three friends ſaid, who undertook him firſt in their turns, was to little purpoſe in appearance. And though Elihu, a ſpritely young man, diſcours'd him with much life and heat, yet neither could he do the buſineſs: Job's Spirit began indeed to yield upon the laſt engagement of Elihu with him; yet he did not convince him fully. God came at laſt, and he prevailed, he did the deed; Then the Lord anſwered Job.

Hence Note, We need the teachings of God, beſides all the teachings of men, that we may rightly know him, and our ſelves, together with the intendment of his dealings with us, and our own duty under them.

'Tis the mercy of the New Covenant, that we ſhall be taught of God, and not by man only nor alone. As here Job had three or four, ſo we may have thrice three men toiling with us a long time in vain. The work is never well done, till God comes; and though we have not ſuch appearances of God now, yet he doth the ſame thing in effect to this day. This and that man, a thouſand men, yea a man who is an Interpreter, one of a thouſand (as Elihu ſpake) may be labouring upon the Conſcience of a ſinner, and never bring things home either to convince or comfort him, till God is pleaſed to come in by the power of his bleſſed Spirit, and then who can but be convinced and comforted! Hence our Lord Chriſt had no ſooner reported the Covenant Promiſe out of the Prophet, They ſhall be all taught of God (John. 6. 45.) but preſently he makes this inference from it, Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me. We may ſay to all who are ſavingly wrought upon, as Chriſt to Peter, upon that Confeſſion which he made (Matth. 16. 16. Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the Living God) Fleſh and blood hath not revealed this to you, but your Father which is in Heaven.

Impoſſibile eſt Deum diſcere ſine Deo. Iren. l. 4. adverſus Hæret. c. 10. A Deo diſcendum quicquid de Deo intelligendum. Hilar. l. 5. de Trin.

It was ſaid by one of the Ancients, it is impoſſible to know God without God. And ſo ſaid another, We muſt learn all that from God which we underſtand of God. Unleſs God be our Tutor, we ſhall never be good Scholars. We know neither God nor our ſelves, any further than God teacheth us. Chriſt ſaith, Be not called Maſters, for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt (Matth. 23. 8.) There are two ſorts of Maſters. Firſt, Ruling or Commanding Maſters. Secondly, Teaching Maſters. To the former we are Servants, to the latter we are Scholars. In the eight verſe Chriſt ſpeaks of Teaching Maſters, as of Ruling Maſters at the tenth verſe. Now, when Chriſt would not have any man take upon him, or own the Title of Maſter or Teacher, his meaning is, that no man ſhould arrogate to himſelf the honour of principal Teacher, which is the peculiar of God: But to acknowledge that all mans teaching is nothing without Gods; as the Apoſtle alſo ſaith (1 Cor. 3.) We muſt learn from God whatever we know aright, either of God, or of our ſelves. Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar ſpake much of God to Job, but Job was never effectually humbled, till God ſpake.

Thirdly, Note, As God here by his Word, ſo always the Word of God is the true determiner of controverſies, and reſolver of doubts.

Rectum eſt index ſui & obliqui.

No queſtion can be truly ſtated, but by the Word of God. As the Statutes of the Lord are right (Pſal. 19. 8.)

So they ſhew what is right, and what is not. A ſtrait Rule declares it ſelf to be ſtrait, and detects the crookedneſs of whatſoever is crooked. The laſt appeal in all things doubtful is to the Law, (Iſa. 8. 20.) To the Law, and to the Teſtimony; if they ſpeak not according to this Word, it is becauſe there is no light, or (as the Margin hath it) no morning in them. The Sun of righteouſneſs hath not riſen upon them who ſpeak and hold unrighteous things, Search the Scriptures, ſaith Chriſt (John 5. 39.) or, as 'tis well rendred in the Indicative Mood, Ye ſearch the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life. Nor did they think amiſs in thinking ſo; but that which Chriſt ſecretly reproved, while he ſaid ſo, was, that they did amiſs, or contradicted the Scripture in their lives, while they boaſtingly thought ſo. Not what this or that man ſaith, but what God ſaith, is the true ground of mans faith. It was a worthy ſpeech of Conſtantine in the Nicene Council, Let us take out of that Book divinely inſpired, the ſolution of our Queſtions. It is not what the Fathers ſay, nor what the Pope ſaith, nor what Councils ſay; but what the Word of God ſaith, that muſt be heard and relied upon for Salvation. The Word is the Judg, that is the rule of Judgment. As here, God was the perſonal Judg of this, ſo his Word ever be the Normal Judg of all controverſies.

Sumamus ex libris divinitus inſpiratis ſolutionem quæſtionum. Theod. l. 1. Hiſt. Eccleſ. c. 7.

Fourthly, Note; The Day of Judgment is like to be a terrible Day.

Here was a little day of Judgment, here God came to determine a matter between Job and his three friends, and that was a terrible day; in it we have an image or repreſentation of the laſt Judgment Day; God appeared in a Storm, in a Whirl-wind: what think you will be the Lords appearance, when he comes to Judg the whole World! The Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of ſome particular day of Judgment which ſhould fore-run the general Judgment, ſets it forth in dreadful Metaphors (Pſal. 50. 3, 4.) Our God (Theſe are the words of Gods faithful ſervants, aſſuring themſelves of a gracious deliverance from the cruelty of wicked men, by the goodneſs and mighty arm of God; Our God, ſay they) ſhall come, that is, he ſhall certainly come, though he ſeem for a while to defer and put off his coming; and ſhall not keep ſilence (as he hath been thought to do, either in not anſwering the prayers of his people, or in not puniſhing the preſumption of his and their enemies, as he alſo ſaid he did at the 21. Verſe of this Pſalm) and then wo to the wicked, for, A fire ſhall devour before him (God will then appear as a conſuming fire) and a mighty tempeſt (of wrath and indignation) round about him; (ſo that there can be no eſcape either before or behind, on one ſide or the other: And then (Verſ. 4.) He ſhall call to the Heavens from above, and to the Earth; That is, to the heavenly and earthly Powers, as witneſſes againſt the ungodly, and as aids and aſſiſtants, that they may judg his people, that is, aſſert their integrity and maintain them in it. Now (I ſay) if there have been or ſhall be ſuch dreadful appearances of God in this world, for the vindication of his people, and the avenging of them upon their enemies; what will his appearance be, when in the end of the world he ſhall come (as the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks, Verſ. 14, 15. of his Epiſtle) with ten thouſand of his ſaints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodlily committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him; That is, either directly, or reflexively, in letting their tongues looſe to ſpeak againſt them. The Apoſtle Paul having ſaid (2 Cor. 5. 10.) We muſt all appear before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things, (that is, the fruit of the things) done in his body, (that is, while he was in the body) whether it be good or bad; he adds at the eleventh verſe, Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſwade men. As if he had ſaid, We know that will be a terrible day, Chriſt will come and anſwer ſinners out of a Whirl-wind, when he comes to Judgment; and therefore We (being fully perſwaded of this our ſelves) perſwade men by all means to believe and repent, and get the peace of their Souls well and ſurely ſetled upon good Goſpel terms in this world, that ſo they may find peace in the great Day of Judgment, which will be the commencement or beginning of another world. They who know the terror of the Lord will both perſwade others, and be perſwaded themſelves to look after reconciliation with God, that when Chriſt cometh terribly, they may appear before him comfortably, or that he may not be a terrour unto them in that day.

Fifthly, Foraſmuch as the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind (as was ſaid) to affect him with the awe and reverence of his great Name, while he was ſpeaking, Obſerve; The Word of God is to be heard with reverence, with fear and trembling, or with an holy awe of God upon our hearts.

Why did the Lord ſpeak out of a Whirl-wind? Surely, that Job might ſee his diſtance, or that he was but as a feather, even like a rolling thing, or thiſtle-down, before the Whirl-wind, which the Lord could ſcatter and blow away with the leaſt breath of his mouth, as that alluſion in the Prophet intimates (Iſa. 17. 13.) And queſtionleſs all the wicked in the world, who contemn the Word of God preached by his Miniſters, will be blown away by it as thiſtle-down or a rolling thing before the Whirl-wind of the Lords fierce anger and diſpleaſure; All ſuch ſhall be carried away with a ſtrong irreſiſtable wind, and caſt into the bottomleſs pit of perdition for ever. The Lord who ſometimes ſpeaks out of a whirl-wind, hath a whirl-wind always at his command to ſcatter thoſe like chaff, who obey not what is ſpoken, as he threatned the enemies of Jacob (Iſa. 41. 16.)

Locutione domini blanda dulcedo ejus oſtenditur, per tempeſtatem vero poteſtas ejus metuenda monſtratur. Greg. l. 28. c. 2.

Sixthly, From Gods ſpeaking out of the Whirl-wind,

Note; God is preſent with his in troublous diſpenſations.

'Tis no argument, that God is not with us, when ſtorms and whirl-winds are up, whether with reſpect to Nations and Churches, or particular Perſons. Do not think God is gone becauſe there is a ſtorm. Read (Pſal. 18. Verſ. 6, 7, 8. Pſal. 23. 4. Pſal. 91. 15. Iſa. 43. 2, 3.) and you ſhall find that in the worſt appearances the Lord is preſent. The Prophet ſpeaks it expreſly (Nahum 1. 3.) The Lord hath his way in the Whirl-wind, and in the ſtorm, and the Clouds are the duſt of his feet. When and where it's dark and troubleſome the Lord is there, and there he is moſt; that's the Prophets meaning alſo, when he ſaith, The Clouds are the duſt of his feet. By Clouds we may underſtand, not ſo much the Clouds of the Air, as cloudy Providences; theſe are round about him, while Judgment and Juſtice, yea while Mercy and Goodneſs are the habitation of his Throne. And theſe Clouds may be called the duſt of his feet in a Figure; we know where Travellers paſs often, their feet make a duſt; now it ſhews that the Lord doth act much in the Clouds, that is in dark Providences, becauſe 'tis ſaid, They are the duſt of his feet, as if he moved ſo much and ſo long in them, that he raiſed a duſt with his motion. Do not think the Lord is gone, when whirl-winds and ſtorms, that is outward troubles, come. The Lord anſwers out of the whirl-wind as often as he anſwers us by terrible things in Righteouſneſs; and thus he often anſwers us (Pſal. 65. 5.)

Seventhly, And Laſtly, comparing the manner of Gods coming and ſpeaking to Job, with his intent in coming and ſpeaking to him. The manner in which God came and ſpake was in a Whirl-wind; but what was his purpoſe? Was it to blow the poor man away? No; it was but to humble him, and then to comfort and reſtore him.

Obſerve; The outward appearances of God are often very terrible, when he intends nothing but mercy and love to his people.

What more dreadful than a Whirl-wind? yet Job found this ſtorm uſhering in a ſweet calm and a moſt comfortable ſunſhine. Job ſaid (Chap. 9. 16, 17.) If I had called, and he had anſwered me, yet would I not have believed that he had hearkened to my voice, for he breaketh me with a tempeſt, or a Whirl-wind. Now the Lord came in a Whirl-wind, and Job finds the quite contrary: God came in a whirl-wind, not to break him, but to bind him up; not to condemn him, but to convince him; not to diſcourage him, but to comfort him; comfort comes out of a ſtorm. Thus comfort hath come to many a poor ſoul, and it comes thus ſometimes to the whole Church of God. When Jacob was in a ſtormy condition, becauſe of his brother Eſau, then the Lord came to him (Gen. 32.) but how came he to him? One would have thought, that Jacob being in ſuch a condition, the Lord who came to comfort him, would have taken him by the hand and embraced him, or walkt aſide with him, and told him, I am come to help thee, and deliver thee; be of good cheer, let not thy heart be troubled at the approach of thy bloody brother, for I am with thee. One would have thought (I ſay) the Lord ſhould have treated him in ſome ſuch manner; but what ſaith the Text? (Verſ. 24.) there wreſtled a man with him until the breaking of the day. Poor Jacob was tugging, and ſweating all night, as if he would ſweat his heart out; here was a ſtrange kind of greeting; 'tis not ſaid the man ſaluted him, or ſpake a kind word to him, much leſs complemented with him, he only wreſtled with him; and when he had toiled a great while, he put his thigh out of joint (which was very coarſe uſage) and only ſaid Let me go (which was very coarſe Language) yet the Lord came at that time with a full purpoſe to bleſs him, and deliver him out of the hand of Eſau. Then be not afraid of ſtorms, for the Lord hath ſunſhine in his heart, when there's nothing but a ſtorm in his face. The Lord may come to you in poverty, and ſickneſs, he may chaſten you with pain upon your bed, and the multitude of your bones with ſtrong pains, till you ſay as Hezekiah in his ſickneſs (*Iſa.*38.13.) I reckoned till morning, that as a Lion, ſo will he break all my bones; and yet intend ſo much mercy, that you ſhall ſay (as David, Pſal. 35. 10.) All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee, which delivereſt the poor from him that is too ſtrong for him, yea, the poor and needy, from him that ſpoileth him. The Lord hath gracious purpoſes towards his people in ſaddeſt appearances. Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind, and ſaid; What ſaid he? His ſaying was as ſtormy as his appearing.

Perpetuum Deo eſt vulnerare quos vult ſanare, percellere quos vult conſolari, oſtendere ſe maximum cum vult & optimum demonſtrare.

Verſ. 2. Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg?

This Verſe and the next are a Preface to what God had further to ſay unto his afflicted ſervant Job. The former verſe was the Hiſtorians Preface, theſe two are the Lords.

Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledge?

We have here, Firſt, A check lighting ſomewhere, Who is this?

Secondly, We have the matter for which this perſon is checkt, and that is for darkening counſel.

Thirdly, We have that by which he is charged to have darkned counſel, and that is, By words without knowledg; and his ignorance or want of knowledg is implied, as diſcovered in ſpeaking, or rather complaining ſo much concerning his own ſufferings, and the ſeverity of Gods dealings with him, whereby he had at once caſt a cloud upon the Juſtice, and reflected upon the goodneſs and mercy of God.

Who is this?] The words may be taken, Firſt, as a bare enquiry after the man, Who is this? What man is this? As Saul ſpake of David after the victory which he had got over Goliah, Whoſe ſon is this youth? (1Sam.17.55.) but that I conceive is too flat and lean a ſenſe in this place, as if the Lord did only make enquiry after the man. Therefore,

Secondly, Theſe words, Who is this? Carry in them a rebuke, who is it that hath done this? As if God pointing at Job, had ſaid, is it you? I could not have believed that my ſervant Job would have ſo much forgotten himſelf, or have been ſo bold with me, as to reflect upon my juſt, though ſevere proceedings, by his weak reaſonings, which faith only can make him underſtand aright. Such Queſtions in Scripture often carry a rebuke in them, Yea,

Thirdly, More than a rebuke, they carry a ſlight or contempt of the perſon about whom the queſtion is put. As when men preſume (as ſome blaſphemouſly have done) to ſay, Who is the Lord? What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? They ſpeak contemptuouſly and ſlightingly of God: So when God ſpeaks thus to man, who is this? He may be ſaid to ſpeak ſlightingly of man. Again, as when man, ſpeaking of himſelf, ſaith (as *Pſal.*8.4.) What is man that thou art mindful of him! he ſlights or vilifies himſelf; ſo when the Lord ſaith, who is this? Or who is the other? It carryeth the ſame ſenſe. Interrogations are quick ſharp ſpeeches, and uſually thoſe ſpeeches are quick and ſharp which begin with an Interrogation; and doubtleſs this Interrogation hath a double ſharpneſs, or two ſtings in it.

Firſt, Of rebuke or reprehenſion.

Secondly, Of a ſlight or diminution. Job, though indeed a man of an excellent ſpirit, had been too bold with God, and therefore no wonder if God ſpake (though he contemned him not) contemningly to him, Who is this?

Forma ipſa interrogationis, qua nullum exprimitur proprium nomen ſolet ad contemptum pertinere & exprobrationem.

Yet here it is queſtioned who the perſon was, whether Job or no, that is aimed at or intended in this rebuking or contemning Queſtion.

There are two opinions about it, and the matter is carried on both ſides (as one expreſſeth it) by no inconſiderable Arguments.

Firſt, Some conceive, Elihu was the perſon concerned in this Queſtion, Who is this? And they give ſeveral reaſons for it; I ſhall only mention two. Firſt, becauſe he was the man that ſpake laſt; we had him ſpeaking ſix Chapters quite through, while Job ſpake not a word; and therefore ſay they, it ſeems moſt probable, that when God came to ſpeak, he would undertake him that ſpake laſt. Who is this?

Secondly, Becauſe Elihu had not carryed the matter ſo clearly and fully with Job as he ſhould, but had failed, though not as Job's three friends had done before; and that therefore as the Lord reproved and taxed them by name in the 42. Chapter, ſo here Elihu is taxed more covertly, for obſcuring his Counſel, Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg? Theſe are the two chief Arguments which faſten the rebuke upon Elihu; and there are many learned Interpreters who carry it ſo, affirming that the whole diſcourſe from the beginning of this 38. Chapter to the end of the 39. is directed to Elihu; and that God ſpake not to Job till the 40. Chapter. Yet ſome others ſay God reproved Elihu in this ſecond Verſe only, and ſpake comfort to Job in the third; Gird up thy loins like a man; and theſe interpret the firſt words of the Chapter, Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirl-wind, thus, he anſwered for Job, not to Job, as if the word Job were to be taken in the dative Caſe, ſignifying favour and reſpect from God to him.

But, by the favour of theſe learned Authors, who give this Interpretation, I ſhall rather adhere to thoſe who affirm (and they are not a few) that the perſon here concerned and ſpoken to was Job himſelf, and I ſhall give you three or four Reaſons of it, and ſo paſs to the opening of the words.

Firſt, Becauſe the firſt Verſe tells us expreſly, that the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirlwind; and that Interpretation which ſaith, he anſwered for, not to Job, is a little ſtrain to the Text. Now the Lord ſpeaking ſo expreſly to Job in the firſt Verſe, it is very congruous, that he ſhould ſpeak to him in the ſecond, and not divert his ſpeech from him to another perſon in the next words that he ſpake.

Secondly, Job himſelf took theſe words to himſelf in the forty ſecond Chapter, at the third Verſe, where he acknowledged that indeed he had ſpoken darkly, I have uttered things that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not; he took (I ſay) the reproof contained or couched in thoſe words to himſelf, which is a clear argument, that they were directed to him.

Thirdly, If we conſider the whole frame of the Lords diſcourſe afterwards, beyond this preface, we ſhall find that he is not ſpeaking for Job againſt Elihu, but for Elihu againſt Job, that is to humble Job; and therefore the Lord doth joyn in with Elihu, and uſeth the very ſame Arguments in the main (as will appear in opening the Chapter) which Elihu had inſiſted upon, namely from the works of God in the Creation, and his wonderful wiſdom in ordering thoſe works in Providence. So that the dealing of God with Job in theſe Chapters (as to the ſubject matter of it) is very conſentaneous or like to the matter which Elihu had handled and inſiſted upon, eſpecially in the later part of his ſpeech to Job; and therefore it doth not ſeem probable that God would reprove him for what he had ſpoken.

Fourthly, The manner of this rebuke ſeems to fit Job very fully, for therein he is not charged with any falſity or groſs miſtake (he indeed having ſpoken of God and the things of God, of his own innocency and piety, with the rewards of both, truly and worthily) but only with obſcuring and darkning the things which he had uttered. His ſpeech bearing much of the Image of his own troubled ſpirit and troubleſom condition, was ſomwhat troubled and confuſed. Therefore I conclude that the perſon ſpoken to and reproved in this ſecond verſe was Job, not Elihu; Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg? and it being reſolved that he was the man, let me (before I proceed to the matter of this reproof) give out this brief Obſervation.

We have heard at the eighth Verſe of the firſt Chapter, how God ſpake of Job, and now conſider how God ſpeaks to Job; There the Lord approved him highly, as not having his like or ſecond on earth for well-doing; here the Lord reproved him ſharply, for undue-ſpeaking.

> Hence Note; As God will not conceal the praiſes of his ſervants when they do well, ſo he will not conceal their faults, nor forbear to reprove them, when they either do or ſpeak amiſs.

When Satan came upon that ſolemn day, and ſtood before the Lord, God ſaid unto him, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there's none like him in all the earth, a man perfect and upright; ſo perfect and upright both in his walking with me, and in his dealing with man, that he hath not his fellow? Thus God ſpake of him as to his former ſtate. But now after Job had ſpoken long in this diſpute, and had let fall ſome unwary and unbecoming ſpeeches, ſee how God ſpeaks to him, Who is this? As if he had been a man ſcarce worth the naming or ſpeaking to. God will not flatter his Servants; if they do or ſpeak what is not right, they are like to hear of it. Wherein he had ſpoken what was not right, or what his fault was appears in the next words, Who is this,

That darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg?

Words againſt knowledg are the worſt words that can be ſpoken; the Lord did not charge Job thus far: words without knowledg are very bad, and thus far the Lord charged the words of Job, as alſo with that which is an unavoidable effect of ſuch words,

The darkening of Counſel.] Counſel, in the general nature of it, is light deſired and held out: to give counſel is to give light in and about any matter. And therefore ſurely he that darkeneth counſel, commits a very great fault, yea, a ſoleciſm or abſurdity in morals. Counſel is the election or choice of proper means to a good end; or, Counſel is good advice given, and (ought to be) received about things to be done. Hence the whole directive part of the Word of God is called Counſel (Pſal. 73.24. Prov. 1.25,30.) The doctrin of Reconciliation unto God by Chriſt is called, The Counſel of Peace (Zech. 6. 13.) David, ſpeaking of wicked proud men ſaith (Pſal. 19.6.) You have ſhamed the Counſel of the poor, becauſe the Lord is his refuge: As if it were poor Counſel, and ſuch as we may be aſhamed of, to adviſe any to put their truſt in God. They darken Counſel indeed who are aſhamed of it, or who ſhame it.

It is queſtioned, whoſe counſel, or what counſel Job is charged by God with darkening? There are two opinions about that.

First, Some expound it of Job's own counſel, of that counſel which he gave, or held forth about the matter under diſpute, that is, his ſenſe and judgment in it.

Quis eſt ille qui ſermonibus imperitis offundit tenebras conſilio divino. Tygur.

Secondly, The Counſel which he darkened, was (ſay others) the counſel of God, or his purpoſe and intendment in the ſufferings of the righteous, and in ſuffering the wicked to proſper for a ſeaſon. Theſe works of God are a great ſecret, and therefore may well be expreſſed by the word Counſel. And uſually when the word Counſel is put abſolutely and alone, it is to be underſtood of the Counſel of God. Yet I conceive we may very well joyn theſe two opinions together, and ſay, Job darkened his own counſel and the counſel of God too; he delivered his own mind and ſentiments ſo darkly (the delivering of a mans mind is his counſel) about the counſel of God, that he rather obſcured both, then cleared either. And there are ſeveral things wherein Job may be charged to have ſpoken obſcurely. Did he not darken the counſel of God, when he complained ſo very much and ſo often of his afflictions? Did he not darken his own counſel, and the counſel of God, when, as if the diſpenſations of God were every where alike to all, he ſaid (Chap. 9.22.) God deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked. If the ſcourge ſtay ſuddenly, he laugheth at the trial of the innocent? Did he not darken counſel when he ſaid, God dealt with him as an enemy, or, as with an enemy? Surely he did not well attend the counſel of God in afflicting him, while he made ſuch conſtructions of his affliction. The things which Job ſpake were true, yet Job delivered himſelf ſo darkly that his friends miſ-underſtood him; they underſtood him, as if he meant that God dealt in his providences with the righteous as with the wicked, and were to the wicked as he is to the righteous, that is, as if he had no more regard to any godly man, than to a wicked man in afflicting him. In theſe (and ſome other things) Job did not ſufficiently explain himſelf and he exceedingly ſtumbled or offended his friends and hearers, and ſo might be ſaid to darken the counſel of God, that is the purpoſe of God, or what God hath in his counſels concerning his people, when under his afflicting hand. All ſuch like paſſages falling from Job, the Lord might call a darkening of his counſel, or the caſting of a Cloud upon his righteous dealings, and at leaſt an intimation that God had done him wrong. Words of ſuch a tenour and tendency are juſtly charged to be Words

Conſilium abſolute poſitum pro conſilium Dei, ut ſermo pro ſermo Dei. Druſ.

Without knowledg.] Not that Job ſpake altogether ignorantly, underſtanding neither what he ſaid, nor whereof he affirmed, as the Apoſtle charged ſome, who deſired to be teachers of the Law (1 Tim. 1. 7.) the Text cannot be ſo taken; but his words and affirmations were ſuch as did not hold out a clear light of knowledg, either in his own underſtanding, or at leaſt not to the underſtanding of his hearers. Thus Elihu charged Job (Chap. 35. 16.) He openeth his mouth in vain, he multiplieth words without knowledg. To ſpeak one word without knowledg is too many; what is it then to multiply words without knowledg? He multiplieth words without knowledg, that is, he hath not given his ſenſe and meaning in many things clearly, as he might and ſhould. Here the Lord ſeems to take up the ſame charge againſt Job; Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg? God conſents with Elihu, as to the matter of his reproof; Elihu telling him, that he had multiplied words without knowledg; and God telling him, that he had darkened counſel by words without knowledg. Words ought to give light to the things we ſpeak of or about; what we ſpeak ſhould be for the clearing up both of our own counſel and the counſel of God. So that it was a very great failing in Job, to darken either his own counſel or the counſel of God, by words without knowledg. Our own counſel ſhould be delivered plainly, and ſo ſhould the counſel of God much more. It is ſad to gather clouds or raiſe a miſt about our hearers, when we are profeſſing to hold out the light. To puzzle and amuſe thoſe whom we undertake to teach, is one of the worſt accidents ('tis too too bad when 'tis the intent) of a Teacher. And therefore Job (though he had no intent to do it) is juſtly reproved for doing it; Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg?

Theſe words (as was ſaid) being at beſt an enquiry after the man, or a citation to appear and anſwer,

> Note; God will bring every man to a reckoning for what he hath done and ſaid.

God would not let his ſervant Job paſs; he cenſured Job that Job might cenſure himſelf; and points at him, that he might even ſee himſelf pointed at. As if he had ſaid; What! is this my ſervant Job? Is it he that I heard ſpeaking at ſuch a rate of impatience and obſcurity? I could not have thought that he would have uttered ſuch words about my ways and works, either towards himſelf or others. Every one of us (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 14.12.) ſhall give an account of himſelf to God. Some have more to account for then themſelves (Heb. 13. 17) but all muſt give account for themſelves; Give an account of thy ſtewardſhip (Luke 19. 2.) will be ſaid one day to every one. To be a Steward is the ſpecial office of ſome men in reference to men, but 'tis the general office of all men in reference to God. They cannot ſtand in the the day of account, who have not repented of the evil they have done, nor reſted on Chriſt by faith for the doing away of that evil. For the Lord will ſay to one, who is this that hath perverted my Truth? To another, who is this that hath diſobeyed my Commands? To a third, who is this that hath diſtruſted my Promiſes? To a fourth, who is this that hath been ſo unthankful for my Mercies and Favours? He will alſo ſay, who is this that hath oppreſſed his Neighbour? And, who is this that hath been ſelf proud and wanton? The offender muſt appear, and ſo will his offences. Yea, a citation will come out, as againſt all thoſe who have againſt knowledg refuſed to walk in the light of Gods counſel, ſo to all thoſe (as here to Job) who have darkened counſel any way for want of the light of knowledg. And who can ſtand in any of theſe accounts, either for not doing good, or for doing evil, without a Mediatour, upon whoſe accounts alone we are accepted. Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledg?

Secondly, Taking theſe words as an humbling rebuke upon Job for his over-boldneſs, in ſpeaking of God and his ways;

Note; God will humble all men, his own people eſpecially, and make them know themſelves.

God will make all men know who they are, who himſelf is, and what they have done or ſpoken. When the Scripture ſaith, who is this? And what is man? When the Scripture asketh what, or who we are? It is either to abaſe the pride of man, or to convince him of his baſe fear of the proudeſt men, as appears ſpecially in theſe two Scriptures. When good men are over-troubled at, or afraid of the power of man, then the Lord chides and ſhames them with this queſtion (Iſa. 51. 12.) Who art thou that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of a man? As if he had ſaid, what a fool art thou, what an ignorant creature art thou; the Lord ſpake there to his own people, and to them altogether, as if they were but one man) Who art thou that thou ſhouldeſt be afraid of a man that ſhall die, and of the ſon of man that ſhall be made as graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker? What a kind of creature art thou, to ſet ſo much by a man (let him be who he will) that thou ſhouldeſt be unduely afraid of him, who by nature is like thy ſelf, frail and mortal, as if thou hadſt not the immortal God thy Maker for thy helper and defender! They act below men, who over-fear men, while they are in a way of duty to God. Who art thou, &c.

Secondly, The Scripture uſeth ſuch queſtions when man is over-bold with, or not enough in the fear of God (which is the caſe here in the Text) If any man intrench upon the prerogative of God, he is like to hear of it, with a who art thou? The Apoſtle (*Rom.*9.20.) by way of prevention, repreſents man ſo bold with God, as to darken his counſel, even his eternal counſel, by words without knowledg; Thou wilt ſay then unto me, why doth he yet find fault? who hath reſiſted his will? When God, to ſhew his unqueſtionable Soveraignty, ſaith, Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated: I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy; Then man begins to complain of God, and thinks he hath cauſe for it: But ſaith the Apoſtle, Who art thou that repliest againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? When-ever man gives occaſion to ſay, that he fears man too much, or God too little; he is like to hear theſe rebuking and humbling queſtions, Who is this, or, Who art thou? Many have too high thoughts of others, and moſt of themſelves, as if they were (as we ſay) ſome-body, that is, more than any-body, as if they were of ſome greater worth, or had ſome greater worthineſs, than their neighbours. Now, whoſoever have too high thoughts either of others or of themſelves, they always have too low thoughts of God; and therefore God, to ſhew them their vanity, that all men are but emptineſs, yea very nothingneſs compared with him, makes the beſt of men ſtrike ſail, or, God ſhoots down their top-ſail, with ſuch queſtions as theſe, Who are you? and, who is this?

Thirdly, Note; We may quickly darken the counſels of God while we think to explain them.

Job had no intent to darken the Counſel of God, yet he did it. Some make it their buſineſs (when they ſpeak of the counſels of God) to darken them and raiſe a duſt; theſe are either angry with the light, or envious at it, and unwilling that others ſhould enjoy it. Some Patrons of Popery, the better to make their own excuſe for obſcuring or hiding the Scriptures in darkneſs from the People, have not feared to charge them with darkneſs and obſcurity. And others by their ill and unskilful handling of the Scriptures have brought darkneſs and obſcurity upon them. Though the Scriptures have many dark places in them, yet wo to thoſe who ſay the Scriptures are dark; and let all take heed of darkening them, for they are the counſel of God, It is an eaſie matter to paddle in a clear ſtream, till it runs muddily; but it will not be for any mans eaſe or peace to do ſo in the clear cryſtal ſtreams of the holy Scriptures. It is the unhappineſs of ſome that they cannot but ſpeak and write about the counſels of God obſcurely; and there are others who glory that they can. It was ſaid of a dark Pen, that While he would have that read which he had written, he would not have that underſtood which was read; and while ſome would have that heard which they ſpeak, they ſpeak as if they would not have that underſtood which is heard. It is a great ſin purpoſely and deſignedly to darken the Counſels of God; and 'tis a failing and an affliction to darken them, though we (as Job did not) deſign it not. We ſhould labour to deliver our minds plainly concerning the mind of God, that what we utter may not be found a darkning of his Counſel, but as much as in us is, a clearing of it. Counſel (as was toucht before) is the giving of light in dark caſes; and therefore we ſhould enlighten Counſel.

Dum legi voluit quæ ſcripſiſſet, intelligi noluit quæ legerentur.

T[illegible] things are the grace and excellency of a ſpeaker:

Firſt, To ſpeak boldly and freely, to ſpeak the truth out, not to clip nor ſtraiten it.

Secondly, To ſpeak plainly, to open the truth, and not to intricate nor involve it. Both theſe are compriſed in one word, by the Apoſtle (2 *Cor.*3.12.) where he ſaith (as we tranſlate) therefore we uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech; but the Margin hath great boldneſs of ſpeech: the ſame word in the Greek ſignifies both plainneſs of ſpeech and boldneſs of ſpeech; and theſe are the two great vertues and ornaments of him that ſpeaketh. Both theſe are again implied in that direction of the Apoſtle (1 *Pet.*4.11.) If any man ſpeak (about the things of God) let him ſpeak as the Oracles of God; That is, let him ſpeak as becomes him that hath to do with the Oracles of God, reverently, freely, and boldly; not as if he were ſpeaking the opinions of men, much leſs, Old wives fables. Or let him ſpeak as the Oracles of God (ſpeak) that is, plainly, clearly, not as the Oracles of of the Heathens (ſpake) darkly, doubtfully. Let us take heed of wrapping up the truth of God, or entangling it, in uncertain expreſſions, which may be interpreted either way, or to quite contrary purpoſes: there is a great danger in this. We may give our ſelves ſome ſcope, or take more liberty, when we are debating about worldly matters, or diſputing the ſubtil queſtions and curioſities of Schoolmen: But when we have to do with the Secrets and Counſels of God, then let us beware and be ſober. Some ſpeak as raſhly and inevidently of deepeſt Goſpel Myſteries, as they talk of other mens crotchets, or as of their own trifles.

Fifthly, Conſider, How did Job darken the Counſel of God? It was by words without knowledg.

Hence Note; The ignorant are very apt to ſpeak amiſs of the things and Counſels of God.

If Job, who had ſo great a meaſure of knowledg, darkened the Counſel of God by words without knowledg; what will they do that have upon the matter no knowledg at all? The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch as more than darkening, even as wreſting the Counſel of God (2*Pet.*3.16.) In Pauls Epiſtles (ſaith he) are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo the other Scriptures, unto their own deſtruction. Some things in the Word are hard to be known, and they are made harder by ſuch unlearned ones, as utter their own notions of them, by words without knowledg. 'Tis very true, that many learned men have wreſted and perverted the Word of God, and ſome of them have employed their learning on purpoſe to wreſt and pervert it; but they that have not a competent degree of learning and knowledg, what can they do elſe but wreſt and darken the Word of God? I intend not human learning meerly, in Arts and Sciences, though there be great uſe of them; but I mean eſpecially Holy and Divine Learning. They that are not taught of God, nor have the light of God in them, cannot but darken the things and Counſels of God, how much human learning ſoever they have. The Prophet foretels us of Chriſt ſpeaking thus of himſelf, as the great Prophet, (*Iſa.*50.4.) The Lord hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I ſhould know how to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary; that is, to thoſe who are wearied (not with bodily labours and travels, but) with ſoul-labours and travels, about the pardon of their ſins, and the favour of God to their ſouls. He that ſpeaks a word effectually for the refreſhing of ſuch weary ones, muſt open the Counſels of God to them; and he that doth ſo, muſt have the tongue of the learned, that is, a tongue taught of God how to ſpeak, elſe he will never be able to do it knowingly, but through the darkneſs of his own mind will darken the Counſel of God concerning thoſe dark ſouls, and ſo rather weary them more, than relieve them out of their wearineſs. That the ſoul be without knowledg is not good (Prov. 19. 2.) that is, 'tis very bad, (ſuch Negatives in Scripture intend their contrary Affirmatives) and as it is not good, or very bad for themſelves, whoſoever they are, ſo it is not good for them with reſpect to others, who are called to declare the Counſels of God to others. Souls without knowledg cannot open, but are apt to darken the Soul-counſels of God.

Sixthly, Inaſmuch as God reproved Job for this,

Note; God will not take it well, if we ſpeak improperly, darkly and unſafely of his Matters and Counſels, though our minds be honeſt, and our meaning good in what we ſpeak.

We had need be cautious what we ſay, and not talk at random about the things of God. Job, a holy and a wiſe man, had a peal rung in his ear, for ſpeaking words without knowledg, words not duly poized and placed. There are ſome who will catch at, and take hold of every ſlip of the tongue, they will make a man an offender for a word, which hath no real ground of offence in it; (as the Prophet ſpake, Iſa. 29. 11.) God may juſtly make a man an offender for a word, which he thought was without offence.

Laſtly, Conſider, when God came to reprove Job, he did not charge him with any ill intentions, but with ill expreſſions. He indeed had darkened his Counſel by words without knowledg, but God did not ſay he had a purpoſe and a mind to do it; nor did he ſay, that Job had ſpoken falſly, but that he had ſpoken truth obſcurely. The Lord did not object hypocriſie or impiety againſt him, but imbecillity; as not having handled the Judgments of God, nor delivered his own judgment clearly and prudently enough; but had hudled and put things ſo paſſionately and confuſedly together that ſome could not tell how to diſtinguiſh them from blaſphemy.

Hence Note; God will not charge any man beyond his fault.

If he did it in a heat of paſſion, God will not deal with him, as if he had done it in cold blood (as we ſay) or with a ſetled reſolution. The Lord will not call a ſlip of the tongue an errour of the mind, much leſs a minded error. God knows the intent and purpoſe of every man that ſpeaks; he weighs not only our actions, but words; he knows not only what we ſay, but why, and with what aims we ſay it: and therefore he never urgeth any mans ſin beyond it ſelf. Job had darkned the Counſel of God only by words without knowledg, therefore God would not charge him to have darkned his Counſel, knowingly, or againſt the light of knowledg. Yea, notwithſtanding this fault, the Lord having reproved him for it, proceeds preſently (as ſome interpret the next verſe) to comfort and encourage him.

Verſ. 3. Gird up now thy loins like a man.

As if the Lord had ſaid, thou haſt ſpoken thus and thus of my Counſels, now give me an account of what thou haſt ſpoken; Gird up thy loins like a man. To call a man to gird up his loins, is to bid him be in a readineſs, or to prepare himſelf for any work. The ſtrength of a man is in his loins, and they who are weak, are ſaid to be loinleſs. To gird up the loins, is a proverbial ſpeech, and may be uſed to a man who weareth the ſhorteſt garments, yea to him who is naked. Hence the Lord bid Job to gird up his loins, who poſſibly was ſo weak, that he could not ſtand upon his legs; or poſſibly had no long garments at all. There is a girding the loins with ſack-cloth, that is, with ſorrow, implying the work of repentance and mortification (Iſa. 22. 12.) In that day did the Lord God of Hoſts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldneſs, and to girding with ſackcloth. The two Witneſſes of Chriſt are ſaid to propheſie in ſackcloth one thouſand two hundred and ſixty days (Rev. 11. 3.) to note that they were in a ſad or ſorrowful condition all the days of their Propheſie: Thus Job's loins had been girt a long time. Again, There is a girding of the loins with joy: Thou haſt put off from me my ſackcloth, and girded me with gladneſs (Pſal. 30. 11.) There is alſo a girding of the loins with ſtrength (Pſal. 17. 39.) Further, We may take notice of a fourfold uſe in Scripture, of girding up the loins.

Cinctus lumborum erit pro ἑτοιμασίᾳ: Coc.

Imbecilli dicuntur Latinis Elumbes.

Firſt, There is a girding up the loins for travel, or when a man is to take a journey. Thus Eliſha ſaid to Gehazi (2 Kings 4. 29.) Gird up thy loins, and take thy ſtaff in thy hand, and go thy way, &c. It was a faſhion in thoſe Eaſtern Countreys where they wore their garments long and ordinarily looſe, to gird them up in travel.

Cingulum ambulaturi.

Secondly, There is a girding up the loins for ſerving or waiting; ſo Chriſt expreſſeth it (Luke 12. 35.) Let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning, and ye your ſelves like unto men, that wait for their Lord. And he ſaith at the 37. Verſe, Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants, whom the Lord when he cometh, ſhall find watching: Verily, I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf, and make them to ſit down to meat, and will come forth and ſerve them; That is, he will be ready to do them offices of love, as it were, in perſon; which is an expreſſion of the greateſt condeſcenſion: For when Chriſt would ſet forth the common cuſtom among men, he ſaith (Luke 17. 7, 8.) Which of you having a ſervant plowing or feeding Cattel, will ſay unto him by and by when he is come from the field; Go, and ſit down to meat, and will not rather ſay, Gird thy ſelf, and ſerve me, &c. Girding is preparatory to ſerving or waiting.

Cingulum miniſtraturi

Thirdly, It notes in Scripture preparation for any labour or work that we are called to, whether of mind or body. He is always girt, that is ready for work, and induſtrious at it; whereas careleſs and idle perſons, are always ungirt, and ſo unbleſs'd. When Jeremiah was called to that great work of the mind or inner man, the Lord ſaid to him (Chap. 1. 17.) Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and ariſe, and ſpeak unto them all that I command thee. A Prophets work begins at his heart, and ends at his Tongue, Yet for that his loins muſt be girt.

Cingulum operaturi. Accinctus dicitur qui induſtrius & diſcinctus qui negligens eſt. Druſ. Accingere ſe ad opus aliquod.

Fourthly, Girding up the loins, notes a preparation for Battel and War: Thus David ſpake of Chriſt, (Pſal. 45. 3.) Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, O moſt mighty. So ſpake that King to his proud Challenger, Let not him that girdeth on his armour, boaſt as he that putteth it off (1 Kings 20. 11.) That is, let not him that prepareth himſelf for battel, carry it as he that hath won the day and got the victory. When the Apoſtle deſcribing our ſpiritual warfare, minds us to ſtand, having our loins girt about with truth (Eph. 6. 14.) he would alſo have us ſtand with our loins girt for the truth; That is, as another Apoſtle Cingulum pugnaturi. Antiquitas cingulum conſecravit. Mart.

Apoſtle ſpeaks, (Jude 3.) to contend earneſtly for the faith once delivered to the Saints; or to undertake the defence and maintenance of the truth againſt all comers or oppoſers.

Appara te ad futuram diſceptationem. Vatab. Arma te nunc armis tuis, ſicut vir ſtrenuus ad committendum duellum mecum. Ecce veni ad literarum duellum tecum: Arma te ſcientiæ armis. Cajet. Signanter de præcinctione lumborum facit mentionem, quia per lumbos carnalis voluptas intelligitur, quæ præcipue impedit ſpiritualem auditum. Aquin. In arcano ſermone ſignificat libidinis in lumbis reſidentis compreſſionem. כגבר Sonat virtutem & fortitudinē & quod opponitur blanditiis, lenociniis & infirmitati fœmineæ. Ut vir, emphatice, animo virili, promptitudine virili.

Girding in the Text is of this latter ſort: Diſputing is a kind of fighting and warring. Opponents and Reſpondents are like Combatants. Controverſial Divinity is called Polemical Divinity. Diſputes are Word-Wars. And there have been as hot Wars made by the Pen, as ever were by the Sword. Thus the Lord ſeems to ſend Job a challenge to the battle by a further debate. Arm thy ſelf like a mighty man, get ready for the duel, for I am purpoſed to try what a man thou art in arguing, or at an argument, I have heard thee too ſtiff in complaining, or at a complaint.

Laſtly, This girding up of the loins hath (as ſome conceive) a ſpiritual intendment in it, noting the mortification of luſt, or of the ſenſual appetite. They that go about any buſineſs for God, or with God, had need to have their luſts ſubdued. Gird up thy loins

Like a man.] That is, like a mighty man, a Giant, emphatically, as a man, with manly courage and activity; ſhew thy ſelf what a man thou art, let me ſee what thou canſt do, thou haſt heretofore braved it, and even challenged me, and deſired that thou mighteſt come to the battel; O that I knew where I might find him! That I might come even to his ſeat (Chap. 23. 3.) Now then, Gird up thy loins like a man, ſhew thy ſtrength, I mean to enter the liſt with thee, I have taken up the glove, as it were, and am reſolved to try it out with thee. Gird up thy loins like a man, Do not play the Child, do not trifle with me, do not think that I come to trifle with thee.

Some carry the oppoſition thus: Gird up thy loins like a man, not like a woman, who girds her ſelf often for ornament only, and ſometimes for oſtentation; but like a man, that reſolves to go about his work, and make a buſineſs of it; Thus, Gird up thy loins like a man. To do a thing ſtrenuouſly and with expedition, is the work of a man, who is neither retarded by difficulty, nor tired with labour, nor frighted with danger; therefore the Lord counſels Job to gird up his loins like as men do, when they ſet themſelves about or undertake any great buſineſs; he would not have him do it, as tender weak women, or as effeminate men.

Taking theſe words in the firſt notion, as an encouragement to Job, or as comforting words (which I conceive to be a good ſenſe)

Obſerve; God is ready to revive poor and afflicted Souls when they are in any diſtreſs.

He knows how it is with us, and he will not ſuffer any temptation to take hold of us, but ſuch as he will give ſtrength to bear, and encourage us in the bearing of it. He ſaith to fainting ones (as here) Come gird up your loins, or as (Heb. 12. 12.) Lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees.

Secondly, Take the words in that other general notion, God calling Job to a great buſineſs, ſaith, Gird up thy loins, prepare thy ſelf.

Whence, Note; We need actual preparations before any duty, eſpecially before great duties.

Never go about any work without your loins girt. A man whoſe mind is ungirt, is unready for any ſervice, though he may have much outward readineſs, and all manner of accommodations for it. When we pray, we ſhould gird up our loins to prayer. The Prophet complained (Iſa. 64. 7.) There's none calls upon thy Name. What none at all? Surely not ſo; they were not come to that height of Prophaneneſs, as to throw up, or to throw off prayer quite. Many among the Jews, I may ſay all of them prayed, but they did not gird up their loins to prayer: That's fully the Prophets meaning, and almoſt his language in the next words, There is none that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee. It is not enough to have a habit of grace, unleſs it be ſtirred up to duty, or unleſs we beſtir our ſelves in duty. The Apoſtle exhorts Timothy (2 Ep. 1. 6.) Stir up the gift of God that is in thee. If fire be not ſtirred up, it grows dead, and gives little or no heat; 'tis ſo with our gifts and graces. Therefore in prayer, in hearing the Word, &c. Gird up the loins of your mind, if you would either do any good in thoſe duties, or get any. He that lies upon a ſick-bed, muſt gird up the loins of his mind to bear his affliction; elſe he will never profit by it, nor anſwer the ends of God in it. No grace can be exerciſed by a ſoul ungirded: Therefore remember St. Peters counſel (1 Ep. 1. 13.) Gird up the loins of your mind, be ſober and hope to the end (hope perfectly) for the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, ye can never act your hope to purpoſe, nor your faith to purpoſe, unleſs you gird up your loins. Habits of grace are unprofitable to us, without this actual preparation and excitation of grace. It is our duty (Heb. 10. 24.) to provoke (or ſtir up) others to love and good works; much more is it our duty to provoke and ſtir up our ſelves.

Notat promptam & ab omni alia cupiditate vidullam ſpem. Coc.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, Gird up thy loins like a man:

Note; God would have us do our beſt, our utmoſt, in every thing we do; he would have us put our ſelves out in every duty.

Solomon adviſeth (Eccl. 9. 10.) Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might; That is, do it like a man, vigorouſly, ſtrenuouſly, do it with both hands, Quit you like men in doing it, be ſtrong, as the Apoſtle exhorts (1 Cor. 16. 3.) To do the work of the Lord negligently and ſlightly, with half a heart or no heart, with half a hand or no hand, ſcarce with a little finger, with half ſtrength, or no ſtrength, this is not to do it like a man. We ſhould be in doing, like the Sun in moving, which, ſaith David (Pſal. 19. 5.) As a Bridegroom cometh out of his Chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a Race. If we would run our race like a ſtrong man ſtrongly and prevailingly, we muſt be ſure to do two things:

Firſt, We muſt lay aſide every weight, and the ſin that doth ſo eaſily beſet us (Heb. 12. 1.)

Secondly, We muſt (as here the Lord directs Job) gird up our loins, and buckle to it.

Fourthly, As theſe words carry in them a kind of Irony, or divine ſcorn put upon Job by the Holy God; Come let me ſee what a man thou art; thou haſt ſpoken often what thou wouldſt do, and what thou wouldſt ſay, if thou couldſt have thy option, thy wiſh; now thou haſt thy wiſh, let me ſee what a man thou art, thou wilt ſurely appear a brave man by the time that I have done with thee.

Hence Note; God will make men ſee how unable they are to deal with him, when 'tis beſt with them, or when they are at the beſt, even when their loins are girt.

Every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity: How vain then is man at his worſt! Job was low and in a bad condition, as to his outward man eſpecially, when God dealt with him, and how did he carry it, in the day when God dealt with him? Did his heart endure, or were his hands ſtrong (as the Prophet ſpake to thoſe, Ezek. 22. 14.) Did he carry it like a man? In one ſenſe not, but like a Child, he had not a word to ſpeak; Once have I ſpoken, but I will ſpeak no more; yet it muſt be confeſſed, he never carried it ſo like a godly man, as when, like a Child, he had not a word to ſpeak. God will make man ſee what a nothing he is in his beſt condition, when girt and prepared, when armed (Cap-a-pe) all over, for any ſervice for God; even then, man is a vain thing without the preſent aſſiſtance of God; what is he then when he is to contend or plead with God! If the whole world ſhould lay their forces, or, as we ſay, compare notes together, what could they do in diſpute with God? They that think they touch the clouds with their heads, would moulder as duſt at his feet.

That ſuch was the contention to which the Lord here calls Job, and bids him gird up his loins, or be in a readineſs for, appears plainly in the next words.

I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me.

As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou gaveſt me my choice (So Job did Chap. 13. 22.) whether I would be Opponent or or Defendant; well then ſaith God, this is my choice, I will oppoſe, and do thou anſwer.

I will demand of thee.] That is, put queſtions to thee; and we ſhall ſee preſently how thick queſtions or demands came upon him like hail-ſhot, and he had not a word to anſwer, though God required it.

And anſwer thou me.] Mr. Broughton renders, And let me ſee thy skill. The word is, Inſtruct me, or Make me to know, Wiſe me (as we ſay) I would fain be informed by thee, teach thou me, notifie the matter to me, as the word may be tranſlated. I will demand, and anſwer thou me. The Lord did not call upon him for Anſwers, as to be informed by him, but only to convince him that he could not anſwer him, as he confeſſed at the fifth verſe of the fortieth Chapter; Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer: nor indeed could he. To all the demands which the Lord made afterwards, he made no anſwer at all; ſo that theſe words, Anſwer me, or Inſtruct and inform me, are a gentle irony, whereby the Lord would make him know himſelf, or be ſenſible of his own ignorance or ſmall attainments in knowledg; and thereby convince him, that he had done raſhly, in deſiring and wiſhing for ſuch a debate or hearing of his cauſe. The Lord was pleaſed to rebuke him thus ſecretly, or in a figure, and not to fall upon him in plain downright terms. O thou weak and ignorant creature, who haſt preſumed to appear before me, and try thy cauſe with me: Now, Go to, Let me ſee what thou canſt do, ſhew thy beſt skill, put forth thy utmoſt ſtrength of argument, in reaſoning about or againſt my dealings with thee. Thus the Lord might have confounded him; but he was pleaſed to carry it in a milder way, yet in a way as effectual to humble and meeken Job's ſpirit. God needs not preſs man by power, he can do it by reaſon or force of argument, and ſo ſtop his mouth for ever. The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 3. 19.) All the world ſhall become guilty before God; and in the ſame Chapter he ſaith, God ſhall be juſtified in his ſayings, and overcome when he is judged. The Lord always doth things with ſo much juſtice, and ſpeaks with ſo much reaſon, that no man is able to anſwer a word, or reply upon him. And though he might ſilence or ſtop any mans mouth, by his meer Command and Authority, yet he condeſcends to do it rather by reaſon and demonſtration, leſt any ſhould ſay, or complain, they were rather overpowered by the greatneſs of his Majeſty, than caſt by the right and equity of his Cauſe. Thus we ſee how the Lord in this Preface prepares Job to hearken to thoſe demands that he had to put to him, and to anſwer them if he could; but Job (alas poor man!) had not a word to anſwer any one of thoſe demands, which the Lord put to him, either in the following part of this Chapter, or in the next.

והודיעני Et notifica mihi.

Sunt quædam interrogationes, quæ non fiunt ut ſciatur veritas ab interrogante, ſed ut extorqueatur à reſpondente vel certè prodatur ignorantia reſpondentis cujuſmodi eſſe ſolent magiſtratuum & magiſtrorum interrogationes.

Ironia continuatur. Non enim eo interrogaturus erat ut diſceret, ſed ut doceret, vel ut Job intelligeret & fateretur ſe ignorare. Coc.

Ironia ſed amica, qua Jobum vult in viam reducere. Merc.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? declare if thou haſt underſtanding.

Who hath laid the meaſures thereof, if thou knoweſt, or who hath ſtretched the line upon it?

Whereupon are the foundations thereof ſet, or who laid the corner-ſtone thereof?

In the former Verſe, God told Job what himſelf would do, or in what method he would proceed with him; I will demand of thee (ſaith the Lord) or I will put the Queſtion to thee: In this verſe the Lord begins to make his Demands, to put Queſtions to Job, and calls for his Anſwer; theſe Demands or Queſtions contain the confutation of Job's former complaining ſpeeches againſt, or, at leaſt, about the dealings of God. The firſt Queſtion we have in this fourth verſe;

Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth?

For the clearing of this whole diſcourſe, in which the Lord puts Queſtions or Demands to Job, I ſhall firſt conſider the general ſcope of them all, and then the ſpecial matter contained and couched in the preſent context.

The ſcope which God ſeems to have in preſſing Job with theſe Demands or Queſtions, may be threefold.

Firſt, That by arguments from the leſs to the greater, he might ſhew Job, that he was not able to comprehend the reaſon of his myſterious providential workings towards the Children of Men, ſeeing he could not give a reaſon of his ſenſible and natural works.

Secondly, That Job being put to confeſs his ignorance about worldly or natural things, he might be brought to have low thoughts of himſelf, and (as he did indeed at laſt in Chapter 42.) to abhor himſelf, repenting in duſt and aſhes: Therefore, as one of the Ancients ſaith upon this place; After God had a great while, as it were, debated with him, and queſtioned him by his rod, he now debated with him by word, putting Queſtions to him.

Beatus Job poſt interrogationem verberis diſcutitur interrogatione ſermonis. Greg.

Thirdly, The Lord came thick and threefold (as we ſay) upon Job, with theſe ſearching Queſtions, thereby to convince him, that if by his own mighty power he had made, and by his wiſe providence had ordered the whole courſe of Nature, and all the parts of it, ſo exactly, ſurely then Job might collect and conclude that God in his adminiſtrations towards him, a particular ſingle perſon, muſt needs carry all things in wiſdom and with juſtice. And, that if God did ſhew forth ſo much wiſdom and faithfulneſs, in making, and in ordering the world, which was made for man, and for him among others of mankind; then much more was the providence of God rightly and duly adminiſtred unto all men, and him. If the Lord took ſuch care of the Earth, when he had ſhewed his power in making of it; if he took care about the bruit beaſts and other creatures of the Earth, which are the ſtock of it; then doubtleſs he took a due care of man, and of him in particular, man being the chief part of this lower creation, and Job being a principal one among the ſons of men.

Si propter tè mundus tanta fruitur providentia quanto magis ipſe.

More diſtinctly. In this Context, and thoſe which follow, about the works of God, the conviction ariſeth three ways upon Job, or God deals with him by a threefold argument; and all to humble him, and bring him upon his knees.

Firſt, By comparing the eternity of God with Job's time, who was but of yeſterday; therefore ſaith he, Where waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth? As if he had ſaid, pray how old are you, that you ſhould take upon you to contend with me, about my dealings with you? As the Jews ſaid ignorantly to Chriſt, whoſe day Abraham ſaw by faith, and was glad, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and haſt thou ſeen Abraham? (John 8. 57.) So the Lord might ſay in the fulneſs of his knowledg, to Job, Thou art not yet a hundred years old, ſure; Where (then) waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth?

Secondly, The Lord ſets before Job his own Omniſcience and thereby convinceth Job of his ignorance, or of the little knowledg, as well as experience, that he had of things done long before: Declare (ſaith God) if thou haſt underſtanding, at the fourth Verſe; and if thou knoweſt, at the fifth verſe. As if the Lord had ſaid, I can declare theſe things, I know theſe things; what's thy knowledg about them, in compariſon of my knowledg? Thy light is but darkneſs, and thy knowledg ignorance compared with mine; therefore preſume not.

Thirdly, The Lord convinceth Job by his helpleſneſs to him, both in the Works of Creation and Providence; thereby ſetting forth his own Omnipotency, together with Job's impotency; which was ſuch as contributed nothing either to the Creation, or to the Government of the World. Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth, and did all theſe things? Didſt thou come to give me either counſel how to do them, or lend me thy hand in the doing of them? Surely no; I did them alone, thou waſt not in being, thou art not from the beginning. Thy knowledg is very ſmall, and thy power and ſtrength ſmaller, as to the bringing about of any of theſe things; therefore ſee thy vanity, in ſpeaking thus complainingly, about my dealings with thee.

From and upon all theſe conſiderations, the Lord would have Job ſit down and acknowledg, that it muſt needs be extream raſhneſs in him to find fault with any of his Diſpenſations, or plead with him about them: The general argument may be fram'd thus;

He is blame-worthy, that finds fault with or complains about any thing in the Government of God, or will adventure to diſpute, and debate with him about it; unleſs we have ſomewhat like the Eternity, the Wiſdom, the Might, and Power of God.

But, Job, thou haſt nothing like the Eternity of God, for thou art but of the other day; thou haſt nothing like the Omniſcience of God, for thou art ignorant of what God hath done, and deſtitute of counſel what to do thy ſelf: Thou haſt nothing like the Power of God, the Arm of God, thou art weak, thou canſt not make the leaſt worm, the leaſt fly; ſurely, then thou canſt do nothing towards the making of a world: Therefore thou art blame-worthy, for finding fault with, and complaining about what God hath done.

The firſt Propoſition is fully implied, throughout the diſcourſe. The Aſſumption is expreſt in many ſharp and cutting queries, from the 4. Verſ. of this Chapter, Where waſt thou, &c. To the 34. of the next. The parts of this Aſſumption are many; whereof the firſt treats of Creation, from this fourth verſe to the 22; The ſecond of Providence in general, chiefly in the Meteors; from the 22. Verſe to the end of this Chapter; the third, of ſpecial Providence towards the Beaſt of the Earth, and the Fowls of the Air, from the firſt verſe of the 39. Chapter to the end.

So that, the proof of this Aſſumption, that Job had no hand, gave no counſel, no furtherance, no aſſiſtance, in the Works of Creation and Providence; I ſay this Aſſumption, contains the Hiſtory of the greateſt things in all the parts of Nature: for whatſoever belongs to true Philoſophy, may be reduced to it, or clearly diſcovered in it; and herein we are taught the true uſe of Philoſophy, even to raiſe the mind of man to the contemplation of the Eternity, Power, and Wiſdom of God; as alſo of our own frailty, weakneſs, nothingneſs, and ſo to ſit down in an humble ſubmiſſion, to whatſoever the Lord doth with us, or ours, in this world.

So much of the argument and general ſcope of this whole diſcourſe.

The Lord begins with the Work of Creation, thereby humbling Job to this Confeſſion, that he had nothing at all to do with it.

Verſ. 4. Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth?

Quando Deus interrogat ubi eras? Revocat in mentem Jobo quis ſit, & ex quo, & quam brevis ævi. Codur.

We have the Creation aſſerted in theſe words, and God is pleaſed to ſpeak of it metaphorically, by a compariſon drawn from Architecture, or the model of a Building: Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth?

Antelunares

Eliphaz put a queſtion of a near import with this (Chap. 15.7.) Art thou the firſt man that was born? Or waſt thou made before the hills? Here the Lord ſpeaks the ſame Language, Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? Waſt thou made before the World? There was a ſort of men ſpoken of by the Ancients, called (Proſelenes) Men made before the Moon, who boaſted that they were a people before the Moon was made: others ſaid they were before the Earth. The Scripture tells us that man was made out of the Earth; well then might the Lord demand, Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? Waſt thou before the Earth? Or before the Moon? Where waſt thou? Surely thou waſt no where, thou waſt not in being, when I laid the foundations of the Earth; foraſmuch as thy foundation is of the Earth, thou art but duſt of the Earth; therefore where waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth? Thou hadſt no Being then, unleſs in my decree and purpoſe for the bringing of thee forth in thy ſeaſon and generation. We may ſay, every man was ſomewhere, when God laid the foundations of the Earth; he was in the Purpoſe, Decree, and Counſel of God; which was from Eternity. Every man had a being in the mind of God, when God laid the foundations of the Earth; but where waſt thou or any man, as to any exiſtence, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? Now if this be thy caſe, thou haſt no reaſon to be ſo high and big in thy own thoughts, or to ſpeak ſo diſcontentedly about my dealings with thee. Do I need thy counſel in governing the world, who needed it not in making the world? Where waſt thou? &c.

And here we may take notice of the difference of Scripture Language in this point, with reſpect to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and by conſidering the different language of the Scripture concerning Chriſt, we have a clear argument to prove the God-head of Chriſt, or that he is God by Nature; foraſmuch as he had his exiſtence, when God laid the foundation of the Earth. Hear what Wiſdom, ſubſtantial Wiſdom, that is Jeſus Chriſt, ſpake of himſelf (Prov. 8.22.) The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way (that is, in the beginning of his ways of Creation) before his works of old; I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the Earth was. Where waſt thou, ſaith God to Job, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? But Jeſus Chriſt the true Wiſdom, ſaith, he was before the Earth was; When there was no depth, I was brought forth; when there was no fountain abounding with water. While as yet he had not made the Earth, nor the fields, nor the higheſt parts of the duſt of the World: When he prepared the Heavens, I was there: When he ſet a compaſs upon the face of the depth: When he eſtabliſhed the Clouds above; when he ſtrengthened the fountains of the deep: When he gave to the Sea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandments: When he appointed the foundations of the Earth: Then was I by him as one brought up with him; and I was daily his delight, rejoycing always before him, &c.

You ſee how the Spirit ſpeaks concerning Chriſt, the true Wiſdom, the ſubſtantial Wiſdom, he was before God laid the foundations of the Earth; therefore he is God, he is eternal. But when God comes to ſpeak to Job, a man, he ſaith, Where waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the Earth? (John 1.1.) In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God; and by him all things were made. Jeſus Chriſt had a hand in making the World, in laying the foundations of it, the work is aſcribed to him. Here's the glory of Jeſus Chriſt above all creatures, and this is an unanſwerable proof of the God-head and Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt; as 'tis of mans frailty, when the Lord demands,

Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? 'Tis as if the Lord had ſaid, Remember how ſhort a time thou haſt been, how little a while it is ſince thou cam'ſt into the World?

There are two things which men ſhould much conſider;

Firſt, How little a while they have been in this World.

Secondly, How little a time they have to ſtay in this World. Where waſt thou,

When I laid the foundations of the Earth?

בִיסְדִי In fundare me, vel cum fundarem.

The Hebrew is but one word, Where waſt thou, when I founded the Earth? we ſay, When I laid the foundations of the Earth? What's a foundation? There are four things to be noted about a foundation.

Firſt, A foundation is the loweſt part of a building. The Top or Head-ſtone (Zach. 4.7.) and the foundation-ſtone, are at utmoſt diſtance; the one higheſt, the other loweſt, the one firſt laid down, the other laſt ſet up.

Secondly, The foundation is an unſeen part of the building: we behold the ſuperſtructure, the walls and towers, when raiſed, we behold the battlements and pinnacles; but we cannot behold the foundation, that's an unſeen part of the building.

Thirdly, The foundation is the moſt neceſſary part of the building. There are ſome parts of a building, which are only for ornament and beauty; there are other parts of a building, which though they are ſomewhat neceſſary, yet not much neceſſary; the building might ſtand without them, but a foundation is of abſolute neceſſity: there cannot be a continuing Houſe without a Foundation.

Fourthly, The foundation is the ſupport of the whole building; that bears and upholds all the reſt.

But ſome may ſay, What are the foundations of the Earth?

I anſwer, A foundation may be taken either properly or metaphorically; formally, or alluſively.

The foundations of the Earth are not formal, but metaphorical foundations: 'Tis a ſpeech borrowed from men, who muſt have a proper foundation for their buildings. The Earth is not laid upon any formal, but it hath a vertual foundation. The Scripture ſaith ſometimes, that the Earth is founded upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed upon the floods (Pſal. 24.2.) yet in a proper ſenſe, the Sea is not the foundation of the Earth. It's ſaid, alſo (Job 26.7.) He hangeth the Earth upon nothing. The whole bulk of Sea and Earth together, are one Globe, one Building, formed and compacted together.

But the Earth may be ſaid to have foundations, and that God hath laid the foundations of it; for this reaſon: Becauſe the Earth is ſet faſt and firm, it is like a Houſe that hath foundations, not only a fondation, but foundations; it ſtands moſt firm. A Houſe builded upon a rock (Matth. 7.25.) ſtands faſt and immoveably in all weathers, becauſe built upon a ſure foundation: A Houſe builded upon the ſands, falls, it hath no ſure foundation. The Earth is made firm, ſtrong, and ſure, as thoſe Houſes or buildings that are raiſed upon rocks; and is therefore ſaid to have foundations. Why is Heaven, or the ſtate of glory, called a City having foundations (Heb. 11.10.) but becauſe the ſtate of glory, or that glorious City, is a firm ſtate; or (as it is called in another place (Chap. 13. 14.) a continuing City: A City which ſhall it ſelf continue for ever, and whoſe Citizens (without ſucceſſion) continue for ever. Now though the Earth be but a moveable tent or weak cottage, in compariſon of Heaven or our Heavenly ſtate; yet God in his infinite wiſdom and Power, hath formed and eſtabliſhed it ſo firmly for the habitation of man and all inferiour creatures, upon its own center; that the Lord may truly be ſaid to have built it upon foundations, or to have appointed foundations for it: as 'tis often expreſſed elſewhere (Pſal. 102. 25. Pſal. 104. 5. Prov. 8.29.) as well as here. Where waſt thou,

When I laid the foundations of the Earth?

The form of the words is conſiderable, in oppoſition to that opinion of ſome of the Ancients, who attributed the ſite of the Earth, and of the other Elements, not to any divine ſupernatural Power of the Maker, but to the very Nature of the Earth, or the neceſſity of the Matter; according to which, heavy things tend downward, and light things riſe high; ſo according to that opinion, the Earth being a heavy body, falleth loweſt, or took its place of its ſelf. Now that this opinion may be confuted and ſhut out of doors, the Lord compares his making of the world, to the building of a Houſe; which is ordered according to the reaſon of the builder: ſo that though it be a truth in Nature, that heavy things fall loweſt, yet we are to aſcribe all to the wiſdom of God, the Diſpoſer of them; who hath done all things according to the pleaſure of his own will, and that with ſuch admirable contrivance, that man is not able to comprehend it; as the laſt words of the verſe intimate: Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundation of the Earth? Declare if thou haſt underſtanding.

Aquin. In loc.

But before I paſs to thoſe words in the latter part of the verſe, I ſhall gather up ſome obſervations from this former part of it; Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? &c.

Hence Note; Firſt, The time of man upon Earth, compared with the Eternity of God, is nothing.

Where waſt thou? David (Pſal. 39.4.) prayed that God would teach him how frail he was, as to the duration of his life; and he adds in the next verſe, Mine age is nothing before thee. The age of man is nothing before God, if we conſider it as to its beginning, or if we conſider it as to its ending. When began the age of the moſt aged man? Are not all men of Yeſterday? God had an eternity of Being, before man was upon the face of the Earth. And what's the age of man as to its continuance? As it began but yeſterday, that is, a very little while ago, or but the day paſt; ſo it may end to morrow, that is within a few days to come, yea poſſibly before the next day or the morrow cometh. Boaſt not of to morrow (Prov. 27.1.) both becauſe thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth, nor whether, as to thee, a to morrow ſhall be brought forth. Death ſweeps men ſuddenly from the face of the earth; only the Lord always is, and is always the ſame: All things change, but God is not changed: He is himſelf, and his years fail not: Then what's mans age compared to God?

Note, Secondly; God is the firſt Being.

Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? God alone was before all things; yet he was not at all alone: For (as one of the Ancients ſaith) He was to himſelf a world, place, and time, and all things.

Ante omnia erat Deus ſolus, ipſe ſibi & mundus & locus & tempus & omnia. Tertul. adverſus Praxeam. Cap. 5.

Thirdly; God is an Eternal Being.

It's poſſible for one to be firſt, and not to be eternal. One man may have a Being before another, and not have a Being from eternity; but God had an eternal Being, before the world had a Being, or man any Being in the world.

There are Things of three ſorts:

Firſt, Such as have had a beginning, and ſhall have an end, and be no more. Thus it is with all meer ſenſitive Creatures, the Beaſts of the Earth, and Fowls of the Air; they periſh, there's an end of their being, when they die, or come to the end of their lives.

Secondly, There are other things which have had a beginning, yet ſhall have no end; As Spirits, Angels good or bad, and the ſouls of men: Yea, the bodies of men, though they are ſubject to, and are cut off by death, yet they ſhall return again; and having been ſown in corruption, ſhall be raiſed in incorruption; and be cloathed with immortality, which is a piece of Eternity.

Thirdly, There is a Being, which is without beginning, and without ending; and that is Gods Being only, or the Being of God; who thus expreſt himſelf to Moſes, I am, and I am, that I am; (Exod. 3. 14.) That word takes in all Time, paſt, preſent, and to come; yea, paſt, preſent, and to come, are all one in Gods Being (Pſal. 90.1.) Thou haſt been our habitation, from generation to generation: That is, We thy people, have always, or in all revolutions of time, dwelt or ſheltered our ſelves in thee: and then at the ſecond verſe, they confeſs not only their being in him throughout all generations, but his moſt bleſſed Being before all generations; Before Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth, and the World; even from everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God. The firſt Being is an eternal Being, and therefore the Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 57.15.) God inhabiteth Eternity. The Eternal dwells in Eternity. But what is Eternity? One of the Ancients calleth it, The perfect poſſeſſion of a boundleſs or limitleſs life, whole, and all at once. Eternity hath no terms, nor bounds of beginning or ending: 'Tis a poſſeſſion of all at once, there is nothing paſt, or to come; but all is always preſent to God.

Æternitas eſt interminabilis vita tota ſimul & perfecta poſſeſſio. Boeth. de Conſol. l. 6.

Note, Fourthly; God is the fountain of all being, he hath given a being to all things.

The Apoſtle Paul (Acts 17.28.) diſcourſing with the Athenians, having ſaid, In him we live, and move, and have our being: convinceth them further by that ſaying of their own Poets, for we are alſo his off-ſpring; We ſpring from him as from a root or fountain. With him is the fountain of lives (Pſal. 36.9.) even of natural life, as well as of ſpiritual and eternal: Every life, every being, is but a ſtream iſſuing from Jehovah. And as every life is from God, ſo alſo is the being of all things without life. The Lord gave the liveleſs Earth its being, its beginning. Some Naturaliſts have aſſerted the eternity of the World, and ſo the eternity of the Earth: They could not compaſs which way or how the World could have a beginning, and therefore ſaid it had none. Here we have the Founder of the World, God himſelf, teaching man this Divine Philoſophy about the beginning of the World, and taking it to himſelf, I laid the foundations of the Earth. When the Heathen Philoſopher read what Moſes had written concerning the Creation of the World; Thus the Heavens and the Earth were finiſhed, and all the hoſt of them (Gen. 2. 1.

He preſently ſaid, The man ſpeaks wonders, but how doth he prove what he hath ſpoken? Where are his demonſtrations? He would put Moſes to his proof: but Moſes's proof was faith in the teſtimony of God. Through faith we underſtand that the Worlds were framed by the Word of God; ſo that things which are ſeen, were not made of things which do appear (Heb. 11. 3.) We underſtand the Work of Creation, yet not by the ſtrength of natural reaſon, but through faith; which gives credit to the Word of God, and perſwades the heart that the report therein made is a truth. For though ſome Philoſophers have evinced by arguments grounded upon reaſon, that the World was made; yet that it was made by the Word of God, either the Eſſential Word, the Son of God ſpoken of (John 1. 1.) who is the efficient cauſe of it; or by the Declarative Word, ſpoken of in this place of the Hebrews, which was the means or inſtrumental cauſe of making the World (Gen. 1. 3, 6.) This, I ſay, cannot at all be underſtood by reaſon, but purely and only by faith, becauſe it is ſo revealed in the Scriptures.

Plato in Timæo.

Fifthly, In that the Lord here ſaith, I laid the foundations of the Earth:

Obſerve; God hath made the Earth firm and immoveable.

The ſtability of the Earth is of God, as much as the being and exiſtence of it (Pſal. 104. 5.) He laid the foundations of the Earth, that it ſhould not be removed for ever. There have been many Earth-quakes or movings of the Earth in ſeveral parts of it, but the whole body of the Earth was never removed, ſo much as one hairs breadth out of its place, ſince the foundations thereof were laid. Archimedes the great Mathematician, ſaid, If you will give me a place to ſet my Engin on, I will remove the Earth. It was a great brag; but the Lord hath laid it faſt enough for mans removing. Himſelf can make it quake and ſhake, he can move it when he pleaſeth; but he never hath nor will remove it. He hath laid the foundations of the Earth that it ſhall not be removed, nor can it be at all moved, but at his pleaſure; and when it moves at any time, it is to mind the ſons of men that they by their ſins have moved him to diſpleaſure. There hath been or will be a ſhaking of the Earth in mercy, for we have it in a promiſe (Heb. 12. 26.) Whoſe voice then (namely at the giving of the Law) ſhook the Earth; but now he hath promiſed, ſaying, yet once more I ſhake not the Earth only, but alſo Heaven. Some underſtand this promiſe as fulfilled at the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, at which time indeed there were notable and amazing motions and alterations both in Heaven and Earth. Others expound it of the Day of the ultimate Judgment; not a few of ſome great providential diſpenſations of God, which ſhall ſhake not the Earth only, but alſo the Heavens, as taken in a Metaphor for earthly and heavenly things, referring to the Church of God and the Kingdoms of Men. I ſhall not interpoſe in this matter about the ſenſe of that Text: but only ſay, whatever the Apoſtle meant by Earth or Heaven, and the ſhaking of it, yet this remains as an unſhaken Axiom, that the Fabrick of the Earth (properly taken) ſtands faſt: The Lord hath laid the foundations of it, that it ſhould not be removed. David to ſhew the ſtedfaſtneſs of his faith, put the ſuppoſition (Pſal. 46. 2.) Therefore will not we fear, though the Earth be moved. The Prophet alſo did the like, to aſſure us of the ſtability of the Covenant of Grace (Iſa. 54. 10.) yet we need not fear that either the Earth ſhall be removed; or the Mountains depart. Such ſuppoſitions ſhew indeed the immoveableneſs of the Word which God hath ſpoken, not the moveableneſs (by any natural power or natural decay) of the Earth, whoſe foundations he hath laid. And hence the Pſalmiſt argues the Lords faithfulneſs to his Word (Pſal. 119. 90.) All earthly things move, but the Earth wherein all theſe motions are made, ſtands ſtill (Eccl. 1. 4.) The Earth can no more move, than the Heavens can ſtand ſtill. Some modern Philoſophers have turned the ſcale of Nature, and would perſwade us that the Heavens ſtand ſtill, and the Earth moves: but 'tis good for us to ſtand to and abide by the Scripture, which tells us, the Earth ſtands ſtill and abideth; or it abideth, that is, it ſtandeth, as the Margin explains it (Pſal. 119. 90.) And that it ſtandeth ſtill or abideth, not only becauſe it hath ſtill a being (as things in motion have) but becauſe it is ſtill, or ſtands without moving, is ſo much my faith, as well as my ſenſe, that I ſee no reaſon to be moved from it.

Non magis movere naturaliter terra, quam quieſcere cœlum poteſt. Bold.

Sixthly, The Power and Will of God are the only foundations of the Earth. 'Tis ſaid by the Pſalmiſt, he hath founded it upon the waters (as was ſhewed before) yet that cannot be meant properly; for how can water, a fluid body, naturally bear up or ſuſtain the Earth, a heavy body, and not at all boyant? We all ſee it hangeth or ſtandeth in the air. But what foundation can the air be to the Earth, which will ſcarcely bear a feather. It remains then undeniable that the Will and Power of God are the foundations of the Earth: There's nothing can be given or aſſigned in reaſon, if you look not to the Will of God, for the foundation of the Earth. Beſides that, ther's no bottom for it. One of the Ancients giving a deſcription of the Creation, ſaith, All things are laid upon his Power and Will; theſe are the foundations, the ſtay, and eſtabliſhment of all things. And as it is ſo with reſpect to the ſtanding of the Earth, ſo, with reſpect to all thoſe great things which God hath promiſed to do in the Earth; the foundation of them all, is his own Power and Will, or his Powerful Will. The foundation laid in Election, and the foundation laid in Redemption by Jeſus Chriſt (other foundation can no man lay for all our ſpiritual comforts, preſent priviledges, and future hopes, 1 Cor. 3. 11.) Theſe foundations, I ſay, were laid in the Will of God, Lo I come to do thy Will, O God, (Heb. 10. 7, 9.) The Will of God is the foundation and eſtabliſhment of all things, whether Natural or Civil, Spiritual or Eternal.

Rationi nihil occurrit, cui innitatur terra, ſi divinam exceperis voluntatem. Nazian. Orat. 24.

Omnia repoſita exiſtimo in ejus poteſtate, quod voluntas ejus ſit fundamentum univerſorum Ambr. l. 1. Hexam. c. 6.

Seventhly, From the ſcope of theſe words we may

Obſerve; God who hath made the Earth by his Power, doth alſo govern it, and man who inhabits it.

And therefore man ought to be quiet, and ſit down in his governing as well as in his Creating Will. To convince and perſwade Job of this, is (as hath been toucht) the purpoſe of God in all that followeth. He that hath made the World, governs the World; and if ſo, ſhall poor creatures, you or I, or any other, though a Job, find fault with his government of it? Will a Maſter-Builder ſuffer any one to find fault with his work, who underſtands not how to lay a ſtone in it, much leſs to give the rule or direction for the whole work? Foraſmuch then as the Lord is not only the Maſter-Builder, but the ſole Maker of this great Houſe, the World, it becomes man, for whoſe uſe it was made, to acquieſce or reſt quietly in his Government of it. Surely, the Maker of all things, hath a right to diſpoſe of all things; and therefore all perſons are to be ſatisfied in his diſpoſal of them.

From the whole verſe and the obſervations given upon it, take theſe Scripture inferences.

Firſt, The Scripture makes this inference from it; God is one, and there is none like to him (Iſa. 40 26. Iſa. 46. 8.) To whom will ye liken me? To whom will you compare me? I am he that ſtretched out the Heavens, and laid the foundation of the Earth. There's none like to him in Wiſdom, none in Power, who laid the foundation of the Earth. There was never ſuch a viſible piece of work done in the World, as the making of the World; therefore there is none ſuch as the Maker of the World. The hypocrite is brought in dreaming that God was altogether ſuch as himſelf (Pſal. 50. 21.) And 'tis, as it hath been, the common guiſe of Idolaters, to think that God is no better than their Idol. But what the Lord by his Prophet (Jer. 10. 11, 12.) taught the captive Jews to ſay to their great Lords the Babylonians, the ſame hath he taught us to ſay to all Hypocrites and Idolaters: The gods that have not made the Heavens and the earth, ſhall periſh from the earth, and from under theſe Heavens: Then preſently followeth (as in Job) He hath made the earth by his power, he hath eſtabliſhed the world by his wiſdom, and hath ſtretched out the Heavens by his diſcretion. As if it had been ſaid, Will ye imagin that the Idols which you have made, are like him, who made you and all things?. And 'tis conſiderable, that whereas the whole Propheſie of Jeremy is written in the Hebrew Tongue, this eleventh verſe, which holds out at once a teſtimony and a threatning againſt thoſe Idolaters, is written in the Chaldean Language, with which the Jews by their long Captivity in Babylon were well acquainted; that ſo the Babylonians might hear of it, and know that the God of Iſrael, who made heaven and earth, was altogether unlike their gods, who did never ſo much as arrogate to themſelves any hand in, much leſs, the ſole power of making heaven and earth.

Secondly, Take this Scripture inference. Seeing the Lord hath laid the foundations of the earth, by his own Power and Wiſdom, then, He is the Proprietor of the whole earth, or the whole earth is the Lords proper poſſeſſion (Pſal.24.1.) The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof; the Lord made it, and it is his. He was not called, nor ſet a work to build this great Houſe for another; but he made it, as by his own power, ſo for his own pleaſure; all the inhabitants of the earth are his tenants: and not only the earth, but the whole ſtock and furniture of it is his: For as the Lord made the earth, ſo all that the earth is ſtored with. Thus ſpake Abraham (Gen.14.22.) to the King of Sodom, who bid him take the goods to himſelf: I have lifted up my hand unto the Lord, the moſt high God, poſſeſſor of heaven and earth: that I will not take from a threed even to a ſhoo-latchet, &c. As if he had ſaid, The Lord who is poſſeſſor of heaven and earth, is my portion, my poſſeſſion; and he can give me enough of the earth, yea he will give me heaven alſo: therefore, I will not take any thing of thine, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſay, I have made Abraham rich. The Lord, who is poſſeſſor of the earth, can give his people what earthly portions, or poſſeſſions of the earth he pleaſeth. And let us remember, what earthly portions ſoever we have in this world, we have no reaſon to boaſt; ſeeing all is the Lords, and we are but his ſtewards and tenants at will. And becauſe 'tis the Lords earth which we poſſeſs, let us alſo remember to pay our rent, our quit-rent to him, that is, thanks duly and dayly; leſt we provoke him to diſtrain upon us, or to take the forfeiture, and turn us out of all. Many hold lands from great Lords, to pay only ſome ſmall rent or ſervice, in a way of acknowledgment; O let us remember to pay our rent to our Great Land-Lord, The Lord of the whole earth. They who acknowledg, what they have is his, or that they have and hold all they have of him; will honour him with what they have, even with their ſubſtance, and with the firſt fruits of all their increaſe, (Prov. 3. 9.)

Thirdly, We may infer; Seeing God founded the earth, He is alſo the Ruler of it. And that the Lord rules the earth, is a mercy to all men on the earth. The Lord reigns, let the earth rejoyce (Pſal. 97. 1.) That is, men of the earth have cauſe to rejoyce, becauſe they have God, who is infinitely both wiſe and good, to rule them. The Lord is King over all the earth; ſing ye praiſes with underſtanding (Pſal. 47. 7.) And ſurely they who underſtand what a King he is, will praiſe him.

Fourthly, We may be encouraged to go unto God, or apply our ſelves to God, about all things here on earth, ſeeing he hath laid the foundations of the earth. The Lord having invited his people to ask him things to come concerning his ſons, and concerning the work of his hands, to command him (Iſa.45. 11.) adds this in the next words, as an encouragement to do ſo; I have made the earth, and created man upon it: As if he had ſaid, Ask of me whatever you would have me do, or would have done on earth; for I am he that created the earth. It may help our faith much, when (as David expreſſeth it, Pſal. 11. 3.) the very foundations (of earthly things) are deſtroyed, to conſider that God laid the foundations of the earth: In ſuch a caſe it may be ſaid (as it followeth there in the Pſalm) What can the Righteous do? But may it not be ſaid even in that hard caſe, when foundations are deſtroyed, What cannot the Lord do, who laid the foundations of the earth? This argument the Pſalmiſt alſo uſeth (Pſal. 124. 8.) Our help ſtands in the Name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth. Though earth and heaven ſhake, and ſeem to be confounded or mingled together, yet he who made heaven and earth without help, can give us help, or be our helper. If our help ſtood in the beſt of men made of earth, they might fail us; but while our help ſtands in him that made the earth, he will never fail us, for he hath ſaid he will not (Heb. 13. 5.) and their experience who have truſted the Lord, hath ſaid it too (Pſal. 9. 10.) This is the great priviledg of all that believe, that may addreſs to God by Chriſt for any thing in this earth, becauſe he is the Maker of it; and having made it by a word ſpeaking, what cannot he do for them, if he ſpeak the word?

Fifthly, Let us be much in praiſing the Lord for his wiſdom, power, and greatneſs, all which glorioustly appear and ſhine forth in his laying the foundations of the earth. David makes this a ſpecial part of Divine praiſe (Pſal. 136. 6.) We ſhould not only praiſe the Lord for the great things he hath done on the earth, but for this, that he hath made the earth. The work of God in laying the foundations of the earth, calls as loudly for our praiſe, as any thing (except our Redemption from the earth, Rev. 5. 9.) (Chap. 14. 3.) which ever God wrought upon the face of the earth. The making of the earth calls us to praiſe the Lord:

Firſt, Becauſe he hath made ſo vaſt a body as this earth is, or becauſe he hath made ſuch a large Houſe for us.

Secondly, Becauſe he hath founded it ſo miraculouſly, hanging upon nothing that appears, but in the Air; yet ſtanding more firmly than any Houſe built upon a Rock.

Thirdly, We ſhould praiſe the wiſdom of God, that hath formed it ſo exactly, and adorned it ſo richly: It's not a houſe huddled and clapt up together, without skill or art, though it was made with a word ſpeaking in ſix days, yet it was made with infinite wiſdom, as is more particularly held out (Verſ. 5.) where the Lord ſpeaks of laying the meaſures thereof, and ſtretching the line upon it; as alſo of faſtning the foundations and laying the corner-ſtone thereof; all which ſhew it is not a houſe clapt up in haſte, but made with admirable exactneſs: ſo that (as 'tis uſual when great houſes are built) there were great acclamations made at the building of it; as we have it the ſeventh verſe of this Chapter, then the morning ſtars ſang together, and all the ſons of God ſhouted for joy, to ſee ſuch a magnificent pile reared up.

Laſtly, Take this inference; If the viſible world be ſuch a building, what is the inviſible world, the City having foundations, which God hath prepared for thoſe that love him?

Thus much of the firſt part of Job's Conviction, he had nothing to do in laying the foundations of the earth, and he had as little in ſetting up and finiſhing that goodly ſtructure, as will appear in that which followeth.

Yet before the Lord proceeded any further to queſtion Job about this great work of Creation, he requires or calls for his anſwer in the cloſe of this fourth Verſe, to the Queſtion propounded in the former part of it; Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth?

Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding.

God challengeth Job to anſwer: The Hebrew is, If thou knoweſt underſtanding. And ſo the word is uſed (Iſa. 29. 24.) where we render, They alſo that erred in ſpirit ſhall come to underſtanding, or (as the Margin hath it) ſhall know underſtanding. Again, Huram ſaid (2*Chro.*2.12) Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, that made heaven and earth; who hath given to David the King a wiſe ſon, endued with prudence and underſtanding; The Original is thus ſtrictly read, Knowing prudence and underſtanding. Daniel ſpake in the ſame form (Chap. 2. 21.) He giveth wiſdom to the wiſe, and knowledg to them that know underſtanding. To know is a work of the underſtanding: No man knoweth any thing, but by the help of his underſtanding. The underſtanding is the firſt or Maſter-wheel in that noble engin the ſoul of man; and when rightly informed and inlightned, all the other wheels or faculties of the ſoul move aright, unleſs over-poized by paſſions and ſelf-ends. Every rational creature hath an underſtanding, yet every rational creature doth not know underſtanding, that is, doth not, is not able to ſpeak knowingly, or to uſe and act his underſtanding knowingly about every matter. The Lord ſuppoſeth Job might be defective here, and therefore beſpeaks him thus, Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding, or knoweſt underſtanding: As if he ſaid, The things which I queſtion thee about, may poſſibly be too high or too big for thy underſtanding, ſuch

Si peritus ſis tantarum rerum. Vatab.

ſuch as poſſibly thou canſt not reach. And hence, ſome render, or rather paraphraſe the Text thus; Declare, if thou art skilful in ſuch great things as I now ſpeak of: If thou art ſo wiſe as thou ſeemeſt to be by thy former conteſting with my Providences, declare thy wiſdom in this point, wherein I know thou wilt but declare thy ignorance, thy infancy, or inability to ſpeak, as one ſpeaks: Thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf but a child, while thou goeſt about to reſolve this queſtion. An experienced Architect, is not to be corrected by a Novice, who never took Tool in hand, nor hath ever read line about that Art: Wilt thou therefore, who art made of the Earth, undertake to reprehend my Work, who made the Earth, in ordering and diſpoſing the condition of man on Earth? Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding.

Note, Firſt; The right declaring of any thing, is a work of the underſtanding.

A man muſt ſee into a matter, by the Eye of his Mind, before he can duly declare his mind, ſenſe, or ſentence about it. A fools bolt (we ſay) is ſoon ſhot; his tongue runs before his wit: but a wiſe man will not declare (no man can declare well) before he underſtands: His wit keeps pace at leaſt with his tongue; He that anſwereth a matter (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18. 13.) before he heareth it, it is folly and ſhame to him. It is ſo alſo to him that heareth it, if he anſwereth it before he underſtands it. Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding.

Note, Secondly; Some works of God are ſuch and ſo high, that no man hath underſtanding enough to reach or declare them.

Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding, how the foundations of the Earth were laid. Man knoweth not where he was, nor what he was, before he was: how then ſhould he declare how any thing was done by God before he was? The great thing which God would inform Job in, is the ſame which the Apoſtle would inform us all in (Rom. 11. 33, 34.) while he brake out as a man amazed at the ſight of a tremendous Gulf in this paſſionate Exclamation, O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! for who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counſellor?

The Lord having put this queſtion to Job about the Creation of the Earth in general, proceedeth more diſtinctly, to put him queſtions about that work, in alluſion to buildings.

And here are four things in theſe two Verſes which have a twofold reſpect to buildings: Here are two things which have reſpect to the form and ſymmetry of a building: And here are two things which have reſpect to the ſtrength and firmneſs of a building.

The form, ſymmetry, and right order of a building, is laid down in the fifth verſe, where the Lord ſpeaks of the meaſures of the earth, and of ſtretching out a line upon it. The meaſuring of a building, and the ſtretching out of the line upon it, reſpect the right ordering and modelling, or the due frame of the Fabrick.

The two other things that concern the ſtrength of a building, are the laying of the foundation and the faſtening of the Corner-ſtone; both theſe we have in the ſixth verſe: Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtened? or who laid the corner-ſtone thereof? So then, we have here theſe two great and neceſſary concernments of a building:

First, The due form.

Secondly, The firmneſs of it.

When a Builder intends to raiſe a Fabrick, he firſt conſidereth and meaſureth the ground or plat where he intends to build: With reſpect to this, ſaith God, Who hath laid the meaſures thereof?

Ad amuſſim eriguntur parietes.

Secondly, When he is building, he uſeth his line to keep the work level and right: with reſpect to which, God ſaith, Who hath ſtretched the line upon it?

Thirdly, The Builder, that his work may be ſubſtantial, will be ſure to fix his foundation ſure: in reſpect of which, the Lord enquires of Job; Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtened?

Fourthly, The Builder will be very careful to ſet right the corner-ſtone which holds the walls together: with reſpect to which, he demands an account in theſe words, Who hath laid the corner-ſtone thereof?

Verſe 5. Who hath laid the meaſures thereof?

That is, taken the meaſures of the earth: Theſe meaſures reſpect the quantity or dimenſions of the earth, its length, breadth, and thickneſs; theſe were laid meerly according to the good pleaſure of God, which no man is able to give a reaſon of; and therefore, he adds, if thou knoweſt. The word which we render laid, implies a laying with art, as alſo with care and diligence; in all keeping a due decorum or proportion, reſpecting the length, breadth, and deepneſs of the building. God uſed this word when he ſpake to Moſes about the Fabrick of mans body (which is a little world, a compendium of the greater world) (Exod. 4. 11.) Who hath made mans mouth? or who hath made the deaf, or the ſeeing? &c. The Text is, Who hath laid mans mouth? Who hath laid it in that due proportion, or ſo placed it, that it may fit with the whole, and every member, that it with the eyes, ears, &c. may ſtand in perfect order, both for uſe and ornament? Thus the Lord hath laid the meaſures of the earth; He meaſured out the ſeveral parts of it, where the Valleys ſhould be, and where the Plains; where the Hills and Mountains, and where the Rivers and Channels: He meaſured all theſe, that is, he diſpoſed them in a comely order. There is a great appearance of the Wiſdom of God in ſetling every thing in its proper place, that one may anſwer in proportion with another; the perfection and beauty of the whole ariſeth out of the ſymmetry and proportionableneſs of the parts; Who hath laid the meaſures thereof?

Further, This laying the meaſures, notes, as the exactneſs, ſo the greatneſs of the work. In Scripture language, a building of meaſures, or an houſe of meaſures, ſignifieth a great houſe or building (Jer. 22. 14.) Woe to him that ſaith, I will build me a wide houſe, and large chambers: The Hebrew is, an houſe of meaſures, that is, of a great meaſure. The Septuagint render it, a meaſured houſe, a houſe having a due proportion of longitude and latitude, of heighth and depth. When the Searchers ſent by Moſes came back and reported the ſtate of the Land which they had viewed, we ſaw (ſaid they) men of a great ſtature, (Numb. 13. 32.) The Text is, men of meaſures, vaſt and tall men. Little things have little need of meaſuring, and 'tis ſcarce worth while to do it: But as great things are greatly to be admired, ſo they are worthy to be meaſured. How great, how marvellous is that Myſtical City and Temple, whoſe meaſures were taken and ſhewed to Ezekiel in a Viſion (Chap. 40. 41, 42, 48. v. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35.) Such is the Earth in greatneſs, that God only, who is himſelf altogether immeaſurable (and therefore greateſt of all) can lay, and hath laid the meaſures of it. Who hath laid the meaſures thereof?

Domum commenſuratam. Sept.

If thou knoweſt.] The Lord puts this ſuppoſition again to his queſtion; as before, Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding; ſo here, if thou knoweſt. Some read theſe words ironically, thus, Declare, for thou (doubtleſs) knoweſt who hath laid the meaſures thereof. Thou art ſo wiſe and skilful a man, that ſurely thou canſt declare this ſecret. Mr. Broughton hits the ſame ſenſe; For thou wilt be skilful, that is, thought skilful, and taken among men for (no Babe) a knowing man; and therefore canſt give me a good account of the meaſures of the earth, both as to its circumference and diameter; that is, what the compaſs of it is, and what the depth through the middle of the earth is. Thus the words carry in them a cutting Irony, the matter being ſo much beyond Jobs knowledge, of which the Lord ſaith to him, For thou knoweſt; which we render, If thou knoweſt? But the Hebrew Particle (כי) is rather and oftner (I ſuppoſe) uſed in a cauſal, than in a conditional ſignification.

Quandoquidem ſcitus es. Jun.

מדד Menſurare ſumitur pro menſura activa, qua aliquid menſuramus, aut pro re ipſa menſurata. Menſuras ejus puta, circumferentiam ſeu latitudinem & diametrum ſive profunditatem. Piſc.

Here it may be ſaid, what difficulty is there in this Queſtion, Who laid the meaſures of the earth? Job might eaſily anſwer, God laid them. Therefore I conceive, not only, yea not ſo much, who laid them, as how they were laid, or what they are, is here intended.

The moſt learned and ſtudied Mathematicians could never give a right meaſure of the Earth, nor yet agree about that matter. They meaſure it firſt as to the depth of it, what the diameter of the earth is from top to bottom; but they differ much in opinion what the depth or diameter of the earth is: Some have reckoned it three thouſand and fifty miles: Others have ſaid it containeth ſix thouſand and ſeventy miles: And a third ſort have concluded, that it is ſeven thouſand one hundred and ſeventy miles. Thus they gueſs, but could never yet come to know the true meaſures of the Earth in deepneſs. And if we conſider the Perimeter or Circumference of the Earth, there hath been as much variety of conjecture about that. Some of the Learned have reckoned the Earth fifty thouſand miles in compaſs: Others make it thirty and four thouſand ſix hundred twenty five: A third computation gives it to be thirty one thouſand and five hundred miles. There are who have brought it down to twenty two thouſand five hundred; yea, to twenty thouſand and four hundred miles. And they who are judged moſt exact among the Moderns, have reduced the account of the compaſs of the whole Earth to nineteen thouſand and fourſcore miles. Thus the Learned and Wiſe Men of the World, after their greateſt ſtudies, know not what the meaſures, the juſt meaſures of the Earth are, nor how they were laid: And therefore God might well ſay to Job, Who hath laid the meaſures thereof, if thou knoweſt? Who ever could ſay to this day without miſtake, what the meaſures of it are? That is one thing: A ſecond followeth;

Or who hath ſtretched the line upon it?

קו Sumitur pro filo, quod Latomi utrinque affixum extendunt in longitudinem muri: Appellatur linea, vel quia ex lino fit, vel quia figuram rectam efficit, quæ etiam linea dicitur. Bold. Artifices, ne quid indecenter fiat, aut ſine proportion, regulam adhibent ad omnia dirigenda.

As if he had ſaid, Who hath made the Earth ſo exactly? To do a thing in print, and to do it by line, are Proverbials of the ſame ſignification.

The line is an inſtrument of great uſe in building. Carpenters and Maſons muſt have their Line and Plummet, elſe they cannot keep their work even. Now ſaith the Lord to Job, Who hath ſtretched the line upon it? The Lord ſtill purſues the alluſion to a building.

To ſtretch forth the line, ſignifies in Scripture:

Firſt, The exerciſe of Power. And then, Who hath ſtretched the line upon it, is, Who hath ordered and governed the Earth? The Apoſtle Paul ſpake of the line, and of ſtretching forth the line in this ſenſe (2 Cor. 10. 8.) where having ſaid, that he had Power from God, a Spiritual Power, not for deſtruction, but for edification; he preſently adds (verſ. 13.) But we will not boaſt of things without our meaſure, but according to the meaſure of the Rule (or line, as we put in the Margin) which God hath diſtributed unto us; for we ſtretch not our ſelves beyond our meaſure: That is, we are not greedy of, nor do we graſp more power than is given and allowed us of God; nor will we exerciſe our power further than Chriſt hath appointed and commanded us. This ſtretching forth of the line, is the exerciſe of Power, and that's a Metaphorical ſenſe of it.

Secondly, To ſtretch the line, is to build, or to make preparation for building (Zech. 1. 16.) Thus ſaith the Lord, I am returned to Jeruſalem with mercies; my Houſe ſhall be built in it, and a line ſhall be ſtretched forth upon Jeruſalem. Again (Chap. 4. 10.) Who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall things? for they ſhall rejoyce, and ſhall ſee the Plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel. When the Lord would aſſure his People that Jeruſalem ſhould be reſtored, he doth it by promiſing the ſtretching forth of the Line, and the ſight of the Plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel, commanding, over-ſeeing, and directing the Work. The Line and Plummet being of much and moſt neceſſary uſe for the right ſetting of a building, ſignified that God was about to build.

Thirdly, The ſtretching forth of the line upon a place, with ſome addition, notes the deſtruction of it, or the pulling of it down (2 Kings 21. 13.) I will ſtretch over Jeruſalem the line of Samaria, and the Plummet of the houſe of Ahab: That is, I will make her deſolate, as Ahab and Samaria were; and ſo the latter part of the verſe expounds it; And I will wipe Jeruſalem as a man wipeth a diſh, wiping and turning it upſide down. Again (Iſa. 34. 11.) I will ſtretch forth upon it the line of Confuſion, and the ſtones of emptineſs: That is, it ſhall be utterly ruined. And (Iſa. 18. 2, 7.) Woe to the Land ſhadowing with wings, &c. that ſaith, Go ye ſwift meſſengers to a Nation meted out, and trodden down. The Hebrew is, Go to a Nation of line, (as you have it in the Margin) that is, to a Nation who have the line ſtretched out upon them for deſolation; not a line ſtretched upon them to build them, but to deſtroy them; a Nation who are or ſhall be broken down, as it were by line; they ſhall come to perfect ruine, or ruine ſhall come on them in full perfection. As when the Lord will build, he doth it by line, that is, exactly and fully, even with a Divine Skill; ſo when he will deſtroy fully, he is ſaid to mete out for deſtruction. We have the word uſed both with reſpect to deſtruction and edification, to building up, and pulling down, in that one place (2 Sam. 8. 2.) where it is ſaid, that David ſmote Moab, and meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground; even with two lines meaſured he, to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive; and ſo the Moabites became David's ſervants, and brought gifts. Some underſtand this act of David in meaſuring the Moabites with a line, ſtrictly and litterally; that David having made a full Conqueſt of their Country, did cauſe it to be meaſured with a line, and then appointed or allotted two thirds of the Land, together with the Inhabitants, to ruine and deſtruction; receiving only the third of the people to mercy, and reſerving only a third part of the Land to be planted by them. Others take it only alluſively, that having conquered them, he uſed them and their Country at his own pleaſure, as we do that which we meaſure out by line. But whether we take David's meaſuring the Moabites with a line in the one ſenſe or in the other, it fully reaches this third Notion of it under hand.

Ad gentem quæ conculcatur & deſtruitur à Deo lineatim, i. e. paulatim deſtruitur cum modo & ordine.

Here in the Text when the Lord demanded of Job, Who hath ſtretched the line upon it? It is as if he had ſaid, Shew me, if thou canſt, who hath given this great Building, this Fabrick of the Earth ſuch ſymmetry, ſuch a proportion and evenneſs, that no fault or flaw can poſſibly be found in it. From theſe two figurative expreſſions in the fifth verſe, implying the exactneſs of the Earths frame,

> Note; The frame of the world is every way, and in every reſpect proportionable and beautiful.

'Tis done (as it were) by meaſure and line. The Lord is infinitely above the uſe of meaſures or lines, yet condeſcending to our underſtanding, he gives us to know that 'tis as perfect a piece, as if he had done it by meaſure and by line. Survey the whole World, or any part of it, is it not a moſt exact piece? The Heavens are as the Roof of the Houſe, the Earth as the Floor and Foundation of it; thoſe Elements, Air and Water, as the Walls and Sides of it: The lower parts of the Earth are as Pillars and Baſes, Hills and high Mountains appear like Imboſsments of the Earth to the eye of the beholder. What can be added, whether we conſider the compleatneſs of the whole, or the ſymmetry of the parts? Have we not reaſon to ſay admiringly, or to cry out (as Pſal. 104. 24.) O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all; the Earth is full of thy Riches; ſo is the great and wide Sea, &c. Our hearts ſhould be drawn up by all the works of God to admire his workmanſhip. That thy Name is near thy wondrous works declare (ſaid David, Pſal. 65. 1.) ſpeaking of the Works of Providence; and that the Name of God is near his Works of Creation declare alſo, his Name is written upon them, that is, his Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs. And therefore when we behold this Work of God in ſpecial, his laying the meaſures of the Earth, we ſhould admire both his Goodneſs, Wiſdom and Power. There are five things in this part of the Creation, the Earth, as expreſſed to be done by line and meaſure, which may raiſe up our admiration of God.

Firſt, The greatneſs of the work, It is a vaſt Piece, or Pile, a huge Fabrick, though but a Point to the Heavens. We admire great buildings; but what are the greateſt buildings upon Earth, to the Earth it ſelf, which the Lord hath built!

Secondly, The harmony or uniformity of the building, and ſo the beauty of it.

Thirdly, The compactneſs of the building, as knit cloſe together; and ſo the firmneſs of it.

Fourthly, That all was done in ſo ſhort a time. We ſay, Rome was not built in a day. Solomon was ſeven years in building the Temple (1 Kings 6. 38.) And he was thirteen years in building his own Houſe (1 Kings 7. 1.) And doubtleſs, Solomon laid out all the power and skill he had for the ſetting up of thoſe buildings: But behold a greater building than either the Temple which Solomon built for God, or the Houſe which he built for himſelf, ſet up (as we ſay) in a trice. The Lord finiſhed all his work in ſix days, and that part of it, the Earth, in one: Nor did the Lord take either ſix days to finiſh the whole work, or one to finiſh any one part of it, becauſe he needed ſo much time to do it in; but becauſe he would not do it in leſs.

Fifthly, The Lord did all this without the uſe of any Inſtrument, Rule or Compaſs, Axe or Hammer; though here is mention made of a meaſure, and of a line. The skilfulleſt Architect cannot raiſe up any conſiderable building without theſe; though he hath the Platform and Idea of it in his head, yet take away his Line, and his Rule, and he can do nothing. But ſuch is the glorious Skill and Power of God, that though he is pleaſed to ſpeak of a meaſure, and of a line; yet we muſt not be ſo groſs, as to think that he made uſe of any. The whole work was natural to God, and therefore he needed no Artificial helps; nor was any Inſtrument imployed in it, but only his own Creating Word and Will. Some faithleſs Atheiſts of old (and poſſibly there are ſuch at this day) asked in ſcorn with what Tools and Inſtruments, with what Ladders and Scaffolds, this building was ſet up? But let us at once pity ſuch in their unbelief and horrible prophaneneſs, and labour to edifie or build up our ſelves in Grace and Holineſs, in the Faith and Fear of his great Name, who built this World without Tools or Inſtruments, without Ladders or Scaffolds.

Secondly, As our hearts ſhould be drawn out in admiration, ſo in thankfulneſs, foraſmuch as God hath made ſuch a world for us: he hath laid the foundations of the Earth; he hath meaſured it out, and ſtretched the line upon it, that we might have the uſe of it, that we might tenant and inhabit this houſe. Man is the chief Inhabitant of the Earth; that other Creatures dwell there, is for the ſervice of man: then let us be thankful. Our greateſt cauſe of thankfulneſs is, that the Lord hath made another Houſe for us, of which the Apoſtle profeſſeth his aſſurance (2 Cor. 5. 1.) We know, that when the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle (whether of our body, or of the body of this world) is diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens. O how ſhould we rejoyce in, and be thankful for that Houſe! But that we have this inferiour houſe built for us (which is alſo a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, but purely and immediately by the Power of God) is and ſhould be continual matter of great thankfulneſs.

Thirdly, Seeing the Lord hath thus laid the meaſures of the Earth, and ſtretched forth the line upon it: ſeeing he hath made ſuch an exact building for us, this Earth; let us walk exactly and orderly upon this Earth which he hath made. As he hath laid his meaſures in framing the Earth, ſo we ſhould keep our meaſures in living upon the Earth. He hath ſtretched out his line upon it, and we ſhould take heed that we do not exceed our line. God hath given a line, by which mans converſation ſhould be ſquared as exactly as any building is or can be by line. As the work of God for us is beautiful, ſo ſhould our works be. We (as to our ſpiritual ſtate) are a Creation, a new noble Creation: And certainly, he who made the Earth, this old outward Creation in ſuch exactneſs, hath alſo made the new Creation, our ſpiritual heavenly ſtate much more (if more may be) exactly; he hath made it by meaſure, and by line. Let us therefore walk, and ſpeak, yea, and think, by meaſure, and by line; let us appear and approve our ſelves as the building of God, as the work of Gods Holy Spirit, fair and beautiful. Many profeſs godlineſs; but do they appear as Gods Workmanſhip, as if God had ſtretched his line, and laid the meaſure of the new ſpiritual Creation upon them? Believers are the Workmanſhip of God (Eph. 2. 10.) (and ſo they ſhould appear as) created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works; which God hath before ordained, that we ſhould walk in them. The Apoſtle ſaith (Phil. 1. 27.) Let your converſation be as becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt, whom ye believe in. The Goſpel is an exact thing, ordered in all things as David ſpake of it (2 Sam. 23. 5.) under the notion of the Everlaſting Covenant. Now, ſaith St. Paul, Let your converſation be as becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt; let it be an orderly converſation: I may ſay alſo, let your converſation be ſuch as becometh the Earth ye walk upon; that's an accurate frame, the Lord hath made it in meaſure, and ſtretched the line upon it: Let us take heed we be not found walking beſides that line, thoſe meaſures which he hath given us.

Ποίημα.

Fourthly, If God hath been thus exact in framing the Earth, as it were, by line and meaſure for us; if he hath given us ſo perfect a Piece to inhabit and dwell in while we are in this ſinful ſtate; What do you think is that Paradiſe which he hath prepared for us in our ſinleſs ſtate! What are the meaſures of our heavenly City! What the lines that have been ſtretched out upon thoſe Eternal Manſions! If viſible things which our eye ſeeth, are ſo taking; what are things inviſible! And if this Earth which we tread on be a Looking-glaſs (as indeed it is) wherein we may ſee the Wiſdom and Power of God; what will Heaven be! How will that reflect the Wiſdom, Power, and Goodneſs of God! If this world be a beauty, and is therefore expreſſed by a word in the Greek ſignifying beauty, comelineſs, decency; what will that world be which is to come! Thus much of the exactneſs of the building. The next verſe holds out the ſtrength and firmneſs of it.

Κόσμος.

Verſ. 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtened? Or who hath laid the Corner-ſtone thereof?

Two things make a building ſtrong and firm.

Firſt, The faſtening of the foundations.

Secondly, The right laying of the Corner-ſtone.

We had the laying of the foundations at the fourth verſe, here we have the faſtening of them. If a foundation be laid looſly, the building will not ſtand. Chriſt in the Parable (Mat. 7. 27.) ſpeaks of a foundation laid in the looſe Sand, that could not make a firm building. But the houſe which had its foundation laid on a compacted Rock, or had the Rock for a foundation, ſtood faſt in all winds and weathers. The Lord hath not only laid the foundations of the Earth, but hath faſtened the foundations; he hath built upon a Rock. You will ſay, what is that Rock-like thing upon which the foundations of the Earth are faſtened? I anſwer, it is nothing but the Power and Will of God. The Will and Power of God are the Pillars or Baſes upon which the Earth is faſtened, and made ſure for ever.

The word which we tranſlate foundations, is often in Scripture rendred Sockets (Exod. 26. 19. Chap. 35. 11. Chap. 38. 27. Cant. 5. 15.) Now Sockets are places cut in Timber and Stone, or caſt in Metal, in which the ſeveral ſtrengthning pieces of a building are faſtened; and ſuch is the foundation to a houſe, the faſtening of it. Foundations are laid in the ground, and beams are faſtened with Sockets. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Whereupon are the foundations thereof ſunk faſt. We uſually ſay, we muſt ſink a foundation: Foundations are ſunk, and then the Superſtructure faſtened on it.

Further, take notice, The word which here we render Foundations or Sockets, is not that which properly ſignifieth a foundation: And from it the word Adon is derived, which ſignifieth a Lord, or Maſter, or chief among men; becauſe Lords and Princes are or ſhould be as the Sockets and Pillars of a Nation, to faſten and ſecure all in their places: and upon the fall of Princes often followeth the fall and ruine of Nations. The Spaniſh word Don, or Lord, is ſuppoſed a derivative from it. And from this Appellative, one of the proper Names of God is formed, by the addition of a letter in the end: Under which Royal Title he is repreſented to our Faith as the Lord and Upholder of all things. Some have obſerved, that God is called by this Name one hundred thirty and four times in Scripture. All which ſhew, that he who is the Creator, is alſo the Suſtainer and Supporter of the whole Fabrick of Nature; ſuch is the ſignificancy of this word. Now when the Lord asks, Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtened? There's no anſwer can be given to this queſtion, but what was given to the former. God hath faſtened them upon himſelf, in his Power and Will they ſtand ſure.

Iis qui nos percunctantur cuinam corpori veluti ſubjecto fundamento tam immenſum hoc terræ pondus innitatur, dicamus oportet, quod in manu terræ ſunt omnes fines terræ. Baſil. in Pſal. 94.

טבע Immerſus, infixus, impreſſus, hinc טבעת annulus quod digito vel potius digitus ei infigitur.

ארן Baſis columnæ cui aliquid innititur, imponitur, atque ab ea geſtatur. Per literam, in fine additam præcedente Camets.

Or who hath laid the Corner-ſtone thereof? Or, Who hath caſt her Corner-ſtone?

As if he had ſaid, Who made the parts of the Earth to keep ſo cloſe together, and to keep up one another? This is another very conſiderable part in a building. As ſtrong buildings muſt have a ſure foundation to hold up the whole;

Videntur obſcure ſignificari poli terræ. Grot.

Lapis anguli; i. e. qui poſitus eſt in angulo. Piſc.

ſo they muſt have Corner-ſtones to hold the parts together. The Corner-ſtone bindeth and ſtrengtheneth the Fabrick, as well as gives Beauty and Ornament to it.

There are two ſorts of Corner-ſtones:

Firſt, There is a Corner-ſtone laid below, or beneath in the Earth, with the foundation. The Maſter-builder is very careful to ſet that right.

Secondly, There is a Corner-ſtone laid upon the foundation, or in the joyning of the walls, both below as ſoon as the building appears above ground, and up to the top or utmoſt height of the building. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is expreſſed in Scripture under the notion of a Corner-ſtone, as to both theſe uſes.

Firſt, He is the Corner-ſtone laid below in the Earth with the foundation (Iſa. 28. 16.) Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a Stone, a tryed Stone, a precious Corner-ſtone, a ſure foundation: So we tranſlate this latter part of the verſe. Some others render it thus, A Corner-ſtone founded upon a foundation: implying, that Chriſt is the loweſt, the chiefeſt and firmeſt Foundation-ſtone, as well as a tryed precious Corner-ſtone. The Apoſtle affirms both theſe of Chriſt in one verſe (Eph. 2. 20.) Ye are built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets (not upon their Perſon, but Doctrine, which is Chriſt) Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief Corner-ſtone: In whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth into an holy Temple in the Lord. Again (1 Pet. 2. 4, 5.) To whom coming, as unto a living Stone, diſallowed indeed of men, but choſen of God, and precious: Ye alſo as lively ſtones are built up a ſpiritual houſe, &c.

In fundamentum fundatum. Quæ forte fundamenti repetitio ſignificat infimam fundamenti partem aut potiſſimam. Chriſtus dicitur caput anguli quod non ſolum ſit principium, ſed finis ſpiritualis ædificii. Nyſſen.

Some conceive, that in this place the Lord fore-ſhewed Job the Incarnation of Chriſt, who is the true Corner-ſtone, knitting all in one. For moſtly, when the Scripture would ſet forth the ſecurity of our ſalvation by Chriſt, it doth by this reſemblance: Upon him Believers are founded, and in him faſtened. If we had not Chriſt a Corner-ſtone for our Salvation, it were not poſſible that our Salvation ſhould be ſure to us: The building cannot be fixt without it. Chriſt is ſaid to be our Peace, who hath made both one (Eph. 2. 14.) where the Apoſtle ſpeaks firſt of taking away the middle wall of Partition, and then of making both (that is, Jews and Gentiles) one by Chriſt, the only Corner-ſtone. By one and the ſame Faith in Chriſt, two people, Jews and Gentiles, are joyned in one: As in the corner of a building, two walls always meet, and are cloſed together by the Corner-ſtone. And as Chriſt is a Corner-ſtone laid in with the foundation, ſo he is a Corner-ſtone upon the foundation in the continued riſing of the building, till raiſed to the top. As the Corner-ſtone hath its uſe in any part of the corner, from the Foundation to the Roof, ſo it is placed in the higheſt part of the building; there Chriſt is the chief Corner-ſtone. The Prophet ſpeaks thus of Chriſt (Zach. 4. 7.) And he (that is Zerubbabel) ſhall bring forth the Head-ſtone thereof with ſhoutings, crying, Grace, Grace, unto it; which ſeems to ſignifie, that Chriſt ſhould be manifeſted and brought publickly forth, like the chief or uppermoſt Corner-ſtone. The Corner-ſtone is called the Head-ſtone, becauſe 'tis ſet above in the building; and 'tis called alſo the Head-ſtone, becauſe it is poliſhed, and appeareth above the reſt, like an Head above the Body. Thus you ſee the uſe of the Corner-ſtone in Scripture, as applied to Chriſt, in alluſion to a building, for the ſecurity and firmneſs of it: the Corner-ſtone being that which bindeth the building, and faſtens the contiguous walls together. Here the Lord ſpeaking of his framing the Earth, tells us of a Corner-ſtone, to ſhew that the frame of the Earth ſhall ſtand and continue unſhaken, and undivided. In oppoſition to this phraſe, when the Prophet deſcribeth the irreparable deſtruction of Babylon, or that it ſhall be ruined without recovery; he expreſſeth it thus (Jer. 51. 26.) And they ſhall not take of thee a ſtone for a corner, nor a ſtone for foundation; but thou ſhalt be deſolate for ever, ſaith the Lord. Babylon ſhall have neither foundation nor Corner-ſtone; as much as to ſay, it ſhall never be built. Magiſtrates and chief Governours are alſo called Corner-ſtones (Pſal. 118. 22.) The ſtone which the builders refuſed, is become the Head-ſtone of the corner. Which words, as they relate to Chriſt chiefly, ſo alſo to King David, as a Type of Chriſt. The Scripture in ſeveral other places gives that Title to great men (1 Sam. 14. 38. Judges 20. 2. Iſa. 20. Zeph. 3. 6.) In all theſe Texts Princes and Great Men are called Corners, or Corner-ſtones; becauſe, as the Corner ſtone holdeth the wall together, ſo they hold Nations (in their civil capacity) together. Who laid the Corner-ſtone thereof? ſaith God to Job: Tell me who did it? Didſt thou do it? Did Angels do it? Conſider the greatneſs, the firmneſs of the work, and thou wilt be convinced, that it was I that laid the Corner-ſtone thereof. So then, the general ſenſe of this Verſe is, to ſhew the ſtability of the Work of God. Here are foundations, and foundations faſtened in the Wiſdom and Power of God, who is an Everlaſting Strength, the Rock of Ages (Iſa. 26. 4.) Here alſo the Corner-ſtone is laid, therefore all is ſure and firm.

Educet lapidem capitis. Heb. Quod inſtar capitis promineat, aut quod emineat in ſupremo loco.

Now what did the Lord aim at in all this? Surely, it was not barely to convince Job, that the Earth was a beautiful piece, and a ſtrong one: There was ſomewhat elſe in it; and what was that? Even to convince Job, that foraſmuch as he could not deny, but this admirable and well-ordered building was the work of God; that therefore he ſhould ſit down ſatisfied in all his other works. If God alone perfected this work by his Power, if he contrived it by his Wiſdom; ſhall man find fault with any of the works of God? Doth not he who put the world into this beautiful frame wherein we ſee it, carry on all his works on Earth in beauty and order, though we ſee it not? And is there not a firmneſs and ſtrength in all his works? Is there not a meaſure laid in all his Providences, and a line ſtretched out upon all his dealings with the Children of men? Hath he not faſtened the foundations, and laid the Corner-ſtone of all his Diſpenſations right? Job ſeemed to ſpeak ſometimes, as if the Lord had not dealt with him in meaſure, nor ſtretched an equal line upon his proceedings; he looked upon all as off the hooks, and out of courſe. Now, ſaith the Lord, have I laid the meaſures of the Earth, and ſtretched the line upon it? Have I faſtened the foundations, and laid the corner-ſtone thereof? Have I done all theſe things; and doſt thou think that I will let the World in general, or any mans caſe in particular, run to ruine; as if my works of Providence had neither foundation nor Corner-ſtone? Remember, O Job, and well conſider, that as when in the beginning I ſaw the Earth without form, and void (Gen. 1.) I, by a Creating Word, commanded it into form and fulneſs: So when thou ſeeſt nothing but (Tohu and Bohu) confuſion and diſorder, voidneſs and darkneſs in the Earth, even then I am laying the meaſures of Juſtice, and ſtretching the line of Truth and Equity upon all that is done or ſuffered; and will bring forth my work in full perfection: Nothing ſhall be amiſs, or out of order, when my work is finiſhed, how much ſoever it may ſeem to be amiſs, as to beginnings, or preſent actings. Therefore, O Job, leave off thy complainings, and reſt quietly in my dealings.

תהו ובהו

Some have queſtioned the Natural Works of God, yet 'tis impoſſible to mend any part, or the leaſt pin of them. And 'tis as impoſſible for the Wit and Underſtanding of Men or Angels to mend any thing in the Providential Works of God. That's the ſcope of this diſcourſe, even that the conſideration of Gods Power and Wiſdom in making the World, ſhould bridle our curioſity, and awe our ſpirits, when they begin to quarrel with, yea, but to query about any thing that God hath done; though it appear to us altogether irregular and confuſed, or as done without either line or meaſure. The Lords work is beautiful and glorious, 'tis alſo ſure and ſtrong. As his Promiſe or Covenant is ordered in all things, and ſure (2 Sam. 23. 5.) So are his Providences too (for they are the iſſues and accompliſhments of his Promiſes) ordered as to means, and ſure as to the end: They ſhall end or iſſue in bringing about the things which are laid in the foundation and Corner-ſtone of his Purpoſes, Counſels, and Decrees; all which work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe (Rom. 8. 28.)

And to convince Job from the Works of Creation, that he ought not only to acquieſce or reſt quietly under the Works of Providence, whatſoever they were, but to rejoyce in them; the Lord tells him in the next verſe, that there was great rejoycing, yea, ſhouting for joy, when the foundations of the Earth were faſtened, and the Corner-ſtone thereof laid.

VERS.

VERS. 7.

When the Morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy.

THere are two Opinions among Learned Interpreters concerning the general ſtate of this Verſe:

Firſt, Some here reaſſuming the firſt words of theſe queſtions propoſed at the fourth verſe by God to Job, Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? &c. make this the ſecond inſtance of Gods mighty Power in the Works of Creation; Where waſt thou, when the Morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy? As if the Lord had ſaid, I have as yet queſtioned thee only where thou waſt when I made the Earth, which is the moſt inferiour part of the World: But now I purpoſe to riſe higher in my diſcourſe, and therefore I put theſe queſtions to thee; Where waſt thou, when I ſet up the Morning-ſtars, thoſe ſparkling lights, which ſhine to the Earth, through the Firmament of Heaven; as alſo the Sons of God, thoſe bleſſed Spirits? All which ſang together, and ſhouted for joy, at the appearance of my Power and Wiſdom.

Secondly, Others connect theſe words in a continued ſenſe and ſentence with the Verſe going before; Where waſt thou, when I laid the foundations of the Earth? &c. at which ſight, the Morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy. Taking the words thus, they carry an alluſion to, or are a ſimilitude taken from Noble Buildings or Structures, whoſe foundations uſe to be laid with Solemnity, and their Corner-ſtones to be ſet up with ſhouting and acclamation. That it was anciently cuſtomary, to make ſuch Acclamations at the laying of the foundation of ſome eminent building, beſides what is clear out of Humane Authors and Hiſtories, we have ſeveral Scripture Evidences. The 87th Pſalm throughout, ſetting forth the Structure of the Goſpel Church, of the ſpiritual Zion, by way of Propheſie, begins thus; His foundation is in the holy Mountains; there's the foundation of Zion laid: Then followeth, as at the ſecond verſe, The Lord loveth the gates of Zion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob. Glorious things are ſpoken of thee, O thou City of God! Selah. As if he had ſaid, there was a great acclamation, high praiſes at the laying the foundation of Zion; with which the Pſalm cloſeth more expreſly (v. 7.) As well the Singers as the Players on Inſtruments ſhall be there: All my Springs are in thee. Again (Pſal. 118. 22, 23, 24.) there is no ſooner mention made of the Corner-ſtone (the Stone which the Builders refuſed, is become the Head-ſtone of the Corner) but preſently we have acclamations about it, This is the Lords doing, it is marvellous in our eyes: This is a bleſſed work indeed, This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoyce, and be glad in it. That Corner-ſtone of Salvation, Jeſus Chriſt, being laid, as I may ſay, all the Stars ſang together, and the Sons of God ſhouted for joy; This is the day which the Lord hath made. If we go to thoſe material buildings which were figurative of the Church and Chriſt, we ſhall find the like (Ezra 3. 10.) When the Jews at the return of their Captivity, began to build the Temple, the Text ſaith at the tenth verſe; And when the Builders laid the foundation of the Temple of the Lord, then they ſet the Prieſts in their Apparel; and with their Voices, with the Levites, and the Sons of Aſaph, to praiſe the Lord. As ſoon as the foundation was laid, they were all in Song, and raiſed up in holy rejoycings; though ſome of the old men, who remembred the firſt Temple, wept when the foundation of this was laid. That Scripture (Zach. 4. 7.) ſpeaks of the ſame thing; where the Prophet, in the Spirit, fore-ſeeing the diſappointments of all the Enemies of the People of God, thus triumphs over them by Faith; Who art thou, O great Mountain, before Zerubbabel? Thou ſhalt become a Plain; he ſhall bring forth the Head-ſtone thereof with ſhouting. That is, the building of Hieruſalem, or the reſtoring of the Temple ſhall be brought to perfection; and then they ſhall cry, Grace, grace, unto it.

Now in alluſion to the practice both of men in common, and of the people of God in ſpecial, at the raiſing of great Structures; the Lord tells us here, that when he laid the foundations of the Earth, and when he faſtened the Corner-ſtone thereof, there was a Triumph made: Then the Morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy. Thus we have the ſtate of this verſe, either taking it for another inſtance of the Power of God in Creating the Stars, and the Angels; or elſe ſubjoyning it as an acclamation to the former inſtance of the Power of God; the Stars and Angels rejoycing at the laying of the foundations of the Earth. And the general reaſon why the Lord brings in the Stars, and the Sons of God rejoycing at the laying the foundations of the Earth, and finiſhing that work, we may conceive to be this; that the Lord would thereby convince Job of his murmuring and complaining, or of the unquietneſs of his ſpirit under the works of his Providence. As if he had ſaid, The Stars, and all the Sons of God rejoyced at the founding of the Earth, extolling the work, and congratulating the appearances of my Power and Glory in it. Now, who art thou, that when I have put forth my Power and Wiſdom in this work of my Providence towards thee, thou ſhouldſt complain, and find fault with what I have done, inſtead of reſting and rejoycing in it! Surely, O Job, thou thinkeſt my works of Providence are imperfect, though my work of Creation was not; but conſider, was the Creation in the very firſt part of it ſuch as cauſed all the Sons of God to rejoyce, and wilt thou, who ſayeſt thou art a Son of God, ſit unſatisfied with any of my works? Thus the Lord handles Job, and from that teſtimony which the Stars and his Sons gave of the Works of Creation, reproves him for his unquietneſs under his Works of Providence.

Monetur Johus ut exemplo angelorum, Dei opera miretur & laudet, non ſugillet. Scult.

So much for the general ſtate of the words: Yet to clear them farther in general, before I come to the particulars, there are three veins of interpretation opened about them.

Firſt, Some interpret this whole Verſe concerning the Stars or the Heavenly Bodies; not only taking the firſt part of the verſe litterally for the Stars in Heaven; but by the Sons of God, in the latter part of the verſe, they underſtand the Stars in a figure; as I ſhall ſhew more fully, when I come to the opening of thoſe words. Thus they expound the whole verſe concerning the glory and praiſe which the Stars in Heaven gave to God, for the work of Creation at the laying of the foundations of the Earth.

A ſecond ſort of Interpreters expound the whole verſe of the Angels, and not of the Stars properly at all; they ſuppoſe the Morning-ſtars to be Angels in a Figure, and the Sons of God to be Angels in the Letter: and ſo expound the whole verſe of the Angels, as if the words were a deſcription only of that joy which the Angels of Heaven only expreſſed, when they ſaw God beginning the Work of Creation, or laying the foundations of the Earth.

Hieronymus. Gregorius. Beda.

The third ſort of Interpreters divide the ſenſe, expounding the firſt part of the verſe properly for the Stars, thoſe ſtuds of light, with which the Heavens are adorned, which (in their kind) are brought in ſinging at the Creation of the Earth; and by the Sons of God, in the latter part of the Verſe, they underſtand the Angels, thoſe ſpiritual ſubſtances, who are the Native Inhabitants of Heaven; they eſpecially are repreſented ſhouting for joy, when that work was begun.

I cannot adhere to the firſt ſort of Interpreters, giving all to the Stars, nor to the ſecond, giving all to the Angels (though that hath many learned Authors, who preſs it hard) but following the middle way, ſhall take the former part of this verſe, for the Stars of Heaven; and the latter, for the Angels in Heaven.

כוכבי בקר

When the Morning-ſtars ſang together.

There are ſingle Stars, and Stars (as I may ſay) in a combination, commonly called a Conſtellation. There is an Evening-ſtar, and a Morning-ſtar (which yet are but one) called by the Greeks φωσφόρος, and by the Latines Lucifer, The Light-bringer; becauſe that Star appears very bright immediately before day-break, or before the Sun riſeth; and the ſame Star which uſhered or led in the Sun in the Morning, comes behind the Sun in the Evening, and is then called Heſperus, The Evening-ſtar.

Sunt ſtellæ quædam ſingulares, quæ non aliis admiſtæ, ſolæ feruntur. Sydera vero quæ in aliquod ſignum ſtellarum plurium compoſita feruntur. Macrob. l. 1. c. 14.

Here the Lord ſpeaks in the plural number of the Morning-

Matutinas nominat meo judicio, quod ſub auroram magis ſplendere videntur. Merc. Sydera ſummo mundi mane incentia, meque ſuo formoſo ſplendore laudantia.

ing-ſtars, not in the ſingular, of a Morning-ſtar. And the Lord calls them Morning-ſtars (ſay ſome) becauſe the Stars appear more clearly, and ſhine moſt brightly, near the approach of the morning, or break of the day.

Secondly, Others conceive them ſo called, becauſe they were created or formed in the very Morning of the World; they were early made. For though (as I ſhall touch afterward) as to their perfection, the Stars were made the fourth day; yet their Creation is comprehended in the work of the firſt day, under thoſe general words (Gen. 1. 1.) In the beginning God created the Heavens; and the Earth; the Heavens contained all the Stars in their materiality, though not yet formally produced; for the Stars being but the thicker part of the Heavenly Orb, when the Heavens were made, the Stars were alſo made: and may therefore be called Morning-ſtars, as being made in the Morning of the World, early made.

Qui mane aliquod aggrediantur opus Matutini dicuntur. Nec minus Æneas ſe matutinus agebat. Virg. l. 8. Idem eſt matutina aſtra laudant, atque mane laudant. Sanct.

Thirdly, They may be called Morning-ſtars, becauſe they (according to their manner) expreſt their joy early or betimes in the Morning of the World, or as ſoon as the Lord had laid the foundations of the Earth. Thoſe things which are done early, are done in the Morning; and they who do things in the Morning, have the denomination of the Morning upon them. The Poet anciently ſaid Æneas was (Matutinus) a Morning-man, becauſe he was early at his work; ſo theſe may be called Morning-ſtars, becauſe they were early at work, ſinging the praiſe of God. Thus the reaſon why the Wolf hath this Epithete, An Evening Wolf, is becauſe he doth his work, he comes forth for his prey in the evening (Hab. 1. 8. Zeph. 3. 3.) In the former Prophet, the Chaldean Horſe men are compared to Evening Wolves, for fierceneſs; and in the latter, the Judges of Iſrael are ſet under the ſame compariſon, for blood-ſucking cruelty. And as thus, upon different accounts, ſome are called Morning-men, others Evening-men; ſo 'tis upon no good account, that any are called Night-men, though the general reaſon of it be the ſame with the former, becauſe they do their bad work, or works of darkneſs, under the ſhadow and favour of the Night. The Thief, the Murderer, the Adulterer, are Night-men, all theſe are wont to do their work in the Night (Job 24. 13, 14, 15, 16.) Thus there are men of the Night, men of the Evening, and men of the Morning, or Morning-men. In this ſenſe the Stars may be called Morning-ſtars, becauſe they were ſo early at that beſt work, the praiſes of God. When the Morning-ſtars

ברן Gerundium eſt à רנן quod inter alia canere ſignificat, unde רנה cantus. Druſ.

Sang together.] Singing is an act of the voice; and as there is a natural ſinging (that of Birds) ſo an artificial. But how could Stars ſing, either artificially, ſeeing they have no Reaſon; or naturally, ſeeing they have not ſo much as a life of Senſe?

I anſwer, 'Tis frequent in Scripture to attribute acts of life to liveleſs Creatures, and acts of reaſon to thoſe things which have no ſenſe. The Earth is ſomewhere ſaid to mourn (Iſa. 33. 9.) The Trees of the Forreſt, as alſo the Hills and the Valleys are ſaid to rejoyce, and ſing for joy (Pſal. 65. 12, 13.) And in the ſame ſenſe the Stars are here repreſented ſinging; and in what ſenſe they may be ſaid to ſing, will be further ſhewed afterwards: Nor did they only ſing, but they ſang

Simul unico concentu, unico conſenſu.

Together.] There was a kind of Concord and Harmony in their ſinging; they ſang, as I may ſay, with one conſent, or in Conſort. Some tranſlate, They ſang alone; That is, when there were no other Creatures to joyn with them, yet as ſoon as they were in being, they ſang alone. The word ſometimes ſignifies only, as well as together (Chap. 34. 29. Ezra 4. 3.) They did not ſing every one of them alone, but they all ſang alone without any other Creatures to joyn with them. Thus they ſang both alone, and together.

Hence Note, Firſt, Singing is an act of Divine Worſhip and praiſe.

They ſang to the glory of God.

Note, Secondly; Singing is an expreſſion of joy.

Is any one merry, ſaith the Apoſtle (Jam. 5. 13.) let him ſing. Though there are mournful Songs, and ſome ſing in the very heavineſs of their Souls, yet properly, ſinging imports rejoycing. When Chriſt told his Church (Cant. 2. 12.) The time of the ſinging of Birds is come; his meaning was, rejoycing time is come, ſorrow and mourning are fled away.

Thirdly, In that ſinging is attributed to the Stars,

Note; Liveleſs Creatures rejoyce and ſet forth the praiſes of God, as they are able.

David ſaith, All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord (Pſal. 145. 10.) All thy works, that is, the very loweſt and leaſt of thy works, even the Clods of the Earth, ſhall praiſe thee; how much more the Stars of Heaven! We find all the Creatures called to ſing the praiſe of the Lord quite through the 148th Pſalm; Praiſe him Sun and Moon, praiſe him all ye Stars of light: There's the ſpecial inſtance of the Text. The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy-work (Pſal. 19. 1.) There is a kind of dutiful conſpiration among all Creatures, even among the Inanimate Creatures, in their places to praiſe God. And if you ask how they praiſe God? or how they ſing? I anſwer in general, after their manner, as they are able, or as is ſuitable to their condition. The Stars ſing not formally (and yet ſome ſay, there is a harmony in the motions of the Heavens; which being ſo conſtant, concordant, and uniform, hath a kind of Muſick in it) but though they cannot praiſe God formally; yet,

More ſuo.

In cœleſtibus corporibus amplior occurrit Dei collaudandi materia; ideo & illis cantus ſeu lata proclamatio ſeu ovatio figurate tribuitur. Merc.

Firſt, They do it Materially: That is, they are that matter for which God is to be praiſed, they being ſuch excellent and noble Creatures. The work praiſeth the Workman. That which is well done, commends the Doer of it, though all tongues be ſilent. In this ſenſe, the Stars ſing the praiſe of God: They ſing the praiſe of God, as they are the objects of his praiſe; or, as they provoke Men and Angels to praiſe God for making them.

Secondly, They praiſe God vertually, or equivalently, they ſhew how praiſe-worthy God is.

Thirdly, When we ſay the Stars praiſe God, it intimates, there is ſo much excellency in the Works of God, that if the Stars could ſpeak, they would declare and ſhew forth his praiſe. When the Diſciples of Chriſt rejoyced, and praiſed God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works which they had ſeen; ſaying, Bleſſed be the King that cometh in the Name of the Lord, peace in Heaven, and glory in the Higheſt (Luke 19. 37, 38.) The envious Phariſees did not like the Muſick, and therefore ſaid to him from among the multitude, Maſter, rebuke thy Diſciples (verſ. 39.) To theſe moroſe Maſters, Chriſt anſwered (verſ. 40.) I tell you, that if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out. As if he had ſaid, you labour in vain to ſuppreſs or hinder the teſtimony given me by my Diſciples; for if they ſhould be ſilent, the ſtones would cry ſhame on them for neglecting their duty; and God would rather cauſe ſenſleſs Creatures to proclaim his praiſe, in giving me an Honourable Teſtimony, than I ſhould want it. Now as there was ſuch a worth in the Work of Redemption, and in all the works of the Redeemer, while here on Earth, that the ſtones would have ſhewed forth his praiſe, if men had not: So there is ſuch a worth in that work of God, the Creation of the Earth, that rather than God ſhould not have the glory of it, the Stars would have done it by breaking out into joyful ſinging.

Laſtly, As Birds praiſe God by their ſinging, ſo Stars may be ſaid to ſing the high praiſes of God by their ſhining, by their brightneſs, by their motion, by their influence; for all which God is to be praiſed and glorified.

And hence we may infer, if not only irrational, but inanimate Creatures ſing the praiſes of God, at leaſt, by giving occaſion of his praiſe; then how much more ſhould men ſet forth his praiſe, who are not only living, but reaſonable Creatures! And if Creatures without life and reaſon ſhould provoke mankind in general, as having life and reaſon to praiſe God; how much more ſhould godly men be provoked by them to ſing his praiſe, they having not only life, which Stars have not; and reaſon, which Birds and Beaſts have not; but Grace, which the moſt of men have not! Among viſible Creatures, men have moſt reaſon (becauſe they have reaſon) to praiſe God, and among men, godly men have moſt reaſon to praiſe God, becauſe they have Grace. And therefore as ſoon as ever David had ſaid, All thy works ſhall praiſe thee, O Lord (Pſal. 145. 10, 11.) he adds in the next words, And thy Saints ſhall bleſs thee; they ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy Kingdom, and talk of thy Power. As if he had ſaid, As all thy works, O Lord, praiſe thee, ſo Saints (who are the choiceſt pieces of thy Workmanſhip) have cauſe to do it, more than, and above all; they cannot but be ſpeaking and talking of thy Kingdom and Power, which are very glorious. Upon which account, the tongue of man, eſpecially the tongue of a godly man, is called his glory; I will ſing and give praiſe (ſaid David, Pſal. 108. 1.) even with my glory. What is that? his tongue, the chief bodily inſtrument of divine praiſes. The Stars in their courſes once fought againſt the Enemies of God (Judg. 5. 20.) and they always in their places ſing the praiſes of God: Let it not be ſaid that Saints are ſilent.

So much of theſe words, as the Stars are taken properly,

There are ſome (as I ſaid before) who take theſe Stars metaphorically or figuratively for the Angels, and then their ſinging is proper; and there are two reaſons given, why by the Stars, in this place, we ſhould underſtand the Angels.

Firſt, If we conſider the truth or courſe of the Hiſtory, becauſe the Earth being created the firſt day, the Stars were not in being till the fourth day; unleſs we comprehend them (as was ſaid before, as to their matter and reality) under thoſe words of Moſes, In the beginning God created the Heaven, and the Earth: but as to their appearance and formality, ſo they were not till the fourth day; and if ſo, how could they ſing the praiſes of God at the laying of the foundations of the Earth? A ſecond reaſon is given from this Chapter, becauſe God ſpeaks of the Stars afterwards (verſ. 31, 32.) Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades (the ſeven Stars ſo called) or looſe the bands of Orion, &c. Here the Lord treats with Job about the Stars in proper ſenſe; therefore probably the Morning-ſtars here mentioned, are not to be taken properly, but tropically, for the Angels.

And the Angels may very well be called Stars, or Morning-ſtars, by a Metaphor, becauſe of their ſpiritual beauty and excellency, in which they out-ſhine all the Morning-ſtars, yea that ſpecial Morning-ſtar, commonly known by the name of Lucifer, or Light-bringer. Though the Angels have not a viſible bodily beauty, yet they have a better beauty than any body. 'Tis ſaid of Stephen (Acts 6. 15.) when he ſtood before the Council, They beheld his face as it had been the face of an Angel. Angels (being Spirits) have no viſible faces; but becauſe Angels are, in their nature and qualities, beautiful Creatures, therefore Stephen having an extraordinary beauty ſtampt upon him, is ſaid to have the face of an Angel. And as beautiful perſons may be ſaid to look like, or reſemble Angels; ſo Angels may be ſaid to look like, or reſemble Stars. The Church for the luſtre of her Graces, is ſaid, to look forth as the Morning, fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun (Cant. 6. 10.) and ſo may the Angels as the Stars. The Apoſtle ſaith of thoſe falſe Apoſtles (who would needs be accounted Stars (faithful Miniſters of Chriſt) in the Firmament of the Church) they are transformed into Angels of light (2 Cor. 11. 14.) that is, they would appear like Angels of light. The holy Angels are Angels of light. The ſeven Stars are the ſeven Angels, ſaith Chriſt, expounding the Viſion to John (Revel. 1. 20.) This ſhews that Angels and Stars have a very great ſimilitude; ſo that, as there in one ſenſe, ſo here in another, the Stars may ſignifie the Angels. And the Angels may very well be called Morning-ſtars, becauſe they were the firſt of living Creatures, their Creation being ſuppoſed to be (though Moſes expreſſeth nothing of it) comprehended within that of the Heavens: In the beginning God created the Heaven, and the Earth, the Heaven, and the heavenly Inhabitants; the Angels. The evil Angel, the Devil, that fallen Angel, is alſo called a Morning-ſtar. That Title Lucifer, Son of the Morning, which the Prophet beſtows on the Aſſyrian (Iſa 14. 12.) for his Pomp and Pride, properly belongs to the Devil, the Arch-Devil, a fallen Angel, or the Primier of the fallen Angels: yea, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is called the Day-ſtar (2 Pet. 1. 19.) and under another far different expreſſion) the Morning-ſtar (Rev. 2. 28.) and he ſaith of himſelf (Rev. 22. 19.) I am the bright and Morning-ſtar. Thus Chriſt, who is the Angel of the Covenant, the Lord of Angels, the Creator of Angels, is called the Morning-ſtar. All theſe Scriptures bear teſtimony that it is not ſtrange to expound Stars by Angels.

ἀστέρα τὸν πρωϊνόν.
ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ λαμπρὸς ϗ ὀρθρινός.

And therefore, when the Lord ſaith, The Stars ſang together, according to this interpretation (upon which yet I ſhall not inſiſt, but leave the Reader to his own Opinion) it is but the ſame with that which follows in the cloſe of the verſe, to which I now proceed.

And all the Sons of God ſhouted for joy.

The Chaldee Paraphraſe is expreſs, that the Sons of God are the Angels, rendring, The Armies of Angels ſhouted for joy. And the Septuagint are as clear for it, ſaying, When all my Angels ſung for joy; both leave out our Tranſlation, the Sons of God, and put that which is the Expoſition into the Text, the Angels of God. That the Angels are called Sons of God, hath been ſhewed before (Chap. 1. 6.) There was a day when the Sons of God came together (that is, the Angels) and Satan (the evil Angel) came alſo among them. The Devil, or evil ſpirit, thruſt himſelf into the aſſembly of the good Spirits, or holy Angels, who are the Sons of God.

Acies Angelorum. Chald.
Angeli mei. Sept.

If any ask how the Angels are the Sons of God? I anſwer,

Firſt, Negatively, They are not the Sons of God, as Jeſus Chriſt is. Angels became the Sons of God in time; Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God from Eternity. The Apoſtle (Heb. 1. 5.) puts the queſtion, To which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? The Angels are the created Sons of God; Jeſus Chriſt only is his only begotten Son. Angels are the Sons of God by meer grace and favour; the Lord accounting them as Sons, accepting them as Sons, uſing and reſpecting them as Sons, as he doth alſo all true Believers, who likewiſe are the Sons of God. But Jeſus Chriſt alone is the Son of God by Nature, or by an Eternal Generation, and was ſo declared in the fulneſs of time, both by his Incarnation and Reſurrection; which many conceive to be the Apoſtles intendment, in thoſe words, This day have I begotten thee; taken out of the ſecond Pſalm, and quoted (Acts 13. 33.) as alſo (Heb. 1. 5.)

Secondly, In the Negative, The Angels are not the Sons of God by Regeneration, nor by Adoption. Thus Believers only are the Sons of God (John 1.12.) To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Sons of God, even to as many as believed on his Name. Believers are the Sons of God, regenerated and adopted; Angels are not ſo. The holy Angels needed not Regeneration; for as they were created holy, ſo they fell not from that holineſs in which they were created: and therefore Chriſt is not to them a Redeemer for their reſtauration, but only a Head for their confirmation and eſtabliſhment (Col. 2. 10.) As for the Angels which fell, they are reſerved in Chains of Darkneſs to the Judgment of the Great Day; they have no ſhare in Redemption, their fall is irrecoverable. Thus we ſee how the Angels are not the Sons of God. But how then are they the Sons of God?

I anſwer affirmatively, The Angels may be called the Sons of God in a ſixfold ſenſe.

Firſt, As Adam is called the Son of God (Luke 3. 18.) in his Primary Conſtitution, or by Creation; ſo Angels are the Sons of God, as they are his Creatures.

Secondly, Angels are called the Sons of God, becauſe of Gods great affection to them, as well as his Creation of them, Such as we much affect, and love intrinſically, we are ready to call our Children, Sons or Daughters: The Lord bears abundance of love to the Angels, therefore he calls them his Sons.

Thirdly, If we conſider their Place or Station: The Angels wait upon God, they are near to him, they ſtand about his Throne as Sons, to receive his Bleſſing and Commands.

There are three things ſpecially conſiderable in the Angels:

Firſt, Their Nature, ſo they are Spirits, or ſpiritual ſubſtances.

Secondly, Their Offices, ſo they are the Meſſengers and Miniſters of God.

Thirdly, Their Dignity or nearneſs to God, ſo they are his Sons. Chriſt the only begotten Son, is in the boſom of the Father, (John 1. 18.) that is, he is neareſt him, and hath moſt intimate communion with him: The Angels are ſo near to God (that though they are not in his boſom, yet) they always behold his face (Matth. 18. 10.) that is, ſtand in his preſence, as being in high favour with him; and are therefore in that reſpect called his Sons.

Fourthly, Angels may be called the Sons of God, becauſe of that conſtant uniform obediential frame that is in them towards God. A ſon honoureth his father (Mal. 1. 6.) It ſhould be the diſpoſition, and in the heart of every Son to do ſo. And ſeeing it is not only fully the diſpoſition of Angels, and in their hearts to do ſo, but they have always actually done ſo, (the holy Angels may truly ſay unto God, as the Elder Brother is brought in ſaying to his Father (Luke 15. 29) Loe, theſe many years, even ever ſince the Creation, we do ſerve thee; neither have we tranſgreſt at any time thy Commandment, either by leaving undone what thou haſt bidden us do, or by doing what thou haſt forbidden us) therefore Angels having the genuine ſpirit of Sons towards God, may in that regard alſo be ſtiled the Sons of God.

Fifthly, They may be called the Sons of God, becauſe of their Eſſential likeneſs to God, or their likeneſs to him in Eſſence. God is a Spirit, he is Incorporeal; the Angels alſo are Incorporeal, they are Spirits; though the difference between God and Angels be as great as can be conceived, yea, unconceivable; God being the Creating Spirit, and they but created ſpirits; God being an Infinite Spirit, and they but finite Spirits; yet the Angels bear a reſemblance to God in their Eſſence, as well as in their Qualifications, and may upon that ground likewiſe be called the Sons of God.

Sixthly, Angels are called the Sons of God, becauſe they imitate him. Do good to them that hate you (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 5. 44.) that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven: that is, imitate God, carry it towards evil men, towards men that are evil to you, or do you evil, as God doth; and this will be both an Evidence that you are the Sons of God, and God will honour you with the Title of his Sons. The Angels imitate God in mercy, and love, and compaſſion, as alſo in their good works, their ways being all holy, juſt, and good, pure and righteous. Further, they ſhew much kindneſs and tenderneſs to the children of men; they doubtleſs, are patient towards the froward, and do good offices (as they are called and deputed) to thoſe who deſerve little good. Now being like God by imitation, they may be called the Sons of God. Thus we have ſome account in theſe particulars, why, or how the Angels are called the Sons of God. But what did theſe Sons of God, the Angels, when Spectators of the Worlds Creation? The Text tells us,

Signanter aſtris tanquam inferioribus laudem, Angelis tanquam ſuperioribus attribuit Jubilationem. Aquin. חרועה Eſt Ἀλαλαγμὸς ſignificatur approbatio illius operis cum gaudio.

They ſhouted for joy.] Some put a difference between that which is attributed to the Stars (taking the Stars properly) and the Angels; as if here it were ſpoken (ſignanter) by way of excellency; the Stars did ſing, but the Angels ſhouted. The word rendred to ſhout for joy, ſignifies in general to make any great or loud cry, ſometimes for ſorrow or conſternation of mind: When the Army of the Midianites, amazed with Gideons ſtratagem of the Pitchers and Lamps, ran and fled, 'tis ſaid they cryed, and their cry is expreſſed by this word (Judges 7. 21.) When an Army runs, they make only a confuſed noiſe or ſhout, for fear and ſorrow: But moſtly, and moſt properly, the word ſignifies to ſhout for joy, and in a way of triumph, as when an Army is victorious, and ready to divide the ſpoil; or as in the time of Harveſt or Vintage, when the Fruits and good things of the Earth are gathered in: and ſuch is the ſhouting here intended. The Angels, the Sons of God, did not only ſing as the Stars, when the foundations of the Earth were laid; but they ſhouted for joy. It is but one word in the Hebrew, which we render, ſhouted for joy. The Angels did not only approve, but applaud the Works of God.

Further, Conſider the generality of this Divine Plaudite, or Applauſe, All the Sons of God ſhouted for joy. As before the Lord ſaith, The ſtars ſang together; ſo here, All the Sons of God; not one of them was left out, every one bare a part in this triumph; they all with one accord, with one heart, and one voice, joyned in it: All the Sons of God (there was not one diſſenting voice) ſhouted for joy. Hence

Firſt, I might refute their Opinion who denied Angels and Spirits, as the Sadduces did (Acts 23. 8.) but I ſhall not ſtay upon that.

Further, It being ſaid, All the Sons of God ſhouted for joy,

Note; The Sons of God, the holy Angels, are of one mind.

It is a moſt bleſſed ſight, and hearing, when all the Sons of God joyn in one thing. It was not a part of the Sons of God, it was not here one, and there another, but all of them. Behold (ſaith David, Pſal. 133. 1.) how good and how pleaſant a thing it is, for Brethren to dwell together in unity! The Angels, who are Brethren, the Sons of one Father, did all joyn together in this duty. The Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning the work of the Miniſtry, (2 Cor. 6. 1.) We as workers together, thoſe words [with him] are put in by the Tranſlators, and the ſupply is to a very good ſenſe: We as workers together with him, that is, with God; for he is pleaſed to uſe his Miniſters as Workers together with himſelf. Yet it may well be underſtood concerning the Miniſters of the Goſpel, only joyning in this one thing, that is, with one voice, or one cry, beſeeching ſinners to be reconciled unto God (Chap. 5. 20.) and that, as it followeth in the cloſe of this firſt Verſe (Chap. 6.) They receive not the Grace of God in vain. All Miniſters ſhould be workers together: As all the Angels were ſingers together, and ſhouters together; ſo the Miniſters of Chriſt ſhould be workers together. That which is the work of one, is the work of them all, and they ſhould all joyn in it. And how ſad is it, to ſee thoſe who call themſelves, and would be accounted the Sons of God, divided in their work and way! when one rejoyceth in that which to another is cauſe of mourning; when one mans meat is (as we ſpeak proverbially) another mans poyſon; or one mans comfort, another mans grief? How many are there who cannot joyn in rejoycing and thankſgiving for works of God (I mean Providential works) as eminent in their kind as the Creation work, or the laying of the foundations of the Earth? That will be a bleſſed day, when we ſhall ſee the full effect of that Propheſie (Zeph. 3. 9.) Then will I (ſaith the Lord) turn to the people a pure (Lip or) Language, that they may all call upon the Name of the Lord, with one conſent or ſhoulder. Here's a promiſe of all as one, and of all with one conſent, ſhoulder, inward, outward man, aſſociated in prayer, or calling upon the Name of the Lord; which by a Synecdoche, includes all the parts, and takes in the whole compaſs of the worſhip of God. The accompliſhment of this Propheſie, was the ſcope of Apoſtolical Prayer (Rom. 15. 5, 6.) Now the God of patience and conſolation, grant you to be like minded one towards another; according to, or (as the Margin hath it) after the example of Chriſt Jeſus; that ye may with one mind, and with one mouth, glorifie God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. All the Sons of God in the Text were of one mind, and had (as it were) but one mouth, the joy of one was the joy of them all. All the Sons of God on Earth have this principle in them, to rejoyce in God, and to magnifie God for his mercy, only all have not the ſame light: They that have not an habitual principle in them, to praiſe God in and for his works, are not of his Family; they are not worthy to be reckoned Sons of God, who have not a readineſs, or preſent diſpoſition in them, to joyn with all, or with any of his true Sons, in ſhouting for joy at his gracious appearances in his mighty works of mercy; as alſo in humbling themſelves together with them, at the terrible appearances of his dreadful works of Judgment, or at the uſual Prognoſticks or Fore runners of them.

Again, Taking the Stars for the Angels, they were Morning-ſtars; the Angels ſang and ſhouted for joy, in the Morning.

Hence, obſerve; The very firſt appearances of the Power and Wiſdom of God in his works, ſhould put us upon the work of praiſe and rejoycing.

We ſay truly, better late than never; but 'tis beſt to be early, and with the firſt, in a good work. David did not only awake early, or in the morning, to praiſe God; but as the Hebrew may be rendred, He awakened the morning (Pſal. 57. 8.) David was a morning-man in praiſing of God; ſo were the Angels. 'Tis healthful both for ſoul and body to be morning-men, to be early, both in praiſing God, and praying to him. God requires, and he infinitely deſerves the firſt fruits of our time, our youth, which is the morning of our life, the firſt fruits of our age ſhould be dedicated to God (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) and ſo ſhould the morning, which is the youth (if I may ſo ſpeak) of every day. Our firſt thoughts ſhould be of God, and with God; as ſoon as we awake, we ſhould ſet open the door of our hearts, by Meditation, to let God in, and knock open the doors of Heaven by Prayer and Supplication to get in to God. It ſhould not be unlamented, that the courſe of moſt men runs ſo contrary to this; their ſenſes are no ſooner looſed from the bands of ſleep, but they let looſe their thoughts, and ſet the doors of their ſouls wide open to ſenſitive, ſometimes to wicked and ſenſual objects; and ſo ſhut out God, and matters of greateſt moment, to and about their Immortal Souls. How unworthy are ſuch of this bleſſed Relation, under which the Angels, thoſe early Praiſers of God, are here repreſented, Sons of God.

Thirdly, In that it is here ſaid, All the Sons of God ſhouted for joy; that is, all the Angels then created.

Obſerve; They who have joyned in ſome outward Worſhips of God, may yet fall off and Apoſtatize.

Here all the Angels of God joyned in this Thankſgiving at firſt, yet ſoon, very ſoon after, a great part of the Angels rebelled againſt God, and became Apoſtates; for preſently upon the Creation of Man, which was the ſixth day, there was a Devil, a Tempter, who overthrew Man; yet here we have all the Angels in a holy Quire. Hypocrites are forward to joyn in acts of praiſe, in acts of prayer, in acts of hearing, who yet in time of temptation fall away, and ſo fall into as bad a condition as the fallen Angels; of whom the Apoſtle Jude ſaith (verſ. 6.) that not having kept their firſt eſtate (or principality) but leaving their own habitation (appointed them of God) he hath reſerved them in Everlaſting Chains (both of Providence and Juſtice) under darkneſs, unto the Judgment of the Great Day.

Fourthly, obſerve; The great buſineſs of Angels, and that which they are moſt bent to, is to praiſe God (Pſal. 103. 20. Pſal. 148. 2. Iſa. 6. 3.)

And as at the Birth of the World the Angels ſhouted for joy, ſo at the Birth of Jeſus Chriſt (who was the Author of the ſecond Creation, as well as of the firſt) the Angels ſhouted for joy: ſuddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the Heavenly Hoſt praiſing God (Luke 2. 13.) To praiſe God is heavenly work, 'tis Angelical work, the moſt proper work of the Sons of God. We ſhall not always have need of praying, but we ſhall always have cauſe to be praiſing, and ſhouting for joy: This ſhout will remain to all Eternity. Praiſe is the moſt ſpiritual work, and requires the moſt ſpiritual frame of heart; and therefore the chief of that work is reſerved to an Eſtate, wherein not only our ſouls, but our bodies too, ſhall be altogether ſpiritual.

Fifthly, Note; The Work of Creation ſhould continually call up our thoughts to the praiſe of God, to ſing and ſhout his praiſes.

Did the Stars (take them properly) and did the Sons of God (the Angels) rejoyce when the work firſt began? and is not the work to be rejoyced in now 'tis finiſhed? Though ſin hath ſullied the work, yet the glory of God is ſtill tranſparent in it; the Power, Goodneſs, and Wiſdom of God are glorioſly ſeen in the things that are made (Rom. 1. 20.) not only were they ſeen, but they are ſeen to this day. The Creatures are ſtill a Glaſs wherein we may behold the inviſible things of God, even his Eternal Power and God-head; ſo that they who glorifie him not in and for thoſe Works, will be found and left without excuſe: They are a Book, a Volum, conſiſting of as many leaves and lines as there are diſtinct ſorts of Creatures, wherein we may read the Great God plainly deſcribed to us: And if ſo, let us remember our fault this day. Is it not our ſin and ſhame, that we are ſo little in admiring God for this work, which ſet all the Angels in Heaven a ſinging, a ſhouting, a wondring? There are ſeveral things in the Works of Creation, which well conſidered, will ſoon provoke us to ſinging, and to ſhouting. Firſt, The multitude of Creatures. Secondly, The various kinds of Creatures. Thirdly, The Beauty and Excellency that is in the Creatures. Fourthly, The profit and the uſefulneſs of the Creatures. Theſe laid together, ſhould draw out our praiſes, and cauſe us to exalt the Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God manifeſted in and by his Creatures.

Laſtly, Conſider what was it that cauſed the Angels to ſhout for joy, when they ſaw this work of God begun? Surely it was the appearance or manifeſtation of God, ſhining brightly in the Work of Creation.

Hence, obſerve; The diſcoveries of the Power, Wiſdom, and Goodneſs of God, ſhould ſtir up, and ingage every man, and cannot but effectually ſtir up and ingage thoſe who are wiſe and good, to rejoyce in God.

Somewhat of God is ſtamped, or there are certain lines of his tranſcendent Perfections drawn upon every Creature; here a line of Wiſdom, and there a line of Power; here a line of Goodneſs, and there a line of Mercy; the ſight of theſe ſhould cauſe us to ſhout for joy; eſpecially, that this God, the Creator of the ends of the Earth, is our God for ever and ever, and will be our Guide even unto death. How many lines have we of God in the World, which we have not read, much leſs ſtudied and commented upon! In how many things is God viſible, and yet we ſee him not, nor acknowledge him as we ought? Take only theſe two things, by way of Inference, from the whole.

Firſt, To be of a praiſing, of a rejoycing ſpirit, is to be of an excellent ſpirit, of an Angelical ſpirit. Let us imitate the Angels in praiſing God. The Angels are called the Sons of God, becauſe they imitate him; let us imitate the Angels in praiſing God, ſo ſhall we approve our ſelves the Sons of God too.

Secondly, Conſider, The Angels rejoyced at the laying of the foundations of the Earth. The Earth was made for Man; Heaven was the Angels Habitation, they were well provided for, if there had never been an Earth, they had been provided for; yet they ſhouted for joy, when God laid the foundations of the Earth for the uſe of Man and Beaſt.

Hence take this Inference; It ſhews a good ſpirit, to rejoyce at the good of others, or to be pleaſed with that which is beneficial to others, though it be no benefit to us.

This argues an excellent ſpirit, an Angelical ſpirit. Some if they are well houſed and provided for, care not whether others are houſed and provided for or no; nor can they rejoyce at the good of others, but as their own good is concern'd. In Glory we ſhall be like to the Angels, our very bodies ſhall be like to the Angels, living without food, without ſleep, without marriage; in Heaven we ſhall neither marry, nor be given in marriage; but ſhall be like the Angels. O let us ſtrive to be like the Angels in our minds now, as we hope to have our bodies like the Angels hereafter, even cloathed (as the School-men call them) with Angelical Endowments. Unleſs our ſpirits are like the Angels here, unleſs we have hearts like the hearts of Angels in this World, we ſhall never have bodies like them hereafter, or in the World to come.

VERS. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Or who ſhut up the Sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had iſſued out of the Womb?

When I made the Cloud the Garment thereof, and thick darkneſs a Swadling-band for it.

And brake up for it my decreed Place, and ſet Bars and Doors:

And ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further; and here ſhall thy proud Waves be ſtayed.

THe Lord having queſtioned Job about the Fabrick of the Earth, and ſhewed the Triumph and Acclamations of Angels at it, in the former Context: He next leads him to the Waters, or carrieth him to the Sea, there to conſider his works of wonder. As Moſes in the beginning of Geneſis having ſummarily, and in general, ſpoken of the Creation of Heaven and Earth, deſcendeth to particulars; ſo here we have the Lord paſſing from one part of the Creation to another; from the Creation of the Earth, to that other great part of the Creation, the waters, or the Sea. Verſ. 8. Who ſhut up the Sea with doors? &c.

In theſe words, we have

Firſt, The Creation of the Sea.

Secondly, Its Conſtitution: both ſet forth by moſt Elegant Metaphors.

The Creation or Production of the Sea, is ſhadowed by alluſion to an Infant breaking forth out of the Womb (Verſ. 8.)

The Conſtitution or ſettlement of the Sea, is carried on in ſuitable Metaphors to the end of the eleventh Verſe.

Verſ. 8. Or who hath ſhut up the Sea with doors, when it brake forth? &c.

We have here,

Firſt, The Birth or Nativity of the Sea.

Secondly, What God did with the Sea, when it was born, and iſſued out of the Womb: Then God ſhut it in with doors, and prepared Garments and Swadling-bands for it; then he reſtrained the rage, force, and fury of it, and held it as his Priſoner or Captive in bonds. As ſoon as an Infant is born, it is bound up and ſwadled; and as ſoon as the Sea (as I may ſay) was born or come into the world, God took order with it; and to keep it in order, he provided doors to ſhut it in, and garments to bind it up with.

What the Scripture ſpeaks of Gods coercing the Sea, may be reduced to two Heads:

Firſt, To that reſtraint which he laid upon the Sea, preſently upon its Creation, ſome ſay the firſt, others the third day of the Creation; according to that (Gen. 1. 9.) God ſaid, Let the waters under the Heaven be gathered together into one place, and let the dry Land appear; and it was ſo. Thus the Lord reduced it to a certain place.

Secondly, To that reſtraint which God laid upon it after this reducement, that it ſhould no more return to overflow the Earth. Both theſe Reſtraints or Laws put upon the Sea, are contained in this Context; the former of them in the eighth and ninth verſes: As ſoon as the Sea iſſued out of the Earth, God ſet up its doors, and made it Bands. The latter of theſe, the giving of a ſpecial Law, that when it was ſhut in, it ſhould no more break forth, but according to his appointment, we have in the tenth and eleventh verſes, where it is ſaid, I brake up for it my decreed place, and ſet bars and doors; and ſaid, hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further; and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed.

So then, here we have;

Firſt, Bounds and limits aſſigned by God to that vaſt and unruly Element, the Water, that the Earth might be habitable and uſeful both for Man and Beaſt. And,

Secondly, We have the Lord reſtraining all power or liberty (which naturally it would have had and taken) to violate or break thoſe bounds: For had not God given the waters of the Sea ſuch a ſpecial Command (though bounds had been aſſigned them) they would quickly have broken their bounds.

Theſe two Orders of God differ much, though not in the time when they were given out, yet in the nature of the thing; and both ſuppoſe the Sea in being, when theſe Orders were given out: For when it is ſaid (verſ. 8.) It brake forth, as if it iſſued out of the Womb; this implieth its Birth and Nativity: and when God ſaith, He ſhut it up with doors; this ſuppoſeth, that it not only had a being, but that it was violent and furious, and would have overflowed all, and regained as large a Territory as it poſſeſſed at firſt, when it iſſued out of the Womb of the Earth, even the face of the whole Earth, if the Lord had not bridled and reſtrained it.

Yet further, and more diſtinctly to open the words in their Order.

Verſ. 8. Or, Who ſhut up the Sea with doors?

This disjunctive Particle Or, ſucceeds thoſe disjunctives (verſ. 5, 6.) who did this? or, who did that? or, who a third thing, concerning the Earths formation? Here again, Or, Who ſhut up the Sea with doors? The Hebrew is only, Shut up the Sea with doors; the word who is repeated out of the fifth and ſixth verſes. The Lord by this query or queſtion put to Job, would then have him, and now us know, that it was himſelf alone that did it: It was the Lord who bridled the Sea, and ſhut it up with doors: As if he ſaid, Where waſt thou, O Job, when I did this great thing? As thou gaveſt no aſſiſtance towards the laying of the foundations of the Earth, and the faſtening of the Corner-ſtone thereof; ſo tell me what aſſiſtance didſt thou give me in bringing forth, and ſetling the vaſt Sea: Or at leaſt (if thou canſt) give me an account how theſe things were done, and how they continue as they were done by an Everlaſting Decree: who hath ſhut up the Sea with doors, was it I or thou, or any other Creature? Thus the Lord ſtill brings Job upon his knees by humbling queſtions, knowing that he was not able to take any of that honour to himſelf. He poor man had no more to do in this great work, than he had in the former; and therefore he ought to ſubmit to the works of God in providence, whatſoever he was pleaſed to do, ſeeing all the works of Creation were done by God alone, without his counſel or aſſiſtance.

Quis. Hæc vox rectè ἀπὸ κοινοῦ repetitur ex verſu 5. & 6. Druſ.

Who hath Shut up the Sea with doors?] here is a two-fold rendring of that word tranſlated Shut up; we take it from a root which ſignifies to hedge in, or compaſs about, as alſo to protect; becauſe thoſe things which are compaſſed about with ſtrong hedges, are under protection, and ſafe from danger. VVater being a fluid body, ſpreads it ſelf over all, the water cannot contain it ſelf in its own bounds (fluids cannot) but it muſt be bound, it muſt be ſhut in, or ſhut up. The Lord ſhut up the Sea, as the waters of a great River are ſhut up by Flood-gates, or as the waters upon which a Mill is built (ſome carry the alluſion to that) are pent for the ſervice of it, and are cauſed by Art to run gradually, or by inches, as the Maſter of that uſeful Engine gives direction. Thus the Lord ſhut up the Sea.

סכך Sæpe eſt protegere; aliqui legunt obſepſit vel circumſepſit, ac ſi eſſet à שך ſepio, cum ſit à סכן tego, obtego, operio. סרך autem per ſamech ſignificat ungere. Druſ.

The Sea is a great Convention or Aſſembly of waters, as Moſes ſpake (Gen. 1. 10.) The gathering together of waters, the Lord called Sea: The Sea is a Confluence, or meeting of waters. There may be a great water, yet that not the Sea; the confluence of all, or many waters together, that is Sea. The waters being thus gathered or aſſembled by the Lords Summons or Command, he hedged them in, or ſhut them up.

Secondly, Others render, Who anointed the doors of the Sea, when it brake forth, as if it had iſſued out of the Womb. They who give this Tranſlation, derive the word from a Root, which ſignifies to anoint. Some Interpreters inſiſt much upon this ſenſe of the word, and I find one who aſſerts it as the only ſenſe of it in this place; Who anointed the doors of the Sea, that is, the paſſages by which the Sea iſſued forth. And (ſaith he) the reaſon why other Learned Interpreters pitch upon that Tranſlation of ſhutting up the Sea with doors, is becauſe they knew not what to make of anointing the doors of the Sea, nor to what practice ſuch an expreſſion ſhould allude, that the doors of the Sea were anointed: whereas indeed that notion of the word bears the faireſt alluſion and proportion to the Metaphor of Child-bearing, begun in this, and carried on (as it were) profeſſedly in the next verſe, under which the Spirit of God is pleaſed to expreſs the coming forth, and original of the Sea: Now, ſaith my Author, it is a thing commonly known both to Phyſitians and Midwives, that thoſe parts of the body by which the Infant comes into the world, uſe to be anointed, for its more eaſie paſſage. Thus ſaith God to Job, Didſt thou anoint the doors of the Sea, when it brake forth, as if it had iſſued out of the Womb. It was my Midwifery, my wiſdom and skill, not thine, that brought the Sea into the world, and gave it an eaſie birth, or delivered the Earth of it without hard labour. This makes the ſenſe of the whole Context run more clearly than our reading of it. And ſo we have Sea-doors of two ſorts

Quis valvas maris inunxit. Godur.

Quærit Dominus à Jobo, quæ Lucina præfuerit parentis naturæ puerperio quando eſt enixa mare. Id.

ſorts in this Context: In this eighth Verſe, the doors of the Sea are the doors by which the Sea came forth; and in the tenth verſe, we have the doors by which the Sea is kept in; whereas according to our rendring, the doors in both places are interpreted as keeping the Sea in; and ſo there would be a mention of the ſame doors twice; which though it may be admitted, yet this latter ſeems to be the cleareſt, as taking the firſt doors for thoſe by which the Sea was let out, or had its birth; and the latter, for thoſe doors by which the Sea is kept within its bounds. Who ſhut up the Sea with doors,

גוח
Exivit cum impetu.

When it brake forth.] The word which we tranſlate to break forth, ſignifies in other places of Scripture, the breaking forth of a Child in the birth: David uſeth it (Pſal. 22. 9.) Thou art he that took me out of the Womb; there it is taken (as Grammarians ſpeak) tranſitively, here intranſitively, When it brake forth, noting a kind of rupture, or violence; as when Tamar was in travel (Gen. 38. 27, 28.) There were Twins in her Womb; and it came to paſs, when ſhe travelled, that the one put out his hand, and the Midwife took and bound upon his hand a Scarlet Thred, ſaying, this came out firſt; and it came to paſs, as he drew back his hand, that behold his Brother came forth; and ſhe ſaid, how haſt thou broken forth? this breach be upon thee; therefore his Name was called Pharez. Thus the Sea brake forth violently, as if it had iſſued

Ex occulto divinæ providentiæ. Aquin. Creavit Deus terram non inanem ſed gravidam aquis, quæ licet eodem temporis momento creata.

Out of the Womb.] What Womb? Some ſay of the Providence of God; ſay others, of the Decree or Counſel of God; for that is the Womb out of which all things proceed: A third ſaith, out of the Power and Omnipotence of God: All theſe ſayings are true, either of theſe is as the Womb out of which all things iſſue; but theſe, the Providence, the Decree and Counſel, the Power and Omnipotence of God, are the common Womb out of which all things iſſue; whereas here the Lord ſeems to ſpeak of ſome ſpecial Womb out of which the Sea iſſued: And therefore I rather adhere to that Interpretation which ſaith plainly, that the Womb out of which the Sea is ſaid to iſſue, was the Abyſs or Bowels of the Earth. The Sea brake forth out of the Bowels of the Earth, as out of a Womb. The Earth is the common Parent, the Parent of the Sea; the Sea was created in the Bowels of the Earth, or the Earth was created big with the waters of the Sea, as a Woman big with child; and ſhortly after the Lord cauſed the Earth, like a Woman with child, to travel and bring forth the Sea. So that the Lord doth here more diſtinctly open to us the manner of the Creation of the Sea, than in the firſt of Geneſis. It is true, the Element of Water hath its ſeat naturally above the Earth, it being the lighter Element; but as to the firſt Conception of it, this Scripture implies, that its place was within the Earth, and that it iſſued forth from the Earth. The Bowels of the Earth were the Womb in which the Sea was conceived, and out of which, by the Word of the Lord, it iſſued. The Waters were not at firſt created above the Earth (as ſome have affirmed) but they being created with the Earth, and conceived within the Earth, brake out of the Earth, and inveſted or covered it all over; and ſo continued in that condition till the third day, and then the Lord commanded them to retire into certain vaſt Channels, now called Sea, that ſo the dry Land might appear. Thus the Lord, when the Waters were iſſued forth, diſpoſed of them in their proper place. According to this Interpretation, we are to take theſe words of the time paſt; Who is he that ſhut up the Sea with doors, when it brake forth? that is, after it had broken forth, after it had iſſued out, Who was he that then ſhut it up with doors? This deſcription of the Nativity of the Sea, may be drawn out into theſe Concluſions:

Firſt, The Earth and Waters were created both together.

Secondly, The Waters were at firſt created within the Bowels of the Earth; for, ſaith the Text, They iſſued forth, they brake forth.

Thirdly, At the Command of God, the Waters were brought forth out of the Earth, as a Child out of the Mothers Womb (Pſal. 33. 7.) He gathereth the waters of the Sea together as an heap, he layeth up the deep in Store-houſes (Pſal. 104. verſ. 5, 9.) Bleſs the Lord, &c. who laid the foundations of the Earth, that it ſhould not be removed for ever; thou coveredſt it with the deep as with a garment; the Waters ſtood above the Mountains.

Fourthly, The Waters being thus brought forth, did at firſt cover the Earth, and ſo would have continued, if God had let them alone.

In the Method of Nature things lie thus:

Firſt, The Earth is loweſt, being the groſſeſt Element.

Secondly, The Water riſeth above the Earth, as being more pure than that.

Thirdly, The Air is above the Water, as being much more pure than the Water.

Fourthly, The fire gets above all, as being the thinneſt and pureſt of all the Elements; and therefore the Water iſſuing out of the Earth, would have continually covered the face of the Earth, if the Lord by his Power had not ordered it off, and ſhut it up with doors, when come off, according to our reading the words in this verſe, and according to the general reading of the tenth verſe; where the whole Earth being covered with water, the Lord brake up for it his decreed place, and there kept it faſt. Thus David (Pſal. 104. 7, 8.) ſpeaking of the waters above the Mountains, and overflowing all; preſently adds, At thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they haſted away; they go up by the Mountains, they go down by the Valleys, unto the place which thou haſt founded for them. There the Lord by David, as here by himſelf, ſets forth his mighty Power, in the diſpoſal of the waters to a certain place.

But if we take that other reading of this verſe, Who hath anointed the doors of the Sea? then by doors we are not to underſtand that which ſtops the Sea from overflowing the Earth, as in the tenth verſe; but for thoſe paſſages at which the waters brake out of the Earth, as an Infant from the Womb; which ſeems moſt diſtinct and clear.

And becauſe the Sea is ſo huge a Body, ſo great a part of the World, (we may, not unprofitably, I hope, before I paſs from this verſe) conſider a three-fold repreſentation of the Sea, or the Sea as a Glaſs ſhewing us three things.

Firſt, The Sea hath in it a repreſentation of God himſelf in his Divine Perfections.

Secondly, Of the World in its various motions.

Thirdly, Of the heart of man in its vileſt corruptions.

The Sea carrieth in it; Firſt, A repreſentation of God himſelf; which may be taken in four things.

Firſt, In the hiddenneſs and unſearchableneſs of his Wiſdom (Pſal. 36. 6.) Thy Judgments are a great deep, or a Sea; (Rom. 11. 33.) O the depth of the Wiſdom and Counſel of God! How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! None can fathom this Sea, there is not Line enough in the underſtanding of Men and Angels to reach the bottom of God; he is a Sea without banks or bottom.

Secondly, The Lord is as the Sea in his goodneſs, ſending out ſo many ſweet ſtreams, and feeding all the Springs of the Earth (Pſal. 65. 9, 10.) Thou viſiteſt the Earth, and契 watereſt it; thou greatly inricheſt it with the River of God, which is full of water; thou prepareſt them Corn, when thou haſt ſo provided for it; thou watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly, &c.

Thirdly, As all the Rivers come from the Sea, and return to it, ſo all good flows out and ſprings from God, and all the glory of his goodneſs ſhould return, or be returned to him in Praiſes and Thankſgivings.

Fourthly, The Sea is ſuch a vaſt Body, that though it ſends forth water to feed the Earth every where, and though all the Rivers flow back into the Sea, yet the Sea is not at all abated by the water that it ſends forth, nor increaſed by all the water that returns to it. So how much ſoever God gives out to the Creature (he gives out all) yet he is no more emptied by it than the Sea; and whatſoever returns the Creature makes to him, they no more increaſe nor add to him, than the Sea is increaſed by the Rivers falling into it: there is no ſenſible appearance of the heightning of the waters of the Sea, by the greateſt and vaſteſt Rivers that diſburden themſelves into it.

Secondly, As the Sea is an Emblem of the Living God, in whom we live, ſo of the World wherein we live.

Firſt, The Sea is a very unquiet part of the World. What Storms, what Tempeſts are there upon the Sea? What rage and fury in the Waves of it? Such an unquiet thing is this World, hurrying up and down, and inraged often by Storms and Tempeſts ariſing from the luſts and paſſions of men, even to the ſwallowing up of all.

Secondly, The Sea is very unconſtant, it is now ebbing, and anon flowing. It is ſo with this world, and all things in it; our comforts are ſometimes flowing, and ſometimes ebbing; our peace comes, and anon it goes; we have ſome good days, and more evil; the days of darkneſs are many, and the beſt meet with many of them in this world; the world is full of changes, the faſhion of it paſſeth away.

Thirdly, The Sea-water is a ſalt water, an unpleaſant water; and ſuch is the world, though many drink greedily of it, and would even draw it up, as the Scripture ſpeaks of Behemoth, drawing up Jordan. They who drink in worldly things, as if they could drink up the whole world, yet drink but ſalt and unſavoury water. One of the Ancients notes it as a great mercy to man, that God doth thus imbitter the world to us, making it brackiſh and diſtaſtful. And indeed God hath on purpoſe tempered the things of this world, that they ſhould not be too ſweet and luſcious for us, or leſt we ſhould diſtemper our ſelves by them, or ſurfeit upon them.

Auguſtine.

Thirdly, The Sea is an Emblem of the heart of man, eſpecially of a wicked mans heart. Man is a little World, and the heart of man hath a Sea of worldly vanities in it (Iſaiah 57.20.) The wicked are like the troubled Sea; and the heart of a wicked man is the moſt troubled and troubleſome part in him. The heart unchanged, is like the Sea:

Firſt, For turbulency or troubleſomneſs; what is more unquiet than the heart of man? no ſuch natural ſtorms upon the Sea; no ſuch civil ſtorms either at Sea or Land, as there are carnal ſtorms in the heart of man; what a ſtir, what broils, doth the heart of man make many times!

Secondly, The heart of man is like the Sea, as it is ſalt, brackiſh and bitter, through the haſtineſs and raſhneſs of our ſpirits. The Prophet Habakkuk calls the Chaldeans a bitter and haſty Nation (Chap. 1, 6.) Haſty perſons are bitter perſons; perverſeneſs, peeviſhneſs and paſſions lodge in them.

Thirdly, The heart of man hath Waves in it, full of pride, like the Sea; what Sea hath ſuch proud Waves as the heart of man hath! O how do many even Deifie themſelves, think and ſpeak of themſelves as if they were more than man! It is ſaid of the King of Tyrus (Ezekiel 28.2.) that he ſet his heart as the heart of God: How was that? not that his heart was faſhioned like the Heart of God, but he was lifted up in a ſelf-ſufficiency, as if he (like God) needed no Helper; and as he thought, he had no need of help from any, ſo he had no fear of hurt from any. How often do ſuch proud Waves appear upon the Sea of mans heart? and who is there among the Sons of men, but finds theſe proud waves of his heart lifting him up beyond his ſphere and condition? And who, but God, can ſhut up this Sea with doors, when its ſinfulneſs breaks forth, as if it had iſſued out of the Womb? But leaving theſe Metaphorical Seas, I return to conſider what the Lord ſaid further, concerning the Sea Natural.

Aer mari impendet Græci optime ὁμίχλη δὲ αὐτὴν ἐσπαργάνωσα multæ enim nebulæ ſolent oriri ſuper mare. Grot.

Cum mare aliis aquis tanquam veſtitu & faſciis circumtegerim. Jun.

Quis illa denſa vaporum caligine tanquam faſciis illud involvit. Bez.

Nubes paſſim à poetis dicuntur atræ, nigræ, ſpiceæ, imo interdum tenebræ & nox. Sanct.

Nomen חתלה ortum eſt à verbo חתל quod ſignificat involvere faſciis ſeu linteolis, quemadmodum ſolent involvi recens nati infantes. Ezek. 16.4. Piſc.

Verſ. 9. When I made the Cloud the Garment thereof, and thick darkneſs a Swadling-band for it.

As ſoon as the Child is born, and come into the World, the Mother or Midwife provides ſutable Garments for it, and a Swadling band. Thus the Lord continues the Metaphor of Child-birth; I, ſaith the Lord, provided a Garment and a Swadling-band for the new-born Sea. And as the Text tells us, that the Lord made the Sea a Garment, and a Swadling-band, ſo it tells us what they were: What was the Garment made for the Sea? The Cloud. When the Lord had ſeparated the Sea from the Earth, he made the Clouds to cover it, as Garments do a Child that comes naked into the world; and the Cloud is a fit Garment for the Sea. Clouds are water condenſed, and they diſſolve into water; and here the Lord having ſeparated the Sea from the Earth, made the Cloud, which is a kind of Sea, a Sea in the Air, as a Garment to cover and keep it warm. And becauſe a new-born Child, leſt the limbs ſhould not grow right, hath not the liberty of its arms and feet for a time, but is wrapt up with a Swadling-band: therefore, in purſuance of the Allegory, the Text ſpeaks of a Swadling-band prepared for the Sea, as ſoon as it was born. But what was the Swadling-band of the Sea? As the matter of its Garment is a Cloud, ſo its Swadling-band is thick darkneſs; that is, ſay ſome, very dark Clouds; making this latter part of the Verſe but a repetition of the former: becauſe Clouds are dark in themſelves, they are often expreſſed by darkneſs, they are called black Clouds, and dark Clouds, yea, ſometimes Clouds are called darkneſs. So that the Cloud, and the thick darkneſs may be the ſame; only it is here expreſt in different terms, to ſhew the exactneſs of the Lords proceeding, and the accurateneſs of his providing for the due ordering of the unruly Child, the Sea. And that the Sea had at firſt ſuch a Swadling-band, we find (Gen. 1.2.) Darkneſs was upon the face of the Deep.

Hence, Firſt, From the purpoſe of the Spirit of God, as we may well conceive, in repreſenting the Sea in ſuch a Dreſs, a Child in Swadling-bands:

> Note; God can as eaſily rule and bind the Sea (a vaſt bulkie Body) as a Mother or a Nurſe can bind a little Infant in Swadling-bands.

And ſurely the Spirit of God would have us to take notice, that though the Sea be indeed ſuch a Gyant, ſuch a Monſter as will make a Heart of Oak ſhake, or a Heart of Braſs melt, yet what is it to God, but an Infant? He can bind it, and lay it to ſleep, even as a little Child. And if the great Sea be in the Hand of God as a little Child, what is great to God! and how great is God! What is ſtrong to God! and how ſtrong is God! What, or who is too great, or too ſtrong for God to deal with? Cannot God who hath ſwadled the turbulent Sea, provide Swadling-bands to wrap up the ſtouteſt and moſt turbulent ſpirits of this world? Job ſpeaking of himſelf, wondered that God ſhould deal ſo with him (Chap. 7.12.) Am I a Sea, or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me? The Sea is a boiſterous Creature, and had need be watched; Am I a Sea, or a Whale, ſaid Job? Though a man be as a Sea, or a Whale, God can watch him, and bind him from doing miſchief. Therefore fear not any power of the Creature, though a great Sea, while your behaviour is good; but fear the Lord, who binds the Sea to its good behaviour. Nations are before him but as the drop of a Bucket (Iſa. 40.15.) A Nation, conſidered in it ſelf, is a mighty Sea, much more The Nations; which indefinite is Univerſal, taking in all Nations; yet they are all but as the drop of a Bucket: And how eaſily can we diſpoſe of the drop of a Bucket? Even ſo eaſily can God diſpoſe of thoſe who are as the Sea in opinion and appearance.

Secondly, Conſider what the Lord makes the Swadling-band of the Sea; ſome ſtrong thing, no doubt: The Text tells us it is but a dark Cloud, or a Miſt ariſing from the Sea; theſe are the Bands with which God binds this Mighty Gyant the Sea.

> Hence obſerve, The Lord can make weak and improbable means to do and effect the greateſt things.

One would think we ſhould have heard of ſome other matter, even of Adamantine Chains, to bind the Sea with; but we ſee Miſts, and Fogs, and Clouds ſhall do it, if God will. Miſts are but Vapours gathered up, and thickened a little in the Air. Is it not a wonder, that they ſhould get the upper-hand of, and bind the Sea? ſo that as ſoon as a Miſt riſeth in the Air, by and by the Sea is ſtill. There is indeed a natural reaſon why, as Calms are ſeldom without Miſts, ſo Miſts can never be without Calms; becauſe Miſts cannot endure nor live in the Wind, much leſs in a Storm, but muſt preſently be diſperſed or blown away by it; yet 'tis much, that a Miſt, or a Fog, or a Cloud in the Air, ſhould have a binding force upon the Sea. This was the Lords work, to keep the Sea quiet in its place. And having conſidered this, we are called to conſider another Work of God, whereby he keeps the Sea from roving out of its place, in the two Verſes following.

Verſ. 10. And brake up for it my decreed place, and ſet bars and doors, &c.

Here the Lord ſpeaks of the ſecond ſtate of the Sea, according to one reading, though according to ours of the firſt.

When the Lord had ſaid, Let the waters be gathered together into one place, he prepared a place to receive the waters; as when a man would have a place to hold water, he digs or makes an Earthen Veſſel or receptacle for it. So when the waters iſſued out of the Earth in their Nativity, the Lord gathered them together into a Sea, and prepared a ſtupendious pit; or as ſome follow the alluſion here of a new-born infant wrapt in ſwadling-bands, he provided a great Bed or Cradle to put it into. That vaſt concave into which the waters are put, is ſomewhat like a Cradle; thoſe channels (I ſay) which God made for the Sea, are as the Cradle wherein it is laid. The Banks and Shores are thoſe Bars and Doors with which the Infant is kept in his Cradle. What can be ſpoken more ſignificantly than theſe ſimilitudes, to expreſs the greatneſs of God, who keeps in the Sea by his power, and leads it forth gently into ſeveral creeks and boſoms; for the ſafety of Navigation, and repreſſeth its fury and violence by the Sands and Shores? Thus ſaith the Lord, I brake up for it my decreed place, a hollow place, for the holding of the Sea.

Some tranſlate, And eſtabliſhed my decree upon it; for the word place, is not expreſſed in the Text, there it is only and brake up my decree, but it is more clear to the general ſenſe of the Text, and to the particular ſenſe of the Hebrew word, to interpret it, of breaking up a decreed place for the Sea, than of eſtabliſhing a decree for the Sea, which is a conſequent of the former: And therefore I underſtand it only of a fitting room for the Sea, here called a decreed place, or a place determined, a place not only found out as convenient, but determined and ſet; I brake up for it my decreed place, or my ſtatuted place, a place that I appointed by an ordinance of Heaven, that place did I break up for it; that is, I made a Veſſel or Channel like a Cradle, big enough, and broad enough, and deep enough, to hold the vaſt waters of the Sea. I brake up for it my decreed place.

ואשׁבור Et fregi, i. e. decidi vel decrevi ſuper illud ſtatutum meum, q. d. de illi decretum meum conſtitui, cum ei limites ſunt à me præfiniti. Merc. Vocabulum terræ recte hic ſuppleri, tum ipſa hiſtoriæ veritas, tum propria ſignificatio verbi שׁבר evincit: Itaque alii non recte cum verbo illo conſtruunt vocem חקי in Hebræo deficit præpoſitio ב חקי pro בחקי Piſc. Cum diffregi pro eo (ſc. terram) decreto meo, i. e. Alveos velut canas exaravi & circummunivi. Jun.

Note, Firſt, The Lord who made the Sea, made alſo a place for it.

The ordering and placing of all things is of God, as well as the making of them; God hath provided a place for every thing, and put every thing in its place. God is the God of Order. And how comely and orderly are all things, while they are kept in, and all perſons while they keep in the place which God hath decreed for them, and put them in! The Elements do not ponderate, are not burdenſom in their place. The Sea troubles us not while it keeps or breaks not out from that decreed place, which God at firſt brake up for it. There is not the leaſt worm, but hath a decreed place. And as God hath appointed men their time (there is a decreed time for their birth, and for their continuance in life, they die alſo, and go out of the World in a decreed time) ſo there is a decreed place for every man, and that two-fold.

Firſt, Of his habitation, in what part of the World he ſhall live (Acts 17. 26.)

Secondly, Of his ſtation, or vocation, what part he ſhall act in the World, to ſerve his Generation, or to get his living. He that abides within the bounds of his calling, abides in his place, though he every day move or remove from place to place. It is beſt for our ſelves and for others alſo to abide in our decreed places; as it is a mercy to us all, that the Sea abides where God placed it. If men break out of their places, they may quickly do miſchief like the breach of the Sea: To prevent which God brake up for it his decreed place, and not only ſo, but as it followeth in the cloſe of this tenth verſe,

Set Bars and Doors.] In the eight verſe we have only Doors; he hath ſhut up or annointed the Doors of the Sea; but here we have Bars and Doors. It is an alluſion to ſtrong Cities and Caſtles, or to great mens Houſes, which have not only Doors, but Doors barred and double lockt. Bars ſtrengthen Dorrs, and keep them faſt and ſure. A ſtrong Door, if not well lockt and barred, may quickly be broken open; therefore the Lord to make all faſt, tells us that when he had put the Sea into his decreed place, that it ſhould no more return to cover the Earth at its own pleaſure, or according to its natural bent (for there is a deſire, that is, a natural bent in the Sea to be overflowing all, and to repoſſeſs the place from which it was at firſt with drawn; the Lord I ſay tells us that) he then ſet Doors and Bars to keep it in, and ſhut it up faſt enough. And if you inquire what is meant by thoſe Doors and Bars, with which 'tis ſhut in? Some anſwer, The Sands of the Sea, others the Rocks Cliffs and Banks; theſe are Bars and Doors by which the Sea is ſhut in. But though theſe things are indeed as Bars and Doors to keep the Sea from returning again; yet that which is the great Bar and Door, is the word of command from God, as appears fully in the next verſe.

Verſe 11. And ſaid, hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further.

Et dixi ei, ſc. proſopopœia. Dicere Dei eſt jubere & conſtituere quid fiat.

The Saying of God, is Gods Command and Law; And ſaid. To whom? To whom did the Lord ſpeak? He ſaid it to the Sea; though a ſenſeleſs Creature, a Creature without reaſon, yea without life; yet the Lord ſaid it, and he ſaid it to the Sea, and he ſpake it as angry with the Sea. As if he had ſaid, I ſee what a raging Creature thou art, what a froward ungovern'd Child thou art like to prove; therefore I ſay, hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further. We may take this ſaying of the Lord, under theſe two notions.

Firſt, As expreſſing the firmneſs of what was done; He ſaid, that is, reſolved, determined, and concluded, made it a Law, a Law like that of the Medes and Perſians, not to be reverſed by any power.

Secondly, He ſaid, as noting the facility of the work. When the Lord took a courſe to ſhut up theſe Doors, and to put on theſe invincible Bars, what did he? He ſaid it, and it was as ſoon done as ſaid; ſo that this word He ſaid, notes the infinite ſoveraignty and power of God, that by a word ſpeaking the matter was done; He ſaid, Hebræi פה pro termino ponunt, ut apparet, Ezek. 41. 15. ideo recte פה עד vertitur hoc uſque. Grot.

Hitherto ſhalt thou come.] The Lord gives the Sea line; He makes it a priſoner, but not a cloſe priſoner; he gives it a great ſcope, large room to roll and tumble its waves in; Hitherto thou ſhalt come, that is, hitherto thou maiſt come. It is not a Command that the Sea ſhould always come ſo far, but it is a diſpenſation or a permiſſion, that thus far the Sea may come, but no further. As if the Lord had ſaid, I have drawn a line, and I have ſet a mark, I have given thee a bound, ſo far to go, hitherto ſhalt thou come,

But no further.] The Hebrew is, Thou ſhalt not add; Thou ſhalt not go beyond the bound which I have ſet thee, to deſtroy the Earth. A Jewiſh writer gives a double expoſition of this, But no further.

Rabbi[illegible]

Firſt, Of the waves and of the waters in the midſt of the Sea. When waves riſe in the main Ocean, how high they may riſe and toſs the ſailing Ship, we cannot tell; but God knows.

Secondly, Of the ways roaring at the Sea ſhore. To both he ſaith, Hitherto ſhall ye come, and no further.

And here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed.

Why doth the Lord call them proud waves? It is not becauſe they are proud properly, but by a Metaphor; they lift up their heads as proud men do, and are therefore called proud waves. Thus Jethro ſpake of Pharaoh and his Hoſt (Exod. 18. 11.) In the things wherein they dealt proudly, the Lord was above them. Pharaoh and the Egyptians, like the proud waves of the Sea thought to have ſwallowed up all Iſrael; but God made the Sea to ſwallow them up Proud men, like mighty waves, think to ſwallow up all; but he is above them, that ſaith to the Sea, Here ſhall thy proud waves

Be ſtayed.] The Hebrew is, And here it ſhall ſet it ſelf againſt the pride of thy waves. As if the Lord had ſaid, if they come here, my Doors ſhall meet them, my Commands like Bars ſhall ſtop them, that they ſhall not be able to go a ſtep further; they ſhall not conquer my Commands, nor break down the Doors, nor diſſolve the Bars, which I have ſet up. The word rendred waves properly ſignifies a heap, becauſe waves roll in heaps one upon the neck of another.

גלים Fluctus recte dicti, quia volvuntur ventis. Et magnos volvunt ad littora fluctus. Dicuntur etiam משברים a fragore vel quod franguntur in littora & ſcopulos, vel quod inter ſe colliduntur.

Firſt, In that this Text makes ſo particular a deſcription of the proviſion which God made to keep the Sea in order; as ſoon as it was born, he bound it up in ſwadling-bands, and then brake up a decreed place for it, and there ſet up Bars and Doors, that it ſhould come no further. He put the Sea under confinement.

Hence, Note, The Sea left to it ſelf, would miſchief all; the Sea would return and cover the Earth quickly.

As ſoon as ever it brake forth out of the Earth, it covered the Earth; and ſo it would do again, if the Lord ſhould let it alone. David took ſpecial notice of this work of God (Pſal. 104. 9.) Thou haſt ſet a bound that they (the waters ſpoken of verſ. 6, 7, 8.) cannot paſs over, that they turn not again to cover the Earth. Which plainly implieth, that the waters would turn again to cover the Earth, and ſo recover their firſt liberty, even to over-ſpread the face of the whole Earth, did not God reſtrain and hold them in, as was ſhewed before in the general explication of this verſe.

Secondly, Note, The Creature can go no further than God permits or ſuffers.

Rational Creatures often go beyond the commands of God; but neither they, nor any Creature, can go beyond the counſel of God: They who tranſgreſs or paſs over the line of his revealed will, cannot paſs over the line of his ſecret will. The Lord ſecretly puts a ſtop to all Creatures, as here, to the Sea. How extravagant ſoever mens Spirits are, or their practices are, yet they are under an over-ruling power. The Sea hath continued under this command ever ſince God made it; it hath gone no further then the Lord would. Though it be a truth that the Sea hath broken viſible and natural, yea artificial banks, and bounds, and bars; yet it hath never broken thoſe ſpecial inviſible banks, bounds, and bars, which God hath made for it, his decree. When God gave the Sea viſible banks, and bounds and bars, he did not intend them for banks, and bounds, and bars to his own will; and therefore he ſometimes bids the Sea go beyond and break its viſible bounds and bars. He commanded a general deluge in Noahs time; then all was Sea, no dry land appeared: And though we have the Lords promiſe that he will never deſtroy the World, how ſinful ſoever, by an univerſal deluge any more (Gen. 9. 11.) yet Hiſtories and experiences have told us there have been many particular inundations of the Sea, breaking its anciently known bounds and bars; nevertheleſs it never did nor ever ſhall break the bars of this word, hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further. The divine pillar of this (Ne plus ultra) No further, ſtands inviolable. If the Sea break bounds at any time, 'tis becauſe God hath given it a ſpecial commiſſion to do ſo, for the puniſhment of men, who break their bounds by ſin. The Sea is ſtill Gods priſoner, and goes not out of thoſe doors which God hath ſet up and barred, without his licence; it ſtirs not a foot from the decreed place which God broke up for it, but as he lengthens its chain.

Deus non ſibi eas rerum leges fixit quas nequeat ad tempus cum libet mutare.

Thirdly, Note, To God alone that power belongs, which keeps the Sea within compaſs.

It is not the Sands, nor the Banks, nor the Rocks, that can do it. The water is a very barbarous and head-ſtrong Element, none can put a bridle into the lips of it, but God himſelf. A late Hiſtorian, ſpeaking of the ſiege of Rochel, ſaith there was a ſtupendious dike made, which might be called a bridle to the Sea: But God alone can make a bridle for the Sea; his word in the Text, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further, is the bridle. Some diſpute whether it be not a continued Miracle, that the Sea is kept within its compaſs. We ſay Miracles are diſcontinued; and I conceive 'tis beſide the Nature of a Miracle, to be continual; yet, without diſpute, 'tis a continued marvel or wonder, that the Sea is thus kept in; if the Lord ſhou'd let it looſe, if he ſhould remove the Bar and unlock the Door of that prohibition here given it, but one hour, no natural Doors nor Bars could hinder it from returning to cover the face of the Earth. Take a few inferences from the whole.

Firſt, The Sea is Gods, and he hath made it.

(Pſal. 95. 5.) And he made it, as to declare his own glory, ſo to promote our good (Pſal. 104. 25, 26.) The Earth (O Lord) is full of thy riches; ſo is this great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great Beaſts; there go the Ships; there is the Leviathan whom thou haſt made to play therein. O magnifie God, who hath made the Sea ſo vaſt, ſo wide, ſo great, yet ſo uſeful and commodious. As the Sea is a terrible Creature, ſo a beneficial Creature, bringing forth and feeding an innumerable company of Beaſts, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks. We may as ſoon number the Sands, as the ſhoals of Fiſh bred and nouriſhed in thoſe mighty waters.

Secondly, As the Sea is the Lords, and he made it; ſo the Sea is the Lords, and he maſters it.

(Pſal. 89. 9.) Thou ruleſt the raging of the Sea; when the waves thereof ariſe, thou ſtilleſt them. Glorifie the Lord in this. No Earthly potentate can coerce the Sea. Xerxes preſumed he could tame the Helleſpont, a little Brook comparatively to the Ocean, but it would not obey him; he diſciplined it with three hundred ſtroaks for attempting his bridge of Boats, but it would not mend; he caſt fetters into it, as if it had been his vaſſal, but it would not be bound. It is God who binds the Sea, that knows no Lord but him that made both it and the dry Land. It was proof enough of Chriſts Divinity, that rebuking the Winds and the Sea, there was a great calm. This made the men marvel, ſaying, what manner of man is this (ſurely he is more than man) that even the Winds and the Sea obey him (Matth. 8. 26, 27.) When ſome Courtiers would have flattered our Daniſh King Canutus into a belief that his power was more than humane, he commanded his Chair to be ſet on the Sea ſhore at the time of flood; and ſitting down, thus beſpake that Element; I charge thee not to enter my Land, nor wet theſe Robes: But the Sea keeping on its courſe, he roſe up, and ſpake in the hearing of all about him; Let all the Inhabitants of the World know, that vain and weak is the power of Kings; and that none is indeed worthy of that Name, but he that keeps both Heaven, and Earth, and Sea in obedience.

Thirdly, Then tremble at the power of God, who can let the Sea looſe upon us in a moment. We tremble at the Sea if it break looſe; then tremble at the power of God, who can let looſe the Sea. It is he that calleth for the waters of the Sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the Earth: the Lord is his Name. (Amos 9. 6.)

Fourthly, When the Sea break bounds in any degree, either when we ſee a ſtorm at Sea, or a deluge at Land, let us go only to the Lord, who only can ſtill the raging of the Sea, and put ſwadling-bands about it, even as if it were a Child. God alone is to be invocated, when the winds are tempeſtuous, and threaten either a deluge at Land, or a wrack at Sea. Heathens invoked Neptune and Æolus. Popiſh votaries call upon St. Nicolas and St. Chriſtopher. Let us learn of the Diſciples, who fearing to be ſwallowed up of a Tempeſt, went to Chriſt, and ſaid, Maſter, ſave us, we periſh (Matth. 8. 27.) The poor Mariners in Jonah called every one upon his God (Jonah 1. 5.) but none of them called upon the true God. It is Jehovah the Lord, the true God only, that raiſeth the ſtormy wind, which lifteth up the waves of the Sea; and it is he that maketh the ſtorm a calm (Pſal. 107. 24, 25, 29.)

Fifthly, If the Sea, ſo vaſt and violent a Creature receive the bridle from God, and is bound up by him, even as an Infant in ſwadling-bands; how much more ſhould man receive the bridle from him! The Lord ſaith to the Sons of men, hitherto ſhall ye come, and no further; hitherto your works and actions ſhall go, and no further: Yet how do the men of the World over-flow and break their bounds! The Prophet makes this application clearly (Jer. 5. 22, 23.) Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord? Will ye not tremble at my preſence: Which have placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot paſs it; and though the waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not paſs over it: But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart, they are revolted and gone. As if he had ſaid, The Sea doth not revolt againſt my command, but this people doth; they are more unruly than the Sea. All the wicked, at beſt, are like the troubled Sea, that cannot reſt (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 57. 20.) How much worſer then are they than the Sea, when they are at worſt?

Laſtly, we may hence infer for our comfort; if the Lord hath put bounds to the natural Sea, what unnatural Sea is there, to which the Lord cannot put bounds? There is a five-fold metaphorical Sea, to which the Lord hath ſaid, hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further. Or, at leaſt, he hath ſaid, though thou come hither, thou ſhalt come no further. This the Lord hath ſaid, Firſt, To the Sea of mans wrath. The wrath of man is a grievous Sea, and of that David ſaith (Pſal. 76.10.) The wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, the remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain. Let men be as angry as they will, let them be as ſtormy as a Sea; yet the Lord hath ſaid, hitherto ſhall ye come, and no further: For (Pſal. 65.7.) He ſtilleth the noiſe of the Sea, the noiſe of their Waves, and the tumult of the People. Yea, great men raging like the Sea, are ſometimes ſtopt by very ſmall matters, ſuch as the Sea-ſands. The Chief-Prieſt and Elders of the people, were offended at Chriſt, and therefore queſtioned his Authority; yet forbare to anſwer his queſtion, as they had moſt mind to do it, for fear of the people (Matth. 21. 23,26.)

Secondly, He bounds the Sea of the Devils rage. The Devil is a Sea in bonds. We read of a ſpecial thouſand years, wherein it is propheſied that Satan ſhould be bound (Rev. 20. 2.) yet indeed he is always bound, elſe no man could live a quiet hour for him, nor have any reſt from his furious temptations and vexations, but his profeſſed ſlaves and votaries.

Thirdly, There is a Sea of Affliction which we meet with in this World; the Lord bounds that alſo, and ſaith, hitherto it ſhall come and no further (Cor. 10. 13.) There hath no temptation taken you, but ſuch as is common to man. But God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are able; but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that you may be able to bear it.

Fourthly, The Lord ſets a bound to the Sea of prophaneneſs and ungodlineſs in the World; that's a Sea that would over-flow all; and that is a Sea, for whoſe over-flowing, we have cauſe to pour out floods of tears. Hence that prayer of David (Pſal. 7.9.) O let the wickedneſs of the wicked come to an end! Did not the Lord put an end to the prophaneneſs and ungodlineſs of men, they would be endleſs in prophaneneſs and ungodlineſs. The unjuſt knoweth no ſhame (Zeph. 3.5.) That is, he is never aſhamed of any injuſtice, but would go on to do unjuſtly and wickedly (in infinitum) who knows how long!

Fifthly, The Lord ſets a bound to the Sea of error and falſe Doctrine; the Lord ſaith, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further. Error would be as extravagant and boundleſs as the Sea, if the Lord did not bound it. Epiphanius in his Treatiſe of Hereſies, alludes to this Scripture, for the comfort of himſelf and others, when he ſaw ſuch a high-grown Sea of error broken in upon the Church. As Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo do ſuch ungodly men withſtand the truth of Chriſt; but (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Tim. 3.9.) They ſhall proceed no further. Did not the Lord give a ſtop to the Spirit of ſeduction that goeth out from the Devil and the falſe Prophet, it would bring in a deluge of deluſions upon the whole World, and (as Chriſt himſelf hath fore-warned us, Matth. 24.24.) deceive if it were poſſible, the very Elect. But there is a bar and a bound for this Sea alſo; though they come hitherto, to this or that perſon with their errors, to this or that point of error, yet they ſhall proceed no further; and here, even here, their proud and poiſonous Waves ſhall be ſtayed.

VERS. 12, 13, 14, 15.

Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy days? And cauſed the day-ſpring to know his place,

That it might take hold of the ends of the Earth, that the wicked might be ſhaken out of it?

It is turned as Clay to the Seal, and they ſtand as a Garment.

And from the wicked their light is with-holden, and the high arm ſhall be broken.

THE Lord in dealing with Job, had already put ſundry Queſtions to him about the Earth, and about the Sea, as hath been ſhewed in the former part of this Chapter; here the Lord calls his thoughts up into the Air, or bids him look to the Heavens, and duly conſider the light of the Sun. In this the Lord intends the ſame thing which he had done before, while he was queſtioning Job about the Earth and the Sea, namely, to humble him, and bring him to a full ſubmiſſion, by ſhewing him his weakneſs, and utter inſufficiency, as alſo to ſet forth his own wiſdom, power, and greatneſs: Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy day? &c. We may gather up the general ſenſe of theſe four verſes into this brief ſum. As if the Lord had thus beſpoken Job; If thou anſwereſt, that the things I have already queſtioned thee about, were before thy time, and therefore muſt needs be done, without either thy counſel or aſſiſtance; then I ask thee farther, Haſt thou ever haſtened or retarded, haſt thou quickened or ſtopt the riſing of the Sun, at any time ſince thou waſt born? Or haſt thou ever cauſed the morning light in any one of theſe few days, which thou haſt ſeen, to ſpread it ſelf far and near, even every where, to the uttermoſt parts of the Earth; that ſo thoſe evil doers and night-birds, who being Children of darkneſs, cannot but hate the light, and love the works of darkneſs, might by its riſing be at once diſcovered and affrighted? This ſeems to be the purpoſe and ſcope of God in theſe words. More particularly,

Verſe 12. Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy days?

That's the firſt Queſtion; Haſt thou ſince thy days, given the morning its charge; ſo Mr. Broughton Tranſlates, implying, that every morning the Sun receives as it were freſh orders from ſome hand or other? Now, haſt thou given out orders for the morning light; doth the day-light obey thee? Doth the Sun ariſe at ſuch times and places as thou haſt appointed? Haſt thou commanded it (ſo we render) The word notes commanding with fulleſt authority, a command to appear and be ready upon duty, a command to ſtand forth and do what is enjoyned. This word of command is moſt proper unto God (Pſal. 33. 9.) He ſpake the word, and it was done; he commanded, and it ſtood faſt. The command of God is a creating command, it puts things into act; his ſaying gives them a being; his calling them to work, makes them work, or ſets them a work. Now, ſaith God, Haſt thou commanded the morning? Haſt thou, O Job, ſuch a word of command upon any Creature, for the producing of any effect, motion, or action? Haſt thou commanded

Verbum צוה valet jubere, adeſſe, exhibere, ſiſtere, in actum & conſpectum educere. Imperium voluntatis efficax intelligitur, quod ſtatim ſequitur effectus.

The morning?] By the morning, the Lord means the morning light. As if he had ſaid, Haſt thou raiſed the Sun out of its Bed, and brought forth the morning? Haſt thou, like the Maſter or Lord of this great family, the World, called up thy Servants, and ſet up thy light for them to work by? Haſt thou commanded the morning, that is, cauſed the Sun to riſe, which is as a Bridegroom coming out of his Chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a race (Pſal. 19. 5.) No, ſaith the Lord, it was not, 'tis not thou that commandeſt the morning, it is I that command the morning. I commanded the firſt morning (Gen. 1. 5.) I ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light; and the evening and morning were the firſt day. It was I, who the fourth day, ſaid, Let there be lights in the Firmament of the Heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for ſigns and for ſeaſons, for days and for years. It was I that made two great lights (the Sun and Moon) the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſer light to rule the night, (Gen. 1. 14, 15, 16.) The firſt morning, and all the mornings, the light bearer, or the light bringer, came forth and appeared at my command, not at thine. Haſt thou commanded the morning

A manando latine dicitur mane, quod cum ſole manat dies ab oriente.

Since thy days?] There is ſomewhat ſpecial in thoſe words, Since thy days. We may take them either of theſe two ways.

Firſt, As if the Lord had ſaid, Was there no morning before thy days? Or, Was there not a morning, before thou hadſt a morning in the World? Did the birth of the morning wait till thou waſt born? Did it not look forth, nor appear, till thou didſt appear? Surely, there were mornings, hundreds of years before thou hadſt a morning in the World. The morning did not ſtay for thee, nor for thy day.

Secondly, Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy days? That is, ſince thou cameſt into the World? Haſt thou had the honour, priviledge, and power to awaken and call up the morning, as thou doſt thy houſhold Servants? Know, O Job, that, as there was a morning before thou waſt born, or hadſt a day in the World; ſo ſince thy day, thou haſt neither made the morning nor raiſed up the morning light; that power is now in my hand, as it was before thou waſt in being; thou art but of yeſterday, of a few days: There was a morning before thy days; and ſince thy days many have continued and come forth daily; yet not at thy command, but at mine. As I brought forth the light in the firſt day of the Creation, ſo the fourth day I Created the Sun, into which I gathered the light, and at whoſe riſing the morning ſhews it ſelf.

Cum dixit, A diebus tuis, Oſtendit id antequam ille naſceretur factum eſſe, & perpetuum illum naturæ ordinem in manu dei eſſe non hominum. Merc.

Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy days?

'Tis a bare Queſtion; thou haſt not, I have done it, and not thou.

Hence Note, Firſt, What God will have done, he can command to be done, or it ſhall be done at his command.

The Lords need not labour to produce the moſt difficult effects; he can produce them as a Lord, by a word ſpeaking; he needs not intreat, nor treat about the bringing forth of any matter, his will is enough to bring it forth. What God will have done, ſhall be done. Thus it was at the beginning, when God Created all things, and gave them a being; and thus it hath been ever ſince for the moving of all things to their ſeveral ends, and iſſues, to this day; all hath been done by a word of command. David (Pſal. 148.) calling the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to praiſe the Lord, gives that as the reaſon (verſ. 5.) for he commanded, and they were Created. Now, I ſay, as they were Created at the firſt by his command, ſo they ſhine forth every day by the ſame command (Matth. 5. 45.) He maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good. He that hath power, uſually ſaith to a perſon that is unwilling to do a thing, I will make you to do it; that is, you ſhall do it, whether you will or no. And 'tis ſaid by the Evangeliſt, He maketh his Sun to riſe, &c. which may ſeem to import a kind of unwillingneſs in the Sun to beſtow its light promiſcuouſly upon the evil as well as good (evil men are indeed unworthy that the Sun ſhould ſhine or the Rain fall upon them) but God (who is infinite in goodneſs, and to ſhew that our good deeds ſhould not be ſhut up or narrowed to thoſe only who are good) layeth an irreſiſtible and indiſpenſible charge upon the Sun, to riſe and ſhine with that indifferency to the good, and to the bad. The Sun would be aſhamed to ſhine upon wicked men, the Sun would even with-hold its beams, and rays, and deny them light or any comfort, it would not make the Earth fruitful for them, had it not a command from the Lord: But having a command from him, it cannot with-hold nor divert its light, no not from thoſe who are Children of darkneſs, and have conſtant fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs.

'Tis no ſmall matter of conſolation, to remember, that our God is a commanding God, that he can command the morning: Which as it is a truth, with reſpect to the natural morning of every day, ſo to the myſtical or metaphorical morning. After a dark, black, and ſtormy night of ſorrow or trouble upon his Church or People, then the Lord can command the morning of joy and proſperity to ariſe upon them and comfort them. 'Tis comfortable living under and obeying his commands, who can command away our ſorrows, and by a word ſpeaking turn midnight into morning, and the ſhadows of death into the ſhining light of life; and therefore ſaith peremptorily without ifs or ands (Pſal. 30. 5.) Weeping (or ſorrow) may endure for a night, but joy (or ſinging) cometh in the morning: That's a morning in a morning. We may have a morning of Sun light, and no morning of joy-light, as the Lord threatned his people in caſe of diſobedience (Deut. 28. 6, 7.) In the morning thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were even; and at even thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were morning, for the fear of thy heart, wherewith thou ſhalt fear, &c. Only God can make a morning of joy or inward light, to riſe with the morning light of the Natural day: elſe we may have day without us, and darkneſs within us; Sun-light but no Soul-light. And ſuch was the intendment of that dreadful threatning againſt the wicked, laſt mentioned out of Moſes. Whereas the godly in their darkeſt outward condition, are under the ſweet influences of that gracious promiſe (Pſal. 97. 11.) Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart. And God can command that light to ſpring even in the hour and power of darkneſs, as Chriſt expreſſed his ſaddeſt day in this World (Luke 22. 53.) The light of every morning is called the day-ſpring, at the latter end of this verſe; and the Lord can make light and gladneſs, or the light of gladneſs to ſpring up in our hearts, when and where he pleaſeth.

Secondly, Obſerve, The courſe of Nature in all its turns and changes, is moved by, and obedient to the command of God.

As God commands the morning, ſo the morning fails not to come at his command. When did you ever know the morning ſtop or ſtay a moment beyond the time, that God commanded it to come forth. We could never ſay to the Chariot of the Sun, as the Mother of Siſera ſaid of his, Why is his Chariot ſo long a coming? Why ſtay the wheels of his Chariot? There was ſomewhat ſtopt Siſera's Chariot, that it could not come; and God took off the Chariot Wheels of the Egyptians, in the Red Sea, and they drew heavily; yea, the Lord can take off the Chariot Wheels of any, though they drive as furiouſly as Jehu, ſo that they ſhall not come at their time: But who ever knew the morning ſtopt a minute or a moment beyond the exact time at which it ſhould come, or was expected? And as the Sun, ſo all Natural things, keep their courſe, and ſlack not at the command of God. No Creature diſobeys the command of God but man, who of all Creatures hath moſt reaſon, and is moſt obliged to obey it. God never ſaid of the Sun, O that it had hearkned to my voice; but the Sons of men put him often to ſay ſo, as he once did to Iſrael, his ancient people (Pſal. 81. 13.) How ſeldom do we keep time with God! How ſeldom do we come or go, juſt at his call! I have called (ſaith Wiſdom, Prov. 1. 24, 25.) and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand, and none regarded. God never looked, one day of the year, for the morning, and it came not; but he hath come three years (as the Parable of the Fig-Tree ſhews, Luke 13.) to man, looking for fruit, and hath yet found none. Will it not ſhame us, that the morning is obedient to the command of God, if we are not?

And therefore as the former Note was matter of comfort to us, ſo this may be matter of conviction to us. that the morning, that the Sun in the Firmament (a liveleſs Creature) receiving a command, ſhould conſtantly appear at the time which the Lord appoints, and that we, who have living Creatures, that we, who are reaſonable Creatures, yea, that we, who have only Reaſon, but Grace (all believers have) ſhould not be obedient to, and obſervant of the Lords command, to come at his time, to appear at his call; how may it cauſe us to bluſh for ſhame! The Prophet ſaith, The Stork in the Heavens, the Crane, the Turtle, and the Swallow, theſe know the time of their coming, they come in their ſeaſon. I may ſay alſo, the Sun, Moon and Stars, thoſe lights in the Heavens, know their ſeaſon, and the time of their coming; they obey the command of the Lord, and ſhall not we know the Judgment of the Lord, and obſerve the appointed times of our duty! Which to obſerve, is as much our intereſt or benefit, as it is our duty. As often as we ſee the morning coming according to the command of God, let it provoke us to make haſt, and not delay, to keep his Commandments.

Thirdly, Haſt thou commanded the morning? That is, the morning light, to come forth? No, it's I that have done it.

Hence Note, We are to acknowledg God as the Commander, yea, as the Former, Maker, and Author of the light.

This command of God hath reſpect, not only to his bringing forth the light every morning, or to his bringing forth the morning light every day into the World; but to his giving the light its being the firſt day of the World. God is the Father not only of ſpiritual light (James 1. 17.) but of Natural (Pſal. 74. 16.) The day is thine, the night alſo is thine; thou haſt prepared the light, and the Sun. Thus Glory is aſcribed to God by his holy Prophet alſo (Jer. 31. 25.) Thus ſaith the Lord, which giveth the Sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the Moon, and of the Stars, for a light by night. The Lord gives theſe, as well as command theſe ; and who but God can do either? None can command the Creatures unto their daily motion, but God ; much leſs could any command the Creatures into their firſt being, but God. How wiſe, how great ſoever men are, or ſeem to be in their own eyes or ſight, they cannot make nor bring forth the leaſt ray of light ; much leſs can they make ſuch a World of light, as God hath made for the World. And ſurely there is no Creature wherein we may ſee and contemplate more of God than in the light, which he made the firſt day, and now commandeth to make the morning day by day. Nor is there any thing in the whole compaſs of Nature, either more comfortable or more admirable than the light. The commonneſs of it leſſens our eſteem of it ; and becauſe it comes ſo conſtantly, and never fails, we are apt to look upon it as no great matter, as no great mercy ; whereas indeed the light is not only uſeful and comfortable, but admirable ; and that it deſerves theſe three attributes, I ſhall briefly ſhew, by giving a touch at each of them.

That, light is an admirable Creature, muſt be confeſſed, if we conſider,

Firſt, Its original, or the way of its production. The Apoſtle treating about ſpiritual light, tells us whence the natural light came (2 Cor. 4. 6.) God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, &c. Light came, as it were, out of the womb of darkneſs. Now that, out of darkneſs, black darkneſs, ſuch a beautiful Child, ſuch a goodly Creature as light ſhould be brought forth, is it not marvellous? Yet thus it was, God commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs. The Hiſtory of the Creation reports, There was nothing but darkneſs upon the face of the Earth, when the Lord ſaid, Let there be Light. Darkneſs is totally contrary to light, 'tis the privation of light: Now, that the habit ſhould come forth out of the privation, light out of darkneſs, or life out of death, joy out of ſorrow, peace out of of trouble, theſe are the wonderful works of God. And we may comfortably meditate upon this, when we want any kind of light: Whence did the Lord bring light at firſt? Even out of darkneſs ; therefore let us not think any darkneſs of trouble, a lett to the Lords production of light. When we are in ſpiritual darkneſs (the ſtate of Nature is a ſtate of darkneſs) that doth not hinder ; the Lord can eaſily bring the light of the new Creature out of it: And when we are in the darkneſs of any trouble, though it be thick darkneſs, darkneſs (as Job ſpake, Chap. 10. 22.) like darkneſs it ſelf, and where the light is as darkneſs ; yet this doth not hinder, the Lord can bring light out of it. There's the firſt wonder, the Lord brought light out of darkneſs.

Secondly, Light is wonderful, in its operation, power, and efficacy, in that it doth ſo ſuddenly chaſe away, conquer, and overcome darkneſs. Light gets victory over darkneſs in a moment. There's no darkneſs can abide the face of light. As ſoon as God commands the morning, let it be as dark as pitch, the darkneſs muſt away, and fly before it. Darkneſs cannot withſtand light, nor ſtand in the preſence of it ; there's no long diſpute, light inſtantly gets the hand, the day, of darkneſs.

Thirdly, If we conſider the pure Nature of light ; 'tis as pure as purity it ſelf. Light hath an inſeparable and an inſuperable purity ; though it may be a while obſcured, yet it cannot be at all polluted. Philoſophers have ſpoken much about the Nature of light, but none were ever able to comprehend it. Some ſaid, it is a habit or quality of a lightſome Body ; yet none of their definitions reach it fully. They make it a quality ; yet we may conceive it is rather to be ranked and reckoned among ſubſtances than accidents, it being a principal part of the Creation, and the expreſs ſubject of Gods work the firſt day of it.

Lux, aiunt Phyſici, eſt ἕξις ſeu qualitas corporis lucidi.

Fourthly, The light is very wonderful in the changes and viciſſitudes of it. How it paſſeth and repaſſeth, how it increaſeth and decreaſeth, how it comes and goes, is an amazing conſideration.

Fifthly, Though the light be in continual changes, yet there's nothing more conſtant than the light, to its appointed time. Light never fails to come in its ſeaſon.

Secondly, That light is a moſt uſeful and beneficial Creature, who can deny? Seeing without light the whole Creation were a nothing to us. What had the World been to us, if God had not made light, and ſet up lights in it? The eye of the Body (which is the light of the Body, Matth. 6. 22.) were of no uſe to us without outward light. Till the Sun (which is the eye of the great World) ſhines, the eye (which is the Sun of the little World) is no advantage to us. There muſt be light in the Air, as well as light in the eye, elſe the moſt beautiful objects have no appearing beauty ; and therefore the Lord made light the firſt day, that by it, the beauty of the whole Creation might be ſeen. Light diſcovers it ſelf and all other things: Light illuſtrates all the works of God, and ſets them in our ſight. And as all that God hath done, would be nothing to us without light, ſo we our ſelves could do nothing without light. We cannot work at all, or very hardly, or very badly, without light ; hence that of David (Pſal. 104. 22, 23.) The Sun ariſeth ; man goeth forth to his work and to his labour, until the evening. (John 9. 4.) The night cometh, wherein no man can work. Night of any ſort, is not for work, becauſe 'tis dark ; and therefore they who work in the night, get artificial light to ſupply the want of natural. When the plague of darkneſs was upon the Egyptians, they ſate ſtill, and no man moved from the place where he was, till that plague was removed (Exod. 10. 22, 23.) And as we cannot do the work of our Civil Callings without light, either natural or artificial ; ſo we cannot do the work of our Chriſtian calling, without ſpiritual light. When Chriſt the Sun of righteouſneſs ariſeth with healing in his wings, then we go forth (to our ſpiritual labour as Chriſtians) and grow up as the Calves of the ſtall (Mal. 4. 2.) How long ſoever we live in this World, we never go forth to that labour, till the Sun of righteouſneſs, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ariſeth upon us. It was ſaid to thoſe in the parable, that were hired at the eleventh hour (Matth. 11. 6.) Why ſtand ye all the day idle. They of the eleventh hour were perſons, poſſibly, very buſie and laborious as to their Civil Callings in the World, but had ſtood idle all the day as to any ſpiritual work, as to any work of grace ; they had not done God, nor their poor Souls, one ſtroke of work all that while, until they were called, and the light of grace ſhined upon them. Jeſus Chriſt is the light which lightned the Gentiles, and the glory of Iſrael (Luke 2. 32.) And whereſoever he comes, The people which ſat in darkneſs ſee a great light, and to them which ſat in the valley of the ſhadow of death, light ſprings up (Matth. 4. 16.) And that a two-fold light ;

Firſt, Light to be ſaved by.

Secondly, Light to ſerve God, or to do the work of God by.

Thirdly, How comfortable is the light! 'Tis ſo comfortable, that light and comfort are often put for the ſame thing. God is the Lord (ſaith David, Pſal. 118. 27.) which hath ſhewed us light ; that is, the light of counſel what to do, and the light of comfort in what we do, or after all our ſufferings. Light is not only a Candle held to us, to do our work by, but it comforts and cheareth us in our work (Eccleſ. 11. 7.) Light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun. Hence that of David (Pſal. 65. 8.) Thou makeſt the out-goings of the evening and morning to rejoyce ; that is, thou makeſt men to rejoyce, they are glad, they rejoyce in, or at the out-goings of the morning. Man takes comfort at the firſt appearance of the light ; light refreſheth him at its out-goings in the morning. And at the evening men rejoyce too, for then they go to their reſt, being weary with the labour of the day. Or we may thus expound that Pſalm, Thou makeſt the out-goings of the morning and the evening to rejoyce ; That is, thou makeſt men who live at the out-goings of the morning, and at the out-goings of the evening to rejoyce. As if it had been ſaid, thou makeſt the Eaſtern people and the Weſtern people, all people from Eaſt to Weſt rejoyce. And that which makes all people to rejoyce, naturally, is the riſing of light with them in the Eaſt, and the coming of light towards them in the Weſt.

Poſſunt exitus matutini & veſpertini ſumi pro hominibus qui habitant ubi exit nox, i. e. pro Orientalibus & Occidentalibus.

Thus we ſee what an excellent Creature light is, both as it hath a continually renewed riſing in the morning of every day, and as it had its firſt being in the morning of the World, and both from the command of God. Whence take theſe inferences.

Firſt, When we behold the morning coming forth by the command of God ; let us conſider who God is, and what the beauty, and purity, the majeſty, and excellency of God are, who is clothed with light, and dwelleth in light, yea, who is light, and in whom there is no darkneſs at all. There is not any one Creature, which God doth ſo formally predicate of himſelf, as this of light. As God is love (1 John 4 8.) ſo God is light, (1 John 1. 5.) yet the light which ſhines to us, the morning, which God hath commanded for us, is but darkneſs to God, who hath commanded it. Light it ſelf is darkneſs, compared with God; yet 'tis the cleareſt ſhadow, the beſt reſemblance of God in Nature.

Secondly, As we ſhould conſider the excellency and beauty of God in the appearance of the morning, ſo his goodneſs, who hath made ſuch a Creature for us, who hath alſo prepared ſo many Veſſels to hold it and hold it out, or to diſpence it to us. 'Tis God who hath made thoſe great lights, the Sun to rule the day, and the Moon and Stars to rule the night (Gen. 1. 16.) The day would be night to us, if God had not prepared the Sun (for though there were three days before the Sun was made, yet now 'tis the Sun which makes the day) and the night would be nothing but darkneſs to us, if God had not prepared the Moon and the Stars. How great then is the goodneſs of God to man, who hath made light for us, and who thus conveys and diſpenſeth it to us according to our need, both by day, and by night!

Thirdly, We ſhould hence be minded to pay our debt of thankfulneſs to God every day. Hiſtory tells us, that the ancient Rhodians or inhabitants of the Iſle called Rhodes, erected a mighty Coloſſus (according to their Heatheniſh ſuperſtition) in honour of the Sun, who once a day at leaſt opened his face upon their Iſland, though it were over-caſt with Clouds, muffled up, and vailed to all other parts of the World. Though, poſſibly, we do not ſee the face of the Sun every day, yet we enjoy the light and influences of it every day. God hath commanded the Sun in the Firmament to attend us, to be about us, to comfort us, every morning; and ſhall we be unthankful! If in a dark night a friend will but lend us a Candle and a Lanthorn, we thank him; what matter of thanks to God then ſhould it be, that he hath ſet up thoſe Candles, thoſe Torches, thoſe Lamps of light for our comfort and guidance continually.

Fourthly, If God hath command the light, ſo excellent a Creature to ſerve us, to be for our uſe, then let us make uſe of the light to ſerve the Lord in and by; let us make uſe of Natural light, that of the Sun in the Air; and of Spiritual light, that of Chriſt the Sun in the Goſpel, moſt of all. Let us make uſe of Natural light, as to Civil, and of Spiritual light, as to Holy ends and injoyments; let no Beam of light ſhine to us in vain. It is ſinful, not to make a good uſe of Natural light, 'tis very ſinful and dangerous not to make a good uſe of Spiritual, 'tis condemnation to refuſe Spiritual Goſpel light, and to love darkneſs rather than the light (John 3. 19.)

Fifthly, Seeing the Lord hath commanded the morning light for us, then by way of retribution, let us ſhine forth in obedience to his commands, and be as the morning light to glorifie God (Matth. 5.16.) We that have light made for us, ſhould carry our ſelves like lights. The Apoſtle either commends the Saints at Philippi for ſhining, or commands them to ſhine as lights in the World (Phil. 2, 15.) The Text runs in the Indicative Mood (by way of commendation) Among whom ye ſhine. The Margin hath it in the Imperative Mood (by way of command) Among whom ſhine ye as lights in the World. The Lord who hath commanded the Sun to riſe for our light, hath commanded us to riſe and ſhine as lights, and be as ſo many Suns of light in the Firmament of the Church, and in all places to which we come. Therefore (as our bleſſed Saviour, the light and life of the World, hath counſelled us) Let our light ſhine (and ſo ſhine) before men, that they may ſee our good works, and glorifie our father which is in Heaven (Matth. 5. 16.) We that have light commanded for us every day, how ſhould we be lights, and go forth as the Sun, caſting out our rays and beams, in a holy and godly converſation! And while we go forth and walk in ſuch a converſation, we go forth and walk as the Sun in its ſtrength, we enlighten all the World where we come, and dazle the eyes of the wicked World, or of the wicked in the World.

Sixthly, How ſhould we, who have light commanded for us, avoid all the works of darkneſs; yea, We ſhould (as the Apoſtle exhorts, Rom, 13. 12, 13.) caſt off the works of darkneſs, and put on the armour of light; we ſhould walk honeſtly, as in the day: As in the day which the light of the natural Sun makes, and as in the day, which the light of the myſtical Sun, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, hath made.

Seventhly, Remember, as God hath commanded a morning for us here; ſo he will command a light, or a morning, a morning light for all our actions hereafter. As God hath made the light, ſo he will bring all things to light. Many now live in the light of this World, whoſe works are in the dark as well as theirs are works of darkneſs. Now as the Lord hath commanded a morning to ſhine for us to work by, ſo he will have a morning wherein all our works ſhall be ſeen (1 Cor. 4. 5.) He will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and manifeſt the counſels of the heart. Men may dig deep, to hide their counſels from God; but God knows how to bring them and their counſels to the morning, and will cauſe a light to ſhine upon them, though they have no light of truth or righteouſneſs in them. God will bring every work into Judgment with every ſecret thing (Eccleſ. 12. 14.) We muſt all appear (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. 10.) or we muſt all be manifeſt; we muſt appear, and ſo muſt our works too. Thoſe works of men ſhall be light, as to their diſcovery, which are nothing but darkneſs, as to their impurity. Thoſe deeds which have no light in them, ſhall come in the cleareſt light, and be plainly ſeen to the bottom, both by men and Angels. The Lord who hath commanded this morning light for us to do our work in, will command another morning light to Judg our works in, and to give us the reward of them. And let all the wicked of the Earth, to whom the morning of any day (becauſe they are in danger to be diſcovered by it) is as the ſhadow of death (Job 24. 17.) Let them (I ſay) conſider how many thouſand deaths that morning will be to them, which will actually, fully, and impartially diſcover all their wickedneſs, with all the ſecrets of it.

Laſtly, Conſider if the Lord hath beſtowed ſo great a mercy upon us, in commanding the morning, or in giving us light; the light of the Sun; then let us be minded, how great a mercy the Lord hath beſtowed upon us in commanding the light or morning of the Goſpel to come upon us. It was night with us, and ſo it would have been for ever, for any means we could have deviſed or uſed to help our ſelves out of it, till God commanded Chriſt, the bright Morning Star (Rev. 22. 16.) and Sun of Righteouſneſs, to riſe and ſhine upon us. How unſpeakable mercy is it, that ſuch a light ſhould appear to us, who not only were in darkneſs, but were darkneſs! If we account it a mercy, that God hath commanded a morning to ſhine to us; O what a mercy is it, that we have a Chriſt to ſhine upon us! That the Day-Star from on high hath viſited us! That he who is the true light, that enlightens every man that cometh into the World (John 1. 9.) hath riſen upon us, both to ſcatter the darkneſs of ſin and ignorance, and to chear our Souls with the ſweet beams of his healing wings.

So much of the firſt part of the verſe, Haſt thou commanded the morning ſince thy day, ידעתה שחר Scire feciſti auroram. בקר Mane & שחר aurora differunt: Nam prima diei tempeſtas mane dicitur, ejus vero initium aurora. Illud ab interviſendo, hoc à nigricante ſpecie ut videtur. Nam cum res ſub diluculo apparere incipiunt nigricare videntur. Coc.

And cauſed the day-ſpring to know his place?

That is, when and where it ſhould break forth and appear every morning. The day-ſpring is expreſt by a different word in the Original from the morning light; it implieth the firſt of the morning, when the Air is darkiſh or duskiſh; we commonly call it the gray of the morning. The word ſignifies to be dark, or that darkneſs, which we call twilight. When the day-ſpring uſhers in the morning, there is a kind of dimneſs in the light. Now ſaith the Lord; Haſt thou cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place? Haſt thou taught it, where to ſhew it ſelf to the World? The Lord ſpeaks here of the day-ſpring, as if it were a rational Creature, that took inſtructions, or a word of direction, were to begin the morning light. God, not man, hath taught the day-ſpring to know its place. We have a like expreſſion (Pſal. 16. 11.) Thou wilt ſhew me (or thou wilt cauſe me to know) the path of life. Thus the Lord makes the day-ſpring know the path to its own place. The day never ſprings

שחר
Eſt nigreſcere, hinc nigreſcentem lucem ſcil. diluculum ſignificat. Sol varie nec uno loco oritur; quotidie ejus locus mutatur ut ſol aſcendit aut deſcendit in ſignis Zodiaci. Merc.

ſprings twice immediately in one place, but is in a continual variation, as Aſtronomers with experience teach. The place of the light or Sun-riſing differeth every morning, and from thence we have the difference of the days. The Sun paſſing through the twelve ſigns of the Zodiack, beginning with Aries, &c. (I ſhall not trouble you with their names, which have been deviſed and are uſed only for learning ſake, the Sun, I ſay, paſſing every year through theſe twelve Signs, all which Aſtronomers preſent unto us under various forms or figures, ſuch as themſelves fancied moſt uſeful to ſubſerve the underſtanding of that Art) according to the ſituation of theſe Signs, through which the Sun runs his courſe in the Heavens, the day-ſpring to us on Earth changeth its place every day, appearing ſometimes more Southerly, and ſometimes more Eaſterly, as the Sun either aſcends to the Summer Solſtice, at which time the day is at longeſt, and the night at ſhorteſt, as about the eleventh of our Month called June; or when it deſcends to the Winter Solſtice, at which time the day is ſhorteſt, and the night longeſt, as about the eleventh of our December. To which we may add the Suns coming in its aſcending courſe to the middle point of the Heavens, which makes the Vernal Equinox, at which time the day and night are of an equal length, as about the eleventh of our March; as alſo the Suns coming, in its deſcending courſe, to the other middle point of the Heavens, which makes the Autumnal Equinox, at which time the day and night are again of an equal length, as about the eleventh of our September. Now according to all theſe variations of the Suns motion, the day-ſpring varieth its place day by day; and the Lord enquires of Job, how this comes to paſs; Haſt thou cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place? No, 'tis I that have made the day-ſpring to know its place, I have appointed it thoſe ſeveral ſtages where it ſhall riſe to day, and where to morrow, and where every day throughout the year; this is from my contrivement and appointment, not from thine. Haſt thou cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place?

Hence Note, Firſt, It is the Lord, who appoints every Creature its proper place.

The beauty of the World, is from the order of the World; and that every Creature knows its place, makes the whole Creation amiable. The World is expreſſed in Greek by a word noting the beauty, and order of it. And that which renders the Creatures not only beautiful but ſerviceable to man, is the order they are placed in. The Sun keeping its appointed courſe, makes Summer at one time, and winter at another. The Sun ever moves in (unleſs ſtayed by miracle, as in Joſhua's time) but never moves out of its place. As no Creature is burdenſome, ſo there's no Creature unſerviceable, when kept in its place, as was further ſhewed (verſ. 10.)

Κόσμος.

Note Secondly, The courſe of times and ſeaſons is firmly and inviolably ſetled by the command of God.

This ſettlement was made in the Creation (Gen. 1.14.) And when the flood was made (as it were) a confuſion of the times, and ſeaſons, the Lord renewed this ſettlement (Gen. 8.22.) While the Earth remaineth, Seed time, and Harveſt, and Cold, and Heat, and Summer and Winter, and Day and Night ſhall not ceaſe. Read this fully (Jer. 31. 35, 36. & 33.20.) Sun and Moon know their time, and 'tis God, who hath taught them this knowledg, and given them this inſtruction. The light keeps its time, though it changeth its time every day (Pſal. 104.19.) He appointeth the Moon for ſeaſons, the Sun knoweth his going down. The Sun is inſtructed (as it were) where to riſe, and where to go down. The Sun follows the direction of God. There is no rational Creature that doth ſo exactly follow the conduct of God, as the Sun. The Sun forgets not its duty, it never miſtook the hour either of its riſing or going down,) as we more largely ſhewed a little before) it never miſtook a hairs breadth for place, nor a moment of its time. And as it moves according to the command of God; ſo nothing can ſtay its motion, but the command of God: And if He ſay, Sun ſtand thou ſtill, it will do ſo again, as in the days of Joſhua.

Now if all Creatures keep their ſtation, and obſerve their motion according to the inſtructions they receive from God, ſhould not this be our inſtruction? If God hath cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place and time; if the Sun riſe where and when he would have it; ſhall not we know our place and time? Shall not we be where and when God would have us? As every thing, ſo every perſon is moſt uſeful in his proper place and ſeaſon. The Sun is therefore ſo uſeful, becauſe it knows and keeps both, carrying and diſtributing its light up and down the World, to the Sons of men; anſwerably to its inſtructions, and that commiſſion given it from above.

The Lord having put queſtions to Job about the direction of the morning light, and by whom the day-ſpring is taught to know its place; proceeds to ſhew the work and effects of the day-ſpring and morning light. Haſt thou cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place?

Verſe 13. That it might take hold of the ends of the Earth.

In this verſe we have two things concerning the day-ſpring, or the light.

Firſt, the powerful extenſiveneſs of it. The light takes hold; there's its power: It takes hold of the very ends of the Earth; there's its extenſiveneſs.

Secondly, We have one part or point of the uſefulneſs or beneficialneſs of light, when it thus takes hold of the ends of the Earth; this good it doth, or this benefit comes by it, the ſhaking of the wicked out of it. As if it had been ſaid, The day-ſpring takes hold of the ends of the Earth, for this end and purpoſe, that the Earth may be freed from the wicked.

That it might take hold of the ends of the Earth.

That is, that the morning, or the day-ſpring might, &c. Some of the Rabbins refer thoſe words, that it may take hold, not to the day-ſpring, but to Job. As if the Lord had ſaid, Canſt thou, O Job, make the day to know its place, that thou mighteſt take hold of the ends of the Earth, as I do, and ſhake the wicked out of it.

לאחון
Ut apprehenderet. Kab. Sel. Jarchi.

But rather, as we, That the day-ſpring might take hold, apprehend, and hold faſt the ends of the Earth. Mr. Beza expreſſeth it in this elegancy, The Sun ſends forth its rays as ſo many fingers, to take hold of the utmoſt verges or ends of the Earth.

Ut extremas Terrarum oras radiis quaſi tottdem digitis injectis prehendet. Bez.

The Hebrew is, The wings of the Earth; and ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, To hold the wings of the Earth. By the wings of the Earth, according to an Hebraiſm very frequent in Scripture, we are to underſtand the extream or remoteſt parts of the Earth. And becauſe the wings of a Bird are ſtretched out to the very utmoſt, when ſhe flieth, the Hebrews call that which is the extream or utmoſt bound of any thing, the wings of it; and hence, in their language, the utmoſt part or hem of a Garment is the wing of a Garment, as here and elſewhere, the utmoſt parts of the Earth are the wings of the Earth (Iſa. 11.1, 2.) He ſhall ſet up an enſign for the Nations, and ſhall aſſemble the out-caſts of Iſrael, and gather together the diſperſed of Judah from the four corners (or, as the Margin hath it, wings) of the Earth. Thus the Lord ſpeaks of the light, Haſt thou cauſed the day-ſpring to know its place, that it might take hold of the ends or wings of the Earth?

כנפים
Non tam phraſi poetica quam Hebraiſmo alæ tribuuntur terræ. Pined.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Suns light is wonderfully extenſive and diffuſive.

The Sun hath large arms, or rather long wings. Some Hawks are called long winged: The ſame we may ſay of the Sun, that hath long wings indeed, reaching to the utmoſt ſtretch, ends or wings of the Earth. The Prophet Malachi comforts thoſe that fear the Name of the Lord, with this promiſe, The Sun of Righteouſneſs ſhall ariſe (to them) with healing in his wings. The Sun-beams, or the light that is conveyed in thoſe beams, are compared to wings, and they are ſpread to the very wings of the Earth, and extend themſelves over the whole Hemiſphere. The morning light like lightning, is diffuſed from Eaſt to Weſt in a moment. When it is day with one half of the World, 'tis night with the other; but where the Sun comes, it gives light all over that half-face of the Earth. The Sun is an univerſal benefit, and therefore the moſt excellent outward benefit. We ſay of every good thing, by how much 'tis the more common, communicative and extenſive, by ſo much the better it is. As evil, by how much it ſpreads itſelf the further, by ſo much the worſe it is; ſo good, by how much the more it ſpreads it ſelf, it is the better. As the natural light of the day, ſo the ſpiritual light of the Goſpel, is very diffuſive. When the Goſpel was firſt preacht by the Apoſtles of Chriſt (the day-ſpring from on high then viſiting the World) O how ſpeedily did that take hold of the ends of the Earth! David (Pſal. 22. 27.) ſpeaking of the prophetical Office of Chriſt, in ſending forth the light of his truth, ſaith, All the ends of the Earth ſhall remember and turn to God. What cauſed the ends of the Earth to remember? And what did they remember? Surely it was the light of the Goſpel, taking hold of the ends of the Earth, which cauſed the ends of the Earth to remember God and themſelves; they ſaw their danger and their duty, and ſo turned to God. By the ends of the Earth in that place of the Pſalm, we are to underſtand the inhabitants of the utmoſt parts of the Earth; who had never remembered themſelves, never conſidered themſelves, never awakened out of ſin, never turned to God, if the light of the Goſpel had not ſhined to them. The natural light is not only very extenſive, but powerful; and ſo is the light of the Goſpel, it goes to the ends of the Earth with wonderful effects. The Apoſtles had a Commiſſion from Chriſt, like that which God gives to the Sun; to carry their light, or to preach the Goſpel to every Creature. The Sun gives light and influence to every Creature (Pſal. 19. 6.) His going forth is from the end of the Heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof. Nor ſhall any thing be hid from the light, heat, and influences of the Goſpel.

Secondly, The light is exceeding ſwift, and ſpreads it ſelf far and near in a moment.

Many can go far, if you give them time; but the light goes very far, even to the ends of the Earth (upon the matter) without time; it goes almoſt in an inſtant, in the twinkling of an eye, it immediately takes hold of the ends of the Earth. As ſoon as the Sun ariſeth, light appeareth, day breaks, and with an unconceivable ſpeed illuſtrates all places within its eye, or which lie open to it. The body of the Sun moves faſt, to a wonder, but the beams of the Sun move faſter. David (Pſal. 139. 9.) ſpeaks of the wings of the morning. If I take (ſaith he) the wings of the morning (that is, the morning light) and flie to the utmoſt parts of the Earth, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, &c. The morning light is winged, and moves with incredible ſwiftneſs. The Scripture ſpeaks of the morning light, with reſpect to its ſudden motion, as if it were a feathered or winged fowl, ſpreading its rayes as ſo many feathers or plumes, over all at an inſtant. Though darkneſs, thick darkneſs, hath got poſſeſſion of the Earth in the night, yet no ſooner doth the light glimmer above the Horizon, but darkneſs is ſuddenly ſcattered. One would think there ſhould be a great battel, a long conteſt, between light and darkneſs, before light could conquer darkneſs, and get it off the face of the Earth; whereas daily experience teacheth us that the morning having once opened its eye-lids, light gets an eaſie victory, and ſheddeth it ſelf abroad every where without controul. Darkneſs is ſoon diſpelled and driven out of the Field by light. Darkneſs cannot ſtand its ground before the Sun, who is Lord of the day, according to the appointment of God.

Thus the day-ſpring takes hold of the ends of the Earth. And if any ask, why doth it ſo?

I anſwer, The day-ſpring is a great and a faithful ſervant, to man. There are many uſes of light, many ſervices, which the light doth for us; I touch ſome of them in opening the former Context. We have one ſpecial uſe or ſervice of it expreſſed in the cloſe of this verſe; It takes hold of the ends of the Earth,

That the wicked may be ſhaken out of it.

This latter part of the verſe ſeems to have little cognation with, and to be of a very difficult connexion with the former; for it may be ſaid, what hath this ſhaking of the wicked out of the Earth to do with the light taking hold of the ends of the Earth? I anſwer, The light that takes hold of the ends of the Earth, is as a Serjeant to arreſt, and take hold of the wicked, and ſo is a means to ſhake them out of the Earth. The words may carry a double Metaphor,

Firſt, To the ſhaking of a Garment. When duſt or moths, or any thing hurtful to a Garment, is found upon it, we ſhake it out. Thus the Lord ſends forth the morning light, to take hold of the ends of the Earth, as of the ends of a great Garment, that the wicked, who are but as duſt and vermine, may be ſhaken out of it.

Lux oras terræ tanquam pallii apprehendit, & ita impios excutit. Rab. Solom.

Secondly, The metaphor or alluſion may be taken from a ſieve. As the ſieve is ſhaken when we would ſeparate the Chaff, or that which is vile and worthleſs from among the good Corn; ſo the Lord by the light takes hold of the ends of the Earth, and ſhakes the wicked like droſs or darnel, out of the company of honeſt men. I, ſaith the Lord (Amos 9. 9.) will ſift the Houſe of Iſrael among all Nations, like as Corn is ſifted in a ſieve; yet ſhall not the leaſt grain fall upon the Earth, that is, be loſt or periſh. But the wicked, who are as chaff, ſhall be ſcattered, and periſh for ever, when the Lord ſifts them.

Again, Theſe words, That the wicked may be ſhaken out of it, are by ſome expounded actively; The day-ſpring taketh hold of the ends of the Earth, that the wicked may ſhake (ſc. themſelves) out of it. For when the light cometh, wicked men do, as it were, ſhake themſelves out of the Earth; that is, they hide themſelves, and run their heads into a corner. They who in the night and darkneſs go abroad doing miſchief, following wicked purpoſes, when the light appears, diſ-appear, with-draw, and play (as we ſay) leaſt in ſight (Job 24. 13.) The wicked are they that rebel againſt the light, they hate it, cannot endure it, they are like the wild Beaſts of the Earth, that raven in the night, but in the day couch in their Dens and Coverts, no man can tell where to find them (Pſal. 104. 20, 21, 22.) Thou makeſt darkneſs, and it is night, wherein all the Beaſts of the Forreſt do creep forth, &c. The Sun ariſeth, they gather themſelves together, and lay them down in their Dens. Thus the wild Beaſts are ſhaken out of the Earth, when the light appears, and ſo are wicked Beaſt-like men (John 3. 20.) Every one that doth evil, hateth the light. And as ſuch hate the ſpiritual light of the Goſpel, ſo they do not very well like the natural light of the Day. Wicked men decline the light, and are called darkneſs, and their works are called the works of darkneſs; and therefore when the Sun ariſeth, Theeves, Robbers, and all of thoſe wicked Trades, may be ſaid to ſhake themſelves out of the Earth. He that doth evil hates the light, he looks upon light as an enemy.

Fourthly, Theſe words, That the wicked might be ſhaken out of it, are rather to be underſtood of the wicked, as often apprehended in the morning, for evil done in the night. When the day-ſpring appears, it diſcovers wicked men, who being taken, examined, and tried, are by the Sentence of the Judg and Decree of the Magiſtrate, ſhaken out of the Earth. God the ſupream Judg, ſeems to ſearch the whole Earth by the Candle of the Sun, as he once threatned to ſearch Jeruſalem with Candles.

Mane judicia exercebantur. Druſ. Grot. Senſus horum verborum eſt, ut improbi die exorto trahantur ad judicia, ac ita terra excutiantur. Piſc.

Hence Note, Firſt, Light is a diſcoverer.

Light makes all things manifeſt. As the light of the Word diſcovers the evil that is in the works of wicked men, and makes that manifeſt; ſo the light of the Sun diſcovers the perſons of wicked men, and makes them manifeſt. We cannot diſtinguiſh white from black, nor can we ſee where men are, nor what they are doing, till light befriend us. And as the natural light makes things manifeſt, ſo much more doth ſpiritual light, the light of Law and Goſpel. By the power of that light wicked men are ſhaken and driven out of their ſins; by that light they ſee, judg, and condemn themſelves. And thus the wicked are indeed ſhaken out of the Earth, that is, out of their Earthly ſtate of ſin and unbelief.

Secondly, Note, Wicked men and light, are at no good agreement.

He that will continue in any evil, bears no good will to any kind of light. There is nothing more uncouth and diſpleaſing to a man that reſolves to live in ſin, than the light of the Word, yea, many times, than the light which ſhines in the Odit lucem qui turpiter agit.

Lux inimica propinquat. Vulg.

the Air. Such ſay (as he of old) when the day begins to break, Our enemy is coming. Common day-light (which is a great good) much more divine light (which is a far greater good) is counted an evil, by evil ones. What communion hath light with darkneſs (ſaid the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 6. 14.) And as they who are light, ought not to have any complying communion with darkneſs; ſo they who are darkneſs, cannot have or hold any pleaſing communion with light.

Thirdly, If we take theſe words as holding out one main deſign of the Providence of God, in ſending the light every morning; namely, that the wicked may be ſhaken out of the Earth. This ſhews that wicked men ſhould be ſpeedily proceeded with, and the Earth unburdened of them. The ordinary uſe of the light is, that men may go forth to their labour (Pſal. 104. 23.) Now, as that is one great uſe of light, that man may ſee his honeſt labour, and be guided to, or in the works of his calling; ſo another great uſe of it is, to apprehend wicked men, who do diſhoneſt work, and bring them to Judgment. David ſaid (Pſal. 101. 8.) I will early, or, in the morning, deſtroy all the wicked of the Land: As ſoon as ever the light takes hold of the ends of the Earth, if I can, I will take hold of evil doers; that is, I will not delay, much leſs, ſtop the courſe of Juſtice againſt them that do wickedly. This was a Kingly reſolve, Early will I deſtroy the wicked of the Land. This was the Prophets counſel (*Jer.*21.3.) Execute Judgment in the morning, that is, with the firſt opportunity. It is not good to be raſh in Judgment, nor is it to be ſlack in Judgment. Wicked men are a burden to the Earth, therefore 'tis fit with the firſt (when there is no other remedy) to unburden the Earth of them.

Bolduc.

There is yet another reading and expoſition of this latter part of the verſe, taking the word rendred wicked, not for perſons, but for things; and then 'tis read in the Neuter-Gender, The light takes hold of the ends of the Earth, to ſhake wicked or evil things (that is, thoſe things which are noxious to the Earth) out of it. The heat of the Sun riſing upon the Earth, exhales and draws out hurtful vapours from the Earth, which, abiding in the bowels of it, would hinder its fruit-bearing, or make it barren. This ſenſe is proſecuted all along by ſome Interpreters, quite through the 14. and 15. verſes, but I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

The Lord having ſhewed this uſe of the light which he commands every morning, ſhews (in the next verſe) ſome other uſes or effects of it.

Verſe 14. It is turned as clay to the ſeal, and they ſtand as a Garment.

Locus difficilis eſt, & quo in extricando, ſi aliquis dixerit aliquid veriſimile, à benigno lectore reſpuendum non eſt. Sanct.

This verſe (ſaith a learned Expoſiter) is ſo difficult that that he is not to be refuſed, who offers any thing probable towards the opening of it. I conceive it may be beſt underſtood as an Expoſition of thoſe words in the former part of verſe 13. That it might take hold of the ends of the Earth, it is turned as clay to the ſeal; that is, the Earth is turned as clay to the ſeal: For when the light paſſeth through the Air, it ſets as it were a new ſtamp upon the Earth. And then the former part of verſe 15. may be taken as an Expoſition of the latter part of verſe 13. That the wicked might be ſhaken out of it; and from the wicked light is with-holden; that is, they are utterly deſtroyed, and ſo ſhaken out of the Earth.

It is turned as clay to the ſeal, and they ſtand as a Garment.

כחומר חותם

Sicut lutum ſigilli, i. e. cui ſigillum imponitur. Genitivus adjuncti. Piſc.

Here are two metaphors to ſet out the renewed face of the Earth, upon the riſing of the Sun, or the appearance of the morning light.

Firſt, From clay, altered by the ſeal.

Secondly, From mans putting freſh Garments and Ornaments upon his Body.

It is turned as clay to the ſeal.] That is, The approach of light makes a great change upon the face of the Earth, even as if it had received a new or freſh impreſſion as clay doth from a ſeal. A piece of clay is a rude lump, without form or figure; but if you take a ſeal and ſtamp it, that clay readily receives any figure or coat of arms engraven on the ſeal; and ſo it is turned from what it was in appearance. Thus the meaning ſeems to be this: The Earth before the Sun riſeth is like a rude piece of clay (in the night we ſee no more beauty in the Earth, than if it had no beauty at all; go to a well compoſed Garden, walk there in a dark night, you cannot diſcern the figure of any border, nor the rareſt beauty of any flower, nor the pleaſanteſt fruit of any Tree planted there, your eye cannot take in or feaſt it ſelf upon any of thoſe delights, while darkneſs covers the face of the face of the Earth) but when the light comes, then you ſee the form or figure of every thing before you, then the Earth is turned as clay to the ſeal; the Sun, as it were ſtamps and impreſſeth a new beauty and bravery upon it; and then the Earth, which lookt like a void or rude heap, appears in its form and figure, whether natural or artificial. This ſenſe is much inſiſted upon in opening this Scripture; and 'tis a good ſenſe, ſetting forth that benefit of the light, cauſing the Earth to appear in its proper ſhape, which night or darkneſs had hidden or obſcured.

Terra ad Solis exortum immutata, novas infinitas rerum aſpectabilium formas, inſtar luti, quod figuli arbitrio effingitur recipiet, quibus tanquam veſte verſicolori induatur.

Hence Note, The ſhining of the light puts a new face, in appearance, upon the face of the Earth.

Things that appear not, are as if they were not. Nothing appears, but by the light. This is moſt true of ſpiritual light; when that ariſeth upon any place or people, that place or people are turned as clay to the ſeal, only with this difference, the natural light of the Sun doth only manifeſt what figures or ſtamps are already impreſſed upon the Earth, it doth not make any there, which were not there before; but where the Sun-ſhine of the Goſpel comes, though it were a place as rude as Barbariſm it ſelf, 'tis turned into another ſhape, the people are quite another people in their manners and converſation. It was ſo with this Nation, we were once as rude Heathens as any in the World; but by the light of the Goſpel we were turned as clay to the ſeal; we received the figure of Grace, the figure of Chriſtianity. And at this day, in thoſe places among the Indians, where the Goſpel hath lately come, marvellous changes are wrought upon them; they have another ſtamp upon their tongues, another kind of language; another ſtamp both upon hand and foot, another kind of working and walking than before. As the light of the Goſpel diſcovers evil perſons to themſelves (a natural man knows not of what ſhape he is, till he ſees himſelf in that light) ſo it makes them good, and puts a new ſtamp, a new figure upon them; it makes them indeed new Creatures, new men; they are turned (through the mighty power of the Spirit accompanying that light) as clay to the ſeal. Such (that is, as bad as could be) were ſome of you (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 6. 11.) but ye are waſhed, &c. that is, ye are now other manner of men than once ye were. It is turned as clay to the ſeal,

And they ſtand as a Garment.] They ſtand; Who ſtand as a Garment? The things of the Earth, they ſtand to look on as a Garment. All things preſent themſelves before us in a goodly hue, when the Sun riſeth; then they appear in their beauty, the whole Body of the Earth is then clothed to the eye of every beholder. As light it ſelf is like a Golden Robe, which the Earth puts off every night, and puts on again every morning; ſo light ſhews us all thoſe goodly things, which are the Earths Robes, or with which the Earth is clothed, as with a Garment. The Earth is, not only as a thing without form, but as a naked thing, as a Body without clothing to appearance, till the light appears; but as ſoon as the light appears, then whatſoever may be called the Earths clothing, and apparel, appears alſo.

Hoc hemiſtichium impersonaliter accipio. Siſtent ſe omnes res tanquam cum veſtimento, i. e. ornatiſſima beneficio apparent. Coc.

If any would know more diſtinctly, what the clothing; apparel, or Garment of the Earth is? I anſwer, Firſt, That may be called the Earths Garment, which grows out of it; the Graſs, Corn, Herbs, Flowers, Trees, all theſe Vegetables are as a Garment upon the Earth.

Secondly, Not only Vegetables, but Animals, the Beaſts of the Earth, are as a Garment to the Earth (*Pſal.*65.13.) The Paſtures are clothed with Flocks, the Valleys alſo are covered with Corn. Corn is to the Valleys, what Flocks are to the Paſtures, their Clothing.

Thirdly, Artificial things, as well as Natural, are alſo the Earths Garment. All thoſe fair buildings, Towns and Cities, all thoſe goodly Edifices and Palaces any where raiſed upon the Earth, are they not as a Garment to the Earth? So when Fruits and Flowers growing out of the Earth, Flocks and Herds living upon the Earth, Houſes and dwellings built on the Earth, are a clothing to the Earth; and they appear to be ſo, by the coming forth and appearance of the light; that ſhews the beauty and figure of the Earth, the trimmings and adornings of it: Thoſe things are to the Earth, as a rich embroidered Garment, and light manifeſts them to be ſo.

Ut ea mutata ſicut argilla ſigillari, ſiſtentur (illi) velut indumento (obducto) Jun. i. e. ut cohiberentur improbi à pergendo & ſceleribus ſuis pronovendis, tanquam ſi obvolverentur panno vultus aut pedes ipſorum ut ſequens verſus amplius explicat. Jun. Ut mutetur ea ſicut lutum cum ſigillum imprimitur; & ſiſtentur (illi) tanquam (velati) indumento. Ut moris erat velari ſontes. Piſc.

There is yet another Expoſition of this verſe 14. They ſtand as a Garment, that is, the wicked ſpoken of in the latter end of the former verſe, and are there ſaid, to be ſhaken out of the Earth; who are alſo ſpoken of, in the following verſe, where it is ſaid, Their light is with-holden, and their high arm ſhall be broken. Theſe wicked ones, when the light ſhines, are made to ſtand forth, as in a Garment; that is (ſaith one Author, noted in the Margin) the wicked are then with-held, from going on in their wickedneſs, or from proſecuting and promoting their evil deſigns and purpoſes, as if their faces were wrapt or muffled quite up with a Garment, and their feet faſt bound. Another gives the ſenſe thus; That they (namely the wicked) may be made to ſtand as covered over with a Garment. The cuſtom of old, was to cover the faces of malefactors, when found and declared guilty of horrid crimes.

Both theſe Interpretations correſpond clearly with the Context, both before and after; the Lord giving this as a ſpecial ſervice, that the day-ſpring or light doth to mankind, the diſcovery and deſtruction of evil men; as will be ſeen more fully, in opening the next verſe.

Verſe 15. And from the wicked their light is with-holden.

It was ſhewed before, that this verſe 15. ſeems to be an Expoſition of the latter part of verſe 13. There it was ſaid, The light takes hold of the ends of the Earth, that the wicked might be ſhaken out of it; here it followeth, From the wicked, their light is with-holden; that is, wicked men, when the light hath diſcovered them, are with-holden from their light, or their light is with-holden from them.

But it may be enquired, What is this light called their light, which is with-holden from them?

I anſwer, Firſt, The light of their proſperity and peace, the light of the good things of this World.

Secondly, The light of the Sun, even that ſhall be with-holden from them, they ſhall be ſhut up in cloſe and dark Priſons and Dungeons; they ſhall not have the light of the Sun, who have abuſed that light, or have done ſuch things in the dark, as the Sun would even bluſh to look on.

Deus lucem ſubducit impiis, i. e. vita illos orbat; Frangitque eorum ſuperbiam & tyrannidem. Codur.

Thirdly, The light of their life, or their life ſhall be with-holden from them; that is, they ſhall be put to death for their wickedneſs.

All theſe may be called their light, becauſe they ſometime enjoyed them; and their light in all or any of theſe notions, is ſaid to be with-holden from them, not as if they had a right to hold it longer, but becauſe they would fain have held it longer, if they might. Thus, from the wicked their light is with-holden; as if it had been ſaid, they are totally and finally deprived of all their good.

Now, whereas light in the ſenſe opened, is called their light, that is, the light of the wicked;

Note, Even the wicked have a title to light, or to good things.

God gives light or good things to the evil as well as to the good (Matth. 5.45.) He maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good; even they who are evil and are daily doing evil, enjoy the light of the Sun, and the light of all outward good things, through the patience and goodneſs of God. Much more may the godly when they ſee the light or good of this World, look upon it as theirs, as a part of their inheritance here below. As hereafter all the godly ſhall have an inheritance among the Saints in light, ſo many of them have an inheritance of light here, the Sun is a piece of their portion. God having adopted them to be his Children, the Sun is a debtor to them, and they may reckon it among their good things, though not as their good; God having provided better things for them than the light of this World, or of any good thing, which they hold only in common with the World. From the wicked their light is with-holden.

Secondly, Note, Wicked men forfeit, and ſo are deprived of the good things which God gives to them.

The wicked cannot long, ſhall not always enjoy the good things of this World. When wicked men abuſe the light, eſpecially when they reſiſt the light of Nature ſhining into their Conſciences, and refuſe the light of the Goſpel ſhining in the Scriptures and Ordinances, and reſolve to walk on in the darkneſs of their minds, then from them the light of comfort and proſperity is with-holden; yea, they are often thruſt out of the light of the Sun, and out of the light of this preſent life, into that inner darkneſs of the Grave, and into that outer darkneſs of Hell (Matth. 25. 30.) that is, into a darkneſs furtheſt remote, or at greateſt diſtance from light, even out of the reach of light. Doth God ſay to his own people when they ſin (Jer. 5. 25.) Your ſins have with-holden good things from you? Much more then ſhall the light and all good things, or all the good things of light be with-holden from the wicked, whoſe whole trade and buſineſs lies in works of darkneſs, or in ſinning againſt God. 'Tis bad with man, when God with-holds Natural light, the light of the Sun, the good things of this World from him; but 'tis infinitely worſe with man, when God with-holds the light of the Goſpel, and the light of his countenance, any ſpiritual light or good from him, and ſhuts any up in the contrary darkneſs. From the wicked light is with-holden.

And the high arm ſhall be broken.

Whoſe high arm? Surely the high arm of the wicked; they ſhall be deprived both of their light of comfort, and of their arm of ſtrength: Wherein,

First, They prided themſelves. And

Secondly, Wherewith they oppreſſed others.

The former is the effect of their ſtrength; the latter is the uſe which they uſually put their ſtrength to.

Cadunt impii à fælicitate ſua, & vires (id ſignificat brachium excelſum) debilitantur & redduntur infirmæ. Vatabl. Brachium elatum eſt potentia & ſuperbia impiorum. Piſc.

Strength is often expreſt in Scripture by the arm; read Pſal. 10. 15. & 37. 17. Ezek. 30.22. And a high arm notes great ſtrength. The Lord is ſaid to do his great things with a ſtretched out (or a high arm) Mans arm may here be called an high arm, becauſe the arm of man uſeth to be lifted up on high to ſtrike hard and home. The higher the arm is lifted up, the heavier it falls, and the deeper impreſſion it makes. To ſin with a high hand, is in Scripture language to ſin preſumptuouſly and audaciouſly. They ſin with a high hand, who ſin againſt light, or in the face of counſel and reproof. And as they ſin mightily, or with all their might, who ſin with a high hand; ſo they act mightily, or with all their might, they lay on load (as we ſay) who reſolving to do any thing, have a high arm to do it with. When the arms of wicked men are high, they muſt needs act highly in wickedneſs. Now when any act evil to the height, with heat and boldneſs, God will take a courſe with them; as it followeth in the cloſe of the verſe, The high arm, that is, ſuch a high arm

Shall be broken.] 'Tis an alluſion to the puniſhing of malefactors, by breaking their Bodies or Bones upon a Wheel. To be broken, is to be utterly ſpoiled. A broken heart is a great mercy (Pſal. 51. 17.) but a broken arm notes a great miſery.

Damnabitur ad mortem & quidem cruciabilem, qualis eſt in rota fractio. Grot.

This Scripture threatens the high arm with breaking, yet it leaves us unreſolved, or ſaith nothing expreſly, about theſe three Queries:

Firſt, Whoſe high arm is here threatned with breaking?

Secondly, By whom the high arm ſhall be broken?

Thirdly, How or by what means, or in what manner it ſhall be broken?

I anſwer to the firſt, Theſe terrible words are not level'd nor intended againſt any high arm (eo nomine) upon that account, becauſe it is high. God is not angry with the highneſs of men. They who are higheſt, and have the higheſt arm among men, may be highly pleaſing unto God. The higheſt powers on Earth, are of Gods ordaining and appointing; now, God cannot be againſt his own ordinances and appointments; therefore he never breaks the high arm, becauſe 'tis high in power, but becauſe 'tis high in wickedneſs. So then we may be confident, 'tis only the high arm of the wicked which is here threatned to be broken.

To the ſecond and third Queries, I anſwer in a word; it is God who breaks the high arm, and he breaks it in what manner, and by what means ſoever pleaſeth him.

In which we may ſee a ſignal work of divine Providence, which doth not ſuffer the difference of good and evil, of right and wrong, to paſs long unobſerved. And in this paſſage poſſibly, the Lord might intend a refutation of what Job ſaid (Chap. 10. 3.) That God ſhined upon the Counſels of the wicked: For ſeeing the very light or life of the wicked is with holden from them, and their high arm broken, doth not God declare and teſtifie that he loveth righteouſneſs, and hateth iniquity? And if the miniſtration of Divine Juſtice lie in the dark at any time, doth not the return of the light every day intimate, that a day of the revelation of the righteous Judgment of God is at hand? The high arm ſhall be broken.

Hence Note, Firſt, Wicked men may grow high, and have a very high and ſtrong arm.

Therefore be not ſcandalized when 'tis ſo. The moſt high God often ſuffers it to be ſo. The wicked man in the Text is he that hath the high arm.

Note, Secondly, As all men by Nature are altogether wicked in their ſtate, ſo ſome of them are extreamly wicked in their lives;

Obſerva in voce רשעים hoc verſiculo & v. 13. literam ע in Bibliis magnis & exempla. emendatis ſuſpenſam eſſe, i. e. non eodem tenore cum aliis ſcriptam ſed ſupra cæteras ſurſum verſus pendere hoc modo רשעים quod forſan myſterio non caret, quaſi lux impiis & totus eorum ſplendor ſit in ſuſpenſo, non ſtabilis. Merc.

They ſin with an high hand, or with an high arm; they ſin as if they would dare God himſelf. Not only have wicked men been high in power, and high in place; but there they have ſinned highly, and ſtretched forth their hand againſt Heaven it ſelf.

Note, Thirdly, The wicked, how high or how ſtrong ſoever they are, they ſhall be broken.

A learned Interpreter takes notice, that in the larger Bibles, and moſt correct Copies, the Hebrew word ſignifying the wicked, both in this 15. verſe, and in the 13. verſe, hath one letter raiſed up higher than the reſt, and exceeding the ordinary form of writing; as may be ſeen, if the Reader pleaſe to caſt his eye upon the quotation in the Margin. This (ſaith my Author) is not (poſſibly) without a myſtery; even to intimate thus much, that all the proſperity and outward ſplendor of the wicked hangs in ſuſpence, or is very tottering and unſtable. But whatever occaſioned that irregularity in the Hebrew writing, or whatever it may import, this is a ſure truth, that the higheſt eſtate of the wicked is very unſure.

The Lord (who as Solomon ſaith, (Eccleſ. 5.8.) is higher than the higheſt (on Earth) can quickly bring down the higheſt, and break or cruſh the ſtrong arm, as one would break a reed, or cruſh a moth. Thus the Lord beſpake Edom by his Prophet (Jer 49.16.) O thou that dwelleſt in the clifts of the Rock, that holdeſt the height of the hill; though thou ſhouldeſt make thy neſt as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, ſaith the Lord. And thus the Lord ſpake by another Prophet concerning the Amorite, (Amos 2. 9.) His height was like the height of the Cedars, and he was ſtrong as the Oaks; yet I deſtroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath; that is, I utterly deſtroyed him. Yea, the very being of the wicked high and ſtrong, is an argument that they ſhall be brought low, deſtroyed, and broken to pieces. When Babylons arm ſhall be in its higheſt height, When ſhe ſhall ſay in her heart, I ſit as Queen (that is, on high) and am no Widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. When Babylon is thus propheſying all good of her ſelf, and promiſing all good to her ſelf, then ſhall her plagues come in one day, death and famine, and mourning, and ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire; for ſtrong is the Lord, who Judgeth her (Rev. 18. 7, 8.) He will break her high arm, and break it when ſhe thinks it higheſt, and her ſelf ſafeſt. David whoſe arm God raiſed on high, affirmed all this of wicked high ones in general, or of all thoſe, who ſhould be found high in wickedneſs (Pſal. 92. 7, 8.) When the wicked ſpring as graſs, and when all the workers of iniquity do flouriſh, it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever. As if he had ſaid, that's the meaning of their proſperity, you may ſpell that out of it, or make that interpretation of it, they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever. As the Lord remembers his people in their low eſtate, becauſe his mercy endureth for ever (Pſal. 136.23.) ſo he will take vengeance on the wicked in their high eſtate, becauſe his Juſtice endureth for ever.

The leaſt ſin deſerves a breaking; but when the arm of ſin is grown very high, we may ſay the Lords arm cannot hold, he muſt break ſuch high arms. The Prophet Jeremy (Chap. 6. 6.) ſpeaking of Jeruſalem, ſaith, This City is to be viſited; how viſited? There is a two-fold viſiting:

Firſt, In favour, care, and kindneſs.

Secondly, In wrath and judgment.

Uſually when the Scripture ſpeaks of viſiting a City or a Land, it is meant in Wrath and in Judgment. Shall I not viſit for theſe things, ſaith the Lord? (Jer. 5. 9.) Surely I ſhall, there is no avoiding my viſitation. What kind of viſitation is meant, the next words evidence, Shall not my Soul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? To be viſited with Vengeance and Wrath, is a ſad Viſitation, and ſo was Jeruſalem to be viſited. But why was the City Jeruſalem to be viſited in wrath? There's no City whoſe Inhabitants are ſo juſt and righteous, but the Lord may viſit them in wrath; but of this City the Lord ſaid, it is wholly oppreſſion; they are given up to oppreſſion, every one is oppreſſing and wronging his Brother; now when they ſinned at this rate, when their arm was thus high in wickedneſs, then it was to be broken. There is a righteous God that Judgeth the Earth; and therefore the high arm of unrighteouſneſs ſhall be broken.

VERS. 16, 17, 18.

Haſt thou entred the ſprings of the Sea? Or haſt thou walked in the ſearch of the depth?
Have the gates of Death been opened unto thee? Or haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of Death?
Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the Earth? Declare, if thou knoweſt it all.

IN the former Context the Lord made a ſhort digreſſion from thoſe queſtionings with which he had begun with Job, concerning his works; the occaſion whereof was the mentioning of the wicked, who improved not, but abuſed his works.

In this Context the Lord returns to his former way of interrogating Job, and having queſtioned him about the birth or production of the Sea, the bands and bounds of the Sea, at the eighth, ninth, tenth, and eleventh verſes, he queſtions him here,

Firſt, About the depth of, the unſearchable depth of the Sea (verſ. 16, 17.)

Secondly, About the vaſt breadth of the Earth (verſ. 18.)

Thereby to convince Job, that he, not being able to reach the depth of thoſe mighty waters, nor to comprehend the breadth of the Earth, was much leſs able to comprehend the depth of thoſe counſels, or the breadth of thoſe ways of providence in which himſelf had been walking towards him. That's the general ſcope and ſum of theſe three verſes, as alſo of all that follow, as hath been ſhewed formerly.

The laſt thing about which the Lord put the queſtion, was the Light, whereby hidden and ſecret things are diſcovered; here the queſtion is about things that lie out of the light, about hidden and ſecret things; all which yet are more plain and obvious to, more open and naked before the eye of God, with whom we have to do, than the Noon-day light to us.

Verſe 16. Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea?

הֲבָאתָ Numquid ingreſſus es, vel penetraſti?

Haſt thou?] Doubtleſs thou haſt not, nor haſt thou any mind to enter into thoſe ſprings? Who hath? Haſt thou entred or penetrated the ſprings of the Sea? There is a two-fold entring into the ſprings of the Sea, or into any thing that lies remote from us.

Firſt, A Local.

Secondly, An Intellectual entring.

To be ſure, Job had not locally entred the ſprings of the Sea; and it was as ſure, that he was not able to make any perfect intellectual entrance thither. When therefore the Lord asked Job this queſtion, Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of Oportet judicem noſſe ea de quibus judicaturus eſt: Tu vero judicas de operibus meis, cum ea non noris. Vatabl.

of the Sea? It is as if he had ſaid, It becomes him that makes a Judgment upon any matter, to enter into it either locally to view it with the eye, or intellectually to view it with his underſtanding; but thou, O Job, haſt neither of theſe ways entred into the ſprings of the Sea, and there diſcovered how the waters flow or riſe up out of the Earth: How then canſt thou make up a Judgment about the waters? And if not, what Judgment canſt thou make up concerning my deep counſels, concerning the ſecret ſprings of my Judgments?

Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea?

עי
דבכי־ים
Ad plorata, i. e. lacrymas maris. Druſ.
Aliqui נבכי fluenta, non à flendo ſed à ביך perplexum eſſe deducunt. Et reddunt perplexitates maris. Senſus eodem recidit, ſed Grammatica magis quadrat ut à בכה flevit, defletatur. Merc.

There is an elegancy in the word rendred Springs, which ſome derive from a root which ſignifies to weep or ſhed tears: Haſt thou entred among the tears or weeping places of the Sea? The ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies an eye, as alſo a ſpring or fountain; becauſe as the eye drops, yea pours out tears (David ſaith, Rivers of tears run down mine eyes) ſo, ſprings pour out waters, and are, as it were, weeping continually. Others derive the word from a root, which ſignifieth to be infolden or intangled; and ſo they render it, Haſt thou entred into the perplexities or intricacies of the Sea? Pharaoh uſed that word in the Verb (Exod. 14. 3.) concerning the people of Iſrael, They are intangled or perplexed in the Land: He thought he had caught them in the briars, and ſhould have had his will, or ſatisfied his luſt on them. The ſenſe is much the ſame, whether we read the ſprings or the perplexities and intricate places of the Sea; both tending to the ſame purpoſe, to ſhew Job his utter incompetency and inability for ſuch an adventure. Haſt thou entred into the ſprings

Mare dicitur Jamim voce deducta Maiim tranſpoſitis quibuſdam literis.

Of the Sea?] The Sea is a confluence of many waters, the great Veſſel which God prepared to hold the multitude of waters, as was ſhewed before at the eighth verſe; only take notice, that the word which ſignifies the Sea, is compoſed of the ſame letters (a little tranſpoſed) with that which ſignifies the water. The Sea being the gathering together of waters, and water being the ſubſtance of the Sea, one word in ſubſtance ſerves them both in the Hebrew tongue. Yet others ſay it alludes, at leaſt, to a word ſignifying to make a noiſe, or to roar; Seas and Floods make a terrible noiſe and roaring. David aſcribes a voice to the Floods (Pſal. 93. 3.) The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voices. Theſe Grammatical criticiſms about words have their uſe, giving ſome light about the nature and qualities of things. But to the Text, Haſt thou entred into the Springs of the Sea?

And haſt thou walked in the ſearch of the depth?

תהום Abyſſus, vorago, altitudo, expers fundi.

This latter part of the verſe is of the ſame importance with the former. The ſprings of the Sea, and the ſearch of the depth, have little, if any, difference, and walking follows upon entring; therefore the Lord having ſaid, Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea? Saith, Haſt thou walked, &c.

But more diſtinctly, what is the ſearch and what the depth? The depth, is the Sea, where 'tis deepeſt, ſo deep that no bottom can be found by ſounding. The word rendred here ſearch, notes the laſt or utmoſt of any thing, and ſo the deepeſt of the depth, which poſſibly may be called the ſearch of the depth, becauſe how much or how long ſoever it is ſearched for, it cannot be found out. Mr. Broughton renders it, The border of the Sea; the Vulgar Latine, The laſt or utmoſt of the depth. Haſt thou walked there? We walk on dry Land and in pleaſant Fields: Some artificial parts of the Earth are by way of eminence called walks, becauſe they are purpoſely fitted by art to walk in. But who can walk in the ſearches of the depth? Are there any under-water-walks?

Et in noviſſimis abyſſi deambulaſti Vulg. i. e. in infimis ejus partibus. Aquin. Vox חקר ſignificat aliquid quærere & inveſtigare uſque ad fundum & noviſſimum.

To clear theſe words a little further, we may conſider two other readings or tranſlations of them.

First, Thus, Haſt thou walked in the depth by ſearch? That is, Haſt thou found out a way to go to the bottom of the Sea by curious ſearch and diligent inquiry? Haſt thou by thy skill diſcovered how deep the Sea is? Haſt thou let down thy line and plummet to fathom it, and then deſcended into it? I know thou haſt not.

An ad dimetiendum abyſſum ambulaſti. Heb. in inveſtigatione, i. e. ad inveſtigandum. Codurc.

Secondly, Haſt thou walked to ſearch the deep? That is, Haſt thou gone down to the bottom of the Sea, and there diſcovered the ſecret and hidden paths of it? I know (thy anſwer muſt be) Thou haſt not. Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the Sea? Or haſt thou walked in the ſearch of the depth?

Hence Note, Firſt, There are ſecrets or depths in the Sea, beyond mens ſearching or finding out.

The Sea in many parts of it may be ſearched. Some have been at the bottom of it, many have let down a line to the bottom of it; yet it is uſual in Scripture to ſpeak of the Sea as a thing unſearchable, or ſo deep, that none can find the depth of it. The Sea is ſo deep, that it is ſometimes called the depth (Chap. 28. 1.) The depth ſaith (that is, the Sea ſaith) it (that is, wiſdom) is not in me. 'Tis alſo called the deep (Luke 5. 4. Chap. 8. 31.) That is very deep, which is called the deep; and that's of an unſearchable depth, which is called the depth. Such a depth, ſo deep is the Sea, that no man knows how deep, or what the depth of it is?

Now, if we cannot reach the depth of the natural Sea, then (which is the ſcope of this place) ſurely there are depths and ſecrets in the ways and counſels of God, which no man can ſearch or find out. David (Pſal. 139. 9.) ſpeaking of the Omnipreſence of God, ſaith, Whither ſhall I go from thy preſence? If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the Sea; there ſhall thy hand find me. There is no depth, no breadth, but God can find it out; but how little of the depth or breadth of God can we find out! (Pſal. 36. 6.) Thy Judgments are a great deep; that is, thou O Lord doſt terrible things in Judgment as angry, yet ſuch righteous things, as juſt and wiſe, that 'tis very hard for any, and impoſſible for the many, or moſt of men to ſee the reaſon of them. And doubtleſs, it was the deep of his own divine Judgments that God intended to lead Job to, when he ſpake here of the depth of the Sea. We read what the Apoſtle was forced to, when he was but, as it were, dipping his feet into this Sea of the Counſels and Judgments of God, even to cry out, O the depth (Rom. 11. 33.) As if he had ſaid, I dare not enter into the ſprings of the Sea, nor into the ſearch of this depth. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his Judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! This was David's expreſs Confeſſion concerning the providential way of God, His way is in the Sea, and his path in the great waters, and his foot-ſteps are not known (Pſal. 77. 19.) Goings upon the water leave no print behind them, we cannot obſerve a track in the Sea. God walks ſometimes as upon the Land, we may eaſily diſcern his footſteps, and ſee where he hath gone: But he often walks as upon the Sea, where no man can ſee his paths, nor are his footſteps known. The Lord is known by the Judgment which he executeth (Pſal. 9. 16.) yet his Judgments are ſeldom known, they are a great deep, a Sea. The Sea is a clear emblem of all obſcure and unknown things, eſpecially of thoſe ways of God which are too deep for our diſcovery, and lie beyond the reach of our knowledg. And indeed, as ſoon may we hold the Sea in the hollow of our hand, or lade it dry with a Cockle-ſhell, as comprehend the deep counſels of God, and the myſteries of providence, by which they are acted and affected in our ſhallow underſtanding. Only what we cannot attain, either by ſenſe or reaſon, we may underſtand by faith, as the Apoſtle ſaith, we do that the Worlds were made by the Word of God (Heb. 11. 3.) Who is able, any other way than by believing, to enter into thoſe ſprings, or walk in the ſearch of thoſe depths?

Profunditas maris rei obſcuriſſimæ & ignotiſſimæ humanæ intelligentiæ ſoli Deo perſpectæ ſymbolum.

Secondly, Learn this from it, There is nothing a ſecret unto God.

That which is here denied unto Job, is to be affirmed of God. Job knew not thoſe ſecrets, but God knew them. Job himſelf ſaid (Chap. 9. 8.) God treadeth upon the waves (or as the Hebrew is, the heights) of the Sea. Here the Lord intimateth that he walketh in the depth of the Sea: Both ſet forth his glory. God commands from top to bottom, he treads upon the waves aloft; he walks in the depths below; nothing can eſcape either his Power or his Eye. It is the ſole priviledg of God to walk in the ſearch of the Sea, that is, to find out and plainly to diſcern the moſt ſecret things. And by him the moſt unſearchable depths are ſearched out, or rather, are known to him without ſearch. He knoweth even the depth of mans heart, which is the greateſt depth in the world, next to the depth of his own heart. God enters into the ſprings of that Sea, the Sea of mans heart, and walketh in the ſearch of that depth. There are innumerable ſprings in the heart of man, which bubble up, and ſend forth their ſtreams of good or evil continually; all which the Lord ſees more plainly than we ſee any thing that is done above ground, or in the open light. Moſes doth not onely report (Gen. 6. 5.) That God ſaw the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth (that is, that his outward practiſes or converſation was very wicked) but that he ſaw every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was onely evil continually. Conſider, God ſaw not onely the thoughts of man, but every imagination (which is the leaſt thing imaginable) of mans thoughts. He ſaw (as the word which we render imagination properly ſignifies) every figment, every little creature which the thoughts of mans heart was about to frame; and O how many, how exceeding many, or innumerable, are they! yet God ſaw not onely ſome, or many, but every one of them. It was ſaid by one of the Ancients upon this place, God goes to the depth of the ſea, as often as he goeth into the depth of mans heart, and beholds what is there. And there he beholds not onely the great but ſmall beaſts (as the Pſalmiſt calls the fiſh of the ſea) that is, not onely great but ſmall luſts and fooliſh imaginations: the huge multitudes and ſhoals of vain thoughts which ſwim and play in that wide ſea of mans heart, are diſtinctly ſeen, and as diſtinctly judged, as if but one were there.

Profundum maris deus ingreditur, quando viſitare mentes etiam preſſas ſceleribus non dedignatur. Greg. l. 29. c. 7.

Thirdly, From the ſcope of this place, Note, That ſeeing we cannot ſearch into the depth of the ſea, it ſhould ſtay our curioſity in ſearching into, and ſtay us from diſcontent, when we cannot find the depth of Gods Counſels concerning us, and of his Providences towards us.

There is a dutiful ſearch into the Works of God. David ſpeaks of it (Pſal. 11. 1. 12.) The works of the Lord are great, ſought out of all thoſe that have pleaſure in them. They are ſought out; that is, they who have pleaſure in them, do and will endeavour ſoberly to ſearch them out, as much as may be; but let all take heed of ſearching them wantonly or preſumptuouſly, that is, either to ſatisfie their curioſity, or with an opinion that they can teach the depth of them. The Lord would have us ſatisfie our ſelves in the ignorance, or rather neſcience of thoſe natural things which he hath not made known to us. Surely then (which is, as hath been ſaid, the ſcope of this Chapter) we ſhould be ſatisfied, though we in ſome caſes know not, nor can perceive the reaſon of Gods providential dealings, either towards particular perſons and families, or his Church in general. Will any wiſe or ſober man vex and diſquiet himſelf, will he be angry and pettiſh, becauſe he knows not all the ſecrets of the earth and ſea? (as ſome ſay Ariſtotle the Philoſopher was, to death and drowning, becauſe he could not find out the reaſon why the ſea in one place ebbed and flowed ſeven times in one day) Why then ſhould we be impatient, becauſe the reaſon of Gods proceedings with the ſons of men, or of the ſtrange ebbings and flowings of things in the ſea of this world, is ſecreted and hidden from us. And therefore when we are not able to enter into the ſprings of this ſea, nor to walk in the ſearch of this depth, let it not trouble us, but humble us, as it did Job, to whom the Lord put theſe queſtions, and proceeded to put more and more hard queſtions, if harder can be, in the next words.

Verſ. 17. Have the gates of death been opened (or revealed) unto thee? Or haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of death?

Here is another ſtrange queſtion. Who among the living hath had the gates of death opened to him? Or hath viewed the doors of the ſhadow of death?

We read often in Scripture of the gates of death (Pſal. 9. 13. Pſal. 107. 18.) and which is all one, of the gates of the grave, (Iſa. 38. 10.) but who knows what theſe gates are? yet we may ſay ſomething towards the clearing of this queſtion. A gate in ſtrict ſenſe, is that by which we are admitted into any place: and ſo, the gates of death are,

Num illius profunda, quæ verè dixerim mortis regiam, &c. ſtimatus es. Bez.

That, whatſoever it is, by which we enter into death, or go into the black hall of the grave.

Again, The gates of death are any great and eminent danger. Then we may be ſaid to be at the gates of death, when our lives are in great hazard to be loſt, either by the violence of enemies, or by any violent ſickneſs.

In the former ſenſe David ſpake (in way of ſupplication, Pſal. 9. 13.) Have mercy on me, O Lord, conſider my trouble, which I ſuffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death; that is, from deadly danger. In the latter he ſpake by way of narration, in his elegant deſcription of the ſick, (Pſal. 107. 18.) Their ſoul abhorreth all manner of meat, and they draw near unto the gates of death; that is, they are ready to die, or ſick unto death. And thus ſaid King Hezekiah upon his ſick-bed, and as he thought (a little before) upon his death-bed; (Iſa. 38. 10.) I ſhall go to the gates of the grave, I am deprived of the reſidue of my years; that is, of thoſe years which I might have reckoned upon as mine, according to the common account of mans life, or the uſual courſe of nature.

Theſe are the more general gates of death, and about theſe all agree.

But there are ſeveral opinions, what ſhould be ſpecially intended by the gates of death in this place.

Firſt, One riſeth very high, ſaying, that by the gates of death we are to underſtand the viſible heavens; becauſe the heavenly bodies ſend down ſometimes malignant influences, which have a mighty power to corrupt the bodies of men here below, ſo cauſing death to carry them away. Thus he imagins death iſſuing out of the clouds, as out of opened gates, upon men on earth; But that's a far-fetcht interpretation.

Portæ mortis ſunt cauſæ corruptionis quantum ad virtutes corporum cœleſtium. Aquin. in loc.

Secondly, Others go to the utmoſt contrary point, and ſay, by the gates of death we are to underſtand Hell. The Papiſts give a deſcription of ſeveral receptacles for ſouls departed under the earth, they make at leaſt three diſtinctions:

Firſt, Lumbus Patrum, The place where they affirm the ſouls of the Fathers were before Chriſt came in the fleſh, and had accompliſhed the work of our redemption here on earth.

Secondly, Purgatory, the place where the ſouls of all that die in mortal ſin (as they diſtinguiſh) are reſerved to purged by temporary puniſhments, before they can get to heaven.

Thirdly, The loweſt of all, is that which we call Hell, the place of the damned, whither all go (ſay they, and we too) who die in ſin without repentance. This place of torment, ſome take for the gates of death. But ſeeing the Lord is here ſpeaking of natural things, not of moral actions, nor of the conſequences of them, rewards and puniſhments, therefore (though we may truly call Hell the gates or power of death, yet) that notion as well as the former is altogether heterogeneal in this Text.

Thirdly, Several expound the gates of death, in connection with the former verſe, for the depth or bottom of the ſea, where many dead carcaſes lie rotting; all ſuch as are caſt away by ſhipwracks, or die at ſea, being uſually thrown into the deep; and therefore at laſt the ſea ſhall give up her dead, as well as the earth.

Fourthly, The gates of death ſignifie ſay others, nothing elſe but the grave, or thoſe lower parts of the earth, in which mens bodies deceaſed are buried and laid up to reſt till the reſurrection. When we, that are earth in our conſtitution, go out of the world by diſſolution, our return is into the earth, into the lower parts of the earth, we ſleep in the duſt. According to this ſenſe it is as if the Lord had ſaid, Haſt thou ſeen the ſtate of the dead, or how it fares with them that are gone to their graves? Haſt thou viſited the courts and palaces of the King of terrors? Thus the gates of death are the gates of the dead.

Per portas mortis intelliguntur loca ſubterraneas, eò quod ibi mortui ſepeliuntur. Piſc.

Dicuntur portæ mortis, i. e. mortuorum.

Fifthly, We may underſtand by the gates of death in general, whatſoever is moſt remote and fartheſt off from our ſight and view. As if the Lord, who ſaid before, Haſt thou entred into the ſprings of the ſea? had ſaid here, Haſt thou entred into the bowels or deepeſt abyſſes of the earth, which are dark and uncomfortable, as the grave, or like the very gates of of death? Knoweſt thou, or canſt thou tell me what is done, or how things go there?

An noſti quæ fiunt in viſceribus terræ. Vatabl.

Or haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of death?

Portæ mortis & umbræ mortis ſunt ea loca, ad quæ vivus non penetrat, quæ nulla lux irradiat, &c. Coc.

Theſe words are of a like intendment with the former: The gates of death, and the doors of the ſhadow of death, are the ſame thing under a little difference of expreſſion. What the ſhadow of death is, hath been ſhewed (chap. 3. 5.) as alſo (chap. 10. 21.) thither I refer the Reader. Haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of death? Surely thou haſt not? Thou neither deſireſt, nor dareſt viſit the doors leading to thoſe diſmal ſhadows, which no light can pierce, or where (as Job ſpake, chap. 10. 21.) The light is as darkneſs. The ſcope of both the queries in this verſe is the ſame alſo with thoſe in the former, even to repulſe Jobs curioſity in ſearching into the ſecrets of God, or to convince him that God had ſecrets which were no more opened to him than the gates of death, and which he could ſee no more than the doors of the ſhadow of death. Haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of death? Taking death in a proper ſenſe,

Note, Firſt, Bodily death hath gates and doors, paſſages and entrances into it.

Deadly ſickneſſes and extream dangers are (as was ſhewed in opening the words) thoſe gates and doors. Many have been brought to thoſe gates, and have been ſtepping into thoſe ſhadows, who yet have been recalled and brought back again, as David and Hezekiah were, and as the Apoſtle Paul was, who had the ſentence of death in himſelf, yet was delivered, truſting in him who raiſed the dead (2 Cor. 1. 9, 10.)

And therefore in all ſuch caſes, whenever we are brought to the gates of death, and to the doors of the ſhadow of death, let us have recourſe to the living God; to that God, to whom belong the iſſues from death (Pſal. 68. 20.) He that is our God, is the God of ſalvation, of eternal ſalvation, and of temporal ſalvation, of ſalvation from death by ſickneſs, and of ſalvation from death by danger and trouble: our God is the God of ſalvation, to him belong the iſſues from death. As God openeth the gates of death to let man in, ſo he can open the gates of death to let man out. As there is a gate to go in unto, ſo there is a gate to go out from, or an outgate from death. As the ways to, ſo the iſſues from death belong to God. Davids heart was full of this, when having ſaid (Pſal. 141. 7.) Our bones are ſcattered at the graves mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth; that is, we are ready to be cut in pieces and periſh by our enemies (having I ſay) ſaid this, he preſently adds, (verſ. 8, 9.) But mine eyes are unto thee, O God the Lord, in thee is my truſt; leave not my ſoul deſtitute, keep me from the ſnare which they have laid for me, &c. It is the royal priviledge of Jeſus Chriſt, to be key-keeper of the grave (Rev. 1. 18.) I have the keys of hell and of death; that is, I have power to deliver over to, and to deliver or keep from both hell and death. The keys are an emblem of power and authority. Stewards have the keys. He that hath the keys of death, can deliver from death.

Secondly, Taking death properly, Note; No living man knoweth how or in what way he ſhall die.

The gates of death are not revealed to any man; he hath no certainty by what means he ſhall paſs out of this world to the grave; he cannot tell through what gate he ſhall go, whether through the gate of a natural death, or of a violent death, as Chriſt ſpake to Peter (John 21. 18.) When thou waſt young, thou girdeſt thy ſelf, and wenteſt whither thou wouldeſt; but when thou ſhalt be old, another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldſt not: this ſpake he, ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorifie God. Peter did not know what death he ſhou'd die, whether a natural or a violent death, till Chriſt ſignified it to him. And if man knoweth not at what kind of gate he ſhall enter the houſe of death, that is, whether by ſickneſs or violence, then much leſs doth he know the particular ſickneſs or violence, by which, as a gate, he muſt paſs into the houſe of death; theſe things the Lord keeps in his own hand. And ſeeing we know not theſe gates of death, we ſhould always pray that we may know the path of life (Pſal. 16. 11.) Thou wilt ſhew me the path of life, was Davids aſſurance as a type of Chriſt. And though Chriſt ſhould not ſhew any man the gate of his own temporal death, yet he ſheweth every godly man the path of eternal life, and that's enough for us.

Thirdly, Note, God onely knoweth when, how, and in what way we ſhall die, as alſo what the ſtate and condition of the dead is.

Death is the darkeſt and obſcureſt thing in the world. The grave is a gloomy place, and filled not only with natural but metaphorical darkneſs; yet all is light to God, he knows the gates of death, and the ſtate of the dead (Prov. 15. 11.) The grave and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more the hearts of the children of men!

Fourthly, Taking the gates of death generally, for any ſecret or hidden thing,

Note; Man knoweth no more then God revealeth to him.

When God puts the queſtion, Have the gates of death been opened or revealed to thee? it is as if he had ſaid, thou canſt not know them unleſs they are opened to thee. And who can open them, if I my ſelf do not? As all the myſteries of the Goſpel are hidden from us, till God is pleaſed to reveal them; ſo in nature there are many things which are myſteries and ſecrets to us, till God makes them known to us. And there are ſome things which God will no more open to us, than he hath the gates of death, or the doors of the ſhadow of death. And if ſo, then, as God will never blame us for not knowing thoſe things which he hath hidden, ſo we ſhould not buſie our ſelves with any enquiries about hidden things. Though the ſecret of the Lord be with thoſe that fear him (Pſal. 25. 14.) yet they that fear him, will not, dare not meddle with, nor ſearch into the Lords ſecret. Therefore,

Laſtly, Obſerve, Whatſoever God is not pleaſed to reveal to us, or is pleaſed to hide from us, that we ſhould be content not to know, and be ſatisfied that it is hidden from us.

(Deut. 29. 29.) The ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God; but thoſe things which are revealed, belong unto us and our children for ever. It is both our duty and our intereſt, to be content with our own ſhare, or to be ſatisfied with what belongs to us, and not to invade Gods peculiars or reſerves. It was Jobs fault, he would be entring into the ſecrets of God, but ſaith God, Have the gates of death been opened unto thee, or haſt thou ſeen the doors of the ſhadow of death? if not, then be not troubled that thoſe things are not opened to thee, which I have reſerved to my ſelf. God hath not ſtraitned us in any needful point of knowledge, there is enough opened to us, though the gates of death be not. Is it not enough for us, that in the glaſs of the Goſpel, God hath ſet before us, the myſteries of eternal ſalvation, unleſs he alſo acquaint us in the day of our trial (which was Jobs caſe) with all the whole myſtery of his temporal diſpenſations?

The Lord having urged Job with theſe hard queſtions about the depth of the Sea and the gates of death, ſeems now to offer him a more eaſie queſtion in the next verſe.

Verſ. 18. Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the earth? Declare if thou knoweſt it all.

Τῆς ὑπ᾽ οὐρανόν. Sept. Sic terram eleganter circumloquuntur; nã quicquid ſub cœlo aereo, terra eſt, aer terram ambit. Druſ.

The Septuagint render, Haſt thou perceived the breadth of that which is under the heavens? Under the Cope or Canopy of the heavens. Haſt thou perceived how broad that is which is ſpanned or compaſſed about by the heavens; that is, as we tranſlate, the breadth of the earth. That which is circled or ſurrounded by the aereal heavens is the earth: Haſt thou perceived the breadth of that. Though the earth be better known to man than the depth of the ſea; yet no man ever ſaw the whole earth. Many parts of the earth are deſerts and unpaſſable by man. The beſt Writers ſay the whole compaſs of the earth is 21600 miles; yet that is rather a ſuppoſition, than a demonſtration; no man having ever viſited or viewed the whole face of the earth. We find (Job 11. 9.) length aſcribed to the earth earth, and breadth to the ſea; but in this place the Lord having aſcribed depth to the ſea, gives breadth to the earth. We are not here to take the breadth of the earth, according to the rules of Geography; for ſo the length of the earth is from Eaſt to Weſt, and the breadth from North to South; but breadth is here put ſynecdochically for all the dimenſions, or the whole circumference of the Earth. As if the Lord had ſaid, Doſt thou know how big how ſpacious the Earth is? The breadth of the Earth import the largeneſs of it, oppoſed to ſtraitneſs or narrowneſs; and to ſhew that here the breadth contains all dimenſions, the word is in the Plural Number, Haſt thou known the breadths of the Earth, that is, the whole compaſs of it, how broad and how long, and ſo how big the Earth is? Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the Earth?

Terræ latitudo hoc in loco, eſt univerſus terræ ambitus. רחבי Pluralis à רחב latitudo. In qualibet re major dimenſio vocatur longitudo. Aquin.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Earth is a huge vaſt body.

That is very big, whoſe bigneſs is not eaſily perceived, if at all perceivable; and ſuch is the breadth or bigneſs of the earth. Whence take this double Inference;

Firſt, If the earth be ſuch a great thing, that a man cannot perceive the breadth or dimenſions of it, then how great are the heavens! The earth in compariſon of the heavens is but as a point, 'tis as little as is imaginable. O what a broad thing is heaven, if the earth be ſuch, that we cannot reach the breadth of it.

Secondly, If the earth be ſo great, how great is God, who made the heavens and the earth too! That's it which God would lead Job to the conſideration of, even of his own infinite greatneſs. How great is God, who made this great earth! To him (as the prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks, chap. 40. 15, 16.) The Nations, the people (of the earth) are but as the drop of a bucket, and as the duſt of the ballance: He weighs the mountains in ſcales, and the hills in a ballance: He holds the duſt as one ſingle grain in his hand. What a nothing are all things to God, ſeeing the earth is a nothing to the heavens! God puts the queſtion to Job, Haſt thou perceived the breadth of the earth? and we may put that queſtion into this negative Propoſition, O Job, Thou haſt not perceived the breadth of the earth. The wiſeſt of men know not the breadth or bigneſs of the earth. Some have undertaken to tell us how great the circle of the earth is; but theirs are but gueſſes: though ſomewhat may be ſaid that way, yet no man can give it exactly; and therefore the Roman Orator attempting to write about the earth and the dimenſions of it, prefaceth or apologizeth thus for himſelf; I will do my endeavour to ſatisfie thee about Geography, or the dimenſions of the earth, but I promiſe nothing of certainty, 'tis a great work. Haſt thou known the breadth of the earth?

De Geographia dabo operam ut tibi ſatisfaciam, ſed nihil certi polliceor; magnum opus eſt. Cicero ad Atticum. l.2. ep. 4.

Declare if thou knoweſt it all.] As if the Lord had ſaid, I have put the queſtion to thee; come now anſwer me, declare what thou knoweſt, let me know whether thou knoweſt it all. God provokes or challenges Job to ſay his utmoſt. We may refer theſe laſt words either ſtrictly to the immediate queſtion only, or generally to all the queſtions before; yet I conceive they are rather to be reſtrained to the laſt queſtion concerning the breadth of the earth, becauſe they run in the ſingular number, Declare if thou knoweſt it all, that is, if thou knoweſt all of the earth. There were many parts of the earth, which Job knew not at all; therefore he could not know it all. We at this day after all the improvements which have been made by Navigation (little in uſe in Jobs days) for the diſcovery of the earth, are yet forced to write upon ſome places (as we may ſee in our beſt Maps of the World) Terra incognita, this part of the earth is unknown. If we now do not, ſurely Job then did not know it all.

Further, When the Lord ſaith, Declare if thou knoweſt it all, his meaning is not, If thou haſt any knowledge at all about it all; for there is no wiſe, no underſtanding man, but hath ſome meaſure or degree of knowledge as about the depth of the Sea, ſo about the breadth and meaſures of the Earth: but the meaning of theſe words, Declare, if thou knoweſt it all, is, if thou knoweſt the all of it, if thou knoweſt it throughly: For, as theſe words have reference to the object to be known, ſo to the manner of knowing. There are many that know ſomething, and ſome that know many things; yet none that know all things, no not the all of any one thing. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of ſpiritual things, ſaith, We know in part; and the truth is, we know but a part of natural things, of the ſea, of the earth, and we know them but in part. So then, when the Lord ſaith, If thou knoweſt it all, his meaning may be this, if thou haſt a diſtinct and demonſtrative knowledge of the thing, Declare it. I know thou mayeſt give conjectures, and propoſe probabilities; but I know alſo, that thou neither knoweſt it all, nor the all of it. God hath given us a certain knowledge about things that refer to eternity and to ſalvation, to them we muſt ſtick and abide by them; but as to theſe things, all that we know, is but little, and about that little we labour under many uncertainties. Declare if thou knoweſt it all.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt: That God is willing that man ſhould make the beſt of himſelf.

God was ready to hear Job what he could anſwer to his Queſtion. When God put the Queſtion to Adam (Gen. 3. 11.) Haſt thou eaten of the Tree whereof I commanded thee, that thou ſhouldeſt not eat? And when he put queſtions to Cain (Gen. 4. 6.) Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? As alſo (verſ. 9.) Where is Abel thy brother? He was ready to hear what either the one or the other could ſay for themſelves; nor would he have cut them ſhort in their plea, if they could have pleaded any thing for their juſtification. Now, as God was willing to hear what they could anſwer to his queſtions about their evil works; ſo he is willing to hear what any can anſwer (which was Jobs caſe) to the queſtions which he propoſeth about his own works, and their behaviour under them.

Secondly, From the ſcope of the words, Note, The moſt knowing men know but little of that which they know.

As we know nothing at all of ſome things, ſo there is nothing of which we know the all, or of which we have a perfect knowledge, a knowledge, to which nothing can be added. They who know moſt of any thing, know almoſt nothing of it; How far then are they from knowing it all! David having ſpoken of the knowledge of God (Pſal. 139. 2, 3, 4, 5.) concludes (verſ. 6.) Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Man is ſo far from an ability to attain ſuch a knowledge as God hath, the knowledge of the moſt ſecret things of man, the knowledge of his thoughts afar off; that he is not able to attain the perfect knowledge of the plaineſt things. We muſt ſtay for perfect knowledge, till we come to another ſtate, when all clouds of ignorance ſhall be ſcattered, when we ſhall ſee no more through a glaſs darkly, but face to face: when we ſhall know all that is to be known of God, and of the Works of God; when we ſhall be enabled to declare all our knowledge about them, and to give proof that we know them all.

Truly to know God the onely true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hath ſent, is eternal life, while we live here in this world, but to know the true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hath ſent, fully, yea to know any thing fully, is reſerved for us in that eternal life which we wait for in the world to come.

There are three things, which make up the happineſs of our ſoul-ſtate in eternal life.

Firſt, The due order of the Affections, when they ſhall ever be ſet upon right objects, and upon them in a right meaſure.

Secondly, The due motion of the Will, when it ſhall ever chuſe that which is good, and nothing but good.

Thirdly, The clear and unerring light of the Underſtanding, The proper object of the Underſtanding is truth. The chief ornament and delight of the Underſtanding is the knowledge of the truth. And the Underſtanding is not more debaſed and diſhonoured by not endeavouring to know, than an underſtanding man is vexed and troubled, when he cannot compaſs the knowledge of that which he deſires and endeavours to know. Indeed Solomon (the moſt knowing man among all the ſons of men) hath concluded (Eccl. 1. 15.) That in much wiſdom there is much grief, and that he that increaſeth knowledge, increaſeth ſorrow. Yet this grief and ſorrow ariſe not from knowledg attained, but from the great pains, ſtudy, and travel, which we take in this world for the attainment of it; or from the doubts and uncertainties which remain in our minds about many things, when we have got the beſt and cleareſt knowledge of them attainable in this life: Whereas in our heavenly ſtate, we ſhall neither have any trouble in getting knowledge, nor ſhall any doubt or uncertainty remain in our minds about the things we know. For the beautiful face of truth, ſhall in a moment be unvailed to us, and the curtain drawn away by the hand of God, which interpoſed between us and the light; ſo that, there ſhall not any miſt or darkneſs, not any doubt or ſcruple hang in our minds about any truth.

And thus we may anſwer that of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 13. 8,) ſaying, That in heaven, Knowledge ſhall vaniſh away. What, nothing but ignorance in heaven? Surely, nothing more unſutable to, nor unbecoming the glory of that ſtate. Ignorance may better be the Mother of Devotion here (as Papiſts with ignorance enough have affirmed) than in heaven the companion of our joy. The Apoſtle then means, that ſuch knowledge as now we have, ſhall vaniſh, that is, knowledge ſo gotten as now it is. In heaven there are no Schools, nor Univerſities, nor Tutors, nor Teachers. Again, Knowledge of ſo imperfect a degree as now it is of, ſhall vaniſh away; The knowledge which Solomon had on earth, will be but ignorance, compared to the knowledge which the Saints have and ſhall have in heaven; His largeneſs of heart (though like the ſand of the ſea) will be but narrowneſs of heart, compared with the enlargements which Saints ſhall have there. Glorified Saints ſhall be in natural things exact Philoſophers, able to anſwer all the queſtions here put to Job. In ſpiritual things they ſhall be exact Divines; all dark Scriptures ſhall be clear to them; Chriſt will be their Comment; all dark queſtions will be clear to them; Chriſt will be their light. Thoſe perplexed Caſes and fatal Controverſies which have troubled the peace of the Church, and have occaſioned the calling together of ſome hundreds of the ableſt Scholars to debate and determine them, ſhall at one view be underſtood, ſhall have all their knots untied, and their difficulties removed by the meaneſt (if among them there ſhall be found any meaner than others) of glorified underſtandings. What ſweetneſs the ſoul ſhall feel at this revelation of all knowledge, a little knowledge will ſerve to judge: For then not only to this challenge which the Lord made to Job, about thoſe ſpecial matters, the gates of death, and the breadth of the earth,; but alſo to any other, Declare if thou knoweſt it all, Every ſoul will readily and confidently anſwer, Lord, in thy light I know it all.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkneſs, where is the place thereof?

That thou ſhouldeſt take it to the bound thereof, and that thou ſhouldeſt know the paths to the houſe thereof.

Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? Or becauſe the number of thy days is great?

THe Lord having poſed Job in the former Context about the depth of the Sea, the darkneſs of Death, and the vaſtneſs of the Earth; here calleth him to an account about the light of the Sun, and the darkneſs of the Air, in theſe three verſes. As if he had ſaid, If thou knoweſt the breadth of the whole earth, about which I enquired laſt of thee; then tell me in what part of the earth doth the light dwell, and where is the place of darkneſs?

Verſe 19. Where is the way where light dwelleth?

The Septuagint Tranſlate, In what land doth light dwell? Or where is the land of light? We ſay, Where is the way? The Hebrew word notes a troden beaten way, or (as we ſpeak) a high-way. Where is the way where light dwelleth? That is, whither light retireth, and doth, as it were, betake it ſelf in the night, when it hath gone its journey, and is paſt thy Horizon. For every one knows where light dwells, while the Sun is up with us, and ſhines upon us: But what becomes of it, or whither it goes, when 'tis gone from us, that's a queſtion, and here (ſay ſome) the queſtion, ποία δὲ γῆ, In qua terra. Sept.

דרך
Ubi via in qua habitat, ſcil. poſt via & itineris ſpatium emenſum.

The word which we Tranſlate dwelleth, implieth a retirement, a reſt after long labour and travel.

Verbum שכן eſt ad quietem & noctem traducendam alicubi commorari.

Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkneſs where is the place of it?

Here are two great contraries (which cannot agree nor dwell together in any one ſubject, yet) met together in this Text, Light and darkneſs; and there is ſome, yea not a little darkneſs in this queſtion about the light. We need a great meaſure of Divine Light to anſwer this queſtion about the Light.

Where is the way where light dwelleth?] Tell me, O Job, if thou canſt, where light lodgeth, where it repoſeth it ſelf, when the Sun is gone down, and departed out of thy ſight? Tell me what way leadeth to the lodging of light? The words (as Interpreters give it) have in them a poetical tincture, as if the Sun ſetting, retired to his chamber, as we do, when the light and buſineſs of the day is ended. David ſpeaks of the Sun as a Bridegroom coming out of his chamber (Pſal. 19. 5.) And when his race (as to us) is run every day, he hath a chamber ready for him: not that the Sun doth at all end its motion, or ſit down to reſt, but becauſe it ſeems to reſt, when it goeth down to us. As if the Lord had ſaid, Haſt thou travelled to the place of the Suns riſing and ſetting? Where is the way where light dwelleth?

There may be a threefold anſwer given to theſe queſtions, as light is taken properly for the natural light, the light of the day, cauſed by the Suns approach; and as darkneſs is taken properly for natural darkneſs, cauſed by the withdrawing of the Sun.

Firſt, Some (becauſe the word dwelleth notes a ſtay or an abode, for ſuch is a dwelling place) anſwer the queſtion geographically, and ſay, light dwelleth under the Poles. There are two poles of the earth, the Northern and the Southern, under both which interchangeably light and darkneſs abide ſix months together; and becauſe of the long ſtay and abode of light and darkneſs there, Geographers reckon and conclude the dwelling of light and the place of darkneſs to be there, and that therefore the Sun hath two dwelling houſes, one in the North, the other in the South.

Secondly, When Aſtronomers anſwer theſe queſtions, Where is the way where light dwelleth? and where is the place of darkneſs? They ſay, The Eaſt is the place of light; and the Weſt, the dwelling of darkneſs: And the reaſon given is this, Becauſe the Sun riſes in the Eaſt, and goes down in the Weſt, leaving the World, that half of the World upon which it ſhined in the day, over-ſhadowed with darkneſs. It is by the acceſs and receſs, by the riſing and ſetting of the Sun, that we may enjoy light or are wrapped up in darkneſs. And ſo Eaſt and Weſt are called by the ancient Poets the houſes or dwellings of the Sun.

Fervide Titan obitus pariter tecum Alcides vidit & Ortus; novitque tuas utraſque domos. Sen. in Herc. Act. 4

Aſtronomers have found out, according to their doctrine, twelve houſes or dwelling places of the Sun; they imagine a girdle or bond paſſing quite through the heavens, which they call the Zodiack, and there a line which they call the Ecliptick, in which the Sun moveth, or which is the way of the light; and in this line, they place the Twelve ſigns: the firſt of which the Sun entreth the firſt month of the year, and is called Aries, the ſecond Taurus, the third Gemini, &c. Theſe are onely fictions by which they repreſent the gradual motions of the Sun in the ſeveral ſeaſons of the year, and they call them Manſion Houſes or Dwellings of the Sun.

Alludere videtur ad ſignorum Zodiaci ſpatia, per quæ Sol curſum ſuum peragit, quæ ab aſtrologis Manſiones vel Domus ſolent appellari. Itaque Zona illa ſive faſcia Zodiaci in cujus medio protenditur ecliptica eſt via ſolis, qui in tot habitare domus dicitur, quot in illa ſunt ſigna. Bold.

Thirdly, according to vulgar underſtanding we may anſwer theſe queſtions, Where is the way where light dwelleth, &c. Plainly thus, Light dwelleth in the Sun, there light abides, and from thence ſhines to us. The Sun is the Veſſel or Store-houſe of light, the Luminary of the World by day, as the Moon and Stars are by night. And as for darkneſs, that takes its place every where, as ſoon as the Sun leaves any place. As often as the Sun continuing his circular progreſs, viſits the other Hemiſphere, darkneſs takes poſſeſſion of this. Light and darkneſs take their turns; the one always going off, when and where the other enters upon the ſtage of the world.

Now though Philoſophers, with our own experience, tell us, that the reaſon of this, is, the acceſs and receſs of the Sun; yet is unknown to us, how God hath thus tempered the courſe of nature, that day and night ſhould not be always alike in any part of the World, but vary in both the Hemiſpheres, and that in the ſame Hemiſphere there ſhould be ſuch a ſetled inequality in the length of the nights and days. This dependeth wholly upon the will of God, who thus ſtated the motions of the heavenly bodies from the very beginning.

If it be asked, Why doth the Lord put theſe queſtions to Job, Where is the way where light dwelleth? Seeing every one may anſwer, light is in the Sun, light ſhines in and fills the Air, while the Sun is up; and darkneſs filleth the air when the Sun is gone down, darkneſs being the privation or want of light; or darkneſs (according to the uſual definition of it) being the ſhadow of the Earth coming between us and the Sun. When the opacous or thick body of the Earth interpoſeth between us and the Sun, darkneſs followeth. And if this be all, there ſeemeth not to be much difficulty in knowing where the light dwelleth, and where the place of darkneſs is; therefore ſurely that was not the ſole intendment of God in putting theſe queſtions to Job. But when he ſaith, Where is the way where light dwelleth? &c. It is as if he had ſaid, Doſt thou underſtand the ordering and methodizing of light and darkneſs? Or how it cometh to paſs, that one part of the World hath light while the other is covered with darkneſs, and how light returns to that other part? Haſt thou made this temperament and viciſſitude of light and darkneſs, or procured that the day ſhould be long in the ſame country, at one ſeaſon of the year, and ſhort at another? Haſt thou diſpoſed the Sun to make ſhort nights in Summer, and long in Winter? This the underſtanding of man is not well able to comprehend, much leſs his power to effect. Onely the infinite wiſdom of God hath put light and darkneſs into this method, and given them their certain ſeaſons. And that this is the meaning of the Text, we may gather more clearly from the next verſe; for the Lord having ſaid, Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkneſs, where is the place thereof? preſently adds, Verſ. 20. That ſhouldeſt take it to the bound thereof, and that thou ſhouldeſt know the paths to the houſe thereof?

Theſe words ſhew that the former queſtions chiefly reſpect the order and diſpoſure of light and darkneſs.

That thou ſhouldſt take it,] The word ſignifieth the taking of a thing in ones hand. As if the Lord had ſaid, Doſt thou every morning take the light in thy hand, and bring it to the bounds or utmoſt limits thereof? Art thou able to direct the light where it ſhould abide, till ſuch time as it is to come forth again to thee?

לקח Vim habet accipiendi quaſi manu.

There is a manuduction, a divine manuduction of all the creatures by the wiſdom and power of God; he as it were leads the light, and leads the darkneſs whither he pleaſeth. The creature remaineth unmoved and ſluggiſh, it ſtirreth not till the Lord taketh it by the hand, or putteth forth his hand to diſpoſe of it as it pleaſeth him, to the uſe or place he hath appointed it; Or,

Nihil movetur quod non deducatur ipſa dei manu & poteſtate. Si ille manum non admoveat, immota, iners jacebit & ſqualebit natura. Potentiſſimus deus capit ſolem, accipit tenebras, ducit atque reducit.

To the bound thereof?] The Original Word ſignifieth a limit or utmoſt point; implying that the Lord brings the light to its due and proper place; and that, as he hath determined the bounds of mans habitation (Acts 17. 26.) ſo he hath alſo bounded the habitation of light and darkneſs, for the benefit and ſervice of man: As if the Lord had ſaid, נבול.

Haſt thou done this, O Job? ſurely no, that's my work; I am he that taketh the Sun in my hand, and bringeth it to the bounds thereof; I direct at what point it ſhall riſe and ſet; It is I that know the paths to the houſe thereof, and ſo can readily call for it, and cauſe it to appear in time and place appointed: Thou knoweſt not where to have the light, how to bring light forth; but I do. From theſe two verſes laid and conſidered together,

Obſerve, Firſt, Natural light and darkneſs have their ſpecial places, their dwelling places; yet they have no where any long abiding place.

A Tabernacle (not a ſtanding houſe) is ſet for the Sun (Pſal. 19. 4.) A Tabernacle is a moveable houſe. The Sun hath a houſe every where, but it keeps houſe or abides no where. 'Tis not only always moving in its place, but daily removing to other places; and ſo, conſequentially is darkneſs. As it is thus with natural light and darkneſs, about which the queſtion is literally propoſed, ſo with civil light and darkneſs, about which the queſtion alſo is intended. Theſe have their places, their dwellings, and 'tis ſeldom that they dwell long in any one place. Light and darkneſs are not more interchangeable in the Air, than joy and ſorrow are in the ſtates and conditions of men.

We may likewiſe conclude, that ſpiritual light and darkneſs have their houſes and their dwellings. Spiritual light, both the light of knowledge, and the light of comfort, dwell, Firſt; In Chriſt himſelf. In him as Mediator, all fulneſs dwells, (Col. 1. 19.) and of his fulneſs we all receive grace for grace, (John 1. 16.) I may ſay alſo light for light, light of every ſort, and light in every degree, needful for us, is received from him.

Secondly, Theſe lights dwell in the hearts of every true believer. Faith and light can never be ſeparated: Though ſome who have faith may be in the dark, yet light is not ſeparated; it is onely clouded, eclipſed or hidden from them. All believers are ſo much in a ſtate of light, that they are called light (Eph. 5. 8.) and many of them live in a plentiful enjoyment of light. A worthy man of the former generation, lying upon his death-bed, a friend asked him whether the light ſhining into the room did not offend him? he anſwered, putting his hand upon his heart, Here I have light enough. The heart of a godly man is the houſe of ſpiritual light, there he hath and holds the light of divine knowledge about the things of the Goſpel, and the light of divine comfort ariſing from that knowledge. It is alſo reported of Mr. Deering our Countrey man, that in his laſt ſickneſs, and towards his end, being ſet upright in his bed for his eaſe, a friend requeſted him, that he would ſpeak ſomething for the edification and comfort of thoſe about him: Whereupon, the Sun ſhining in his face, he took occaſion to ſpeak thus, There is but one Sun in the world, and there is but one Sun of righteouſneſs which graciouſly ſhineth upon me; ſpeaking further, he concluded thus, I bleſs God, I have ſo much light of joy and comfort in my ſoul, that were it put to my wiſh or choice, I had rather a thouſand times die than live. As the hearts of theſe worthies were the dwelling places of light, ſo is the heart of every godly perſon in his meaſure and degree; the light of knowledge and of joy abide there. The Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 4. 6.) God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt: And where that ſhine of God gives the light of knowledge, the light of comfort cannot be with-held, unleſs it be for a ſeaſon, that the ſoul may rejoyce the more in the end, and at laſt without end. For,

Hic ſat lucis. Oecolampadius.

Laſtly, There is an eternal light, the light of Glory, and that hath a certain dwelling place; that light dwelleth always in heaven; and the Saints at reſt in heaven, dwell always in that light. Eternal glory is called the inheritance of the ſaints in light, (Col. 1. 12.)

Again, Spiritual darkneſs hath its place; and we ſhould labour to know the place of that darkneſs, to avoid it. Ignorance is ſpiritual darkneſs, and that dwells in the heart of every man by nature. All that continue in that ſad condition, have their underſtanding darkned through the ignorance that is in them, (Eph. 4. 18.) and they who now are in the light, were once in the dark, yea they were darkneſs (Eph. 5. 8.) Let it alſo be remembred, in whomſoever this darkneſs of ſin and ignorance abides, they muſt abide under the darkneſs of wrath and judgment for ever. The place where that darkneſs dwells is hell, and there outer darkneſs (as 'tis often called in the Goſpel) dwells, even ſuch darkneſs as wherein the damned are not only out of the poſſeſſion of the leaſt ray or glimmering of light, but without any hope or expectation of it. Hell is quite beyond the bound or boundaries of light; there's darkneſs and thick darkneſs, nothing but darkneſs. Thus we ſee light and darkneſs have their places, natural light and darkneſs have theirs, and ſo have ſpiritual and eternal light and darkneſs.

Secondly, From the ſcope of theſe two verſes,

Obſerve, It is God who diſpoſeth and ordereth light and darkneſs.

The queſtion was put to Job, whether he had diſpoſed of them; but he could not aſſume to himſelf, that he had taken or laid the light to the bound thereof, or knew the paths to the houſe thereof. Light and darkneſs are at the diſpoſe, and under the command of God alone. And as the work or power of God is wonderful in the diſpoſe of natural light and darkneſs, ſo 'tis much more wonderful; in the diſpoſe of civil, ſpiritual, and eternal light and darkneſs theſe the Lord taketh to their bound, and knoweth the paths to their houſe. I form light and create darkneſs (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 45 7.) What light and darkneſs doth the Lord there ſpeak of? Surely of civil light and darkneſs, as the next words import, I make peace and create evil; I make and create them, I alſo direct and appoint them whither to go, whether to a Nation or to a man only, whether to this or that man or Nation. Darkneſs is of me as truly as light.

And that not only civil, but ſpiritual and eternal light and darkneſs are at Gods diſpoſe, is as evident from the Scriptures of truth. Some lands may be called lands of light (like Goſhen) others (like Egypt under that three days plague) may be called lands of darkneſs. Of ſuch lands that complaint is made (Pſal. 74. 20.) The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. All places of the earth full of ignorance, not knowing God, of atheiſm, not acknowledging God, of idolatry, worſhipping falſe gods, or the true God falſly, may be called lands of darkneſs, or the dark places of the earth. Now as the Lord maketh one land a place of ſpiritual light, ſo he leaveth another to be a place of darkneſs. And he often maketh changes from darkneſs to light, that's mercy, and from light to darkneſs, that's wrath, in the ſame lands. Some lands which had ſate in darkneſs for ages and generations, the Lord hath viſited with Goſpel light; and ſome lands, which for ages and generations had that light, are now laid in darkneſs. How ſad a witneſs of this are the anciently famous ſeats of the Aſian and African Churches, now under Mahometan power!

And further, as the Lord diſpoſeth that outward ſpiritual light and darkneſs, giving the knowledge of the Goſpel to, or taking it away from Nations, as he pleaſeth; ſo he diſpoſeth inward light or darkneſs to every ſoul. Some gracious ſouls walk in the light of Gods countenance, and under the ſweet ſhinings of his face every day; others, who alſo (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 50. 10.) Fear the Lord, and obey the voice of his ſervants, walk in darkneſs, and ſee no light. Now, whence cometh this difference? Is it not of the Lord, who hath the command of our joys and of our ſorrows, and who appoints this kind of light and darkneſs their ſeveral and ſpecial places, according to the ſoveraignty of his own Will?

From all that hath been ſaid, we may draw down this concluſion, which the Lord did chiefly aim at in dealing with Job; That we are to own and acknowledge the hand of God in every condition: be it light, or be it darkneſs; be it joy, or be it ſorrow; 'tis all of God. There is nothing which concerns either the comfort or trouble of man, but comes forth from God, and is ordered by him; like as in all ages and revolutions of time, light and darkneſs have held their courſe, and kept their place, according to his inſtitution and direction. Job was in darkneſs, both as to his outward and inward eſtate; his body was pained, his ſoul was grieved, anguiſh filled his ſpirit; and God would have him ſee, know, and acknowledge his hand in all. As if he had ſaid, Thou canſt no more diſpoſe the peace or trouble, the light or darkneſs of thy condition, than thou canſt diſpoſe of light or darkneſs in the air. All our changes, from darkneſs to light, from light to darkneſs, proceed from the unchangeable God. And as light and darkneſs have their conſtant turns in the air, ſo they have very frequent turns in the life of every man.

Therefore, they who when God cauſeth darkneſs to cover and compaſs them abont, do not acquieſce and reſt in his good pleaſure, but murmur and are tumultuous; theſe (I ſay) do as if they would take upon them to order the courſe of light and darkneſs in the world; theſe do no otherwiſe, than as if at mid-night they ſhould call for day, or at mid-day for night. Diſcompoſed ſouls are like ſick bodies; they who are ſick or ill at eaſe, cannot bear either night or day; in the day they deſire night, and in the night day: ſo it is with them of ſickly ſouls. Such as are often heard ſaying in the morning, Would God it were evening, and in the evening, Would God it were morning: Nothing pleaſeth them. Did we acknowledge the hand of God in making it night, we ſhould ſit down quietly in our darkeſt night, as to impatience, even while we are moſt earneſtly praying for the return of morning light. Impatience was in a great meaſure Jobs failing, though he had a great meaſure of patience. He made (as we ſay) an ado in the night of his trouble, as if he would have made it day when God had made it night and darkneſs with him. O remember, the way of light, and the place of darkneſs, the bounds and paths of both are in the hand, or at the command of God.

Thirdly, In that the Lord put this among his own great works, and takes it out of the hand of Job, or of any other creature, to order light and darkneſs,

> Note, The work of God in ordering light and darkneſs is wonderful.

And we cannot but be convinced that it is ſo, if we conſider; Firſt, The conſtant ſucceſſion of day and night in all places. As ſure as the day cometh, the night will come; and as ſure the night is come, day is coming. There is an unchangeable change between light and darkneſs, they miſs not a moment in their comings or returnings. Secondly, If we conſider light and darkneſs as to their increaſe, or decreaſe in any place, thus, Day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and night unto night ſheweth knowledge (Pſal. 19. 2.) which ſome think was a well known Adage or Proverbial Speech among the Jews: importing the power of God over, and his guidance of them both. God brings the light to the bound of it, to day at this hour, or minute of the hour, to morrow at that. There is a conſtant inconſtancy, an uneven evenneſs between light and darkneſs upon the face of the earth. We never have light or darkneſs twice of the ſame length in the ſame place and ſeaſon; yet they ever keep their place and ſeaſon all the world over: where you had them the laſt year, upon ſuch a day, there you may have them this, without a moments variation, though they have varied their courſe many moments every day ſince. Thus exactly doth the Lord take or lead the light to its bound, and knows the paths to the houſe thereof.

And as there is a great glory coming to God, in ordering light and darkneſs, as to the outward face of things; ſo there is a greater, as to the inward ſtate of his people, their ſoul-ſtate. And though the Lord doth not keep ſuch a conſtant courſe in that, yet he obſerveth a rule in all the revolutions of it. We have ſometimes light and ſometimes darkneſs in our ſouls: Now the light of comfort increaſeth towards us, and anon the night of ſorrow darkeneth upon us. Our ſouls meet often with theſe turns and changes. Let us adore the wiſdom, and ſubmit to the holy will of God in all. For though ſoul-light be always deſirable, as well as comfortable, yet ſoul-darkneſs may ſometimes be uſeful; and this uſe it hath, as often as it comes, even to try how we can truſt God in the dark; as alſo to let the world know that we are reſolved through grace to keep cloſe to the light of commandments, how long ſoever we are kept from, or are at a loſs for the light of promiſes.

Laſtly, We may conſider from this Text, that as light hath its ſpecial houſes or dwellings, ſo it hath a ſpecial way to its dwelling chalked out (as it were) and appointed by God. And is there not a way, a path, to ſpiritual, to eternal light? The way to theſe lights is Chriſt, He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life (John 14. 6.) He is the true, the only way to life, to ſpiritual life and light; yea, he is the way to eternal light and life. Holineſs and faith in Chriſt are the paſſing way to this light, but Chriſt himſelf is the way procuring light. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, and without holineſs no man can ſee God. Chriſt is the meriting way, faith and holineſs are the qualifying way, leading us to the houſe and dwelling of this light. As ſin and unbelief, or the ſin of Unbelief, is the way leading to eternal darkneſs (O how many go this way to the generation of their fathers, where they ſhall never ſee light, Pſal 49. 19.) ſo faith and holineſs, or holy Faith, is the way, the path to everlaſting light and life.

Thus much of the enquity made about the way and path of light and darkneſs, which as they are literally to be underſtood of natural light and darkneſs: ſo by them God led Job, and in him us, to conſider his diſpoſure of all ſorts of light and darkneſs.

Now, That Job might be convinced of his own ignorance in, and inſufficiency for an anſwer to theſe queſtions, God calls him to conſider the late beginning and ſhortneſs of his life, knowledge being gathered up by experience, and length of days affording both time and opportunity for the gathering up of experiences. Job was but of yeſterday, in compariſon of the day wherein the interchanges of light and darkneſs were appointed; and therefore (ſhould it be ſuppoſed that days could teach him how theſe things came to paſs, yet) he could not but be much unprepared for a ready and ſatisfying anſwer to theſe queſtions.

Verſ. 21. Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? Or becauſe the number of thy days is great?

The queſtion ſtill proceeds about the natural light and darkneſs.

Knoweſt thou it?] That is, what I laſt put to thee. If thou knoweſt it, how cameſt thou by thy knowledge? Knoweſt thou it,

Habeſne cognitum tempus quo naſcebaris. Tygur.

Becauſe thou waſt then born?] The Tygurine Tranſlation renders the words thus; Doſt thou know the time when thou waſt born? As if the Lord had argued thus with Job; Thou doſt not know the hour of thy own Nativity, or when when thou waſt brought forth; how much leſs the way or manner either of their production or conſtitution, which were brought forth and eſtabliſhed many ages and generations before thine. Doſt thou know when thou waſt born?

But I rather adhere to our own reading, Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? That is, becauſe thou livedſt then, and haſt lived ever ſince, and ſo haſt gathered up the knowledge of theſe things by obſervation. Surely when I put theſe things in order, when I diſpoſed the way, and the dwelling, the path and place of light and darkneſs, and took them to their bound, thou hadſt not ſo much as a being; how then cameſt thou to this knowledge! I know, and thou muſt needs confeſs, it is not becauſe thou waſt then born; waſt thou? The purpoſe of God in this queſtion, as to ſhew that he was before the Creation of the world, even from everlaſting, therefore knew all things; but that Job was of little ſtanding in the world, and therefore knew little, eſpecially not thoſe things propoſed. There is a double reading and underſtanding of this verſe.

Annoſiſſimus es. Triduo natus. Si harum rerum vias te noſſe dixeris, item dic te tunc extitiſſe. Chryſ. Olymp.

Some both of the ancients and moderns expound it ironically, as if the Lord to humble Job, put a ſcorn upon him in ſuch a tenour as this: Doubtleſs thou knoweſt the dwelling of light, and the place of darkneſs, thou knoweſt when and how I ſetled the motions of the heavens, and the changes which they make here in this lower world; becauſe thou art as old as the heavens, or contemporary with the worlds creation: Thou waſt born ſure, when I did theſe things? As if the Lord had ſaid plainly and reprovingly, Wilt thou who (upon the matter) waſt born but three days ago, or yeſterday, wilt thou take upon thee to underſtand my matters, as if thou couldſt number as many years as the whole Creation? Some holding the ſame ſenſe, render the Text cuttingly enough, thus; If thou ſayeſt thou knoweſt the way of theſe things, thou art beſt alſo to ſay, thou waſt born, or in being, when theſe things were done. Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born?

Or becauſe the number of thy days is great? Even as great as ever any ſince Adam.

We render both the parts of the Text as a plain Interrogation, Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? yet carrying a cloſe rebuke. As if the Lord had ſaid, Waſt thou born, when I diſpoſed of theſe things? Is the number of thy days ſo great, that thou art able to reach ſuch knowledge? Surely no; therefore ſit down ſilent, let thy mouth be ſtopt with this conviction, that thou knoweſt not theſe things; and if not theſe, which are before thee, and obvious to thy ſight, light and darkneſs; much leſs art thou able to underſtand my ſecret counſels and hidden purpoſes in the ways of my providence concerning thee: Therefore leave vexing thy ſelf, and commit all thy concernments unto me, reſt in my Will, ſubmit to my Power; for thou art no more able to reach my mind, than thou art able to tell what was done before thou waſt born. Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? Or becauſe the number of thy days is great?

Hence Note, Firſt, God onely, who was before all things, knoweth the way and diſpoſition of all things.

God, who made all things, was before any thing was made. How great is the number of his years who is eternal! The preſcience or fore-ſight of God paſſeth through the whole ſeries or through all the ſucceſſions of the creature, before it had a being. He who is without beginning, without end, knoweth and declareth (as he ſpake of himſelf by the Prophet, Iſa. 46. 10.) the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done. Man by report may have ſome underſtanding of things which were done before he was born; but till he was born he knew nothing of himſelf, or, of his own knowledge.

Secondly, Note, Man by reaſon of his ſhort life, knoweth little.

They who have been but a ſhort time in the world, muſt needs be ſhort in the knowledge of many things; nor can they know much of any thing. Much knowledge is got by much ſtudy and travel. And if the beſt improvers and redeemers of time know but little, at moſt, becauſe they were but lately born, and have had but little time; ſurely they who have trifled away their time ever ſince they were born, muſt needs know very little. We who came into the light ſo lately, cannot get much light about naturals, and how little is it then that we have or can about ſpirituals! But if we miſ-ſpend that inch of time that we have in this world, we may go out of it, knowing as little to purpoſe as we did at all (which was nothing at all) before we came into it.

Thirdly, Note, They who have been longeſt in the world, have been but a little while in it, and poſſibly have lived much leſs.

Knoweſt thou it, becauſe thou waſt then born? Waſt thou then born? Surely no, nor till many ages after. They who number moſt days, number but a few days; it was but the other day ſince we had not ſo much as a day in this world. Waſt thou then born?

Fourthly, Note, As it is but a little while ſince any man was born into the world, ſo there is no man born, that hath long to ſtay in this world.

As the number of our days paſt is not great, ſo neither can the number of our days to come be great. Here we have a Text, yea a Map of our Mortality, and a memorial of our ſhort ſtay or quick paſſage through this world. No man hath had many days ſince he came into this world; they that have had moſt, have had but few to eternity. As for the moſt of men, they go out of the world with a very few days upon their backs; and as none have many days, ſo none know how many days they ſhall have. Our life hath theſe two things in it, which ſhould continually humble us, and keep us not onely awake, but watchful:

Firſt, Our days in this life are few, our life is ſhort in this world.

Secondly, Our days are unfixed, as to us, our life is uncertain. They that reckon upon many days in this life, uſually fall ſhort of their reckoning. 'Tis or ſhould be matter of humiliation to us, that we are ſhort-liv'd, ſhort-breath'd creatures, we who were born into the world but the other day, ſhall in a few days (no man knows how few) paſs out of the world again.

Laſtly, The Lord, by this queſtion, would teach Job, that it is he who taketh care of us, and orders both our coming in, and our going out of this world. It is God, by whom the days are numbred, and the years appointed which we have had and are to have here below. And as the days of our life, ſo the condition which we ſhall live in, reſteth and dependeth upon the wiſdom and providence of God. As we took no care of our ſelves, nor could, before we were; ſo all the care we take for our ſelves, while we are, can avail us nothing without God. Which of us by taking care, can add one cubit to his ſtature (Matth. 6. 25.) and which of us by taking care, can add one moment to his life, all is in the hand of God. And 'tis our duty to live as free from all troubleſome cares while we are in the world, as we were free from any care at all before we came into the world. It is enough that God hath undertaken for us, and would have us ſit down in his care of us. Chriſt ſaid (Matth. 10. 29, 30.) with reſpect to ſufferings, Fear not, for are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing? and one of them falleth not to the ground, without your Father. It is God, who orders and diſpoſeth the life of a ſilly bird, and by him the very hairs of our head (worthleſs excretions) are numbred; ſurely then, the days of your lives, and all the changes of them, are ordered, diſpoſed, and numbred by him. And if ſo, we ſhould in this ſenſe, be as quiet, and as much at eaſe in our ſpirits, concerning the things of this life, as we were before we lived. Light had its dwelling place appointed, and darkneſs was diſpoſed of without any care of ours; and all our care can neither create light for us, nor remove any darkneſs, that is upon us. Let us only be careful of that duty we are called to, and leave the burden of our cares to him who hath called for them, (Pſal. 55. 22.) and would have us reſt in this aſſurance, that he careth for us (1 Pet. 5 7.) what cannot he command for us in our places, who commands light and darkneſs to their places; therefore it will be our wiſdom, at once to take as much pains, and as little care as we can.

VERS. 22, 23.

Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow? Or haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail,

Which I have reſerved againſt the time of trouble, againſt the day of battel and war?

JOB was laſt queſtioned about the habitation and interchanges of light and darkneſs: Here the Lord queſtions him about thoſe two Meteors, the Snow, the Hail. As if he had ſaid; Poſſibly thou wilt confeſs thou knoweſt not how to anſwer the former queſtion, but perhaps, thou art better skill'd in and acquainted with the matter which I ſhall next propoſe; well then, I ask again,

Verſ. 22. Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow, &c.

There is a two-fold entring into any place.

Firſt, In body.

Secondly, In mind.

The body of Job, nor of any man, never entred into the treaſures here ſpoken of; nor could Jobs mind, nor the mind of any man enter fully into them, that is, comprehend how vaſt, how great they are. We had this phraſe, Haſt thou entred? at the 16. verſe of this Chapter. There the queſtion was put about his entring into the ſprings of the ſea, here about his entring into אוצר Theſaurus, Apotheca, promptuarium.

The treaſures or ſtore-houſes of the ſnow.] The word imports any place or repoſitory where ſtores of any kind are laid up and kept for uſe. The Poet calleth Bee-hives, the Treaſuries of honey; and ſo may Cellars be called, the Treaſuries of Wine and Oil, &c. The Clouds are the Treaſuries, which contain the ſtores or treaſures of Snow and Hail. Thoſe places out of which God is ſaid either to bring good for the uſe and comfort of man, or evil for his hurt and puniſhment, are uſually in Scripture expreſſed by this Word. Thus ſpake Moſes, encouraging the people of Iſrael to obedience (Deut. 28. 12.) The Lord ſhall open unto thee his good treaſure, the heaven to give thee rain unto thy land in his ſeaſon, &c. And God hath his juſt and righteous treaſures of wrath, even as men heap up and have their evil and unrighteous treaſures of ſin (Deut. 32. 34. Rom. 2. 5.) Thus the Apoſtle James tells ungodly rich men (chap. 5. 3.) Ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days. Which may be underſtood of their getting their treaſures of riches ſo unrighteouſly in their days, as would prove a heaping together of wrath againſt themſelves in the laſt days or day of the laſt Judgment.

Treaſures of good or evil imply three things:

Firſt, The ſecrecy of what is laid up.

Secondly, The ſafety of it, or that it is ſurely laid up.

Thirdly, That there is ſtore or great quantities of it laid up. A little is not a treaſure. The ſnow may well be called a treaſure in all theſe reſpects; for 'tis ſecretly laid up, no man can ſee it; and 'tis ſafely laid up, none can reach or take it way; there are alſo vaſt quantities or great abundance of it. Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow?

As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou O Job, haſt often ſeen the ſnow fall, and thou mayeſt eaſily perceive that it falls out of the clouds; but haſt thou aſcended, or can any aſcend unto thoſe airy regions, where ſnow is generated and laid up, as in a treaſure? If not, ſurely then no man can aſcend to heaven, and there ſearch out or diſcover the myſteries and ſecrets of Wiſdom and Juſtice in my works here below, unleſs by the wings of faith and the light of a ſpiritual underſtanding, which ſits down ſatisfied in this concluſion, that all is wiſely and juſtly done, which God doth, whether in heaven or earth. To bring Job to this acknowledgment, was the deſign and purpoſe of God (as hath been toucht before) in all the queſtions propounded to him in this and the next Chapter.

Haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow?] What the ſnow is, the nature and the wonders of it, was ſpoken of and ſhewed, at the ſixth verſe of the 37. Chapter.

All that I ſhall further add for the opening of this queſtion, is, that when God ſpeaks here of the treaſures of ſnow, we are not to underſtand it, as if he had great heaps of ſnow formally amaſſed up together in any place of the air, as men lay up treaſures of money or corn, or of any other uſeful matter; but the words are an elegant Metaphor, the meaning onely this, God hath abundance of ſnow ready at his will and diſpoſe, at his call and command, whenſoever or whereſoever he is pleaſed to make uſe of it; for 'tis as eaſie with God at any time ro draw out and pour down abundance of ſnow, as if he had infinite ſtore of it kept always by him. He no ſooner ſpeaks the word, but the face of the earth is covered, and its boſom filled with ſilver ſhowers. Or haſt thou entred into the treaſures of the ſnow?

Or haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail?] Theſe treaſures of hail are of the ſame nature with thoſe of ſnow, and ſo to be underſtood as the former; but there is a difference in the form of ſnow and hail, though not in the matter out of which ſnow and hail are formed. Hail (ſay Naturaliſts) is a hot vapour, drawn up to the middle region of the air, whence falling, it is frozen in paſſage into leſſer or greater ſtones or grains of ice. Theſe hail-ſtones are ſometimes poured down ſo great in quantity, and often in ſuch great quantities, that it may well be ſaid, there are treaſures of them. And when the Lord puts this queſtion to Job, Haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail? he ſeems to allude to thoſe who inſpect the publick treaſure of any Kingdom or Common-wealth, receiving in and iſſuing out the revenues of it, as occaſion requires, and as they are required. As if the Lord had ſaid, Haſt thou, O Job, like ſome great Lord Treaſurer, taken a view of theſe ſtores? I know thou wilt confeſs thou haſt not ſeen them with thy bodily eyes; I know alſo thou haſt not reacht them clearly with the eye of thy mind or underſtanding; even theſe treaſures are greater than thou canſt imagin. All that which thou haſt any way ſeen, is leſs than the leaſt part of that which thou haſt not ſeen. Haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail?

From both the parts of the verſe, Note Firſt, God hath ſtore of ſnow and hail.

Treaſures are not made up with a little. Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 12. 35.) A good man hath a good treaſure in his heart, and an evil man an evil treaſure there; becauſe the one bringeth forth good things, and the other evil things out of his heart; there both good and evil perſons keep their ſtore of good and evil things, and there good men ſhould have, and evil men always have a great deal in ſtore. For this reaſon alſo God is ſaid to bring the wind out of his treaſures (Pſal. 135. 7.) He hath much wind and mighty winds at his diſpoſe. God who hath made all things by his Word or Will, can have as much of every thing as he will.

Secondly, Note, God hath ſnow and hail ready for his ſervice.

He hath them as in a Storehouſe or Treaſury. Pharaoh built Treaſure Cities (Exod. 1. 11.) or places of receit, in which he kept either his publick treaſure of Gold and Silver, or his Artillery and Ammunition for War, or great quantities of Corn and Grain againſt a time of need. Chriſt ſaith, Every ſcribe which is inſtructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven, is like unto a man that is an Houſholder, which bringeth forth out of his treaſure things both new and old (Matth. 13. 52.) that is, he is not to ſeek, he hath them in a readineſs for uſe, and ſo is himſelf ready to every good word and work, when any have uſe of him for good. We may be ſure God is never to ſeek, nor (as we ſay) out of ſorts, for any kind of means or inſtruments to carry on his ſervice, and to effect any purpoſe of his, whether in wrath againſt the wicked, or in favour of ſuch as fear him.

Again, In that the Lord ſaith, Haſt thou entred, &c. Haſt thou ſeen, &c.

Thirdly, Note, No man knoweth, nor can any man conceive, what treaſures and ſtores, what abundance either of good or evil, of wrath or love God hath.

(Pſal. 90. 11.) Who knoweth the power of thine anger? I may ſay alſo, who knoweth the power of thy love? that is, it is not known, no nor knowable, what powers God can put forth either in anger or love. Eye hath not ſeen (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 2. 9.) nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. And as the preparations of God for them that love him, ſo his preparations againſt them that hate him, are ſuch as no man hath ſo much as ſeen, much leſs entred into. If the treaſures of ſnow and hail exceed our conceptions, what do the treaſures of fire and brimſtone in the bottomleſs pit? what is the pile of fire and much wood in Tophet, which the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone kindleth? (Iſa. 30. 33.)

But ſome may ſay, why hath the Lord ſuch vaſt treaſures of ſnow and hail? what are they good for, or to what uſe do they ſerve? What the uſe or uſefulneſs of the ſnow is, as well as the nature of it, was ſhewed in ſome particulars at the ſixth verſe of the 37. Chapter. Here God himſelf declares what uſe he hath of ſnow and hail, or what ſervice he puts them to, in the next words.

Verſ. 23. Which I have reſerved againſt the time of trouble, againſt the day of battel and war.

As God hath made nothing in vain, ſo he doth not reſerve or lay up any thing in vain. The Lord is a God of knowledge (1 Sam. 2. 3.) by him, as our actions, ſo his own are weighed. This verſe ſhews one uſe or end of his reſerving ſtores of ſnow and hail, and that an extraordinary one. The ordinary uſe of ſnow and hail is for ſome good or benefit to men indifferently, as the Sun ſhines and the rain falls, whether good or bad. The uſe here ſpoken of is only for the hurt and puniſhment of bad men. Some reſtrain the antecedent of this relative which, in the beginning of the verſe, to the hail onely, becauſe no mention is made (ſay they) in Scripture of any hurt done by ſnow; but of hurt done by hail we read more than once there. Yet as ancient hiſtories ſo latter experiences have reported, that both men and beaſts have been, not only covered, but ſmothered with ſnow, and overwhelmed by floods and great inundations, cauſed by the ſudden melting of it. Therefore I conceive, we may take the word, which, referring unto both.

Fundi calamitas grando.

Which I have reſerved, &c.] There are other rendrings of the Hebrew Word by us rendred reſerved, all which may center in the ſame ſenſe.

Firſt, The Vulgar Latine ſaith, Which I have prepared.

Secondly, The Septuagint, Which I have ſtored up, or which are ſtored up.

Thirdly, Others thus, Which I have prohibited or ſtayed, retained, detained, or with-held; ſo the word is uſed (Gen. 20. 9.) I alſo with-held thee from ſinning againſt me, ſaid God to Abimelech. Such things as we prepare and ſtore up for ſome ſpecial uſe we detain, ſtop or with-hold from all other uſes, till our occaſions call for that. Thus we may ſay here, the Lord having as it were ſtored up ſnow and hail in his great Magazin or Arſenal, he there detains and reſerves them for the uſes he hath appointed them unto, that is, as it followeth in the Text, חשך Per ſin ſiniſtrum prohibere ſignificat. Merc.

Againſt the time of trouble.] The Word in the Hebrew here tranſlated time, notes a ſpecial ſeaſon of time, that which we commonly call opportunity, rather than time in general, or as it is a ſpace of ſo many hours days or years. David (Pſal. 9. 9.) calls God a refuge in time of trouble; that is, the Lord marks and hits the fitteſt time to come in and help his out of trouble. Thus, as they who reſerve things, do it till a ſeaſon of uſing them preſents it ſelf; ſo God reſerves the ſnow and hail till he hath a ſeaſon, an opportunity to uſe them, what that is, himſelf (as we ſaid) expreſſeth in the Text, it is עת Tempus opportunum occaſio.

The time of trouble, or of ſtraits.] When trouble comes, ſtraits come, and great troubles reduce us to great ſtraits, and compel us to ſay as that good King Jehoſophat did (2 Chron. 20.) We know not what to do. The Septuagint renders, The time of the enemies, that is, when I am reſolved to puniſh or deſtroy my enemies. The word ſignifies both trouble and an enemy, and both may well be comprehended under one word, ſeeing no trouble is more troubleſom, nor can put us to greater ſtraits than the appearance of a powerful enemy; which was Jehoſophats caſe, when in a time of trouble he cried out, We know not what to do. And this notion of the word, as taken for an enemy, falls in clearly with the latter clauſe of the verſe.

לעת צר Ad tempus arctum vel Anguſtiæ.

εἰς ὥραν ἐχθρῶν in tempus hoſtis. Sept.

Againſt the day of battle and war.] As if the Lord had ſaid, When my enemies come forth againſt me, theſe are the Weapons, this the Ammunition, which I at any time can, and often do make uſe of in the day of battel and war. The word rendred battel, ſignifies to approach becauſe in a day of battel, enemies or oppoſites approach one to another, and charge each other. The word rendred war, ſprings from a root ſignifying to eat, becauſe the ſword of war is a great eater, and devours the bodies of men. Now when God breaks forth in anger againſt obſtinate ſinners, his enemies, and brings any ſore and deſtroying judgment upon them, he is ſaid to have war with them, or to make war againſt them: Who would ſet the briars and thorns in battel againſt me, ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 27. 4.)

קרב Prælium.

מלחמה à radice לחם Veſci.

So then, Both the time of trouble and the day of battel and war ſpoken of in this Text, are the time and day of the Lords wrath and vengeance declared againſt his implacable and incorrigible enemies: Snow and hail are treaſured up and reſerved againſt this time of trouble, againſt this day of battel and war.

Hence Note, Firſt, God hath a check upon all creatures.

He reſerves or ſtops them as, and as long as himſelf pleaſeth. He can prohibit ſnow and hail and command them not to come. As they will ſurely come at any time, if he commands them to come, ſo if he commands them not to come till ſuch or ſuch a time, they will not come till then. The ſoveraignty of God is abſolute over the creature. When Nebuchadnezzars underſtanding returned to him, then he praiſed and honoured him that liveth for ever (Dan. 4. 34.) whoſe dominion is an everlaſting dominion, and confeſſed (verſ. 35.) that he doth according to his will in the army of heaven; that is, the Angels, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, as alſo the Meteors, Snow and Hail, &c. all, or any of theſe, are the army of heaven, an army raiſed in the heavens; in this army God doth according to his Will, as well as among the inhabitants of the earth.

Secondly, Obſerve; God is very patient, he doth not preſently take vengeance, nor bring trouble, though he be always provided for it, and able to do it.

As he retaineth not his anger for ever, ſo he reſtraineth it long, becauſe he delighteth in mercy (Mic. 7. 18.) As mercy moves the Lord ſpeedily to receive repenting ſinners into favour, ſo it prevails with him to be very ſlow in ſending judgments upon thoſe that are impenitent. The Lord reſerved or kept back the waters of the flood a hundred and twenty years from drowning the Old World; though, as they provoked and even dared him to do it every day by their preſumptious ſinnings againſt his warnings, ſo he was able to do it any hour or moment of the day.

Thirdly Note, Trouble hath its time or ſeaſon.

There is a time for every purpoſe under the Sun (Eccl. 3. 1.) Men have times for their purpoſes, and ſo hath God (much more) for his; he hath his times for quietneſs and times for trouble. And as ſin is the cauſe and ſource of all trouble, ſo when ſin is ripe, trouble is ready. When men have filled up the meaſure of their ſin, then God pours down trouble upon them, or makes it a time of trouble, that they may taſte and ſee, and be convinced how evil and how bitter a thing it is to ſin againſt the Lord. The Amorites were full of iniquity, when God ſpake to Abraham (Gen. 15. 16.) but their iniquity was not full, and therefore their time of trouble, the time when their Land ſpewed them out to make room for the Children of Iſrael, was not till a long time after.

Fourthly Note, Times of trouble are ſpecially known to, and appointed by God.

As he reſerves his ſtores of vengeance for thoſe times, ſo he knows thoſe times. Wiſe Princes reſerve ſtores againſt that evil time of war, &c. yet when that evil time will be they know not: but to God all times are known. David ſaid (Pſal. 31. 15.) My times are in thy hands, that is, my times of peace and trouble, of joy and ſorrow, are at thy diſpoſe; thou cutteſt out my times, not only as to the length or ſhortneſs of them, but as to the form and condition of them. Now if the Lord diſpoſeth and ordereth our times, what they ſhall be, whether troublous or proſperous, then he muſt needs know what times will be times of trouble.

Fifthly Note; Preſent impunity is no aſſurance of future indemnity to ſinners.

Judgment is but reſerved, and the inſtruments of it, ſnow and hail, &c. kept up for a while. Prodigals and ſpend-thrifts may boaſt, but the date of the bond will come out, and then an arreſt comes. Let ſinners remember the inſtruments of divine vengeance are only reſerved, they are not broken nor caſt away; and whoſoever are found in ſin, their ſin (that is the puniſhment of their ſin) ſooner or later will find them out (Numb. 32. 23.) As God ſometimes defers to give out mercy to his faithful people, but never denies it them; ſo he often defers the trouble of the wicked, but never (they continuing to do wickedly) acquits them from it. The Apoſtle Peter propheſying of falſe teachers, who ſhall bring in damnable hereſies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and ſhall bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction (2 Pet. 2. 1.) ſaith of them alſo (verſ. 3.) Whoſe judgment now of a long time lingreth not, and their damnation ſlumbreth not. Though all ſeems to be well with them at preſent, and hath been ſo a long time, yet their miſery is certain; it neither lingers nor ſlumbers, as to the Lords time, though it may ſeem to have done both, in theirs. The wicked, how long ſoever they eſcape judgment, are not preſerved from it, but only reſerved to it, as followeth in the fourth and ninth verſe of that Chapter. As the fallen angels are reſerved in everlaſting chains of darkneſs, (that is, in chains that will hold them faſt enough for ever) unto the Judgment of the Great Day, or to the Great Day of Judgment: Which intimates two things concerning the fallen Angels.

Firſt, That their torments are not yet at the greateſt, nor their ſufferings at the higheſt.

Secondly, That their puniſhment is unavoidable, for they can never break nor file off thoſe chains. As I ſay the fallen Angels are ſaid to be reſerved to judgment in chains of darkneſs, at the ſixth verſe of the Epiſtle of Jude; ſo at the 13. verſe of the ſame Epiſtle it is ſaid that to ſeducers and falſe teachers (who cauſe many to fall) The blackneſs of darkneſs is reſerved for ever; they have it not, but 'tis reſerved for them. Their preſent impunity is no aſſurance of their future indemnity.

From the latter part of the verſe, where the time of trouble is called, The day of battel and war,

Obſerve Firſt, Obſtinate and impenitent ſinners make war (in a manner) with God himſelf.

Though they ſend not a Herald formally to defie him, yet a reſolved progreſs in ſin (let God ſay what he will, and do what he will) is a real defiance of him, or a bidding him do his worſt. It was ſaid of the old Giants (men of great ſtature) They were fighters againſt the Gods. We may ſay, men of all ſtatures, even dwarfs and pigmies for bodily ſtature, raiſe war againſt the great God by preſumptuous ſinning. Did not men make a war upon God by doing evil, God would never make war upon them, by ſending evil. Men are vain when they fall into ſin, but they are worſe than vanity, when they ſtand out in ſinning. Who (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 27. 4.) would ſet briars and thorns againſt me in battel (none but a mad-man will) I would go thorow, or (as the Margin hath it) march againſt them, I would burn them together. Can briars and thorns abide contending with God, who is a conſuming fire? If God ſend forth an army of his meaneſt and moſt contemptible ſouldiers, flies from the air, lice from the earth, even a mighty Pharaoh muſt call for a Treaty, and beg a parly. If he command ſnow and hail, much more lightning and thunder out of the clouds to fight againſt his enemies, how ſoon are they overwhelmed and confounded! 'Tis beſt therefore never to begin this war, and the next beſt is, ſpeedily to ſue for peace.

Gigantes θεομάχοι dicti.

Secondly, Obſerve, A day of battel and war is eminently a time of trouble.

There may be trouble where there is no war, but where war is, there cannot but be trouble. War or the ſword, is not only one of thoſe four ſore judgments, but the firſt of the four, with which God threatned Jeruſalem, to the cutting off or utter deſtruction of man and beaſt (Ezek. 14 8.) Every battel of the warrier is with confuſed noiſe, and garments rolled in blood (Iſa. 9 5.) Confuſed noiſes are the muſick of a battel, and bloody garments the bravery of it; then prize peace, pray for peace, That (as the Apoſtle directs, 2 Theſ. 3. 16.) The Lord of Peace himſelf would give us peace always by all means. For though that may be doubted and queried, which ſome have fully aſſerted, That the moſt unequal peace is to be preferred before the juſteſt war; yet the juſteſt war may bring, though peace and honour at laſt, yet in the mean time innumerable troubles and evils with it.

Thirdly, Note, God can make any creature hurtful and afflictive to us.

Snow is of great uſe, and ſerves much to advance the fruitfulneſs of the earth, and is joyned with rain in that effect, (Iſa. 55. 10.) As the rain cometh down, and the ſnow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, &c. (by the concurrent bleſſing of God) So, &c. Snow as well as rain is a bleſſing to the earth, not an affliction; yea ſnow is uſed by ſome as a delicacy to cool their drink in hot Countries and ſeaſons; which uſe of it was firſt found out by that monſter of men Nero, ſaith Pliny, who thus declaims and proteſts againſt his intemperance; O the prodigies of luxury! ſome drink ſnow, others ice, and ſo turn the puniſhments of the mountains (ſo he calls ſnow and ice as to preſent ſenſe) into their own pleaſure, or to ſerve their voluptuouſneſs. Now though the ſnow, according to Gods appointment be profitable to the earth, and is uſed by ſome men to ſerve their pleaſures and pleaſe their ſenſual appetite, yet God can make a ſcourge of it, if he pleaſeth, and deſtroy both our profits and pleaſures by it. He can afflict us, not onely with ſtrong and ſtormy winds, not only with dreadful thunder and lightning, but with ſnow, which is ſoft as wool, and hail-ſtones, which uſually children ſport and play with. He hath deſtroyed ſinners not only by lions and bears, and ſuch like ravenous beaſts, but with frogs and mice, with lice and locuſts, as was toucht before. There are two things which ſhew the mighty power of God in the Creature.

Heu prodigia ventris! Hi nivem illi glaciem potant, pœnaſque montium in voluptatem gulæ vertunt. Plin. l. 19. c. 4. l. 31. c. 3.

Firſt, That he can make the moſt devouring and deſtructive creatures harmleſs and hurtleſs to us. Thus he ſtopt the fiery furnace from ſo much as ſcinging a hair, or impreſſing the leaſt ſmell of burning upon thoſe three worthies (Dan. 3. 27.) He alſo ſhut the mouths of thoſe hungry Lions, not only from tearing and totally devouring, but from touching Daniel to hurt him (chap. 6. 22.)

Secondly, That he can make the moſt harmleſs and hurtleſs creatures to hurt us. How powerful is God, who can cruſh the ſtrongeſt man on earth by the weakeſt of his creatures! There was much of God in it, that ſome of his people of old, through faith, out of weakneſs were made ſtrong, waxed valiant (being 'tis like before, of a fearful ſpirit) in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens (Heb. 11. 33, 34.) And is there not much of God in it, when any ſort of creatures weak, and inconſiderable in themſelves, are armed by him to conflict with and get the victory over his ſtrongeſt and proudeſt enemies!

Fourthly, Note, God can make a time of trouble terrible.

He hath a reſerve of ſnow and hail in his treaſury againſt the time of trouble, againſt the day of battel and war. As God can make a day of trouble comfortable to his ſervants; he can be a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt; as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land (Iſa. 32. 2.) All which metaphors ſignifie one and the ſame thing, that Chriſt will be comfortable to his people either immediately or by proviſion of means in the moſt troubleſome times, there intended by wind and tempeſt, by a dry place and a weary land. And that he had been all this to his in ſuch a day, the ſame prophet aſſures us (chap. 25. 4.) Thou haſt been a ſtrength to the poor, a ſtrength to the needy in his diſtreſs, a refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat, when the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm againſt the wall. The Hiſtory of the taking of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians, ſet down by Jeremy, tells us, that he was fully heard and anſwered, when he prayed (chap, 17. 17.) Be not thou a terror to me: thou art my hope in the day of evil. Jeremy found the Lord very favourable to him, and giving him favour in the eyes of the enemy, when that evil day, the day of battel and war came upon Jeruſalem. Thus ſometimes God ſtayeth his rough wind in the day of the Eaſt-wind (Iſa. 27. 8.) that is, he forbeareth to ſhew himſelf rough, harſh or grievous to his people, when great troubles are otherwiſe upon them, noted by the Eaſt-wind, which naturally is a blaſting, bluſtring, and boiſterous wind; and therefore a day of great trouble is elegantly expreſſed or called, a day of the Eaſt-wind. When the Pſalmiſt had deſcribed the fained humiliations of the people of Iſrael in the Wilderneſs, which he calls their flattering God with their lips, and lying unto him with their tongues; This was enough to provoke God to make their day of trouble terrible unto them, yet (ſaith that Scripture) He being full of compaſſion, forgave their iniquity, and deſtroyed them not; yea many a time turned he his anger away, and did not ſtir up all his wrath (Pſal. 78. 38.) Though they all ſtirred him to wrath, yet he did not ſtir up all his wrath (when it was worſt with them) that would have made it a terrible day indeed. This is the Lords way with his people in an evil day.

But when it is a day of battel and war with the wicked world, or with the wicked of the world, he opens his treaſures of wrath, and will let them ſee and feel what ſtores of ſnow and hail he hath reſerved againſt that time. And hence it is, that ſuch are repreſented in the day of the Lord, going into the clifts of the rocks and into the tops of the ragged rocks for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth (Iſa. 3. 21.)

Laſtly, Note, Snow and hail are Gods weapons and artillery, with which he ſometimes fights againſt ſinful man.

The Lord of Hoſts hath ſuch inſtruments of war in his Armory, as no Prince can produce nor make uſe of, either to offend his enemies, or to defend himſelf. An ancient Poet ſaid of Theodoſius the Emperour, O thou greatly beloved of God, for whom the heavens fight, and at the ſound of whoſe trumpets the winds, the confederate winds, preſent their ſervice and aſſiſtance. The Thundering Legion in the Army of Aurelius the Emperor, is famous in the Church Hiſtory, and hath been mentioned before, upon other paſſages of this Book, together with the occaſion of that honourable Title beſtowed upon them in that age. The Scriptures give frequent inſtances of the Lords avenging himſelf upon his and his peoples enemies, by ſtorms of hail. This was one of the ten grievous plagues which God ſent upon Pharaoh and the Land of Egypt (Exod. 9. 17, 18.) As yet exalteſt thou thy ſelf againſt my people, that thou wilt not let them go; behold, to morrow about this time I will cauſe it to rain a very grievous hail, ſuch as hath not been in Egypt ſince the foundation thereof, and until now. It was with hail-ſtones that God fought againſt and diſcomfited the Army of five confederate Kings in the days of Joſhua (Joſh. 10. 11.) The Lord caſt great ſtones from heaven upon them, and they died, they were more which died with the hail-ſtones, than they whom the children of Iſrael ſlew with the ſword. There are two things ſingular and extraordinary, if not miraculous in this paſſage of providence: Firſt, The magnitude and weight of theſe hail ſtones, together with the violence of their motion was ſuch, that like bullets diſcharged from Canon or great Ordnance, they ſlew them out-right or dead on the place, upon whom they fell. Secondly, That the Iſraelites, being in purſuit of theſe Canaanites, and doubtleſs mixed with them (as in a battel, where they come to handy ſtroaks, it muſt needs be) that yet none of them were hurt by the hail ſtones, but the Canaanites onely. God, who, to ſhew his goodneſs, cauſeth his Sun to ſhine and his rain to fall indifferently upon the good and upon the bad, knows how, that he may ſhew his Juſtice, to cauſe his hail to fall diſtinctly upon the bad, and not upon the good. Deborah ſaith in her ſong (Judg. 5. 20.) The ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera. It is reported by Joſephus, deſcribing this battel, that as ſoon as the armies joyned battel, God ſent a violent ſhower of hail, which (ſay ſome) being naturally cauſed by the influences of the ſtars or heavenly bodies, the ſtars may be ſaid to have fought in their courſes, like ſouldiers drawn up in battalia againſt Siſera and his army. And thus by great thunder the Lord diſcomfited the hoſt of the Philiſtins in the days of Samuel, (1 Sam. 7. 10.) The prophet gives out ſeveral threatnings under the notion of hail (Iſa. 28. 27. chap. 30. 30.) and ſo doth that laſt propheſie (Rev. 16. 21.) And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent. All which places, though not taken literally and properly, but metaphorically and ſymbolically for great and ſore judgments of one kind or other, yet are a clear proof that proper hail ſtones have ſometimes been the inſtruments of Gods foreſt revenge upon his hardned enemies.

O nimium dilecte dei, cui militat æther. Et conjurati veniunt ad claſſica venti. Claudian. Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 5.

Joſeph. l. 5. Antiquit. Judaicarum. c. 6.

So then, ſometimes God doth, as it were, pitch his Military Tent or Royal Pavilion in the Air, there he ſeems to muſter his Army, to bring forth his weapons, and from thence to confound his foes. God uſeth the clouds both as his ſhield to protect his people (Exod. 14. 19.) and as his bow to ſhoot at and wound the wicked. From thence (Pſal. 11. 6.) He rains upon the wicked, ſnares, fire and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt: this ſhall be the portion of their cup, That is, they ſhall have nothing elſe in their cup to drink but this, and of this they ſhall drink deep, even the very dregs, and wring them out (Pſal. 75. 8.) A heathen Poet called the Clouds the Amorites or Arcenals of Heaven; and the Scripture, both in this Text of Job, and in ſeveral other places, beſides thoſe which have been mentioned, ſheweth what Ammunition, what inſtruments, of the Lords fierce anger and fiery indignation are ſtored, laid up, or reſerved there againſt the time of trouble, againſt the day of battel and war with the rebellious world.

Armamentaria Cœli Juven. Satyr. 15.

Now, Foraſmuch as ſnow and hail, &c. are at once the Lords Hoſt and his Arms, by which he fights againſt the wicked, we may take notice of theſe five following inferences for the help of our meditations about this matter, and to make all that hath been already held forth from theſe two verſes, more profitable to us.

Firſt, God needeth not borrow help from man on earth, when he would be avenged on his enemies.

If he doth but ſpeak the word and declare his will, it is enough; The heavens, the clouds of heaven will bring him Armies and Arms without number. He that covers the earth a foot deep with ſnow, can cover all (as we ſay) over head and ears with it. He that pours down ſhowrs of hail, no bigger than a peaſe, can ſend it of a talent weight, as 'tis expreſſed, (Rev. 16. 21.) God cannot want Armies at any time, for his day of battel and war, who can make any thing ſerve him effectively as an Army; and therefore they who being in diſtreſs ſee no more help in man, than David, when he ſaid (Pſal. 142. 4.) I looked on my right hand, and behold, but there was no man that would know me (how well ſoever I was known to him) refuge failed me, there was no man that cared for my ſoul; that is, that regarded what became of me: I was left at ſix and ſevens, to ſink or ſwim, to ſhift for my ſelf as well as I could: they, I ſay, who are thus diſtreſſed, having an intereſt in God, need not deſpair nor deſpond, ſeeing the Lord can charge or preſs any creature for our aid and help, yea can help us without the aid of any creature.

Secondly, Take heed of provoking God, who hath ſuch Arms and Armies always at command.

'Tis dangerous medling with a prepared enemy. God can never be ſurpriſed nor taken unprovided. As the wicked bend their bow, and make ready their arrow upon the ſtring, that they may privily ſhoot at the upright in heart (Pſal. 11. 2.) So the Lord hath his bow always bent, and his arrow made ready upon the ſtring, openly to ſhoot at the falſe in heart. Though it be uſually long before he takes revenge, yet 'tis not becauſe he is unready and cannot, but becauſe patient, and will not take it ſooner. He is always able to avenge himſelf, not onely ſpeedily, but preſently. As he will do what he hath ſpoken, ſo he can do what he will with a word ſpeaking.

Thirdly, Would we not fear ſnow or hail, or any miſſive weapon of heaven, then let us get God to be our friend, in whoſe hand, and at whoſe command they are.

No creature moves but by direction from God; and ſurely he will never direct them to the hurt, though often to the affliction and correction of thoſe whom he loves. As ſuch are in league with the ſtones of the field, and the beaſts of the field are at peace with them; ſo alſo are the ſtars of heaven, and all the meteors (ſnow and hail, &c.) in the air.

Fourthly, God will charge them with hardneſs of heart and impenitency, who humble not themſelves when he fights againſt them with theſe weapons.

Every judiciary ſhower of hail, though it break not our heads, yet it ſhould break our hearts. That hail which doth any hurt to the works of our hands, ſhould work good upon our hearts. And therefore the Lord complained when his hail-ſtones left no more ſign or impreſſion upon his peoples hearts than they did upon a rock or ſtone (Hag. 2. 17.) I ſmote you with blaſting and with mildew, and with hail, in all your labours, yet ye turned not to me, ſaith the Lord. This Scripture teacheth us two uſeful leſſons, Firſt, When God ſmites any thing that is ours, or belongs to us, he ſmites us. If our fields or gardens be ſmitten, we are ſmitten.

Secondly, God expects we ſhould, and even wonders, if we do not turn upon ſuch ſmitings. He looks upon them as hardned ſinners, who melt not by every afflictive fall of hail from heaven. They are even reſolved to be bad, who mind not being good or better, when evils fall upon either them or theirs.

Fifthly, Haſten to make peace with God, when he gives ſigns and alarums of war.

God had no ſooner ſaid to Iſrael (Amos 4. 12.) Therefore, (that is, becauſe thou haſt not taken the alarum by former judgment, therefore) thus will I do unto thee, O Iſrael, that is, I will bring ſome ſorer judgment upon thee than any of thoſe already brought) but he adds, and becauſe I will do this unto thee (unleſs prevented by ſpeedy repentance) prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael. As if God had ſaid, Conſider (as Chriſt adviſeth on another occaſion, Luke 14. 31.) whether thou art able with thy ten thouſand to meet me with my twenty thouſand (all the power of man is not onely leſs by half, as ten thouſand to twenty thouſand, but indeed nothing at all to the power of God) and if not, as I know thou art not, then I counſel thee, while I onely tell thee I will do thus unto thee, but am yet a great way off (poſſibly from coming to do it) prepare to meet me, ſend an Embaſſage of prayers and tears, and deſire conditions of peace. It will be too late to call for a compoſition, or to think of a treaty, when the trumpets have ſounded, and the battel is joyned. If we get not (through Chriſt) our peace made before the day of battel and war in this world, I mean before temporal judgments are actually come upon us, and have taken hold of us, we may ſmart ſoundly before we have our peace, and pay dearly for it, before we have it: But if we prepare not to meet God, and get our peace made through Chriſt, before the day of battel and war in the next world, I mean before Death and the Eternal Judgment come upon us, we ſhall not onely ſmart ſoundly and pay dearly for that wretched neglect of our ſeaſon, but muſt periſh for ever, under an impoſſibility of having our peace made. The Day of Gods battel and war with the wicked in the next world, is Eternity. Here in this world God ſaith to the worſt of ſinners, to him that is but briars and thorns (Iſa. 27. 5.) Let him take hold of my ſtrength (that is, of my Grace, or of my Son, which are my ſtrength to ſave ſinners) that he may make peace with me, and (I aſſure him his aſſay ſhall not be in vain) he ſhall make peace with me; I am no inexorable God, yea, I am eaſie to be intreated, if treated with, when, and in whom, and in ſuch a way as I have offered my ſelf to ſinners, to be treated with for peace. But if any think to make peace with God in any other way than faith and repentance, by any other perſon than Chriſt Jeſus, at any other time than the time of this life, we muſt receive another Goſpel, before we can give them any (aſſurance ſhall I ſay, or) the leaſt ſhadow of a hope that they ſhall do ſo.

VERS. 24, 25, 26, 27.

By what way is the light parted? which ſcattereth the eaſt-wind upon the earth?
Who hath divided a water-courſe for the over-flowing of waters? or a way for the lightning of thunder?
To cauſe it to rain on the earth; where no man is; on the wilderneſs, wherein there is no man?
To ſatiſfie the deſolate and waſte ground, and to cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth?

THE Lord ſtill proceeds by way of interrogatory with Job. In this Context he puts many queſtions, Firſt, About the Light.

Secondly, The Wind.
Thirdly, The Waters.
Fourthly, The Thunder.

Verſ. 24. By what way is the light parted?

Job was queſtioned at the 19. verſe concerning the light, here the queſtion is renewed or repeated, yet ſurely no needleſs repetition.

There are many things conſiderable in the light, chiefly theſe four:

Firſt, The Nature of it.
Secondly, The Original or Spring of it.
Thirdly, The Communications or Effuſions of it.
Fourthly, The Effects of it, or what it works.

The former two were chiefly intended in the former queſtion at the 19. verſe, namely, the Nature of the Light and the Original of it; here the Lord enquires of Job about the Communications or Effuſions of light, as alſo about the Effects of it, which are the two latter.

As theſe things, both ſingly conſidered and laid together, are an argument of the divine power and providence, ſo of mans weakneſs and ignorance, who as he is not able to withſtand them, ſo not to underſtand fully what they are, or how cauſed, as this queſtion doth imply.

By what way is the light parted?

The word which we tranſlate parted, ſignifies to put things into diſtinct portions. As if the Lord did give out ſeveral portions of light to ſeveral parts of earth, or upon ſeveral occaſions. By what way or means (ſaith he) is this done? There is a twofold interpretation concerning the light:

Qua parte lux fulguris erumpat. Tygur. Qua parte erumpat ignis. Bez. Rab. Levi.

Firſt, Some underſtand it of the lightning, ſo the Tygurine Tranſlation, In what part doth the light of the lightning break forth? Mr. Beza renders, By what way doth the fire break out? Lightning breaks out like fire. One of the ancient Rabbins calls the light here intended, A dry and hot exhalation, which (ſaith he) is therefore called light, or receives the name of light, becauſe it doth eaſily conceive light, or take fire as tinder and touchwood; ſuch a kind of light is the lightning. And the lightnings come often from the Eaſt, Chriſt aſſures us, while he ſaith (Matth. 24. 27.) As the lightning coming out of the Eaſt, and ſhineth even unto the Weſt, ſo ſhall the coming of the Son of man be. Taking light for lightning, the ſenſe is, Knoweſt thou how it comes to paſs that the lightning ſhould ſo forcibly break out of the cloud in a thunder-ſtorm and raiſing the Eaſtwind, make ſuch a hurry, ſuch a tempeſtuous confuſion in the air, by diverting the courſe of that ſtrong Wind, and ſuddenly ſcattering it all abroad into the ſeveral corners of the World? Knoweſt thou how theſe mighty commotions are made, unleſs by me, by my power and orders? Some inſiſt much upon this Interpretation, taking the light for the lightning, of which the Lord ſpeaks expreſly afterwards, at the 35. verſe of this Chapter, and of which Elihu had ſpoken before in the 37. Chapter.

Qua ratione fiunt coruſcationes fulgura procellæ ventorum concertationes, niſi per me? Jun.

Our Tranſlators and many others take light here ſtrictly for the light of the Sun, Knoweſt thou by what way the light is parted? Either from the clouds, or from the darkneſs; Knoweſt thou how the light is parted into ſeveral Climates and Coaſts of the World? This parting of the light may be conſidered, Firſt, As there is a new proportion of the light provided every day; for, as it was ſhewed before, we never have the light two days together in the ſame ſtate, but more or leſs, ſhorter or longer. The light is longer in one part of the year every day, and ſhorter in another part of the year every day. This change or parting of the light is a glorious work of God, who ſo divides the light according to the time of the year, that every day hath a portion, and yet no day hath the ſame portion.

Poteſt de luce proprie accipi quatenus illa ſic in tempeſtate dividitur ut in aliqua cœli nubes luceant, & lux ſolis emicet, in aliis denſis tegatur nubibus. Sculc.

Secondly, The light may be ſaid to be parted by the power of God at the ſame time, or upon the ſame day, while in one Coaſt it is cloudy and in another clear; yea within our own view we may behold the Sun ſhine in one place and not in another. Some judg this the moſt profitable ſenſe, becauſe ſo there is a clearing of this Text from what went before. Nor is it an eaſie thing, taking this meaning of the words, to anſwer the Queſtion here put to Job. How the Lord parts the light in the ſame day and at the ſame time in our view, making it ſhine in one place and not in another. But whether we underſtand the Text of parting light from darkneſs at the Sun riſing, or of parting the light at any time of the day after the Sun is riſen, the matter is not of much importance. By what way is the light parted?

Having obſerved ſeveral things about the light (Verſ. 12.) I ſhall only give theſe two brief notes from the words under hand.

> Firſt, God diſpoſeth and diſpenſes the light where he willeth.

The light is a moſt ſweet, pleaſant creature to behold, and the Lord takes the guidance of it into his own hand, he parts it, he proportions it out as himſelf pleaſeth. And as this is true of aerial light, ſo of a better light than that which ſhines in the air, (though that be an excellent light) the light of the Goſpel. The work of God is as wonderful, I may ſay, much more wonderful in parting and dividing, in diſtributing and proportioning the light of the Goſpel, then it is in diſtributing and giving forth the light of the Sun. Doth he not at the ſame time cauſe that light to ſhine upon one place, while it is darkneſs in another? As he made aereal darkneſs to be a plague in the Land of Egypt, while it was light in Goſhen, ſo he leaves many places under ſpiritual darkneſs, while others enjoy that bleſſed light, in a clear and conſtant ſhining. And as the Egyptians with all their learning, could not tell the way how God parted the light then, that it ſhould be light in Goſhen, and darkneſs to feeling, or darkneſs that might be felt in all the other parts of Egypt; ſo who can give a reaſon of that diſtribution of Goſpel light which God makes to ſome parts of the world, while other parts of it ſit in darkneſs and in the very ſhadow of death?

Secondly, In that the Lord puts the Queſtion to Job, Knoweſt thou, &c. (for we are ſtill to repeat thoſe words in theſe Queſtions, though not expreſt, Knoweſt thou?) That is, thou knoweſt not.

> Hence Note; Man is much in the dark about the light, and how God diſtributeth, diſpoſeth, and diſpenſeth forth the light.

Thoſe things that are clear to our ſenſe, are often very obſcure to our underſtanding. Nothing more clear to ſenſe, than that the light is parted; yet what is more obſcure than this, in what way, and how the light is parted. And as this parting of the light is marvellous, ſo alſo in the effect of it, held out in the latter part of the Verſe,

Which ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind upon the Earth.

קָדִים Ventum Orientalem ſeu eurum ſubſolanum ſignificat & per ſynecdochen hic omnem ventum. Sanct. Eurum ventum vehementiſſimum loco omnium ponit. Sculc. Sol dicitur ventorum pater & eurus dicitur ſubſolanus & ἀπηλιώτης quod ſit ſub regimine ſolis.

Some becauſe the relative [Which] is not expreſſed in the Original, take theſe words as a diſtinct Queſtion, Knoweſt thou by what way the light is parted? And (taking up that again) by what way he ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind upon the Earth? But I ſhall ſpeak of theſe words, as intending this effect of light, the ſcattering the Eaſt-wind. The Hebrew Word ſignifies ſtrictly the Eaſtern part of the World, the Sun-riſing, and ſo the Eaſt-Wind, which riſeth often with the Sun, or upon which the Sun hath a great command, and may be here put ſynecdochically for all the Winds. Naturaliſts tell us that lightning (which was the firſt interpretation) doth raiſe the Eaſt-wind, or cauſeth it to blow; and that the light of the Sun, or the Sun riſing, hath alſo an influence upon the wind, or raiſeth the Eaſt-wind, is both the obſervation of Naturaliſts and an aſſertion which hath ground in Scripture. The Sun is by ſome called, The Father of the Winds, and eſpecially of the Eaſt-wind; and the Eaſt-wind hath denominations both in the Greek and Latin Tongue (as the Margin ſhews) implying that it is much (as it were) under the dominion of the Sun. It is ſaid (Jonah 4. 8.) that, The Lord at the Sun-riſing commanded or prepared a vehement Eaſt-wind to blow upon the head of Jonah. As if the riſing of the Sun had ſome power in the bringing the Eaſt-wind; and without all doubt the Eaſt-wind (as one elegantly deſcribes it) at that time by Gods Call, fought under the banner of the Sun, and was confederate with him for the affliction of that angry Prophet Jonah. The Eaſt-wind is a vehement wind, a drying wind, a ſcorching wind. (Exod. 14. 21.) When the Lord led the people of Iſrael through the Red Sea, it is ſaid, He commanded a ſtrong Eaſt wind to blow all night, and divided the Sea. The Eaſt-wind it ſeems, was the moſt proper inſtrument to ſerve the Providence of God, in dividing or ſcattering, and then in gathering the waters of the Sea; as here the light is ſaid to ſcatter the Eaſt-wind upon the Earth. Mr. Broughton renders theſe words, as expreſſing the natural aptitude of the wind to ſpread it ſelf, thus, And which way the Eaſt-wind ſcattereth it ſelf over the Earth? That is, which way it will ſcatter, or in what Country it will blow? The winds are of a moſt diffuſive nature, they ſcatter themſelves, they diſperſe, and paſs through the air with much violence and vehemence. But I ſhall not ſtay upon that. The main ſcope and purpoſe of the Lord in putting this queſtion being only this, To ſhew, that as the light (take it either for the lightning, or for the light of the Sun) is in the hands of God; ſo alſo, that the wind, even the Eaſt-wind, is at his diſpoſe too.

> Hence Note; Winds, the moſt vehement and violent winds, are under the power of God.

He who commands the light, commands the winds (Prov. 30.4.) He gathereth the winds in his fiſt, he comprehends them all in his hand. 'Tis a wonderful expreſſion of the power of God, that he hath the loſe winds as faſt as a man hath that which he gripes in his fiſt, and 'tis at the opening of his hand that they paſs forth. Whatever natural cauſes there are of the winds, we muſt look beyond them all, at the power of God, as the cauſe reigning over all other cauſes. Chriſt (John 3.) treating with Nicodemus about that moſt ſpiritual Doctrin of Regeneration, or the New Birth, to ſhew how free an agent the Spirit of God is in it, compares his workings to that of the Wind, of which he ſaith, (Verſ. 8.) The wind bloweth where it liſteth; which yet we are not to underſtand, as if the winds did blow at random, or were carried out by their own power and impreſſion: Chriſt ſpeaks of the wind there, as if it had a will, or wilfulneſs, rather; but we are to underſtand it thus, The wind bloweth where it liſteth, for any thing man can do or ſay to it; let man ſay what he will, let man do what he can, the wind blows where it liſteth. The wind is not under the controul or command of any man, no not of the mightieſt Prince on Earth; yet it bloweth not abſolutely where it ſelf, but where God liſteth. The power and skill of all the men in the World, cannot alter or controul the wind. Some indeed have traded with Witches for winds, as if they had the command of them; yet know it is only the Lords chuſing their deluſions, or his giving them up to thoſe deluſions and wickedneſſes, which their hearts chuſe, if at any time any gain a breath of wind, by trading with them. We ſhould only look by faith, and trade with him by prayer, for the managing and diſpoſing of the winds; it is he that ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind over the Earth. Knoweſt thou how the Eaſt-winds are ſcattered over the Earth, or, by what way the Lord ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind over the Earth?

Hence Note; Secondly, The way of the Wind is a ſecret to man, as well as the way of the Light.

The Lord Chriſt ſheweth mans ignorance, with reſpect to the way of the wind (John 3.8.) Thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but thou knoweſt not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. Which we are not to underſtand, as if, when a man perceives the wind to blow, he did not know whence, or out of what part of the compaſs it comes, or towards what point it goes: We know when it comes from the Eaſt; and when it comes from thence, we know it goeth to the Weſt; and ſo when it comes from the North, and goes to the South: but we know not whence it comes, and whither it goes, as to the way of it; we know not how it comes to paſs, or is brought about. That's done by the ſole command of the Lord, who hath the whole Creation at his beck, and whoſe word every creature obeys, moving and going where and when he himſelf gives order. It is the Lord, who by the light (or by what means ſeems good unto him) ſcattereth the Eaſt-wind (or any other wind) upon the Earth. The next queſtion concerns the waters.

Verſ. 25. Who hath divided a Water-courſe for the over-flowing of waters?

The former Queſtion was about the parting of the Light; here we have a Queſtion about the Diviſion of the Waters.

Who hath divided, &c.] The Hebrew Word for a River, comes from this Root, and ſo alſo doth the Latin Word Pelagus, which ſignifieth the Sea, out of which Rivers are derived and divided into the Land. From this word alſo the Elder or Firſt-born Son of Eber was called Peleg (Gen. 10.25.) and the Text gives us the reaſon why he was ſo called, For (ſaith Moſes) in his days the Earth was divided; That is, it was diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Coaſts and Countries, and by ſeveral Names, which before, lay all as it were in one Common. There have been too many hurtful diviſions in the Earth, that is, of men on Earth, ever ſince (in another ſenſe) and are at this day: It is ſad to ſee the ſpirits, opinions, and practices of men ſo much divided; but it was and is uſeful, to have both the ſoil of the Earth, and the body of the Water divided. Here we have the diviſion of the Waters.

Quis dedit imbri vehementiſſimo curſum. Vulg.

פלג Rivus, Pelagus nomen habet quod ex illo dividantur & deriventur flumina.

Who hath divided a Water-courſe for the over-flowing of Waters?

There is a two-fold diviſion of water. We read of the former in the deſcription of the Creation (Gen. 1.7.) where the Lord divided the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters that were above the firmament, and it was ſo. The diviſion here intended is of the waters above; there the Lord makes a diviſion of the waters, and gives them their courſes. The word rendred Water-courſes ſignifies to aſcend, or to be on high, becauſe the courſe of the water is from above, or from on high; Water moves always from a higher place. Water naturally floweth downward; 'Tis a heavy body, and cannot aſcend naturally; therefore the courſe of the water is from above. As men make Aqueducts, Water-courſes, or Conveyances for water by artificial pipes of Lead or Wood (as we ſee in this City) or by Channels cut in the Earth; ſo the Lord hath his Water-courſes above, he hath his Pipes, his Channels in the Clouds. Who hath divided a Water-courſe

תעלה Ductus aquæ.

Quis niſi ego curſum dat aquis è cælo defluentibus, veluti per canales ab hominibus manufactos? Homines ſuos Aquaductus per terram efficiunt, ſed Deus per aerem & nubem diſtribuit. Merc.

For the overflowing of waters?] The Word ſignifies a great inundation, or a pouring forth of water, a Chataract. Moſes deſcribing the Deluge, ſaith (Gen. 7.11.) The windows of Heaven were opened. And when at any time it rains, it may be ſaid, the Lord in ſome degree opens the windows of Heaven. We are not to underſtand (as was toucht before) this over-flowing of water, of the waters flowing upon the Earth, but of the waters flowing from Heaven down upon the Earth; for the Lord ſpeaks not of Floods on Earth to deſtroy, but of plentiful and ſeaſonable rain, to nouriſh the fruits of the Earth, as is clear from the 27. Verſe. Now ſaith the Lord, Who hath divided a Water-courſe for theſe waters? That they might not come down, as I may ſay, in a Full-Sea, but as by or in pipes and channels, to refreſh the Earth. The Lord hath his Water-works in Heaven, as men have theirs on Earth. This elegant Metaphor ſhadows out that certain Rule or Law of Nature which the Lord hath given thoſe waters above, when they are commanded to flow down for the uſe and ſervice of Man and Beaſt here below. The Lord enquires of Job for the Author of theſe upper Water-works, Who hath divided a Water-courſe for the over-flowing of Waters?

Inundationem aquarum non terreſtrium, ſed &c. Merc.

Hence Note; God makes a diviſion of his Stores and treaſures of water in the Clouds, as himſelf pleaſeth; or the courſe of the water is directed by God, where to fall, and when.

As God hath divided the Earth to the Sons of men (Acts 17.26.) as he hath determined their times, and the bounds of their habitation; ſo he hath alſo divided the waters for the Earth, the waters that are above; and he proportions them according to his own will (Amos 4.7.) I cauſed it to rain upon one City, and I cauſed it not to rain upon another. God is ſo good, that uſually he cauſeth his rain to fall upon the juſt and upon the unjuſt (Matth. 5.44.) But he can cauſe the rain to fall diſtinguiſhingly, and not promiſcuouſly. It was the ſaying of a Heathen in his fourth Book, concerning the beſtowing of benefits (Chap. 28.) The gods give many benefits to unthankful perſons: they provided them for the good, but they fall to the ſhare of the bad, becauſe it is impoſſible to divide them. And inſtancing in rain, he ſaith, No law can be given to the falling ſhowers, or to the ſhowers when they fall, that they diſtil not upon the lands of wicked men. Thus, what that Scripture in Matthew ſaith, God doth out of choice to ſhew his goodneſs, that this Heathen ſaid their Gods did but of neceſſity, becauſe they could do no otherwiſe. If they ſent rain upon the juſt, the unjuſt muſt have it too, he thought there was no avoiding of that; but this Text in Job, and many more up and down the Scripture, teach us, that God can put a law upon the ſhowers of rain; he hath his Water-courſes, and can direct the rain to what place and perſons he will, he can command it to fall by his law, when and where, and upon whom he appoints. God retains his ſoveraignty for a diſtinct diſtribution of the waters; though to declare his bounty and and mercy, he uſually makes no difference, but diſtributes it alike to all. The Lord is ſo good, that he feeds his enemies, and nouriſheth a world of wicked ones, or the wicked world every day; yet he retains his Empire over the clouds ſtill, and he divides a Water-courſe for the over-flowing of water; it falls by his appointment, where-ever it falls.

Dii multa ingratis tribuunt; ſed illa bonis paraverant, contingunt autem etiam malis, quia ſeparari non poſſunt. Nec poterat lex caſuris imbribus dici, ne in malorum improborumque rura defluerent. Sen. de Benef. l. 4. c. 28.

There are four things, wherein the Lords Empire and Soveraignty over theſe waters doth and may appear. The Lord orders the courſe of theſe waters,

Firſt, When they ſhall fall. And,

Secondly, How long they ſhall fall.

Thirdly, Where, or upon what place, they ſhall fall. And,

Fourthly, He orders the courſe of theſe waters, in what quantity they ſhall fall, whether there ſhall be a greater or a leſſer rain; as the rain was diſtinguiſhed in the 37. Chapter, into the ſmall rain and the great rain of his ſtrength.

'Tis a very ſpiritual duty to give God the glory of ordering theſe natural rains. The rain falls not by fortune or by chance, but hath its courſes appointed by the Lord, as certainly as if he had it in a Conduit or Ciſtern, and drew out by pipes a portion for every one. Who hath divided a Water-courſe for the over flowing of Waters?

Or a way for the lightning of the Thunder?

Here is another Queſtion, Thunder and lightning have their way. Some read, A way for the Tempeſt? Becauſe Lightning and Thunder comes with Tempeſt. Others put it in the plural number, Or a way for the Tempeſts? We render fully, who hath made or divided,

Viam Tempeſtati. Complut. Et viam Nimbo ſonoro. Jun. Piſc. Vox חוק hic tantum occurrit & Zech. 10.1. Ubi eſt numero plurali.

A way for the lightning of the Thunder?] Who directs the lightning, which breaks forth of the Thunder-Cloud with ſuch ſwift violence, to go the way it takes, and do the thing it effects. Lightning is very fierce and ſubtile: Thunder is a very violent and furious Meteor; yet the Lord hath a way for them alſo, as well as for the gentleſt ſhowers of rain. The Lord can guide thunder-bolts, and teach lightning its way. I ſhall not ſtay upon this matter here, becauſe we had the very ſame expreſſion, The way for the lightning of Thunder, at the 26. Chapter, Verſe 2. Thither I refer the Reader:

Onely conſider,

First, How the Lord ſpeaks of rain and lightning together, and ſo (which is wonderful) mingles fire with water; the flaſhes of lightning with the over-flowings of water.

De pluvia & fulmine conjunctim agit, ea quaſi miſcens, quia mirabile eſt ignem inter aquam ardere. Scult. Rain or water puts out fire; but God can produce fire in the midſt of water.

Secondly, Conſider, Where the ſtrength and ſtreſs of the Queſtion lies, and what naturally floweth from it, namely, that Thunder and Lightning go not their own way, but in the way that God appoints them. The water moves Gods way, and ſo doth the Wind; the Light moves Gods way, and ſo doth the Lightning and the Thunder, or the Lightning of the Thunder. The Lord hath all theſe at more command, than we have the tameſt or moſt ſlow paced animals. Thunder and Lightning go to the mark God ſets them. As a piece of Ordnance, or great Gun, being levelled and fired carrieth the Bullet; ſo thoſe Cannons being diſcharged from the Clouds, carry their Bolts to a hairs breadth, and miſs not.

In the two next verſes the Lord ſhews the reaſon, why he thus divides a water-courſe for the over-flowing of waters, and a way for the Lightning of Thunder; It is,

להמטיר

Verſ. 26. To cauſe it to rain on the Earth where no man is, on the Wilderneſs where there is no man.

Rain is the uſual concomitant or ſpeedy ſubſequent of Lightning and Thunder; theſe give warning that rain is at hand, Thunder and Lightning break the Cloud, and ſo cauſe it, that is, the cloud, to rain

Upon the Earth where no man is, &c.

The Lord ſpeaks here of a ſpecial place, to which he deſigns the Rain: where ſhould that be? Surely the paſtures, and till'd grounds, gardens, and vineyards, places cultivated and inhabited by men; the Lord hath Rain for them, yet not all for them, or not for them all: Here the Cargo or lading of the clouds is conſigned to places uninhabited by man; He cauſeth it to rain on the Earth where no man is. Some Parts of the Earth are full of men, well inhabited; there are other parts of the Earth which are uninhabited, or where no man is. This Text tells us, there is an Earth where no man is. Travellers and Navigators have found ſome Parts of the Earth which were counted uninhabitable, not only habitable, but actually inhabited by many people. Yet there may be ſome Parts of the Earth habitable in their own nature, wherein no man dwells, or in which (as the Text ſpeaks) no man is. Yea poſſibly there are ſome Parts of the Earth uninhabitable, or wherein no man can dwell. Now is it not ſtrange that the Lord ſhould carry his rain to ſuch parts of the Earth, to places where no man is? Where there are neither Cities, nor Towns, nor Villages, no nor the meaneſt Cottages, nor a man breathing on the face of that Earth? Or that, as the latter part of the verſe ſpeaks, (which is but an explication of the ſame thing) he ſhould cauſe it to rain on the Wilderneſs, where there is no man? If we would know what the Lord intends by Earth where no man is, the Text anſwers, The Wilderneſs where there is no man, or, where none of Adam dwelleth, as Mr. Broughton Tranſlates. So then this latter clauſe of the verſe is but a repetition of the ſame thing, yet a repetition made not only for variety and elegancy, but alſo to ſignifie the certainty of the thing, that God gives rain even to ſuch places where no man is. There is a very elegant turn of the words in this Verſe. The former part ſaith, To cauſe it to rain on the Earth where no man is; The latter ſaith, On the wilderneſs where there is no man. There are ſome wilderneſſes which are inhabited, and therefore God tells us diſtinctly what wilderneſs he means.

There are two ſorts of wilderneſſes:

Firſt, Such as are inhabited. John the Baptiſt went and preached in a wilderneſs; there were Towns and many Dwellings in that wilderneſs.

Secondly, There are alſo wilderneſſes uninhabited. God ſpeaks here of a wilderneſs where there is no man. The Hebrew Word which ſignifies a Wilderneſs, ſignifieth alſo the Peſtilence, and ſo ſome Tranſlate here, In peſtilent places, or in unhealthy places, in places untilled or unmanured, becauſe of the unhealthfulneſs of them, even in theſe Wilderneſſes the Lord ſends Rain.

דבר A peſte & morte. q. d. etiam in locis peſtiferis & incultis curandum præbet ſe Deus providentiſſimum.

Again, Others conceive the wilderneſs here ſtands in direct oppoſition to Egypt, and that the Lord would intimate, that as Egypt was abundantly watered by the river Nilus, they making ſluces from that river (as hath been ſomewhere noted in this Book) to draw the water all the Country over; for Egypt is a flat Country, not a Country of Mountains or Hills. Now ſaith the Lord, even as Egypt by the drawing of Water courſes, is made fruitful, and abundantly ſupplied with moiſture, though no rain falls there; ſo I will water the Wilderneſs with rain from the Clouds, as well as they water Egypt, by ſluces from the river Nilus. Egypt grew very proud or atheiſtical rather, becauſe they had ſuch an advantage by the river; which cauſed one of the Ancients to ſay, There is never a Plow-man in Egypt will ſo much as look up to Heaven. They took not themſelves at all beholden to God, for the fertility of their land, they had it all from Nilus. Well, ſaith the Lord, I will moiſten the very barren Wilderneſs, it ſhall be ſatisfied with Rain, even as Egypt with the waters of the River. The Deſert ſhall be as well watered by Rivers from Heaven, as Egypt is by the River Nilus. But whether the Lord had any reſpect to that or no, I dare not aſſert; yet it is plain, that the Lord waters the wilderneſs where no man is, even as well as Egypt is watered.

Nemo aratorum in Egypto reſpicit cœlum Sen. l. 4. Natur. quæſt. c. 2. Plinius in Panegyr. Te propter nullos tellus tua poſtulat imbres Arida, nec pluvio ſupplicat herba Jovi. Tibul.

Now foraſmuch as the rain cometh upon the Wilderneſs, where 'tis very improbable to have rain, becauſe vapours, which are the matter of Rain, are raiſed uſually from moiſt places, from the Seas and Rivers; but from the Wilderneſs, and from heaths and deſerts, which are dry places, how how ſhould vapours riſe? Yet, ſaith God, though there is no rain begotten there, yet I will ſend rain thither; I will cauſe the wind to riſe and carry the clouds, and the thunder ſhall break the clouds, and they ſhall pour down waters upon the wilderneſs. Did not the Lord cauſe the winds to drive the clouds over wilderneſſes and deſert places, and there to unburthen themſelves, they would be altogether without rain.

Vapores pluvioſi elevantur maximè ex locis humidis; unde ſi nubes & pluviæ non impellerentur à ventis ſequeretur, quod nunquam in locis ſiccis plueretur. Aquin.

Hence Note; Where Nature denies, or natural cauſes produce no rain, God can give it.

The clouds may deny rain to the wilderneſs, becauſe the wilderneſs yields no moiſture to make clouds, yet the Lord ſends rain thither.

Again, Conſider the wilderneſs and deſert places, as they are here held forth, together with the providence of God concerning them;

And ſo Note; The care and providence of God extends it ſelf to all places, even to places uninhabited.

It is no wonder that God ſhould provide rain for places that are inhabited; but where no man is, there to water the Earth, to what purpoſe is that, yet the Lord will water ſuch places (as it were) by his own hand, and (as 'tis ſaid, Pſal. 107. 35.) Turn the wilderneſs into ſtanding water, and dry ground into Water-ſprings. Though there be no man to eat the fruit, which the rain produceth from the Earth (of which the Text ſpeaks afterward) yet God will ſend rain to make that land fruitful, for the beaſts ſake, that they may have graſs and green things to feed upon. God will provide for the beaſts of the Earth, where there are no men to provide for them, nor to be provided for. God is a great Houſe-keeper: He nouriſheth all living creatures as well as men, as he preſerves, ſo he feeds the beaſts of the Earth, and the fiſhes of the Sea, as well as men (Pſal. 104. 27.) Theſe all wait upon thee (O Lord) that thou maiſt give them their meat in due ſeaſon; the very fiſhes in the Sea wait upon God for their meat, and ſo do fowls of the Air, together with all things moving upon the face of the Earth (Pſal. 145. 15.) The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou giveſt them meat in due ſeaſon; and that he may do ſo, he gives them rain in due ſeaſon; He cauſeth it to rain on the Earth where no man is, and upon the wilderneſs, where there is no man. God hath beaſts to provide for, where men are not, and he will not let a beaſt that he hath made, want food; the very worms ſhall have a ſupport of Life.

Hence Chriſt argues away all undue care and thoughtfulneſs in man for the ſuccours of this life (Mat. 6. 25, 26.) Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye ſhall put on. Behold, the fowls of the Air; for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into Barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them: are ye not much better than they? Surely ye are, therefore ye ſhall be better provided for than they. Hath God a break-faſt ready for every little Bird that comes chirping out of her Neſt? Hath he a breakfaſt ready for every beaſt in the Wilderneſs that comes out of his den? And will he not much more provide for you, O ye of little faith? How encouraging an argument is this to our Faith, that the Lord will provide for all men, and eſpecially for his own; ſeeing he provides for the fowls of the Air, and the beaſts of the Earth, where there is no man to give them any food, or take any care of them!

This conſideration may ſtrengthen our dependance on God, though we are brought into a Wilderneſs condition, where there is no man to pity us, or give us a morſel of Bread. Surely the Lord that feeds the wild Beaſts where there is no man, can and will provide for his own people, when the hearts of all men are ſhut up againſt them; he can make the fowls of the Air and the Beaſts of the Earth to bring them food, as the Ravens did to Elijah.

Further, This is an inſtance of the inexhauſtible treaſure of the Lords goodneſs: For if he giveth rain in the wilderneſs for the Beaſts of the Earth, may we not thence infer, ſurely the Lord will take care even of thoſe who are unworthy. What have the Beaſts deſerved at the hand of God, that he ſhould provide for them? Yea, the Lord doth not only give food to thoſe that are of no deſert, as the beaſts, but to thoſe that are of ill deſert, he gives rain to thoſe who are but beaſts in the ſhape of men, men of beaſtly ſpirits. The Lord feeds the Lions and the Bears, the Tygers and the Swine of the World, that is, men like them; he cauſeth his rain to fall upon the juſt and unjuſt (Matth. 5. 45.) He will rather give good to the bad, for the goods ſake, than be wanting to the good, becauſe of the wickedneſs of the bad; and therefore the rain comes not only upon the juſt, but upon the unjuſt too.

Satius eſt prodeſſe malis propter bonos quam bonis deeſſe propter malos. Sen. de Benef. lib. 4. cap. 28.

This is true alſo in a ſpiritual way; The Lord ſends his rain upon the wilderneſs, he hath done ſo, and he hath promiſed to do ſo ſtill; That is, he hath ſent, and will ſend the rain of the Goſpel upon the Heathen. Some Nations are a wilderneſs; as they live in a wilderneſs, ſo they are themſelves a wilderneſs, a deſert; and we have a promiſe that the Lord will cauſe the rain, ſpiritual rain, to fall upon this wilderneſs (Iſa. 35. 1, 2.) The wilderneſs and the ſolitary places ſhall be glad for them (for whom? for the Church. and for the ſending forth of the Goſpel by them) and the deſert ſhall rejoyce and bloſſom as the roſe; it ſhall bloſſom abundantly, and rejoyce even with joy and ſinging; the glory of Lebanon ſhall be given to it, the excellency of Carmel and of Sharon. That is, it ſhall be fertile and fruitful in ſpirituals, as thoſe places, Lebanon, Carmel, and Sharon (which was the glory and excellency of them) were in temporals. But how ſhould the wilderneſs and ſolitary places attain this glory? That's ſhewed at the ſixth and ſeventh verſes; for in the wilderneſs ſhall waters break out; and ſtreams in the deſert; and the parched ground ſhall become a pool, and the thirſty land ſprings of water. This Propheſie contains a promiſe of ſending the Goſpel, and with that the Holy Spirit (who is often compared in Scripture to water) to thoſe who were or are in their ſoul-ſtate as a dry heath, or as a barren wilderneſs. This prophet doth not only hold out a like promiſe in the ſame Metaphors, but explains it thus (Iſa. 44. 3, 4, 5.) I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground; what is meant by water and floods we may learn from the next words; I will pour my Spirit upon thy ſeed, and my bleſſing upon thine off-ſpring, and they ſhall ſpring up as among the graſs, as willows by the water-courſes; That is, they ſhall grow and flouriſh internally in grace and knowledg, and not only ſo, but they ſhall openly profeſs it and avouch it, as it followeth in the fifth verſe: One ſhall ſay, I am the Lords, and another ſhall call himſelf by the Name of Jacob, &c. That is, they ſhall give up their Names to be enrolled and regiſtred (as our Annotators expreſs it) in Gods Church-Book, or among his faithful ſervants. It was the ſaying of one of the Ancients with reſpect to this Allegory, To ſend rain upon the deſert, is, to preach the word of God unto the heathens. And the Lord magnifies himſelf in the diſpenſation of this ſpiritual rain, when, as he ſends it upon his Garden the Church, ſo alſo upon the wilderneſs the Heathen, that the wilderneſs may become a garden, and the deſert a Paradiſe, that they knowing the Lord and believing on him, may be joyned to the Church. Thus alſo the Lord divides a water-courſe, to cauſe it to rain on the Earth, where no (believing) man is; on the wilderneſs where there is no (good) man. The reaſon of his ſo doing, is given expreſly in the next words.

In deſerto pluere eſt verbum Dei gentilitatim prædicare. Greg. l. 29. Moral. c. 16.

Verſ. 27. To ſatisfie the deſolate and waſte ground, and to cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth.

Here is the reaſon of ſending rain upon the wilderneſs, it is to ſatisfie the deſolate and waſt ground, Mr. Broughton renders, The waſt and vaſt ground. The Vulgar Latin renders, The unpaſſable ground, or at leaſt, that which none paſſes, and ſo being diſuſed, lies waſt and deſolate. But in what ſenſe ſoever 'tis deſolate, or by what means ſoever it became deſolate, the Lord ſends rain to ſatisfie it, that is, to water it abundantly; ſatisfaction, is to have our fill. The very waſt ground ſhall have enough, enough to allay the heat and drought of it, enough to make it fruitful, and enough to fructifie the trees and plants that grow there, and ſo to feed and fatten the beaſts that live there.

Inviam & deſolatam. Vulg.

Ut riget ad ſatietatem uſque.

Ut impleret, &c. Vulg. Satur dierum & plenus dierum ſynonyma ſunt. Druſ.

there. The Vulgar Latin renders, That he may fill the deſolate and waſt ground; that which is filled, is or ſhould be ſatisfied. To be full of days, in Scripture, is to be ſatisfied with living. A man may have lived many days, yet not be full of days; but he who is full of days (as 'tis ſaid of ſome of the Patriarchs) is not hungry after more time or days in this world; therefore to be filled and ſatisfied, import the ſame thing. And to be ſure they who are not ſatisfied when they are full, will not be ſatisfied when they are empty. But however it is with man, we know the Earth ſpoken of in the Text is fully ſatisfied; it gapes for no more, when 'tis filled with rain. And this the Lord will ſend, To ſatisfie the deſolate and waſt ground.

But why is the Lord ſo careful to ſatisfie the deſolate and waſt ground? The ground is a ſenſeleſs thing, that feels not the want of rain. I anſwer, The Lord doth not ſatisfie the ground for the grounds ſake, but for their ſake who live upon, and are maintained by the ground. Fruit-bearing trees and graſs are maintained by the moiſture and fatneſs of the ground; beaſts are maintained by thoſe fruits and graſs: therefore the Lord ſatisfies the ground with rain, that it may ſatisfie the trees and graſs, and they the beaſts that live upon it. So then the Lord ſatisfieth the ground, that it may ſatisfie all ſorts of vegetables growing out of the ground, and that they may ſatisfie all kinds of animals living upon the ground. Such a gradation we find (Hoſ. 2.21,22.) I will hear, ſaith the Lord, I will hear the Heavens, and they ſhall hear the Earth, and the Earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil, and they ſhall hear Jezrael, that is, my people. We may run up the meaning of this promiſe backwards, thus, When my people (whom I now call Jezrael in a way of promiſe, as in a way of threatning, Chap. 1.4.) being preſſed with hunger and famin, cry to the corn, and the wine, and the oil, for food, they ſhall hear them; and when the corn and wine call to the Earth for moiſture to feed them, that ſhall hear; and when the Earth calls to the Heavens for rain, they ſhall hear; and when the Heavens call to God for orders to carry rain, he will hear them. It is for mans uſe that God makes the Earth fruitful; and where there are no men, 'tis for the beaſts ſake, that he ſatisfieth the deſolate and waſt ground.

Hence Note; Firſt, God is not wanting to any of his Creatures, according to their ſtate.

He will not let the ſenſeleſs ground ſuffer hunger and thirſt overlong, that ſhall have food after its kind, or proper for it.

Secondly, Note; Even the Earth knows when it hath enough.

It is ſatisfied. And this may be a great reproof upon the inſatiableneſs of many men; they in this are much worſe than the deſolate and waſt ground, that may be ſatisfied, that will crave no more. But whereas Solomon ſaith, there are four things that ſay not it is enough (Prov. 30.15,16.) Of all things, the deſires of man are moſt unſatiable, and ſay not, it is enough. It was a great word which Eſau ſpake, I have enough my brother (Gen. 33.9.) and I fear he hath but a few brethren in that ſaying. Among the four things which in Solomons Obſervation ſay not, it is enough, the Earth is one, in the place laſt mentioned. But mark, It is the Earth, that is not filled with water. For where God is pleaſed to fill the Earth with water, then as this Text in Job ſpeaks, it is ſatisfied. He cauſeth it to rain on the wilderneſs, to ſatisfie the deſolate and waſt ground.

Further, This may alſo comfort us in all our wants. For doubtleſs the Lord who takes care to ſatisfie the ſenſeleſs ground, will ſatisfie his believing people early with his mercy (Pſal. 90.14.) when they cry to him; yea he will ſatisfie them not only with good in this life, but with long life will he ſatisfie them, and ſhew them his Salvation (Pſal. 91.16.) He will abundantly bleſs Sions proviſion (What is that? The Word and Ordinances chiefly) and ſatisfie her poor with bread; with the bread of life eſpecially.

Laſtly, God ſends Rain to ſatisfie the deſolate and waſt ground.

Hence Note; God hath rain enough for all places.

He can ſpare it for waſte ground and wilderneſſes. And therefore, if he ſupplieth not our paſtures, corn-fields, and gardens with rain, it is not becauſe he cannot ſend it, or hath not enough to ſend, but it is to puniſh us for ſin. God doth not with-hold rain from any place, becauſe he is ſparing of his treaſures, is more for laying them up then giving them out; but becauſe he is provoked by the unthankfulneſs of man, for, or by his abuſe of his former bounties. The Lord forbids the clouds to drop down the rain upon inhabited places, and bids them convey it to waſte wilderneſſes, when inhabited places have not honoured him for it, nor brought forth fruits of righteouſneſs anſwerable to the fruits of the Earth by the bleſſing of rain.

Sic ſterilitas agrorum divitiæ & fertilitas eſt deſerti.

Thus alſo Chriſt will take the Kingdom, that is, the Kingdom of the Goſpel, the rain of holy doctrin, from an unthankful and unfruitful people, and give it to a Nation that will bring forth the fruits of it, as he threatned the Jews (Matth. 21.43.) and afterwards fulfilled that threatning upon them (Acts 13.46.) Lo we turn to the Gentiles. Ye having refuſed and abuſed the offers of Chriſt made to you by us; we will now go with our rain to the waſte and deſolate ground, or to the wilderneſs; That is, to the Gentiles, and they will receive it, and be thankful. The ſcarcity of Goſpel mercy which God brings upon any place, is a puniſhment of their barrenneſs under Goſpel means. And have not we cauſe to fear at this day, that foraſmuch as we are ſo like that earth ſpoken of (Heb. 6.8.) which drinketh in the Rain, yet (inſtead of fruit meet for his uſe by whom it is dreſſed) beareth briars and thorns; have not we cauſe I ſay to fear, that we are nigh to ſome curſe and burning, or that the Lord will carry away the rain to Heathens, who as yet are a deſolate and waſte ground?

To cauſe the bud of the tender herb to ſpring forth.

מוצא דשא Exitum germinis, דשא Proprie herba tenera. Exitum herbæ vocat herbam primum è terra prodeuntem. Druſ.

The natural effect of rain is growth, or to cauſe the bud of the tender herb to bring forth. If God denies water to manured and well husbanded lands, they wither; and even deſolate deſarts and waſte grounds flouriſh, when God waters them; then the bud of the tender herb ſprings forth.

Hence Note; Natural cauſes produce proper natural effects.

When God ſends rain on deſolate places, they bud and ſpring forth. When the rain falls, the herb flouriſhes; where the Sun ſhines, the graſs grows. And ſurely thus it is in ſpirituals, ſpiritual cauſes bring forth ſpiritual effects; if the Lord ſends the rain of the word upon deſolate Souls, the Soul receiving it will bud, and the tender herb will bring forth. Moſes (Deut. 32.1,2.) compared his Doctrin to the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and to the ſhowers upon the graſs. How green are the herbs after rain, and the graſs after ſhowers! Herbs and graſs bear witneſs to the bounty and goodneſs of God, in giving ſweet ſhowers of rain: Natural rain is ſeen in their looks, and ſo ſhould ſpiritual in our lives. And if, where the rain of the word falleth, they that receive it, do not bud and bloſſom and bring forth fruit, the deſolate wilderneſs will riſe up in judgment againſt them, the waſte grounds will condemn them. They will ſay, Lord, you ſent rain upon us, and lo, here are our buds and our bloſſoms, yea, here's the fruit which we have brought forth. Will not this ſhame our barrenneſs? Hath the Lord divided the Water-courſe of the Goſpel, and cauſed it to rain on us from day to day, and ſhall not we ſhew our buds and bloſſoms of holineſs, our fruits of faith and repentance, that he may come into his garden, and eat of his pleaſant fruits! How dreadful! Shall the waſte wilderneſſes and deſolate grounds bring forth, when the rain falls upon them, and ſhall not the Church! It is not bare profeſſing, but fruit-bearing, which honours God (John 15.8.) It is uncomely if ſo much as a leaf of profeſſion withers (Pſal. 1.3.) But how green ſoever the leaves of our profeſſion are, yea, though they ſhould retain their greenneſs under the hotteſt and moſt ſcorching Sun of Perſecution, yet what would it advantage us, if our leaves are not accompanied with good fruits.

Now, If any ſhould ask, What mean you by good fruits? Or what fruits are good? I ſhall cloſe the point in hand with an Anſwer to theſe Queſtions.

Theſe good fruits conſidered in reference to their efficient cauſe, are called fruits of the ſpirit (Gal. 5.22.) and in reference to the matter of them, they are called fruits of righteouſneſs (Phil. 1.11.) but in reference to the beginning or occaſion of them, they are called fruits meet for repentance (Matth. 3.8.) In general, all that is good fruit, which is conformable to the Word of God; whether it be the conformity of our natures to it, in converſion; or the conformity of our ways to it, in our daily converſation.

More particularly, theſe good fruits are of two ſorts:

Firſt, Inward fruits, or thoſe which we bring forth within, that is, in our hearts; theſe are ſecrets, and only known to God.

Secondly, Outward fruits, which we bring forth in our lives; theſe are or may be ſeen of men; yet they muſt not be brought forth, that we may be ſeen in doing them, but, that men ſeeing our good works, may glorifie our Father which is in Heaven (Matth. 5.16.)

Our inward good fruits (which are indeed our choiceſt and moſt ſpiritual good fruits) are of three ſorts.

Firſt, Good Thoughts. To do good is beſt for others; but to think good, or to have many good thoughts, is the beſt proof, that we our ſelves are good. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 12.12.) The root of the righteous yieldeth fruit. The root of a righteous man is his heart, and the firſt-fruits of a good heart are good thoughts. He is a precious perſon, and hath a precious heart, that can ſay as holy David did (Pſal. 139.17.) How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God, how great is the ſum of them! That is, the thoughts which I have of thee O God, are exceeding precious unto me; and I have many, very many of them, more than I am able to ſum or reckon up.

Secondly, Good affections are good inward fruits, ſuch are godly ſorrow, joy in God, love to God, longing after God (Pſal. 27.4. Pſal. 42.1,2. Iſa. 26.9.) hatred of evil; all theſe movings of the heart, are good and precious fruits.

Thirdly, (which are the iſſue and reſult of both the former) good purpoſes and holy reſolves to cleave faſt to God, to ſtick (as David expreſſeth it, Pſal. 119.31.) to his teſtimonies, ways, and truths, at all times, eſpecially in times of trial; or to continue with Chriſt in his temptation: theſe are very good inward fruits (Pſal. 17.3. Dan. 1.8.) Acts 11.23.

Outward good fruits are of two ſorts:

Firſt, Good words are good fruits. The lips of the righteous feed many (Prov. 10.21.) Edifying words (Eph. 4.29.) words of exhortation to good (Heb. 3.13.) words of reproof as to evil, (Gal. 6.1.) words of comfort to the ſad and ſorrowful (1 Theſ. 5.14.) all theſe words are good fruits.

Secondly, Good works, Firſt, of holineſs towards God, Secondly, of righteouſneſs and love towards all men, Thirdly, of charity to the poor; all theſe are outward good fruits; and all theſe the Lord looks for, where-ever, or upon whomſoever he ſends the rain of his word.

VERS. 28, 29, 30.

Hath the Rain a Father? Or who hath begotten the drops of Dew?
Out of whoſe Womb came the Ice? And the hoary froſt of Heaven, who hath gendred it?
The Waters are hid as with a ſtone, and the face of the deep is Frozen.

THe Lord having queſtioned Job in the former context about the courſe of the Rain, and the free diſpenſation of it, even to thoſe places where no man is, and to the Wilderneſs where there is no man; here he queſtions him about the cauſe and original of the Rain, and not only of the Rain, but of the Dew, the Ice, and the Froſt: So then, in theſe three verſes we have four Queſtions.

Firſt, About the Rain; and Secondly, about the Dew, in the 28. verſe: Thirdly, about the Ice; and Fourthly, about the Froſt, in the 29. verſe; together with the marvelous force and effects of it, Verſ. 30.

Verſ. 28. Hath the Rain a Father?

The Inquiry is, who is the Father of the Rain? That is, who is the Author? What is the cauſe of it? Not as if the cauſe of that or of the other Meteors here mentioned could not at all be known; but to ſhew, Firſt, That much of them all is unknown. There are many things in this lower Sphear beyond mans Sphear; even theſe are not propagated altogether according to our underſtanding or apprehenſions of them.

Secondly, To ſhew that he muſt be plentifully ſtored with all ſorts of good, who as a Father begets, and as a Mother brings forth ſuch uſeful and neceſſary things, for the preſervation of living Creatures.

Thirdly, To ſhew that theſe creatures are not produced by cauſes which are conſtant and unvariable in nature, but proceed from and daily depend upon the power and will of God, who ſometimes checks and ſtops the courſe of Nature, and at other times impregnates it for the production of theſe effects, or brings them forth by the Midwifery and help of ſecond cauſes.

Fourthly, When the Lord propounds the Queſtion under this Relation of a Father, he would ſhew or teach us that he gives Rain, and Dew to the Earth, as a Father gives food and other requiſites to his Children.

Further, This ſeems to be the deſign of God in putting theſe Queſtions to Job, that foraſmuch as he could not fully comprehend the cauſation and production of theſe things, much leſs was able to cauſe or produce them himſelf, but muſt receive them from the power and according to the diſpoſe and providence of God; therefore he ſhould refer all his concernments to the ſame Providence, and ſo reſt ſatisfied whether God ſent him a ſweet and refreſhing Rain and Dew, or a grievous and afflictive ſeaſon of Ice and Froſt.

Thus we may conceive the general ſcope of this Context. Now to the particulars.

Hath the Rain a Father?] The Queſtion may be reſolved both negatively and affirmatively: Firſt, Negatively; the Rain hath no Father, that is, on Earth, or among men. There is no creature power that can produce a drop of Rain. Secondly, affirmatively: Hath the Rain a Father? Yes, it hath; God is the Father of the Rain. The Rain is not fatherleſs; there is one who will own the Rain as his Child, or iſſue. The cauſation of Rain is a great ſecret in nature, a ſecret about which though wiſe and learned men have diſcourſed much, and given out much light about it, yet they have not reached the utmoſt, nor attained the full knowledg of it; and the reaſon of that is, becauſe the Rain hath a Father whoſe ways and workings as in the firſt conſtitution of Nature, ſo in the daily motions of it, exceed our knowledg.

Hath the Rain a Father? Not on Earth. Nor are the Heavens the Father of the Rain; the God of Heaven is. As not a ſhower, no nor a drop of Rain falls on the Earth at the will or by the power of man; ſo not by the power of the Sun drawing up the vapours and diſſolving the Clouds, nor by the Winds ſcattering the Clouds. The Sun may ſhine, the Moon may change, the Winds may blow and turn long enough, yet no Rain till the Lord gives the Word. Some (and that not improperly) have called the Sun The Father of the Rain. The Sun draws up thoſe vapours from the Earth into the Air, which are the matter of Rain, and there thoſe vapours are condenſed into Clouds, and afterwards rarified and diſſolved into Rain; yet theſe natural cauſes produce theſe effects only as God ſets them on work, and he can ſuſpend their working as often as he will. And therefore the ſimple and plain meaning of this Queſtion is, the Rain owes its original to God, and muſt call him Father: And that's the obſervation which riſeth out of this Queſtion, Hath the Rain a Father?

Si quis alium præter Deum pluviæ patrem quærat, is erit vapor qui ex humidis locis extractus & elevatus à Sole concreſcit in nebulam aut nubem, & inde à Sole tepefactus liqueſcit & ſolvitur. Sanct.

God and God alone is the Father of the Rain.

Without him it had never been; and that it is continued is by his power and providence; that the frame of nature is ſo diſpoſed, that ſecond cauſes are ſo ordered and furniſhed as to produce Rain, proceeds from, or comes to paſs by the Lord alone. The Prophet ſpake this in a time of great drought (Jer. 14. 22.) both in the negative and in the affirmative; and he propoſed two Queſtions, or the Queſtion twice, intending the negative. Firſt, Are there any among the Vanities of the Gentiles that can cauſe Rain? (By the vanities of the Gentiles we are to underſtand their Idol gods. Idols are vanities, or nothings; and can they who are nothing do this great thing, give Rain? That's the firſt Queſtion, Can Idols cauſe Rain, ſurely they cannot: But will it not Rain of courſe? Will not the Heavens one time or other yield Rain? That's the ſecond Queſtion) Can the Heavens give ſhowers? No, As Idols, or falſe gods, cannot give Rain, ſo neither can the Heavens, if forbidden, give Rain; they act not their power in their own power. The Heavens cannot give Rain, if God gives them a command to the contrary; and the God of Nature can check and countermand the courſe of Nature, both on Earth, and in the Heavens, when he will. Though thoſe bottles the Clouds be never ſo pregnant and full of Rain, yet he can ſtop them. So then, neither the Idols, nor the Heavens can do it, if God ſay No; yea, if he give not forth a word of command, if he bids not the courſe of Nature proceed, the Heavens over our heads will be Braſs, and the Earth under us as Iron; and therefore the Prophet in the latter part of the verſe tells us expreſly, who is the Father of the Rain, Art not thou he, O Lord our God? Therefore will we wait upon thee; for thou haſt made all theſe things. As if he had ſaid, O Lord, thou haſt made them; and therefore thou haſt both the right and the power to diſpoſe of them. What can be ſaid more clear and full for the confirmation of this point? Many other Scriptures ſay the ſame thing. Read Deut. 28. 12. *Pſal.*147.8. *Jer.*5.24. Amos 4.7.

So then, though there are natural cauſes of Rain, yet God is the firſt cauſe, and it is at his pleaſure that theſe natural cauſes either produce their effects, or are ſtayed from producing them. It Rains not by accident, nor by any concatenation of ſecond cauſes, but according to the appointments and pleaſure of the great God. 'Tis no ſmall part of our duty to eye God in cauſing theſe common things; and 'tis a great piece of Atheiſm, or a diſowning of God, to tie them up to natural cauſes.

Now, If God be the Father of the Rain, we may hence infer,

Firſt, That God is the Father of all Creatures, and the ſupream cauſe of all effects in the creatures. As a Father is the ſecond or inſtrumental cauſe of his Sons Being, ſo God is the ſupream efficient cauſe of all Beings and Entities. Not only Animals and Rationals, but the very inanimates and ſenſleſs creatures are of a Divine extraction: God is the Fountain of their Being. And if God be, and muſt be acknowledged as the Father of all Creatures, even of the Rain, then,

Secondly, God is much more the Father of Mankind. The Apoſtle voucheth that to the ſuperſtitious Athenians as a Divine truth, out of their own Authors (Acts 17. 28.) As certain alſo of your own Poets have ſaid, for we are alſo his off-ſpring; we are ſprung from him as Branches from the Root, or as Streams from the Fountain: Not that we are, as the Streams with the Fountain, or the Branches with the Root, of the ſame Nature with him, (which to imagin were higheſt Blaſphemy) but we take or receive our Nature from him; That is, he hath made us to be what we are, and in him, that is, in dependance upon him, we live and move, and have our Being.

Thirdly, If God own himſelf as a Father to all things, and to all men, in a general way of Nature, then much more doth he own himſelf a Father to all his people in a way of grace. What the Apoſtle ſaith of his Title Saviour (1 Tim. 4. 10.) He is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of thoſe that believe; ſo I may ſay of this Relation Father, God is the Father of all men, but eſpecially of thoſe that believe. The father-hood which ſtands in grace is the higheſt and moſt excellent father-hood which God beareth to any of his Creatures: As to this the Apoſtle (Jam. 1. 18.) ſaith, Of his own will begat he us by the Word of Truth; that we ſhould be a kind of firſt fruits of his Creatures; That is, as I conceive, that believers (they only are begotten with the word of truth) conſidered with all other creatures, to whom God is a Father in a common way, ſhould have the honour to be called the chief of his creatures. The firſt fruits were chief among the fruits of the Earth. The firſt born both of man and of beaſt were the Lords portion (Exod. 13. 1.) therefore chief. This honour have all the Saints; the Birth-right is theirs, and theirs is the Bleſſing; They, as all holy things, are dedicated to God, and graciouſly accepted with him, as a choſen Generation, as a peculiar people. He who is Lord over all, and Father of all, both things and perſons, as they ſtand in the whole compaſs of Nature, is eminently and with endeared affections, a Father to all them who believe and are actually in a ſtate of grace.

Fourthly, If God be a Father to all creatures, and to man more then to inferiour creatures, and to true Believers more then to other men; then as his fatherhood is extended, ſo is his fatherly care. God will not be wanting to any as a Father, to whom he is upon any account a Father. He takes care of the fruits of the Earth, and of the beaſt of the field, and of all mankind, he feeds them all, and cloaths them all, and protects them all; but they who are a kind of firſt-fruits of his creatures, and bears the image of his holineſs, or his Image in holineſs, have a ſpecial portion and proportion of his care over them, and love to them, and proviſion for them. What can he deny to us as a Father, who hath vouchſafed to be our Father? Hath the Rain a Father?

Or who hath begotten the drops of Dew?

This latter part of the verſe is of the ſame meaning with the former. The word which we tranſlate hath begotten, is applyable to either Parent, man or woman, in a different Conjugation, as Grammarians ſpeak: but in the Conjugation here uſed it is proper only to the man; and therefore they who tranſlate who hath conceived, wreſt this Text, and depart from the Original ſenſe of the word as here expreſſed, in which the Metaphor of, or the Alluſion to a Father is ſtill continued. Who hath begotten

Verbum ילד In Chal & de viro & de muliere dicitur; & הוליך Generavit in Hiphil de viro tantum. Merc.

The drops of Dew?] The Lord doth not ask who hath begotten the Dew, but the drops of Dew? Drops are very ſmall things; yet the great God who made the mighty waters of the Sea, makes alſo the ſmall drops of Dew. Some derive the Original word which we render drops, from a Root that ſignifies a flood, as implying, that though the Dew falleth in ſingle drops, yet being fallen there is much of it, even a flood of it. Others deriving the word from, at leaſt, judging it hath near alliance with a word ſignifying a drinking Cup, or a Vial, render, who hath begotten the Cups or Vials of Dew?

אגלי Guttas tantum hic extat. Sunt qui גלי Exponunt quaſi fluctus; quod in magna abundantia fluctuum more ros effundatur. &c. Merc.

We heard of the Dew at the 19. Verſe of the 29. Chapter, where Job (to ſet forth the proſperity of his former condition) ſaid, The Dew lay all night upon my branches. Vapours drawn up from the Earth in the day by the heat of the Sun, are returned in Dew by the moderate coolneſs and ſtilneſs of the night. The remote efficient cauſe of Dew is the heat of Heaven raiſing vapours from the Earth. The next efficient cauſe of Dew is the temperate coolneſs and quietneſs of the night; for if the night be windy the Dew falls not; and if the night be very cold, the vapours are congealed and hardened into a froſt. 'Tis only in temperate ſeaſons, that we find thoſe drops of Dew hanging like ſo many Orient Pearls upon the graſs, leaves and Flowers, at once adorning and refreſhing them. We may take notice of two things in the falling of the Dew.

Ros eſt vaporis terræ propinqui noctuq; refrigerati in aquam concretio.

First, It falls very ſilently; Secondly, very abundantly. No man hears the Dew fall, nor can any number the drops of Dew which fall. Huſhai uſed both theſe alluſions, in in that piece of loyal councel which he gave for the defeating of the counſel of Achitophel (2 Sam. 11. 12.) where he adviſed Abſalom, to gather all Iſrael from Dan to Beer-ſheba, as the ſand which is by the Sea for multitude; and ſo, ſaith he, we will light upon him as the Dew falleth upon the ground; That is, we will come ſo ſilently upon him, and in ſuch numbers (even as the drops of Dew upon the ground) that he ſhall not be able to avoid us, no more then he can avoid the Dew, which in one and the ſame inſtant inſtant falls upon the field or Country all over. An Army comes with an intent to fall upon the enemy like a ſtorm, yet it may be ſaid to come and fall upon him like a Dew, both becauſe it comes always like a multitude, and becauſe it comes ſometimes very ſilently to ſurprize him at unawares. Who hath begotten the drops of Dew?

Vapores ſereno tempore mediam aeris regionem aſcendentes reſolvuntur frigore in guttas tenues. Ariſt. l. de mund. c. 1. Plin. l. 2. c. 60.

Hence Note; as before of the Rain, ſo here of the Dew, God is the Father of the Dew, as well as of the Rain.

The Dew differs not much from the Rain; both are of the ſame nature, and they have the ſame Father, and he will be own'd in the Dew as well as in the Rain. The Prophet Haggai reproving the returned Jews (Chap. 1.10.) for their neglect in not building the Lords Houſe, repreſents the Lord thus ſpeaking to them; Becauſe of my houſe that is waſt, and ye run every man to his own houſe; That is, you eagerly and violently (running is a violent exerciſe) purſue your private ends and intereſts, not minding nor promoting my honour and worſhip; Therefore the Heaven over you is ſtayed from Dew, and the Earth is ſtayed from her fruit. The want of Dew makes many wants. If we want but the Dew of Heaven we ſhall quickly want the fruits of the Earth. We uſually take notice of the want of Rain, but we ſeldom take notice of the want of Dew, or pray for the falling of it; nor do we give thanks for it (as for Rain) when we ſee it fallen, and ſweetly filling the boſom of the Earth. Yet the with-holding of Dew (though Dew be a leſs matter then Rain) is a greater Judgment then the with-holding of Rain; for 'tis a ſign that the Judgment of drought is at the height, or in the perfection of it, when the Lord doth not only with-hold the Rain which is the greater mercy, but the Dew too, which is the leſſer. O how dry muſt the earth be when it hath not only no plentiful ſhowers of Rain, but not ſo much as a drop of Dew! And therefore when the Prophet Eliah would ſhew the extremity of the Famin which was coming upon Iſrael, he made that high proteſt (1 Kings 1. 17.) As the Lord God of Iſrael liveth before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be Dew nor Rain theſe years, but according to my word. Not only ſhall ye have no Rain, but no Dew; and when the Heaven is ſtayed from giving Rain or Dew, the Earth muſt needs be ſtayed from yielding fruit or food. And ſo great is the Lords care in diſpoſing the Dew of Heaven, that Solomon tells us (Prov. 3. 20.) By his knowledg the depths are broken up, and the Clouds drop down Dew. As if he had ſaid, The Dew doth not ſteal down upon the Earth without Gods knowledg; not a drop of it deſtils upon the Earth without his orders and privity. And when 'tis ſaid, By his knowledg the Clouds drop down Dew, it hath this in it; God knows what moyſture is meet for the Earth, whether little or much, Dew or Rain; though I conceive we may take the word Dew in this Text of the Proverbs ſynecdochically, for any, or all, the moyſture that falls from Heaven, as by the breaking up of the depths in the former part of the verſe, we are to underſtand all the moyſture which riſeth from, and is conveighed up and down in the leſſer or greater Channels of the Earth. The Lord doth ſo much know how uſeful and beneficial the Dew is to the Earth, that it is ſaid to drop down by his knowledg; as if the Lord did exerciſe a very ſpecial knowledg about it. The Clouds are Gods Veſſels, which being lockt up by him, keep in their precious liquor, and being opened by him, pour it down in Rain, drop and deſtil it down in Dew, whereof (Solomon in the place laſt cited) aſſureth us, there is not a drop that falleth but he takes notice of it, and therefore ſaith, by his knowledg the Clouds drop down Dew: And indeed ſuch and ſo wonderful is the deſtillation of the Dew, that it may well be ſaid to drop even through his divine fingers.

The Dew is very uſeful and beneficial to the Earth two ways or in two things chiefly.

Firſt, It moiſtens the Earth: Secondly, It cools the Earth. When Iſaac was giving the bleſſing to Jacob, he put this in particularly (Gen. 27. 28.) God give thee of the Dew of Heaven, and the fatneſs of the Earth, and plenty of Corn and Wine; implying that the fatneſs of the Earth cauſing plenty of Corn and Wine, is cauſed by the Dew of Heaven. Anſwerable to this bleſſing given by Iſaac to his ſon Jacob, is that promiſe or propheſie given out by Moſes (Deut. 33. 28.) The Fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a Land of Corn and Wine; alſo his Heavens ſhall drop down Dew. By the Fountain of Jacob ſome underſtand the poſterity of Jacob, or the whole houſe of Iſrael ſpread abroad like the overflowing of a Fountain, to which David ſeems to allude (Pſal. 68. 26.) Bleſs ye God in the Congregations, even the Lord from the Fountain of Iſrael, or (as the words may be rendred) Ye that are of the Fountain of Iſrael. Now, ſaith Moſes, in that Propheſie, The Fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a land of Corn and Wine; That is, upon a plentiful land: alſo his Heavens ſhall drop down Dew; That is, he ſhall have the beſt bleſſings of Heaven: Temporal bleſſings (as Canaan was of Heaven) being but a ſhadow of ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings. And when the Lord would ſhew how plentious in mercy (chiefly in ſpiritual mercies) he would be to his people, he ſaith (Hoſea 14. 5, 6.) I will be as a Dew unto Iſrael and he ſhall grow as the Lilly, and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon; his branches ſhall ſpread, and his beauty ſhall be as the Olive tree, and his ſmell as Lebanon. Thus the Lord ſpake by the Prophet, in alluſion to thoſe great effects which the natural Dew produceth on Earth. Solomon having ſaid (Prov. 19. 12.) that, the (juſt and deſerved) wrath of a King is like the roaring of a Lion, preſently adds, but his favour is as the Dew upon the graſs; That is, he exceedingly comforts and refreſheth the hearts of all upon whom his favour falls. And when the Prophet Micah, (Chap. 5. 7.) would ſhew how great a bleſſing the people of God would be to any place where they were caſt, he ſaith, The remnant of Jacob ſhall be in the midſt of many people (how?) as Dew from the Lord, and as ſhowers upon the graſs. By the remnant of Jacob, he means the choſen and faithful remainder of Jacob after many ſcatterings and trials; thoſe few of the people of God in the midſt of the World whereſoever they are, ſhall be as Dew upon the graſs; That is, they ſhall be a great bleſſing to them. The world will ſcarce let that remnant be any where, in ſome places of the world there are ſcarce any of them, yet ſee of what benefit they are to any place, They are as Dew from the Lord. The Apoſtle uſeth ſuch an expreſſion concerning himſelf and other faithful Miniſters of the Goſpel (2 Cor. 2. 15.) We are unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt in them that are ſaved, and in them that periſh; That is, we are a means of ſalvation and eternal life to them that are ſaved, and we offer eternal life and ſalvation to them that periſh. So ſaith the Prophet concerning all the remnant of Jacob, they ſhall be in the midſt of many people as a dew upon the graſs, that waiteth not for man, nor tarrieth for the ſon of man; they ſhall be as a Dew from the Lord; That is, there ſhall be a great multitude of them, and they ſhall be as a Dew, that is, they ſhall diſtil ſweetly upon thoſe many people as a Dew from the Lord, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the ſons of men. The graſs in the field is not watered by man, as herbs and flowers in a garden are, and therefore may be ſaid not to tarry, nor to depend upon man, nor upon the ſons of men, but upon God for the Dew and Showers of Heaven to water it. Thus thoſe many people ſhall have help and ſweet ſupplies; though men neglect them, yet God will take care of them, and ſend the remnant of Jacob, ſome or other that are faithful, to be as a Dew from him upon them, to make them grow and be fruitful.

Before I paſs from this verſe, we may conſider a threefold alluſion of the Dew.

First, To Chriſt himſelf. One of the Ancients expounding that place (Judges 6. 37, 40.) where Gideon deſired as a ſign from the Lord that he would ſave Iſrael by his hand, that the Dew might fall on the Fleece, the floor remaining dry; and afterward, that the Dew might fall upon the floor, the Fleece remaining dry; concludes, The Dew in the Fleece, is Chriſt in the Virgin. Jeſus Chriſt indeed came down from Heaven as the Dew, for the refreſhing and comforting of poor ſinners; he came down alſo as a Dew to make us fruitful and grow as the Lilly, and to caſt forth our roots as Lebanon.

Ros in vellere, Chriſtus in virgine. Rupertus in Hoſ. 14.

Secondly, In the Dew there is an alluſion to the word of God preached. The diſpenſers of the Goſpel are compared to Clouds; Moſes was a Cloud, and his ſpeech diſtilled as the Dew, (Deut. 32 2.) That is, it came down ſweetly and efficaciouſly. As the manna and the Dew fell together (Exod. 16. 12, 14.) ſo the graces, comforts, and powers of the Spirit come with the word; there's dew with the Manna, and Manna with the dew. When the dew of divine doctrin comes down, Chriſt the Manna comes down too.

Thirdly, It carries in it an alluſion to that ſweetneſs of affection that is among Brethren (Pſal. 133. 1.) Behold how good and how pleaſant it is, for Brethren to dwell together in unity! Then follows (Verſ. 3.) As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that deſcended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the bleſſing, even life for evermore. Love and unity among brethren is like dew, it refreſheth them and makes them fruitful; They who provoke one another to love, will alſo to good works (Heb. 10. 24.) Unity makes a great increaſe. Small things grow great by concord, whereas diſcord dwindleth or reduceth great things to little things, and at laſt to nothing.

Concordia parvæ res creſcunt, diſcordia magnæ dilabuntur.

So much of Gods Father-hood or relation to the Rain and Dew: In the next words he is pleaſed to enquire of Job concerning the original of Ice and Froſt.

Verſ. 29. Out of whoſe womb came the Ice?

Theſe words are an elegant Metaphor taken from Child-bearing. What woman can the Ice call Mother? God is here compared to a Mother, for the ſame reaſon for which he was before compared to a Father. We are to note (ſaith Aquinas upon this place) that Cold is the cauſe of Ice, which is a feminine or womaniſh quality; but the cauſe of rain and dew is heat, which is a maſculine or manly quality. And therefore the Lord ſpeaking of the generation of rain and dew, uſeth the word Father; and about the generation of Ice and Froſt he uſeth a word moſt proper to the Mother; Out of whoſe womb came the Ice? The word rendred womb ſignifies the whole belly, yea the whole body. Thus (Pſal. 132. 11.) Of the fruit of thy body, &c. The Hebrew is belly, ſo the word is uſed (Gen. 15. 4. 2 Chron. 22. 21.) but according to our Tranſlation it ſtrictly relates to the Mother, as if God would take upon him both ſexes, and be, as, the Father of the rain and dew, ſo, the Mother of the Ice and Froſt. The Ancients inſiſt much upon this ſetting forth the glory of God in the former verſe as a Father, and here as a Mother, out of whoſe womb the Ice comes; and they tell us of ſome who never had Scripture light, that yet did ſpeak of God according to this Notion, calling him Mother-Father. They looked to God, and honoured him, as having not only the power of a Father, but the care of a Mother conceiving, nouriſhing, nurſing, and educating the Creature as a Mother doth her Children; and therefore called God Mother-Father, and ſo much this change of the word in the Text doth imply. Out of whoſe womb

Clemens Alexandrinus, l. 5. Strom. Docet Deum μητροπάτορα ab Orpheo vocatum.

Came the Ice?] Yet this manner of ſpeaking ſignifies no more than this, that Ice and Froſt are cauſed and brought forth by the power of God. The word rendred Ice, comes from a root which ſignifies to make bald, or to pull off the hair, becauſe when Froſt and Ice come, they quickly pull off the leaves from the trees, and the flowers from the herbs, they make all bare-headed, and ſo Ice hath its denomination from that effect; Out of whoſe womb came the Ice?

קרח Gelu. Radix, evulſit pilos; quia gelu terram gramine, arboresplantaſquefoliis dejectis quaſi glabrat.

And the hoary froſt of Heaven, who hath gendred it?

The word rendred hoary froſt, ſignifies to cover over, becauſe the hoary froſt covers all over. The trees and herbs, all things above ground, are covered with the hoary froſt, therefore it hath its name from covering; and here the Lord calls it, The hoary Froſt

כפר Texit, operuit.

Of Heaven.] Becauſe the cold which makes the hoary Froſt, comes from the Air, which is often in Scripture called Heaven.

Hence Note; The Lord will be acknowledged as the Author of Ice and Froſt.

They are the effects of his power and declaration of his glory; and therefore the Lord calls ſuch-like meteors to praiſe him, (Pſal. 148. 8.) as evidences or proofs of his power and wonderous works (Pſal. 147. 16, 17.) He ſcattereth his hoar Froſt like aſhes, he caſteth forth his Ice like morſels; who can ſtand before his cold? The Lord takes the Ice and Froſt and Cold to be his; it is not only his Sun, but his Ice, and his Froſt; he ſcatters his hoar Froſt like aſhes. The Froſt is compared to aſhes in a threefold reſpect: Firſt, Becauſe the hoar Froſt gives a little interruption to the ſight. If you ſcatter aſhes into the Air, it darkens the light, ſo doth the hoary Froſt. Secondly, hoary Froſt is like aſhes, becauſe near in colour to aſhes. Thirdly, 'Tis like aſhes, becauſe there is a kind of burning in it; Froſt burns the tender buds and bloſſoms, it nips them, and dries them up. The hoary Froſt, hath its denomination in the Latin Tongue from burning, and it differs but a very little from that word which is commonly uſed in Latin, for a coal of fire. The cold Froſt hath a kind of ſcorching in it, as well as the hot Sun: Unſeaſonable Froſts in the Spring, ſcorch the tender fruits, which bad effect of Froſt is uſually expreſt by Carbunculation or blaſting. Froſt is ſometimes a great benefit, and ſometimes a great ſcourge; when it comes opportunely and in ſeaſon, 'tis a great benefit; but if it comes in the ſpring of the year, if it comes when the youth of the ſpring, buds and bloſſomes, are put forth, it proves very detrimental, and kills that hopeful ſpring of the Earth, which the warmth of a benign Sun and wind had invited out. The Froſt of a few nights hath ſpoiled the hopes of Husbandmen and Vine-dreſſers, for the whole year. Froſt is both a benefit and a ſcourge; whether it proves the one or the other, it is God who gendreth it, and muſt therefore be acknowledged in it.

Unde pruinæ nomen, è perurendo, quod fruges perurit, & vocant carbunculationem.

As in this 29. verſe God declares himſelf the Author of the Froſt and of the Ice, and, in opening it, ſomewhat hath been ſaid of their effects, ſo in the next verſe one remarkable and very forcible effect of the Froſt is held forth, that we may learn (and 'tis no more then our experience and eye-ſight have often taught us) what cold or Froſt can do. Why, what can it do? It can turn water into ſtones. Such is the power of cold, that it hardens the liquid water like a ſtone. Ice in its very firſt appearance hath the reſemblance of a ſtone, and being very thick as in long Froſts) 'tis like a rock, like a mountain of ſtone: Thus the Text ſpeaks.

Verſ. 30. The waters are hid as with a ſtone.

That is, when extream cold freezes the waters into Ice, the waters are not ſeen, they are lockt up, and (as it were) paved over with a ſtone; or the waters ſeem to ſuffer a ſtrange metamorphoſis, and leaving their natural liquidity and ſoftneſs, are condenſed or hardened into rocks; ſuch is the force of cold. Some expreſs it actively, not as we, The waters are hid, but the waters hide themſelves like a ſtone. Thus Mr. Broughton expreſſeth it. Naturaliſts tell us that in ſome cold Countries, where there are great falls of ſnow and rain, the ſnow and rain grow into ſuch a hardneſs, that you cannot reduce them into water. Cryſtal (ſay they) is nothing but water hardened by cold: And thus water is more than hid as with a ſtone, for it becomes a ſtone.

Nives in Cryſtallum durantur. Plin. l. 37. c. 2. κρύσταλλος τὸ διὰ τοῦ κρύους συστελλόμενον ὕδωρ. i. e. Aqua frigore concreta.

Hence Note; The Lord can make wonderful changes in Nature.

What is more fluid than water, more moveable than water; it was of old grown into a divine Proverb (Gen. 49. 4.) Unſtable as water; yet this unſtable body can the Lord change into a ſtone, and make it hard as a rock. Hiſtories are full of ſtrange reports concerning the effects of cold. There have been ſuch Froſts and Freezings, that great waters, mighty rivers, yea ſome parts of the Sea have been turned into a ſtone: Houſes have been built upon theſe congealed waters, and Battels have been fought upon them. The Army of King Mithridates overcame the enemy in a pitcht Battle upon the Ice. And 'tis freſh in memory, how the late King of Sweden a few years ſince, paſſed his Army over an arm of the Sea, in his war with Denmark. So fierce and violent is the cold in ſome parts of Muſcovia, that a mans ſpittle is frozen (ſay ſome) in its paſſage from his lips to the ground; much more may it be ſo, with cold water ſprinkled in the Air.

Strabo l. 2.

Danubius ripas gelu jungit duratuſque glacie ingentia tergo bella tranſportat. Plin. in Panegy.

Now as the power of God is great in hardning that which is ſoft, ſo in ſoftning that which is hard. He that turns water into a ſtone, can turn ſtones into water. So the Pſalmiſt Concreſcunt ſubitò currenti in flumine cruſtæ. Undaque jam tergo ferratos ſuſtinet orbes, puppibus illa prius patulis nunc hoſpita plauſtris. Virg. l. 3. Georg.

Pſalmiſt expreſſeth the miracle of bringing water out of the rock for Iſrael in the wilderneſs (Pſal. 114. 7, 8.) Tremble thou Earth at the preſence of the Lord, at the preſence of the God of Jacob, which turned the rock into a ſtanding water; the flint into a fountain of Waters. This is a glorious work, the turning of a viſible rock into water; but the work of God is more glorious in ſoftning a hard heart, or in turning the rocky heart of an impenitent ſinner, or the inviſible rock of an impenitent ſinners heart into the waters of godly ſorrow, working repentance not to be repented of. We ſhould much more magnifie the power of God, when we ſee hearts of ſtone melted and diſſolved into thoſe ſpiritual waters, then when (though that be a mighty work of God) we ſee the natural waters turned into, or (as the Text gives it) hid as with a ſtone, or when we ſee (as it followeth in the Text) that

The face of the deep is frozen.

That is, the uppermoſt part of the deep is frozen; and, I conceive, the Lord puts this in (the face of the deep) to ſhew that the cold hath not only power in the ſhallow ſtanding waters, but in that which is deep, and deep to amazement; ſo deep, that it is called, The Deep; as if all other waters were but ſhallows, compared with that. So then, not ponds only and rivers and ſhallow waters, but the face of the deep, where one would think the Froſt could have no power, is frozen.

Quaſi ligata & captivata eſſet.

The Hebrew is, The face of the deep is taken. The word notes taking, as a Captive or Priſoner is taken. The Lord takes the face of the deep Captive, and holds it as his Priſoner during pleaſure. They who inhabit or travel to the Northern Climes, have ſo much experience that the face of the deep is frozen, that I need not further inſiſt upon any proof of it; nor ſhall I further treat of theſe effects of Cold, Froſt and Ice, as conſidered in a natural way: Only for the cloſe of all, and a little improvement of them in a moral or ſpiritual way, we may conſider them in a twofold reſemblance.

Firſt, Ice and Froſt reſemble all humane things. The things of this World, are they not like a Sea of Ice? That is, Firſt, Very ſlippery. Secondly, Very Uncertain, how long they will laſt or continue. Some conceive, that, the Sea of glaſs like unto Cryſtal, which was repreſented unto St. John in Viſion (Rev. 4. 6, and 15, 2.) ſignified the ſtate of the world, which is like a Sea, becauſe of the tumultuouſneſs of it; and like a Sea of glaſs, becauſe of the brittleneſs of it; and a Sea of glaſs like Cryſtal, becauſe of the clearneſs and tranſparency of it to God; he ſees quite thorow it: to him all things are naked and and manifeſt. Such a thing is the world, 'tis a frozen Sea, eſpecially for the ſlipperineſs and uncertainty of it. For though the Sea be turned into a ſtone, yet no man knows how ſoon a Thaw may diſſolve it back again into water? The things of this world ſuffer ſudden changes. Though men have worldly eſtates, like to mountains of ſtone or rocks, yet the Lord can make theſe mountains, theſe rocks, melt at, and flow down at his preſence (Iſa. 64. 2.) The greateſt mountains of worldly power and riches, which ſeem to be as hard as rocks, as compact as mountains of Adamant, are yet but like mountains of Ice before the Lord; if he let forth but a little heat of his anger and diſpleaſure againſt them, they melt like wax before the fire, or like a heap of ſnow before the Sun, and flow down preſently like water. Should we ſee men building upon the Ice (as ſome have done in a proper ſenſe) we would preſently ſay, they build upon a very unſure foundation. They who build their hopes upon any perſon or thing in this word, are no wiſer, and do no better then they who build upon the Ice. All things here below are uncertain, they may, yea, they muſt ſoon melt and paſs away, from us, or we from them.

Secondly, Ice and Froſt, the cold ſeaſon, of which the Text ſpeaketh, reſembles a ſtate of affliction and adverſity; that's Ice, that's Froſt. As warm Sun-ſhine reſembles a ſtate of proſperity, ſo Cold and Froſt a ſtate of adverſity; and ſo it doth in a four-fold reſpect.

οὐ δοκεῖ χαρᾶς εἶναι ἀλλὰ λυπῆς.

Firſt, Becauſe Froſt or Cold is unpleaſant and pinching to the body, eſpecially to weak and tender bodies. No chaſtening (ſaith the Apoſtle, *Heb.*12.11.) for the preſent ſeemeth (to ſenſe and fleſh) to be joyous, but grievous, or (as the Greek ſtrictly) ſeemeth to be of joy but grief.

Heyl.Geog

Secondly, Ice and Froſt continue not, they are but for a ſeaſon, a Thaw will come. The afflicted ſtate of a godly man is unpleaſing, yet not laſting, to be ſure not everlaſting. Though ſome Froſts hold longer then others, yet none hold always, Summer will come; and uſually where winter is fierceſt, Summer, for a recompence, is pleaſanteſt. Our Modern Geographer having deſcribed the ſharpneſs of Winter in Muſcovia, concludes thus; Such is their Winter, neither is their Summer leſs miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner covered the whole ſurface of the Country, are at firſt approach of the Sun ſuddenly diſſolved, the waters quickly dried up, and the Earth dreſſed in her Holy-day Apparel, ſuch a mature growth of fruits, ſuch flouriſhing of herbs, ſuch chirping of Birds, as if it were a perpetual ſpring. And that the Church of God after a ſad and cold winter of affliction is relieved by a ſweet and comfortable ſummer of proſperity, is ſet forth in the higheſt ſtrains and moſt beautiful flowers of divine Rhetorick by Chriſt in that invitation to his Spouſe (Cant. 2. 10, 11, 12, 13.) My beloved ſpake and ſaid unto me, Riſe up my love, my fair one, and come away; for lo, the winter is paſt, the rain is over and gone (that is, thy afflictions are ended, thy Clouds of ſorrow, and thy tears are over-blown and wiped away, and now behold a ſucceſſion of better things, even of whatſoever may call out thy joys, and renew thy comforts; for) the flowers appear on the Earth, the time of the ſinging of birds is come; the voice of the turtle is heard in our land: the figg-tree putteth forth her tender figgs, and the Vines with the tender grape, give a good ſmell. Here's a new face of things indeed; what can be added to the felicity of that eſtate which is ſhadowed under theſe Metaphors? Such a Summer of ſpiritual felicity in temporal liberties, after a winter of temporal ſufferings in her ſpirituals, did Chriſt invite his Church in general unto: And this may relieve particular Chriſtians in their afflictions. The cold Froſt ſeldom laſts long, never always.

Thirdly, Though Cold and Froſt be pinching and troubleſome while they laſt, yet they have a very good effect upon the Earth while they laſt. Firſt, they mellow the Earth. After a laſting Froſt the clods of Earth crumble eaſily, whereas if it lie all the Winter without a Froſt, they are more ſtiff, and not ſo fit for husbandry: Thus afflictions mellow the heart of man, and make it more fit for Gods husbandry. As Froſt dries up the ill humours of the Earth, ſo doth affliction thoſe of the Soul; and thereby prepares it to receive the ſeed of the Word. When God afflicts his people, it is for their profit, that they may be partakers of his holineſs; That is, that they may profitably improve all thoſe means which he hath apointed to make them more holy. And hence, Fourthly, As Froſt and Cold kill the weeds and worms which eat the roots and hinder the growth of Herbs, Corn, and Plants; ſo afflictions kill our luſts, thoſe worms and weeds that breed and grow in our hearts, always hindering the fruitfulneſs, ſometime to the utter unfruitfulneſs, of the ſeed of the word ſown among us and upon us (Matth. 13. 22.) The Froſt of affliction is a means to prevent the worm which breeds naturally out of the corruption of our hearts, even that terrible worm ſpoken of (Iſa. 66. 24.) the worm of conſcience. As there are Worms of Corruption, Pride, Covetouſneſs, Wrath, Wantonneſs, &c. In our hearts; ſo out of theſe that tormenting worm breeds, called the worm of Conſcience. Now, the Froſt of affliction which God ſends upon us, is very effectual, as to kill theſe worms of corruption which eat the roots of our graces, and hinder our fruitbearing; ſo to prevent the life of that worm of Conſcience, which (as the Prophet ſpeaks in the place laſt named) never dyeth.

Therefore, as when the Lord ſends Froſt, though it make us ſhake, and we have a hard time of it, yet no man riſeth up in paſſion and ſaith, I had rather die, and be out of the world, than live in ſuch a ſeaſon; No, men know that a Froſty ſeaſon is a wholeſome ſeaſon, and they know Summer will come and make amends. So when we are in the Winter of affliction, let us not be impatient nor unquiet; let us not think that the froſt will ruin and undo us.

Though Ice be upon every water, though Icicles hang upon every twig, do not think this will be at all for your undoing, it may be much for your bettering. Cold weather doth good as well as hot; and if we ſhould have all hot, and no cold, it might be very ill, very bad to us; therefore be not troubled at the cold, nor afraid of ice and froſt, they will not hurt you, unleſs you hurt your ſelves, by your impatience under them. And when 'tis coldeſt, you may warm your ſelves at the fire or Sunſhine of this hope, that ere long the weather will be warmer. As Athanaſius ſaid of the trouble given the Church by that Apoſtate Julian, It is but a Cloud, it will ſoon be over; ſo may I ſay, according to the alluſion in this Text, its but a Winters froſt, Summer will come: This ſhould be the comfort of all that fear God in a day of evil feared or felt. When Chriſt (Matth. 24. 32, 33.) had foretold the ſigns of his coming, he ſaid, Learn a Parable of the Fig-tree, when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that Summer is nigh: So likewiſe, ye, when ye ſhall ſee all theſe things, know that it is near, even at the door. As when we ſhall ſee thoſe dreadful appearances, which are the fore-runners of Chriſt coming, ſo when we ſhall feel any chilling froſts of affliction, then we may know that Summer is at hand; when the night is darkeſt, the light is neareſt; when Winter is hardeſt, a thawing Sun leading in the Spring is approaching towards us.

There is but one kind of cold or froſt which we have cauſe to fear, and that is the froſt of unkindneſs, or the coldneſs of affection to God and one another; and I warn all to take heed of that, becauſe it is but too too probable, that this froſt and cold will hang about the hearts of many in the latter days; yea, is it not viſible, are we not ſenſible of that froſt begun, at leaſt, in theſe days? As Chriſt himſelf propheſied of thoſe latter days, (Matth. 24. 12.) The love of many ſhall wax cold; is not love to God very chill? Is not charity to man, among men, of a complexion, as cold as ice at this day? Take heed of this froſt, of this cold; let not your hearts be frozen in love to God or Man. It is ſad when the ſtreams of charitable bounty are frozen, and the waters of compaſſion hidden as with a ſtone, when the very bowels of men are Ice, and their hearts harder to one another, than the neither Mill-ſtone?

There are two things much to be lamented, whenever they are ſeen or felt among the Sons of men; eſpecially among thoſe who profeſs themſelves the Servants of God. The firſt is heat of anger and wrath. The ſecond is coldneſs of love and zeal. As that heat is apt to kindle unnatural fires, ſo this coldneſs may provoke the Lord to kindle judiciary fires, or fiery judgments. The coldneſs of the air will not hurt us, nor can the froſt of any affliction much annoy us, if our love wax not cold, if the froſt of uncharitableneſs to one another, and of unzealouſneſs (if I may ſo ſpeak) for God and his concerns, take not our affections.

VERS. 31, 32, 33.

Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades? or looſe the bands of Orion?

Canſt thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon? Or canſt thou guide Arcturus with his ſons?

Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven? Canſt thou ſet the dominions thereof in the Earth?

THe Lord having Queſtioned Job about his ſkill and knowledg in thoſe Meteors, the Rain, the Dew, the Ice and Froſt, all which were wrought in the Air; riſes yet higher, queſtioning him about the Stars of Heaven, and their ordinary effects upon the Earth, and all ſublunary bodies.

In theſe three Verſes, the Lord points at the four quarters or ſeaſons of the year; over which the four Stars or Conſtellations mentioned in this context have a predominance, according to the appointment of God in the courſe of nature: He points at Spring and Winter in the 31. Verſe; he points at Summer and Autumn in the 32. Verſe; and he ſpeaks of both more generally in the 33. Verſe.

The ſum of the 31. Verſe may be thus given; as if the Lord had ſaid, O Job, Canſt thou alter the ſeaſons of the year? Firſt, Canſt thou retard, or keep back the Spring? Canſt thou hinder the riſing and appearance of the Pleiades or ſeven Stars, ſo called? Canſt thou ſtop the deſtillation of their influences, proper to the introduction of that ſeaſon? Or, Secondly, Canſt thou keep off the Winter, that it come not, or haſten it away when it is come, by diſſolving the colds and froſts with which the conſtellations of that ſeaſon bind up the Earth, and ſo ſhorten that unkind and comfortleſs quarter of the year? This is the plain meaning of the Text, and of thoſe hard or ſtrange words, Pleiades, Orion, Mazzaroth, Arcturus, uſed in it; all which Conſtellations are conceived to have their ſpecial operations upon the four quarters of the year reſpectively: For, though the acceſs of the Sun hath the chief hand in making ſpring and Summer, and the receſs of the Sun in making Autumn and Winter; yet the Sun doth it not alone, but hath the aid of other adjuvant cauſes in nature, by which thoſe great changes are in part effected and produced.

Efficit quidem Sol acceſſu & receſſu ſuo iſtas anni tempeſtates, ſed habet præterea adjunctas & adjuvantes cauſas. Merl.

Further, the Reader may take notice, that three of theſe four Stars or Conſtellations, as expreſſed in our Tranſlation, Pleiades, Orion, Arcturus, are not literally in the Hebrew Text; nor were they known by thoſe names, when either Job or the Pen-man of this Book lived, but were long after brought into uſe by the learned Grecians, and from them derived unto us; and we make uſe of theſe names, according to the received opinion, expounding the Hebrew names by them.

I ſhall not ſtay here in opening their derivations or ſignifications in either language, having done it already at the ninth Verſe of the ninth Chapter of this Book, where Job himſelf ſpake of theſe conſtellations, attributing this glory to God, that he it is, who makes Arcturus, Orion, Pleiades, and the Chambers of the South, which laſt are ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Mazzaroth here in this Verſe.

Verſ. 31. Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades?

That is, canſt thou ſtop their riſing, or the giving forth of their influences, which open the Earth by a kindly warmth, and cauſe graſs and corn, herbs and flowers, plants and trees of all ſorts, to ſpring and put forth? Canſt thou bind them up from exerting their natural effects and proper operations? Certainly thou canſt not. He that is bound, cannot do what he would, nor what he could, nor what he daily did when at liberty. The Philiſtims had a great mind to bind Sampſon, ſuppoſing that then he could not put forth his mighty ſtrength to miſchief them. Priſoners, when bound and laid in chains can do nothing. As there is a binding to do, ſo a binding not to do; and that not only with material cords, but metaphorical vows, oaths and promiſes. We commonly ſay, He that is bound muſt obey: But can any bind the Stars to obedience? What, or who but God, can bind or ſtay, either the conſtant motions or miniſtrations of the Stars? Sampſon could not be bound by the Philiſtims till he betrayed himſelf, and diſcovered the ſecret where his ſtrength lay. Who knows where the ſtrength, force and vertues of the Stars lie? Or if any knew that ſecret, could they climb up to the Stars, and cut off that lock wherein their ſtrength lyeth? Or break the pipes by which their influences are conveyed down to the Earth? Canſt thou bind

Pleiades ſunt ſeptem ſtellæ, quæ ortu ſuo primæ navigationis tempus oſtendunt; unde Græcis dicuntur. Πλειάδες ἀπὸ τοῦ πλεῖν, Quod eſt navigare, Vergiliæ Latinis à vere quo tempore oriuntur.

The ſweet influences of Pleiades?

The word rendred Influences, ſignifies Delights, or delicacies, or delicate fruits; and therefore that Garden full of ſinleſs pleaſures, which God himſelf planted for man in his ſtate of primitive innocency and felicity, is called from this word, the Garden of Eden, (Gen. 2. 15.) That is, a place of delight, commonly known by the name of Paradice; and hence we well tranſlate ſweet Influences: the Hebrew is Delights. Mr. Broughton tranſlates Delicacies; and the interlineal, Canſt thou bind the delicate fruits that Pleiades brings forth? That is, the green herbs, the flowers, with other delicacies and delights which accompany the Spring: canſt thou hinder their budding or appearing at Spring-time? When the deformity and dirt of winter depart or paſs away, then their is a new face of things then Fructus delicatos. Pagn.

עדן ·
עדנ ות
Quod eſt deliciari, aut voluptate & deliciis abundare.

then every buſh flouriſheth, then the trees and fields put on their ornaments, then the ſinging of Birds fills the Air, and makes it reſound with their harmony and melodious muſick. The word is rendred Dainties (Gen. 49. 20.) and an adverb coming from this, is uſed (Lam. 4. 5.) They that did fare delicately, are deſolate in the ſtreets. As alſo (1 Sam. 15. 32.) Agag came unto him delicately. Canſt thou bind the ſweet Influences χεῖμα.

Of Pleiades?] The Greeks expreſs Winter by a word juſt of the ſame ſound with the Hebrew word Chymah, by us rendred Pleiades; as if this reſpected the Winter, or were a cold Conſtellation: but certainly here it relates to the Spring; and conſidering that in this place the Pleiades are ſaid to give out ſweet Influences, the delights and delicacies of the Earth, the word muſt needs be meant of, or intend a benign and favourable Star, a Spring-ſtar, rather than a Winter-ſtar; and therefore the Latines give this Conſtellation its name from the Spring, becauſe then it appears; of which ſee more Chap. 9. 9.

Vergiliæ, quaſi veris vigiles.

Further, When this Star, or company of Stars, (theſe Pleiades, or ſeven Stars) are ſpoken of by name, we by a Synecdoche may underſtand all the Stars: for, what influence ſoever any Star is impowered with, or putteth forth, who can hinder? Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades?

> Hence Obſerve; Firſt, God hath planted a virtue in the Stars of Heaven, which they ſhed down upon the Earth.

The creatures of the Earth, are (as I may ſay) fed and fattened from Heaven. All Vegetatives, graſs, herbs, plants, flowers, trees; all Senſitives, beaſts of the Earth, fowls of the Air; yea, and rational creatures too, all men who breath in the Air, and walk upon the Earth, are refreſhed and fed by the influences of Heaven, by the clouds and ſtars. Further, the Stars ſend down their influences, not only upon living creatures in their three ranks, but even upon inanimate creatures; the minerals, the ſtones that lie deep under the Earth, the precious gems, with thoſe of a coarſer grain, receive much from the influences of the Stars. So then, all earthly bodies receive and derive their vigor and beauty from the heavenly; the Sun and Moon have the greateſt power, and there is a very great power in the Stars and Conſtellations, in the Pleiades, Orion, and Arcturus, for the production of great effects.

Secondly, In that 'tis ſaid, Canſt thou bind, or ſtop the Influences of Pleiades?

> Obſerve, It is not in the power of man, of any man, to hinder or ſtay the virtue of the Stars from falling down upon the Earth.

What God will do by the creature, no man can undo. If God ſet thoſe heavenly bodies at liberty, and bids them ſend down their influences, man cannot lock them up, nor impriſon their powers, nor bind them from working?

And hence we may infer. Firſt, if none can bind the influences, nor ſtay the comfortable virtue of the ſtars, when God is pleaſed to let them out; Then much leſs can any bind or hinder the influences of the Spirit. When God is pleaſed to ſend his Spirit to work upon the heart of man, who can let him?

There is a threefold influence or work of the ſpirit of God upon the ſoul of man.

Firſt, To enlighten, or to give the light of the knowledg of his own glory in the face of Jeſus Chriſt. Who can hinder God, when he purpoſeth thus to inſtruct and teach the ignorant, and make them wiſe unto Salvation, wiſer then their teachers; who can hinder it?

Secondly, To convert, to work faith and repentance, together with love, humility, &c. Theſe graces are deſtilled, and drop down from the Spirit of God upon the ſoul; and who can hinder the Spirit from working them in the moſt hardened and unbelieving ſouls in the moſt vain, proud, and preſumptuous ſoul? The barren'ſt wilderneſs, dryeſt heath (ſuch are perſons unconverted) are made fruitful by the influences of the Spirit.

Thirdly, To refreſh and comfort. There are unſpeakable influences of joy deſtilled from the ſpirit upon believers; and when God will let them down from Heaven, who can let them? What can let them? All the troubles and ſorrows, all the pains and tortures, that men can invent or inflict upon a believer, cannot bind theſe influences of the Spirit, nor hinder joy in believing. The greateſt evils of this life, can neither ſhut up nor ſhut out, that comfort which the Spirit ſpeaketh. The moſt churliſh winds that can blow from the coldeſt quarters of the World cannot chill, much leſs kill or blaſt thoſe fruits of the Spirit, Love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith, meekneſs, temperance, mentioned by the Apoſtle (Gal. 5. 22, 23.) The ſoul grows green, like a Garden or Paſture, in the Spring; the ſoul buds, bloſſoms, and brings forth theſe bleſſed fruits abundantly, when fed with theſe dainties and delicacies of the Spirit. Thoſe great floods of trouble and perſecution, which the Serpent, any where, or at any time caſts out of his mouth, cannot prevail againſt the leaſt drop of Conſolation, wrought in the heart by the Spirits influence. Paul and Silas were bound in Priſon, but there their perſecutors could not bind the ſweet influences of the Spirit from comforting them, nor daunt them by any terror from triumphing in Chriſt; they could ſing in Priſon, yea, they ſung at Midnight.

Secondly, We may Infer; If God hath placed the ſtars in Heaven, to drop down ſweet influences upon us, then at every ſight of the ſtars our hearts ſhould be raiſed up, in the admiring thoughts of the Wiſdom, goodneſs, and power of God. We uſually look upon the Stars, as if they were only ſo many lights beſpangling the Canopy of Heaven, and ſparkling, as ſo many fires in the firmament; but we ſeldom conſider their virtues, their influences, or the wonderful effects which they produce, How few are there, who behold the Heavens with Davids eyes? (Pſal. 8. 3, 4.) When I (ſaith he) conſider thy Heavens, the work of thy fingers; the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt made: What is man, that thou are mindful of him? God is mindful of man, not only to give him light by the Moon and Stars, by the benefit whereof he ſees other things; but God gives many unſeen benefits by the Moon and Stars. The influences of the Stars are as beneficial to us, and as great a treaſure as their light. We indeed have great cauſe (as we are commanded, Pſal. 136. 7, 8, 9.) to pay the tribute of thanks to God for ſetting up the Sun, Moon, and Stars in the Heavens to give us light; O give thanks to him that made great lights, the Sun to rule by day, the Moon and Stars to rule by night. Yet we muſt not confine our thankfulneſs to God for them only as they give us light, for they give us heat as well as light, and wonder-working influences as well as either. Moſes (their civil Father) bleſſing the twelve Tribes, as Jacob their natural Father did before his departure out of the world, thus beſpake the bleſſing upon Joſeph (Deut. 33. 13, 14, 15.) Bleſſed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of Heaven, for the dew, and alſo for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the Sun, and for the precious things put forth by the Moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the laſting Hills, and for the precious things of the Earth, and the fulneſs thereof, &c. Here we have two ſorts of precious things. Firſt, The precious things of Heaven. Secondly, The precious things of the Earth, of the hills and mountains. The former precious things are the cauſe, the latter the effect: The precious things of Heaven, are the influences of the Sun and Moon, under which we are to comprehend the influences of the Stars, theſe cauſe or produce the precious things of the Earth; that is, Graſs, Herbs, with all ſorts of Vegetables growing upon the ſurface of the Earth, they produce alſo the precious things of the ancient mountains and of the laſting hills; That is, gems or precious ſtones, Gold and Silver, together with all ſorts of inferiour minerals. Now if the ſtars, by their influences, yield us all theſe precious things, have we not much cauſe to admire both the power of God, who hath implanted thoſe vertues and operations in them, as alſo his goodneſs, who hath ordained both thoſe cauſes, and their products or effects, for the benefit and comfort, Yea, for the contentment and delight of man?

Qui negat eſſe Deum ſpectet modo ſidera cœli. Sidera qui ſpectat non negat eſſe Deum.

What is man, that God ſhould be thus mindful of him; that for his ſake and uſe, or for the ſweetning of his paſſage through the wilderneſs of this troubleſome world, he ſhould impregnate the earth by the ſweet influences of Heaven? It hath been ſaid; Let him look to the Stars of Heaven, who denies the God of Heaven; and doubtleſs he will not only not deny, but not ſo much as doubt that there is a God in Heaven, who duly conſiders the pure Nature, and the irreſiſtible operations of the Stars of Heaven? Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades?

Or looſe the bands of Orion?] We can neither bind what God lets looſe, nor looſen what God binds. What Chriſt affirmed of himſelf in regard of ſpirituals (Rev. 3.7.) Theſe things ſaith he that hath the Key of David, that openeth and no man ſhutteth, that ſhutteth and no man openeth: the ſame is true alſo in regard of Naturals, and therefore the Lord had no ſooner ſaid to Job, Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades, but he adds, or looſe the bands of Orion?

Tunc cœli & naturæ ordinem immutabis, ut quod Aſtrum Pleiadum ſolvit conſtringas, aut quod Orion conſtringit, ſolvas. Merc.

There are ſeveral Opinions concerning theſe two Conſtellations of Heaven, yet all agree in this; that one of them is a benign Conſtellation, and very comfortable to the fruits of the Earth, and that the other is as ſharp and churliſh; that the one is very friendly and favourable to all living Creatures, but that the other is a bitter, and as it were a killing Conſtellation; and therefore the Lord ſaith, Canſt thou looſe the bands of Orion? When once Orion hath and holds the Earth, as it were in bands and chains; when Orion hath got the earth in his clutches, and hugs it, in appearance, to death, in his cold arms, who can reſcue it? The Pleiades open the earth, and ſet all free; they call up the quickning moiſture, and draw out the verdure of every growing thing: But Orion holds all in bands, Orion is a hard-natured Conſtellation; the Original word ſignifies to be unconſtant, vexatious, and unquiet; becauſe, under the Dominion of this Star, the air is uſually troubleſome and unquiet.

כסיל à כסל quod eſt inconſtantem & varium eſſe, quaſi ſignum quod inconſtantiam & perturbationem aeris efficiat.

Canſt thou looſe, &c.] The word imports opening what is faſt ſhut, or looſing what is faſt bound. When a man is in bands, we ſay, looſe him from his bands. Now ſaith the Lord, Canſt thou looſe the bands of Orion? that is, canſt thou free the air from thoſe colds and froſts which bind the body of the Earth, and all things growing out of the Earth in Winter ſeaſon? The word rendred bands, comes from a Root that ſignifies to draw: Hence ſome tranſlate, The Traces of Orion. Traces are thoſe bands by which Horſes being faſtned to Carts or Waggons, draw them after them: Which expreſſion alludes to that natural power planted in this Star, by which, according to Gods appointment, it draws Rain, Storms, and cold freezing winds after it, and ſo binds up the pores of the Earth. Now ſaith the Lord to Job, canſt thou with all thy skill and ſtrength looſe thoſe bands, and ſet the Earth at liberty? Thou canſt not. Of this Orion, ſee more at the ninth Chapter (ver. 9) I ſhall only ſay thus much further here, That theſe words ſtand in direct oppoſition to the former, ſhewing that as Job could not ſtop thoſe benign Stars, the Pleiades, from giving forth their vertues to the Earth; ſo he could not looſe the bands of that ſevere and harſh Star, nor divert the effects which it brings upon the Earth. Canſt thou looſe the bands of Orion? Hence learn, firſt, in general, פתח Aut attrahentia Orionis aperies? Druſ. Aut lora Orionis diſſolves? Jun. Vox Hebræa מושכות à verbo משכ traxit. Funes ejus ſunt operationes, quibus tempeſtates velut funibus attrahit, & frigore conſtringit terram, Scult. Sidus hoc oritur in principio hyemis & terram tanquam loris conſtringit, Piſc. Nimboſus Orion, Virg.

Cold is a binder, a great and mighty binder.

Winter binds the Earth from bearing, and it binds the hands of men from working; when a man is extream cold, he can make little uſe of his hands.

And as Natural, ſo Spiritual Cold is a great binder. A cold heart is a bound heart. When the heart hath in it no heat of love to God, or hath not been heated with a ſenſe of the love of God: when the heart hath in it no heat of zeal for the glory of God, nor for the good of men; when theſe ſad colds are upon the heart, 'tis bound indeed. He that hath this cold upon him, can ſay but little to God; and will ſay, and do leſs for God: He is bound not only hand and foot, but tongue alſo. Take heed of cold upon your hearts, it will hinder you from holy activity, bind you up from duty both towards God and man. He that is only luke-warm will do God little ſervice, can do none that is pleaſing and acceptable unto God; but he that is key-cold, as we ſay, neither will, nor can do any thing at all, that may be called ſervice. The Apoſtle Paul (Acts 20.22.) was bound in the ſpirit to go to Jeruſalem, which was a great ſervice for Chriſt; that is, the heat of true affection, which the inſtinct of the holy Spirit cauſed in him, ingaged him beyond all power of revocation to undertake that hazardous journey. But when any are bound in ſpirit by the coldneſs of their affections to Chriſt, they always prove hand-bound and foot-bound; I may ſay (without affectation, according to the uſe of that word in our language) hide-bound alſo, as to any thing that is good; eſpecially, if it be (as it was in the Apoſtles caſe now mentioned) either dangerous or coſtly. And when a Soul is in thoſe bands of the Myſtical Orion, the evil ſpirit, ſurely none but God can looſe them, ſeeing none but he can looſe theſe in the Text. Canſt thou looſe the bands of Orion, the Winter-bands?

Hence note, Secondly, It is not in the power of man to looſe what God binds.

The Lord put the queſtion to Job about his works, that he might ſee his own weakneſs and utter inability to undo his Providential workings: When God had Job in bonds, it was not in his power to looſe his bonds by his ſtrength and ſtriving. The Providences of God were to him as Orion to the Earth, cold and ſharp, cauſing the froſt of adverſity to bind him ſo ſtrongly, that he could by no means looſe himſelf. Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples about Church-cenſures rightly laid, and Church-approbation duly given (Mat. 18. 18.) Whatſoever ye bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven. Where man binds in Gods way, God binds too; and where man looſes in Gods way, God looſes too; but take it either in natural or ſpiritual things, it is not in the power of man to bind where God looſeth, nor to looſe where God bindeth: Canſt thou looſe the bands of Orion? If God appoint cold to bind the Earth, man cannot looſe it; and if God will bind man with the cords and cold iron of any affliction, man cannot free himſelf. In the hotteſt natural ſeaſon of the year, man may be in cold providential bands, and under them he muſt abide till the Lord breaks the froſt, and ſet him free. It is ſaid of Joſeph (Pſal. 105. 17, 18, 19.) He was ſold for a ſervant, his feet were hurt with fetters, he was laid in iron; or, (as the Margin reads it) His ſoul came into iron. But how came he out? did he himſelf looſe the bands of that Orion who caſt him into priſon? ſurely no, the Text tells us otherwiſe; he lay faſt enough in bands, until (ver. 19.) the Word of the Lord came; the Word of the Lord tryed him. But what was this Word of the Lord? ſome ſay, it was the Word of God to Pharaoh in a Dream, concerning the ſeven years of Plenty and Famine, which may be ſaid to try Joſeph, none but he could interpret it; and that may be ſaid to unlooſe his bands, becauſe it was the occaſion of his deliverance and advancement. But I rather conceive the word that came, was the word of Gods Decree and Promiſe made to Joſeph in a Dream, for his advancement above all his Brethren (Gen. 37. 6, 7, 8.) When once the time came that this Word of God muſt come to be fulfilled, then the bands of Orion were looſed; for then (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ver. 20.) The King ſent and looſed him, even the Ruler of the people, and let him go free. And as it was with Joſeph, ſo with Job, and ſo will ever be. If the cold Winter blaſts of any adverſity bind up our comforts, either in our Callings or Relations, there is no unlooſing them until the word of the Lord come. Solomon giveth this counſel (Eccleſ. 7. 13, 14.) Conſider the work of God; that is, his working in the world. The reaſon of this counſel follows; For, who can make that ſtrait which he hath made crooked? Solomon intends this ſpecially of the dealings of God in the world; not that there is any crookedneſs or unrighteouſneſs, any iniquity or injuſtice in the ways of God; but he means by crooked, that which is troubleſom and grievous. Now if God himſelf make a thing crooked, till he himſelf make it ſtrait, it is not in the power of all the men in the world to do it. The moral ſenſe of that Text, is the very ſame with the point in hand; If God bind, who can looſe? There is no ſtriving, no contending with the Providences of God: we muſt deal with, and apply to God himſelf for the altering of them, we cannot alter them our ſelves; we muſt deſire him to mend his work, we cannot: This Solomon plainly intimates in the next, or 13. verſe; In the day of proſperity be joyful, but in the day of adverſity conſider (in a time of adverſity things grow crooked and awry from what we would have and deſire, or from what is comfortable to us) for God hath ſet the one over againſt the other, to the end that man ſhould find nothing after him. Sometimes he makes things crooked, ſometimes ſtrait; ſometimes he gives a day of proſperity, ſometimes of adverſity, that no man may be able to ſay directly, what ſhall be next. And ſeeing there is no looſing the bands of Orion till God himſelf looſe them; therefore let all who are Companions in tribulation, ſay one to another, as they in a like caſe are repreſented (Hoſea 6. 1.) Come, and let us return unto the Lord, for he hath wounded, and he will heal; he hath torn, and he will bind us up: Or, as this Text ſpeaks, He hath bound us, and he will looſen us.

Thirdly, From both the parts of the verſe conſidered together, theſe Negatives upon man muſt be reſolved into Affirmatives, as to God: He can bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades; he can looſe the bands of Orion,

Whence note; God can both ſtop the ordinary courſe of our comforts, and deliver us from our troubles when he pleaſeth.

God can ſtop thoſe things from comforting us, and thoſe perſons from ſhewing us any favour, whoſe diſpoſitions are as benign to us, as Pleiades are to the Earth; and he can give us favour in their eyes, who naturally are as churliſh as Nabal, and as ſharp as Orion to the Earth. He can make a Wolf a Shepherd, and thoſe a ſafety to his ſervants, whoſe hearts were to ſwallow them up. The Earth ſhall help the woman, that is, the worſt of the world, the Church. God made Ravens feed Eliah (1 Kings 17. 4.) And he ſaid of Cyrus, whom he calls a Ravenous Bird (Iſa. 46. 11.) He is my Shepherd (Iſa. 44. 28.) Thus the Lord looſed the bands of Orion. And when he hardens their hearts againſt us, who formerly were tender towards us, or when he turns their hearts to hate us, who formerly loved us, and ſhewed us favour, then the Lord may be ſaid to bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades. What ſweet influences of favour did the people of Iſrael receive from Pharaoh and the Egyptians, at their firſt coming thither, and long after? yet afterwards, what grievous Task-maſters were they to them? their favours were all reſtrained and changed into yokes and bands: whence was this? The Pſalmiſt anſwers fully (Pſal. 105. 25.) He (that is God) turned their heart (that is, the heart of the Egyptians) to hate his people, to deal ſubtilly with his ſervants, and cruelly too. Thus the Power and Name of God is both ways magnified. When as we have the moſt benign Pleiades dropping down ſweet influences upon us, God can ſtop them; and when we have the hardeſt bands of Orion upon us, the Lord is able to looſe them. This glory is due to God in all the changes which we meet with in this world, whether from good to bad, from the favours to the frowns of men; or from bad to good, from their frowns to their favours, from their bands to their imbraces; all is of God. And I conceive the ſcope of God in theſe queſtions, was chiefly to bring Job to that concluſion. The next verſe bears the ſame ſenſe.

Verſ. 32. Canſt thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon? Or canſt thou guide Arcturus and his Sons?

This alſo is a denying queſtion; Canſt thou? thou canſt not bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon. The word rendred to bring forth, is applyed, Firſt, to the birth or bringing forth of children (Gen. 15. 4.) Secondly, to the Earths bringing forth Flowers and Fruits (Judg. 13. 14.) Thirdly, to the riſing of the Sun or Stars (Gen. 19. 23.) (Neh. 4. 21.) Thus here, canſt thou cauſe Mazzaroth to riſe, and go forth? Or canſt thou bring forth

Mazzaroth?] What's that? Some Interpreters conceive, that by Mazzaroth we are to underſtand thoſe Conſtellations which Aſtronomers call the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, which are expreſſed for learning ſake, by the fancied names of living Creatures; ſo that according to this interpretation, the Suns appearance in, or paſſage through thoſe monthly Signs, is the bringing forth of Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon. But moſt generally they are taken for the Southern Stars, and thought to be the ſame with thoſe (Chap. 9. 9.) called the Chambers of the South; and ſeeing the other three are named there, it is not improbable that under this word the fourth is intended. Mr. Broughton calls them, far Stars in the South: The letter of the Hebrew imports that; and the Seventy derive it from a root, that ſignifies to ſeparate or diſperſe, becauſe thoſe Stars are far ſeparated, or are at a great diſtance from us, who lie under the Northern Pole. Canſt thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon? that is, canſt thou make that Conſtellation appear in its proper time? thou canſt not. Hence take theſe brief Notes.

Sunt collectiones ſyderum, quæ ujus obtinuit, ut vocentur ζωΐδια quaſi parva animalia, alii vero dicunt ſignificare τὸν ἀστρῷον κύνα ſydereum canem. Chryſoſt. apud Orus. Colligunt quidam hic Mazzaroth eſſe quod ibi dicebatur penetralia Auſtri. Merc. Remotiora ſigna Heb. ſeparationes, i. e. ſidera à nobis qui ſub polo arctico degimus (ut Jobus) ſeparata; ſic autem vocantur ſidera meridionalia quæ oriuntur in principio æſtatis, Piſc.

The Stars of Heaven are brought forth by ſpecial order and appointment.

As men are brought forth at ſuch a time, in ſuch a place, ſo are they by an order from God; the Stars of Heaven are not under any Law of man on earth, no nor of the Angels in Heaven, (Pſal. 19. 4, 5.) In them (ſpeaking of the Heavens) hath he (that is, the Lord) ſet a Tabernacle for the Sun, which is as a Bridegroom coming out of his Chamber (every morning to viſit his Spouſe the Earth) and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a race; what is there ſpoken of the Sun, is true of Mazzaroth and of all the Stars, whether planted in the Northern or Southern, in the Eaſtern or Weſtern parts of Heaven? 'Tis the Lord who brings them all forth, and that in their ſeaſon.

Note Secondly: The Stars of Heaven have their ſeaſons, and keep their ſeaſons.

They keep them punctually to a minute, to a moment, they know their times, and they keep time; they have their ſeaſons of riſing, and their ſeaſons of ſetting. (Pſal. 65. 8.) Thou makeſt the out-goings of Morning and Evening to rejoyce; Some Stars go out in the Morning, others go out in the Evening, their times are various, but they all keep their time, (Pſal. 104. 19.) The Sun knoweth its going down, that is, the time of its going down, the place of its going down; In this we may ſee what we ſhould do, or our own duty.

Let us come forth in our ſeaſon. The Stars are brought forth in theirs, and ſhall not we! happy are they that come forth, and bring forth in their ſeaſon. To hit time is a mercy as well as a duty! Paul indeed ſaid of himſelf, (1 Cor. 15. 8.) that he was an abortive, or born out of due time. An abortive in nature, is one that comes into the world before the due time. Paul, as to his ſpiritual birth, or new birth through Grace, was not, nor can any one be new-born before the due time. We may rather ſay, that we are new-born too late than too ſoon, or before our time. Paul might ſay he had been too long a proud Phariſee, a formal Profeſſor, and at laſt, a Perſecutor of thoſe who profeſſed the truth of the Goſpel in truth; and therefore in that ſenſe Paul was not an abortive, or born out of due time; namely, before his time: But Paul might ſay of himſelf, that he was ſo; Firſt, Becauſe he was the laſt of the Apoſtles that was called. The other Apoſtles were called by Chriſt, while he lived here on Earth: Paul was called by Chriſt from Heaven, after his death and departure from the Earth. Secondly, He was born like an abortive, or thoſe that come out of due time, becauſe of the violence and grievous pangs which accompanied his new-birth: He was ſmitten from his horſe to the ground, and lay as one dead in his paſſage to his new life. Such was the ſuddenneſs and violence of his Converſion, that it was moſt like an abortion. Thirdly, The Apoſtle himſelf ſeems to give the reaſon in the next Verſe; we know abortives are uſually very weak and imperfect children, and leſs in body than thoſe born in due time. Now ſuch was Saint Pauls humility, ſo low was he in his own thoughts, that he calls himſelf (verſ. 9.) the leaſt of the Apoſtles, not meet to be called an Apoſtle. In all theſe, or in any of theſe notions, the Apoſtle Paul might ſay he was born out of due time; yet both as to the truth and ſeaſonableneſs of his Converſion, he was born in due time, and in his full time. Now as there is a due time, a ſeaſon for our ſpiritual birth, ſo for our fruit-bearing in ſpirituals. It is ſaid of every godly man (Pſal. 1. 3.) He ſhall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his ſeaſon; that is, ſeaſonable fruit. The Stars appear in their ſeaſon, and ſo ſhould the fruits of every Goſpel profeſſor. If we ſhould ſee Winter-ſtars in Summer, and Summer-ſtars in Winter; if the Sun ſhould riſe at Mid-night, or go down at Mid-day, how prodigious would that appearance and diſappearance be! if the Sun ſhould not riſe, and ſet juſt at the time we look for him, it would breed horrour, and put all men into an amazement. But now the Lord brings forth Mazzaroth, and all the Stars in their ſeaſon. O therefore let us look to our ſeaſons; we ſhall be reproved elſe by the Stars of Heaven, Mazzaroth will be a witneſs againſt us. Canſt thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his ſeaſon?

Or canſt thou guide Arcturus with his Sons.

A radice נחה duxit placidè & ſenſim ſicut paſtor oves. Arcturus eſt ſtella inſignis, quæ oritur in principio Autumni: Hebræi putant eſſe ſeptem ſtellas quæ ſemper apparent in noſtro hemiſphærio, à congregatione ſic dictas; nam עיש eſt congregatio, Merc. עיש Sive Cynoſura ſupra alias ſtellas in apice cœli, tanquam mater in alto ſupra filios ſuos ſedens cum iis certiſſima ratione circumducitur. Coc.

Here's a fourth queſtion: Canſt thou guide? The word ſignifies to guide, or conduct gently, ſoftly; canſt thou guide them as a Shepherd guides his Flock? canſt thou guide them as a Father guides his Family, his Wife, Children, and Servants? canſt thou direct them their courſe, how or which way to go? Some think he uſeth the word Guide, becauſe this Conſtellation repreſents the form of a Wain or Wagon, and is by us commonly called Charles Wain, or the greater Bear. Canſt thou guide

Arcturus] That's another Conſtellation, ſeated in the Northern Pole, notably conſpicuous to us in a clear night. 'Tis the Sea-mans mark or guide. The Lord who guides that Star, hath made it a guide to the Seaman in the night; by looking to that, he knows how to make his courſe. Canſt thou guide Arcturus

With his Sons.] Some read Arcturus, and her Daughters; Maſter Broughton, and her Children: We render in the Maſculine Gender, and his Sons. There is one principal Star, and ſeveral other Stars that ſtand as Children about their Father or Mother; and therefore the Lord expreſſeth them by that familiar Alluſion, Arcturus and his Sons, canſt thou guide them?

Hence note, Firſt, The Stars have a Guide, a Governour.

The Stars move as directed: God himſelf is the guide of the Stars, not Man. As a Shepherd guides his Flock in the Field, ſo the Lord guides the Stars in that ſpacious Field of the Heavens; yea, he names and numbers them, as a Shepherd doth his Flock. (Pſal. 147.) He telleth the number of the Stars, and calls them all by their names. The Prophet exhorting the people to lift up their eyes on high, that is, to the Heavens, preſently adds, and behold who hath created theſe things, (Iſa. 40. 26.) that is, the Heavens, and the furniture of them, he bringeth out their Hoſt by number (that is, the Hoſt of the Stars) As an Army is inrolled and numbered, how many thouſands they are; ſo doth the Lord bring forth that Hoſt by number, and calleth them all by names, by the greatneſs of his might, for that he is ſtrong in power; not one faileth. There's not one of the Hoſt of Heaven, not one of the Stars that faileth, but comes forth at Gods Call, and appears as it were in Rank and File, when and where the Lord gives Command. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks of the Stars, as Gods Hoſt; and of the Lord, as a Commander or General of an Army, knowing their number, nature, place, and office, muſtering and marſhalling them, ordering them out upon ſervice as he pleaſeth. And whereas in the beſt diſciplin'd Armies of men, many fail when drawn out to ſervice, ſome for fear, others through unfaithfulneſs, not a few through weakneſs and ſickneſs; here's neither weak nor ſick, neither an unfaithful nor a fearful one in this Hoſt, not one faileth: Nor doth the Lords memory fail, for he calls them all by their names; which ſhews the perfect remembrance, and exact knowledge which the Lord hath of them all. It is reported, as a wonder, of Cyrus King of Perſia, that he having a vaſt Army, yet knew them by face, and was able to call every man by his name. What then ſhall we ſay of this wonder? The Lord who guideth Arcturus and his Sons, who leads out this innumerable Army of the Stars, knows every one of them by name, and ſends them forth by name, upon what enterprize or ſervice he pleaſeth.

Plin. lib. 7. c. 24. Valerius Maximus lib. 3. c. 7.

The Lord having queſtioned Job about thoſe four eminent and well-known Conſtellations, Pleiades in the Spring, Orion in the Winter, Mazzaroth in the Summer, and Arcturus with his Sons in the Autumn, to convince him, that as he was not able, nor any man elſe, to alter the natural motions or courſes of the Stars, ſo that neither he, nor any man elſe, was able to alter the courſe of his Providence.

The Lord (I ſay) having done queſtioning Job about theſe four notable Conſtellations of Heaven in ſpecial, proceeds to interrogate him more generally about the whole Heavens, in the next Verſe.

Verſ. 33. Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven? canſt thou ſet the Dominions thereof in the Earth?

Surely as thou knoweſt not the ſpecial Laws by which I govern the Pleiades, Orion, Mazzaroth and Arcturus, ſo not the general Laws by which the Heavens are governed. Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven? The word here rendred Ordinances, is often rendred in the Pſalms Statutes, Laws, Decrees: Knoweſt thou the Laws or Statutes of Heaven?

The word rendred Heaven is of the dual number, as Grammarians ſpeak, becauſe in what part ſoever of the Earth any man ſtands, the Heaven is cut in two parts (as to him) by the Horizon, whereof one part is over him, and the other under him: As there is a Heaven above us, ſo a Heaven below us, though wheresoever any man is on Earth, Heaven is above him. Knoweſt thou

The Ordinances of Heaven?] Now the Ordinances of Heaven may be of two ſorts.

שמים חקות

Firſt, Thoſe which God hath given to the Heavens. The Heavenly Bodies move according to his Conſtitutions who made Heaven and Earth.

Secondly, Thoſe which the Heavens give to the Earth, or to man on Earth. The Heavens may be ſaid to impoſe their Laws upon the Earth, men being guided and directed by the changes and motions of the Heavens, how to order many of their motions and actions on the Earth, thoſe eſpecially which concern the Earth. The Heavens give theſe common Laws (as I may ſay) to men concerning the Earth. Firſt, When to Till the Earth. Secondly, When to caſt their Seed into the Earth. Thirdly, When to reap and gather the fruit of the Earth; when to perform any part of Husbandry to the Earth, is known only by the Heavens; that is, the Heavens by their motions and viciſſitudes, ſhew men the ſeaſons of doing theſe and theſe works on Earth. And if men obey not theſe Laws of Heaven, nor obſerve their ſeaſons, they loſe all their labour and coſt beſtowed on the Earth.

Again, when he ſaith, Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven? the meaning may be this; Are the Heavenly Bodies diſpoſed or impowred by thy wiſdom? haſt thou given them vertue to work upon inferiour Bodies? haſt thou made the Statutes by which they are governed, or by which they govern? That's the Lords Prerogative.

Hence note; Firſt, The Heavens are under a Law, they have their Statutes.

They are under a Law in a threefold reſpect. Firſt, In reſpect of their motion, how and whither they ſhall move. Secondly, They are under a Law as to their influences, where and on whom they ſhall drop them down. Thirdly (Which neceſſarily follows the former) They are under a law as to their effects and operations upon the Creatures, whether for good, or for evil. The Heavens can neither hurt nor help us, but according to higher order. This threefold Law may be underſtood in that one Scripture (Jer. 31. 35.) Thus ſaith the Lord, which giveth the Sun for a light by day, and the Ordinances of the Moon, and of the Stars, for a light by night.

Note ſecondly; What all the Laws and Ordinances of Heaven are, is a ſecret to man.

Knoweſt thou them? ſaith God to Job. There are ſome Ordinances of Heaven, or ſome things for which Heaven is ordained, which are eaſily and commonly known; ſuch are the changes of ſeaſons, with the diviſion of night and day, of Winter and Summer. There are alſo ſecret Ordinances and Orders given to the Heavens, according to which they produce many unexpected and extraordinary effects here on Earth; as Drought, and the conſequent of it, Famine; Infection in the Air, and the conſequent of it, Peſtilential Diſeaſes and Mortality. Who knows theſe Ordinances of Heaven? and if theſe are ſo unknown; then we may conclude;

Firſt, If man know not ſuch like ſecret Ordinances of Heaven, ſurely he is much leſs able to underſtand the ſecret Counſels of Heaven. We know but little of thoſe things that are commonly ſeen and felt among us, but there are Reſerves which we cannot know at all.

Secondly, We may hence alſo conclude, If the Heavens have their Statutes and Ordinances, as to their motion, &c. then much more hath Man Statutes and Ordinances according to which he ſhould move. The Heavens never move but according to Ordinances. Let us be ſure, that whatever we do, we have an Ordinance or Word of God for it, either expreſs or conſequential. If the Heavens be under ſuch a Rule, ſhall we think God hath left man at random, or without a Rule, how to ſpeak, and think, and do in this world? It is dangerous to move without an Ordinance, much more to move againſt an Ordinance; we ſhould take heed of acting beſides a Law, much more of acting againſt a Law. Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven? (and as it followeth)

שטר à unde משטרן שוטר præfectus, ideo non nemo præfecturam vertit. Druſ. Τροπὰς οὐρανοῦ quod Auguſtinus interpretatur commutationes cœli. Ponere dominium eſt facere ut dominetur, & quaſi dominum conſtituere. Homo non facit, ſed ſolus Deus. Druſ. Qui ſimpliciter judicat & ſententiam pronunciat dicitur שפט Sed executor, qui judicatum exequitur & cogit refractarios obedire ſententiæ judicis dicitur שוטר

Canſt thou ſet the Dominion thereof in the Earth?

Canſt thou ſet his force upon the Earth? So Mr. Broughton tranſlates. To ſet the Dominion, is to make one have Dominion, and as it were, to appoint a Lord or Governour in the Earth: This is not mans work, but Gods. As if God had ſaid to Job, Canſt thou give power to, or impower the Stars to rule day and night, to cauſe diverſity of weathers, and of ſeaſons, to which all things here below muſt ſubmit, or with which they muſt needs comply? The word which we read Dominion, ſignifies an under-dominion, an inferiour Dominion; it ſignifies a Magiſtracy, or Power under a Power. The Hebrew language hath two words, the one ſignifying the power of a Judge, who gives the Rule of the Law; and the other, here uſed, ſignifying the power of a Sheriff, who ſees Execution done. A perſon may be in power, and have great Command, yet not the firſt or chief Command. The Heavens have not a Supream or an abſolute Command over the Earth, but a Dominion by way of Adminiſtration they have, and that a large and great one. Heaven hath a Dominion ſo far, as to execute and fulfil that which God the Supream Judge orders, determines, and gives forth, both concerning perſons and things here on Earth. The Heavens have a Miniſterial Dominion, reſpecting moſt changes wrought in this world. Their Miniſtry reſpects, not only the conſtant and uſual changes of times and ſeaſons barely conſidered, but they have alſo a Miniſtry with reſpect to thoſe uſual and rare changes, which (according to the appointment of God) befal the perſons and conditions of men in this world. Canſt thou ſet the Dominion thereof in the Earth? Thou canſt not; but I can and have; I have ſet and determined what Dominion the Heavens ſhall have upon the Earth, or how they ſhall exerciſe their Dominion.

Hence obſerve; The Heavens have a power on the Earth.

Some Aſtrologers give them a power of doing all on the Earth, as if both our lives and livelihoods depended wholly upon the Aſpects of Planets: It is not this mans endeavour (ſay they) nor that mans skill, but all flows from the Stars. Theſe make or put the Heavens, which are Gods work, into the place of God himſelf; they put the Heavens into the place of the God of Heaven. All things are in the hand of Heaven, ſay they. We ſay, all things, even the Planets themſelves, are in the hand, and at the diſpoſe of God. We grant, and this Text proves, that the Heavens have a great power upon the Earth; we cannot but ſee and feel what the Sun doth upon the Earth; we ſee it diſtributes the year into four ſeaſons, Summer and Winter, Spring and Autumn; we ſee it makes Equinoxes twice in the year, when days and nights are of an even length, and as many Solſtices, in one of which, days are of greateſt length, and nights in the other. We ſee how the Sun brings forth ſeveral effects in thoſe ſeveral ſeaſons, even the generation or corruption of natural things. We know alſo, that as the North draws the Magnete or Load ſtone, ſo the Sun, the Heliotrope, a Flower ſo called, becauſe it follows the motion of the Sun. It is ſaid alſo, that the Sun hath a great power upon the Cock, who therefore croweth about midnight, as if he did then congratulate or welcom the return of the Sun from the Antipodes to our Hemiſphear. Though theſe inſtances are not demonſtrative or concluding, yet they are probable Evidences of the Heavens Dominion in the Earth.

Further, 'tis generally agreed, that the Moon hath a great power upon the Waters, cauſing the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea; as alſo upon thoſe Inhabitants of the Sea, Shell-fiſh, becauſe they are obſerved to increaſe with the increaſe of the Moon, and to decreaſe at the Wane of it.

Nor may we deny the Heavens have a dominion upon the bodies of men; for, though we ſubſcribe not to thoſe fancies of Aſtronomers, who have fixed a ſpecial Star as ruling the ſpecial parts of mans body, as you ſee in the Almanacks; who tell us alſo, that in the body of man, the Sun anſwers the heart, Mars the gall, Jupiter the liver, Mercury the mouth and tongue, Saturn the head; though (I ſay) we ſubſcribe not to theſe, no nor to thoſe other Sentiments of theirs, who aſcribe a ſpecial dominion to the ſeven Planets over the ſeven Ages or Stages into which the courſe of mans life is commonly divided; that is, Firſt, Infancy to the dominion of the Moon; Secondly, Childhood to Mercury; Thirdly, Youth to Venus; Fourthly, Adoleſcency, or the young mans ſtate to the Sun; Fifthly, Compleat manhood to Mars; Sixthly, Old age to Jupiter; Seventhly, Extream or decrepid old age to Saturn; yet doubtleſs the Stars have a great power upon the bodies of men, as well as upon Plants, and all ſorts of Vegetables, ſubordinately to the power and appointment of God, who ruleth all things and perſons according to the pleaſure and uncontroulable Soveraignty of his own will.

Again, Naturaliſts tell us (and many are not far from believing them) that the Planets have great power over Minerals and Metals: They ſay, Gold is under the dominion of the Sun, Silver of the Moon, Iron of Mars, Lead of Saturn; and that Tin and Copper are under the dominion of that Planet by them called Jupiter. Now whether or no God hath ſet theſe Metals under the peculiar dominion of theſe Stars, I will not diſpute; nor will I deny that there may be a natural ſympathy and congeniality between them, nor that their influences may be very operative and effectual towards their generation, production, and full concoction in the bowels of the earth.

Only let us take heed that we be not found giving that to the Heavens which God hath not given them. Remember, the dominion here intended of the Heavens over the Earth, is a Miniſterial, not a Supream dominion; 'tis not, I dare ſay, any ſuch dominion as thoſe Aſtrologers cry up, who would perſwade or make us believe,

Firſt, That the diſpoſitions and manners of all men are under the dominion of the Planets and Stars.

Secondly, That the very way and courſe of every mans life, is ordered by the dominion of Stars and Planets.

Thirdly, That all the ſucceſſes and events, good or bad, of mens actions and undertakings, depend upon the Stars and Planets.

Fourthly, (which ſome have adventured to affirm) That the riſe and fall of great Perſons and Families, together with the growths and declinings of whole Kingdoms and Commonwealths, are under the dominion of the Stars.

Fifthly, That the flouriſhings and decayings of Arts and Sciences depend upon them. Yea, Sixthly, That the Stars operate much towards the planting and progreſs, towards the rooting up or going back of Religion.

But this Scripture intends not any ſuch dominion of Heaven over the Earth: Moſes hath told us long ſince what this dominion is (Gen. 1. 14.) And God ſaid, let there be lights in the firmament of Heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for ſigns, and for ſeaſons, and for days, and for years. The ordinary lights or Stars of Heaven, are always for ordinary ſigns and ſeaſons; and ſometimes there are extraordinary lights ſeen in Heaven, or the ordinary are ſeen appearing in an extraordinary manner, to ſignifie that God is about to do extraordinary things, or to bring forth extraordinary times and ſeaſons.

So then, they who ſay the Heavenly Bodies have no power, or produce no effects upon the Earth or Earthly Bodies, oppoſe not only the teſtimony of ſenſe and daily experience, but this, and other expreſs teſtimonies of Scripture. And as for thoſe who aſcribe all thoſe things before-mentioned, or any one of them abſolutely to the dominion of the heavenly bodies or luminaries, they put them in the place of God himſelf, and overthrow the common foundations of Religion, which teacheth us to depend wholly upon God for all things; which teacheth us alſo to truſt in him alone, and to look upon his favour (not the favourable looks or aſpects of the Stars) as the fountain of all our good; as alſo to fear him and his diſpleaſure alone (not the diſpleaſed looks of the Stars) as the fountain of all penal evils.

Therefore let us in theſe things ſpeak and think according to ſobriety. All that I ſhall add for the concluſion of this Point is:

Firſt, Let us be warned and awakened by the Signs of Heaven; but let us not be diſmayed at them; let us leave that to the Heathen, who know not God (Jer. 10.2.) or rather, let us pray, that the Heathen may no longer be left under that blindneſs and bondage.

Secondly, If any would know what ſhall come to paſs, or would acquaint themſelves with future events, whether with reſpect to perſons or Nations, let them not go to, nor conſult Star-gazers, but the holy Scriptures, the Word of God; for he hath given us a written word, wherein as in a Glaſs we may ſee;

Firſt, What God would have us to do, and how to order the whole courſe of our lives.

Secondly, What good, what bleſſings, what ſucceſſes, we are like to have, or may expect through his free favour to us in Chriſt, we walking humbly, holily, believingly before him.

Thirdly, What evils, what croſſes, what curſes, what miſeries, what miſchances (as we ſpeak) we are ſubject to, and may fear, if we walk proudly, impenitently, frowardly, in the way of our own hearts. We need not go to the Stars, if we would know what is like to befal us in this life; let us conſult the Promiſes, and they will tell us what good we ſhall receive, if we believe and obey; let us go to the threatnings, and they will tell us what evils will be our portion, if we are unbelieving and diſobedient. Let us fear God, not the Stars; let our hope be in God, not in the Stars. If we are evil, and do evil, the moſt auſpicious Conjunctions, benign and promiſing appearances of the Stars in our Nativity, will never produce us any true good; and if we are good, and do good, their moſt inauſpicious, harſh and threatning appearances ſhall do us no hurt: It needs not trouble us under what Star we were born, if we are new born. One being told, that the Stars in power, or which had the dominion in his birth, bare him no good will, anſwered, I care not for that, I have had a ſecond birth. Do not my words (ſaith the Lord, Mic. 2.7.) do good to him that walketh uprightly? doubtleſs they do, and ſo they will, let the Stars do their worſt. Let us ſit down quietly in this aſſurance, That whatſoever Rule or Dominion Heaven hath in the Earth, the Dominion of God is over, and overruleth the Heavens.

VERS. 34, 35, 36, 37, 38.

Canſt thou lift up thy voice to the Clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee?

Canſt thou ſend lightnings, that they may go, and ſay unto thee, Here we are?

Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts? or who hath given underſtanding to the heart?

Who can number the Clouds in wiſdom? or who can ſtay the Bottles of Heaven?

When the duſt groweth into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together?

IN the context of theſe five Verſes, return is made to the Meteors of Heavens. The Lord having queſtioned Job about the Stars, thoſe pure heavenly bodies, the Pleiades, Orion, Mazzaroth, and Arcturus with his Sons; here puts the queſtion afreſh about the aereal bodies, or the natural works of God in the Air. The firſt queſtion concerns the Clouds, and the effects or births of them, the waters.

Verſ. 34. Canſt thou lift up thy voice to the Clouds?

That is, canſt thou do it effectually? Canſt thou ſpeak ſo loudly that the Clouds above may hear thee; and ſo powerfully, that they will obey thee? Any man, the meaneſt man may lift up his voice towards the Clouds; but no man, no not the mightieſt man, can lift up his voice to the Clouds, and be heard; that is, be obeyed by them: Thou canſt not command the Clouds. Though a man ſpeak, and ſpeak aloud, though he lift up his voice (as God bid the Prophet to his people) like a Trumpet, to the Clouds, yet the Clouds will be deaf at his voice; as deaf as ſinners commonly are at the voice of a Prophet, though lifted up like a Trumpet. The voice here intended, is an effectual voice; ſuch a voice to the Clouds is proper and peculiar to God alone, whoſe power and Empire is ſo great and large, that he can ſtretch forth his voice to the Clouds far and near, all the Air over, and cauſe them both to appear at his call, and preſently to empty themſelves, and pour out their waters according to his direction, upon any Coaſt or quarter of the Earth. The Text is ſingular, Canſt thou lift up thy voice to the Cloud? Canſt thou lift up thy voice to any one of them, as it were by name? We render it plurally, Canſt thou lift up thy voice to the Clouds, to any one, or to all of them?

Numquid deſcendet ad te pluvia imperio tuo? Vatabl.

That (as it followeth) abundance of waters may cover thee.

As if the Lord had ſaid; If I lift up my voice to the Clouds, they preſently diſſolve and melt, and abundance of waters flow down to cover man and beaſt; to cover the fields, the corn, the graſs; nor is it any marvel, if the Clouds, thoſe thin, and, upon the matter, liquid bodies, melt and flow down at the voice of God, whenas at his voice the Mountains flow down, and the Rocks themſelves, even the hardeſt Rocks are melted into waters, or give forth abundance of water (*Num.*20.8.) Eliphaz ſaid to Job at the 22.Chap. of this Book, and the 11.Verſ. Abundance of waters cover thee. The words are the ſame there and here, but the ſenſe is very different; Eliphaz meant it there, of metaphorical waters, the waters of affliction, with which God covered, yea, almoſt overwhelmed and drowned Job; but the Lord ſpeaks here of natural waters. Job could not call to the Clouds, and get abundance of thoſe waters to cover him, nor was he able in a way of command to get one drop of water from the Clouds. The words are plain, and the ſcope of them obvious, even to convince Job yet further of his inability and frailty; or that he ought to leave God to the government of the world, to the government of Perſons, Families, and Nations, for as much as himſelf was not able to govern a Cloud, nor to order out the leaſt ſhower of Rain.

Hence note; Man hath no abſolute or ſoveraign power over any Creature.

Clouds will not be commanded, cannot be commanded by the greateſt and mightieſt of the Sons of men. Job was a great Prince himſelf, yet he could not, neither can the greateſt Princes of the world command a ſhower nor a drop of rain to fall from the heavens. Man cannot command the Clouds to rain, either when he will, or where he will, or how much he will; theſe powers belong to God alone. Yet in one ſenſe man may lift up his voice to the Clouds, and abundance of waters will cover him. There is a twofold voice of man: Firſt, A commanding voice; And ſecondly, A praying voice. Let man lift up his commanding voice to the Clouds, as long as he will he ſhall get down no rain, but if man by faith lift up his praying voice to the Clouds, that is, to God, in whoſe hand the Clouds are, he may get rain, yea abundance of waters to cover him. (*Zach.*10.1.) Ask ye of the Lord rain, in the time of the latter rain, ſo the Lord ſhall make bright Clouds, and give them ſhowers of rain, to every one graſs in the field. At the voice of man humbly praying, the Lord makes bright Clouds, or (as our Margin hath it) Lightenings, which forerun black Clouds, to thoſe God gives ſhowers of rain, and thoſe ſhowers of rain give every one graſs, that is, they cauſe all ſorts of Vegetables to ſpring and flouriſh in the fields, both for man and beaſt. This was one of the caſes which Solomon put in his prayer, at the dedication of the Temple for the Lords anſwering of prayer. (1 Kings 8. 35.) When heaven is ſhut up, and there is no rain, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee; if they pray towards this place, and confeſs thy name, and turn from their ſins when thou afflicteſt them; then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the ſin of thy ſervants, &c. and give rain upon thy Land. When the Clouds are lockt up, when they are as braſs over our heads, prayer moves the Lord to open them, or to melt them down into ſhowers, for the refreſhing and fructifying of the Earth. The Apoſtle James (Chap. 5. 17, 18.) tells us, that Elias covered the Earth with abundance of rain, by lifting up his voice in prayer. Elias (ſaith he) was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the Earth by the ſpace of three years and ſix months: And he prayed again, and the Heavens gave rain, and the Earth brought forth her fruit. The holy Hiſtory makes the ſame report (1 Kings 18. 45.) And it came to paſs in the mean while, that the Heaven was black with Clouds and wind, and there was a great rain, &c. If we would have rain, we muſt ask for it, and lift up a praying voice to God, who commands the Clouds; it is a vain thing for us to lift up a voice to the Clouds in our own name, to command them to give us rain in the ſeaſon of it.

And as this is true of the Clouds and Rain, ſo of all Creatures; their powers and vertues, their efficacies and influences are not at our command; but if we look up to God, and wait upon him in prayer, he can command them all to give out their vertues both to ſerve our neceſſities, and accommodate our delights. Now, as in this queſtion God ſhews Job his inſufficiency to command water, ſo in the next to command fire from the Clouds.

Verſ. 35. Canſt thou ſend lightnings that they may go, and ſay unto thee, Here we are?

What lightning is, hath been ſhewed once or twice already, in this and the former Chapter; and therefore I ſhall not ſtay here in any diſcourſe, either about the nature, or the wonderful effects of lightning.

But the Lords manner of ſpeaking, and his purpoſe in ſpeaking here about the lightning, is very conſiderable, and calls for further diſcourſe. Canſt thou ſend lightnings that they may go, &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, If thou canſt not prevail with the Clouds to ſend Rain, canſt thou prevail with them to ſend lightning? haſt thou the command of thunder and lightning? will the lightnings come forth at thy bidding?

The words may have a double alluſion. 1. To the General of an Army commanding his Souldiers, and they going at his word. 2. To the Maſter of a Family, who gives orders to his Servants, and they go at his word; Canſt thou ſend lightnings that they may go,

And ſay unto thee, Here we are? or, as the Hebrew is, Behold us.

That manner of ſpeech, here we are, or behold us, is a deſcription of the moſt ready obedience, either of Souldiers to their General, or of Servants to their Maſter. Will the lightnings obey thee thus, and ſay, here we are? Some expound theſe words, as ſuppoſed to be ſpoken by the lightnings, upon their return from ſome former ſervice given them in charge by God, as having diſpatcht what they were ſent for, and were ready to go again. Hence the Latine Tranſlator gives it thus; That they being returned (or after their return) ſhould ſay unto thee with reverence, Here we are. 1. Ready to go whitherſoever thou wilt ſend us. 2. Ready to do whatſoever thou wilt injoyn us. As if the Lord had ſaid; Canſt thou ſend forth the lightnings, and will they return to thee, and ſay, we have done thy commands, and here we are again to receive freſh commands, or new orders from thee? Surely, as the rain will not thus obey thee, ſo neither will the lightnings, neither the one nor the other will be thy ſervants, to go of thy Errand, or execute thy will.

Ut reverentia tibi dicent adſumus, Vulg.

The ſame note which I gave before concerning the rain, might be taken up here again concerning the lightnings, They are not under the command of man, &c.

Secondly, For as much as the Lord here denies this priviledge, both reſpecting the rain and lightning unto man, he would have us underſtand and know that both are in himſelf; though you cannot, yet I can command them, both are under my dominion. While the Lord ſhews Job his impotency to command theſe Meteors, he aſſerts his own Omnipotency; as he hath made them, ſo he can rule them.

Hence obſerve; All Creatures, even thoſe which ſeem to be moſt out of command, are fully under the command of God.

What, to appearance, is more out of command than the lightning, that quick, that piercing, that fierce and fiery Creature, yet that ſtirs no more than a ſtone, till the Lord commands; and at his command it ſtirs, and is gone in a moment. The Lord God hath ſpoken (ſaith the Prophet Amos 3. 8.) who can but propheſie? And as a faithful Prophet cannot but propheſie, ſo the not only faithleſs, but ſenſleſs Creatures cannot but do what God hath ſpoken. That of the Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 104. 4.) which we read, who maketh his Angels Spirits, his Miniſters a flaming fire; ſome render thus, who maketh the winds his Meſſengers, and the flames of fire his Miniſters. That is, he uſeth tempeſtuous winds and flames of fire as his Meſſengers and Miniſters. The ſame Hebrew word that ſignifieth an Angel, ſignifieth a Meſſenger, at large; and the ſame word that ſignifieth a Spirit, ſignifieth alſo the Wind. And as the words, ſo the truth will bear both Tranſlations or conſtructions; for as thoſe higher, or higheſt of Rational Creatures, the Angels; ſo thoſe high Inanimate Creatures, the winds and lightnings, which may properly be called flames of fire, are the Miniſters and Meſſengers of God; that is, they go forth and miniſter according to his Word; they ſay, Here we are. The Lord by a call, or word ſpeaking, can have whom and what he will to ſerve his purpoſe, and fulfil his Decrees. It is ſaid (2 King. 8. 1. as alſo, Pſal. 105. 16.) The Lord called for a famine, a famine of bread; and he no ſooner called, but the famine came, and ſaid, Here am I; the famine preſently brake the ſtaff of bread, and did eat up all the good of the Land. The Prophet Haggai (Chap. 1. 11.) repreſents the Lord, ſaying, I called for a drought (which is the uſual fore-runner of famine, and the drought ſaid, Here am I; it came preſently as ſoon as the Lord commanded. On the other hand, when the Lord made many promiſes under the new Covenant, among other things, he ſaid, I will call for plenty (Ezek. 36. 29.) I will call for the corn, and will increaſe it, and lay no famine upon you. As in thoſe other places he called for famine and drought, ſo here he ſaith, I will call for plenty, and it ſhall ſay, Here am I; abundance of corn and graſs, and fruits of the Earth came at that call. Lamenting Jeremiah ſpeaking of the woful captivity of the people of Iſrael, ſaith (Lam. 1. 15.) The Lord called an Aſſembly againſt me; that is, I conceive, an Aſſembly of the Aſſyrians and Babylonians, an Aſſembly of men, an Army of men; he cauſed them to aſſemble and come together; he did but call, and they ſaid, Here we are, and we will go vex Judah and Jeruſalem. Thus, if the Lord call for famine and drought, if he call for an Aſſembly of men, for men aſſembled with the Sword of War in their hand, to puniſh and chaſtiſe any people for their ſin, they will ſurely come and do his pleaſure: whatever the Lord calls for, cannot but come. Take this inference from it;

If the Lord have ſuch a command upon all Creatures, even the Inanimate Creatures; if the Lightnings anſwer him when he calls, Here we are. Then how readily ſhould men, the beſt of viſible Creatures, anſwer his call, and ſay, Here we are?

When the Lord ſaid to Abraham (Gen. 12. 1.) Get thee out of thy Country, and from thy Kindred, and from thy Fathers houſe, unto a Land that I ſhall ſhew thee, he never diſputed the caſe, but (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 8.) Obeyed and went out, not knowing whither he went. He never enquired what the place was to which he was to go, nor what accommodations he ſhould find when he came thither: Abraham knew he was to go whither God called him to go, though whither he was to go he knew not. And when long after this the Lord called to Abraham (Gen. 22. 1.) he ſaid, Behold, here I am; or, Behold me; as if he had ſaid, Lord, I am here ready to obey thy command, to go of thy Errand, to carry whatever Meſſage thou ſhalt put into my mouth, to do whatever work thou ſhalt put into my hand; and that Abraham did not complement with God, it appears in the ſame Chapter, for though when God commanded him to offer up his Son, his only Son Iſaac, whom he loved, every word was enough to wound his heart, and the laſt deepeſt (to part with a Son is hard, with an only Son harder, with a Son dearly beloved, is hardeſt of all, eſpecially when he muſt be not only paſſive but active in this loſs, and his own hand muſt give the parting blow) yet Abraham being called to this hard and hot ſervice, ſaid, Here am I, and readily obeyed. This readineſs at the call of God, David profeſſed from his own experience (Pſal. 27. 8.) When thou ſaidſt, ſeek ye my face, my heart ſaid unto thee, thy face Lord will I ſeek. That is, as thou haſt commanded that I ſhould worſhip thee, ſo I do; or, what thou O Lord ſayeſt, is my deſire; thy command is not only the reſolution, but the requeſt and ſupplication of my ſoul. We have the like readineſs of that holy Prophet Iſaiah, who (after the Angel with a coal from the Altar had touched his lips, and cleanſed him from his filthineſs) hearing the Lord enquire for a meſſenger, Whom ſhall I ſend? preſently anſwered (as the lightning in the Text) Here am I, ſend me (Iſ. 6. 8.) Lord, I am ready to go whitherſoever thou wilt ſend me. This ſhould be, and in ſome meaſure is the temper of all believers; though they may have, and to their ſorrow find many reluctancies and ſtops, yet this is in the heart of every true believer, to be ready at the call of God, and to ſay, Here I am. When the Apoſtle Paul had a call to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, which once he perſeſecuted, Immediately (ſaith he, Gal. 1. 16.) I conferred not with fleſh and blood; he made no delays, much leſs any excuſes, leaſt of all any denials, but was obedient to the heavenly Viſion. As ſoon as he had that Viſion and call from God to go and preach the Goſpel, he never ſtood reaſoning and conferring with fleſh and blood, he put no queſtions, he asked not this or that mans Opinion, whether it were beſt for him to go or not; neither did he confer with the fleſh and blood in his own heart, he conferred not with himſelf, he conſulted not his own ſafety, nor any carnal intereſts, but did as he was commanded. And unleſs we do thus, not only will the ordinary practice of ſervants to Maſters riſe up in judgment againſt us (Mat. 8. 9.) I am a man under Authority (ſaid the Centurion) having Souldiers under me; I have a ſuperiour Officer, and I have inferiour Souldiers, and I ſay to one, go, and he goeth; and to another, come, and he cometh: Such is or ought to be the carriage of Souldidiers and Servants towards their Superiours. Now, I ſay, unleſs we readily obey the Voice of God, not only will the daily practice of Servants, but the practice (if I may ſo ſpeak) of the lightnings from the Clouds, will riſe up in judgment againſt us, and condemn us. Shall a ſervant ſay, Here I am, at the call of man? Shall the Lightning ſay, Here I am, at the call of God? and ſhall not man ſay ſo at Gods call? Shall men put queſtions to Gods commands? Shall they query, Will the world bear it if I do this? or, will this ſtand with my eaſe and profit, with my credit or commodity, when God requires it? If any do ſo, the lightning may flaſh in the face of their Conſciences, and not only blaſt them as ſtubborn and diſobedient, but brand them for fooliſh and unwiſe, or at leaſt for want of wiſdom; about which the queſtion is put to Job in the next verſe.

Verſ. 36. Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts? and who hath given underſtanding to the heart?

Some Interpreters conceive, that at this verſe the Lord enters diſcourſe with, or begins to queſtion Job concerning living Creatures; and beginning here with man, the chiefeſt of viſible living Creatures, he proceeds to inferiour living Creatures, the beaſts of the Earth, and the fowls of the Air, as followeth in the 39*th* Chapter: Yet the very next verſe offers a great objection againſt this opinion; for there return is made to the former matter, the works of nature. Verſ. 37. Who can number the Clouds in wiſdom? or who can ſtay the bottles of heaven?

And therefore I rather conceive, that this 36th verſe is to be joyned with the two former already opened; as if here the Lord would convince man, that as he hath not power ſufficient to command, ſo not wiſdom enough to diſpoſe, either of the Rain, or of the Lightnings; under which, by a Synecdoche, all other Creatures may be comprehended. As if God had ſaid, Whatever wiſdom man hath, is of my putting into him; now I have not given him wiſdom enough, nor taught him how to order and diſpoſe the Clouds and Lightnings; and if I have not given him wiſdom for theſe things, whence ſhould he have it? So then, according to this way of interpretation, the 37th verſe which followeth, gives a reaſon why man cannot attain to this priviledge, the government of the Clouds, the diſpoſal of Rain and Lightnings, even becauſe God hath not given him any ſuch wiſdom. All the wiſdom which man hath, is the gift of God; but God hath not given man wiſdom to order the Clouds and Lightnings, therefore he hath no ſuch wiſdom.

Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts?

Wiſdom may be taken either generally for Knowledge, which is the light of the mind, and may be called ſpeculative knowledge; or particularly for Prudence, which is practical knowledge, in the due ordering and manage of things before us. Who hath put wiſdom, of either ſort,

Into the inward parts?] The word which we tranſlate inward parts, ſignifies ſometimes the Reins, and ſometimes the Heart. The Chaldee paraphraſe renders, Who hath put wiſdom into the heart? The matter is not much to which of them we determine it; for, though the heart in Scripture is uſually put for the ſeat of wiſdom, and the Reins for the heat of the affections; yet David ſaith, My Reins inſtruct me in the night ſeaſon (Pſal. 16.7.) To inſtruct or teach, is properly the work of wiſdom. The word is well rendred by us, the inward parts, for that takes in all; wiſdom lieth within (Pſal. 51.6.) Behold thou deſireſt truth in the inward parts, and in the hidden (part) thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom. The inward parts, in the former part of that verſe, and the hidden (part) in the latter, are the ſame; by both, or either, he means his Soul in all the faculties or operations of it. And indeed, neither the Reins, nor the Heart, nor any, nor all the members of the body, are properly or ſtrictly wiſdoms ſeat. Wiſdom is lodged in the Soul, in the man of man, as ſome call it; and therefore that muſt needs be intended here: but becauſe Naturaliſts ſpeak of wiſdom as lodged and exerciſed in bodily parts, ſome placing it in the heart, ſome in the head, others in the reins; therefore we may well place it (as our Tranſlation expreſſeth it) in the inward parts. The original word ſtrictly imports, that which is covered over, the root is rendred to cover; and Grammarians give this reaſon of it, becauſe the Reins and Kidneys are covered with fat. But ſeeing all the inward parts of man are in a ſenſe covered parts, that Notation of the word may very well ſort with our Tranſlation; as alſo with that which is the Expoſition of the inner parts, the mind or ſoul of man. So then, Who hath put wiſdom into the inner parts, is plainly this; Who hath planted it in the mind or ſoul of man? who hath rooted it there? who hath made man wiſe? ſome give the ſenſe thus, Who hath made man a Reaſonable Creature? or beſtowed that rational faculty upon man, whereby he is able to apprehend the truth of the works of God, and to enquire into, and find out many ſecrets in nature? Thus ſome (I ſay) expound it, ſpecially of that rational power with which man, as man, is naturally endowed, and not of wiſdom attained in Schools and Academies by ſtudy, or in the world by experience, which is but the lightning of reaſon, or of that natural wiſdom planted by God in man as a reaſonable Creature. Taking this ſenſe, Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts, is no more but this; Who hath made man a Rational Creature? who among men, can take this honour to himſelf, and ſay, I have put this wiſdom, called reaſon, into my ſelf, or any man? ſurely none: 'Tis the ſole Prerogative of God to put wiſdom in the loweſt and commoneſt notion of it, reaſon into the mind of man. Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts?

Sapientia non tantum in corde, ſed & in renibus aliquo modo poſita eſt. i. e. Quòd omnis hominis affectus à divina quadam ſapientia irradietur. Coc. Renes טוחות vocantur, ut quidam volent quia ſunt oblitæ adipe. Druſ.

Quis poſuit, &c. inſinuans ſe de illa ſapientia loqui, quæ nec cooperante ratione, nec induſtria humana, nec per ullam diſciplinam acquiſita eſt. Janſon.

Hence obſerve; Mans natural reaſon is the gift of God.

All wiſdom floweth from God, the Eternal and inexhauſtible Fountain of wiſdom; it is of God that all men have reaſon, as well as that any men have grace. Reaſon is a very great gift, take it barely, as unpoliſhed and unheightned by Study, by Arts, Sciences and Experiences: Wiſdom, as planted in Nature, is a high favour. As Grace ſets one man above another, ſo this natural wiſdom ſets every man above the beſt of brutes. And as this wiſdom in man (which is properly called wiſdom) ſo that Analogical wiſdom, or that appearance of wiſdom that is in many ſubtile brutes, is of Gods putting and planting too. And if ſo, then much more thoſe higher endowments, the poliſhings and the inrichings of mans reaſon, are of God. Reaſon is that ground or ſoyl, which being tilled and dreſs'd, manured and well wrought upon, brings forth thoſe excellent fruits of wiſdom which innoble the mind of man. (James 1. 17.) Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above. The good gift, may be taken for natural wiſdom; that's of God: and the perfect gift, for infuſed wiſdom, eſpecially in ſpiritual things: that's more of God, that's chiefly from above, and comes down from the Father of Lights, with whom there is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning. From this point we may infer:

Firſt, Seeing Wiſdom, both that which is planted in man, as a Rational Creature, and that alſo which man acquires by induſtry, is of God, Then God knoweth how wiſe any man is, and what any mans wiſdom amounts to. God can eaſily compaſs the wiſeſt man in the world. The wiſdom of ſome men is beyond the compaſs of many men; but the wiſdom of all men, is infinitely within the compaſs of God. He that hath put wiſdom into man, is himſelf wiſer than all men. Thus David argued (Pſal. 94. 9.) He that planted the ear, ſhall not he hear? and he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? doubtleſs he doth. God hath made ſight and hearing, and therefore the ſeeing and the hearing powers are tranſcendently in God. And as it followeth (verſ. 10.) He that teacheth man knowledge, ſhall not he underſtand? certainly he doth. He underſtands and knows, not only what men underſtand and know, but he underſtands how much underſtanding, and what knowledge any man hath; God looks through all.

Secondly, If God hath put wiſdom into man, then he can take wiſdom from man, he can deſtroy the wiſdom of the wiſe, he can turn the wiſdom of an Achitophel into fooliſhneſs. As he can make a fool wiſe; ſo he can make a wiſe man a fool, or beſool the wiſeſt men.

Thirdly, If all wiſdom be of the Lords putting in, then let none be proud of their wiſdom. There is nothing that we are ſo apt to be proud of as of our wiſdom. If we have but better natural parts than others, we are preſently lifted up above others; if we have better acquirements than others, we are apt to be proud of our ſelves. A little knowledge puffeth up, and indeed that which puffeth up is but a little. True wiſdom, though great, doth not puff up, for that leads us to him that gives us wiſdom, and that will keep us humble.

Fourthly, We may infer, if the Lord hath put wiſdom into man, then man ought to be thankful to the Lord for the wiſdom he hath. As man ſhould not be proud of his wiſdom, becauſe how much ſoever he hath, he hath received it; ſo man ought to be very thankful for wiſdom, becauſe how much or how little ſoever it is, he hath received it. If all receipts from God call for thanks, how much more this receipt of wiſdom? which, next to grace, is the moſt precious thing we receive from him, and is it ſelf ſometimes put for grace.

Fifthly, If wiſdom be of Gods putting into man? then let men be careful to uſe their wiſdom for God. That Stock which another man hath put into our hands, he expects we ſhould uſe it for him; eſpecially, that we ſhould not uſe it againſt him, or to his diſadvantage. How wicked are they, who are ſo far from uſing their wiſdom for God, that they uſe it againſt God, that is, againſt his intereſt, truth, and ſervants. Pharaoh ſaid (Exod. 1. 10.) Come on, let us deal wiſely with them. And what was it for, but to vex and inſlave Gods firſt born, the people of Iſrael. He that imploys his wiſdom to any evil purpoſe, imployeth it againſt God, and ſo arms himſelf with what he hath received from God to reſiſt God: Woe to thoſe who do ſo. Wiſdom is of Gods giving; uſe it then for him, and dedicate it to him; above all, take heed of uſing it againſt him. It had been better for that man that he had been a brute, than that he ſhould be ſo brutiſh, as to imploy his underſtanding and reaſon againſt God.

Sixthly, If the Lord hath put wiſdom into man, then man muſt be accountable to God for his wiſdom, as alſo for all the other Talents that he hath received. Wiſdom is a great Talent; they who are ſo wiſe as to know what that means, will uſe it tremblingly, that they may give their account rejoycingly. They are wiſe indeed who daily conſider, whence or from whom they had their wiſdom, and before whom they muſt come to a reckoning, what they have done with it, even before him who hath put all their wiſdom into them. Who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts?

Or who hath given underſtanding to the Heart?

This latter part of the Verſe is of the ſame ſenſe with the former, only it is doubled, to ſhew the certainty of thing; underſtanding in the heart, is the ſame thing with wiſdom in the inward parts.

Yet here is a word in the Original uſed for the heart, different from what is commonly uſed, and ſo occaſions a difference among Interpreters and Tranſlaters. Grammarians derive it from a word that ſignifieth to look or behold, to ſee and foreſee; and the Noun ſignifieth a Picture, becauſe Pictures are pieces of Art, which draw all mens eyes to behold and look upon them; and the heart is therefore expreſt by this word, becauſe it forms, and as it were (by its imaginative faculty) draws the picture of all things in it ſelf, or becauſe in the heart or mind of man the forms of all things are repreſented: Mans imagination delineates and ſhapes a thouſand varieties within it ſelf, or man hath the picture and proſpect of all matters in his heart, and therefore the ſame word ſignifies the heart and a picture, drawn and delineated to the life. That's the force of the word which here we render heart.

שכוי Appellatio eſt cordis vel mentis, à שכה quod eſt proſpicere unde משכיות picturæ quæ proſpiciuntur dictæ, & metaphorice picturæ ſeu proſpectus cordis i.e. imaginationes ſeu ſpecies rerum, quæ veluti in corde pinguntur, vel à delineatione conceptuum animi, Merc.

The Latine tranſlation renders at a great diſtance from us, yet the letter of the Text may bear that reading alſo. Who hath given underſtanding to the Cock? Interpreters following this tranſlation, conceive that here the Lord begins to queſtion Job about irrational living Creatures; Having ſaid, who hath put wiſdom into the inward parts? to wit, of man; he now adds, who hath given underſtanding to the Cock? The ſame word that ſignifieth the heart, ſignifies alſo a Cock; as the heart foreſeeth and looketh upon things afar off, ſo the Cock foreſeeth the riſing of the Sun, and the break of day; and therefore hath his name from his fore-ſight. They who follow this Tranſlation, ſpeak many things of the wonderful fore-ſight of the Cock: and ſurely God hath placed a natural wiſdom in that Creature conſtantly to underſtand the hours of the night. A Cock is a natural Clock to any Family, he hath his firſt, and ſecond, and third Crowings; and having a kind of natural inſtinct concerning the courſe and return of the Sun, he claps his wings and crows, as rejoycing at his coming, and willing to awaken all to entertain him, and prepare themſelves for labour, ſtudy and buſineſs, at his approach. But I ſhall not ſtay upon this; And the general ſtream of Interpreters keeps in the former Channel, expounding this latter part of the Verſe as the former, with reſpect to man. Who hath given underſtanding to the heart? It is a truth (I grant) which the Jewiſh Talmudiſts teach, that God is to be praiſed who hath given ſuch underſtanding to the Cock, that he is able to diſtinguiſh the hours of the night, and tell us of the approaching day, that it ſurprize us not like Sluggards unawares. The natural Hiſtorian reports the uſeful qualities of the Cock: And one of the Ancients wittily takes notice of the Cocks crowing in the Goſpel, which awakened Peter, according to Chriſts Prediction, Before the Cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice: The Cock (ſaith he) was a Preacher to call Peter to repentance. Chriſt made uſe of a Cock to preſs that Eminent Diſciple into a conviction of, and ſorrow for his ſin; for at the crowing of the Cock, he remembred the words of Chriſt, went out, and wept bitterly.

לשכוית Thargum interpretatur ללבא cordi, à שכה quod eſt proſpicere, ſic vocatur cor, quia ſpeculatur & conſiderat omnia, Druſ. Quis dedit gallo intelligentiam? Vulg.

Talmudici in Judaicis precationibus dicunt at docent cum gallus canit dicendum eſſe, Laudetur qui gallo dat intelligentiam. Gallus enim haud dubie non aliunde quam à Deo didicit noctis momenta diſcernere; proclivius tamen eſt ut pro corde exponamus, Merc.

Plin. l. 10. *c.*21. Cantavit Gallus non ut tempora diſtingueret, ſed ut Petrus pœniteret. Ambroſ.

But that the queſtion propounded to Job in this Verſe concerns the wiſdom given to man, not to beaſts or birds, is plainly proved by the queſtions put him in the two Verſes following: Which ſhew, that though God hath given man wiſdom ſufficient for many great Purpoſes, yet not for the purpoſe there expreſſed, as not for ſeveral other purpoſes.

Verſ. 37, 38. Who can number the Clouds in wiſdom? or who can ſtay the bottles of heaven, when the duſt groweth into hardneſs, and the Clouds cleave faſt together?

In theſe two Verſes we have two queſtions more propounded by God to Job: The firſt whereof is about the numbring; the ſecond (though under another title) about the ſtopping of the Clouds.

שחקים

Who can number the Clouds in wiſdom?] The word rendred Clouds is ſometimes tranſlated Heavens, and ſo a learned

Quis tam prudenter jecit cœlos eo numero quo ſunt? Vatabl.

learned Interpreter gives it here; to which he adds this gloſs, Who hath made the Heavens with ſuch wiſdom in that number wherein they are? who can number them? The word rendred number, ſignifieth both to number things Arithmetically, and to demonſtrate them Logically; and it may be taken in either or both ſenſes here, who can number the Clouds in wiſdom? that is, who hath wiſdom ſufficient to tell how many Clouds there are? Man hath not Arithmetick enough to number them. The Clouds are many in their ſorts or kinds, and they are many more in their ſingulars, or (if I may ſo ſpeak) individuals; there are many ſorts of Clouds, and there are many of every ſort; as there are many ſorts of living Creatures, and very many of every ſort, ſo of the Clouds; we may as well number the Waves of the Sea, or the Stars, as the Clouds of Heaven. If we look up to one part of Heaven, we may ſee more Clouds than we can number; how great then is the number of the Clouds in the whole circumference of the Heavens?

Again, taking the word as it ſignifieth to demonſtrate Logically, or to declare, the queſtion imports thus much; Who can clearly and perfectly ſet forth the nature of the Clouds, or the various effects which they produce, and ſervices which they are imployed in? Who can, either in the former ſenſe, or in this, number the Stars of Heaven?

Hence note; The wiſeſt among men can neither exactly tell how many the Clouds are, nor fully demonſtrate what they are.

As the number and nature of the Stars, ſo of the Clouds (which are beneath the Stars) exceed mans wiſdom. The leaſt and loweſt works of God are above mans reach, how much more his greateſt works, and thoſe which are far above?

Quis ſapphirinas effecit nubes ſapientia? Jun.

Yet further, from this word which we tranſlate to number, to declare, or demonſtrate, that precious ſtone the Saphir, mentioned often in Scriptures hath its name; and ſo the Text is rendred thus, Who can make the Clouds Saphirine, or like a Saphir? The meaning is, Who can make the Clouds bright and clear like the Saphir-ſtone? The Saphir is a moſt pleaſant reſplendent and beautiful Gem: That glorious Throne which was ſhewed the Prophet in Viſion (Ezek. 1.26.) had the appearance of a Saphir-ſtone, that is, it had a moſt excellent and illuſtrious appearance. Now ſaith the Lord, who can make the Clouds (dark of themſelves) like a Saphir-ſtone? that is, ſerene, pleaſant, beautiful, and delightful to the eye. God can make bright Clouds (Zech. 10. 1.) Clouds wonderful fair and pleaſant to behold, even as pleaſing to the eye as a precious Saphir. As this tranſlation holds out a truth in it ſelf, ſo 'tis very ſuitable to that which followeth,

Or who can ſtay the Bottles of Heaven?

Hunc interpretationem poſtulare videtur antitheſis quum additur, & lagenas cœli quis collocet, q. d. quis cœlum nunc ſerenum ac ſudum, nunc verò nubilum reddat, Piſc.

Clouds darken the Heavens, but when the Lord ſtayeth the Clouds from Rain, then the Heavens are clear like a Saphir; God can make the Heavens cloudy or clear.

Who can ſtay the Bottles of Heaven? that is, the Clouds, who can ſtay them; or (as the Hebrew ſtrictly) who can cauſe them to lye down? Mr. Broughton renders, who can diſtil the barrels of heaven? The word here uſed ſignifies a Bottle, or any Veſſel wherein Liquor is preſerved; and it may be taken either for a Bottle made of Skin, a Leathern Bottle, or for a Bottle made of Clay, an Earthen Bottle, a Potters Bottle, as 'tis called (Iſa. 30. 14.) The Clouds are like a Leathern or an Earthen Bottle, which as it holds the Liquor, ſo being unſtopped and held up, the Liquor runs out; who can ſtay the bottles of heaven? that is, if God once unſtop the Clouds, they preſently pour down Rain, and who can ſtay them from raining? no man can. That's a plain ſenſe; as if the Lord had ſaid, who can hinder the Clouds from giving down Rain, if once opened? who but I can reſtrain the rain (which is heavy of it ſelf, and tends naturally downwards) from falling out of the Clouds?

Concentum cœli quis dormire facit, Vulg.

נבל per quinque puncta ſignificat Nablium, inſtrumentum muſicum utri ſimile, & habens chordas quæ pulſantur.

There is another reading of this part of the verſe, who can ſtay the harmony of heaven? The Vulgar Latine renders, who can make the Muſick of heaven ſleep; that is, ceaſe, or be quiet. The reaſon of this tranſlation is this, becauſe the ſame word which ſignifieth a Bottle, ſignifies alſo a Muſical Inſtrument, ſomewhat reſembling the form of a Bottle (Pſal. 33.2.) Thus ſome take it here, as intending that Muſical or melodious harmony which ancient Philoſophers have affirmed is made by the motion of the Heavenly Sphears; yet by this they do not mean a proper muſical ſound or harmony, ſuch as the Pythagoreans dreamed of, which ſome other learned men have ſaid is ſo ſweet and raviſhing, that if we did but hear it, we could neither eat, nor drink, nor ſleep: Yea, they tell us, that Moſes while he did not eat, nor drink, nor ſleep thoſe forty days in the Mount, was all that while taken up, and raviſhed with that Muſick; but you may put that among Jewiſh Fables.

Sober men following this tranſlation, who can ſtay the Muſick of Heaven? underſtand by it only the harmonious concord and agreement, which all the Heavenly Orbs unfailably obſerve in their ſeveral courſes, without the leaſt jar or diſcord. That's a truth, ſhewing the great Wiſdom and Power of God, who hath put the Heavens into ſuch a ſweet order, that they move, not only conſtantly, but harmoniouſly. Though the motion of the Heavens makes no audible or proper Muſick, yet it makes an intelligible or metaphorical Muſick, that is, the Heavens move orderly, there is an agreement in their motion, which is the ſweeteſt Muſick in Heaven among Saints and Angels, and among good men on Earth. We ſay of men moving peaceably in their places, as becomes them, there is a harmony among them. And how bleſſed a thing would it be, to ſee all ſorts of men moving orderly in their ſpheres? what a harmony would it make, to ſee every one doing his duty, and doing it in his place? whereas to omit duty makes our lives uſeleſs; and to do it out of our place, makes us troubleſom and unharmonious. And therefore, though I inſiſt not upon this reading, yet it were well if all would inſiſt upon the moral of it, labouring to make harmony (as much as may be) in all their motions. But I paſs from it, and reſt in our own,

Who can ſtay the bottles of heaven, that is, who can make them leave raining? The Lord by a late queſtion convinced Job, that no man can make it rain (verſ. 34.) Canſt thou lift up thy voice to the Clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee? and by this queſtion he would convince him, that no man can obſtruct or hinder the Rain. Who can ſtay the bottles of heaven?

Hence obſerve; It is God who ſtayeth or reſtraineth the Clouds from raining.

Should not the Lord put Stopples into thoſe Bottles? ſhould not he cloſe up thoſe Barrels, they would drop down continually? and inſtead of watering, drown the Earth. When in the days of Noah the Lord opened the Bottles of Heaven forty days together, who could ſtop or ſtay them? Did not the Clouds pour down till the whole world was overwhelmed? and unleſs the Lord did now ſtay the Clouds, and forbid them to give out their whole ſtock, they would again overwhelm the world. There are Seas of waters above our heads, God keeps them in from hurting the earth, and lets them out to help it. The next verſe intimates at leaſt this Power of God over the Clouds and the ſeaſon when he exerciſeth it: who can ſtay the bottles of heaven?

Verſ. 38. When the duſt groweth (or is poured) into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together?

The Margin of our Bibles gives us the former part of the verſe in a very different tranſlation, thus, When the duſt is turned into mire. The Earth hath had its fill, if not too much Rain, when the duſt is turned into mire? And when 'tis ſo, who but God ſtayeth the Bottles of Heaven from pouring down over-much?

But I ſhall only open the reading in the Text, of which there are two interpretations.

Firſt, Some expound it of ſtaying the Rain when there is moſt need of Rain, or when the Earth wants it moſt, or in a time of drought: For then the Earth groweth hard like a molten Pillar, and the clods thereof cleaving one to another, make clefts in the body of the Earth. In a time of great drought, the Earth at once cleaves aſunder, and runs cloſer together, as it were to ſuccour it ſelf. Who ſtayeth the Bottles of Heaven, when the Earth is chapt and gapes for Rain to ſoften and cool it? Surely man doth it not, nor can he be ſaid to do it (unleſs meritoriouſly.) It is God alone who efficiently ſtays the Clouds from Rain in a time of drought, or when the neceſſities of the Earth call aloud for it. Taking the words in this ſenſe, Obſerve; God can ſtop any of our mercies (as here the Rain) when we have moſt need of them.

I (ſaith the Lord Amos 4. 7.) have withholden the Rain from you when there were yet three months to the harveſt, and I cauſed it to rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to rain upon another City; one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered. One months drought before harveſt threatens a ſcarcity or dearth of Corn; but two, yea three months drought, muſt needs uſher in a dreadful famine.

The ſecond interpretation of theſe words ſeems yet more clear, Who can ſtay the Bottles of Heaven, when the duſt groweth into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together? that is, who but God can ſtop rain when there is no farther need of rain? As if the Lord had ſaid, When the Bottles of Heaven have given out ſo much rain as may fit the Earth for fruit-bearing, or when the ground hath had its fill, ſo that the light duſt is turned into lumps of Earth, and that duſt which was raiſed and toſſed with every breath of wind, is clodded and agglutinated by water into a maſſie ſubſtance; when, I ſay, 'tis thus with the Earth, who can ſtay or ſtop the Bottles of Heaven from raining more, to the ſpoil of all, but my ſelf? So then the true uſe of rain is held forth in this 38. verſ. namely, that the duſt of the Earth being moiſtened with rain, may coaleſce or be joyned cloſe together. This, I conceive, is the moſt natural and proper ſenſe of the Text: For the Earth, which by drought was crumbled into duſt, rain falling plentifully upon it, is knit again into one body, like Meal or Flower into which Leven is put, and ſo is made ready to receive, nouriſh, and bring forth whatever Grain is caſt into the boſom of it.

Vocem כצקת verto fermentationem à verbo בצק quod ſignificat, fermentari atque intumeſcere, E. Piſc.

Rain falling upon the duſt imbodies it. The ground moulders in a time of drought; but when rain comes, that hardens it. The duſt (as we commonly ſay) flies before, but as drought cleaves the Earth, ſo rain cauſeth the parts to unite; and then the Earth, which like a heap of Sand would not hang together, becomes ſolid and fit for Tillage. Now when ſo much rain hath fallen as prepares the Earth, and (as the word imports) fermentates or levens it to receive the ſeed caſt into it; then, who ſtayeth the Bottles of Heaven?

Hence note, Firſt, Rain compacts the Earth.

As moiſture looſens compacted things, ſo it compacts or knits together looſe things. The Earth is ſoon made duſt by droughts, and it would be a very duſt-heap, if it had no moiſture to reunite it. The Lord threatens his people, in caſe of diſobedience (Deut 28. 24.) to make the rain of their Land powder and duſt; that is, they ſhould have duſt and powder, inſtead of water. Long drought turns the Earth to duſt. In this learn, how great a mercy there is in rain.

Humore aquæ terræ partes continentur, & uniuntur quæ ante disjunctæ fuerant, Merc.

Ut perfuſio ſit fermentandæ terræ, ut conglutinentur glebæ, Jun. Tranſ.

i. e. ut terram quum pulverulenta eſt, ab ariditate immiſſis pluviis fermentet ad glebarum compagem & rerum ex ea naſcentium alimentum, Jun.

Secondly note, The Lord knows when the Earth hath had ſufficient rain.

And therefore (unleſs in judgment) he will not let the Clouds run waſte; he will ſtay his Bottles from letting down one drop more, when once the duſt (by rain falling upon it) groweth into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together.

Note Thirdly, 'Tis a mercy, when the Earth hath enough, that God ſtops the Bottles.

As it is a duty, when we have drank enough, to ſtop the Bottle, that is, to give over drinking; ſo 'tis a mercy, that the Lord ſtops the Bottles when the Earth hath drank enough. When the Earth hath enough, the Lord ſometimes will not ſtop the Bottles of Heaven, but lets them pour down rain, till the fruits of the Earth are utterly ſpoiled; and this he doth for the puniſhment of mans ſin always, and ſometimes for the puniſhment of thoſe ſpecial ſins, mans unthankfulneſs for, and abuſe of the fruits of the Earth; that is, becauſe he did not ſtay the bottle, when he had taken enough

Now, if the Lord knows when to give rain, and when to ſtop it, with reſpect to Husbandry, and the natural fruits of the Earth, then doubtleſs he knows and will take care to give rain for the ſouls of his people, when they have need. (Pſal. 68 2.) Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain, whereby thou didſt confirm thine Inheritance, when it was weary; which is ſpecially meant of ſpiritual rain. There are Bottles of Heaven which water Souls. The Preachers of the Word are thoſe Bottles or Clouds, which hold and diſtil the myſtical rain; and the Lord will not ſtop them, till he ſees the hearts of men made fit to bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs and holineſs; he will not ſtop (I ſay) that ſpiritual rain till this be effected, unleſs in Judgment to a people that have deſpiſed the rain, and ſlighted thoſe ſhowers of Divine Doctrine; againſt ſuch the Lord will ſtop the Bottles of Heaven, and then their Souls turn to duſt, and their hearts become hard as Rocks, or like the Mountains, upon which neither rain nor dew falls, fruitleſs and barren of every good word and work.

VERS. 39, 40, 41.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon? or fill the appetite of the young Lyons,

When they couch in their Dens, and abide in the covert to lye in wait?

Who provideth for the Raven his food? when his young ones cry unto God, they wander for lack of meat.

THe Lord having by a multitude of Queſtions propoſed to Job concerning Inanimates, or Creatures without life, ſuch as are the Earth, the Sea, the Heavens, the Clouds and Meteors, (having, I ſay, by theſe Queſtions) convinced him of his weakneſs and inſufficiency; as alſo, of the tranſcendent power and wiſdom which abideth and reſideth everlaſtingly in himſelf; he now undertakes Job for the ſame ends, by putting him queſtions about the living Creatures, and thoſe of three forms or ſorts.

Firſt, About the Beaſts of the Earth.

Secondly, About the Fowls of the Air.

Thirdly, About the Fiſh of the Sea.

The Lord gives particular inſtance, or makes inquiry about thirteen kinds of living Creatures; whereof ſeven abide upon the Earth, five in the Air, one in the Waters.

The ſeven Creatures inquired about, which abide on the Earth, are; Firſt, The Lyon; Secondly, The wild Goat; Thirdly, The Hind; Fourthly, The wild Aſs; Fifthly, The Unicorn; Sixthly, The Horſe, and Seventhly, The Elephant, under the name of Behemoth, as is moſt generally conceived.

The five Creatures inquired about, that live in the Air, are, Firſt, The Raven; Secondly, The Peacock; Thirdly, The Oſtrich; Fourthly, The Hawk; and Fifthly, The Eagle.

Of the third ſort, namely, ſuch as live in the Water, or in the Sea, Job is queſtioned only about one, the Leviathan, or the Whale, a Creature of a vaſt magnitude; of ſo vaſt a magnitude, that take all the other twelve Creatures, and joyn them together, the Leviathan exceeds them all in magnitude; as will appear in the deſcription given of him at large, in the one and fortieth Chapter.

The Lord in this latter diſcourſe with, or queſtioning of Job, ſeems to deſcend, or to put matter of eaſier reſolution to him than he had done before, and doubtleſs he doth; yet he doth it for the greater and fuller conviction and humiliation of Job. As if the Lord had ſaid, If (O Job*) thou findeſt thy ſelf puzled and unable to give any tolerable anſwer and reſolution to the queſtions which I have propoſed, about the whole bulk or body of the Earth and Sea, or about thoſe great things which are wrought in the Heavens, and in the Air, then conſider, how thou art able to anſwer my queſtions about theſe leſſer things, which are alſo near unto thee, the Beaſts of the Earth, Fowls of the Air, and the Fiſh of the Sea.* The Lord even in theſe works, makes manifeſt his glorious perfections, far exceeding the reach and apprehenſion of man, as well as in, yea more than in, thoſe other works of his mentioned before.

There are two things eſpecially, of which the Lord would convince Job, with reſpect to theſe living Creatures:

Firſt, Of his care and providence in the proviſion that he daily makes for them.

Secondly, Of his power and wiſdom, in the extraordinary ſtrength and ſtrange qualities which he hath beſtowed upon them, and indued them with; in ſome of which they much ſurpaſs Man, the Maſter-piece, and Maſter of the whole inviſible Creation.

The general ſcope and aim of God, in putting Queſtions to Job about theſe living Creatures, ſeems to anſwer a ſecret doubt which ſome might have concerning his Providence. True, the Lord governs the Heavens, the Stars, the Thunder, the Lightnings, the Rain; but doth he look after things below? Yea, the Lords care and Providence about inferiour Creatures, is very great, condeſcending to the very wild beaſts of the Earth, to the Fowls of the Air; as alſo, to the Fiſh of the Sea: And hence the Lord would have Job underſtand, that ſurely he had a much greater care of him, and of the affairs of the Children of men. Who can but conclude, that if the Lord hath ſuch a reſpect to theſe irrational Creatures, which live only the life of ſenſe, then much more hath he a care of man, and among men, of good men, who are his Children, and of them moſt of all in their afflictions and troubles. So that the Lord by theſe queſtions, ſeems to beſpeak Job thus: How comes it to paſs, that thou ſhouldſt ſo much as doubt, whether I take care of thee or no, when I take care of, and look to the wild beaſts of the earth, to the fowls that fly in the Air; yea, to the fiſh that ſwim unſeen in the Sea? Or thus, Am I thus ſolicitous to look after Lyons and Goats, Hinds and Unicorns, the Oſtrich and the Peacock? &c. Am I ſo careful to look after theſe Creatures, many of which are of very little uſe to man, and ſome of them a trouble to man? and doſt thou think I will not have a care of thee? Learn therefore from what I now queſtion thee about, that I can never be cruel to thee, or forgetful of my faithful ſervants, who am mindful of the brute beaſts, and ravenous birds. This ſeems to be the general tendency of the Lords diſcourſe with Job, continued from the cloſe of this 38. Chapter, quite through the 39. a great part of the 40. and the whole 41. Chapter.

Ego qui omnia juſta diſpenſatione procuro, circa te tantum, O Job videbor injuſtus. Philip.

Ut diſcat Job Deum non ſævum eſſe in ſuos, qui tam beneficus ſit in feras. Chryſoſt.

Having thus given a proſpect of the whole, I ſhall now proceed to the particular Animals here named, and to that firſt which is not only named in the order of the Text, but is looked upon alſo as firſt in dignity, a King among beaſts, the Lyon.

Verſ. 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon?

The Lord ſpeaks thus, becauſe the Lyon is a Beaſt of Prey; he liveth by hunting, catching, and feeding upon other Beaſts; the Lyon is a Nimrod in the world, a mighty Hunter: Naturaliſts ſay, he is ſo curious in his Diet, that he ſcorns to feed upon any Carcaſe that he hath not hunted and killed himſelf, or that hath not been hunted by a Lion. He will not touch a Carcaſe that lies dead in the field; but what he feeds upon, is what he conquers and kills, and that therefore it is here ſaid, Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lion? thou needſt not, he is able to hunt for himſelf.

Yet ſome Travellers report, that there is a little Beaſt called Jackal, ſomewhat bigger than a Fox, who uſually doth that ſervice for the Lion, to hunt the Prey for him, and may be called the Lions Hunter. Mr. Purchas, in that Book called his Pilgrimage, gives us this relation: The Lion (ſaith he) hath the Jackal for his Uſher, which is a little black ſhag-haired Beaſt, about the bigneſs of a Spaniel, which when the evening comes, hunts for his Prey, and coming on the foot, follows the ſcent with open cry, to which the Lion as chief Hunter gives diligent ear, following for his advantage. If the Jackal ſet up his chaſe before the Lion comes in, he howls out mainly, and then the Lion ſeizeth on it, making a grumbling noiſe, whilſt his ſervant ſtands by barking; and when the Lion hath done, the Jackal feeds on the relicks. Thus far that induſtrious Collector of Obſervations from moſt of the remote parts of the world. And though neither Pliny, nor any Natural Hiſtorian, no nor any Interpreter upon this Text (that ever I met with) have given any intimation that the Lion hath ſuch a ſervant to hunt the Prey for him; yet the teſtimony of thoſe ingenious Travellers or Navigators, upon whoſe report of what they have ſeen or heard in thoſe Countreys, the worthy Author above-named makes this relation (this teſtimony, I ſay) may be a probable ground for ſuch an Expoſition of the Text, that the Lord had in his wiſe Providence provided one to hunt the prey for the Lion. Though I conceive the ſenſe of the place to be more general, namely, that the Lord himſelf hath one way or other taken care, that even the Lion ſhould have his Prey, and that neither Job then, nor any one elſe needed take care in that matter. How great an Argument that might be, both for Job's conviction and conſolation will appear afterwards, Wilt thou hunt the prey

Purchas Pilgr. p. 1575.

For the Lyon?] The word rendred Lyon, ſignifies a ſtout Lyon: Mr. Broughton renders, the hardy Lyon; others, the old Lyon; Wilt thou hunt the prey for the old Lyon? and there's a double interpretation with reſpect to that tranſlation, That either here is meant a Lyon come up to his full ſtrength, and ſo every way able to provide for himſelf; or, that by the old Lyon, is meant a Lyon grown ſo old and weak with old age, that he can no longer provide for, nor hunt the prey for himſelf; and therefore the Lord ſaith, Wilt thou hunt the prey for the old Lyon, that cannot hunt for himſelf? doſt thou provide for the Lyon, that cannot provide for himſelf? 'Tis I, who provide a prey for the old Lyon, that cannot hunt the prey for himſelf. This is a good ſenſe, and I ſhall touch it in the Obſervation.

ללביא Leoni vetulo, qui viribus deficientibus non amplius poteſt venari; ſed à juvenibus capta præda, rugitu eum ad participationem prædæ vocantibus, alitur. Ælian l. 9. Hiſtor. Animal. c. 1.

However, 'tis plain, that by the Lyon, in the firſt part of the verſe, is meant, an old Lyon; for he ſtands oppoſed to the young Lyon, in the latter part of the verſe: Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon?

Naturaliſts ſpeak many things of the nature of the Lyon, to whom I refer the Reader; I ſhall have occaſion to touch ſome of them, while I mention what the Scripture ſaith of him. The Lyon bears a four-fold reſemblance in Scripture.

Firſt, The Lyon is the Emblem of a King. Judah, whoſe Tribe was the ſtock of Kings, or the Tribe-Royal, is called a Lyons Whelp (Gen. 49. 9.) Thus ſpake Jacob, Judah is a Lyons Whelp; from the prey, my Son, thou art gone up; he ſtooped down, he couched as a Lyon, and as an old Lyon; who ſhall rouſe him up? The Kings of the Earth are compared to Lyons, Firſt, Becauſe of their greatneſs and ſuperiority: What the Lyon is among beaſts, Kings are among men, their Chiefs. Secondly, Becauſe of their ſtoutneſs and courage. Solomon ſaith of the Lyon (Prov, 30. 30.) He is ſtrongeſt among beaſts, and turneth not away for any; That is, he is not afraid of any beaſt. To be bold as a Lyon, is a ſacred as well as a common Proverbial, noting greateſt boldneſs. Ariſtotle ſaith, the Lyon never flies or makes any haſty retreat, let the danger be what it will in open view, but goes off, keeping his own pace. A Modern Writer ſpeaks thus: The Lyon in Africk is more fierce than in colder Climates; He ſhrinks not in danger, except ſome covert of Woods hides him from Witneſſes, and then he will take the benefit of a flight, which otherwiſe he ſeems to diſdain. Such is the true ſpirit of Kings; they are much above ignoble fears. Thirdly, Lyons reſemble Kings, becauſe of their mildneſs and nobleneſs to them that ſubmit. Fourthly, Becauſe of the ſtatelineſs of their gate, and Majeſty of their aſpect. Fifthly, Becauſe of their vigilancy and watchfulneſs. The Lyon ſleeps (ſay Naturaliſts) with his eyes open, he ſleeps as if he were not aſleep; and as ſome obſerve, he often moves his tail while he ſleepeth, as giving notice, that he is not (as we ſpeak) faſt aſleep.

Nunquam in locis patentibus fugit aut metuit, pedetentimque diſcedit. Ariſt.

Leoni tantum ex feris clementia in ſupplices. Plin. l. 8. c. 16.

Satis eſt proſtraſſe Leoni. Vigilans oculus ſceptro impoſitus perpetuæ vigiliæ ſymbolum eſt.

And as the Lyon is an Emblem of Earthly Kings; ſo, Secondly, of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the King of Heaven and Earth, the King of Kings: To ſhew his ſupereminent Excellency, he is called a Lyon (Rev. 5. 5.) There was found none worthy to open the Book, but the Lyon of the Tribe of Judah. Now Jeſus Chriſt is compared to a Lyon upon all thoſe accounts before-named, for which worthy and Heroick Kings are ſo compared: for, Firſt, Jeſus Chriſt is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords (Rev. 19. 16.) He is highly exalted; he hath a name given him above every name, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in Heaven, and things in Earth, and things under the Earth (Phil. 2. 9, 10.) And as Jeſus Chriſt is like the Lyon for his ſuperiority; ſo, Secondly, for his clemency and true nobleneſs of ſpirit towards thoſe who yield unto him. 'Tis enough indeed, to humble our ſelves before this Lyon. How ready muſt Chriſt be to receive and embrace humbled ſinners, who humbled himſelf to death, that he might ſave ſinners, even while they were proud and rebelled againſt him! Thirdly, Jeſus Chriſt is a Lion alſo, in reſpect of his watchfulneſs over his Church. This Lion that keeps Iſrael, neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps (Pſal. 121. 4.) and Fourthly, for his invincible courage and ſtrength, always ready to be put forth for his Church. The Prophet (Iſa. 31. 4.) compares Chriſt to a Lyon that will not be frighted; Like as the Lyon (ſaith he) and the young Lyon roaring on his prey, when a multitude of Shepherds is called out againſt him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abaſe himſelf for the noiſe of them; ſo ſhall the Lord of Hoſts himſelf come down to fight for Mount Sion, and for the Hill thereof. As if the Prophet had ſaid, God will protect Jeruſalem againſt all her Enemies (the Aſſyrian forces are there ſpecially intended) no more regarding or fearing them, than a fierce Lyon in the prime of his ſtrength, will regard or fear a company of ſimple Shepherds, that ſhall attempt to reſcue his Prey from between his teeth. And becauſe of this Lyon-like power and courage of Chriſt for his Church, another Prophet ſaith, that the Church her ſelf ſhall be as a Lyon (Mic. 5 8.) And the remnant of Jacob (that is, the true Church) ſhall be among the Gentiles, in the midſt of many people (who are Enemies, and unbelieving) as a Lyon among the beaſts of the forreſt, as a young Lyon among the flocks of ſheep; or rather (as the Margin hath it) Goats, who if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. That is (as our late Annotators expreſs it) The faithful ſhall be endowed with an invincible force of the Spirit of God, to overcome and overthrow the Devil, the World, and all their Enemies.

Thirdly, the Lyon is the Emblem of Oppreſſors and Tyrants: They in evil qualities reſemble Lyons. Thus the Apoſtle Paul called Nero (as it is generally conceived) a Lyon. I was (ſaith he) delivered out of the mouth of the Lyon (2 Tim. 4. 15.) which though it may be taken in a general ſenſe, for deliverance out of any great danger, yet 'tis ſpecially and particularly applied to the perſon of Nero, who was cruel as a Lyon, and had the Apoſtle Paul in his Paws at that time. David ſpeaking of the multitude of his cruel oppreſſors, tells us, his ſoul was among Lyons (Pſa. 57 4.) that is, among thoſe that were cruel, as the next words explain it; I lye among them that are ſet on fire (with rage and malice) even the ſons of men, whoſe teeth are ſpears and arrows, and their tongue a ſharp ſword. The Lyon is (though in ſome caſes a clement, yet) moſtly a cruel, a devouring Creature. Naturaliſts ſay, he will ſwallow down whole gobbets of fleſh without chewing; yea, that he will ſwallow down ſuch a quantity at once, as will ſerve him two or three days without eating more. And as oppreſſors are ſhadowed out by the Lyon with reſpect to their cruelty, ſo likewiſe with reſpect to their ſubtilty and treachery (Pſal. 10 8,9,10.) He (that is, the wicked Enemy) ſitteth in the lurking places of the Villages; in the ſecret places doth he murder the innocent; his eyes are privily ſet againſt the poor; He lieth in wait ſecretly as a Lyon in his Den; he lieth in wait to catch the poor, &c. Evil men have as much of the Lyons craft, as of his cruelty, and both from him.

Leo eſt animal carnivorum & ſævum: eſt & voraciſſimum & repletus duos treſvè dies jejunat. Ariſt. Hiſtor. Animal. l. 4. c. 5. & l. 8. c. 16.

In the fourth place, The Lyon in ſome things reſembles the Devil himſelf, the worſt of all Creatures. The Apoſtle Peter gives it expreſly (1 Epiſt. 5. 8.) Be ſober, be vigilant; for your adverſary the Devil goeth about like a roaring Lyon, ſeeking whom he may devour, or ſwallow down at a draught, as the word ſignifies. The Devil is like a Lyon in his wrath, rage, malice and ſubtilty, to catch and inſnare poor ſouls, and to make a prey of them.

Chriſtus Leo propter fortitudinem, diabolus propter feritatem. Auguſt. Ser. 46. de diverſis.

Laſtly, The Lyon is an Emblem of a godly man, Firſt, For his boldneſs and gracious confidence in a good cauſe (Prov. 28. 1.) The righteous is bold as a Lyon. Secondly, For his gratefulneſs to them who have done him good. Some of the Ancients have related ſtrange things of the hoſpitality of a Lyon entertaining a man, and of the gratitude of a man healing a Lyon, with the conſequents of both. Thus by theſe Scripture-reſemblances, we may learn much what the Lyon is, and what his qualities are. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon?

De Leone hominis hoſpite, & homine medico Leonis. Vide Gellium, l. 5. c. 14. & Ælian. l. 7. cap. ult.

Or fill the appetite of the young Lyons?

Poſſibly the Lord ſpeaks of filling the appetite of young Lyons, becauſe young Lyons have appetites ſo ſtrong, that a ſmall matter will not fill them. Young ones of any kind, have ſtronger appetites than thoſe that are old; young Lyons eſpecially, whoſe conſtitution (ſay Naturaliſts) is very hot and dry; that being the temperament of Lyons; young Lyons muſt needs require a great proportion of food to ſatisfie their ſtomack, and find work for their quick concoction. 'Tis but a while that the Milk of the Lioneſs will ſerve their turn, they muſt have ſtronger meat; young Lyons are ſoon ready for prey; 'Tis ſaid (Judg. 14. 5.) that when Sampſon paſſed by, a young Lyon roared againſt him, or (as the Margin reads it) a young Lyon meeting him roared; And why did he roar? not ſo much for anger, as for hunger, deſiring to make a prey of Sampſon.

Wilt thou fill the appetite of the young Lyon? Some tranſlate it, Wilt thou fill the company, or troop of young Lyons? that is, all the Lyons that are in the Den. The word ſignifies a company or troop, ſo its rendered (Pſal. 68. 30.) Rebukes the company of Spear-men, or of thoſe that carry the Cane. But though the word may ſignifie a company, yet it is not ſo uſed, but where it refers (as in that Pſalm) to a company of men; and therefore, though that be a good ſenſe, and may well be included in our Tranſlation, which being (according to the Text) in the plural number, young Lyons, takes in the whole company, how many ſoever they are. Wilt thou fill the company of the young Lyons? canſt thou give all the Whelps in the Kennel their Dinner or Supper? yet I rather adhere to thoſe, who render the word Appetite as we do, than to thoſe who render it Company.

Verum eſt nomen חית interdum ſignificare catervam, ſed quum de hominibus ſermo eſt Perde catervam arundinis, i. e. haſtatorum, Piſc. Anima pro appetendi facultate.

Canſt thou fill the appetite (or ſoul) of the young Lyons. The word is tranſlated Life or Soul, in the 20. Chap. of this Book (ver. 22.) as alſo in the 33. Chap. of this Book (ver. 18.) 'Tis likewiſe tranſlated appetite (Prov. 23. 2.) and when we read greedy dogs (Iſa. 56. 11.) we put in the Margin, ſtrong of appetite; implying, that the perſons intended under that diſgraceful denomination greedy dogs, were ſuch, who though they had little appetite or ſtomack to their work, yet had even an inſatiable appetite or ſtomack after their wages or reward. The appetite being ſo quick and lively a faculty, is expreſt by the ſame word that ſignifies life or livelineſs, which is the Spring and Original of appetite. When life ceaſeth, appetite ceaſeth; and the more lively any are, the quicker is their appetite.

Wilt thou fill the life or appetite of the young Lyons? Theſe young Lyons are oppoſed to the old Lyon ſpoken of before; and we may take them either for Lyons ſo young, that they are not able to hunt or fetch their own prey, and therefore muſt have prey brought in to them; or we may take them for young Lyons that have ſtrength enough to go forth to ſeek their prey. So then, as the Lyon before may be taken for an old Lyon, for a Lyon ſo old, that he cannot go forth to catch his prey; and the young Lyons, for Lyons ſo young, that they never had ſtrength to go forth and catch their prey: So we may take the Text in general for old and young, whether able or unable to catch prey for themſelves. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lyon? or fill the appetite of the young Lyons?

Hence note, Firſt, The way how Lyons live, or get their livelihood.

Lyons are all for prey.

There is no work ſpoken of that the Lyon doth to get his living by, there's nothing ſpoken of any ſervice the Lyon doth, all his care is for his belly, he hunts his prey: Wicked men in this are like Lyons, they are like Nimrod, all for hunting, all for catching the prey. The Prophet Nahum (Chap. 2. 12.) deſcribes the oppreſſing power of Nineveh, by a Lyon tearing in pieces enough for his Whelps, and ſtrangling for his Lioneſſes, and filling his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Tearing and ſtrangling, filling all with prey and ravin, is all that Lyons do; nor is the work of oppreſſors and cruel men any other in their kind, nor any whit better. Some of the Ancients ſpeaking of the Lyon, ſay, that when he roareth, the poor Beaſts that are within hearing are ſo amazed and affrighted, that though they might eſcape by flight, yet they ſtand ſtill and yield themſelves up to him for a prey. Such frights are poor men often put to, by the roaring Throats of mercileſs oppreſſors.

Baſil. Hom. 9. in Hexam. Ambroſ. Hex. l. 6. c. 3.

Secondly, note; God provides prey for Lyons.

God feeds not only Sheep and Lambs, but Wolves and Lyons. This note gives us the chief ſcope of the whole Context, which is to ſhew the care of God over all. It is ſaid (Pſal. 104. 21.) The young Lyons roar after their prey, and ſeek their meat from God. It is a ſtrange expreſſion, that young Lyons when they roar after their prey, ſhould be ſaid to ſeek their meat of God; implying, that neither their own ſtrength nor craft could feed them without help from God. The ſtrongeſt Creatures left to themſelves cannot help themſelves. As they who fear God are fed by a ſpecial Providence of God, ſo all Creatures are fed and nouriſhed by a general Providence. The Lyon, though he be ſtrong and ſubtile, yet cannot get his own prey; we think, a Lion might ſhift for himſelf, no, 'tis the Lord that provides for him; the young Lions ſeek their meat of God: Surely then, the mightieſt of men cannot live upon themſelves; as it is of God that we receive life and breath, ſo all things needful for the maintenance of this life. The Prophet Jeremiah gives check to all fleſh (Chap. 9.23.) Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom, let not the mighty man glory in his might. As if he had ſaid, neither a wiſe man by his wiſdom, nor a mighty man by his might, can bring any work to an effectual iſſue. That is alſo the concluſion which the Spirit of God made, by the wiſeſt and one of the mightieſt men that ever was in the World, King Solomon (Eccleſ. 9. 11.) The race is not to the ſwift, nor the battel to the ſtrong, neither yet bread to the wiſe, nor yet riches to men of underſtanding, nor yet favour to men of skill, but time and chance happeneth to them all: Though men have ſutable qualities and abilities for the attaining of their ends (what ſutes better the winning of a race than ſwiftneſs?) yet they cannot attain them, without the power and preſence of God in ſome kind and degree or other; the ſtrong Lions would ſtarve, did not the Lord help them to hunt their prey.

Thirdly, If we take the Lion in the firſt part of the verſe for the old decrepid Lion, and the young Lions for ſuch as are not able to go abroad for their prey, the Lord providing for Lions under both theſe conſiderations, yields us this Obſervation.

> God takes care for thoſe Creatures, who through infirmities (being either too old or too young) are not able to provide for themſelves.

There's a ſpecial providence of God over them that have ſpecial need. The old Lion, that once could, but now cannot, the young Lions that never could hunt the prey, are yet provided for. Old Lions that are ſtrong are taught by Natural inſtinct to get prey for their young ones while weak; and the Natural Hiſtorian tells us, that the younger Lions, which are ſtrong, are taught by a like inſtinct to hunt the prey for the old ones that are weak.

Leo vetulus qui viribus, deficientibus non amplius, Poteſt venari à juvenibus præda capta, rugitu eum ad participationem prædæ vocantibus, aliter, Ælian. l. 9. de natura animal. c.1.

Fourthly, From the latter words, Wilt thou fill the appetite of the young Lions?

Note, God can and doth provide for the Creature to fulneſs or ſatisfaction; he fills their appetite.

God, as I may ſay, keeps a good, a bountiful Houſe for all his Creatures; the young Lions that have ſuch ſtrong ſtomachs ſhall have their fill: Hence we may infer,

Firſt, If the Lord doth thus provide for Lions young or old, one or other, then much more will he provide, and hunt the prey for his faithful people. David (Pſal. 34. 10.) gives us the Lords word for it, The young Lions do lack and ſuffer hunger, but they that ſeek the Lord ſhall not want any good thing. That is, the young Lions may lack, or though the young Lions ſhould lack and ſuffer hunger, yet they that ſeek and ſerve the Lord ſhall not. Lions have a good aſſurance that they ſhall not lack, but the Servants of God have a far better aſſurance that they ſhall not. Doth God take care for Oxen? Was the Apoſtles queſtion (1 Cor. 9. 9.) or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes; for our ſakes (ſpeaking of Goſpel Miniſters) no doubt this is written, (verſ. 10.) As if he had ſaid, if the Lord did not give that Law to the Jews, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the Corn, altogether for our ſakes, yet queſtionleſs he gave it chiefly for our ſakes, and had a far greater reſpect to us in making that Law than to Oxen. Thus from the Text and point in hand, I may ſay, Doth God take care for Lions? Surely, he hath cauſed this to be written, that we may know, he will much more take care of his Sheep, of all that fear him and call upon his name. A Lion may come into a ſtarving condition, but thoſe that fear God ſhall not. Lions, though they are very ſtrong and ſubtle cannot always get their prey, but the Lord hath promiſed to miniſter to his people, at leaſt a ſupply of their neceſſities, as David ſpeaks, I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging bread (Pſal. 37. 25.)

Secondly, Doth the Lord provide to ſatisfaction for the young Lions? Doth he fill their Natural appetite? Then ſurely he will provide for the ſatisfying of his people in ſpiritual things (Luke 1. 53.) He filleth the hungry with good things. Who are the hungry? Doubtleſs the holy Virgin meant the ſpiritually hungry. And what are the good things he fills them with? Doubtleſs, ſpiritual good things: they ſhall have not only ſome taſts of theſe good things, but their fills of them; he fills the hungry with good things. (Pſal. 81.10.) Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it. God hath much reſpect to fill us with outward good things; but much more to fill us with ſpiritual good things, open thy mouth wide, and raiſe up thy deſires after the things of Heaven, growth in grace, increaſe in faith and love, in patience and holineſs, and I will fill it. He that fills the appetite of the young Lions with natural food, will fill the appetite of his Servants with ſpiritual food, which is beſt of all; they ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the goodneſs of his Houſe, and he will make them drink of the River of his pleaſures: (Pſal. 36.8.) He that fills the appetite of the young Lions, will not ſend hungry Souls away empty. We may reſt in much aſſurance that God will deal well with us, both for Soul and Body, while he queſtions Job whether he would do that which himſelf only doth; Wilt thou hunt the prey for the Lion? Or fill the appetite of the young Lions?

Verſe 40. When they couch in their Dens, and abide in the covert to lie in wait.

This Verſe gives a further deſcription of the Lion, whether young or old. Before we had them hunting abroad in the Fields, here we have them couching in their Dens, and abiding in their covert.

When they couch in their Dens.

This couching or bowing down in their Dens, may be upon a three-fold account, and ſo there is a three-fold interpretation of the words.

Firſt, Some taking the Lion for the old Lion and the young Lions for ſuch as are very young, interpret this couching as proceeding from weakneſs; they couch in their Dens, as not being able to go abroad.

Secondly, Others ſay, they couch in their Dens only for reſt and eaſe, having tired themſelves in hunting for their prey.

Thirdly, That they couch in their Dens upon deſign to catch their prey, thus the latter part of the Verſe ſeems to carry it; where 'tis ſaid, they lie in wait. So then, this couching in their Dens, is either from neceſſity, as not being able to go forth; or it is a couching in policy, which I rather pitch upon.

ישח Deprimit geſtus hominis inſidiantis alicui, Druſ.

They couch in their Dens.] As if they were aſleep, as if they minded nothing but their eaſe; yet even then they are buſily minding how to catch their prey. As if the Lord had ſaid, Haſt thou (O Job) taught the Lion that art and cunning, to lie couchant in his Den, that he may ſteal upon Beaſts paſſant, and ſurprize them unawares. They couch in their Dens,

And abide in the Covert to lie in wait.

The word rendred Covert ſignifieth a Tabernacle or Tent in which men abode for a time, and is therefore here oppoſed (as ſome conceive) to the Lions Dens or Houſes ſpoken of in the beginning of the verſe. Beaſts (ſay they) are aware of Lions Dens, and ſo avoid them; but they may paſs unawares by the Coverts and Thickets, where they lie in ambuſh. But I ſuppoſe we need not be thus critical in diſtinguiſhing between Dens and Coverts, both words may ſignifie the ſame place and thing; or at leaſt in both places Lions do the ſame thing, Lie in wait. It is ſaid of the Lord himſelf (Jerem. 25. 38.) he hath forſaken his Covert as a Lion. The meaning of the Prophet was to ſhew the Lords purpoſe to come forth, and tear and rend his enemies by ſome ſore Judgment, as a young Lion that rangeth about for his prey. We read a little before (at the 34. verſe) of the howling of the Shepherds, that is, of the Rulers and Governours, and of the cry of the principal of the flock, that is, of the wealthieſt among the people. When the Lion came forth of his Covert, there was a howling and a cry made; who ſo? The Lion came forth to deſtroy both Sheep and Shepherds. Thus the Lord comes forth, even as a young Lion, full of wrath and fury to deſtroy the wicked: He is ſometimes like a Lion couching in his Den, and abiding in his Covert, but he doth it as the Lion,

To lie in wait.] This expreſſion may have a twofold alluſion. Firſt, To Fowlers and Hunters, who (in ſome caſes) keep out of ſight, that they may with the more advantage take Birds or Beaſts in their ſnares and toils; For in vain (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 1. 17.) the Net is ſpread in the ſight of any Bird. Secondly, To Souldiers, who lie in ambuſh to ſurprize their enemy. Thus do Lions; They (ſaith the Text) couch in their Dens, and abide in the Covert to lie in wait. Here,

First, Taking that interpretation of the words, which ſuppoſeth, the Lion lying down in his Den through age and weakneſs, > Obſerve, The ſtrongeſt Creatures are tamed and weakened by age.

The Lion is the ſtrongeſt among Beaſts, yet he cannot always range in the Fields and hunt for prey, he muſt come to his Den, and keep Houſe there. 'Tis ſo with men, how ſtrong ſoever they have been, yet old age neceſſitates them at laſt to keep Houſe and home. All muſt ſubmit to time, and yield to thoſe infirmities, which old age inevitably brings upon us. Time is called, The eater of things; 'Tis ſo alſo of perſons, that great eater will eat out the ſtrength of the eater himſelf, that is, the Lion, as Sampſon called him in his riddle propoſed to the Philiſtines (Judg. 14. 14.) Time reduceth our ſtrength to weakneſs, our life to death. Time confines us firſt to our Chambers, then to our Beds, and then to our Graves. The Lion muſt give over his hunting and couch in his Den.

Tempus edax rerum.

Secondly, Taking the Lion as politickly abiding in Covert, and waiting for his prey;

> Obſerve, As the Lord gives much ſtrength, ſo much craft to ſome Creatures.

There are Creatures of little ſtrength which have much craft, others have little craft but much ſtrength, in ſome both meet together; and among them we may number the Lion, he is a crafty one as well as a ſtrong one; he hath his Covert, there he waits for his prey. We may parallel men with Beaſts in this regard; among them ſome are ſtrong but not crafty, others are crafty but not ſtrong, and not a few are both. Such David compared to a Lion (Pſal. 10. 4, 8, 9.) The wicked through the pride of his countenance will not ſeek after God: What will he ſeek after then? The eighth and ninth verſes tell us, He ſitteth in the lurking places of the Villages, in the ſecret places doth he murder the innocent, his eyes are privily ſet againſt the poor, he lieth in wait ſecretly, as a Lion in his Den, he lieth in wait to catch the poor, as he doth catch the poor when he draweth him into his Net: He croucheth and humbleth himſelf, that the poor may fall by his ſtrong ones. Thus the ſubtle practices of a wicked man are ſet forth, by the ſubtlety of the Lion. He coucheth and croucheth, he waits for the innocent, he draws him into his Net; he firſts entangles him, and then devours him. David gives a like deſcription of evil men in another place (Pſal. 17. 11, 12.) They have now compaſſed us in our ſteps, they have ſet their eyes bowing down to the Earth; like as a Lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young Lion lurking in ſecret places. Theſe Scriptures plainly ſhew the natural ſubtlety of the Lion, waiting in his Covert that he may do miſchief unawares; and that in this piece of miſchievous policy wicked men are not behind him, they ſhew as plainly.

Thirdly, Whereas in the former verſe the Lion is ſaid to hunt his prey in the Field, and in this to abide in his Covert to lie in wait for it;

> Obſerve, What ſome cannot do by ſtrength they do by craft.

We ſay, of craft or power, 'tis hard to ſay which is moſt dangerous or undeſirable in an enemy. Where theſe two meet, where craft and power, ability and ſubtlety are joined, what will they not do? We may ſay of men, in whom theſe are united, as the Lord ſaid concerning the men of the new World, ſoon after the Flood, who were united in heart and tongue (the people are one, and they have all one language) nothing will be reſtrained from them, which they have imagined to do (Gen. 11. 6.) The Devil is always like a Lion, both ſtrong and ſubtle: He is ſo ſtrong, that he ſometimes hunts his prey (as I may ſay) in open Field, and overcomes by fine force. He is ſo crafty, that at other times he knows 'tis beſt for him to abide in his Covert, and lie in wait to catch Souls. He goeth about like a roaring Lion (ſaith the Apoſtle Peter, 1 Epiſt. 5 8.) but he is craftier than to roar always like a Lion, when he goeth about ſeeking whom he may devour; he often fawns and flatters; he uſeth his wits, and puts tricks upon poor Souls whom he would devour. We (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 2.) are not ignorant of his devices. Chriſt adviſeth all his Diſciples to join the wiſdom of the Serpent, with the innocency of the Dove; ſubtlety and honeſty, craft and innocency, working together, work well, or make good work:- But where there is the ſtrength and craft of a Lion, without a Dove-like integrity, what ſad work do men make? Godly men, or men truly fearing God, ſometimes have the wiſdom of the Serpent, together with their Dove-like innocency; and when to both the former, the Lions ſtrength is joined, what good may they not do? They may do (as we ſay) a World of good in an evil World.

Fourthly, In that the Lion coucheth in his Den, and retireth ſometimes to his Covert; we may take notice of the good providence of God towards man. God hath ordered it, that the Lion coucheth all day in his Den, and is quiet, that men may go out quietly to their labour. The Pſamiſt commends the providence of God in this (Pſalm. 104. 20, 21, 22.) Thou makeſt darkneſs, and it is night, wherein all the Beaſts of the Forreſt do creep forth: The young Lions roar after their prey, and ſeek their meat from God. Thus they are roaring and raging for their prey all night; but how is it with them, or what do they in the day? The next words tell us, The Sun riſeth, they gather themſelves together, and lay them down in their Dens. (Then it follows) Man goeth forth to his work, and to his labour until the evening. Such is the care of God, that he clears Fields and Countries of theſe ravenous Beaſts, that man may go ſafely to his work, and not be troubled. When the Lion comes forth in the day, 'tis uſually to execute ſome Judgment of God; witneſs that of the Prophet, who going out of Gods way, God told him by another Prophet, a Lion ſhall meet thee and tear thee; and ſo it came to paſs, a Lion met him, and executed the Judgment of God upon him, becauſe he went beyond the command he had received from God (1 Kings 13. 24.) We read alſo, that God ſent Lions to vex the people continually, when they fell to Idolatry and falſe worſhip (2 Kings 17. 26.) It was of the Lord that Lions which uſed to keep their Covert in the day time, were ſo bold as to come by day to their Houſes and deſtroy them. And ſuch is the mighty power of God, that though hungry Lions are altogether for prey, yet God can ſtop their mouths, and check their appetite (Dan. 6. 8.) When Daniel was caſt into the Lions Den, amongſt a company of hungry Lions, yet not one touched him, but were as meek to him as ſo many Lambs; whereas no ſooner were his enemies and accuſers let down into that Den, but they brake their bones before they came to the ground. Thus much of the Lion, a King among the Beaſts of the Earth. The Lords next queſtion concerns the Raven, none of the beſt, if not one of the worſt among the Birds of the Air.

Verſe 41. Who provideth for the Raven his food? When his young ones cry unto God, they wander for lack of meat.

As the Lion is a devourer among Beaſts, ſo is the Raven among Birds. The Lion (as was ſaid) is ſo curious, that he will not feed upon a Carcaſe in the way, but the Raven feeds upon any dead or corrupted Body; and that is the reaſon why in many great Cities there's a Law or cuſtom that Ravens neer them, ſhall not be ſhot at nor terrified, becauſe they eat up the filth and Carrion, which might infect the Air, and breed peſtilential diſeaſes.

Now the Lord puts the queſtion, Who provideth for the Raven? As if he had ſaid, I provide not only for the Kingly Lion, but for the Carrion-eating Raven. The Lord made proviſion of food for Lions and Ravens, for all ſorts of Beaſts, and Birds, and creeping things, in the work of Creation; and in his works of providence, he makes all things ready, and brings them to hand for their uſe and ſuſtentation: He, as it were, dreſſeth and diſheth our meat for all his Creatures, and then ſets it before them, that they may eat and be ſatisfied.

Verbum כון notat indulgentiſſimam Creatoris providentiam, non ſolum neceſſaria ſed etiam uſque ad delicias.

Who provideth for the Raven?] The Hebrew word rendred Provideth, hath two ſignifications, which wonderfully ſet forth the care of God towards his Creature: Firſt, the certainty of their proviſion, for the word ſignifies to eſtabliſh; as if the Lord did give them a neceſſary, ſetled, or conſtant diet. Secondly, It notes the ſutableneſs and pleaſingneſs of their food to their nature and conſtitution, yea, to their guſt and appetite; as if the Lord fitted their food, as we ſay, to their tooth or palate, and gave them not only meat, but ſavory meat to them (like that which Iſaac beſpake of his Son Eſau) ſuch as they love; for though the food of Ravens be unpleaſant to us, yet it is pleaſing and toothſom and ſavory to them. What the Lord provides for Ravens, is to them dainties and delicacies; Carrion is ſo to them, becauſe 'tis ſutable to their nature, and ſuch as their ſtomach likes very well. The ſutableneſs of any food to our taſte and palate, makes it delightful to us: What makes ſin, which is as odious as a Carrion or corrupt thing to God and good men, pleaſant to carnal and wicked men, but the ſutableneſs of it to their Nature? They can feed upon ſin as heartily and hungrily, as a Raven doth upon a putrified Carcaſe. And what's the reaſon that the ways of God are ſo pleaſant to a godly man? Is it not becauſe his heart is made (through grace) ſutable to them? To do the will of God is meat and drink to a godly man; but his Soul (being in a right frame) can no more delightfully do, any thing that is ſinfully evil, than he can delight to feed Bodily upon putrefaction or poiſon.

Corvus in Hebræo ערב dictus à colore nigro. Græcè κόραξ ἀ κρώζειν, crocitare.

Who provideth his food for the Raven?] The Hebrew word for a Raven ſignifies blackneſs, darkneſs, or the evening. The Raven is the true Black-bird, a dark-coloured Creature; black as a Raven, is the Scripture language for perfect blackneſs. The Greek word for a Raven, intimates her hoarſe, harſh and unpleaſant cry, or croking. As the coat of the Raven is eminent for a beautiful blackneſs, ſo his note is well known by his unpleaſant and jarring hoarſneſs, The note of the Crow or Raven, ſounds like the Latine, Cras, Cras; in Engliſh, To morrow, to morrow, or the day to come. And hence men, who when called to preſent repentance and forſaking of their ſins, deſire time, and ſay, to morrow, to morrow, are ſaid to reſemble Crows and Ravens, whoſe only ſong is Cras, Cras. 'Tis reported concerning Athanaſius, that walking in the ſtreets of a Heatheniſh or Gentile City, a Raven flew over his head and croked; the Heathens that ſtood by, laught and ſmil'd to ſee the Raven flie and croke ſo near him; and they asked, What ſaid the Raven to thee? He anſwered, The Raven cryed, to morrow, to morrow; for to morrow the Emperor will ſend out ſuch an Edict or Decree, as will put a ſtop to your ſuperſtitious obſervation of Heatheniſh Feaſts: And though he knew nothing of the Emperors purpoſe at that time, to put forth ſuch a Decree, yet the next day there came a command from the Emperor, that they ſhould no more obſerve them: And then the Heathens cryed out againſt Athanaſius, and ſaid that he was a Witch.

Zorom. l. 4.

Further, The Raven is ſo called in our language, from her ravening; her name ſpeaks her nature, as Nabals did his (1 Sam. 25.25.) yet even Ravens are under the Lords inſpection. Who provideth for the Raven his food?

Hence Note, The worſt and vileſt Creatures are under the care of God.

The Lord doth not give Job an inſtance of his care in the people of Iſrael, for whom he provided a long time in Egypt, and whom he fed forty years in the Wilderneſs; nor in Elias, fed by Ravens, but in his feeding Ravens; nor among Fowls, doth he inſtance in the Hawk or Falcon, which are highly prized and fed by Princes; nor in the ſweet ſinging Nightingale, or ſuch like muſical pretty Birds, which men keep choicely and much delight in; but in that hateful and malicious Bird, the croking Raven, whom no man values, but as ſhe eats up the Carrion which might annoy him. Behold then, and wonder at the providence and kindneſs of God, that he ſhould provide food for the Raven, a Creature of ſo diſmal a hue, and of ſo untuneable a tone, a Creature that is ſo odious to moſt men, and ominous to ſome. There is a great providence of God ſeen, in providing for the Ant or Piſmire, who gathers her meat in Summer (Prov. 6.8.) but a greater in the Raven, who though he forgets, or is careleſs to provide for himſelf, yet God provides and layeth up for him. One would think the Lord ſhould ſay of Ravens, let them ſhift for themſelves or periſh; no, the Lord God doth not deſpiſe any work of his hands; the Raven hath his being from God, and therefore the Raven ſhall be provided for by him; not only the fair innocent Dove, but the ugly Raven hath his meat from God. As the Lord feeds not only Doves, but Ravens, in kind, ſo he feeds not only Doves, but Ravens, in a figure; that is, he feeds not only Dove-like or innocent men, but Raven-like or wicked men. (Matth. 5.45.) He cauſeth his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth Rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt: Thus he feeds Ravens in the likeneſs of men. Such men whoſe minds feed upon Carrion, the Lord feeds their Bodies with excellent dainties, they fare delicioſly every day, as the rich Glutton is ſaid to do, who was but a Raven. The Lord, I ſay, doth not only provide for his better and more excellent ones, but he provides for the bad, for the evil, for the wicked; ſuch an indulgent Father and Provider is God towards all his Creatures. We find this reported to the praiſe of God (Pſal. 104. 10,11.) He ſendeth the Springs into the Valleys, which run among the Hills; they give drink to every Beaſt of the Field; the wild Aſſes quench their thirſt. And again (Pſal. 145.15,16.) The eyes of all wait upon (or look unto) thee, and thou giveſt them their meat in due ſeaſon: Thou openeſt thy hand, and ſatisfieſt the deſire (that is, the hunger and thirſt) of every living thing. He that gives life to all, upholds the lives of all. As it ſhews the great power of God, that he hath made ſome living Creatures (the Angels and Souls of men) which need no meat, ſo it is a very great glory that he provides meat for all that need it. God hath a great Houſhold, and he keeps a plentiful Houſe; the meaneſt of his Houſhold have food convenient for them.

Now, Doth the Lord provide a Table for the Ravens? Remember Chriſts Inference from it; Then much more will he provide a Table for his Children who fear him, and truſt upon him. Behold, (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 6.26.) the Fowls of the Air; for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into Barns, yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them: Are ye not much better than they? And that which Chriſt ſpake in general there concerning the Fowls of the Air, he in Luke 12. (verſ. 14.) ſpake particularly of the Raven; Conſider the Ravens, for they neither ſow nor reap, &c. and God feedeth them; how much more are ye better (as if the Lord had ſaid, than the Fowls?) Ye are much better then the beſt of Fowls; then how much better than the worſt, the Ravens? and be ye aſſured, that as much as ye are better than the Ravens, by ſo much is my care for you, greater than for the Ravens. As God is the Saviour of all, eſpecially of thoſe that believe (1 Tim. 4.10.) ſo he is a provider for all, but eſpecially for thoſe that believe. The Lord, who alike cares for all, doth not care for all alike, there would be much inequality in that equality. As Creatures vary in their kinds and degrees, ſo the Lord (who is a God of Judgment) varies both the kind and degree of his care towards the Creature. Therefore we may conclude; Doth God put forth any kind or degree of care for Ravens? Doubtleſs then he will take care of his beloved Children and faithful Servants.

There's no temptation with which the Children of God are more oppreſt, than with this; What they ſhall eat? And what they ſhall drink? And wherewithal ſhall they and theirs be clothed? Nor doth any thing caſt them upon more dangerous Rocks than theſe diſtruſtful Queries; How ſhall we live? And who ſhall provide for us, eſpecially in a hard and dear year? But may we not ſtand amazed to hear ſuch Queries proceed out of their mouths, who have heard of this word which once proceeded out of Chriſts mouth, that God feedeth the Ravens? Who believing that, can but believe that God will feed him! Nor doth the Lord provide for and feed the old Raven only, but his young ones alſo. As it follows,

Avis inauſpicata.

When his young ones cry unto God.

The Raven in the former part of the verſe, is the old one that hath young ones. How can that feed the young, that cannot feed himſelf, but by Gods providing? As if the Lord had ſaid, As it is not by thy providence, O Job, but by mine, that the old Ravens are fed; ſo that the young ones being early forſaken of the old, and wanting skill to ſhift for themſelves, wandring here and there, have their cries (which Nature hath taught them to put up to God in their neceſſity) heard and anſwered with ſupply of food.

The Hebrew is, When his Children cry unto God; Children are properly the young ones of men, yet the young ones of any Creature may be called Children.

The word rendred to cry, notes a very ſtrong cry for help for food. The young ones of the Raven being pincht with hunger, make a loud confuſed cry for food; but to whom do they cry? The Text ſaith, They cry

שוע Eſt opem & ſalutem ingenti vociferatione poſtulare. Clamor ob neceſſitatem emiſſus, petitionem imitatur. Theodoret.

Unto God.] No Creature can properly be ſaid to cry unto God, but the rational Creature; and there's none among the rational Creatures that indeed cry unto God, but thoſe that have faith: How then is it ſaid, the Ravens young ones cry unto God?

Non novit omnino invocare Deum niſi anima rationalis. Auguſt. in Pſal. 136.

I anſwer, Firſt, They are ſaid to cry to God, becauſe man hears them not, or if he do, he regards them not; what man regards the cry of a young Raven? Therefore they cry to God if to any, who alone takes notice of their cry.

Secondly, They cry to God, not properly, but equivalently; they cannot be imagined to make any formal or direct prayers to God in their neceſſities, but their neceſſities which force them to cry, have the force of a cry, or of a prayer unto God.

Ego haud ſecus exauditos paſco, quam ſi ad me vociferentur. Bez.

Thirdly, They may be ſaid to cry unto God, becauſe God takes or interprets their cry when hungry, as a prayer to himſelf: And God may be ſaid to hear their cry, becauſe he provides for them, and helps them, as he doth thoſe who put up powerful prayers to him. There is in all Creatures a deſire of that which is needful for them, or proper to them, and when that is wanting they cry, that is, make ſome ſignification of their want. And as all young ones are apt to cry (that being all they can do) for food; ſo the Scripture, as here ſo elſewhere repreſents young Ravens crying more than other Creatures (Pſal. 147. 9.) He giveth to the Beaſt his food, and to the young Ravens which cry. The Beaſts are not ſaid to cry for food when God gives it them, but the young Ravens are. Crying ſeems to be the property of young Ravens, as if the leaſt lack of food made them cry.

But how come young Ravens to be in ſuch want of food, that they ſhould cry for it? And when they cry, why are they not ſaid to cry to their Parents (if I may ſo ſpeak) or to the old ones, but to God for meat? In anſwer to theſe Queries;

Firſt, Some Naturaliſts ſay, the Raven is a forgetful Creature, and leaves her young ones altogether unprovided of food, and therefore (as the laſt reſort of all helpleſs ones) they are ſuppoſed to cry unto God.

Secondly, Say others, the Raven is not only a forgetful, but an unnatural Creature. Ravens have not thoſe bowels of Natural compaſſion to their young ones, which other Creatures have, who will preſently beſtir themſelves to get food for their young ones; therefore ſome ſay, that their young ones, as it were, cry to God of the impiety and unnaturalneſs of the old ones, in not providing for them, and in a manner accuſe them for it. The Apoſtle ſaith, He that provides not for thoſe of his own Houſe, hath denied the faith, and is worſe than an Infidel. A Beaſt will provide for his own, and moſt Birds provide for their young, but the Raven provides not for his own young ones; and therefore his young ones are brought in, as crying or complaining to the Lord of their Parents unnatural aſtorgy, or want of pity: And indeed Parents, who do not provide for their own Houſe, may juſtly be put among the Ravens. Remember (by the way) the power of God, who could make Ravens feed Elias, and be kind to him (1 Kings 17. 16.) though naturally they are cruel to their own kind, and refuſe to feed their young ones.

Chryſoſtomi ſententia eſt, non ob ullam alboris ſpeciem, ſed ex ipſa parentum crudelitate pullos adhuc implumes negligi & deſeri. Illis natura author dignam vicem rependi imperat; nam filii genitores ſuos in ſenectute minime alunt. Ut Ælianus dixit κακοῦ κόρακος κακὸν ᾠόν. Dicitur quòd corvus pullos non paſcit, donec ſuos deprehendens plumis nigreſcere viderit, unde ſeptem diebus iis cibos non miniſtrat, ſed à Deo ſuſtentantur per naturalem vim iis inditam. Aquin.

Thirdly, There's another reaſon given by Naturaliſts, why Ravens feed not their young ones: For when the Raven hath hatcht her young, they look whitiſh, which the old ones cannot abide, being themſelves black, and therefore the Raven forbears to feed his young ones for ſeven days (ſaith my Author) that is, till their feathers begin to grow black, whereby he knows them to be his own, being loth to bring up a ſpurious brood; ſo that all this time of their eſtrangement and forbearance, the Lord feeds their young ones, ſome ſay, with a dew from Heaven, or with little flies (ſay others) bred out of their dung. But I ſhall not ſtay upon theſe things, eſpecially conſidering that they who profeſſedly write of the nature and manners, both of Beaſts and Birds, are very ſilent, as to any ſuch obſervations concerning the Raven; yet becauſe ſo grave an Author as is noted in the Margin inſiſts upon this latter reaſon, take this Note from it.

Sed apud authores hiſtoriæ naturalis hujus rei teſtimonium vix invenitur. Lege Ariſt. l. 9. Hiſt. Animal. c. 31. Plin. l. 10. c. 12. Ælian. l. 15. c. 39. Hieronymus ad illud (Pſal. 147. 9.) ex Philoſophorum ſententia ait, è cœli rore vivere corvorum pullos derelictos.

Every one loves its like.

A Raven doth not love her young, till ſhe perceives them in her own likeneſs. It is ſaid alſo of the Eagle, that when her young are firſt hatcht, ſhe will not own them for hers, till having held them up to the Sun, ſhe finds they out-face it; and here 'tis ſaid, the Raven will not own her young till they are black. Now, if it be thus in Nature, if it be a truth, that the Raven is not delighted in her young till they grow black, 'tis doubtleſs true in Spirituals, like to like. God loves none with delight, but holy and pure ones, and the more holy and pure any are, the more he loves them; the reaſon is, becauſe himſelf is altogether infinitely pure and holy. Where God ſees moſt of his own image, which is purity and holineſs, there he loves moſt, and for ſuch he will certainly provide, ſuch he will ſurely feed.

But, which way ſoever the young ones of the Raven come to want food, whether it be through the forgetfulneſs, or the unnaturalneſs of the old Raven, or becauſe they are hatcht white, upon what account ſoever (I ſay) it is, that they come to want food, the Text ſaith they are in ſuch want, that they cry to God, yea, that

They wander for lack of meat.

This is a further evidence of their diſtreſs, they cry when they are in their neſt, and there God provides for them; and when they wander (from their neſt) for lack of meat, God feeds them too. Some reſtrain this wandring to a narrow compaſs, and ſay, 'tis only in their neſt, where they ſtruggle and are unquiet for want of meat; but this their wandring for want of meat, may be conceived to be out of the neſt, rather than in it; for a neſt being a ſtrait place, it cannot be congruouſly ſaid, that the yong ones wander while they are in it. And therefore, which clears the matter ſufficiently, Naturaliſts tell us, That when the Raven hath fed his young in the neſt, till they are well fledged and able to flie abroad, then he thruſts them out of the neſt, and will not let them abide there, but puts them to get their own living. Now when theſe young ones are upon their firſt flight from their neſt, and are little acquainted with means how to help themſelves with food, then the Lord provides food for them. 'Tis ſaid by credible Authorities, that the Raven is marvellous ſtrict and ſevere in this; for as ſoon as his young ones are able to provide for themſelves, he will not fetch any more food for them; yea, ſome affirm, the old one will not ſuffer them to ſtay in the ſame Country where they were bred; and if ſo, then they muſt needs wander. We ſay proverbially, Need makes the old wife trot; we may ſay, and The young ones too. It hath been, and poſſibly is, the practice of ſome Parents toward their Children, who as ſoon as they can ſhift for themſelves, and are fit in any competency to get their bread, they turn them out of doors, as the Raven doth his young ones out of the neſt. Now ſaith the Lord in the Text, When the young ones of the Raven are at this pinch, that they are turned off, and wander for lack of meat, who then provides for them? Do not I the Lord? Do not I who provide for the old Raven, provide for his young ones, both while they abide in the neſt, and when they wander for lack of meat?

Locis arctioribus, ubi non ſatis cibi pluribus ſit, duo tantum incolunt; & ſuos pullos cum jam poteſtas volandi eſt primum nido ejiciunt deinde regione tota expellunt. Ariſt. l. 9. de Hiſtor. animal. c. 31.

Hence Note, Firſt, (which was in part toucht before.) The providence of God extends it ſelf to all, even the meaneſt of his Creatures.

As ſome deny providence, ſo others reſtrain it to greater matters, or more eminent Creatures, as if it were true of Jehovah, which Heathens ſaid of their Idol Jupiter; He is not at leiſure to mind little things. But the Lord Jehovah diſdains not to look after the leaſt things, he looks into

Birds Neſts, to ſee they want nothing, or to ſupply their wants. Young Ravens are inconſiderable Creatures, yet the Lord remembers and conſiders them. And if God take care of young Ravens, then I may again infer, he will much more take care of their young ones or Children, who are themſelves heirs of the promiſe, the Spiritual ſeed of Abraham.

Secondly, In that young Ravens are here ſaid to cry unto God,

Obſerve, Extream want or neceſſity will put meer Nature upon praying or crying to God.

The worſt of men, yea, the very Beaſts will pray in their kind, or after their manner, when they are pinched with extremities, either of want or fear. The Heathen Mariners in Jonah, being [illegible]ly diſtreſſed, cryed every one to his god. There may be [illegible] cry of prayer to God in the mouth; where there is no grace in the heart. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 10. Whoſoever calleth upon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved; but then it muſt be in faith, for ſo it follows there, How ſhall they call on him on whom they have not believed? Many call upon God, that ſhall not be ſaved (Pſal. 18. 41.) They cryed, but there was none to ſave them, even to the Lord, but he anſwered them not. The cry of graceleſs men is ſeldomer heard than the cry of reaſonleſs Beaſts or Birds.

Hence Note, Thirdly, The Lord hears the cry of Nature when 'tis in want.

He hears the cry of Beaſts, and he hears the cry of Ravens. Though wicked men ſtop their ears, and will not hear his commands, yet he ſometimes hears their crys in outward troubles, and doth them good many ways.

Hence alſo we may infer, If the Lord hears the cry of Nature in Beaſts, and Birds, and bad men, how much more will he hear the cry of grace, and of the Spirit of Adoption, crying Abba father, in his Children?

If he hears the croaking cry of young Ravens, who have no intention to pray to him, how much more will he hear the believing cry, the deep groans and ſighs of Saints, who ſet their faces purpoſely to pray unto him, and ſeek his face. This poor man cryed (a man rich in grace doubtleſs he was) and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles.

Note, Fourthly, If you would have any ſupply in your wants, you muſt ask it of God.

When you are in want, whitherſoever you go, if you go not to God, you go to a wrong Door: The Ravens tell you whither to go when you are in want; it is not to this or that Creature, to this or that means, to this friend or that, but you muſt go to God for help; and if we have help any where elſe, and not in God, our help is worſe than our diſtreſs. Wants are an evil of affliction, but the help we get out of wants in any way, with neglect of God, is an evil of ſin, therefore cry to God. The Lions are ſaid to ſeek their meat from God, and here the Ravens are ſaid to cry unto God; the young Lions and the Ravens, will condemn thoſe, who in their diſtreſſes do not cry to God the fountain, but run to broken Ciſterns. It was the ſin of that good King Aſa, that in his diſeaſe he ſought not to God, but to the Phyſicians (2 Chron. 16. 12.) not that Aſa had caſt off prayer to God, or did not at all ſeek unto him (it cannot be that ſo good a man as the Scripture reports him, ſhould ſo much at once forget God and himſelf) but the meaning is, he was very cold and negligent in calling upon God for help, and over-confident of help by his Phyſicians.

Laſtly, Conſider, God provides for the young Ravens, when the old ones leave them, or put them out of their Neſt.

Hence Note, When neareſt Relations in Nature leave us, God will not.

When they whoſe duty it is to take care of us, prove unnatural, like the Raven to his young ones, then God will take care of us. When my Father and Mother forſook me (ſaith David, Pſal. 27. 9, 10.) then the Lord took me up. The Lord who feeds out-caſt Ravens, will give entertainment to his out-caſt Servants. (Pſal. 68. 5.) A Father of the Fatherleſs, and a Judg of the Widows, is God in his holy habitation. They that are fatherleſs by their Parents deſerting of them, or fatherleſs by the deceaſe of their Parents, God (they committing themſelves to him) will be a father unto them, he will do the office of a father to them, that is, provide for them. Thus much of the Lion, chief among the Beaſts of the Earth, and of the Raven, one of the worſt among the Fowls of the Air. The wiſdom of God hath choſen out theſe Creatures, that in teſtifying his care of them, he might convince Job, that he had not caſt off the care of him, but would provide for him, poſſibly in unknown ways of providence, as he did for the Lions and the Ravens.

CHAP. XXXIX. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth, or canſt thou mark when the Hinds do calve?

Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil? Or knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth?

They bow themſelves, they bring forth their young ones, they caſt out their ſorrows.

Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with Corn? They go forth, and return not unto them.

IN the former context, which was the cloſe of the thirty-eighth Chapter. The Lord gave Job an account of his care in providing food for the Lion, and the young Lions; for the Raven and his young ones. In this context and Chapter the Lord proceeds to ſhew his care and providence concerning both the production and ſuſtentation of ſeveral other Creatures, of whom men take no care nor make any proviſion for at all. The wild Goats and the Hind, the wild Aſs and the Unicorn.

There are ſome Creatures which live under mans inſpection, and are provided for by him, being tame and ſerviceable; there are others which have no commerce (as I may ſay) with man, but are ſavage, living at large in the Fields and Forreſts, upon Hills and Mountains, yet theſe are preſerved in their generations and increaſe, as well as thoſe that are under the eye and daily care of man. The wild Goats are preſerved as well as the Sheep, and the Hinds of the Forreſt as well as the Calves of the Stall. In and by all theſe examples the Lord would have Job take ſpecial notice, that his providence extendeth both to the feeding or nouriſhing of all kinds of Creatures, as alſo to their births and bringing forth, for the preſervation of their ſeveral kinds.

So then, the providence of God is here magnified in continuing and multiplying ſeveral ſorts of four footed Beaſts of the Earth and winged Fowls of the Air; ſome of which being tame are kept by the care of man; others being wild and avoiding the preſence of man (he ſcarce knowing the Nature of them, nor having any ſervice by them) are perpetuated in their kinds by the only care of God.

In theſe four verſes there are two things in general, about which the Lord holds forth his care of theſe ſavage Creatures. Firſt, About the bringing forth of their young ones. Secondly, About the bringing up of their young ones. The bringing forth of their young ones, we have in the three firſt verſes of this Chapter; the bringing up of their young ones, we have in verſe 4.

About the bringing forth of their young ones the Text ſpeaks two things. Firſt, The ſeaſon of it; and ſecondly, The painful manner of it.

The ſeaſon of it in the two firſt verſes. Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth? (verſe 1.) and then of the Hinds (verſe 2.) Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil?

The painful manner of bringing forth their young is expreſſed at verſe 3. They bow down themſelves, they bring forth their young ones, they caſt out their ſorrows.

The bringing up and growth of their young ones is given (*verſ.*4.) Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with Corn,&c. Thus we have the general ſcope and parts of this context. I ſhall now deal with the particulars.

Hæc & ſequentia verba per Synecdochen intelligenda ſunt, pro eo quod eſt totam adminiſtrationem earum obtinere. Jun.

עת Tempus opportunum ſeu idoneum.

יעלה Rupicapra à עלה ſcandit, aſcendit, quod montes & rupes aſcendit.

Pendentem ſumma capream de rupe videbis. Caſuram ſperes, decipit illa canes. Martial.

Ibices quaſi avices, eo quod inſtar avium ardua & excelſa habitant.

Verſe 1. Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth?

The firſt queſtion concerns the wild Goats, and the ſeaſon of their bringing forth.

Knoweſt thou the time?] Theſe words intend more than a bare naked knowledg of the time, they take in the knowledg of the whole diſpoſal or adminiſtration of God, concerning the wild Goats in their bringing forth.

Knoweſt thou the time? The word rendred time, ſignifies the opportune time, the fit time, the appointed time; knoweſt thou the time or that time,

When the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth?

What theſe Goats here called wild Goats, and wild Goats of the Rock, are, is commonly known. The word which we render wild Goats, ſignifies in the Hebrew aſcending or clambering, becauſe Goats are clambering Creatures, getting up the ſteepeſt Rocks, and aſcending the height of Hills and Mountains, which they do many times exceeding dangerouſly, ſeeming rather to hang by their feet than to go upon them. Thus the old Poet fancied them, when he ſaid, You may ſee the wild Goats hanging upon the Rock, you may hope ſhe will tumble down preſently; but ſhe deceives the hunter and his hounds; though ſhe ſeems to hang uncertainly, yet ſhe keeps her footing ſteddily. The Latines have a word ſignifying wild Goats, which criticks ſay, comes from another Latine word ſignifying a Bird or flying fowl, becauſe Goats may be ſaid rather to fly than go upon thoſe craggy places, or rather to uſe wings than feet. Such are the Creatures here called wild Goats, and that with an addition, wild Goats

Of the Rocks.] Becauſe they ſpecially delight in Rocky places, or becauſe they breed and bring forth in Rocks. It is ſaid (1 Sam.24.2.) that Saul in his purſuit of David, came with a ſelect Army of three thouſand men, to ſeek him and his men upon the Rocks of the wild Goats; which Scripture fitly anſwers this which calls them wild Goats of the Rock. Saul did not ſeek David only in the plains and valleys, where flocks of Sheep feed; but upon the craggy Rocks and Precipices, where wild Goats take up their Quarters or uſe to feed. This ſhewed his implacable rage, and revengful Spirit againſt an innocent perſon, that rather than not take him and have his will on him, he would undertake an expedition not only tedious but very hazardous to himſelf and his Army. Wrathful men will not only not ſpare others, but not themſelves. But to the Text, Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock

Bring forth, that is, their young ones.

הולל à חול Verbum ipſum quod dolere ſignificat ſumitur pro parturire. Merc.

The word tranſlated bring forth ſignifies pain and ſorrow. There is ſo much pain in bringing forth, that bringing forth and pain may well be ſignified by one word. The pains of the wild Goats in bringing forth here implyed, are expreſly ſpoken of at the third verſe.

But why did the Lord enquire of Job here, whether he knew the time, the exact time of their bringing forth? Is that a ſecret? I anſwer, doubtleſs it is a ſecret, and ſuch a ſecret as few are acquainted with. Wild Goats come little under the eye or ſight of men in that work; they bringing forth upon inacceſſable places, craggy Rocks and Mountains, men cannot without difficulty reach that piece of knowledg. And therefore the Lord might well ask of Job, Knoweſt thou the time when th[illegible]d Goats of the Rock bring forth? I may ſay alſo, the Lo[illegible] puts this familiar queſtion to Job, that he might the more awaken him into the conſideration of his own weakneſs, and utter inability to find out the ſecret of the other works. As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou canſt not diſcover ſo much as the birth of the wild Goats, how then canſt thou find out the births of my wonderful providences? My providences bring forth wonderful births, and how much more unknowable by thee than the birth and bringing forth of the wild Goats. Thus the Lord would check his curioſity; he who was unable to give him an account concerning the ſtate of thoſe poor Creatures, muſt not think himſelf able to pry into the great and unſearchable works of God, in the amazing products of his providence towards the Children of men.

Gregor. l. 30. Mor. c. 16.

Before I paſs from theſe words it will not be unprofitable to mind the Reader, how (as one of the Ancients hath hinted) we may moralize or ſpiritualize this Text, there being much of the diſpoſition or condition of a godly man, eſpecially of a faithful Teacher, typed or fairly repreſented in the nature and qualities of theſe wild Goats.

Firſt, As theſe wild Goats ſeek both their food and reſt, their repaſt and refuge in Rocks; ſo the godly abide and dwell in the Rock, that is, in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, they look to him alone both for refuge and refreſhing, both for comfort and ſafety while they are in this World. Chriſt is the Rock upon which the Church is built, (Matth.16.18.) And as the ſtate of the true Church in general, ſo of every true believer, is built upon this unmoveable Rock the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Secondly, As the Rocks ſo the Mountains are much deſired by the wild Goats (Pſal.104.18.) The high Hills are a refuge for the wild Goats. Thus David was eying the Hills for help (Pſal. 121.1.) I will lift up mine eyes to the Hills, from whence cometh my help? What were theſe Hills? Surely, neither the material nor metaphorical Hills of this World, of which latter the people of God ſpake (Jer. 3. 23.) diſclaimingly, Truly in vain is ſalvation hoped for from the Hills, and from the multitude of Mountains, that is, from the greateſt power of man or men. What the Hills were to which David lifted up his eyes for help, himſelf tells us at the ſecond verſe of that Pſalm, My help commeth from the Lord, which made Heaven and Earth. As the affections of a godly man are ſet upon the things above, not upon things below (Col. 3. 2.) ſo his confidences are ſet upon God who is above, not upon men here below.

Thirdly, Theſe wild Goats are very agil and active Creatures, much in motion, full of life, full of ſpirits; and ſo they reſemble a godly man, he is a man of motion, of ſpiritual motion; and he deſires his motions and ſpeed may be more and more ſpeedy in the ways of God. As David reſolved to run the ways of Gods Commandments, when God ſhould pleaſe to enlarge his heart; ſo doubtleſs he prayed, that God would enlarge his heart to run thoſe ways. And how often did he pray for quickening grace and livelineſs, that being delivered from a ſlow, dull, flegmatick Spirit, he might be active and full of holy fire about the things, and for the things of God.

Fourthly, Wild Goats of the Rocks, in thoſe Countries where they abound, are much purſued and diſquieted by hunt-men, as that paſſage which I before quoted from a Heathen Poet intimates; ſo good men, the beſt of men are often hunted and diſturbed in this World, there are hunters of men, as well as hunters of Beaſts. Nimrod was a mighty hunter (*Gen.*10.9.) he was a hunter of men. Saul hunted David even as a wild Goat on the Rocks, or as a Partridg on the Mountains.

Fifthly, They who hunt the wild Goats are at a very dangerous pleaſure, they often fall upon the Rocks, and ſometimes fall from the Rocks. Is it not ſo with thoſe who without cauſe purſue good men? Have they not a dangerous ſervice of it? Get they not many a fall? The wicked (ſaith David, Pſal. 37.12, 13.) plotteth, or (as the Margin hath it) practiſeth againſt the righteous, he gnaſheth upon him with his teeth. But ſhall it go well with him who doth this evil? The next words anſwer, The Lord ſhall laugh at him, for he ſeeth that his day is coming. What day? Surely a black day, even the day of his deſtruction; which is yet further confirmed in the 14. and 15. verſes of the ſame Pſalm. The wicked have drawn out the Sword, and have bent their bow to caſt down the poor and needy, and to ſlay ſuch as be of upright converſation, or the upright of way. But ſhall this end well with them? Or ſhall it be well with them in the end? The next words tell us what their end ſhall be, even this, which is a dreadful end, Their Sword ſhall enter into their own heart, and their bows ſhall be broken.

Sixthly, 'Tis obſerved of theſe wild Goats, that when they ſeem to be very near falling from the Rock and high places, yet they fall not. and that though they fall they take little or no hurt at all. Some ſay they have a natural art to ſave themſelves, they know how to fall upon their feet, and ſo eſcape without harm. This alſo is applicable to the caſe of godly men, they are often near falling, yet they do not fall, and when they fall they take no hurt; they have a divine art to preſerve themſelves; and 'tis a truth, that though they do receive hurt in the fleſh, yet their Spirit or better part takes no hurt. Though a good man fall (into affliction or temptation) he ſhall not (ſaith David, Pſal.37.24.) be utterly caſt down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. Yea, though he falleth (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 24. 16.) ſeven times (that is, often, into affliction, 'tis true alſo of his falling into ſin) yet he riſeth again, out of affliction by deliverance, out of ſin by repentance. With reſpect to the former, the Church warned her inſulting enemy (Mich. 7.8.) Rejoyce not againſt me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I ſhall ariſe. Babylon ſhall fall and riſe no more; but though Sion may fall, yet ſhe ſhall aſſuredly riſe again.

Laſtly, It is ſaid of the wild Goats, that when they receive hurt, they, by a natural inſtinct, ſeek out the Herb Betony, growing among the Rocks and upon Mountains, which gives a preſent and perfect cure to their bruiſes or hurts. Thus when good men receive hurt in and from the evil World, they have ſome herb or other, ſome comfort or other for their cure; they go to the Word of God, to the Scriptures, there they find Medicine for all their ſickneſſes, Betony for all their bruiſes, and a Salve for every ſore. Thus we may ſpiritualize our meditations upon theſe wild Creatures the Goats of the Rocks, in alluſion to the ſtate of godly men in this life Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rock bring forth?

Or canſt thou mark when the Hinds do calve?

שמר Solicitudinem & diligentiam connotat.

Here's another ſort of wild ones, the Hind. Canſt thou mark? The word imports the moſt ſtrict and heedful marking; 'tis uſed by Jacob (Gen. 37. 11.) when Joſeph had told his dream, his Brethren envied him, but his Father obſerved the ſaying, that is, he marked what his Son had ſaid. The word is often uſed to note our dutiful keeping or heeding the commands of God, which ſhould be done with the greateſt ſtrictneſs, care and obſervation. Now ſaith the Lord to Job, Canſt thou mark (or obſerve) when the Hinds do calve? As if the Lord had ſaid, Doſt thou keep their reckoning exactly? Art thou able to tell the day and hour when they will calve? The word rendred Hind comes from a root ſignifying ſtrength. Hinds are ſtrong, though timorous and fearful Creatures; and for their fearfulneſs they have a help beſides their ſtrength, that is, their ſpeed or ſwiftneſs; and though their ſtrength doth not ſerve them ſufficiently to ſtand and make head againſt their purſuers, yet it ſerves them (as we may ſay) to ſhew their purſuers a fair pair of heels, or to run from them and eſcape their danger. Canſt thou mark when the Hinds

אילה Cervus.

Do calve?] It is the ſame word in the Original, which in the former part of the verſe is Tranſlated to bring forth; but becauſe that ſpecial word calving is more proper to Hinds, therefore we wave the general ſenſe bringing forth, which is applicable to any kind of Beaſts; and take this, not rendring as before, when the Hinds bring forth, but when they calve. The Hind is a wild Beaſt often ſpoken of in Scripture, and well known in Nature; the male we commonly call a Stagg or Hart, of which Naturaliſts obſerve two things.

Mas cum pinguerit, longè ſeceſſit, ut qui pondere ſuæ corpulentiæ capi ſe poſſe facile ſentiat. Ariſt. l.9. c.5. de natura animalium.

Firſt, That perceiving himſelf to grow fat in the latter end of Summer, and being conſcious of his own inability to help himſelf by flight, he retires naturally to covert in ſecret places, that ſo he may be free from the purſuit of hunters.

Secondly, (ſay they) When he hath caſt his horn, then alſo he retires and gets into the thicket, as far from ſight as he can, being ſenſible he hath loſt his arms, his defence, and is therefore unwilling to come abroad where danger is, till his head be grown again, and he furniſhed with weapons for his own defence.

Cum ſua amiſerit arma, cavit ne inermis reperiatur. Ariſt. ubi ſupra.

The Hind in the Text is the female; and the Scripture ſpeaks of the Hind in a two-fold alluſion. Firſt, In alluſion to Chriſt. Secondly, In alluſion to thoſe that are Chriſts.

Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is often alluded to under this name, and that in a three-fold reſpect.

Firſt, For his ſwiftneſs and ſpeedineſs in coming to the relief and help of his Church (Cant. 28.9.) Behold, he cometh leaping upon the Mountains, and skipping upon the Hills; my beloved is like a Roe, or young Hart, or Hind, 'tis the ſame word. His leaping and skipping notes firſt, His chearfulneſs. Secondly, His ſpeedineſs in coming. The Mountains and Hills upon which he leaps and skips, note the great obſtacles and difficulties, which ſtand in his way when he comes to help his Church, his beloved Spouſe. Again (Cant. 8.13.) Be thou like the young Roe, or young Hart upon the Mountains of Spices: The Church deſcribes the gracious haſt which ſhe deſires Jeſus Chriſt would make to help, comfort, and relieve her, by the ſpeedy running of the young Hart.

Secondly, Jeſus Chriſt is ſo compared with reſpect to his lovingneſs; that's the Epithete which Solomon gives the Hind (Prov. 5.19.) Let her (thy Wife) be as the loving Hind and pleaſant Roe. Now as the Wife ſhould be tendered by her Husband as a loving Hind, ſo Jeſus Chriſt is like the Hind for his exceeding lovingneſs to his Spouſe or Wife. Chriſt is ſo full of love, that he is called love it ſelf. One of the Ancients ſpeaking of Chriſt dying, ſaid My love was crucified.

Thirdly, Jeſus Chriſt is ſhadowed by the Hind, with reſpect to his ſufferings, for he was hunted as a Hind with Hounds, with blood-Hounds, with the Hell-Hounds of this World, the worſt of wicked men. Therefore it is remarkable, that in the 22. Pſalm, which is throughout a propheſie of Chriſt (the firſt words being the laſt he ſpake in this World, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?) The title of that Pſalm is, To the chief muſician, upon Aijeleh Sahar; and if you would know what that ſignifies, look into the Margin of your larger Bibles, there you ſhall find, The Hind of the morning. Hunters uſe to ſingle out that ſpecial Deer, Hart or Hind, early in the morning, which they purpoſe for game that day; ſignifying that Jeſus Chriſt, who is ſo much ſpoke of in that Pſalm, was a Hind, not only ſorely and fiercely, but early hunted by wicked men to death.

Again, The Scripture ſpeaks of the Hind, with reſpect unto godly men.

Firſt, As to the freeneſs and chearfulneſs of their Spirits, in the ways and things of God. The Prophet (Iſa. 35. 6.) ſhews how it ſhall be with thoſe that receive the Goſpel, though they have been lame, impotent cripples before, not able to take one ſtep God-ward, yet, ſaith he, The lame ſhall leap as a Hart, or as a Hind; that is, they ſhall exceedingly rejoyce at the receiving of the Goſpel, and be very active in the obedience of it.

Secondly, As to that exceeding thirſt, ſtrong appetite or deſire, which true believers have to and after Jeſus Chriſt, who is the living water, the water of life. Thus David ſpake of himſelf (Pſal. 42. 1.) As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, ſo panteth my Soul after thee, O God. Some render, as the ſhe Hart, that is, the Hind, panteth after the water-brooks, &c. When David would expreſs the exceeding ardency of his Souls thirſt after Chriſt, he compares it to the thirſt of a hunted Hart or Hind.

Thirdly, The Hind is very ſwift of foot; ſo are believers: As they have ſtrong deſires, ſo ſpeedy purſuits after Jeſus Chriſt. David had a holy confidence, that God would make him ſwift in Spirit, when he ſaid (Pſal. 18. 33.) The Lord ſhall make my feet like Hinds feet; that is, he will make me very active, agile, and nimble, not only for the avoiding of corporal evils, but alſo in following of ſpiritual good things.

Fourthly, The Hind loves high places, or to be and breath in the freſh Air. Thus the Prophet Habakkuk ſpeaks of himſelf (Hab. 3. 19.) The Lord will make my feet like Hinds feet, he will make me walk upon my high places. He means not the high places of worldly preferment or power, but of peace and ſafety; nor either of them, ſo much as thoſe truly high places of a holy life and joy, in ſpiritual meditation and converſation, to which we reſort by the wings of faith in, and love unto God. Upon theſe high places thou wilt make me to walk. As if the Prophet had ſaid, I ſhall go lightly and ſweetly on in my journey to Heaven, having my Soul ſupplied and ſuppled (as it were) with the oil of ſpiritual joy and gladneſs. As it is ſaid of Jacob (Gen. 29. 1. after that he had that bleſſed Viſion at Bethel, in the cloſe of the twenty-eighth Chapter) He went on his journey; or (as we put in the Margin) He lift up his feet; his feet were like Hinds feet, lith and nimble for his journey, going on in faith towards God, and in the light of his countenance.

Fifthly, It is obſerved by Naturaliſts, that Hinds are very charitable and helpful one to another; and they give that ſpecial inſtance, when ſwimming over any River or deep water, the ſecond is ſupported by the firſt, and the third by the ſecond, and ſo to the laſt they help one another over; which doth excellently ſhadow the uſefulneſs that ſhould be among Chriſtians, and their helpfulneſs mutual; they ſhould be as Harts and Hinds always in this reſpect, and then moſt when they come into the Rivers and deep waters of ſorrow and trouble, then they ſhould ſupport and bear up each one his Brother. The Apoſtles word is (Gal. 6. 2.) Bear one anothers burdens, and ſo fulfil the Law of Chriſt. The burdens which he there intends, are not only the infirmities which are in us, but the afflictions and troubles which poſſibly we may at any time be in. And again (Phil. 2. 4.) Let not every man mind his own things, but let him mind the things which are anothers; that is, let him be helpful to others in outward things, much more let him be helpful to others in ſpiritual things. Thus the Scripture ſpeaks, both of Jeſus Chriſt, and of thoſe that are his, under the ſimilitude of the Hind.

From both parts of the verſe, in that the Lord puts the queſtion here to Job, Knoweſt thou the time when the wild Goats of the Rocks bring forth? Or canſt thou mark the time when the Hinds do calve?

Note, Firſt, The Lord himſelf takes ſpecial care of the wildeſt Creatures, even of thoſe which are moſt remote from the help and care of man.

The care and tenderneſs of God toward Beaſts, turns to his praiſe, as well as the care which he hath of, and the tenderneſs which he ſhews to believers. And as it doth exceedingly advance the glory of God, that he takes care of wild Beaſts, ſo it may exceedingly ſtrengthen the faith of man, that he will take care of him. Doth the Lord take care of wild Goats and of Hinds, then certainly he takes care of thoſe that particularly belong to him; as hath been already ſhewed or inferred from ſuch like inſtances as we have here in the Text.

Secondly, From the particular Point, upon which the care of God is here intimated, with reſpect to the wild Goats and Hinds; namely, their bringing forth and calving, we learn, that

There is a ſpecial providence of God towards theſe and ſuch like Creatures, for the production of their young.

He (if I may ſo ſpeak with reverence) ſhews his Midwifry, in helping theſe ſavage Beaſts when their pains come upon them. As the Lord takes man (in an eminent manner) out of the womb (Pſal. 22. 9.) ſo in a manner, he takes Beaſts out of the womb too (Pſal. 29. 8, 9.) The voice of the Lord ſhaketh the wilderneſs, it ſhaketh the wilderneſs of Kadeſh. So we Tranſlate it; but the word which we render ſhaketh, is the ſame with this in the Text, which ſignifieth to bring forth: And hence ſome very learned in the Hebrew tongue, do not render as we, The voice of the Lord ſhaketh the wilderneſs, but, The voice of the Lord maketh the wilderneſs to bring forth; The Lord maketh the wilderneſs of Kadeſh to bring forth; which is not to be underſtood of the Vegetative Creatures (that's a truth, the Lord makes the Trees of the Forreſt to bring forth both leaves and fruit) but it is meant of Animals or living Creatures there: And then, when he ſaith, The voice of the Lord maketh the wilderneſs to bring forth, the meaning is, The Lord makes the wild Beaſts of the wilderneſs to bring forth; which ſeems to be the clear ſenſe of the place, by that which followeth; for the Pſalmiſt having ſaid this in general at the eighth verſe, The voice of the Lord maketh the wilderneſs to bring forth, he in the ninth verſe, gives the ſpecial inſtance of the Hind, The voice of the Lord maketh the Hinds to calve.

So much concerning the wild Goats bringing forth their young, and the Hinds calving. In the next verſe the Lord enquires of Job, the time how long they go with young before they bring forth and calve.

Verſe 2. Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil;

As if the Lord had ſaid, Canſt thou tell how long they, that is the wild Goats or the Hinds, bear their Natural burdens? Canſt thou number their Months? The Hebrew is, their Moons. The Jews reckoned their Months by Moons; and we diſtinguiſh between Lunary and Solary Months. Moon-Months conſiſts of twenty eight days, Sun-Months of thirty. Canſt thou reckon the Moons or Months that they fulfil? To this the Prophet alludes (Jer. 2. 24.) ſpeaking of the wild Aſs that ſnuffs up the wind at her pleaſure; that is, who takes pleaſure, or (as the Margin reads it) The deſire of whoſe heart is to ſnuff up the wind; in her occaſion (ſaith he) who can turn her away? He compares wanton vain perſons, Idolatrous and Superſtitious perſons eſpecially, who of all others are the wantonneſt and vaineſt perſons, to an Aſs, when ſhe is in the heat of her luſt and pleaſure; all they that ſeek her, will not weary themſelves, that is, they will not weary themſelves to ſeek her, while ſhe is in that condition, but in her Month they ſhall find her, that is, when ſhe is burdened with young, when her ſorrows and pains are neer coming upon her, then ſhe may be dealt with. Thus the Lord would ſhew his people, that how-ever being ſo luſty, ſo wanton, there was no dealing with them, yet a Month of ſorrow was coming upon them, even as upon one with young, wherein they ſhould feel, and be under ſuch ſad pains, as would burden them to purpoſe (as we ſay) and then they would be found, and might be ſpoken with. Wild Aſſes have their Months, their Months of bearing, and their Month of bringing forth; about thoſe and this the Lord enquires of Job, Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil? The Queſtion is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the number of the Months which they fulfil were ſo many that they could not be numbred; but the Lord ſpeaks thus, becauſe of the uncertainty of the time (as to man) when thoſe Months are fulfilled. David prayed (Pſal. 39. 4.) Lord, ſhew me the number of my days; not as if the number of his days were ſo many, that he could hardly find out the number of them Arithmetically, but being ſo uncertain, he needed the Lords inſtruction to teach him how to count the number of them ſpiritually. So here, Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil; that's as great a ſecret as the number of any mans days in this World are.

Menſes qui hic ירחים vocantur à Luna; Menſes enim Hebræorum Lunares erant.

Yet it may be objected; ſurely it is no ſuch hard matter to number the Months which Hinds and wild Goats fulfil: For if the Queſtion be, what time of their age Goats firſt conceive, and how long they continue bearing? Pliny anſwers: Sometimes they conceive at a year old, always at two years old; and (ſaith he) they continue bearing eight years. Secondly, if the Queſtion be, about what time of the year they conceive and bring forth? The ſame Author anſwers, They conceive in November, and bring forth in March,

Aliquando annicula ſemper binæ & pariunt octonis annis. Plin. l. 8. c. 50.

March, ſo that they go burdened five Months. Again, if the queſtion be about the Hinds. he thus reſolves it ;, they conceive about the latter end of September, and bring forth about the middle of April, the whole time they go, being about eight Months ; ſo that there ſeems no ſuch difficulty in numbring the Months, which either wild Goats or Hinds fulfil, that is, how long they go with young.

Octon's menſibus ferunt partus. Plin. l. 8. c. 32.

I anſwer ; Though the general time which they fulfil may be known, or is known and ſet down by Writers, yet the preciſe particular time, the day of the Month, or hour of the day, or (which is the thing enquired) when their Months come out and are fulfilled. that's a ſecret. Though it be commonly known, that a Woman goes nine Months with Child, yet who knows, or can a Woman her ſelf know exactly to a day, or an hour, when her pains and travel will come upon her ? Many Women have been under great miſtakes in that caſe, and rarely do any hit the time right, but reckon a day or two or three over or under the juſt account. So then, though the general time is known, yet the exact particular time is not known. I may ſay in this caſe, as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſaid about the end of the World, Of that day and hour knows no man ; we may know the general time, we may know it will not be long before the World ſhall end. The time which the World ſhall go with its great birth, is commonly ſaid to be Six Thouſand Years ; but the day and hour of its travel, and the conſummation of all things according to the decree of God, no man, no nor Angel, knows. Here the Lord queſtions Job about the exact particular time, which himſelf keeps, as he doth all ſpecial ſeaſons, in his own hand or power, under his own lock and key, as Chriſt told his Diſciples, (Acts 1.7.) Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil ? Doſt thou keep their reckoning ?

Or knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth ?

'Tis the ſame in effect that was ſpoken before, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it.

From the whole verſe Obſerve, The Lord only can give timely ſuccour to all Creatures.

The reaſon is implied in the Text, Becauſe he only knows the certain time of their extremity. None can give exact and timely help to the neceſſity of another, but he that knows the exact time of his extremity. The Lord can and will give deliverance to his people, in the very nick of time, when the Months of their ſorrow and burdens are fulfilled, for he knows the number of them. The Children of Iſrael had long and ſore bondage in Egypt, but no longer than the Months which were appointed ; for as ſoon as they were fulfilled, their bondage was ended, and they delivered ; mark how the Spirit of God Records it to a day (Exod. 12.41.) And it came to paſs at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the ſelf-ſame day it came to paſs, that all the Hoſts of the Lord went out from the Land of Egypt. Nor doth the ſacred Record leave it thus, but adds (verſ. 42.) It is a night to be much obſerved ; or (according to the letter of the Hebrew) A night of obſervations unto the Lord, for bringing them out from the Land of Egypt : This is that night of the Lord, to be obſerved of all the Children of Iſrael in their Generations. But Moſes ſaid in the former verſe, It was the ſelf-ſame day. Why doth he ſay here, It is a night, &c ? And this is that night of the Lord, &c. The reaſon I conceive was this ; the word Day may be taken largely, for a natural day conſiſting of twenty four hours ; now becauſe the four hundred and thirty years were fulfilled and ended at the beginning of that day, (the Jewiſh account of days beginning at evening) therefore their deliverance began then, and did not ſtay till the morning. Thus exact is the Lord, keeping his word not only to a day, but to a piece, yea, to the very hour of a day. And as the Lord gave that people deliverance juſt when thoſe years were fulfilled, according to that ancient prophecy ; ſo doubtleſs when the forty two Months, or (which is the ſame) the thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days for his witneſſes prophecying in ſack-cloth (Rev. 11. 2, 3.) ſhall be fulfilled, then they alſo ſhall come out of their bondage from under myſtical Egypt and Babylon. Men have been long gueſſing at the fulfilling of thoſe forty two Months, but may we not ſay to them concerning the birth of that prophecy, in the ſame ſenſe that the Lord doth here to Job, concerning the particular time when the wild Goats of the Rock, and the Hinds bring forth, Canſt thou number the Months that they fulfil ? As the particular time of the Hinds fulfilling her Months, ſo of Sions fulfilling her Months of ſorrow in this World, is a ſecret which the Lord hath reſerved to himſelf, and keeps faſt lockt up in the Cabinet of his eternal counſels. Knoweſt thou the time when they bring forth ?

The Lord having thus queſtioned Job about the time of the bringing forth of theſe two Creatures, in theſe two verſes, proceeds to queſtion him about the manner of their bringing forth, or the painfulneſs of it.

Verſe 3. They bow themſelves, &c.

Theſe words are a deſcription of the hard travel of the Hinds, not of the Goats, as Interpreters generally agree. Bowing of the Body is the poſture of any Creature in travel to bring forth. As if the Lord had ſaid, It is thou, O Job, that haſt, or I, that have given them an inſtinct in Nature to put their Bodies (as wild as they are) conſiderately, into ſuch a poſture (when their pains come upon them) as may be moſt eaſeful for themſelves, and leaſt hurtful to their offſpring, by bowing their Bodies to dilate the paſſages of Nature, and ſo by a Natural Midwifry to deliver themſelves of their burdens ? As followeth,

They bring forth their young ones.

The word rendred Bring forth. ſignifies to cleave aſunder, implying their extream pain in bringing forth ; or that it is to them as grievous as the rending and cleaving of their Bodies could be. So the word is Tranſlated (Chap. 16. 13.) where Job making a lamentable complaint about his ſufferings under the hand of God, expreſſeth it thus ; His archers compaſs me round about, he cleaveth my reins aſunder. Such torture have theſe poor Creatures in bringing forth their young ; which is more plainly ſet down in the cloſe of the verſe,

פלח Proprie ſindo, diffindo, trajicio.

They caſt out their ſorrows.] Which may be underſtood two ways ; Firſt, Bowing to free themſelves of their young ones, their ſorrows end, or there is an end of their ſorows, they are caſt out. Secondly, Thus they caſt out their ſorrows ; that is, their young ones are caſt out which have put them to much ſorrow and grievous throws, and ſo may well be called their ſorrows ; as Rachel called that Child with which ſhe had ſuch hard travel, Ben-oni, The Son of her ſorrows (Gen. 35. 18.)

The word which we render Sorrows, ſignifies cords and bonds, implying that theſe Creatures are girded and bound about with extream pain, until (by the power of God in Nature) they receive deliverance. Some are bound and girded with troubles, in and from the World, who yet are not ſorrowful ; we through faith may even glory in tribulation (Rom. 5.3.) but they who are ſorrowful, are always bound : and therefore the ſame word ſignifieth bonds and ſorrows. They caſt out their ſorrows.

Hence Note, Firſt, Even wild and ſavage Creatures bring forth with pain.

This is part of that vanity brought by mans ſin upon the Creature, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 8.22.) We know that the whole Creation (or every Creature) groaneth and travelleth in pain together until now. The Creatures groan, as being laden with a heavy burden, and they travel in pain, as a Woman with Child, to be eaſed and delivered of her burden, even thoſe Creatures which in proper ſenſe, neither travel nor bring forth, yet are ſaid to groan and travel in pain, by reaſon of the ſin of man ; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, They groan and travel in pain together ; that is, all the Creatures join in this. They do not ſome groan, and others ſing, ſome travel in pain, and others travel in or take their pleaſure, but they are all (as it were) ſenſible of their ſad change, and bewail it ſadly ; and (ſaith the Apoſtle) they groan and travel until now, or unto this now ; not as if their groaning did then ceaſe when this was ſaid, but to ſhew that it had continued without ceaſing, until that inſtant now ; and ſo it will continue until the manifeſtation of the Sons of God, ſpoken of (verſ. 19.) As ſoon as man ſinned, the Lord laid that affliction on the Woman, In ſorrow ſhalt thou bring forth (Gen. 3. 16.) Now that which was firſt declared an affliction, with reſpect to the Woman, is fallen upon all Creatures in their degree; they all are more or leſs pained in travel, or travel in pain. The ſin of man hath brought ſorrow upon the whole World, even upon ſinleſs Creatures; and therefore man ſhould pity poor Creatures in their ſorrows, his ſin having brought thoſe ſorrows upon them. How vile then are they, who meerly to ſatisfie their luſts, increaſe the ſorrows of the Creature, and cauſe them to travel more than needs, in pain every day?

Ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν.

Secondly, The Lord inſtanceth here in the Hinds for hard travel; and Naturaliſts obſerve, the Hind hath the ſoreſt travel in bringing forth of any Creature, Woman excepted. And, that the Hinds have very ſore travel in bringing forth, beſide what Naturaliſts ſpeak, may be collected from thoſe expreſſions in the Text, They bow themſelves, they bring forth their young ones, they caſt out their ſorrows. That Scripture alſo intimates as much (*Pſal.*29. 9.) when among other wonderful effects of thunder, The breaking of Cedars, &c. This is added, The voice of the Lord maketh the Hinds to calve; as if it did require the ſpecial help of God, to give the Hinds eaſe and deliverance in the time of their travel, The voice of God doth it; that is, either the Thunder, or ſome extraordinary power, ſent out for that purpoſe, doth it.

Tunc efficis ut cervæ quæ alioquin ægerrimè eſſent pariture commodius pariant? Dum ante partum purgantur herba quadam quæ Seſelis dicitur, faciliore ita utentes utero. Jun. Plin. l. 8. c. 32. Ariſt. l. 9. de Hiſtor. animal. c. 5. Cicero l. 2. de nat. Deorum. A partu duas habent herbas quæ Aros & Seſelis appellantur. Plin. l. 8. c. 32.

And here we may conſider the goodneſs of God, even to this wild Beaſt, in ordering her Natural helps, to eaſe her the more ſpeedily of her grievous pains in bringing forth her young ones.

The Natural Hiſtorian tells us concerning the Hind, that ſhe by common inſtinct, a little before ſhe calves, feeling her pains coming upon her, ſeeks out a certain Herb called Seſelis, feeding upon which doth exceedingly facilitate her pains in bringing forth. Women, who have underſtanding and reaſon, as alſo the aſſiſtance of friends about them, have many means for their eaſe in that hour of extremity; but the Lord hath made this poor Creature, both Phyſician and Midwife to her ſelf. Further, 'tis reported of them, that when they have brought forth, they uſe the ſame and other Herbs to help themſelves againſt their after-pains. Once more, Naturaliſts obſerve, that they uſually bring forth at that time of the year when there is much Thunder, according to that before mentioned (*Pſal.*29.) The voice of the Lord (or Thunder) maketh the Hinds to calve. For the Hind being of a fearful Nature, that dreadful noiſe doth ſo aſtoniſh her, that it either makes her put out all her ſtrength to bring forth, or makes her leſs ſenſible of her pains in bringing forth. That's the ſecond thing here conſiderable in Hinds, their painful bringing forth, They bow themſelves, they bring forth their young ones, they caſt out their ſorrows.

Hence take this inference, with reſpect to Women who come under the like pains. This ſhould be a ſtaff of conſolation to them, in the time of their travel. If the Lord directs theſe Creatures to the beſt poſture, and moſt proper means for their help and eaſe in that condition, how much more will he take care of them, eſpecially of them who call upon him, and truſt in him? We may well make that interpretation of the Apoſtles words (1 Tim. 2. 15.) She ſhall be ſaved in Child-bearing, if they continue in faith, and charity, and holineſs, with ſobriety. This early care of God for mankind, is deſcribed (*Pſal.*22.9,10.) Thou art he that took me out of the womb; I was caſt upon thee from the womb; thou art my God from my mothers belly. And again (*Pſal.*71. 6.) By thee have I been holden up from the womb; thou art he that took me out of my mothers bowels; my praiſe ſhall be continually of thee.

St. Auguſtine applies this matter of the Hinds bringing forth, to the ſpiritual birth; Firſt, Becauſe the time is unknown, or known only to God, when any Soul comes to the new birth. Secondly, Becauſe every Soul which travelleth with this new birth, boweth and humbleth himſelf greatly under the ſenſe of ſin before the Lord. Thirdly, Becauſe this new birth is uſually accompanied with great and grievous pangs, always with the truth of godly ſorrow.

The Lord, having ſpoken thus of the Hinds bringing forth their young ones, ſpeaks next, as I may ſay, of the education and bringing up of their young ones.

Verſe 4 Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with Corn, they go forth and return not unto them.

This Verſe holds out three things:

Firſt, The good plight of their young ones, They are in good liking. As if it had been ſaid, Though the Hinds have much pain in bringing them forth, yet they are ſlick and fat, as ſoon as, or ſoon after they are brought forth. The word which we render In good liking, notes a growing into health and ſtrength, which we call recovering (Iſa. 38.9,16.) The writing of Hezekiah King of Judah, when he had been ſick and was recovered, &c. And 'tis ſaid of Naaman (2 Kings 5. 14.) his fleſh came to him, or he recovered his fleſh, as the fleſh of a little Child. The ſame word is uſed (Pſal. 126. 1.) When the Lord turned the Captivity of Sion, we were like to them that dream; which others Tranſlate thus, and conceive it nearer the Original Text, When the Lord turned the Captivity of Sion, then we were like them that are fed and grow fat at the dugg, and ſo are chearly or in a comfortable condition. Thus the Hinds young ones grow fat, luſty, and ſtrong; as the Lord takes care for their bringing forth, ſo of their bringing up; he that maketh the Hinds to calve, makes their calves of good liking too; as he makes the Babe thrive at the Mothers breaſt, ſo the Calf at the Hinds dugg. And when they have a while grown fat at the Dam's dugg, then חלם Significat aliquando valere & incolumem eſſe. Licet matres difficilem habent partum, filii tamen ſalvi & incolumes ſunt, beneq; valent, alii pingueſcunt. Druſ. Facti ſumus ſicut conſolati, melius quam ab aliis ſomniantes, &c. Bold.

Secondly, They grow up with Corn.

They come to harder meat, they ſoon leave ſucking and feed upon Corn. Some read, they grow up in the Fields, or by the Field, that is, by that which groweth in the Field. Thus it is with our Children, they are fed firſt at the breaſt and ſpoon, afterwards with fleſh or any wholeſom food. According to every degree of life, God provides ſutable food; the Infant ſhall have milk, and when a little grown, ſtronger meat. As it is in ſpirituals, when we are new born Babes in Jeſus Chriſt, we are fed with milk, that is, with plain and eaſie truths, called by the Apoſtle, The firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt; afterwards we go on (as the Apoſtle there ſpeaks) to perfection, and then we can digeſt and profit by the deeper Myſteries of the Goſpel, Thus 'tis ſaid of the young Hinds, or of the Hinds young ones in the Text, בּרא ager unde בּרא חית fera agreſtis. Sed hic eſt בּר quod in lingua Chaldæorum extra denotat; unde Barbarus geminatis ſyllabis. Druſ.

They grow up with Corn.] The word ſignifies to grow apace, to thrive much in ſtrength and ſtature, and being thus thriven and grown, their Dams hear no more of them. For as it followeth,

Mira eſt providentia Dei in ſubulonum & hinnulorum nutricatione, qui nullo cuſtode, nullo opilione reguntur ſicut vituli, hœdi vel agni, tamen pingueſcunt. Codrec.

Thirdly, They go forth and return not unto them.

Firſt, They had the duggs of the Dam to nouriſh them, ſoon after they fed upon Corn, at length they go forth and return not unto them; they trouble the old ones no further, they ſhift for themſelves. One of the Naturaliſts commending the qualities of the Hind, notes this chiefly; they are very diligent to inſtruct their young ones, how to get, or where to ſeek food for themſelves, before they put them out of their own care.

In hunc finem hæc allata ſunt ut oſtenderetur, hæc ex ſola Dei providentia fieri, non ulla humana induſtria. Merc.

Hence Note, Firſt, The Lord hath taught the brute Creatures to provide for their young ones, till they are able to help themſelves.

This intimates the duty of Parents, to take care of their Children till they are able to get their living.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as thoſe young ones go forth, and return not again when once they can live of themſelves,

Note, It is the duty of Children, when Parents have beſtowed coſt in bringing them up, to go forth, and not return to be chargeable to their Parents.

Children muſt not think to burthen their Parents always, but ſtick to their own labour; the very brute Beaſts will condemn thoſe Children who do not: When the Hind hath ſufficiently inſtructed her young ones by her example, where and how to get food, having alſo breathed them well, and taught them how to haſten away when in danger; having, laſtly, led them to precipices, and taught them to leap or jump, then they go forth and return no more. The Patriarch Nephthali was called (*Gen.*49.21.) a Hind let looſe, becauſe ſtrong and able to live alone. Thus we have here both the care of the Hind, to provide for her young ones as long as they need, which layeth a great obligation upon Parents to take care of their Children. He that provides not for his own, eſpecially, for thoſe of his Houſhold, for his own Children

Ariſt. l. 9. de Hiſt. Animal. c. 5. Quod pulcher erat & nemine indigeret vocatur cervus emiſſus. Editos partus exercent curſu, & fugam meditari docent, ad præcipitia ducunt ſaltumque docent. Plin. l. 8. c. 32.

Children and Servants, is worſe than an Inſidel; yea, he is worſe than a Hind. But then, let Children, when they have been well provided for, and taught how to get a living in the World, take heed of laſineſs and idleneſs, as if they were to live upon their Parents pains or proviſion always. Let them go forth and not return, but to ſhew kindneſs and thankfulneſs to their Parents, for their care and coſt beſtowed on them in their tender years, and while under their inſpection; yea, let them learn (as the Apoſtle gives them in charge, 1 Tim. 5. 4.) To ſhew pity or kindneſs at home, and requite their Parents; helping their Parents (if need be) in their old age, as their Parents helped and brought them up when they were young. Which dutifulneſs of Children the Greeks expreſs by a word alluding to Storks, who are ſo much noted for their tender care towards their aged Parents, that their name ſignifies the thing, not only in that famous Language, but in the ſacred Language, namely, Piety and Pity.

Ἀντιπελαργεῖν. חמרה

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8.

Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free? Or who hath looſed the bands of the wild Aſs?

Whoſe Houſe I have made the Wilderneſs, and the barren Land his dwellings.

He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, neither regardeth he the cry of the driver.

The range of the Mountains is his Paſture, and he ſearcheth after every green thing.

THE Lord continues his ſpeech with Job, to ſhew his provident care of, yea, and bounty towards the wildeſt Creatures.

The queſtion put in theſe four verſes concerns the wild Aſs, and there are three things conſiderable in the deſcription given him in theſe four verſes.

Firſt, His liberty and freedom (verſ. 5.) Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free? &c.

Secondly, His dwelling and habitation (verſ. 6.) Whoſe Houſe I have made the Wilderneſs, and the barren Land his dwelling. He ſcorneth, &c.

Thirdly, His food or manner of feeding (verſ. 8.) the range of the Mountains is his Paſture, and he ſearcheth out every green thing. Thus the Lord propoſeth to Job the example of theſe wild and untamed Creatures, for whom no man provides or beſtows a thought upon towards their livelihood, yet God provides for them, and feeds them, and houſeth them, and preſerveth them in as good a condition, as thoſe which are tame, and under the daily care and inſpection of man.

Verſe 5. Who hath ſet the wild Aſs free?

The wild Aſs is at liberty, he is free; love of liberty is the property of the wild Aſs; and here it is queſtioned, whence he hath his liberty, or who made him free? That is, ſo ſtout, that he will not be taught ſubjection to the command of man, nor do him any work, as not only other Creatures, but other Aſſes do; who hath made him thus free? Surely, not any man, not any company, ſociety, or brotherhood of men; the wild Aſs hath not his manumiſſion by them, but by God, he hath beſtowed that priviledg (ſuch as it is) upon the wild Aſs, God hath ſet him free. Some Beaſts are, as it were, Apprentiz'd or bound to the ſervice of men, and men have ſpecial ſervices, uſes, and employments to which they appoint them; there are other Creatures, as it were, manumitted from mans ſervice, man hath no command of them, nor work done by them, they are free, and amongſt theſe the wild Aſs is eminent for freedom.

Liberum ſc. ab hominibus, ita ut in eorum poteſtate non ſit. Druſ.

The Hebrew Text which we render the wild Aſs, is but one word; and from thence ſome derive the Latine word which ſignifie wild Beaſts in general; conceiving alſo that the Hebrew word comes from a root ſignifying to multiply and increaſe, becauſe wild Beaſts (uſually) multiply and increaſe more than tame. Thus they underſtand this former part of the verſe, not as we of that ſpecial ſort of wild Beaſts the wild Aſs, but in common of all ſorts of wild Beaſts; and then (ſay they) in the latter part of the verſe, the wild Aſs is eſpecially ſpoken of under another term; for though we have the wild Aſs, according to our Tranſlation, in both parts of the Text, yet under different appellations, by which ſome underſtand two ſorts of wild Aſſes, but others take the firſt only in general for wild Beaſts of any ſort, and the latter for this particular ſort of wild Beaſts the wild Aſs. But I conceive, we need not be ſo curious, for though we take both the former and the latter word for the ſame, the ſenſe is clear, and the ſame: Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free?

פרא Unde ferus & fera. פֶּרֶא à פרא multiplicare, augere, fructificari, quòd fœcundiores ſolent eſſe feræ, quàm domeſticæ animantes. ערד

Or who hath looſed the bands of the wild Aſs?

But was the wild Aſs, here ſpoken of, at any time in bonds, and now ſet free? I anſwer, The Lord ſpeaks thus figuratively, not that the wild Aſs was ever in bonds, but that becauſe he is ſo untractable, and will by no means be mannag'd, he ſeems to be as one looſed from bonds, even as Oxen and Horſes which ſerve man, and are under his power, ſeem bound to his ſervice. So then, as the former, ſo this latter part of the verſe is not to be expounded, as if the wild Aſs had ever been under reſtraint, and afterwards was ſent forth free and looſed from his bonds, but both expreſſions intend only, that as his diſpoſition is for freedom, ſo in his condition he is, and always hath been, free from bondage; for not only is he free from bondage, who having been in bondage is delivered, as Slaves and Captives oftentimes are; but he may be ſaid to be free from bondage, or to have his bonds looſed, who was never in bonds, who was either born free, or who by his wit, skill and policy, or the help of others, hath been preſerved from bondage. A man may be ſaid to be free from ſickneſs, that never was ſick, as well as he that is reſtored from ſickneſs to health; and ſo a man that never was in bonds, may be ſaid to be free from bonds, as well as he that is delivered from bondage. Thus the wild Aſs in the Text is ſaid to have his bonds looſed, though he never was in bonds. As the Lord hath made all Creatures, ſo he hath made ſome free, others ſervile; he hath ſet ſome at liberty, but holds others at hard labour all their days, in drawing, travelling, or bearing heavy burdens. The words are plain; the ſum and ſcope of them may be thus conceived: As if the Lord had asked Job, by whom this natural inclination was given to the wild Aſs, that he ſhould ſo earneſtly deſire liberty; as alſo, who gave him that force and ſtoutneſs, that he ſhould be able to live without Law, to follow his own luſt, not at all ſubmitting to, nor guided by the will of others. Who hath ſent out the wild Aſs free?

ערד Quod ſpecie videtur aliud animal ab Onagro, non tamen multum differens, Grot. Aliqui vertunt Onagrum & Alcen, quæ ſunt equorum & aſinorum agreſtium genera. Diſtinguit inter Onagrum & Alcen. Plinius. lib. 8. c. 15.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That ſome Creatures are free from, and others bound to ſervice, is of Gods own appointment.

It would be both a vanity and a high preſumption, to ask the reaſon why the Lord hath appointed ſome Creatures to ſpend the whole time of their lives in liberty, and that others ſhould be continually groaning under bondage, labouring and ſweating, tyring and wearying themſelves out in the ſervice of men, ſeeing we cannot change the orders of God. And as we muſt not buſie our ſelves with inquiring, while he hath not ſubjected the wild Aſs to the ſame bonds and burdens as he hath tame Aſſes? So we muſt not ſay unto God, why haſt thou made ſome men to ſerve, others to rule? No, nor why he handles ſome men more gently, others more grievouſly? We muſt reſolve all theſe queſtions into the will, dominion and ſoveraignty of God; and we may well conceive, that the Lord would in this queſtion about the wild Aſſes, intimate unto us, as well as unto Job, that he hath a power in himſelf, which no man ought to queſtion, to free ſome men from the bonds of ſervice, and to bind others, to free ſome men from the bonds of affliction, ſorrow and trouble in this World, while others are hamper'd and held faſt in them all their days. What Job ſpake in reference to the various diſpenſation of Bodily health (Chap. 21. 23, 24, 25) One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet, his Breaſts are full of milk, and his bones moiſtened with marrow; and another dieth in the bitterneſs of his Soul, and never eateth with pleaſure; the ſame may be ſaid about the dealings of God with men, as to bodily liberty; one dieth free, he girded himſelf all the days of his life (as Chriſt ſaid to Peter of his younger days, John 21.) and went whither he pleaſed, no man asking, whither goeſt thou? Or why ſtayeſt thou here? Another is laid by the heels, or girded by others, and never enjoyeth the freedom of his own perſon or motions, he (poor man) is bound in fetters, and holden in the Cords of affliction, as Elihu ſpake in the 36. Chapter of this Book. This was Job's caſe; he was in the bonds and cords of affliction, while others enjoyed peace and liberty. Now man ought no more to queſtion the Lord, why one man is afflicted and another free, than why the wild Aſs is free, and the tame a Servant. As the whole Creation (which was occaſionally ſhewed at the third verſe) is ſubject unto bondage, by reaſon of the ſin of man, and groaneth till it be delivered; ſo the ſoveraignty of God hath laid this bondage heavier upon ſome parts of the Creation, or upon ſome Creatures, than upon others. And as we ſhould daily and deeply bewail it, that our ſin hath brought bondage upon the Creature, ſo we ſhould humbly ſubmit to whatſoever bondage or hard travel the ſoveraignty of God hath deſigned us in one kind or other, while we are in this World.

Secondly, Conſider to whom 'tis granted to be free, and to have their bonds looſed; it is to wild Aſſes. Then Obſerve, To be free from labour and ſervice, is but a very low priviledg.

It is but the priviledg of an Aſs; and as it is but a low priviledg to be free from ſervice, ſo it is a great ſin to caſt off ſervice. Some under pretence of liberty, caſt off obedience, and will not bear the yoak of duty or good government; this is indeed to be free as the wild Aſs is free. Such are ſpoken of (Pſal. 2.2,3.) Come let us break their bonds, and caſt their cords from us. They that would break the bonds and cords there ſpoken of, deſire only, and look after a ſinful liberty, a meaner liberty than that of the wild Aſs. The Prophet going to the great men (Jer. 5.5.) ſaid, Theſe have altogether broken the yoak, and burſt the bonds; that is, the yoak of duty which God hath laid upon them. They have no cauſe of boaſting, that are free from the bonds of ſervice; but they who caſt off the bonds of duty, have great cauſe to be ſhamed. Thus the Prophet reproves that people, as one man (Hoſ. 8.9.) They are gone up to Aſſyria, a wild Aſs alone by himſelf. As if the Prophet had ſaid, They look not up to the high God for help, but to Aſſyria, the high God was not ſo high in their eyes as Aſſyria: Doing thus, they were like a wild Aſs (ſaith the Prophet) and ſo they were in two things; Firſt, They were extream ſtubborn, reſolved to have their will, and ſatisfie their luſts. Ephraim was as violent in his way as a wild Aſs. Secondly, They were like a wild Aſs, they would be alone; A wild Aſs alone by himſelf; that is, they would be at liberty, free from all command, to do what they liſt; they had rather be in a barren Wilderneſs where none could controul them, that in good paſtures under any thing that looked like a reſtraint, or a rule. This is a very unworthy Spirit; this is liberty in a way of licentiouſneſs, this liberty is libertiniſm. They who ſubmit to no rule but that of their unruly head-ſtrong paſſions and affections, nor will be reclaimed nor tamed by any, whether fair or foul means, theſe in Scripture are compared to the wild Aſs for their folly and vanity. Zophar offered this rebuke to Job, in the 11. Chapter of this Book, verſe 12. and poſſibly he could not altogether free himſelf from it, Vain man would be wiſe, though he be born like a wild Aſſes colt; that is, though this be all his wiſdom to be free from that ſubjection which he oweth to God and man. The Prophet (Jer. 2. 24.) compares the whole people of Iſrael, when they caſt off the ſervice of God, to a wild Aſs (which Scripture was toucht at the ſecond verſe upon another occaſion) that ſnuffeth up the wind at her pleaſure; in her occaſion who can turn her away? All they that ſeek her, will not weary themſelves, in her month they ſhall find her: There is no bringing ſuch into compaſs, till they are compaſſed with pains. We may call all ſuch nominal Iſraelites real Iſhmaelites, it being ſaid of Iſhmael (Gen. 16. 12.) that he was (pere Adam) a wild man, having more of the wild Aſs than of the man in them. Thus it is with vain and unbridled Spirits, they cannot bear the yoak of ſervice; and therefore remember, though this be ſpoken of as a priviledg, yet it is a low priviledg to be free from any honeſt ſervice; and to be free from all ſervice, is worſe than the worſt of outward ſervitudes. 'Tis a mercy to be free from ſlavery to man, but to be free from ſervice to man, is to be unmanly; every man ſhould be a Servant in one kind or other, and therefore the Law ſaith, To call a man a Servant, diſtinguiſheth no man, ſeeing every man is ſuppoſed in the way of his life a Servant. The Apoſtle ſpeaking to thoſe whoſe very calling is to ſerve, and are therefore in ſtrict ſenſe called Servants (1 Cor. 7.21,22.) ſaith, Art thou called, being a Servant, care not for it, that is, be not troubled that thou art a Servant (ſervice to man is not inconſiſtent with the ſervice of God) but if thou maiſt be made free, uſe it rather; for he that is called in the Lord, being a Servant, is the Lords freeman. Let every man (verſ. 24.) wherein he is called, therein abide with God; that is, let him continue to ſerve man in all things, according to the will of God. To be wholly free from the ſervice of man, is no better than the freedom of the worſer ſort of Beaſts, the wild Aſs. Chriſt (Matth. 11.29,30.) calls his to the yoak; and Chriſts yoak implyeth all manner of dutiful ſervice, even ſervice to man as well as to God: Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt; take my yoak upon you, and learn of me, &c. for my yoak is eaſie, and my burden is light. If we refuſe Chriſts eaſie yoak, we may quickly get a heavy one, yea, an Iron one, as the Prophet told him whom broke the wooden one (Jer. 28.13.) There are ſome yoaks, which to bear is our honour; 'tis ſurely ſo, to bear the yoak of Chriſt; to be under Chriſts bonds, is a favour; woe to thoſe who ſeek to be looſed from them. The Prophet Jeremiah tells us (Lam. 3. 37.) It is good for a man to bear the yoak in his youth.

There is a threefold bond or yoak, from which it is a favour to be wholly freed, and that freedom we ſhould ſeek after; but neither of the three is a freedom from duty and ſervice, or from due ſervice.

Firſt, To be free from the yoak of ſin, and to have the bonds of our iniquities looſed, that is a bleſſed priviledg (John 8. 36.) If the Son make you free, you ſhall be free indeed. The chief part of a Sons freedom, which we have by Chriſt, the Son, is freedom from ſin. Freedom from the condemning power of ſin, and freedom from the ruling power of ſin, is our Spiritual or Goſpel freedom. Peter ſaid to Simon Magus (Acts 8.23.) I perceive thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity; thou art ſtill a priſoner, a ſlave to ſin, the guilt of ſin holds thee faſt; nor art thou delivered from the filth of it. To have our ſin-bonds looſed, is to be free like Saints; to looſe our ſelves from duty-bonds, whether to God or man, is to be free like wild Aſſes.

Secondly, There is a great mercy in being looſed and made free from the curſe of the Law. Thus alſo the Son makes us free (Gal. 3.13.) Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the Law, being made a curſe for us; that is, enduring the curſe for us, or dying a curſed death for us, that we might have, and for ever enjoy a bleſſed life: This is a glorious liberty.

Thirdly, To be freed from the old legal Ceremonies, is the priviledg of all believers under the Goſpel; and 'tis ſuch a priviledg as the Apoſtle exhorted the Galatians, and us with them, to maintain with all our might (Gal. 5. 1.) Stand faſt therefore in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free, and be not intangled again with the yoak of bondage; that is, with the bondage of the Ceremonial Law, from which Chriſt hath made us free (Gal. 4.26.) Jeruſalem which is above is free, which is the Mother of us all; free, Firſt, From the ſlavery of ſin; free, Secondly, From the curſe of the Law; free, Thirdly, From the yoak of legal Ceremonies. All believers are made thus free by Chriſt, but Chriſt hath not made ſo much as one believer free from ſervice. Chriſt makes us free to ſerve, not free from ſerving. To be free to ſerve, is infinitely better than to be free from ſervice; nothing is more ingenuous, nothing ſhews a more noble Spirit in man, than to be free to ſerve, as all are, being once freed from ſpiritual or ſin-ſlavery (Rom. 6. 19.) As ye have yielded your members ſervants to uncleanneſs, and to iniquity unto iniquity, even ſo now yield your ſelves ſervants to righteouſneſs unto holineſs; for (as it follows) when ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs, or (as it is in the Margin) free to righteouſneſs; not free to do righteouſneſs, but free not to do it. Righteouſneſs had then no command (yielded to) no power (ſubmitted to) over you; whereas over a gracious heart, righteouſneſs hath the greateſt command A godly man is at the beck of God, in all the ways of righteouſneſs: and, as he is free to ſerve Maſters, ſo he is free to be ſubject to Magiſtrates, or higher powers, according to that rule of the Apoſtle (*Rom.*13.1.) And that all in their places may be mindful of this duty, they are upon all occaſions to be put in mind of it, as the ſame Apoſtle directed Titus in his Epiſtle to him (*Chap.*3.1.) The Lord having ſpoken of the freedom of the Aſs, proceeds to deſcribe his dwelling.

Verſ. 6. Whoſe Houſe I have made the wilderneſs, and the barren land his dwellings.

Theſe words contain the ſecond part of the care and providence of God towards the wild Aſs; he hath not only made them free, and looſed their bonds, but he hath provided a dwelling for them; and where? In the wilderneſs; a wild place, and therefore fit for wild beaſts. The wilderneſs; ſtrictly taken, is the dwelling of beaſts, not of men; we read (I grant) in Scripture not only of Houſes, but of Cities in the wilderneſs, yet take the wilderneſs ſtrictly, and 'tis a place un-inhabited by man; and that's the place where the Lord hath appointed the wild Aſs to dwell; 'tis his Houſe, there he abideth as men do in their Houſes. The wilderneſs is a place undreſſed, untilled, uncared for by man, yet by the care and goodneſs of God it affords ſufficient proviſion for the ſupport of theſe creatures, whom no man provides for.

Whoſe Houſe I have made the Wilderneſs.

The wild Aſs hath a large and open Houſe, ſome conceive the wilderneſs here intended was the wilderneſs of Arabia, which as (Hiſtorians tell us) was much ſtockt or abounded with wild Aſſes. The word Arabia ſignifies a wilderneſs; the whole country being ſo like a wilderneſs, is ſo called after its own likeneſs. The Chaldee Paraphraſt reads it, whoſe houſe I have made a plain, as if theſe wild Aſſes were in this oppoſed to the wild Goats, (Verſ. 1.) who live on high hills and craggy Rocks. The word is Tranſlated a plain (Deut. 1. 1.) yet rather, as we, the Wilderneſs.

And the barren land his dwellings; the Hebrew is, and the ſalt place his dwellings.

A barren place, and a ſalt place, are the ſame (Judg. 9.45.) When Abimelech took that City, he ſowed it with ſalt, in token that an everlaſting curſe of barrenneſs ſhould come upon it, according to that (*Pſal.*107.34.) A fruitful land turned he into barrenneſs, the margin ſaith into ſaltneſs. Once more (Jer. 17. 5, 6.) Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm, he ſhall be like the heath in the deſert, and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, but ſhall inhabit the parched places in the wilderneſs, in a ſalt land and not inhabited, that is, in a barren land, unfit for any to inhabit. There is a reaſon in nature why ſalt land is barren; ſalt being hot and dry, draweth up the ſtrength and moiſture of the land that ſhould make it fruitful: This ſalt or barren land, which yields little graſs or herbage, the Lord hath appointed for the wild Aſs to dwell in.

Hence Note; Firſt, God provides a place of dwelling for the meaneſt creatures.

Where the wild Aſs ſhall dwell or inhabit, comes under a Divine appointment. How much more hath God appointed dwelling places for the Children of men. The Apoſtle tells us (Acts 12.26.) That he hath not only made men to dwell on all the face of the Earth, but he hath alſo determined the bounds of their habitation, that is, God hath not only made the whole Earth habitable for man-kind, but he hath by his providence diſpoſed every man to his ſpecial habitation in this or that part of the Earth.

Secondly; The dwelling which God appoints to any creature is ſutable to its nature.

This wild creature dwells in a wild place, in a wilderneſs. This barren creature (as to any benefit he brings to man) God appoints to dwell in a barren land. It is ſaid of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 5.21.) when for his pride he was put from his dominion, that he had his dwelling with wild Aſſes; he himſelf carried it like a beaſt, and he had a dwelling ſutable to his beſtial diſpoſition among the beaſts; he was proud, and would not bear the Lords yoke, he caſt off the bonds which God laid upon him, and thought it enough for him to lay bonds upon men, therefore the Lord (to humble him) thruſt him among the beaſts. As like will to like moſtly in way of election, ſo ſometimes like ſhall to like, though they like it not, in way of compulſion; and uſually like are put to like perſons or places, in way of gracious ordination. God himſelf appoints wild beaſts to the barren wilderneſs, tame beaſts to the fruitful encloſed paſtures; he placeth men in well built Houſes, Towns or Cities; and he hath appointed faithful men and women his Church to dwell in, which is therefore called (though in a wilderneſs) the Houſe of God, (1 Tim. 3. 15.) David found that Houſe more pleaſing to him then any of his Royal Palaces, and therefore made it his great requeſt, The one thing of his deſires (Pſal.27.7.) That he might dwell in the Houſe of the Lord for ever: Even as he bitterly complained (Pſal. 120. 5.) Wo is me, that I ſojourn in Meſech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar. And as the Lord hath provided ſutable habitations for beaſts, wild and tame; for men, good and bad here on earth; ſo he hath provided ſutable habitations for all men, when they leave this Earth. He hath provided hell for their houſe and dwelling place for ever, who are diſobedient and unbelieving; and he hath provided Heaven for their Houſe and dwelling place for ever, who believe and obey. As now all godly men dwell in God by faith (Pſal. 90. 1.) ſo they ſhall hereafter dwell always with him by fruition. He that gives the wilderneſs for a Houſe, and the barren land for a dwelling to the wild Aſs, will provide a Paradiſe for the Houſe, and a Spring-garden of everlaſting joys and ſweetneſſes for his faithful ſervants.

Thirdly, From theſe words (the barren land his dwelling.)

Note; As ſome lands are barren by a Divine Malediction, ſo ſome by Common Conſtitution.

Some lands become barren by a curſe from God; Thus he turns a fruitful land into barrenneſs, for the wickedneſs of thoſe that dwell therein (Pſal. 107. 34.) Now as ſome lands are made barren (beſides the general curſe which beſel all lands upon the fall of man into ſin) by ſome ſpecial curſe, for ſpecial cauſes, ſo 'tis meerly an act of Divine Soveraignty, that ſome lands, as to their very ſoil and conſtitution are barren, while others are fruitful.

Fourthly, Conſider where do theſe Aſſes dwell? 'Tis in a barren land.

Hence Note; They that do little work deſerve but little reward, a barren land may ſerve them who refuſe ſervice.

As every land, the beſt land is barren and unprofitable to them who will not take pains to improve it; ſo 'tis pity they ſhould dwell in a fruitful land, who will not take pains in it.

Fifthly, Note; There is no place ſo bad or barren, but it hath its uſe.

God hath uſe for barren wilderneſſes, as well as for the richeſt paſtures.

Sixthly, The wild Aſs living according to nature, is ſatisfied with a barren Land.

Hence Note; Nature is content with a little.

They have always enough, who deſire no more. A cottage is as good as a Palace, and a barren Land as good as a fruitful one, to a contented mind. Yet I cannot approve either their principle or practice, who have a kind of ambition (poſſibly they call it ſelf-denial, and reckon it a high piece of their Religion) to dwell, as the wild Aſs, in the wilderneſs; ſuch are thoſe popiſh votaries, called Hermites, from the wilderneſs where they dwell: Theſe in devotion (ſuch as it is) make the wilderneſs their houſe, and the barren Land their dwelling, that they may be free from the cares and temptations of this world; theſe retire themſelves utterly from converſe with man, that they may more freely converſe with God (an excellent end, but that way to it is no where comanded by God) Let ſuch remember, that God hath not appointed the wilderneſs and deſert places for mans dwelling, but for the dwelling of wild beaſts: Let them alſo remember, that they who have the wilderneſs for their houſe, may yet have the City in their hearts. It was ſaid by one of the Ancients, concerning ſuch retirements, What doth it advantage us to have a ſolitary place for our bodies, whilſt our ſouls are in the thickeſt throngs of the world.

Quid prodeſt ſolitudo corporis, ſi defuerit ſolitudo cordis. Greg. lib. 30. cap. 23.

There are only two caſes wherein men ſhould deſire ſuch ſolitary places.

Firſt, In caſe of perſecution, to get out of the hands and reach of cruel men. Thus David deſired the wilderneſs (*Pſal.*55.3,4,5,6.) Becauſe of the voice of the enemy, becauſe of the oppreſſion of the wicked; for they caſt iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me; my heart is ſore pained within me, and the terrors of death are fallen upon me, &c. And what followeth? O that I had wings like a Dove, for then would I flie away and be at reſt; Lo, then would I wander afar off, and remain in the wilderneſs. Is is better to be in the wilderneſs among ſavage beaſts, than to live among beaſtly ſavage men. The Apoſtle (*Heb.*11.38.) tells us the reaſon why many worthy ones of the Jewiſh Church (of whom the world was not worthy) inhabited the wilderneſs; They were ſtoned and ſawn aſunder, and were ſlain with the ſword, &c. And what then? Then they who remained alive, to avoid thoſe extremities, avoided the ſociety of men, and wandred in deſerts, and in mountains, and in dens, and caves of the Earth. In ſuch a hot day we may chuſe the ſhadow of a deſolate wilderneſs, rather than a City to dwell in. And thus it is ſaid (Rev. 12. 13,14.) When the Dragon (That is, Heatheniſh Rome) perſecuted the woman (That is, the Church) which brought forth the man-child; then to the woman were given two wings of a great Eagle (That is, ſufficient means, ſtrength and opportunity to make her eſcape) that ſhe might flee into the wilderneſs; which as it hath been often verified in a metaphorical ſenſe, Profeſſors then lying cloſe and retired in their ſeveral places, ſo it hath been true in the letter, the Church hath fled into the wilderneſs for ſafety, and hath there been preſerved from the face of the Serpent.

Secondly, We may deſire ſuch retirements to, and a dwelling in ſolitary places, in caſe of the extream wickedneſs of thoſe among whom we dwell, though they break not out into open perſecution, yet their evil converſation makes their ſociety intolerable. This cauſed the Prophet Jeremiah to cry out (*Chap.*9.2.) O that I had a place in the wilderneſs, that I might leave my people and go from them (why?) for they be all adulterers, an aſſembly of treacherous men. For, as it is better to dwell in the corner of the houſe top, than with a brawling woman in a wide houſe (Prov.21.9.) ſo it is better to get into a corner, or into a wilderneſs, then to live in a City, or in the faireſt Palaces among men of wicked and ungodly ſpirits, ſuch as vexed Lot in Sodom (2Pet.2.8.)

In theſe two caſes we may imitate the wild Aſs, and dwell in the wilderneſs; but for any to make it their choice, let them conſider where they have a rule for it. Man is a ſociable creature, and ought to be helpful and uſeful to others, and not wholly to confine himſelf to himſelf, as they do, who are and are called Anchorets and Hermites. To ſerve our Country, and to obſerve the Law of Nations for the common good of mankind, is better than upon any pretence of devotion, or converſe with God, to ſeclude our ſelves totally from the company and converſe of men. And ſeeing God hath made us for the good of human ſociety, it is inhuman, voluntarily and electively to disjoyn and exempt our ſelves from the Laws of ſociety. Ariſtotle ſaid, concerning decliners of ſociety, He that affects ſolitude, is either a God, or a beaſt; he either lives above man as God doth, or below man as beaſts do. The Reader will eaſily pardon me this ſhort diverſion againſt unneceſſitated ſolitude, thus occaſioned by the ſolitary dwelling of the wild Aſs in the wilderneſs and barren Land. And I have the rather touch it, becauſe I find the Wits of ſome running ſomewhat wild in the Allegory of the wild Aſs in the Text, as if he were a very fitting reſemblance of a contemplative man.

Deus ſit aut bellua oportet, qui poſſet in ſolitudine vivere. Ariſtot.

I grant a godly man ſhould be, and the more godly any man is, the more he will be, I am ſure, the more he would or deſires to be free from the thoughts, and looſed from the bands both of love to, and cares about the things of this life, that he may be the more in the meditation of, and preparation for a better life. In thoſe meditations he retires from the throng of worldly deſires, as much as a man living alone in a wilderneſs withdraws from worldly buſineſſes; he is weaned from, and mortified to the plenty and pleaſures which a City life courts him with; nor is he afraid of the threatnings of any who would drive him from his duty. His Soul ſearcheth after, and he feeds upon the green things which every where grow upon the mountains of the holy Scriptures, both for his inſtruction and conſolation. All this I grant, as was ſaid before, is true of a godly man raiſed to any high degree of ſpiritualneſs, and walking much in the Spirit. He is in the World, yet ſits looſe and free from the bands and baits of it. Howbeit, this warrants no man to looſe himſelf from all bands of ſervice in the world, much leſs to be ſo groſs, as litterally to make that his Houſe, which God hath made the Houſe of the wild Aſs, The wilderneſs, or to take the barren Land for his dwelling.

As this verſe hath ſhewed us the houſe and dwelling of the wild Aſs, ſo the next ſhews us how he carries it in the wilderneſs.

Verſ. 7. He ſcorneth the multitude of the City, neither regardeth he the crying of the driver.

He ſcorneth;] The Hebrew is, He laugheth at, or ſlighteth, &c. The Lord ſpeaks of this wild Aſs after the manner of men, who laugh at thoſe things which they contemn, deſpiſe or ſcorn, as much below them or contrary to them: The word is rendred by laughing (Pſal.2.4. Job 5.22.) It is ſaid alſo of the good woman (*Prov.*31. 25.) She ſhall rejoyce in time to come; which others render thus, She laughed at time to come; That is, ſhe having ſo well and wiſely provided for time to come, is not at all burdened with cares about it. There may be a double reaſon, why this wild Aſs ſcorns, or laughs at the multitude of the City.

Inſignis metaphora ad notandum indomitam naturam.

Firſt, Becauſe it is no way pleaſing to his nature, he hath no deſire to a City, to a ſociable life.

Secondly, He may be ſaid to ſcorn the multitude of the City, becauſe though a multitude ſhould come out of a City to take him, Yea, as great a multitude as a City can make, yet he is not afraid, for he knows he can ſhew them a fair pair of heels, and by his ſwiftneſs of foot keep out of their hands, and maintain his liberty.

Farther, The words Tranſlated, The multitude of the City, may be rendred, The abundance or plenty of the City. If there be abundance any where, it is in Cities; and therefore Heaven is called a City, becauſe of the great abundance of all good there, and all in God. Thus the word is rendred (Pſal. 37. 16.) A little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked; That is, than all their large ſums of money, of Gold and Silver, as alſo then their large inheritances of Houſes and Lands. The word may bear that ſenſe in the Text, and 'tis a good ſenſe; the wild Aſs ſcorns the abundance of the City, he can content himſelf with the barren Land; he cares not though he fare hard, ſo he may live free from hard labour; he ſcorneth, both the multitude and plenty of the City;

המיד
Copia, i. e. opes & divitiæ, q. d. nihil appetit ex abundantia exuperantiave civium. Malit in ſterilibus locis raram & malam herbam quærere, quam in urbe ſervire pro victu copioſo. Gerit ergo paupertatis imaginem, cap. 24. 5.

Neither regardeth he the crying of the driver.

The word is, He heareth not, That is, he obeyeth not the crying of the driver. This is ſpoken in oppoſition to tame beaſts, for ſuch muſt regard the crying of the driver, elſe they muſt ſmart for it; if the driver ſpeaks, they underſtand his language, they muſt mend their pace, and follow their work more cloſely, or feel the drivers laſh. Here then is a farther deſcription of the liberty of the wild Aſs; he is not brought to work by any thing that the driver can ſay or do, he is not afraid either of his words or blows.

נוגש

μέμψιν φορολόγου. Querelam ejus qui tributum colligit. Sept. Vocatur autem Exactor, non modo qui tributa exigit, ſed qui per vis urget. Druſ.

The word which we Tranſlate Driver, ſignifies an Oppreſſor; ſo 'tis rendred (Job 3. 18.) It ſignifies alſo an Exactor. The ſeventy Tranſlate, He regardeth not the haſty call or citation of the gatherer of Taxes or of Tribute. There are two ſorts of Exactors; Firſt, thoſe that exact Tribute; Secondly, thoſe who exact Labour. Now he that drives cattel, urgeth them to work both by hand and tongue, and ſo exacts labour of them. Hence the word is uſed to expreſs the Task-maſters of the Iſraelites in Egypt (Exod. 5. 6.) who indeed exacted labour of them, and made them ſerve with rigor. From theſe Oppreſſors, with the Exactors of labour, the wild Aſs is free; he is at ſuch liberty, that he regards not the cry of the driver, Exactor or Oppreſſor; nor will he be brought to work by fair means nor by foul. As that was a proverbial ſpeech to ſhew the tranquility of thoſe times (Iſa. 14. 8.) Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up againſt us; So this ſeems to be a proverbial ſpeech, ſhewing the liberty of the wild Aſs at all times, He regardeth not the crying of the Driver.

From the former part of the Verſe,

When 'tis ſaid, He laughs at, or ſcorns the multitude of the City. Taking the word City, as oppoſed to the wilderneſs or barren Land,

> Note; Cities as they are full of company, ſo they are accompanied with all manner of outward plenty and fulneſs.

If good things are to be had any where for love or money, it is in Cities; and therefore they who dwell in great Cities, where there is ſuch a multitude of people, and abundance of all things, ſhould remember their priviledg; 'tis a mercy they are not in a wilderneſs, or in a barren Land.

Secondly, In that it is ſaid, He ſcorns the multitude of the City.

> Note; No ſociety, no company pleaſeth, but that which is ſutable.

What cares the wild Aſs for the company of men? He had rather be among the wild Aſſes, than among the beſt and wiſeſt men. Bad men, who are like wild beaſts, ſcorn the company of good men, and it is as true of good men, that they have no joy in the company of bad men, yea, they are often burdened with their company. The content of our lives doth very much conſiſt in our harmony with, and congeniality to thoſe whom we are engaged to converſe with.

Thirdly, Take the word in the other ſenſe, as noting the abundance or plenty that is in the City, the wild Aſs had rather be in his barren Land then there.

> Hence we learn; Liberty is more pleaſing then plenty, and a wilderneſs with poor fare, then a City where there is oppreſſion.

Better be ſometimes in a ſtarving condition, than always in a fearing condition, always hearing the cry of the Driver. The wild Aſs is content to fare hard, ſo he may be free: how much more then is he below a man, who parts with his true liberty, as Eſau did with his Birth-right, for a morſel of meat, or a meſs of broth?

> Fourthly, Note; To be driven and forced, is grievous to beaſts, much more to men.

The wild Aſs regards not the crying of the Driver, becauſe he knows the Driver cannot reach him with his cry, much leſs with his whip. The tame Aſs muſt regard and attend the cry of the Driver (though he hath no will to it) whether he will or no. It was ſaid by the Moraliſts, Man would be led, not driven; perſwaded, not compelled. The diſputes have been great what man may do, and how far he may go to that matter; but I ſhall not meddle with it any further, then to ſay, that when Chriſt in the Parable ſaid (Luke 14. 23.) Compel them to come in, The compulſion there intended, is only that of argumentation, exhortation and perſwaſion by his Miniſters, whoſe divine Rhetorick in beſeeching ſinners to come in, and to be reconciled unto God, hath ſuch a power in it, as amounts unto, and may be called a compulſion. I grant, many uſe their liberty, or rather abuſe it, as an occaſion to the fleſh, and turn it into wantonneſs, theſe are indeed no better then wild Aſſes; and though they are ſuch as regard not the cry of the Driver, yet they need it.

Thus the Lord hath ſhewed Job the houſe and dwelling, as alſo the liberties and priviledges of the wild Aſs; in the next verſe the Lord ſhews him the food or diet of the wild Aſs.

Verſ. 8. The range of the mountains is his paſture, and he ſearcheth after every green thing.

Inveſtigatio montium (eſt) paſcuum ejus, i. e. quicquid in montibus inveſtigari poteſt, id ei pabuli loco eſt. Bez.

This verſe tells us where the Lord hath made proviſion for the wild Aſs. The Range (or as ſome render, the ſearch) of the mountains is his paſture; That is, whatſoever he ſearcheth and findeth out upon the mountains, is his paſture. Job ſpeaketh of wicked men (Chap. 24. 5.) after the manner of theſe wild Aſſes, finding food in the wilderneſs for themſelves, and for their Children.

The range of the mountains is his paſture.

Some interpret it choice things, That is, the beſt things, or thoſe things that are moſt ſavoury to the pallat of that beaſt, thoſe he picks up for his food. Mr. Broughton Tranſlates, Choſen places in the mountains are for his paſture: As if it had been ſaid, Though he be wild, yet he is prudent, he takes not what comes next, but he chuſeth what is beſt for him; for as it followeth,

He ſearcheth after every green thing.

The word notes a very diligent ſearch, after every green thing. Green things are his delicacies, he lives upon them, and delights in them; he ſearcheth after all, and feeds upon that which is beſt for him; he looks not that man ſhould fodder him in winter, as they do tame, and working cattel, he looks out his own living, and picks up ſome green thing or other all the year long.

> Hence Note; Where God gives dwelling, he gives feeding.

God hath made the wilderneſs and barren places for the wild Aſs to dwell in, yet there is ſomething for him to feed on.

> Secondly, His food is every green thing.

> (Whence Learn; God gives food to all creatures convenient to their nature.)

He gives green things, graſs to the beaſts of the field; but he doth not feed man with graſs, he feedeth man with the fineſt of the wheat, and with honey out of the rock (Pſal. 81. 16.) And as the Lord provides ſutable food for the bodies of men, ſo for their Souls he hath ſpiritual green paſtures for them (Pſal. 23. 1, 2.) The Lord is my Shepherd, I ſhall not want; he maketh me to lie down in green paſtures; That is, in his Word and Ordinances. They are green paſtures for his people; he makes them lie down in the Promiſes and in the Commandments, in the holy Prophecies and Hiſtories of the written word; all which are written for our inſtruction or learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope (Rom. 15. 4.) That is, that our faith having the truth of the Word (eſpecially in the promiſes) to feed upon, our hope may be ſaid to wait for the good of the Word patiently. The holy Scriptures (I ſay) are the green paſtures which the Lord hath provided for the Souls of men to feed in, and grow fat upon. The Scriptures are a bare common, a dry heath to unbelievers they find nothing there which is food for them; but to believers they are fat paſtures, and full of ſuch green things as are moſt ſutable to their taſte, and nouriſhing to their Souls. Thus ſpake the Prophet (Iſa. 49. 9, 10.) Their paſtures ſhall be in all high places; they ſhall not hunger nor thirſt, neither ſhall the heat nor the Sun ſmite them; That is, they ſhall have ſafe paſſage, and ſufficient food, both for Soul and Body, for their Souls eſpecially, when delivered out of their ſoul-priſons, or ſpiritual captivity, there ſpoken or propheciced of, under the Goſpel.

Thirdly, Wild Aſſes ſearch after every green thing, they take pains for their living; if it be not neer, they will travel for it, and ſeek after it.

Hence Note; Hunger makes irrational creatures, every living creature, induſtrious.

They who love not labour, will yet take ſome pains, at leaſt ſo much as ſerves them to get food, and keep them alive. Thoſe beaſts which are moſt at liberty, are in a kind of bondage to their bellies. The wild Aſſes (ſaith the Prophet, *Jer.*14.6.) did ſtand in the high places, they ſnuffed up the wind like Dragons, becauſe there was no graſs. How will they ſearch after graſs, who are thus afflicted for want of graſs! And will not ſpiritual hunger make us as induſtrious as natural hunger doth? Hungry Souls will be ſeeking after every green thing, after every divine precept, after every precious promiſe; theſe are the green things which the Soul ſearcheth for, and is ſatisfied with. Naturaliſts ſay of the wild Aſs, that he utterly refuſeth to feed upon thoſe things that are dry and dead, he muſt have green. That's true of every believer, he cannot feed upon dead and dry things, upon what is chaffy and husky, he muſt have green, ſappy, juicy, lively food; ſuch hath God provided for him, and he will be ſatisfied with none but ſuch.

VERS. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee? Or abide by thy Crib?
Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his bands in the furrow? Or will he harrow the valleys after thee?
Wilt thou truſt him, becauſe his ſtrength is great? Or wilt thou leave thy labour with him?
Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy ſeed, and gather it into thy Barn?

THe Lord ſtill enquires after Job's skill and knowledg in the Book of the creatures. In the former context, Job was interrogated about the wild Aſs, whoſe freedom was there ſet out, in oppoſition to the ſervitude of the home-bred or tame Aſs. Here the Lord puts the Queſtion about the Unicorn, and ſets forth his liberty, in oppoſition to the ſervile labour of the Oxe.

Verſ. 9. Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee? Or abide by thy Crib?

The Unicorns liberty is here deſcribed, Firſt, more generally, in two things.

Firſt, He will do no work for man.

Secondly, He will receive no reward from man.

That he hath no mind to work for man, is ſhewed in the firſt words of the verſe: Will he be willing to ſerve thee? Will he be imployed in thy ſervice?

And that he cares not to be fed or provided for by man, that he looks for no reward from man, is ſet down in the latter part of the verſe; Will he abide by thy crib?

Secondly, The ſtubborn liberty of the Unicorn is deſcribed in this context, more particularly, by his refuſal of that ſpecial labour which is neceſſary in husbandry, or for the tillage of the ground, in the whole compaſs of it; and here are three parts of that labour ſet down, all refuſed by the Unicorn.

Firſt, The ploughing of the ground in the 10. Verſe; Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band in the furrow? He will not go to plough.

The ſecond labour with which beaſts are wrought in husbandry, is harrowing the ground; the Unicorn will not touch that, as 'tis ſaid in the cloſe of the 10. Verſe, Will he harrow the valleys after thee? No, he will neither plough nor harrow, he will do none of theſe works though he have ſtrength enough to do them, as appears (Verſ. 11.) Wilt thou truſt him, becauſe his ſtrength is great? Or wilt thou leave thy labour to him?

The third part of husbandry, about which beaſts are uſed, is the bringing of the Corn in, or the home-bringing of it; the Unicorn will lend no help to that work neither, as is ſhewed in the 12. Verſe, Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy ſeed, and gather it into thy Barn?

Thus the Unicorn will neither ſerve in general, nor do any of theſe particular ſervices; he will neither plough nor harrow, nor bring home the ſeed. The Unicorn is a beaſt unſubject to, and unſubduable by man, yet ſubject to God, and by him eaſily ſubduable; for (as the Apoſtle ſpake in another caſe, Phil. 3.21.) He is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf.

We may conceive, the ſcope and intendment of the Lord in putting theſe Queſtions to Job about the Unicorn, was to ſhew, that if he could not tame or reduce ſuch a creature as the Unicorn to his Plow and Harrow, then he muſt not think of bringing God to his bow, who made both the Unicorn and man too. Surely God will be at his liberty, to do with man what he pleaſeth, do man what he can, ſeeing the Unicorn will take liberty to do what he pleaſeth, notwithſtanding all that man can do. God will not be bound up to, nor tyed by any mans dictates, but remains ſoveraignly free for ever, in all his diſpenſations. Thus of the whole matter in general: I ſhall now open the particulars mentioned about this unſerviceable Creature the Unicorn.

Verſ. 9. Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee?

The Original word Tranſlated Unicorn, denotes an animal, high and ſtately. It comes from a root which ſignifies to be exalted or lifted up; and hence David (Pſal. 92.10.) teſtifying his aſſurance that God would lift him up out of his troubles, and deliver him from his preſſures, compares his hoped for exaltation to that of the Unicorn: My horn ſhalt thou exalt like the horn of an Unicorn, I ſhall be anointed with freſh oil; That is, I ſhall have new and ſufficient ſupplies of grace, and gifts, of joy and conſolation.

רים & ראם dicitur à רום quod altum eſſe ſignificat. Monoceros unicum habet cornu, ſed altum, unde appellatio ejus.

This word (Reem) which in the Hebrew bears only that general ſignification Highneſs, is rendred by the Seventy in Greek Monoceros, and by the Latines Unicornis, both which anſwer our Engliſh term Unicorn; the notation of all theſe words in the Greek, Latin, and Engliſh imports a beaſt with one horn, whereas (I ſay) the Hebrew word imports only the highneſs or nobleneſs of that animal or beaſt intended under it.

μονόκερως. 70. Unicornis. Lat.

Natural Hiſtorians, in their deſcriptions of, and diſcourſes about the beaſts of the Earth, make report of an Indian Aſs with one horn, as alſo of Indian Oxen with one horn, which may therefore, according to the ſenſe of the word, be called Unicorns. Our late Annotators ſeem ſeem to incline, that by the word Reem here rendred Unicorn, is meant the wild Bull rather than the Unicorn, becauſe as the wild Aſs is here oppos'd to the tame, ſo the wild Bull ſeems to be oppos'd to the Oxe, which is a tame creature and fitted for the ſervice of man.

Ariſt. *l.*2. de Hiſt. Animal. c. 1. Plin. *l.*8. c. 21. l. 11. c. 37.

The Vulgar Latin Tranſlation reads it, the Rhinoceros, and ſo doth one of the Greek interpreters; and in our Engliſh Tranſlation (*Iſa.*34.7.) we put the word Unicorns in the Text, and Rhinocerots in the Margin. The notation of which word (Rhinocerot) imports a beaſt with a horn on his noſe or ſnout. The Rhinoceros is a large beaſt, near in bigneſs (ſay ſome) to the Elephant, only ſhorter in his legs. And the deſcription or character which one of the Ancients gives of the Rhinoceros, is very ſutable to, and doth fully correſpond with that which the Lord gives here in this Text of that ſavage beaſt (Reem) by us rendred the Unicorn: For (ſaith my Author) The Rhinoceros is a proud imperious animal ſuch as will not be ſubject to man, nor be brought to obedience, living perpetually in deſart places, and ſecuring himſelf from danger by his Horn.

Numquid volet Rhinoceros ſervire tibi? Vulg. ῥινόκερως. Aquil.

Baſil. in Pſal. 29. 6.

Further, It is ſaid of this Rhinoceros.

Firſt, That he is a mortal enemy to the Elephant, whom he aſſaults fiercely; and having ſharpen'd, or as it were whetted his horn at a ragged rock, that his weapon may be fit for the bloody battle, he wounds him under the belly, where he knows the Elephant is moſt in danger, that being his ſofteſt part.

Cornu ad ſaxa limato, præparat ſe pugnæ. Plin. l. 8. c. 20.

Secondly, Some to carry the ſenſe of the word Unicorn to this other creature, ſay, the Rhinoceros hath but one horn; whereas others affirm confidently, that the Rhinoceros hath two horns, one upon his Noſe, and another upon his Brow, though not ſo big as that other. One of the old Poets ſpeaking of the Roman ſports, deſcribes a Rhinoceros thus, He toſſed the Bear that was brought before him with his double horn. Sanctius (in his Comment upon this verſe) ſaith he ſaw a Rhinoceros which was, brought into Spain,

Namque gravem gemino cornu ſic extulit urſum, Jactat ut impoſitas taurus in aſtra pilas. Mart. in ſuo Amphitheatro Epigram. 22.

Spain, in whom he obſerved all things anſwering the deſcription given of him by the Ancients.

What the ſhape or form of the Unicorn is, as ordinarily painted and ſet up with the Lion, as a ſupporter of the Royal Arms, and as a ſign at many common mens doors, every one knows. Some Hiſtorians ſpeaking of the Unicorn, paint him out thus in their Books and writings. Pliny in his eighth Book, at the one and twentieth Chap. ſaith, the Monocerote or Unicorn (whom he there calls a moſt fierce ſavage beaſt) is in the general make or bulk of his body like a Horſe, and in the ſhape of his head like a Hart or Stag, that in the faſhion of his feet he is much like an Elephant, his tail reſembling the tail of a Boar, that he hath a black horn in the midſt of his fore-head two cubits in length, which ſay others, is not ſmooth, but wreathed, and ſomewhat ragged, and at the very top or point exceeding ſharp. He is of ſo fierce a nature, that he will not be taken alive, as the ſame Author affirms from hearſay.

Aſperrimam feram. Plin. l. 8. c. 21. Ælian. l. 7. c. 3. Scal. Exercit. 205. Geſner.

Hanc feram vivam negant capi. Id ubi ſupra.

Yet there want not thoſe who make doubt whether there be, yea who deny that there is any ſuch beaſt in the compaſs of nature, as commonly called an Unicorn, having ſuch a medicinal horn as is aſſerted; and therefore all thoſe Scriptures, wherein this word (Reem) in the Text Tranſlated Unicorn, is uſed, They who are of that opinion, Tranſlate Rhinocerote, as not being ſatisfied that there is ſuch a creature as that other in the World. One of the Rabbins collects an objection againſt him from that of Moſes (Deut. 33. 17.) where ſpeaking of this beaſt (Reem) he ſeems to ſay that he hath more horns than one, therefore no Unicorn; for there deſcribing the flouriſhing and powerful eſtate of the Tribe of Joſeph, he ſaith, his horns are like the horns of an Unicorn; as if that beaſt (whatſoever it is which is ſignified by that Hebrew word) had more horns than one. We indeed Tranſlate both words plurally, not the horns of an Unicorn, but the horns of Unicorns, yet the Hebrew is ſingular. However I conceive this objection is of no weight, to the denial of any ſuch creature as the Unicorn, it being frequent in Scripture to put the ſingular number for the plural, as there Unicorn for Unicorns; and therefore that Text hath little or no force in it to invalidate their opinion, who aſſert that there is ſuch an one horned animal.

Singularis numerus, ibi poſitus eſt pro numero multitudinis, ut ſit Unicornis pro Unicornium; ſic arbor ponitur pro arboribus, rana pro ranis, &c. Druſ. Confuſio numerorum in hac lingua frequens eſt. Merc.

Now as to the Text in hand, it may ſuffice my purpoſe (leaving farther ſearch of theſe things to Naturaliſts) to ſay, that the Hebrew word Reem ſignifies a wild beaſt, very fierce and furious, uſually called an Unicorn, or expreſſed by a word ſignifying a beaſt having but one horn in Greek, Latin, and Engliſh.

Cæſar Scaliger, dicit ſe vidiſſe monocerotis cornu, & quidem diverſi coloris, unum ſuffulvum unum ſubluteum, &c.

But though I ſhall not deliver any opinion of my own to the contrary, yet I ſuppoſe it will not be unpleaſing to the ingenuous and learned Reader, if before I proceed with my own meditations, upon what is ſaid in this Chapter, about this creature, I here inſert the diſcourſe and opinion of that learned Phyſitian, and Divine Critick, Doctor Arnoldus Bootius, in the third Book of his Sacred Animadverſions upon the Hebrew Text of the Old Teſtament, and the firſt Chapter of that Book: The ſubſtance of which I have gathered, and in moſt places Tranſlated word for word, as followeth.

‘That the word Reem (ſaith he) is the name of ſome certain Animal all Writers agree; but what this Animal is, is not agreed. Hierome renders it ſometimes a Rhinocerote, ſometimes an Unicorn; and ſo do ſome others in Tranſlating the Bible. Pagnine Tranſlates it only once a Rhinocerote, in all other places where it occurs, an Unicorn; yet in his Dictionary he ſeems to incline, that the word ſignifyeth a Rhinocerote, rather then an Unicorn. But the Greeks generally are more conſtant in rendring it an Unicorn, than a Rhinocerote; and in this almoſt all interpreters, both they who Tranſlate the Scriptures into the Latin tongue, and they who Tranſlate them into their Mother tongue, follow them, and do ſo too; the Rabbins alſo go the ſame way. And therefore one of them writing upon thoſe words of Moſes concerning Joſeph (Deut. 33. 17.) His horns are like the horns of (Reem) an Unicorn (which ſeems to oppoſe this opinion which makes Reem to be the Unicorn; a beaſt of one horn; he I ſay, to avoid this difficulty) ſaith that place is to be underſtood by an Enallage or change of the number, the word Reem Unicorn, being put for Reemim, Unicorns; with which anſwer ſeveral others wipe off that objection.

‘Nor doth it a little help this interpretation that moſt of thoſe marks, which the Scripture takes notice of in that beaſt called Reem, namely, his extream fierceneſs, great ſtrength, and the extraordinary magnitude of his horn, are all aſcribed by Authors to the Unicorn.

‘Yet to me this interpretation ſeem the leſs probable, becauſe Unicorns are found only in India, ſay they, who have written of them. Now it is not likely, that Moſes, David, and the Prophets ſhould ſpeak ſo often of, and take ſimilitudes from, and that God himſelf ſhould ſpend ſo much time in a diſcourſe with Job about a creature unknown in their Countries. And it muſt needs be, that he was there (and to them) unknown, if no Country nearer then India produced the Unicorn; for the world was not ſo diſcovered in thoſe times, by mutual commerce, that living creatures, and things proper to Nations, ſhould be familiarly or much known, in Nations far remote. Of this we have a clear inſtance in the Elephant, of which famous animal, ſo uſeful to man for various ſervices, and ſo abounding in many parts of Africa and Aſia, the Iſraelites ſeem to have had little or no knowledg at all; which we may well conjecture by that deep ſilence in Scripture concerning him, there being no mention made of the Elephant any where but in the Book of Job: And Job was not an Iſraelite, nor an inhabitant of Canaan, but of Arabia; whoſe neighbours on the other ſide of the Red-Sea, the Æthiopians and Troglodites abounded with Elephants. And this is the more to be marvelled at, becauſe Ivory, which is nothing elſe but an Elephants tooth, was ſo well known and common in Judea. Now, if the Elephant, of whoſe teeth they had plenty, and which were bred in great numbers in Countries much nearer then Judea, was ſo little known to the Jews, who can believe that the Unicorn, which was proper to India, ſhould be known to them?

‘But we have another, and that a ſtronger argument, againſt this interpretation; namely, that we account the report of this Unicorn to be a meer fable, and that no ſuch animal, as this is deſcribed and commonly believed to be, is at preſent in the World, or ever was. For Cleſias, a moſt vain man, and who, moved only with a love to lying, hath brought in very many, and thoſe moſt monſtrous figments in his Books of the Indians, is the Father of this ſtory, from whom Pliny, Ælian, and all who have written of the Unicorn, received and took it up.

‘And that Cleſias lied, as in many other things, ſo in this alſo, we may hence conjecture, becauſe this animal was never ſeen at Rome; in whoſe ſhews, all the rareſt animals which this half part of the World, containing Aſia, with Europe and Africa, ever produced, were wont to be preſented to publick view, and thoſe not only fetcht from within the bounds of the Romane power, but from the Empire of the Parthians, and from the furtheſt parts of India and Æthiopia. For to omit many other wild beaſts, Tigers, &c. (None of which were bred in the Romane Territories) Rome often ſaw Rhinocerotes, which are bred only in India. So that Ariſtides ſpake but the truth in his Encomium of Rome, when he ſaid, All things meet here, whatſoever is bred or made; and whatſoever is not ſeen here, is to be reckoned among thoſe things which are not, nor ever were. Seeing then, in thoſe many ages, wherein that cuſtom continued, of ſhewing the ſtrangeſt beaſts that could be found all the world over at Rome, the Unicorn, among all the ſtrange beaſts, was never ſeen there, it gives a ground of ſtrong ſuſpition, that there is no ſuch animal in the whole compaſs of nature.

‘Moreover, in theſe times, wherein no corner of the World hath been unſearcht, and all things in them as well known to us, as thoſe which are bred at our own homes; there is no man will ſay, that he ever ſaw this animal, except Ludovicus Vartomannus, who writes that he had ſeen two. But it weakens his credit in this report, both that he is found in other matters to tell fables for truths, as alſo, becauſe what he ſaith of the Unicorn, differs ſo much from what hath been ſaid by others.

'Certain it is, that Garcias ab Horto, in thoſe many years which he ſpent in India, as Phyſician to the Kings Vicegerent (in all which time, he had great acquaintance with very many learned men of that Country, and had the favour of their Kings, and was himſelf a moſt diligent ſearcher after ſuch like matters, He, I ſay) did not only not ſee any Unicorn there, but could not get any certain information concerning him; only he met with ſome perſons, who told him, that in the furtheſt parts of Africa they had ſeen a beaſt having but one horn. Yet, ſuppoſe theſe men told him the truth, it makes nothing as to the Unicorn ſo much ſpoken of, with which that, according to their obſervation, hath little agreement; that being an Amphibion, and having a horn not paſſing two handfuls in length. My own Country-man alſo, Johannes Hugonis Linſchotius, who was an induſtrious inquirer after Natural things, having reſided twelve whole years in the City Goa, one of the moſt famous among all the Cities of India, and to which is brought whatſoever is rare and of eſteem in thoſe Countries, did never ſee an Unicorn, nor yet hear by any worthy of credit, that their was any ſuch animal in all thoſe parts, and therefore accounts the report of an Unicorn to be meerly fabulous; as may appear by what he Writes in the 47. Chapter of his Itinerary; where ſpeaking of the Rhinocerote he ſaith, that is taken by many for the Monocerote or Unicorn: Foraſmuch as no other Unicorn is found or known, but only in reports and Pictures.

'We have ſhewed what moveth us not to aſſent to them, who ſay, that by the word Reem, we are to underſtand the Unicorn. And they who render it the Rhinocerote, may with no leſs eaſe be refuted. And the firſt argument brought againſt the former expoſition, may ſerve here; ſeeing the Rhinocerote is only bred in thoſe remoteſt parts of the Eaſt, Bengala, Patane and Cambaya, all which lie beyond the River Ganges, in the utmoſt India.

'But beſides this, there are two other unanſwerable arguments againſt that interpretation.

'Firſt, From their horns. Thoſe animals called Reem have very large horns, but the Rhinocerots have very ſmall ones: And though Martial the Poet ſeems to ſay the contrary, while ſpeaking of the Rhinocerote, he ſaith, How powerful was he with his horn, who could toſs a Bull with it like a Ball! And though Nicolaus Contius in his Itinerary, reports it as long as a mans arm, yet experience and eye-ſight have confuted them; to which it appears, that the horn of the Rhinocerote is very thick and ſtrong at the root, yet very ſhort: For Geſner tells us, that his horn planted upon his Noſe, riſeth no higher then his Ears, and therefore it cannot be long. Bucer makes uſe of this argument, in his Commentary upon the ſecond Pſalm, affirming that the height of the horn, aſcribed to that animal the Reem, will not agree with the Rhinoceros.

Quantus erat cornu cui pila taurus erat.

'The Second argument is grounded upon the unconquerable fierceneſs of that animal called Reem; whereas the Rhinocerote, though with ſome difficulty, may be in ſome meaſure tamed, as hath been ſeen in thoſe at ſeveral times brought into Portugal.

'Thus laying aſide (for the reaſons forementioned) that interpretation, which makes this Reem to be either the Unicorn or the Rhinocerote, we are now to conſider what animal this Reem ſhould be: And ſurely it cannot but be ſome beaſt (Bubulo generi affinis) of the race of Bulls or Bullocks; ſeeing in many places of Scripture, mention is made of the Reemim and Bullocks together, as intimating that they are animals of a near cognation or likeneſs, Deut.33.19. Pſal.27.6. Iſa.34.6,7. In this laſt place the Prophet having named three living Creatures of one kind (Verſ. 6.) to wit, Lambs, and Goats, and Rams; Reaſon may perſwade our belief, that in the 7. or following Verſe (which ſeems to run parallel with the former) the Prophet obſerves the ſame rule of ſpeaking; and to thoſe two Bullocks and Bulls, joyns this third called Reemim, being beaſts belonging, at leaſt, to the ſame kind with them.

'I find the ſame confirmed Pſal.22. by comparing thoſe words of the 12. Verſe, Many Bulls have compaſſed me; ſtrong Bulls of Baſhan have beſet me round; with thoſe of the 21. (which anſwer them) Save me from the Lions mouth, hear me (we read, thou haſt heard me) from the horns of the Reemims (we rendred Unicorns) as if the Pſalmiſt intended under the word Reemim, a ſort of beaſts much like in kind, if not of the ſame kind, with the Bullocks and ſtrong Bulls of Baſhan, ſpoken of before (as the learned Author endeavours there to make out more largely and diſtinctly) to whom I refer the Reader.

'By what hath been ſaid, I ſuppoſe we have made it appear plainly, that the beaſt meant by this word Reem, is an animal neer in kind to the Bull or Bullock, which can be no other then a wild Bull or Bullock, which is to other Bulls or Bullocks, as wild Swine, Boars or Sows, are to thoſe which are tame, or live and feed about our Houſes. But ſeeing there are ſeveral ſorts of theſe wild Bulls or Bullocks, we do not conceive the word Reem, to be a common appellation which may be given to them all, but that it ſignifies ſome one certain ſort among them. To find out which, will not be hard to thoſe who conſider what the Scripture holds out concerning the beaſt there called Reem; namely, the eminent greatneſs of his Horns, and the eminent greatneſs of his ſtrength; both which are aſcribed to him, not only Deuteronomy 33. 17. and Pſal. 22. but Pſal. 92. 10. My horn ſhalt thou exalt, like to the horn of a Reem; i. e. Thou ſhalt exalt it greatly and ſtrongly, even like the Horn of a Reem. This makes it evident, that this Reem cannot be that beaſt which Ariſtotle calls Bonaſus, nor that which later Writers call Bubalus or Bufalus (we in Engliſh, a Buffe) which is ſo far from being better fitted by his Horns, for fight and force, then our Bulls, that his Horns are indeed altogether unfit for either; as Ariſtotle ſhews (Lib. 3. de part. Anim. cap. 2.) his Horns being turned inward, and one againſt the other, and therefore (as he ſaith, Lib. 9. Hiſt. Animal. cap. 45.) are unuſeful for his own defence. The Horns indeed of ſome of thoſe beaſts, are of another faſhion, as Geſner deſcribes them, and alſo Scaliger, Exerc. 206. Sect. 3. but all conclude them unfit to fight with, becauſe they all are either turned one againſt another, or point downward.

'Now though this beaſt which Ariſtotle calls Bonaſus, others Bubalus or Bufalus, be of ſuch great ſtrength, as alſo of ſuch fierceneſs and untractableneſs, as may well ſuit the deſcription which the Scripture gives of the Reem; yet the form and faſhion of his Horns will by no means comply with it, notwithſtanding it muſt be granted, that they who have expounded Reem by that beaſt, have ſpoken more probably, and have come much neerer the truth, then they who underſtand by it, either the Unicorn or the Rhinocerote.

'There remains two ſorts of wild Oxen, Bulls or Bullocks, the Urus and Biſons; which latter is ſo like the Bonaſus, that by ſome he is taken for the ſame; yet between the Biſons, properly ſo called, and the Bonaſus or Bufalus, their Horns make a very remarkable difference. What the form of the Horns of the Bufalus is, hath been ſhewed; but the Biſons hath them a little bowing in the top or point, in which reſpect they are compared by Oppianus to brazen fiſh-hooks, but in the reſt or body of them they ſpread upward, or ſtand right up, and ſo not unfit to fight with, inſomuch that ſome have called them (Lethiferos tauros) deadly Bulls. And though we grant to Geſner (who denieth the Bonaſi and Biſontes to differ in ſpecie) that the difference which is between the Horns of theſe two beaſts, is not ſufficient to conſtitute a ſpecifical difference between them; yet when beſides the difference in their Horns, there are other conſtant differences, as namely, that the beaſt called Bonaſus doth not fight with his head, but with his heels, and runs away as ſoon as wounded (as Ariſtotle reports of him, Lib. 9. Hiſt. cap. 45.) whereas the beaſt called Biſons, uſeth his Horns only in fight, and is not at all diſcouraged by being wounded, but like a Boar or a Lion, aſſaults his purſuers the more fiercely (as is ſet forth at large by Sigiſmundus Lib. in Muſcovieticis) therefore we may well conclude, that there is a ſpecifical difference between theſe animals.

'Now though the beaſt called Biſons, conſidering the ‘greatneſs and ſtrength of his Horns, as alſo his fierceneſs, might be taken for the beaſt in Job, called Reem, yet he is not that beaſt, becauſe he may be tamed by the art of man, and made to put off his fierceneſs; as appears abundantly out of a good Author. But as for the beaſt called Reem, he never gives over the fierceneſs of his nature, nor can he be tamed or brought to hand; as appears fully, by what God ſaith of him in this 39. Chapter of the Book of Job. In which, when God had propoſed the more remarkable properties of ſeveral creatures to the conſideration of Job, he brings in this beaſt, called Reem, only to ſet forth this property, the unſubduable or untameable fierceneſs of his nature. So that all that God ſaith of him, may be reduced to this; That the Reem can neither by the skill nor power of man be brought to the yoak, nor made ſerviceable to man in any way, when as many other wild beaſts, no leſs eminent than he for ſtrength and fierceneſs, even Lions, Tygers, Elephants, Leopards, Bears, Rhinocerotes, have laid down their immanity, and become mild, and have ſuffered themſelves to be mannaged and governed by men, yea, and learn to acknowledg their Maſters, and ſerve them; whereas ſuch tractableneſs might rather be expected from the Reem (he being of the Bullocks kind, and living upon graſs) than from any of them; all which except the Elephant and Rhinocerote are ravenous, and delighting in blood and ſlaughter, live upon ſpoyl and prey.

Pauſanias in Phocicis.

‘And that we may the more wonder at the unſubduable nature of the Reem, the Lord ſhews the ſame to be in the wild Aſs, a weak and harmleſs animal, and which hath neither ſtrength nor inclination to do hurt; then which nothing can be ſaid or imagined more wonderful, that wild Aſſes, whole flocks of which, even a ſingle boy will put to flight and chaſe, yet will by no means be tamed, whereas Tygers and Lions, one of which will ſtand a band of armed men, and ſometimes put them to flight, ſhould notwithſtanding be tamed, even to yield ſervile obedience. No other reaſon can be given of this, but only, becauſe it hath ſeemed good to God, the Author of nature, to order it ſo.

‘Now in that God is pleaſed to diſcover the untameable nature of the Reem by theſe marks or ſigns, namely, that he ſcorns to plow the ground, or do any work that belongs to Husbandry. Hence it doth more clearly appear, which we have above confirmed by many Scriptures, that the Reem is an animal of the ſame kind with Bullocks; foraſmuch as the ſenſe of the diſcourſe of God about him, is as if he had ſaid, Seeing among thoſe beaſts which are prepared by men to help them in their work, and whoſe labour they eaſe in tilling and ſubduing the Earth, the Oxe is chief, as being mans moſt laborious helper in Husbandry, and which in moſt Countreys is more uſed in it then any other beaſt, according to that (Prov. 14. 4.) Much increaſe is by the ſtrength of the Oxe. How comes it to paſs, that men do not make uſe of the Reem for thoſe ſervices, ſeeing he is of the ſame kind with Oxen, and ſo may ſeem to be made by nature for that purpoſe as much as other Oxen, and is by ſo much the fitter for that ſervice, then any other Oxen or Bulls whatſoever, by how much his ſtrength is greater then theirs, yet no man attempts to uſe him in it; or if any did, it were to no purpoſe, foraſmuch as I the Lord of nature have created this beaſt, as alſo the wild Aſs before ſpoken of, altogether untameable. This ſeems to be the meaning of God in his diſcourſe about the Reem. And hence alſo it appears, that the Reem is not the Biſons, ſeeing he, as well as many other wild beaſts, being skilfully handled, proves tame and gentle, and may be formed to the uſe and obedience of man.

‘It remains therefore, that this Reem is the beaſt called Vrus, becauſe this property of untameableneſs is aſcribed to that beaſt. Cæſar in his ſixth Book of the Gallican War, ſaith, The Vri, no not the young ones, will not be tamed by men, wherefore being caught in pits, they are killed. Pliny alſo ſaith as much of them, Lib. 8. Cap. 21.

‘And as in this particular, his untameable wildneſs, there is a full agreement between the Vrus and Reem, ſo thoſe other things which the Scripture ſpeaks of the Reem agree to him alſo, as thoſe forreign Authors witneſs, who have written his Hiſtory. For Cæſar writes, that he is in bigneſs, little leſs than an Elephant, but of the kind, colour and figure, or ſhape of a Bull. And Pliny in two places (Lib. 8 Cap. 15. Lib. 28. Cap. 10) names wild Oxen as the Genus, with reſpect both to the Vri and Biſontes.

The learned Doctor adds many more proofs out of ancient Authors, which the Reader may peruſe, if he pleaſe, at his leiſure. And from all he concludeth.

‘It is not therefore to be doubted, but that the Reems are the Vri; and indeed ſo much the leſs, becauſe not only the Northern Regions (in divers parts of which, it is ſaid by Writers, that not only the Biſontes, but Vri, are found at this day) are the proper ſoil where theſe Animals are bred, but the Eaſtern parts alſo bring them forth. Pliny Writes, that the Indian woods are full of them, and ſo doth Ariſtotle, I collect alſo out of Diodorus (*Lib.*3.) that the Country of the Trogloditicks, which is ſeated at the boſom of the Red-Sea, oppoſite to Africa, hath theſe Vri in it.

‘And though no Author doth affirm, that Syria and Paleſtine yield theſe wild Oxen, yet this doth not hinder, but that in old times, when the Iſraelites firſt inhabited thoſe Countreys, they were there; ſince it is no new thing, that the whole kind of ſome wild creatures ſhould be utterly extinct in theſe Countreys, where formerly they have abounded, of which England gives us a plain teſtimony in Wolves. Dion alſo reports the ſame of Lions, which ſometimes were bred in ſome parts of Europe, but now for many ages have not appeared there. And the ſame witneſſeth Ammianus (*Lib.*22.) concerning the Hippopotami in Egypt, of which none are to be found now in that Country.

Thus far the learned Doctor, whoſe diſcourſe may be of much advantage and profit to the Reader, for the better underſtanding of this place.

Bochartus parte poſter. l. 3. c. 27.

But I find he hath a great Antagoniſt, who though he agreeth with him in the negative part of his opinion and diſcourſe, That the Reem here ſpoken of in Job, is neither the Unicorn nor the Rhinocerote, nor the Bufalus, nor the Biſons; yet he doth not agree with him in the affirmative part of his opinion, that the Reem is that ſavage beaſt or wild Ox called Vrus; but firſt gives a large account why the Reem cannot be that beaſt called Vrus, nor any of that kind; and then concludes, that it is a kind of Goat, or of the Goatiſh kind, by name the Oryx, being an animal in colour pure white, in ſtature tall, in diſpoſition fierce and untractable, in his gate ſtately, lifting up his head and horns on high. That this beaſt is the Reem here ſpoken of, he proves by various teſtimonies, taken eſpecially out of the ancient Arabian, Chaldean, and Hebrew Writers, and endeavours to remove ſeveral objections ariſing from the ſeeming incompetency of any beaſt of the Goatiſh rank or kind, to anſwer the deſcription given of that noble animal called Reem, both in the Text and in many other places of Scripture.

Thus the learned are much divided in opinion about this Creature, and upon which to determine is not eaſie.

Yet becauſe the word Reem is every where in Scripture rendred by our Tranſlators (as alſo by many others of great authority) Unicorn; I ſhall leave that matter of difference to the Readers judgment, and do that reverence to our Tranſlation, as to open the Text diſtinctly, in all that is here ſaid by the Lord concerning the Reem, under that name or title, Unicorn.

Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee?

In theſe words, the Lord preſents man, as it were, inviting, wooing, hiring the Unicorn to ſerve him. But when he hath uſed all his skill and cunning, when he hath done his beſt and worſt too, That is, uſed all manner of means, the Unicorn will not by any means be wrought upon, to come under mans yoak, or do his work. Will the Unicorn

Be willing to ſerve thee?] To will, is an act of reaſon, and therefore to be willing, is not proper to irrational Animals; yet to will and to be willing, may alluſively be given to them: They have a kind of will, and an understanding befitting their kind. The Hebrew word ſignifies to will with much readineſs and propenſity of mind, it ſignifies willingneſs with delight; and thence comes the Hebrew word for a Father, becauſe a Father is willing and ready to take care of, and provide for his Children, though it coſt him much travel and pains. But,

אבח Voluit propenſo animo fuit, unde אב pater, à propenſa voluntate erga liberos.

Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee? Will he be a ready ſervant to thee? He will not. As if it had been ſaid, The Unicorn is an indocible, and an untractable animal; he will not be brought to hand, he will neither bear the yoak, nor wear the bridle, nor indure to be harneſſed like the Ox and Horſe; let man do what he will, what he can with him, he will neither go to Plow nor Cart, not he.

Num acquieſcet aut conſentiet ex ſuapte natura, ut tibi ſubjiciatur?

Hence Note; Firſt, Service ſhould be done with willingneſs, or with the will.

It is the commendation of a ſervant, when he doth his Maſters work with his will, more then with his hand. Man ſhould be as willing to ſerve, as he is to be ſerved, as willing to obey, as to rule; nor doth any man know truly how to command, but he that knows how to obey, and when called, is willing to obey in the ſervice of God; nothing is done to him, unleſs it be done with the will, and therefore the full effect of the work of the grace of God upon the heart of man, is comprehended in this one word (Pſal. 110. 3.) Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power. They were once like the Unicorn in the Text, that will not ſerve; but in the day of thy power, when the word comes upon them in the power of thy Spirit, they ſhall ſerve with all manner of dutiful readineſs and willingneſs. Some men are not at all wrought to the ſervice of God; others ſerve him but are not willing to ſerve, they do it by conſtraint, not willingly; for baſe fear of loſs, or for baſer hope of filthy lucre, not of a ready mind; upon which carnal terms the Apoſtle Peter warns the Miniſters of the Goſpel, to take heed they feed not the flock of God (1 Epiſt. 5. 2.) Nothing but a day of power conquering the will, renders us willing to ſerve Chriſt, willing to ſubmit to the yoak of Chriſt, to be bound in his furrow, and to harrow the valleys after him, That is, to do any work that he calls us to. Service ſhould be with the will, and 'tis ſo by grace. That's the firſt thing which the nature of the Unicorn is againſt, as to the ſervice of man. He hath no will to it.

Secondly, Note; Some beaſts have a kind of willingneſs to ſerve man.

That ſome beaſts have ſuch a willingneſs, is more then implied, while 'tis ſaid, that ſome have not. As the wild Aſs before was ſpoken of in oppoſition to the tame, ſo here the Unicorn is ſpoken of in oppoſition to the Ox or Horſe; who though they are not properly willing to ſerve, yet they will not always refuſe ſervice, but freely at laſt, or after a while, take the yoak and receive the bridle. The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 8.20.) The creature is made ſubject to vanity, not willingly. The creatures are not willing to ſerve the luſts of men, yet many of them are willing to ſerve the occaſions and neceſſities of men. 'Tis through the ſin of man that the creature is made ſubject to vanity; but it is through the appointment of God that the creature is made ſubject to duty, and that with a kind of willingneſs.

Thirdly, 'Tis ſaid here of the Unicorn, as of the wild Aſs before; Canſt thou make him willing? When thou haſt uſed fair means, foul means, one way or other, will he ſerve thee? He will not.

Hence Note; It is hard to change nature.

Naturam expellas furca licet uſque recurret. Lupus pilum non animum mutat.

Beaſts hold faſt their natural qualities. The Horſe, the Bullock, who are tame by nature, will come to hand; but the wild Aſs and the Unicorn, whoſe nature is quite oppoſite to ſervice, will never be broken nor brought to it: Thruſt out nature with a fork it will return again. Till nature is quite altered and changed, acts will not change. 'Tis thus with man, conſidered in nature, who as he is compared to a wild Aſſes Colt (Chap. 11.12.) ſo he may be compared to an Unicorn. Will man be willing to ſerve God? No, not by any moral perſwaſions: no, nor heartily, he may hypocritically, by any outward benefits, nor by any hard uſages. Though (as Solomon ſaith, Prov. 27.22.) thou ſhouldſt bray a fool in a morter among wheat, with a peſtle, yet will not his fooliſhneſs depart from him. A carnal man will never ſubmit quietly to duty, till God hath changed his nature, and made him a new man, or, till his mind is renewed after the image of God. Converſion is firſt a change of our nature, and then of our way. This makes converſion ſo difficult a work. Good education and human inſtructions, may change a mans way, but nothing leſs then the power of God can change his nature. Man is naturally as unwilling to ſerve God, as the wild beaſts are to ſerve man: He is as ſtout and as ſtiff as the Unicorn, as cruel and fierce as the Lion, as crafty as a Fox, as crooked and croſs as any creature; unleſs his heart be changed, he will never to purpoſe change his courſe. Man cannot change the courſe of the Unicorn, becauſe he cannot change his nature; and could not God change mans nature, he could never really change his courſe.

Fourthly, Obſerve; That any of the creatures, eſpecially ſtrong ones, are brought to hand, or to the ſervice of man, muſt be aſcribed to the power and goodneſs of God.

The Horſe would no more ſerve man than the Unicorn, nor would the Ox ſerve man more then the wild Aſs, unleſs the Lord had put another ſpirit or diſpoſition into them, then he hath done into the Unicorn.

Fifthly, Obſerve; That any of the creatures are unſerviceable to man, is to be aſcribed to the ſin of man.

At firſt, all creatures were ſubject to man; not only the Horſe and the Ox, and all the now tame creatures, but the fierceſt Lions, Tygers, Bears, Unicorns, were all in ſubjection to man, according to that ſoveraign power given man by God, in the day that God made him (Gen. 1. 27, 28.) So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God bleſſed them, and ſaid to them, be fruitful, and multiply, and repleniſh the earth, and ſubdue it, and have dominion over the fiſhes of the Sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. The original grand Charter of mans Soveraignty, was extended over the Unicorn and the Lion, &c. And therefore when creatures are not willing to ſerve man, eſpecially when they riſe up againſt man, let man remember his ſin in not obeying the Soveraign command of God. Had not man been unwilling to ſubmit to and ſerve God, no creature had been unwilling to ſerve man. We may ſee our own neglect or refuſal to ſerve God, in the refuſal of any creature to ſerve us; we may ſee our own rebellion againſt God, by the rebellion of the creatures againſt us. Unleſs man had departed from God by ſin, none of the creatures had departed from their ſubjection to man. The ſin of man looſed the creatures from that bond of ſervice to man, in which, and to which they were created.

Quod non omnia animalia homini ſerviunt ſignum eſt & pœna peccati.

Obſerve, Sixthly; Thoſe Creatures which will not do ſervice unto man, but live meerly to themſelves, are wild or fierce.

Theſe clearly reſemble the condition of thoſe men who live only to themſelves, or who ſerve none but themſelves. Whatever ſome men do they ſerve themſelves only, they reſpect no mans good, either ſpiritual or temporal, beſides their own; were it not that they had a chief reſpect to their private ends and intereſts in ſerving, they would never ſerve. A gracious ſpirit is willing to ſerve his neighbour, to ſerve his brother, as well as or with himſelf. Chriſt tells us, his Diſciples ſhould be ſo far from ſerving themſelves only, that they ſhould not ſerve themſelves at all; he that will be my Diſciple (ſaith our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Mat. 16. 24.) Let him deny himſelf, That is, not ſerve nor ſeek himſelf, either contrary to the good of others, or with a neglect of their good. Therefore they who in all they do, do all for themſelves, live upon no better terms, nor to any nobler ends, than the Unicorn or wild Aſs, who are not willing to ſerve any man. Let others ſink or ſwim (ſay ſuch) they care not, they will look to their own.

Seventhly and Laſtly, Though God hath made a ſort of creatures that (as the caſe ſtands) will not ſerve man, nor contribute any help to him; yet theſe creatures live not in vain to God, nor are they altogether unſerviceable to man, though they have no will to ſerve him. For,

Firſt, They declare the power and wiſdom of God, both in making and governing them, and in that they declare his praiſe. God would not give any creature a being, that did not one way or other, ſet forth his praiſe in the world; there's much of God ſhining in thoſe creatures, which man hath no ſervice by (Pſal. 148.) Praiſe him ye Dragons, and all Deeps. Dragons praiſe God, they raiſe up a revenue of glory to God, though man get no ſervice from them.

Secondly, Such creatures adorn the univerſe; the world is beautified with their variety.

Thirdly, Even ſuch creatures ſerve man when they are dead, though they will not while they live; ſome parts of them are Medicinal, and many uſeful to man. The Unicorn, who will ſerve no man living while he lives, yet his horn is accounted a great Antidote againſt Poiſon, and ſo is a means to prevent the death or prolong the life of many men. So then, there is no creature but is ſerviceable to God and man ſome way or other. And though it may be truly ſaid of ſome men, as of the Unicorn, with reſpect to man, they will not ſerve God, yet God hath ſervice by them. Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee?

Or abide by thy Crib?

A Crib is that in which an Ox or an Aſs feeds, (Iſa. 1.3.) The Oxe knoweth his Owner, and the Aſs his Maſters Crib; That is, the veſſel in which he uſeth to be fed. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 14.4.) Where no Oxen are, the Crib is clean, That is, the Crib is not uſed, and ſo remains clean. If none come into a Room, the Room is clean. In one ſenſe, where Oxen are, the Crib is clean, that is, they eat up all the fodder put into it. But in Solomons ſenſe, where no Oxen are the Crib is clean, becauſe no fodder is put into it. The Lord having ſaid, the Unicorn will do no work, adds alſo, he will not abide by thy Crib. As he will do thee no ſervice, ſo he will put thee to no charge; that's a piece of ingenuity in the Unicorn, as he does no work for man, ſo he looks for no wages nor reward from man: which may be a reproof to thoſe men, who are very unwilling to ſerve others, yet are very willing to abide by their Crib; they like it well to eat and drink upon you, as long as you will, and poſſibly whether you will or no, but will not do a ſtroke of work; Such a one we call proverbially a Lurdane, from the lazy Danes, who long ſince Lording it in this Kingdom, would eat and drink in a good well-ſtored houſe, but refuſed all labour. The Unicorn is to be commended above ſuch idle drones, who uſe their teeth more than their hands, as if they were born only to feed their bellies, or to live upon the ſweat of other mens brows; for he hath a kind of honeſty in him, as he doth you no work, ſo he will not trouble your Crib.

Hence Note; Some creatures will rather run the adventure of ſtarving, then work for their living.

They will rather indure hunger and thirſt, then be put upon labour. There is much of this alſo in ſome mens ſpirits; 'tis ſo with all thoſe whom Solomon calls ſluggards; they prefer hunger and eaſe (which ſome call a dogs life) before plenty with induſtry, and a thred-bare back before a ſweating brow.

Secondly, From the connexion, in that the Text ſaith, will he ſerve thee? will he abide by thy Crib?

Note; Whomſoever we call to our ſervice, we ſhould provide a Crib for him.

We ought to feed thoſe that do our work. If the Unicorn would labour, he ſhould not want a Crib, nor ſhould any labouring man want a Table; It were a moſt unrighteous thing in the ſight of God and man if he ſhould. As the Apoſtle gives the rule (2 Theſ. 3.10.) He that will not work, let him not eat; ſo on the contrary, he that doth work, all the reaſon in the world he ſhould eat; therefore the Apoſtle James (Chap. 5.4.) denounceth a wo againſt rich men, for detaining or keeping back, either in whole or in part, the hire of the labourers who had cut down their harveſt. Hire kept back, crieth; for what? For wrath and vengeance upon them that detain or keep it back. The law of God given by Moſes (Deut. 24.15.) commanded that the labourers hire ſhould be paid him preſently; his hire was not to be kept from him, no not for a night. As if the Lord had ſaid, he hath been willing to ſerve thee all the day, therefore let him carry his wages home at night, to comfort his Wife and Children. The Lord is very jealous in this thing; if a beaſt ſerve he muſt have a Crib; and ſhall not man?

One of the Ancients applies this in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to hearing the Word of God: The wicked will not ſerve God, nor will they abide by his Crib; they will not come where their Souls may be fed to eternal life, where they may have clean Provender, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 30. 24.) That is, ſound and wholeſome doctrin, directing them both what to believe, and how to live, that they may be ſaved and live for ever.

Moratur ad præſepe Domini, qui verbo Dei audiendo indeſinenter dat operam. August.

The Lord having in this 9. verſe ſet forth the lawleſs life of the Unicorn; Firſt, By his unwillingneſs to ſerve man; Secondly, By his independence upon man for his livelihood: Proceeds to confirm and illuſtrate the ſame thing, the ſtoutneſs or pride of the Unicorn, and ſo his utter unſerviceableneſs unto man, by his refuſal to be engaged in any of thoſe labours which are neceſſary to husbandry. Firſt, The Plowing. Secondly, The Harrowing of the ground. Thirdly, The Inning or Bringing home of the Corn.

His refuſal of the firſt of theſe ſervices, we have in the former part of the next or tenth Verſe.

Verſ. 10. Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band in the furrow? Thou canſt not.

Beaſts uſe to be bound with cords to their work, they will hardly elſe abide by their work. Neither reaſon nor religion binds beaſts to their work, therefore cords muſt. The word here rendred to bind, ſignifieth very faſt and ſtrong binding, and ſuch is binding with cords. Moſes uſeth the word (Deut. 11.18.) with reſpect to the Divine Law, which God commanded the people of Iſrael, to bind as frontlets between their eyes, and ſo to hold them faſt for ever. The word is uſed alſo (Neh. 4.6.) to note the fixing of ſtones in a Building or Wall, by Lime, Cement, or Morter, And all the Wall was joyned together unto the half thereof; That is, the Wall was faſtened and cemented half high. Now ſaith the Lord, Canſt thou bind the Unicorn? Canſt thou make him faſt with his bands: The word ſignifieth a thick and ſtrong band, which will hold pulling and not break; A threefold cord (ſaith Solomon Eccleſ. 4.12.) is not eaſily broken. Canſt thou bind the Unicorn in his band? Some make the Pronoune his in the Hebrew to be only Paragogical, without any neceſſary ſignification in the conſtruction; but I conceive there is ſomewhat peculiar in it, when he ſaith, canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band. Every beaſt hath his ſpecial band or way of faſtning to his work; ſo that, when 'tis ſaid, Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band? It ſeems to ſound as if it had been ſaid, haſt thou a proper band for the Unicorn, as I know thou haſt for other beaſts, the Horſe, Oxe, and Aſs? Haſt thou a band which will hold him to his work? I know among all thy tackling, thou haſt none will do it; he will break thy bands, and caſt thy cords from him, as ſtubborn and proud men are ſaid to do the bands and cords, that is, the laws and commands of God (Pſal. 2.2.) Many beaſts have their bands, the Unicorn will have none, he will not be bound; or if he be, he breaks his bands, and refuſeth to obey; either he will not come to hand, nor admit bands or cords to be put upon him, or he ſtrives againſt them and caſts them off. In a word, 'tis as if the Lord had ſaid; Thou canſt not get the Unicorn into his gears (as the Husband-man ſpeaks) thou canſt not harneſs him as thou doſt a Horſe, nor yoke him as thou doſt an Oxe, to Plow or Cart; he will not touch thy work. Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band,

קשר

עבת Propriè funis denſus, & craſſus cujuſmodi eſt lorum quo boves aut equi ad aratrum ligantur. Druſ. Fune ſuo forte vau in עבתו Partgogicum eſt, quale in ברו Filius, aut fune ſuo dicit, quia tunc ipſius erit, cum eo Vincietur. Druſ.

In the Furrow, or for the Furrow, or to the Furrow.

The Plough makes Furrows, and Furrows laid together make Ridges: Both are expreſſed (Pſal. 65.10.) Thou watereſt the Ridges thereof abundantly, thou ſetleſt the Furrows thereof. Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band in the Furrow?

תלם Porca, terra inter duos ſulcos elata porcam appellant, vel quod frumenta porrigat, vel quod aquam porro arceat Druſ. Sulcus, porca, & lira, ſunt arationis partes.

Or will he Harrow the Valleys after thee?

When the Plough hath laid the Furrows, harrowing followeth. The Plow leaveth the clods too groſs, for the reception and growth of the ſeed; therefore the Harrow is imployed to break the Plowed ground yet more, and to crumble the clods yet finer. We find both theſe parts of Husbandry ſet down (*Iſa.*28.28,24.) Doth the Plow-man Plow all day to Sow? Doth he open and break the clods of the ground? When he hath made plain the face thereof? Doth he not caſt abroad the fitches, &c? Here's a deſcription of this work of the husbandman Plowing and Harrowing, or making plain the face of the ground, all in an allegory, intending a very ſpiritual work of God, in breaking and Harrowing the heart of man by affliction, and making it thereby fit to receive the ſeed of the Word. Thus alſo ſpake the Prophet (Hoſ. 10.11.) Judah ſhall plow, and Jacob ſhall break his clods, That is, Jacob ſhall Harrow. The Prophets meaning is, that the Lord would bring them into a labouring ſtate of life, even into captivity, where they muſt Plow, becauſe they had Plowed iniquity, and had not Plowed up the Fallow ground of their hearts by repenting of their iniquity. Will the Unicorn Harrow

The Vallies after thee?] Some render the word, Furrows, which lie like Vallies between the Ridges. But the word more properly ſignifieth Vallies; and they are moſt commonly Plowed and Sowed with Corn, as Hills are reſerved for Paſture. Will he Harrow the Vallies

After thee?] That is, will the Unicorn be led by thee? The Harrower goeth before the Horſe, or that which draweth the Harrow, and the beaſt followeth; or thus, will he Harrow the Valleys

After thee? That is, after thou haſt Ploughed them. As if the Lord had ſaid, will he either be driven or led? thou canſt not make him Harrow? Thou canſt not lead him on in that work. Thus we have the Unicorns refuſal of thoſe labours, in which other beaſts, the Oxe and the Horſe eſpecially, are very commonly uſed.

Now for as much as the Husband-mans work is deſcribed, by Plowing and Harrowing.

Note; Firſt, We cannot get our ordinary food without much labour.

The Husband-mans life, is a painful life; Plowing and Harrowing are hard labours; and what is all this for? But to bring forth the neceſſaries of mans life, bread to ſtrengthen mans heart, and by conſequence what ever elſe is food for man. Adam was commanded to dreſs the Garden, and to keep it, (Gen. 2.15.) Adam was not put into that pleaſant Garden, only to take his pleaſure and to eat the fruit of it; but he was put into the Garden to dreſs it, and to keep it. Even Adam was to eat upon his labour, though not ſuch labour as man now eateth upon; that came in by ſin after the fall; labour was impoſed upon man, not only as a duty, but as a penalty. It was impoſed upon man before the fall as a duty, but it was impoſed upon man after the fall as a penalty, (Gen. 3.17,18,19.) Curſed is the ground for thy ſake; in ſorrow ſhalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. In the ſweat of thy face ſhalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground. Our ordinary bread is not eaſily come by; remember the Husband-mans labour. Hence the Apoſtle, when he would ſhew what pains God taketh, either immediately by the work of his Spirit, or mediately by the labour of his Miniſters, to convert and build up Souls in the faith, he tells us (1 *Cor.*3.9.) That we are Gods husbandry, and Gods building. As if he had ſaid, great pains hath been or muſt be beſtowed upon you, that your Souls may be ſaved, and that ye may bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs unto eternal life. The Lord hath his ſpiritual Plow-men, his Labourers, his Oxen; by theſe the faithful and induſtrious Miniſters of the Goſpel are emblem'd, and ſet forth in the holy Scriptures, (1 *Cor.*9.10. Rev.4.7.)

Note, Secondly; There is no Sowing without Plowing.

You muſt ſtir up and break the ground, before you caſt the ſeed into it; 'tis not elſe fit to receive the ſeed, and improve it for a harveſt. The Scripture ſpeaks firſt of Plowing, then of Sowing (Iſa. 28.24, &c.) The Plowman opens the Earth, and breaks the clods before he caſts in his ſeed, the cumin, the fitches, and the principal wheat. He doth not Plow for Plowing ſake, but for Sowing; and when he hath Plowed he leaveth not his work, till he hath Sowed what he Plowed. This method doth the Lord uſe in his ſpiritual husbandry; the Plow of repentance muſt break up the Fallow ground of the heart, and the Harrow muſt ſmooth the face of the Soul, before it be fit to bring forth. The Spirit makes frequent uſe of theſe Metaphors (Jer. 4.6.) Plow up the Fallow ground of your hearts; read alſo (Hoſea 10.12.)

Further, Harrowing comes after Plowing, and either before or immediately after ſowing (there is ſome variety as to husbandry in this point) that the ſeed ſown may be preſerved from being devoured by the Fowls of the air, it muſt (unleſs ſowed under Furrows) be Harrowed. Harrowing helps the ſeed to ſpring more freely, and grow more thrivingly. And thus it is alſo in ſpiritual husbandry; When the ſeed of the Word is Sown, the heart muſt be Harrowed, elſe the Seed will miſcarry. In that Parable of the Sower (Mat. 13.) ſome ſeed fell upon the high-way, which was neither Plowed nor Harrowed. This High-way ground, ſignifieth thoſe careleſs hearers which receive the Word in a formality only; the Fowls of the air (evil ſpirits) quickly picked up that, becauſe it was not covered by Harrowing. Now there are two Harrows, by which the Seed of the Word caſt into the Vallies and Furrows of our Hearts, is covered and ſecured, that it may bring forth fruit to perfection; theſe are meditation and prayer. By meditation we hide the word in our hearts, and by prayer we obtain a bleſſing upon it from God, both for the ſecuring of it, and our fruit-bearing according to it. There are two reſemblances in Scripture, ſetting forth the uſe of meditation and prayer about the word received; The one, is chewing of the cud; the other, is Harrowing. Clean beaſts under the Law chewed the cud; and wiſe men, both under Law and Goſpel, Harrow their land; a godly man doth both in a ſpiritual way, while he meditates in the Word, and prays for a bleſſing upon it. Thus husbandry for our daily bread, teacheth us what courſe the Lord expects we ſhould take for our Souls, that we may bring forth fruit, and anſwer the end of receiving his Word. The Unicorn will not be brought to either of theſe parts of the Husband-mans labour, and his refuſal is aggravated in the next Verſe, by the ability which he hath for both.

Verſ. 11. Wilt thou truſt him becauſe his ſtrength is great? Or wilt thou leave thy labour unto him?

The Unicorn hath ſtrength ſufficient; he is a beaſt ſtronger (ſay Naturaliſts) than either the Oxe or the Horſe; but, Wilt thou truſt him becauſe his ſtrength is great? The word notes truſting with much confidence, and reſt of the mind; as 'tis ſaid (*Iſa.*12.2.) I will truſt, and not be afraid. Confidence, upon a good ground, leads us into a full, as well as a good ſecurity; I will truſt, and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my ſtrength, ſaith the believing Soul in that place. But ſaith the Lord here to Job, Wilt thou truſt this ſtrong beaſt without fear or jealouſie? Wilt thou truſt him,

Becauſe his ſtrength is great?] The ſtrength or force of his body is great, very great, but the force or ſtubborneſs of his will, That is, his wilfulneſs is far greater, even ſo great, that it will not ſuffer him to lay out the ſtrength of his body for the ſervice of man. We find ſtrength often attributed to the Unicorn in Scripture (*Numb.*23.22.) He, (That is, God, or Iſrael, through the preſence of God with him,) hath as it were the ſtrength of an Unicorn. 'Tis not ſaid, he hath as it were the ſtrength of an Horſe, or of an Oxe, which are very ſtrong creatures, but of an Unicorn; thereby implying, that the Unicorn is a creature of ſuch great ſtrength, that he knew not where to find a ſtronger. The Unicorn hath ſtrength enough for his work, but he hath no mind to his work; and therefore wilt thou truſt him becauſe his ſtrength is great?

כוח Propriè ſignificat vigorem illum corporis animalis, qui conſiſtit in humido radicali.

Hence Note; Firſt, Great ſtrength is required for great work.

There are ſome works that are done, not ſo much by ſtrength as by art, or as it were, by ſlight of hand, ſuch a work a feeble weak man may do: but there are other works which require great ſtrength; all the wit, and skill, and learning, and cunning of men, cannot do them, unleſs they have a ſutable, That is, a great portion of ſtrength for the doing of them. David (Pſal. 144.14.) deſcribing the temporal felicity of his people, makes this requeſt for them, That our Oxen be ſtrong to labour. The labour of the Oxe is great, and therefore he needs great ſtrength to do his work, and go through with his labour.

Note, Secondly; They who have great ſtrength, may do great works.

Great ſtrength is a great advantage for ſervice. If the Unicorn would imploy and put out his ſtrength, he might do much. Strength of body is a talent, much may be done by that; ſtrength of mind is an excellent talent, much more, very much more may be done by that. But when a man hath much ſtrength of body and mind together, what may not he do! Let thoſe who have much ſtrength, conſider how they uſe it. For a man to have the ſtrength of an Unicorn, much bodily ſtrength, and make no uſe of it, is to become more beaſtly then the Unicorn. A ſtrong man rejoyceth to run a race (Pſal. 19.5.) He that hath great ſtrength, may run a great race. A race requireth great ſtrength, and he that hath ſtrength, or is a ſtrong man, ſhould rejoyce to run it. A ſtrong man, if he have an heart and a will to his work, delighteth in his work more then in his reward.

Note, Thirdly; Some have ſtrength enough to do much Work, to do great and good things, yet are not at all to be truſted with the doing of any thing that is great or good.

Strength is not always to be truſted. There is a twofold truſt in ſtrength; Firſt, There is a truſt in ſtrength as to confidence in it for ſucceſs; and thus we are not to truſt any ſtrength in the world, neither our own nor others. Curſed is the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm (Jer. 17.5.) The arm of fleſh is too weak to be truſted in, though never ſo ſtrong; though it have the ſtrength of the Unicorn, it muſt not be truſted; no creatures ſtrength is to be truſted in, as to dependance upon it. Secondly, There is a truſting of ſtrength as to the uſing and imploying of it; thus ſtrength may be truſted. We may truſt the ſtrong that they will uſe their ſtrength for us, only we muſt not reſt in their ſtrength. They who (like the Unicorn in the Text) have great ſtrength, and yet are not to be truſted that they will uſe it, are in a much worſe condition than they who have no ſtrength to uſe, or to make them any way uſeful. There are three ſorts of men to be conſidered, in reſpect of ſtrength.

Firſt, Some have a will to do more then they have ſtrength to do; they have a will to do more in ordinary work, then they have ſtrength to do, and they have a will to do more in extraordinary work and duty, then they have ſtrength and ability to do. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the labour of love or charity, in the miniſtration of the good things of this life, to thoſe that ſtand in need, thus commendeth the Macedonians (2 Cor. 8.5.) For to their power, I bear them record, and beyond their power, they were willing, &c. He meaneth, not the power of their bodies, but of their purſes and eſtates. Some are willing beyond the power of their eſtates, to relieve the neceſſities of others; and ſome are willing beyond the power of their bodies, to labour not only for the ſupply of their own neceſſities, but in any publick ſervice. To have a will to labour according to our ſtrength for labour, ſheweth an honeſt heart; but to have a will to labour beyond our ſtrength for labour, ſheweth an Heroick heart. But Secondly, Moſt have ſtrength to do more then they have a will to do; they are like the Unicorn, and that upon a double ground: Firſt, Some are ſo lazy and idle, that they will not do what they have ſtrength to do. Thus Solomon deſcribeth the ſluggard (Prov. 21.5.) His hands refuſe to labour. He hath ſtrength enough in his hand, but for idleneſs he will do nothing. Secondly, Others are ſo proud, that though they have ſtrength enough to labour, yet they will not; they are ſo ſtout, ſo ſtubborn, ſo high minded, that they ſcorn to work or do ſervice; they think themſelves too good to take pains: I ſhall ſay too little, if I ſay, theſe are in a very bad frame. They are right Unicorns, who are ſo ſtout that they will not ſerve, nor be bound to attend any ſervice.

There is a third ſort, who have ſtrength to do ſervice, and they have alſo will to do it; they have will, and they have ſtrength, but they want an opportunity to do ſervice. This may be the caſe of a good man, who is like the labouring Ox; A good man hath always a will to work, and may have ſtrength for his work too, yet many times wants work. As they in the Parable (Matth. 20.6,7.) anſwered when queſtioned, Why ſtand ye all the day idle? It was not (ſo they excuſed themſelves) becauſe they had no will to work, or had no ſtrength to work; but (ſay they) No man hath hired us; we have not been called to work, we know not where to have a days work. Such there are, who have will and ſtrength, while they want a call. Thus the Apoſtle ſpake concerning the Philippians (Chap. 4. 10.) Ye were careful, but ye lacked opportunity. The door was not open, and ſo ye could not do what ye deſired, and had both a mind and an ability to do. The point in hand leadeth us to the middle ſort of perſons (truly ſhaddowed by the Unicorn) who though they have much ſtrength to do ſervice, yet they have no mind to ſerve, but hide their Talent in a Napkin, and put their Candle under a Buſhel: Theſe are not to be truſted, though they are well furniſhed. I may ſay to any man concerning ſuch men, as the Lord to Job, concerning the Unicorn; Wilt thou truſt them, becauſe their ſtrength is great? Becauſe their ſtrength of mind, their ſtrength of body, their ſtrength of eſtate is great? Can we truſt all rich men that they will do works of charity, becauſe their eſtate is great? Can we truſt all healthy men, who have ſound and able limbs, that they will take pains, becauſe their bodily ſtrength is great; Can we truſt all knowing men, who have quick parts, and excellent gifts, much knowledg, that they will go through with their work becauſe the ſtrength of their minds is great? We can hardly find any to truſt, what ſtrength ſoever they have, but thoſe who have received ſtrength of grace from God, and ſo have ſtrength of faith in God, ſtrength of love, ſtrength of affections to God, ſtrength of zeal for God. And even they who have ſtrength of grace, may fail their truſt very much (Job 4.18.) Behold he put no truſt in his Servants, and his Angels he charged with folly. The Lord could not be confident of Angels, who are mighty in ſtrength. If God ſhould leave Angels to themſelves, they would ſoon fail; it is becauſe Angels are confirmed by grace (Chriſt being the head of Angels) that they ſtand faſt to their work, and abide by their duty, elſe the Lord could not truſt Angels with all their created ſtrength; much leſs then could the Lord truſt the beſt of Saints with all the ſpiritual ſtrength he hath planted in them, did he not continually confirm them, and quicken them (to the work which he hath called them to) by his holy Spirit. No further than any man truſteth in Chriſt for ſtrength, or maketh Chriſt his ſtrength as well as his righteouſneſs, is he to be truſted with the doing of any work, any more then the Unicorn, how much ſoever his ſtrength is? Many are ſet a work, and do work, becauſe their ſtrength is great, but none (in a due ſenſe) can be truſted, but they who make Chriſt their ſtrength, and look daily to him for it. Wilt thou truſt him, becauſe his ſtrength is great.

Or wilt thou leave thy labour to him?] This latter part of the Verſe is of the ſame importance with the former, yet I ſhall touch a little upon it. Wilt thou leave thy labour to him? Labour is taken in Scripture two ways;

Firſt, For the very act of labour. Jacob ſaid (Gen. 31.42.) God hath ſeen mine affliction, and the labour of my hands. God knows (ſaid he to Laban) what pains I have taken, what hard work I have been at in thy ſervice; and how hard he had been at work, he told Laban (Verſ. 40.) Thus I was in the day, the drought conſumed me; and the Froſt by night, and my ſleep departed from me. To ſuch hard Work in ſpirituals the Apoſtle exhorts;

By

יגיע Labor, à radice יגע Laboravit, defatigatus fuit.

Be ſtedfaſt; and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as you know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord (1 Cor.15.58) The word in the Text which we render labour, ſignifieth a labouring to wearineſs, or a labour which cauſeth wearineſs. Strong labour, diligent labour wearieth a ſtrong man; and though an induſtrious perſon is not weary of his labour, yet he may be wearied with his labour; yea, the more induſtrious he is in labouring, the ſooner he may be wearied with his labour.

Secondly, Labour is taken ſometimes for the fruit of labour, or for that which is got by labour; the reward, and wages given and received for work and ſervice done, is called labour (Pſal. 128.2.) Thou ſhalt eat the labour of thy hands. No man can eat the acts of his labour, but every man ſhould eat the fruit of his labour; labour brings in bread, and that bread is ſweeteſt which comes in by labour. The Lord threateneth his people (*Deut.*28.33.) ſtrangers ſhall eat thy labour, That is, the increaſe that comes in or hath been gotten by thy labour, even that which thou haſt laboured for. And it was a mercy beſtowed by the Lord upon his Iſrael (Pſal. 105.44.) that they inherited the labour of the people, that is, they dwelt in the Houſes, which they had built; and enjoyed the gardens, which they had planted; and reaped the fields, which they, the Heathen, had ſowed; In a word, they had the fruit of all their labours. Some underſtand the word here in this latter ſenſe, Wilt thou leave thy labour unto him? That is, wilt thou allow him any of the fruit of thy ground, ſeeing he refuſeth to work in thy ground? Surely, thou wilt not. Labouring cattel have ſomewhat for their labour, they ſhare in thoſe good things which are the product of their labour (1 *Cor.*9.9.) Thou ſhalt not muzzel the Oxe that treadeth out the Corn. But though it is a truth, that labouring cattel eat of, and are fed with the fruit of their labour; yet here, by labour, I underſtand the very act of labour, not the fruit of it. Wilt thou leave thy labour to him? That is, wilt thou leave thy buſineſs with him? Wilt thou truſt him with thy Plow or with thy Harrow? And (conſider the dependance) if thou dareſt not truſt him, then thou wilt not leave thy labour unto him.

Fruges tuas labore tuo partas. Piſc.

Note Hence; Firſt, It is not Wiſdom to leave our work to ſuch as we cannot truſt.

Our work will be ill done, or half done, or not done at all by thoſe that we cannot truſt. We truſt thoſe much, to whom we leave our buſineſs; and there are three things requiſite in thoſe to whom we leave it.

Firſt, That they have ſtrength and ability for it; there is a neceſſity of that: No wiſe man will truſt or leave his buſineſs with him that hath no ſtrength to do it, no ability for it.

Secondly, That they be ſubject and obedient to us. No wiſe man will leave his buſineſs in the hand of thoſe who acknowledg no obedience nor ſubjection to him, how much ſtrength ſoever they have. An unſubmitting ſtrength will work againſt us rather then for us.

Thirdly, That they be faithful. No man will leave his buſineſs to a perſon of ſtrength and in ſubjection to him, if he be not honeſt to him. Solomon hath ſufficiently caution d us againſt truſting ſuch, while he ſaith (*Prov.*25.19.) Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble ('tis true alſo in time of peace) is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint. A broken tooth cannot chew our meat, and a foot out of joynt can worſe go a journey; an unfaithful man will prove a worſer ſervant to us, than the worſt of theſe. And as it is thus among men, they will not leave their buſineſs with an Unicorn, with one that hath ſtrength, but yields no ſubjection, nor ever ſhewed any faithfulneſs; ſo God will not leave his labour, his work and ſervice to ſuch as are like the Unicorn; he will not leave it in ſuch hand, as have great ability to carry it through, yet want obedience to his will, and faithfulneſs in his work. There muſt be a concurrence of theſe three, ſtrength, ſubjection, and faithfulneſs, in all thoſe to whom the Lord God, the God only wiſe, will leave his labour, or commit the doing of any ſervice for him. But where theſe three meet and center in any perſon, ſtrength of body and mind, ſubmiſſion of will, and faithfulneſs to a work; how great things may they do in the ſervice whether of God or Man?

Secondly, Obſerve; A will, a mind to work, or a willing mind to work is better than great ſtrength.

As the Unicorn with his great ſtrength, ſo they who are like the Unicorn in ſtrength may do little or nothing. But they that have only a little ſtrength, and a mind to be doing, have done, and may do much. Little ſtrength is a kind of weakneſs, yet where there is a willing mind, weakneſs will do more than great ſtrength without a willing mind. We have a common ſaying; John is a good ſervant when Will is at home. Willingneſs to work, works better then bare ſtrength: We have this concluſion (Neh. 4.6.) So built we the wall (Nehemiah ſpake there of the Jews return'd from Babylon) And all the wall was joyned together unto the half thereof. For the people had a mind (or as the Hebrew is, an heart) to work. The wall of a great City being ſoon raiſed half up, the reaſon given was, becauſe they had a mind to work. The Jews at that time, were a people under ſo much weakneſs, that the enemies jeer'd them with it (*Verſ.*2.) What will theſe feeble Jews do? Will they fortifie themſelves? Will they ſacrifice? Will they make an end in a day? Will they revive the ſtones out of the heaps of rubbiſh? &c. Will they work miracles? Remove mountains? But how feeble ſoever they were, the work went on amain, For the people had a mind, a heart to Work. Though they were no Unicorns, no people of great ſtrength; though they were feeble Jews, yet they attained to half their work quickly: Strong hearts and feeble hands, will diſpatch a buſineſs better and ſooner, then ſtrong hands and feeble hearts. 'Tis thus, as in corporal ſo in ſpiritual labour, where there is a mind to the work, though we have but a little ſtrength, we ſhall do great things. This was the high commendation of the Church of Philadelphia (Rev. 3.8.) Thou haſt a little ſtrength and haſt kept my word, and haſt not denied my name. He doth a great deal of work for God, who keeps the Word of God. But how unfit the Unicorn is, or any ſtrong one like the Unicorn, to be truſted, or have labour left with them, appears further in the next Verſe.

לב

Verſ. 12. Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy Seed, and gather it into thy Barn.

Here is another piece of ſervice which the Unicorn might not be truſted with; Wilt thou believe him, &c. The root-word ſignifieth that act of faith which we put forth upon God, for our free juſtification and eternal Salvation, as alſo for our ſuſtentation under, and deliverance from any trouble inward or outward, of Soul or Body; in and for all which the juſt live by faith. There is believing God, and believing in God, both which are expreſſions ſometimes of a like importance; Wilt thou believe him, or in him, ſaith God of the Unicorn? As if he had ſaid, Suppoſe thou couldſt get a promiſe from the Unicorn, that he will bring home, or return thy ſeed (ſo the Hebrew ſtrictly) that he will make thy ſeed to return; or (as we render fully) bring it home; Wilt thou take his word, or believe him that he will keep his word, that he will indeed return or bring home

אמן In Hiphil האמין Credidit fiſus eſt. Credere in Deum, & credere Deo, ſynonyma ſunt, reperitur etiam credere in Deo. Druſ.

ישב Quod reddat. Mont. relaturum eſſe. Jun.

Thy Seed?] Seed may be taken two ways.

First, For that which is to be ſowed; it is ordinary with the Husband-man, to call that Seed-Corn which he reſerveth for ſowing. The grain or corn intended to be ſowed on the Earth, is properly Seed-Corn; in alluſion whereunto the Pſalmiſt ſaith (*Pſal.*126.6.) He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious ſeed, ſhall doubtleſs come again with rejoycing, bringing his ſheaves with him. The people of God mourning and praying, ſow precious ſeed. Believing prayers and repenting tears never failed, nor ſhall ever fail, of a merciful, of a plentiful Harveſt, or of a plentiful Harveſt of mercy. Some underſtand this Text thus; Wilt thou believe that he will return thy Seed? will he do this ſervice for thee? Will he carry thy Seed, which is to be ſown, into the field? But though that be a piece of ſervice to carry the ſeed-corn into the field, yet the ſcope of the place doth not well comply with it here; and therefore leaving that interpretation, I ſhall rather.

Credeſnè quod relaturus ſit ſemen tuum ad terras tuas? Vatab.

Secondly, Take ſeed for ripe Corn, or for that which is reaped; as in Haggai (*Chap.*2.19.) Is the ſeed yet in the Barn? That is, is the Harveſt yet come in? No, the ſeed is not in the Barn. So, in this place, ſeed is that which hath been ſown and grow up, and ready to be gathered into the Barn. And that may be taken two ways;

First, Thus: Will the Unicorn by plowing and harrowing the ground, procure that thy ſeed ſhall return again to thee? Or that the ſeed which is ſown, ſhall come home to thy Barn, yielding a good Crop, ſo returning what was ſowed with advantage and increaſe? Wilt thou believe him that he will cauſe thy ſeed thus to return home to thee? Surely no; do not believe that he will do thee any ſuch ſervice, for he will deceive thy credulity if thou doſt.

Num credis ei, quod dum humum tuam ei arandam committis, ita aptè etiam arare poſſit ut tandem reddat tuam ſementem, vel ut ex ejus labore proveniat & creſcat ſeges ut tandem demetatur & in aream deportatur ad triturandum. Merc. Sperandum non eſt ut ager à Monocerote ſubactus ſementem acceptam cum uſura reddat. Sanct.

Secondly, Thus: Wilt thou believe that he will draw the Cart, and ſo help thee home with thy Corn at Harveſt? This Expoſition is moſt favoured, not only by our Tranſlation, but by the words following in the latter part of the verſe, both which intimate, that the ſeed here ſpoken of, is the ſeed reaped, rather than that to be ſowed. Will he bring home thy ſeed,

And gather it into thy Barn?] Seed to be ſowed, is carried into the Field, not into the Barn; Seed or Corn reaped, is carried into the Barn, not into the Field. As if it had been ſaid, The Unicorn will do thee no ſervice: As he would not go to plow, ſo neither will he go to Cart, for the gathering of thy ſeed into thy Barn. Sowing, reaping, and gathering into the Barn, are the three principal parts of the Husband-mans labour; and therefore our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhewing how the Fowls of the Air live purely upon the providence of God without labour, ſaith (*Matth.*6.26.) They ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into Barns, yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them.

The word which we Tranſlate Barn, is uſed (Numb. 18.27. 2*Sam.*6.6.) and in both places it is rendred, Threſhing-floor. The threſhing-floor is uſually in the Barn, and therefore the ſame word may well ſignifie both. Wilt thou believe him that he will bring home thy ſeed, and gather it into thy Barn?

Hence Note, First, The labour of Beaſts is very profitable to man.

The Ox and Horſe bring the ſeed home formally when 'tis reaped, and they bring it home or make it to return vertually when they labour and take pains about or for the ſowing of it. The Pſalmiſt having prayed (Pſal. 144. 13.) That our Garners may be full, affording all manner of ſtore, preſently adds (verſ. 14.) That our Oxen may be ſtrong to labour; for (Prov. 14. 4.) where no Oxen are, the crib is clean. Not only, Firſt, Becauſe there is no need to fill the crib, where no Oxen are to eat up the fodder, as was ſhewed a little before: But, Secondly, Becauſe where no Oxen are, there is nothing to fill it. The crib muſt needs be empty, when the Barn is empty; food faileth both for man and Beaſt, where there are no Oxen. Barns and Garners are full, when the Ox is ſtrong to labour, or becauſe the ſtrong Ox hath been in labour: For (as it followeth) Much increaſe cometh by the ſtrength of the Ox. Why doth Solomon impute increaſe to the ſtrength of the Ox? Surely, becauſe the Ox being ſtrong is alſo willing to labour and lay out his ſtrength, and ſo, much increaſe cometh by the ſtrength and labour of the Ox, though that alone will not to it. For that there may be an increaſe, theſe five things muſt concur.

Firſt, The skill and induſtry of the Husband-man.

Secondly, The ſtrength and labour of the Ox or Horſe.

Thirdly, The vertue and fatneſs of the Earth.

Fourthly, The ſhowers and influences of Heaven.

Fifthly, And above all, the bleſſing of God. Old Iſaac ſaid of his Son Jacob (Gen. 27. 27.) See, the ſmell of my Son is as the ſmell of a Field, which the Lord hath bleſſed. As there is no increaſe without the bleſſing of God, how much ſoever men or Oxen labour, ſo there is great increaſe (the Lord adding his bleſſing) by the labour of men and Oxen. Labour and increaſe uſually go together; and where no labour is, there (except by miracle) is no increaſe: Where no labour is, the Barn is empty, the Crib is empty, the Belly is empty, the Purſe is empty. Of doing nothing comes nothing, but want and miſery. 'Tis ſaid, when the Ox is wearieſt, he treads ſureſt: To be ſure, they who are moſt wearied by honeſt pains-taking, tread ſureſt upon honeſt profit.

Secondly, Obſerve, Seed ſown is not loſt, but returns and comes home again.

That which was ſcattered abroad in the Field, is gathered into the Barn. Some may think when they ſee the Husbandman caſt his ſeed into the ground, that he caſts it away; but by the labour of the Ox, by the skill of the Husbandman, and the bleſſing of God upon all, the ſeed cometh home again. Thus the Apoſtle ſpake in a ſpiritual ſenſe; He that ploweth, ſhould plow in hope; and he that threſheth in hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope (1 Cor. 9. 10.) It ſhould be ſo according to the ordination of God, as to the faithful Miniſters of God (of whoſe labour in plowing up Souls by the word, and ſowing thoſe Souls with the word, the Apoſtle there treats) And it is ſo through the benediction of God, as to laborious Husband men and their Cattel, in plowing and ſowing the ſoil of the Earth. Yea, thus it is in all we do, our actions (good or bad) are as ſeed ſown, which will certainly come again, they will not be loſt: Good done, will aſſuredly turn to good; and evil done (and not undone by repentance) will as ſurely turn to evil. The Apoſtle gives us this double aſſurance (Gal. 6. 7, 8.) Whatſoever a man ſoweth, that (not numerically, but ſpecifically) ſhall he alſo reap: For, He that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting. And thus in ſpecial, works of charity, or our diſtributions to the neceſſities of others, are more ſignificantly called ſowing (Pſal. 112. 9.) He hath diſperſed, he hath given to the poor (That is, he hath ſowed his alms abundantly; what then? It followeth) His righteouſneſs endureth for ever, his horn ſhall be exalted with honor. To give to the poor, eſpecially to Gods poor, to the godly poor, or to thoſe that are made poor for Gods ſake, is ſowing good ſeed; and he that ſoweth thus, ſhall receive a fruitful crop. Grain ſowed in the Field, may yield a good increaſe; but that which is rightly ſowed in the bowels of the poor, ſhall certainly yield a better. What we give, is like ſeed ſowed in the Field, which increaſeth thirty, ſixty, an hundred fold: What we keep by us, is like Corn ſtored up in the Garner, which we bring forth and ſpend, and there's an end of it. Here's great encouragement to do good, yea to abound in doing good to others. What we ſo part with, is not loſt, but ſowed; it will come back to the Barn, it will come home again, and that with a great increaſe. And doubtleſs where there hath been a plowing up of the heart by a work of grace, there will be a free ſowing in every good work. And though we are not to do good works, meerly eying a return, or our perſonal advantage, yet we may have an eye to it, as Moſes had in his holy ſufferings and ſervices, to the recompence of reward: Yea, and take incouragement from the Lords bounty, to be more in duty, more in charity, even unto bounty. We may conſider the Harveſt while we are diligent in ſowing, yea, to make us more diligent in ſowing.

Having thus opened the ſeveral properties of this Creature, here called the Unicorn, properly taken, and given out ſome meditations upon them, it will not be (I conceive) either unuſeful or unacceptable to the Reader, if for the concluſion of the whole matter in hand, I ſhew how the holy Scriptures, together with ſome of the Ancients, make uſe of this Creature, tropically, or in a figure, to reſemble and repreſent, Firſt, The ſtate of the Church and people of God. Thus Moſes reports Balaam ſhadowing the power and bleſſedneſs of Iſrael, when he came and was hired to curſe them (Numb. 23. 22.) God (ſaith he) brought them (that is, the Children of Iſrael) out of Egypt; he hath, as it were, the ſtrength of an Unicorn. Moſt expound the word, He, collectively, concerning that whole people, as one Body; He, that is, Iſrael, hath as it were, the ſtrength of an Unicorn; that is, he is exceeding ſtrong. Some expound it of God: He, that is, God, who brought them out of Egypt, the mighty God of Jacob, hath as it were, the ſtrength of an Unicorn. God is indeed infinitely ſtrong, ſtronger than the Unicorn. That which is moſt eminent in any Creature, or for which any Creature is moſt eminent, the Scripture often aſcribes in a way of ſuper-eminency, unto God.

The Lord hath ſtrength like the ſtrongeſt ; and how ſtrong ſoever he is, he is ſtrong for his Iſrael, yea, he is the ſtrength of his Iſrael. So that if we take the word in this latter ſenſe, it reacheth the ſame thing, ſetting forth the power and ſtrength of Iſrael, by the ſtrength of the Unicorn ; for the Lord, who is their ſtrength, will make them ſtrong like Unicorns. Balaam ſpake thus again (Numb. 24. 8.) God brought him (all Iſrael as one man) out of Egypt ; he hath as it were, the ſtrength of an Unicorn, he ſhall eat up the Nations his enemies, and ſhall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows. Thus alſo Moſes ſpake or prophecyed of the Tribe of Joſeph (Deut. 33. 17.) His glory is like the firſtling of his Bullock, and his horns are like the horns of Unicorns, with them ſhall he puſh the people (or peoples, the word is plural) together, to the ends of the Earth, and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh. Moſes ſets out the fruitfulneſs of Ephraim, beyond that of Manaſſeh, ten for one ; and in both, jointly ſhews how powerful, how prevailing they ſhall be ; even, as if they puſht their enemies with horns like thoſe of Unicorns. In all theſe Scriptures, the Lord foreſhewed the wonderful force of the Jewiſh Church of old, his portion and peculiar people, by that of the Unicorn. David alſo (as was ſaid before) expreſſeth his aſſurance of a proſperous condition and great ſucceſs, in the ſame language (Pſal. 92. 10.) He ſhall exalt my horn, like the horn of an Unicorn.

And we may affirm the Iſrael of God are like the Unicorn, chiefly upon this account ; becauſe their ſtrength and defence, or their ſtrong defence is in, and by their horn. And if any ask, what or who is that ? I anſwer, Jeſus Chriſt : Of whom, Zacharias filled with the Holy Ghoſt, propheſied, ſaying (Luke 1. 59.) Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he hath viſited ond redeemed his people, and hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation for us, in the Houſe of his ſervant David. Jeſus Chriſt, is called an horn of ſalvation for his people, Habes in Monocerote exemplum fidei robuſtæ & generoſæ omnem ſervitutem diaboli, & mundi aſpernantis, & utrique impavidè reſiſtentis. Coc.

Quod nullis hominum viribus in ſervitium redigi poteſt, ſignificatur populus nemini ſerviturus, quamdiu unicum Deum coleret. Theodoret. queſt. 44. in Numeros.

Firſt, Becauſe he is the Strength and Defence of his people.

Secondly, Becauſe he is the Glory and honour of his people: Thus the Seventy Tranſlate that (Numb. 23. 22.) he hath (as it were) the glory of an Unicorn. As Jeſus Chriſt is called a light to lighten the Gentiles, ſo the glory of his people Iſrael (Luke 2. 32.)

Thirdly, Jeſus Chriſt is an horn of ſalvation to his people, as he is (like the horn of an Unicorn, according to report, againſt bodily poiſon) the moſt Soveraign, yea, the only antidote againſt the poiſon of ſin, and the infection of the World (2 Pet. 1. 4.) By him we eſcape the corruption that is in the World, through luſt, that is, believing in him, we are preſerved from thoſe poiſonous luſts, which corrupt and infect this World.

Secondly, Some of the Ancients and Moderns too, make the Unicorns ſtoutneſs and ſtiffneſs of Spirit againſt doing any work for man ; an emblem of that gracious well-temper'd ſtoutneſs and reſolvedneſs of Spirit in the faithful ſervants of God, againſt doing any work at all for the Devil, as alſo in refuſing to do any ſinful work at the will or command of man : In which ſenſe, it is both their wiſdom and their duty not to ſerve nor pleaſe men (1 Cor. 7. 23. Gal. 1. 10.) Thus Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, anſwered Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 3. 18.) We will not ſerve thy gods. Theſe were no wilful men, though they ſaid, We will not : Their underſtanding was in the anſwer as well as their will, and their Conſcience for God, as well as either. And in this ſenſe the Apoſtle, who ſo often exhorts to faithfulneſs and diligence in the ſervice of man, admoniſheth us, Not to be the ſervants of men, (1 Cor. 7. 23.) And in this ſenſe, (though he had ſaid, I pleaſe all men, in all things for their profit, that they might be ſaved (1 Cor. 10. 33.) and counſelleth every man, to pleaſe his Neighbour for his good to edification (Rom. 15. 2.) yet) concludeth of himſelf, If I yet pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt (Gal. 1. 10.)

Thirdly, The Unicorn is ſpoken of in Scripture, as an Hieroglyphick of thoſe evil men, who are enemies to the Church of God (Iſa. 34. 7.) And the Unicorns (we put in the Margin the Rhinoceros) ('tis the Hebrew word) ſhall come down with them, and the Bullocks with the Bulls, &c. How ſhall the Unicorns come down with them ? Not as we come down from a Hill, or high place upon our feet, but they being deſtroyed ſhall be caſt or thrown down. Theſe Unicorns in the Prophet, are all thoſe proud and mighty men of the World, who oppoſe, oppreſs, and perſecute the Church of God, called out of the World to faith in Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, as appears fully (verſ. 8.) Theſe for their ſtubbornneſs againſt the will and ways of God, are juſtly compared to, or called Unicorns ; For, as Unicorns will not ſerve men, ſo theſe will not ſerve God ; they will neither Plow nor Harrow, they will neither go nor come at his command.

And as the enemies of the Church, ſo the enemies of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, or they who proſecuted, purſued, and afflicted him to death, are ſet forth under this title, in that prayer of David a type of Chriſt (Pſal. 22. 21.) Save me from the Lions mouth, for thou haſt heard me from the horns of the Unicorns. Chriſt prayed, Save me from the Lions mouth, that is, from my greateſt enemies : Thou haſt heard me from the horns of the Unicorn, that is, of the Scribes and Phariſees, of Herod and Pontius Pilate, againſt whom Chriſt had help when he prayed, and got victory over them all, by his death and ſufferings.

Laſtly, The Unicorn (according to the deſcription here given of him) reſembles all refractory and rebellious ſinners, who will by no means be reclaimed to the ſervice of God, who will not receive the yoke of Chriſt though eaſie, nor bear his burden though light, but remaining obſtinate and obdurate in their ſins, will only do what they will, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, and being to every good work reprobate. And as Naturaliſts ſay of the Unicorn, he may be ſlain, he will not be taken ; ſo we may ſay of ſuch men, they will ſooner loſe their lives than their wills : They are like natural brute Beaſts (of whom the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, 1 Eph. 2. 12.) made to be taken and deſtroyed. Such Beaſts were the Egyptians, of whom it is ſaid (Pſal. 89. 10.) Thou haſt broken Rahab in pieces, as one that is ſlain. Some Beaſts are broken and tamed, but Egypt (called Rahab for ſtrength and pride, or for pride in ſtrength) was a Beaſt that would not be broken and tamed by all thoſe plagues of God poured upon it at Land, and was therefore broken and ſlain in the Red-Sea.

In arcano ſermone Monoceros ferus, jugi impatiens indomituſque peccator eſt. Franc. Joan in paraph. libri Job.

Interemi poteſt, capi non poteſt. Plin.

Thus we ſee how the Church and faithful people of God, reſemble the Unicorn in ſome things, as alſo, how the wicked of the World, or the World lying in wickedneſs, reſemble him in other things.

VERS. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the Oſtrich ?

Which leaveth her eggs in the Earth, and warmeth them in duſt.

And forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, or that the wild Beaſts may break them.

She is hardned againſt her young ones, as though they were not hers : Her labour is in vain without fear,

Becauſe God hath deprived her of wiſdom, neither hath he imparted to her underſtanding.

What time ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high, ſhe ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider.

THE Lord having put ſeveral queſtions to Job, about the wild Beaſts of the Earth, queſtions him in this context, according to our Tranſlation, about two, but according to ſome other Tranſlations and Readings, about three ſorts of Fowls of the Air. Our Tranſlation mentions only the Peacock and Oſtrich, others add the Stork.

Yet 'tis the opinion of a very late and learned Author, that the whole context of theſe ſix verſes contains the deſcription of one Fowl only, and that the Oſtrich. It cannot be denied, but that the firſt verſe of this context, or the thirteenth of the Chapter, hath as various Tranſlations, by all ſorts of Authors, as any (if not more than any) in this Book ; yet he grants, that moſt who have Tranſlated it into Latine, and all that ever he ſaw, who have Tranſlated it into the Mother Language, of any Country, render it, the Peacock. And therefore referring the Reader to the peruſal of his reaſons and authorities, which are many and cogent, while he Interprets the word Renamim, the Oſtrich, I ſhall only touch at ſome of them in paſſage, paſſage, as I proceed to open the Text, as 'tis expreſſed in our own Tranſlation.

Bochartus de animalibus ſcripturæ, parte poſter. lib. 2. cap. 16.

Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacocks ?

That the Hebrew word here uſed, ſignifies a Peacock, is clear in all thoſe Lexicographers that I have met with. Another word is uſed (1 Kings 10. 22.) which yet Buxtorfius ſaith is by ſome rendred Parrats, and they are often brought in Ships from far Countries. This I deſire the Reader to take notice of, that there is a wonderful variety and difference of opinion among Interpreters, about the proper names of Animals, Plants and Gemms; and therefore no wonder if ſome render the word Chaſidah in following part of this verſe, which is uſually taken for a Stork, the Oſtrich; and others, the word Renanim at the beginning of it, Oſtriches, which we and almoſt all others, render Peacocks.

The Peacock is deſcribed only by his wings, in the former part of verſe 13. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacock?

The Oſtrich is deſcribed, not only by her wings and feathers, in the ſame verſe 13. but by four diſtinct qualities, in the context of the five verſes following;

Firſt, By her careleſneſs and forgetfulneſs of that which ſhe ſhould be very tender of, her eggs, when ſhe hath laid them; this we have in the 14. and 15. verſes; Which leaveth her eggs in the Earth, and warmeth them in the duſt, and forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, &c.

Secondly ſhe is deſcribed, by her unnaturalneſs to her young ones, when her eggs are hatched; this we have at verſe 16. She is hardned againſt her young ones, as though they were not hers.

Thirdly, She is deſcribed, by that which is the reaſon of both the former, her want of wiſdom and underſtanding, at verſe 17. which verſe tells us alſo whence it comes to paſs, that ſhe hath ſo little of theſe excellent endowments, even Becauſe God hath deprived her of Wiſdom, &c. As if he had ſaid, if you would know a reaſon, or have an account, why the Oſtrich is thus forgetful of her eggs, thus unnatural to her young ones, it is this, God hath deprived her of wiſdom, neither hath he imparted unto her underſtanding.

The Fourth thing which ſhe is deſcribed by, is her ſwiftneſs of foot or wing, for both are here to be taken in, teſtified by her ſcorn and contempt of her ſwifteſt purſuers; When ſhe lifteth up her ſelf ſhe ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider, at verſe 18. Thus you have the parts of this context, with reſpect to theſe two winged Creatures or Fowls of the Air here (according to our reading) deſcribed the Peacock and the Oſtrich. Thus the Lord having ſhewed his unſearchable wiſdom, ſhadowed in thoſe other Creatures formerly enquired of, proceeds ſtill in the ſame argument, though upon a different ſubject. The power, wiſdom and providential care of God, is manifeſted in and about all his Creatures; as much in and about the feathered-fowls of the Air, as the four-footed Beaſts of the Earth, of one kind or other.

Verſe 13. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacocks.

Thoſe words gaveſt thou, are not expreſt in the Hebrew Text; that's marvellous conciſe, which hath occaſioned both differences and difficulties, in the explication of it. The Text is only this, goodly wings to the Peacocks, we ſay, gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacocks? The Jewiſh Doctors generally make the ſame ſupplement. Some Expoſitors expreſs it thus, haſt thou made the goodly wings of the Peacocks? I conceive the difference is not great, whether we read, haſt thou given, or haſt thou made? For doubtleſs, God in giving made, or in making gave,

Hebræi ſubaudiunt אם נתת num dediſti? Merc. An feciſti? Biſc.

The goodly wings unto the Peacocks.

Maſter Broughton Tranſlates proud wings. The Peacock is a beautiful Bird, and a proud one too: The Peacock is gorgeouſly clothed, as I may ſay, by the hand of God. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings? No, it was I the Lord, not thou, O Job, that gave the goodly wings unto the Peacocks. The word which we Tranſlate goodly, is very proper to the Peacock; the root of it ſignifies to exult, to boaſt, to glory, and therefore many Tranſlate, gaveſt thou the exulting or the rejoycing wings unto the Peacock. Though the Peacocks wings cannot properly exult or boaſt, yet becauſe they are an occaſion of exulting and boaſting to this Creature, therefore they may be ſaid to do ſo. Hence Maſter Mercer Tranſlates The Peacock boaſts with his wings or of his wings, he is filled as it were with joy, beholding his wings. And this gives one reaſon why the learned Bochartus is perſwaded that the Oſtrich is here intended, becauſe the Peacock hath not goodly wings as the Oſtrich hath, all the moſt beautiful feathers of the Peacock being placed in his tail or train, which is richly painted and adorned with various well-ſhadowed colours to the eye, when he ſpreads his tail, and prides himſelf in his plumes. But we need not ſtay upon this objection; the wing may well be taken for any feathered part. As Moſes ſaith (Gen. 7. 14.) every Bird of every ſort, or as the Hebrew is, of every wing, came into the Ark. And though the Peacock boaſteth chiefly in his train, as being moſt beautiful, yet he hath beauty in his wings too. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings נעלסה Ter tantum occurrit, ſemel in Cal. cap. 20. 18. ſemel in Hiphtael. Prov. 7. 18. & hic in Niphal. eſt autem laſcivire, exultare, gloriari. Alis pavo exultat. Merc.

Unto the Peacock?] The Vulgar Latine Tranſlates, the wing of the Oſtrich, is like the wing of the Hawk; But that Tranſlation is ſo wide, that one ſaith, Who reading this, wonders not at the ſtrangeneſs of the interpretation? The Greek Tranſlation of the Septuagint is as wide and dark as that, I ſhall not trouble the Reader about either, nor about many more which he may find collected, not only by Bochartus, but by ſeveral others.

Penna ſtruthionis ſimilis eſt pennis herodie & accipitris. Vulg. Quis hæc legens non miretur novitatem interpretationis? Druſ.

The word which we Tranſlate Peacocks in the plural number, comes from a root which ſignifies to cry, or to make a loud noiſe, to make a cry in joy and triumph, and ſo it may be rendred, The wings or feathers of rejoycers and triumphers. The Peacock may well be ſo called, becauſe he is a loud-voiced ſhrieking Bird, glorying as it were, and triumphing in his wings and feathers. The very nature and qualities both of Beaſts and Birds, are often and elegantly expreſt in the Hebrew names. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings to the Peacocks?

רננים Deducitur à radice רנן quod eſt cantare, gloriari, lætari, ovare. Quare propriè eſt penna, vel ala lætantium & ovantium. Pavo eſt animal glorioſum; Gemmantes quippe cum laudatur expandit colores adverſo maximè ſole quia ſic fulgentius radiant, quos ſpectari gaudet. Plin. Quem non gemmata volucris Junonia cauda Vinceret.

Hence Note, Firſt, God will be owned even in beſtowing feathers upon the Birds.

Here the Lord takes off Job from having any hand in that gift, much more from having the ſole hand in it. The workmanſhip of God may be ſeen, and is to be acknowledged, even in this, the feathers of a Bird; and if the leaſt, the ſmalleſt things, among good things, are of God, how much more the greateſt! If it be of God, that the Peacock hath his feathers? How much more that man hath reaſon, that man hath wiſdom and underſtanding! How much more that man hath grace and holineſs! Every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh from above; God will be owned, even in a feather, in the wing of a Fowl. Gaveſt thou? not thou, but I.

Secondly, In that God takes it upon himſelf to have given feathers to the Peacock, or to have made her feathers,

Obſerve, God hath a care to provide every way for the neceſſity of the Creature, even of the unreaſonable Creatures, whether thoſe that move upon the Earth, or thoſe that fly in the Air.

We read before, how the Lord feeds the Lions, how he feeds the Ravens, how he feeds the wild Aſſes, how he provides food for Unicorns, and here he would have us take notice, how he provides clothing for the Birds; feathers, are to the Birds their clothing; they are to all Birds good and warm clothing, and to ſome beautiful and goodly clothing. While Chriſt (Math. 6. 26, 28.) ſpake of clothing the Lillies, and of feeding the Fowls of the Air, he would from thence infer an argument of the fatherly care of God over his people; now in that God gives a clothing of feathers to the Fowls, and doth not leave them naked, it holds forth theſe three things.

Firſt, It is an evidence or proof of the goodneſs and munificence of God, in providing ſufficiently for the comfortable ſubſiſtence of all his Creatures, and for the ornament of ſome of them.

Secondly, 'Tis a confirmation of his Childrens faith in, and dependance upon him for outward things, for meat and clothing, with all neceſſaries of this life.

Thirdly, 'Tis a reproof of their diſtruſt and unbelief, with reſpect to outward things. Certainly, the Lord who hath provided feathers for the Fowls of the Air, will provide clothing for his Children and faithful Servants.

Further, conſider; The Lord hath not only given wings or feathers to the Peacock, but the Text ſaith, he hath given goodly wings.

Hence Learn, Thirdly, All Birds are not of a feather.

That is, God doth not give alike, no, not to Birds: Some Fowls of the Air have feathers only for their uſe, or to ſerve their neceſſity; all Fowls of the Air have not gay feathers, nor goodly wings; all of them have not painted feathers, all of them have not (as Plinies word is, deſcribing the Peacock) jewelly feathers, gemmy feathers; ſome have but plain feathers to flie with, and to keep them from the cold, but here the Peacock hath goodly wings. And we read (Ezek. 17.3.) of an Eagle full of feathers, which had divers colours; we put in the Margin, Embroydering colours. God makes for ſome Fowls of the Air, ſuch coats as Jacob made for his Son Joſeph, whom he loved more than all his Children (Gen. 37.3.) even coats of many colours; and ſuch are his degrees of diſpenſation alſo, with reſpect to the Children of men. God gives clothing to all, but not goodly clothing, not rich clothing; to ſome he gives goodly clothing, he puts a glory upon their Garments; he cloths ſome with Scarlet, and puts ornaments upon their apparel, as David in his mourning ſong ſpake of Saul, adorning his ſubjects, the people of Iſrael (2 *Sam.*23,24.) When Abraham ſent his ſervant to woo for his Son Iſaac, or to fetch a Wife for him, he ſent goodly clothing; his Servant brought forth Jewels of Silver, and Jewels of Gold, and Raiment and gave them to Rebekah (Gen. 24. 53.) Joſeph (Gen. 45. 22.) gave all his Brethren changes of Raiment; but to Benjamin he gave three hundred pieces of Silver, and five changes of Raiment. Thus the Lord deals with men and women in this World; all have apparel to cover their nakedneſs, and defend them from the ſharpneſs of a Winter ſeaſon, but ſome have goodly apparel.

Producit harum avium pennas exempli loco ut oſtendat ſe non tantum neceſſarium victum ſed etiam ornatum dare animalibus. Aves pennarum varietate inſignes à poetis pictæ volucres dicuntur.

Fourthly, In that theſe goodly wings given to the Peacock, are by ſome rendred proud wings, and by others boaſting wings.

Note, There is a temptation in gay worldly things, to puff up the mind with pride.

The very Peacock having fine feathers, over-weens himſelf, and is proud of them. As we ſay, Fine feathers, make fine Birds, ſo we may ſay, Fine feathers, make proud Birds. And no wonder if it be ſo with ſilly Birds; for even wiſe men, if they receive any thing that is goodly from the hand of God, are very apt to be as proud of it, as the Peacock of his goodly wings. If the Lord doth but give us a few gay feathers, a little more richer than others, a little more honour than others (theſe are gay feathers) or if the Lord give us better and higher parts than others (theſe are gayer feathers) How hard is it for us to keep down high thoughts, or not to ſoar high upon theſe wings and feathers, in admiring thoughts and airy conceits of our ſelves, though the Holy Ghoſt every where way-layeth the pride of our hearts by many arguments, by this eſpecially, becauſe all we have is given us by God, and we have nothing of our own. The Lord hath given man many goodly feathers, beauty and ſtrength of Body to many, riches and honor to not a few, wit, learning, eloquence to ſome, and to others ſpiritual gifts and graces, which are the goodlieſt feathers of all. Now ſeeing, all theſe are given us, why ſhould we be proud of any one of them? Yea, how humble ſhould we be, though adorned with them all! Hence that Apoſtolical check to proud ones (1 Cor. 4. 7.) What haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? And if thou haſt received it, why doſt thou glory and boaſt, as if thou hadſt not received it? In theſe words he more than implieth two things; Firſt, That they who have received thoſe goodlier feathers of ſpiritual gifts and graces, are in danger of being lifted up by them. Secondly, That they ought not. The Angels who fell, had goodly feathers, and they were lifted up, not only in pride with what they had received, and were beholden to God for, but in pride to have more, or get higher, and not be beholden to God for it. There is a temptation in any good thing, a great temptation in goodly things, to pride; and therefore we had need to pray when we have any thing that is goodly, whether it be Natural, Civil, Moral, or Spiritual, to be kept humble and preſerved from pride. The Apoſtle Paul was in danger to be exalted above meaſure, through the abundance of the revelations which he had, when caught up to the third Heaven (2 Cor. 12. 3, 7.) The beſt men on Earth may be over-heated by what they have received from Heaven, and the fleſh may take occaſion, as, by the Commandment to work in us all manner of concupiſcence (Rom. 7. 8.) ſo, by our raptures in Spirit, to puff us up with that ſpecial concupiſcence called pride.

The Peacock here ſpoken of, is ſo far tranſported with his fine feathers, that he may be called the picture of pride. We have a common ſaying in our Language, Such a one is as proud as a Peacock; or, he is a proud Peacock. A Peacock and a proud perſon are alike in ſeveral things.

Firſt, As the Peacock is proud of his feathers, ſo is he of his cloths. One of the Ancients reproving pride in clothing, ſaid, in his time, It is not ſo much the warmth of their clothing, but the curious dye or colour of the cloth which is regarded; and moſt inſiſt more upon the trimming of their veſtures, than upon the increaſe of their vertues.

In habitu non calor ſed color requiritur, magiſq; veſtium quam virtutum cultui inſiſtitur. Bern.

Secondly, A Peacock, as he is proud of his feathers, ſo he loves they ſhould be ſeen, or he loves to ſhew his fine feathers. The Peacock ſpreads his plumes, ſo doth a proud perſon, Not only he that is proud of his apparel affects to be ſeen, but he that is proud of his gifts, knowledg, learning, eloquence, how doth he ſpread theſe plumes, and affect applauſe! As the vain-glorious Phariſees thought nothing they did in Religion worth the doing, unleſs they were ſeen in doing it; ſo vain-glorious perſons think nothing they have worth the having, unleſs they make others ſee they have it.

Thirdly, A proud man is like to the Peacock in his exulting clamorous voice or cry: Such love to talk high, and are very loud; they love to be heard as well as ſeen, and to hear themſelves ſpeak in the hearing of others.

Fourthly, The Peacock (ſay Naturaliſts) however he hath very goodly feathers, yet hath but a very weak head. 'Tis ſo with proud perſons; whatever fine ſhews they make, their intellectuals are but coarſe; and they that are proud of the ſtrength of their heads, of their wit and underſtandings, have indeed the weakeſt heads of all. There is much folly lodged in that mans head, where much knowledg lodgeth, if pride lodg in his heart too, And ſeeing God gives (in this ſenſe) fooliſh men (as this fooliſh Bird) fine feathers, we need not envy them; for their folly in being proud of their fine feathers, debaſeth them more in the ſight of God, than their fine feathers can honour them in the ſight of men. Uſually proud perſons have little that is good in them; but how much ſoever they have, it will be little more to them than a fine feather, becauſe they think it ſo much, that they are proud of it.

Pavo infirmum habet caput, ſuperbus imbecille judicium.

Fifthly, Naturaliſts ſay, the Peacock (and it is as true of a proud perſon) is an Angel in aſpect, or to look on (he makes a goodly ſhew) a thief in his foot, i. e. he goeth ſoftly without noiſe, yet hath a voice like Hell, crying out and ſhrieking very unharmoniouſly to the ear. A proud perſon may be an Angel in aſpect, but he is a thief in his feet, he goeth ſoftly, yet deceitfully; and there is a Hell in his voice. A loud boaſting tongue is as troubleſom and unpleaſant to the ear, as a brawling; and uſually boaſters are brawlers too: For, as Solomon hath concluded it (Prov. 13. 10.) By pride cometh contention.

Angelus aſpectu, pede latro, vo e Gehenna.

Laſtly, Proud ones are like the Peacock, becauſe that which perſons are moſt commonly proud of, is of little worth. The Peacock is proud of his feathers, which are worthleſs things, fit only for Children to play with. And though it is a truth, that ſome men (as was ſaid before) are proud of ſuch things as are excellent in themſelves, and of a great intrinſick value, yet (as was alſo ſaid before) whatſoever a man is proud of, will (to his account) be no better than a Peacocks feather. A man that is proud of his beauty and apparel, of his riches and outward ſplendor, may truly be ſaid to be proud of a feather; Solomon, the wiſeſt of Kings, and taught by the Spirit of God, hath written vanity and inſufficiency upon all worldly things. And if a man be proud of his underſtanding, knowledg, or any internal endowment (which are things of real excellency) they all become vain to him; yea, if a man be proud of his graces, though they ſhall never be utterly vain to him, yet ſo far as he is proud of them, they are vain to him, being hindred by the preſent prevailings of corruptions, from doing that which is one of the moſt proper works of them, the keeping him humble, empty, and nothing in his own eyes. Gaveſt thou goodly wings to the Peacocks;

And wings and feathers unto the Oſtrich?

Several Tranſlators (as was toucht before) find two diſtinct Fowls in this latter part of the Verſe. Mr. Broughton ſaith, Gaveſt thou feathers to the Stork and Oſtrich? And ſo others. Our Tranſlators put it thus in the Margin, The feathers of the Stork and Oſtrich. The occaſion of this difference in tranſlating, ariſes from the Original word uſed laſt in this Verſe, which commonly ſignifies a feather only, yet is ſometimes taken to ſignifie the Fowl it ſelf, or a feathered Fowl; and becauſe the Oſtrich hath the richeſt and moſt beautiful feathers, therefore it is here tranſlated, the Oſtrich. The feathers of the Oſtrich being that for which ſhe is moſt famous, the Oſtrich her ſelf may (not inelegantly) be expreſſed by a word, which properly and ſtrictly taken, ſignifies nothing but a feacher; but moſt Interpreters taking that word in its proper ſence to ſignifie a feather, take the former word, which firſtly and properly ſignifies a Stork, for the Oſtrich. Gaveſt thou wings and feathers to the Oſtrich. The reaſon, I conceive, why that word (Chaſidah) which properly ſignifieth a Stork, is here rendred an Oſtrich, is becauſe the deſcription given of the Bird here intended in the five Verſes following, doth no way agree with the Stork, but fairly with the Oſtrich; for the Stork (ſay Naturaliſts) is of a very good and pittiful Nature, and hath its name from a root in the Hebrew, which ſignifies kindneſs, pitty and tenderneſs, whereas the Creature here deſcribed, is void of all theſe, as will appear in opening this context. And therefore Grammarains tell us, that the Oſtrich is ſo called by the rule of contraries, merciful or kind, for unkind and cruel; which way of ſpeaking is uſual in the Hebrew, as alſo in other languages. Thus the Hebrew word for a Harlot, ſignifies one that is Holy; Harlots being moſt unholy, filthy, and unclean Women, proſtituting their bodies to the luſts of others, and inviting them to unlawful pleaſures.

An pennam Ciconiæ aut Struthiocamelo dares? Jun. נצה Pluma pennæ vel juxta quoſdam Struthiocamelus, quaſi pennatus dictus. Buxtorf. חסידה Ciconia, ſic dicta a beneficētia quaſi beneficam dicas à nomine חסד hic ſignificat Struthiocamelum per antiphraſin, eò quòd avis illa minime ſit benefica, ut quæ laboret ſingulari Ἀστοργίᾳ fœtum ſuum Pia Ciconia pietatis cultrix Ciconia. Petronius & Solinus.

And that we are not here to underſtand the Stork properly taken, but the Oſtrich, is plain for theſe three reaſons; the firſt of which hath been already intimated, the Bird here intended being of a quite contrary nature to the ſtork. Secondly, The Stork hath no ſuch beautiful feathers as ſeem to be given to the Bird here ſpoken of, yet we muſt not believe that all thoſe beautiful colours in which Oſtriches feathers are ſeen and worn, are natural to them; for ſhe hath no feathers of note, of any colour growing on her, but black and white, all others are died and Artificial. Thirdly, The Stork doth not lay her Eggs on the ground, but builds on high in Trees. (Pſal. 104. 17.) As for the Stork, the Fir-Trees are her houſe, whereas the Bird hear mentioned, goes upon the ground; though ſhe hath wings, yet not wings able to lift her up to a Tree, or take any lofty flight in the Air. Naturaliſts deſcribing the Oſtrich, tell us, that ſhe is ſuch a Bird as is alſo a kind of beaſt. Some creatures are of two kinds in one, living partly upon the earth, and partly in the watter; here the Oſtrich may upon another account be numbred among theſe, he uſing the wing to flutter a little in the Air like a Bird, yet moſtly like a beaſt moving upon the Earth. And hence a learned Author placed the Oſtrich between Fowls that fly in the Air, and things that breath or move upon the Earth. Pliny reports, the Oſtriches of Africa and Arabia to be very big bodied, as tall in ſtature as a Horſe and his rider, and more ſwift of foot than any Horſe, being helped by their wings, which yet are not ſtrong enough to raiſe their bulky bodies above the earth.

Struthio eſt avis quædam appropinquans ad genus beſtiarum, unde licet habeat pennas ad modum animalium: non tamen ſe poteſt in altum elevare. Aquin. Struthio eſt eſt in confinio volucrum & reptilium, pennas quippe habet ut avis, ſed è terra non tollitur ut reptile. Mirum animal, alatum ut volucria neque tamen volucre.

Upon theſe grounds and conſiderations it is, that all theſe Interpreters, who will have but one Fowl of the Air to be intended in this part of the Text, fix upon the Oſtrich, not upon the Stork; though the word Chaſidah, which they tranſlate Oſtrich, doth properly ſignifie the Stork.

Howbeit, ſome ſee no cogent reaſon why we may not expound the word Chaſidah properly by the Stork, and yet ſalve all the former objections, by rendring the word Notſa an Oſtrich. There is a neceſſity that we find the Oſtrich in this Verſe, becauſe (as was ſaid before) the deſcription given in the five following Verſes, is not applicable to the Stork, but Oſtrich; notwithſtanding, if while we apply the word Chaſidah to the Stork, the word Notſa may ſerve as well, if not better, to ſignifie the Oſtrich. Why may we not (ſay they) take in both, ſo render the Text thus, Who gave wings to the Stork and the Oſtrich? And ſo all difficulties will be removed, and the word Renanim reſerved free for the Peacock.

But foraſmuch as our Tranſlation puts the Oſtrice alone into the Text, I ſhall not add any thing concerning the Nature of the Stork, but only of the Oſtrich; Gaveſt thou wings and feathers to the Oſtrich?

The word rendred Wings, ſignifies ſtrength; the ſtrength of Birds is in their wings (as of man in his arms) and ſome Birds are exceeding ſtrong of wing.

The word rendred by us feathers, ſignifies in the root to flie, becauſe feathers are the inſtruments of flying; yet others derive it from a word, which ſignifies to grow or flouriſh, becauſe feathers grow and flouriſh upon Fowls, as Herbs and Flowers out of, and upon the ground. And the reaſon why ſome conceive the Oſtrich is meant by this word (Notſa) which we tranſlate feathers, is becauſe the feathers of the Oſtrich are ſo like beautiful Flowers, or a goodly Garland of flowers. Great Princes in all ages having adorned their Hats or Hair with the plumes of the Oſtrich, ſet in Ouches of Gold, and beſpangled with the rareſt Gems or precious Stones.

אביר Robuſtus, fortis, hinc אבר penna, ala, quod in alis robur avium ſit. נוצה Pluma. Kimchi à נצה Volavit, deducit, ſed malim à נוצ effloruit, quod in avibus plumæ enaſcantur ut flores & herbæ è terra. Mer.

What the Nature, the cuſtoms and qualities of the Oſtrich are, will appear in opening the latter part of this context. All that I ſhall add here, is,

Firſt, To ſet down more fully the deſcription which the Natural Hiſtorian gives of her. The African and Ethiopian Oſtriches (ſaith he) are the greateſt of Birds, even as big as a Beaſt, in height they are taller than a Horſe and his Rider ſittnig on his back; they alſo exceed the Horſe in ſwiftneſs of foot, their wings ſeeming to be given them only to help them in running, for they can ſcarcely fly at all, or lift themſelves much above ground. They are cloven-footed, or hoof-forked like a Hart, their hoofs or claws ſerving them to gather up ſtones, which in their flight or retreat, they throw backward upon ſuch as hunt them. They have an admirable concoction, digeſting the hardeſt things which they ſwallow down; nor is their folly leſs admirable, thinking themſelves ſufficiently hid, when their heads are. Their Eggs ſerve for cups to drink in, and their feathers adorn the Creſts and Helmets of the Warrior.

Plin. l. 10. c. 1.

And beſides the beauty of her feathers, their equality or evenneſs is ſo remarkable, that among the Egyptians, the feather of an Oſtrich was taken for the ſymbol of equity; ſo that when they would ſignifie a man of an equal ſpirit and converſation towards all men, and in all things, they uſed to paint the feather of an Oſtrich.

Secondly, I ſhall add this alſo; that as in the Peacock we had the repreſentation of a proud perſon, ſo in the Oſtrich the lively image or picture of an Hypocrite, which may be held out and made good in theſe five particulars.

Firſt, The Oſtrich is a kind of middle Creature (as was ſaid) between a Bird that flies in the Air, and a beaſt that goes upon the ground, having ſomewhat of both, yet is properly neither. Thus it is with the Hypocrite or falſe-hearted Chriſtian; he ſtands between a godly man and a profane man, he is neither; he is not profane, in ſtrict ſence (though really he be ſo, as the Hebrew word for a Hypocrite imports, yet (I ſay) in ſtrict ſence he is not profane) becauſe he makes a profeſſion, and appears to men in a form of godlineſs; yet he is not godly, becauſe he only makes a profeſſion, and appears in a form of godlineſs, either denying, or at leaſt, not having any power of godlineſs. A Hypocrite hangs, as I may ſay, between God and man, between the ways of holineſs, and the ways of ſin; he either halts between two Religions, as Elijah told the Jews (1 King. 18. 21.) or takes not one right ſtept in that one which he pretends to; he is (as it was ſaid of the Church of Laodicea) neither hot nor cold, but between both, luke-warm. As the Oſtrich is a creature between two, ſomething like a Fowl of the Air, and ſomething like a beaſt of the earth, or (as the Latine word for an Oſtrich implies) a Camel winged, a winged Camel; ſo is a Hypocrite, a kind of a middle-man, between a good man and a bad, in appearance very good, but in truth and reality ſtark naught; and by ſo much, worſe than the worſt of profane ones, by how much he had a mind to appear better than the beſt, at leaſt among the beſt of holy ones.

Sunt animalia amphibia quæ non facile ſtatuas an aquatilia ſint, an terreſtria, volatilia an terreſtria; ut veſpertilio, qui eſt mus pennatus; & Struthiocamelus, qui eſt quaſi Camelus alatus; utriuſq; naturæ participes & expertes. Sanct.

Secondly, This Oſtrich, as he is deſcribed, is a Creature without natural affection; and ſo the Hypocrite and falſe-hearted profeſſor, is always without ſpiritual, Chriſtian, gracious affections, and very often without natural and meer humane affections. That's one part of the character which the Apoſtle gives of thoſe who have a form of godlineſs, but deny the power (2 Tim. 3.3.)

Cœleſtia ſe quærere ſimulantes, terrenis adhærent.

Thirdly, The Oſtrich hath feathers, but cannot flie; the Oſtrich ſpreads her wings as if ſhe would flie aloſt, yet cannot make a lofty flight; ſhe raiſeth her ſelf no higher above the Earth, than a man may hop or leap; her Body or Earthly part is ſo ponderous, that her wings cannot raiſe her far into the Air, much leſs bear her up long there. It is ſo with the Hypocrite, he hath wings, and he ſeems to ſpread them, as if he had ſtrong deſires, and great deſigns Heaven wards; he would make you believe he is both from and for above, yet he cannot get off the Earth; he is an Earthly minded man, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch, though as to an outward profeſſion, and ſome formal actions, he ſeems to ſoar aloft, and live above the World, yet he ever drives an Earthly trade, and hath ſome baſe carnal aim or other, in his higheſt ſervices. The Earth is every natural mans Center, and therefore though (as any heavy Body, a Stone or clod of Clay) he may be forced upward, yet when that impreſſion is ſpent, he falls down again to Earthly things, which only are connatural to him.

Omnia digerere poteſt Struthio.

Fourthly, The Oſtrich is a Creature of a mighty digeſtion, of a hot ſtomach; and therefore is painted and figured with a piece of Iron in her mouth, implying, ſhe digeſts Iron. Thus the Hypocrite can digeſt the hardeſt things, even that which is harder than Iron, ſin; that which lieth upon the ſtomach of a godly man as heavy as a ſtone, that is, which burdens his Conſcience, that the Hypocrite can ſwallow, it goes down eaſily with him, and is as eaſily digeſted; he can ſwallow this and that ſin without trouble, eſpecially, if he can but do it unſeen or in ſecret; he makes no bones (as we ſay) of any thing, which may but feed ſome luſt, he hath a Conſcience wide enough, and hot enough, and ſtrong enough to digeſt Iron, any unlawful deed if it ſerve his turn, or may turn to his worldly advantage. That which a man truly fearing God, and ſtrongly reſolved to do his known will, and nothing elſe knowingly, cannot, will not do, nor touch for a World, that he can do, and will do for ſome poor pittances, much more for the great things of the World.

Tanta eorum ſtoliditas, ut cum colla frutice occultaverint latere ſe exiſtimant. Plin. l. 10. c. 1.

Fifthly, Pliny ſaith, the Oſtrich being a very tall Creature, is yet ſo fooliſh, that if ſhe hide her head, ſhe thinks herſelf all hid and ſafe from danger; ſhe concludes no man ſees her, if ſhe ſees no man. Thus it is with the Hypocrite, if he can but be out of ſight himſelf, he thinks none ſee him, no not God himſelf (Pſal. 94. 6,7.) They ſlay the widow and the ſtranger, and murther the fatherleſs; yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it. They think they do all in ſuch ſecrecy, that as men do not, ſo God ſhall not behold it.

Laſtly, The Oſtrich hath very gay feathers, of much more worth than the Peacock, yet the Oſtrich hath no more wit than the Peacock; one is the emblem of a proud man, the other of a Hypocrite, both bravely clothed, yet with nothing but feathers.

From both, I would infer theſe two or three things, which may hold out much of the mind of God in this diſcourſe with Job, and with ſome Interpreters conceive God chiefly aimed at in this place, by telling Job or minding him, that he had given goodly wings, and gay feathers to Peacocks and Oſtriches: We ſee thoſe Creatures which have little worth in themſelves, have very goodly Ornaments put upon them by the hand of God. Hence we may infer,

Firſt, God oftentimes beſtoweth the gay and glitter of worldly things upon the worſt, the unworthieſt among the Sons of men; upon ſuch as have no more wiſdom in them, than a Peacock or an Oſtrich. And if ſo, then

Secondly, Take this inference; We ſhould not envy any ſort of men in the World their gay feathers. Job ſtumbled at this, and ſo did David, who ſaid of himſelf, I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked (Pſal. 73. 3.) David was troubled to ſee them garniſhed and trim'd like Peacocks and Oſtriches, flaunting with their feathers, while he poor man was chaſtened every morning; yet he quickly ſaw he had little reaſon for this trouble, when once he went into the Sanctuary; for there he learned in what a ſlippery place they ſtood, and therefore he called himſelf ignorant fool and Beaſt, for envying them their gayeſt feathers, their greateſt proſperity. (verſ. 22.) Let it not offend us to behold bad men in the beſt array. Is any man offended becauſe a Peacock or an Oſtrich hath ſuch goodly feathers? Surely, no man ought to complain of or find fault with the diſpenſations of God, becauſe he hath beſtowed a richer ſuit of feathers upon the proud Peacock and the fooliſh Oſtrich, than he hath upon the pious, kind-hearted, well-natur'd Stork, or the innocent Dove. Why then ſhould any be offended or murmur, if God give the good things of the World to thoſe that have no more goodneſs than Peacocks or Oſtriches, if he fills and adorns ſome bad men, with better things of this life, than many that are good? The Prophet (Ezek. 17. 4.) gives the deſcription of an Eagle, having long wings, and embroidered feathers, or feathers of many colours. Yet that Eagle was but a Heathen Prince, and he none of the beſt, though one of the greateſt of that ſort. Bad men have their imbroiderers, the paint of an Earthly Glory, and that is all the portion, all the good they are ever like to have; as Abraham told the rich man in the Parable (Luke 16.) Who was clothed with purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciouſly every day while he lived; Son remember thou haſt had thy good things. Fine cloths and delicious fare is the all of good (and how poor an all is that) which ſome men deſire, and which any ungodly man ſhall receive from the hand of God.

Argumentum videtur eſſe tale. Sicut quælibet avis ſuis plumis, ita tu, O Job, & alii homines ſua ſorte contenti eſſe debent. Scult.

Thirdly, We may infer; Let all learn to be content with, and thankful for their own clothing or portion in this World, though it be but mean, coarſe or plain, and much inferiour to what they ſee others have. Thoſe Birds which have but poor feathers are ſatisfied with them, as well as the Peacock and the Oſtrich with their gaudy ones. By this argument God would perſwade Job, to be quiet and patient, though his clothing at that time was very mean, yea, though all the gay feathers of his former proſperity were pluckt off and he ſtript naked, as he (poor man) ſaid at the twenty-firſt verſe of the firſt Chapter; Naked came I out of my Mothers womb, and naked ſhall I return thither, that is, to the womb of the Earth, man's common Parent. Though we make not a fair ſhew (as the Apoſtle ſaith ſome deſired to do, Gal. 6. 12.) in the fleſh; though we have not ſuch goodly feathers on our backs, in our outward robes as other have, let us be thankful for a dreſs of the meaneſt clothing, and patient though dreſſed in ſackcloth. God is a ſoveraign Lord, he is at his liberty to give goodly wings and glorious feathers to this Bird, and plain ones to another: And the ſame liberty he may and doth take and exerciſe when and where he pleaſeth, among the Children of men. Gaveſt thou the goodly wings to the Peacocks? Or wings and feathers to the Oſtrich?

The Lord having thus deſcribed the Oſtrich by her outſide, her wings and feathers, proceeds to ſhew her inſide, her diſpoſition and qualities. And we might expect, that a Creature clothed with ſuch lovely wings and feathers, would have had ſome lovely and rare qualities, whereas the Oſtrich hath not one that's commendable, all that is ſaid of her ſignifying an ignoble diſpoſition. For firſt, ſhe is forgetful and careleſs of that, which ſhe ſhould be very careful of.

Verſe 14. Which leaveth her eggs in the Earth, and warmeth them in the duſt.

15. And forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, or that the wild Beaſts may break them.

Here's the folly, the careleſsneſs, and blockiſhneſs of this Creature.

She leaveth her eggs in the Earth.

The eggs of the Oſtrich are great, and the ſhell very hard; we often ſee them ſet curiouſly in Gold or Silver, and ſo uſed as Cups or drinking Veſſels. But of what worth or uſe ſoever her eggs are, ſhe uſeth them very coarſely, and carries it towards them as if they were little worth.

Other Birds, when they lay their eggs, do their utmoſt to put them out of danger, they ſit upon them themſelves, and hatch them; but the Oſtrich (ſay ſome) leaves them in the Earth and is gone, ſhe takes no further care of them; where once they are laid, there ſhe lets them lie. This (I ſay) is contrary to the nature of other Birds, who lay their eggs in Neſts, as much as they can from danger, but ſhe leaveth them in the Earth,

And warmeth them in the duſt.

Solis æſtu fovet ova (ſc. Deus) quæ ſtruthiocamelus in arena poſuerat, donec excludantur pulli. Jun.

Which is not to be underſtood, as if ſhe left them there on purpoſe or deſignedly to warm them in the duſt, for that were a piece of diſcretion, but ſhe is reproved for improvidence; and therefore where 'tis ſaid, ſhe leaves them, the meaning is, ſhe looks no more after them, they are little beholden to her, ſhe will not (as ſome intimate) take pains, nor hath ſhe the patience to ſit on them, and hatch them as other Fowls do. Several Authors affirm, that the eggs thus left, are hatcht by the heat or warmth of the Sun. This Bochartus rejects as a meer dream, affirming, that all her eggs ſo left in the ſands, are corrupted, not hatched; and tells us from others, that the Oſtrich having forgotten where ſhe left her own eggs, happening upon the eggs of ſome other Oſtrich, ſits upon and hatches them; according to which, the Chaldee ſaith, She brings young ones which are not truly hers. But I leave theſe things to the conſideration of the Reader.

Others give two reaſons, why the Oſtrich leaves her eggs in the duſt, and doth not ſit upon them; both which are very unſuitable to what God himſelf ſaith of the Oſtrich. Firſt, (They ſay) ſhe leaveth them and warms them in the duſt, leſt ſhe ſhould break them with the weight of her Body; but doubtleſs there is no Fowl ſo heavy, but may ſit on her eggs, and not break them. The leaſt Bird that ſits upon eggs may break them if ſhe be careleſs, and the greateſt may preſerve them by care. Beſides, an Oſtriches egg is a very hard egg, and not eaſily broken; therefore ſurely, that cannot be the reaſon. Secondly, That ſhe doth not ſit upon her eggs her ſelf, becauſe ſhe wanteth feathers; her under parts being bare and naked, and ſo very unfit to yield warmth. But if the Oſtrich did thus upon a natural inſtinct, there would be no reaſon to charge her with folly, or to ſay God hath deprived her of wiſdom; for as the former reaſon, ſo this ſhould prove her to be a wiſe and provident Creature, therefore we muſt lay the reaſon ſomewhere elſe. And God himſelf hath given us the true reaſon, her blockiſh forgetfulneſs and unnaturalneſs, having no conſideration how ſoon her eggs may be ſpoiled.

Verſe 15. And forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them.

Ita ſtolida eſt ut non cogitat fieri poſſe, ut ova ſua, quæ humi reliquit, pedibus ferarum aut hominum premantur. Merc.

That is, ſhe hath no thought that they may take hurt, and therefore takes no care, nor makes any proviſion to preſerve them from hurt; ſhe minds not, nor doth at all apprehend the danger which her eggs are in: She forgetteth that the foot (of man) may cruſh them,

Or that the wild Beaſt (that paſſeth along in thoſe wilderneſſes and deſart places) may break them.

The Hebrew is threſh them, which implyeth more than cracking, even breaking them all to pieces.

Thus we ſee what report God himſelf makes of the Oſtrich; but many other things are reported of the Oſtrich by natural Hiſtorians, which we have no reaſon to believe, becauſe they contradict the report which the Lord here makes of her, unleſs they mean ſome other ſort of Oſtrich than is here deſcribed. For Ælian tells us, The Oſtrich ſits diligently upon her eggs, till the young ones are hatcht, and then is very tender over them. Both which the Lord denies concerning the Oſtrich in the Text, while he ſaith, She leaveth her eggs in the Earth, and warmeth them in the duſt, and forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, &c.

Ælianus l. 4. c. 6. 36.

Hence Note, Firſt, Among unreaſonable Creatures Beaſts or Birds, there are ſome further from reaſon than others are.

Though none of the Beaſts of the Earth, or Fowls of the Air, have Reaſon, properly ſo called (that's the priviledg of Angels and Men) yet there are ſome of them, that by a natural inſtinct, ſhew a great deal of reaſon in what they do, both as to their own preſervation, and the proviſion which they make for their young ones; in which latter reſpect, eſpecially this Scripture, takes notice of the deficiency of the Oſtrich.

Secondly, Foraſmuch as the Spirit of God reports this as the folly of the Oſtrich, that ſhe leaves her eggs to ſo much hazzard and danger.

Obſerve, To leave any thing in danger, or not to provide againſt danger, is a great argument of folly.

It is a great piece of wiſdom to foreſee danger, and a greater to provide well againſt it. A prudent man (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 22. 3.) foreſeeth the evil, and hideth himſelf: But the ſimple paſs on, and are puniſhed. Noah heard of the flood, and being warned of God, moved with fear (he both feared God, and was afraid of the danger) prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his Houſe, that is, his houſhold and family. In all caſes, as 'tis our wiſdom to foreſee danger, ſo 'tis our duty to provide againſt danger; not to leave our eggs, any thing we have, much leſs our lives, leaſt of all our own Souls, or the Souls of others, in danger. How many leave the Souls of their Children, the Souls of their Relations in the Earth, yea, to the Earth, or (as we ſay) to the wide World; and forget what ſnares, what temptations they may fall into, what foot may cruſh them, what wild Beaſt may tread upon them; yea, many that have the charge of Souls, as Miniſters, leave their Flocks, and forget the danger that may come to them, they forget that the foot may cruſh them, that Satan, and thoſe wild Beaſts, their luſts, may ruin and deſtroy them. We may ſay to ſuch, as Eliab, the elder Brother of David, ſaid to him (when he was ſent by his Father to viſit his Brethren in the Camp) (1 Sam. 17. 28.) With whom haſt thou left thoſe few ſheep in the Wilderneſs? Doſt thou know what will become of thy Sheep? Thou haſt left them for Lions and Bears to devour and to tear. So we may ſay to many (who are hardned like the Oſtrich againſt her eggs) with whom have you left your Flocks? With whom have you left thoſe few Sheep, thoſe poor Souls left under your charge? May not wild Beaſts, Bears and Lions deſtroy them? Not to foreſee danger, ſhews ſome want of prudence; but not to provide againſt danger foreſeen, is an argument of greateſt foolly.

Again, Conſider this fooliſh Creature the Oſtrich, leaves her eggs at (as we ſay) ſixes and ſevens, and is gone, ſhe never troubles her ſelf more with them, yet they are preſerved, and her kind is continued, though little thanks to her.

Hence we learn, Thirdly, There is a wonderful providence of God the Creator, watching over thoſe things which are left in hazzard, by the folly of man or of any other Creature.

Quanto ſtruthio-camelus ſtolidior, & ſuorum ovorum oblitior, tanto Dei providentia ſolertior & benignior.

By how much the Oſtrich is more neglectful, by ſo much the providence of God is more watchful. In the careleſneſs of the Creature, how doth the care of God ſhine forth! When they that are ingaged to, or ſhould provide for the good of others, or to prevent their evil, neglect that duty, how wonderful is the goodneſs and kindneſs of God in providing for them, and protecting them! David had this confidence (Pſal. 27. 10.) When my Father and my Mother (like the Oſtrich) forſake me (that is, though my Father and Mother ſhould prove ſo unnatural, as to forſake me, and expoſe me to the wide World,) yet the Lord will take me up. How good is God, who takes care for them, for whom neareſt Relations take none! The Prophet puts this queſtion, as if the negative anſwer were out of queſtion (Iſa. 49. 15.) Can a Woman forget (like the Oſtrich her eggs) her ſucking Child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the Son of her womb? Surely, if the anſwer were to be made to this queſtion in the light of Nature, would it not be this? She cannot, 'tis impoſſible ſhe ſhould. But how doth the Spirit of God anſwer in the Text? Not abſolutely in the negative, ſhe cannot; nor abſolutely in the affirmative, ſhe will; but mixtly or comparatively; Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee; that is, though it would be a very ſtrange thing if they ſhould, yet poſſibly they may, but 'tis impoſſible that I ſhould forget thee. Or thus, though Women ſhould turn Oſtriches, and forget their own iſſue, yet will I not forget thee; that is, I will have thee in everlaſting remembrance, as it followeth in the next words of the Prophet (verſ. 16.) Behold! I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me.

And as the Lord will not forget his Sion, the Church, nor leave her to the danger of being cruſht by every foot; ſo whatever is left to hazard or danger, whether, Firſt, by any unreaſonable Creature, as here in the Text; or Secondly, by unreaſonable and fooliſh men (from whom to be delivered the Apoſtle begged earneſtly, 2 *Theſ.*3.2.) or Thirdly, which the wiſeſt men, with all their care, and power, and diligence cannot ſecure from danger and hazard; there is a wakeful eye of providence, that will take care in all ſuch caſes, eſpecially, in the laſt. For, when men have done their utmoſt, to keep the foot from cruſhing us, and the wild Beaſts from deſtroying us, but cannot, then the care of God appears moſt in doing it. And in the caſe of that double neceſſity, when good men have done their beſt to keep us ſafe, but cannot; and bad men have done their worſt, to expoſe us unto, and leave us in danger, we may, and muſt leave all to God, who naturally takes care of all Creatures, and is the Saviour of all men (both as to temporal and eternal ſalvation, 1 Tim. 4. 10.) eſpecially of them that believe.

Thus we have the firſt part of the deſcription of the Oſtrich, who being ſo very fooliſh, not to diſcharge her duty to her eggs, God himſelf doth it, his providence orders the Sun to warm them, and the Sand to bring them forth. And as the Oſtrich, is careleſs of her eggs, before they are hatcht, ſo ſhe neglects her young ones as much when they are hatcht, as is ſhewed in the next verſe.

Verſe 16. She is hardened againſt her young ones, as if they were not hers.

This verſe gives us a farther deſcription of that Bird-beaſt the Oſtrich, by her unnaturalneſs to her off-ſpring; having left her eggs careleſly to hatch or periſh in the duſt, ſhe is as careleſs of her brood when they are hatched; when the heat of the Sun (ſay ſome) by the providence of God, hath done one part of her duty, to bring them forth, ſhe neglects the other part of her duty, which is, to bring them up; and ſo the pains which ſhe took in laying ſo many great eggs (one tells us, her neſt is uſually ſtored with fourſcore eggs, others ſay with twenty, the leaſt ſay with twelve or ten) ſeems to be in vain, ſhe taking no care of them, nor having any regard to them. This the Spirit of God expreſſeth in the beginning of verſ. 16. She is hardned againſt her young ones; ſhe is as forgetful of her chickens (if I may ſo call them) as ſhe was of her eggs. Rabbi Abraham reads thus, God hath hardned her againſt her young ones; and the reaſon that he gives for it, is, becauſe the word is in the Maſculine Gender, which cannot well agree with the Feminine her. And we find it in an active ſignification aſcribed to God (*Iſa.*63.17.) O Lord (ſaid the Church there) why haſt thou hardened our hearts from thy fear? Nor is it any where elſe found in the whole Bible, but in this place of Job; in this ſence the Rabbin expounds it here, nor is it either an impertinent or an unprofitable ſenſe. For as God ſometimes judicially hardens the hearts of men, ſo he doth alſo naturally harden the hearts of ſome Beaſts and Birds, and makes them of a cruel diſpoſition againſt their own kind, and then they let them ſink or ſwim, and expoſe them to the greateſt danger without any the leaſt proviſion for them.

Verbum קשח non alibi quam hic & Iſa. 63. 17. occurrit, ac penè idem valet quod הקשח in Hiphil. obduravit. Merc.

The Septuagint or Greek Interpreters, do not read as we, She is hardned againſt her young ones, but taking the ſame active ſignification of the verb, ſay thus; She hardneth her young ones; that is, ſhe doth not bring them up tenderly, nor delicately, but leaves them to ſhift for themſelves, and ſo hardneth them. And the reaſon of that rendring may be this, becauſe there is no particle in the Hebrew expreſſing the word, againſt; we ſay, She is hardned againſt her young ones, but the prepoſition commonly rendred againſt, is not in the Hebrew; that ſaith only, She hardneth her young ones, or, ſhe is hardning her young ones; but the ſenſe riſeth much to the ſame point, whether we read, She hardneth her young ones, or, is hardned againſt her young ones; for by being hardned againſt them, or by uſing them hardly, ſhe hardneth them. Many Parents harden their Children by being hard to them. If we put the ſenſe of both readings together, it will make the matter more compleat; ſhe hardneth her young ones, by hardning herſelf againſt them. Our reading is full and clear, She hardneth her ſelf againſt her young ones, or Children; ſo the word (ſtrictly taken) ſignifies, על Contra non habetur in fonte, ideo malui duriter habet aut tractat filios ſuos, potius quam indurat ſe contra filios ſuos. Druſ.

As though they were not hers.

Implying, that the conſideration of them, as hers, ſhould have made her more tender of them; yet ſhe carrieth it as if ſhe had no relation to them. The Hebrew is, For that they were not hers; which here, as in other parallel Scriptures, is rightly ſenſed in our Tranſlation, As though they were not hers. As if it had been ſaid, ſhe could not do otherwiſe, nor worſe by them, if they were meer ſtrangers to her, or ſuch as ſhe had no title to. She deals no better with them, than as if they either were not hers, or as if they were nothing to her, and ſhe no way concerned in them, Such is that complaint of the Church (Lam. 1.) Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by (and ſee my ſorrow) is it nothing to you? Are you not at all concern'd? Am I to you meerly as a ſtranger, that you paſs by and take no notice of my ſufferings? Thus the holy Ghoſt deſcribes the Oſtrich, ſhe is hardned againſt her young ones, as though they were none of hers, or as if ſhe had nothing to do with them.

ללא לה Videtur hic poſitum eſſe pro. כלא ut ſæpe alias, Lamed pro Caph uſurpatur; ſic erunt in carnem unam, i. e. quaſi caro una. Druſ.

Hence Note, Firſt, They that deal hardly with others, are hardned againſt them.

When Pharaoh dealt ſo extream hardly with the people of Iſrael, when he increaſed their number of bricks, and denied them ſtraw, and made them ſerve with rigor, he was extreamly hardned againſt them. That ſpiritual Judgment, hardneſs of heart, was deeply upon Pharaoh, when he dealt ſo hardly with the choſen people of God, notwithſtanding all the corporal Judgments which God brought upon him. And as it was in that caſe between Pharaoh and the Children of Iſrael, ſo in any caſe whatſoever, he that dealeth hardly with others, hath a heart hardned againſt them; as this Beaſt-bird, the Oſtrich (upon that account) is ſaid to harden her ſelf againſt her young ones.

Note, Secondly, 'Tis an aggravation of hard-heartedneſs, to deal hardly with thoſe that are young and tender.

They that are grown up, they that are hardned, can endure hardſhip. The Apoſtle Paul would have every believer, eſpecially a Miniſter of the Goſpel, to endure hardſhip (2*Tim.*2.3.) 'Tis both their duty and wiſdom to harden themſelves, who are like to endure hardſhip, and to find the World hardned againſt them. All ſuch ſhould inure themſelves to endure hard things, or to ſuffer evil (as the word there is) as the good Souldiers of Jeſus Chriſt. Good Souldiers, eſpecially old experienced Souldiers, will indure hardſhip; but your raw Souldiers, new liſted Souldiers, who never ſaw Battel or Siege, can hardly endure it. The Oſtrich puts her young ones to hardſhip. We ſhould be very careful, if we put hardſhip upon any, to put it upon thoſe only that are fit to endure it; we ſhould not put hardſhip upon young ones; 'tis the ſpirit of an Oſtrich, of a Beaſt-bird to do ſo. Jacob had a tender reſpect to his flocks, for this reaſon; when Eſau would have journied with him, no, ſaith he (*Gen.*33.13.) My Lord knoweth that the Children are tender, and the Flocks and Herds with young are with me, and if men ſhould over-drive them one day, all the Flock would die. As if he had ſaid, ſhould I uſe theſe young ones hardly, that are not fitted for hardſhip, I ſhould deſtroy all. Jacob had a tender care of thoſe that were tender. The Miniſters of the Goſpel ſhould take heed that they harden not themſelves againſt the young ones of the flock, ſuch as are newly come in to Jeſus Chriſt, late Converts, Babes in Chriſt, as the Apoſtle calls them (1 Cor. 3. 1.) theſe ſhould be dealt tenderly with. The Prophet deſcribes the tender care of Chriſt towards his people under this notion (*Iſa.*40.11.) He ſhall feed his flock like a Shepherd, he ſhall gather the Lambs with his arms, and carry them in his boſom, and ſhall gently lead thoſe that are with young; and ſhall his Miniſters hurry and over-drive them? When any do ſo, are they not as the Oſtrich in the Text, hardned againſt their young ones, yea againſt thoſe that are with young?

Σὺ οὖν κακοπάθησον. Tu igitur perfer adverſa. Bez.

Again, From that addition to her hard-heartedneſs; not only is ſhe hardned againſt her young ones, but ſhe is hardned as if they were not hers,

Hence Note, It is moſt unnatural to be hardned againſt thoſe to whom we ſtand engaged by near relation or natural bonds.

To look upon thoſe as not ours, that are ours, is an extremity of hardneſs. She is a hard Mother indeed, who deals with her Children as if they were not her Children. The Apoſtle concludes univerſally in the negative (Eph. 5.29.) No man ever hated his own fleſh, but loved it and cheriſhed it, as the Lord doth the Church. Now as it is an unnatural thing for a man to hate his own fleſh perſonal, ſo his own fleſh relational. Chriſt ſpeaking of the World, ſaith (John 15.19.) The World loves its own. The World doth not love you, ſaith Chriſt to his Diſciples; yea, becauſe I have choſen you out of the World, therefore the World hates you. The World and you are not of a piece, are not of a Pedigree, nor of the ſame extraction; you are of another World, and have had both a birth and a breeding, differing (toto cœlo) heavenly wide from theirs; and therefore 'tis no great wonder if the World hate you, who are not of it: But the World loves its own. They have a Nature more unnatural than the World, who are hardned againſt their own relations. Jeſus Chriſt (John 1.11.) came to his own, and his own received him not. Now, as not to be reſpected by our own, ſo not to reſpect our own, is unnatural. It was the ſin of the Jewiſh Nation, that they did not reſpect Chriſt, they being Chriſts own according to the fleſh. Their ſin is great, and they do ſhamefully, who will not do what good they ought and can for their own. The Prophet Jeremiah in his Lamentations (Chap.4 3.) ſpeaking of the women of Jeruſalem in that extremity of famine, ſaith, Even the Sea-monſters draw out the breaſt, they give ſuck to their young ones; but the Daughter of my people is become cruel like the Oſtriches in the Wilderneſs. The Prophet compares that people to the Oſtrich, though that cruelty of theirs, to their young ones proceeded not ſo much from the hardneſs of their hearts, as from the hardneſs of the times, and was to be charged rather upon their neceſſity, than their Nature. The famine upon them was ſo great, and preſſed them ſo ſore, that they were ſo far from having any thing to give their Children to eat, that they were forced to eat their Children; and yet this neceſſitous hard-heartedneſs of their towards their own, the Prophet upbraids them with, and reproves them for, while he ſaid, The Daughter of my people is become cruel like the Oſtriches of the Wilderneſs. Let all own relations to the utmoſt, and take heed of turning away from, and caſting off the care of theirs, as if they were not theirs. The Prophet (*Iſa.*58.7.) puts it among the duties of a faſt, That thou hide not thy ſelf from thy own fleſh. Then we keep a true faſt, a faſt that God hath choſen, when we break our bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are caſt out to our Houſes; when we cloth the naked, and comfort the ſorrowful, not hiding our ſelves from our own fleſh; by which, though we are ſpecially to underſtand our kindred and neareſt relations in the fleſh, yet 'tis true of meer ſtrangers, of thoſe who are at furtheſt remove from us, as to either alliance or conſanguinity, if they need our help. God hath made all men of one fleſh, in the ſame ſenſe that he hath made all men of one blood (Acts 17.26.) and therefore to hide our ſelves from the help of any man in diſtreſs, is to hide our ſelves from our own fleſh. 'Tis much to be wondered, that a fooliſh Bird ſhould be forgetful of her young ones, as though they were not hers; but it is to be abhorred in men and women, eſpecially in thoſe that profeſs the faith of Chriſt, that they ſhould no more look to them that are theirs, than as if they were not theirs. The Apoſtle gives this cenſure of, or ſentence upon all ſuch (1 *Tim.*5. 8.) If any man provide not for his own, and eſpecially for thoſe of his own Houſe, or (as the Margin hath it) kindred (if any man carry it towards them, as if they were not his) he hath denyed the faith, and (in that point) is worſe than an Infidel; for the common light of Nature teacheth Infidels to take care of thoſe that are their own, and not to ſlight them, as if they were not theirs.

Farther Note, Fourthly, The care of our relations (or of thoſe that are ours) doth not dwell in us meerly by Nature, it is the gift of God.

The Apoſtle deſcribing the beſt of Heathens (Rom. 1.) ſaith, They were without natural affection. Nature hath not of it ſelf natural affections. That ſome Beaſts of the Earth, and Birds of the Air, are very full of natural affection, none can deny; but it muſt be granted alſo, that God hath planted thoſe affections in them. If, that which we call natural affection, were purely from Nature, then every Bird and Beaſt would have the ſame natural affections; but this Text tells us, the Oſtrich hath it not in her, ſhe hath no natural affection at all towards her young ones; therefore there is ſomewhat in it beyond Nature that any Creature hath it; though we call it a natural inſtinct to do ſo, yet Nature is not always furniſhed with it. In many Creatures it is eminent, in others it is not at all apparent. How great and tender is the care of a Hen over her chickens? How eagerly will ſhe fight in their defence? Yet the Oſtrich will do no more for hers, than as if they were not hers; ſo that, were it not for the care and providence of God, who is the Father of, and provider for all Creatures, many of them would be little cared or provided for.

Pro fœtu curare non eſt naturæ proprium, ſed Dei authoris. Si enim naturæ eſſet, cur non & in hac beſtia eluceret? Brent.

The Text proceeds to ſet forth the ill conditions of the Oſtrich.

Her labour is in vain without fear.

As if it had been ſaid, Through her careleſneſs, ſhe is in hazzard to loſe all that labour, which according to Natures courſe ſhe had taken in laying her eggs. In this ſenſe, that promiſe is made to the Church (Iſa. 65. 23.) They ſhall not labour in vain, nor bring forth in trouble, for they are the bleſſed of the Lord, and their off-ſpring with them. As there of them in the Negative, ſo here 'tis ſaid of the Oſtrich in the affirmative, Her labour is in vain; that is, it is likely to be in vain, and all but loſt labour, as to her eggs and young ones.

Labour is in vain, when it turns to very ſmall account. A Husbandman that plows & ſows his ground, if it ſcarce yield him his ſeed again, is ſaid to labour in vain, becauſe he hath got ſo little by his labour, though ſomewhat he hath got. A Student that hath applied himſelf to his Book, and gotten but little knowledg, may be ſaid to have ſtudied in vain; much more is that labour in vain, which turns to no account, or hath no good effect at all; ſuch as is the waſhing of the Ethiopian or Black-moor, whom how long ſoever you waſh, he is never a whit the whiter. But above all vain labour, that labour is in vain, which produceth an effect quite contrary to the intent and purpoſe of the labourer. Thus Pharaoh and the Egyptians laboured in vain, to diminiſh the Iſraelites; for (ſaith the Scripture, *Exod.*1.12.) the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. Thus alſo the Heathen Emperors laboured in vain to aboliſh Chriſtianity; for the more they perſecuted the Chriſtians, the more they were confirmed in the faith of Chriſt.

The Oſtrich layeth eggs for the increaſe of her kind; therefore if her eggs be broken, or the young ones trodden under foot as ſoon as hatcht, here's labour in vain in the ſecond ſenſe at leaſt, becauſe no good comes of her labour.

Yet I may ſay, the labour of the Oſtrich is here ſaid to be in vain, not becauſe ſhe hath no effect of her labour, nor becauſe the effect runs croſs to her intent, no, nor becauſe ſhe hath but little fruit of her labour, but ſhe is ſaid to labour in vain, becauſe if God did not take more care of her eggs and young ones than ſhe doth, her labour would be altogether in vain; for her labour is (as it followeth)

Without fear.] What fear? There is a twofold fear; Firſt, There is a fear puzling us with diſtraction and amazement. Secondly, A fear urging us to activity and induſtry. The Oſtriches labour is without fear, that is, without ſuch fear as ſhould put her upon indeavour to preſerve her own eggs and young ones; ſhe fears no evil that may come to them, and ſo takes no care what becomes of them; ſhe is a fearleſs Creature of any danger, and ſo a careleſs Creature, as to the uſe of any means for the prevention of danger. The Oſtrich is not without all fear; for they that have had beſt knowledg of this Animal, have found her ſo fearful a Creature, that her fear, as well as her folly, is gone into a Proverb; a very fearful man being ſaid to be more fearful than an Oſtrich. The Oſtrich is here ſaid to be without fear, becauſe ſhe wants that provident fear which ſhould excite her to look after thoſe that are hers, as a Parent doth or ought, after the good of thoſe that depend upon him. The Oſtrich hath no love for her young ones, and therefore no fear about them. Though Ælian (as was toucht before) reports otherwiſe of her (lib. 14. chap. 7.) but in this he is alone, and may be ſuſpected as to the truth of this relation, as well as about the number of her eggs formerly mentioned, wherein others contradict him; and therefore, if God took no more care than ſhe (as was ſaid) all her labour would be in vain.

Hence Note, We labour in vain to have, if we labour not to preſerve what we have.

What is it to have eggs, if there be neglect of hatching them? What is it to have young ones, if there be a neglect of bringing them up? It is as great a vertue to preſerve what we have attained by labour, as to labour for the attaining of it; and how much ſoever we labour for the attaining of any thing, unleſs we labour for the preſervation of it, both labours are in vain. All labour is in vain that is not followed with a due care for the preſerving of what we labour for.

Non minor eſt virtus quam quærere parta tueri.

Note, Secondly, A due fear puts us upon the uſe of means, for the preſervation of our ſelves and our relations.

Res eſt ſoliciti plena timoris amor.

What's the reaſon why this Oſtrich takes no care to hatch her eggs, to preſerve her young ones? She is fearleſs; had ſhe a fear about them, ſhe would take care of them. As true love is full of ſolicitous fear, ſo due fear is full of ſolicitous endeavour. Fear makes us both conſultive what to do, and active in doing it. And as it makes us both conſultive and active about our outward preſervation, ſo much more for our inward and ſpiritual preſervation. It is ſaid of Noah (Heb. 11.7.) That being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark for the ſaving of his Houſe. Noah had never taken care to prepare an Ark againſt the deluge, but for theſe gracious impreſſions of fear, that God would bring a dreadful inundation upon the World. Fear moved him, and faith prevailed with him to prepare an Ark. The Apoſtle (Phil. 2.13.) calls upon all believers to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling. If we have no fear about our ſalvation, we ſhall never work out our ſalvation. Yet 'tis a truth, that they who have moſt aſſurance of their ſalvation, are moſt in working out their ſalvation. Holy aſſurance is ſo far from making us careleſs, that then we are moſt careful, knowing that the Lord hath joined the end and means together; knowing alſo, that they are in moſt ſafety, who have moſt ſenſe of danger; yea, that they who have moſt fear of danger, are fartheſt from feeling danger. The labour of the Oſtrich is in vain, becauſe ſhe hath no fear; her fooliſhneſs, makes her fearleſs, and that makes her careleſs; therefore no thanks to her, that all her labour is not loſt or in vain, that both her eggs and young ones do not utterly miſcarry. Thus we may profitably meditate upon the improvidence of this Creature the Oſtrich, and learn wiſdom from her folly, to make us more provident. But whence is it, or how comes it to paſs, that ſhe is ſo fooliſh? The next words tell us.

Verſe 17. Becauſe God hath deprived her of wiſdom, neither hath he imparted unto her underſtanding.

In this Verſe, a reaſon or an account is given of this blockiſhneſs, careleſsneſs and fearleſsneſs of the Oſtrich; it is, Becauſe God hath deprived her of wiſdom. More fooliſh than an Oſtrich, is a proverb for the greateſt fool. The Hebrew Text may be read thus; God hath made her to forget wiſdom. Now, as one may be ſaid to forget that which he hath not, ſo that which he never had. In the deſcription that Bildad gives of a wicked man (Chap. 8.13.) he ſaith, This is the portion of them that forget God; And who are they? the words are a periphraſis of the wicked, To forget God is their character; they may be ſaid to forget God, who never had any true knowledg or remembrance of him. Thus (Gen. 41.30.) There ſhall ariſe after them (that is, after the ſeven years of plenty) ſeven years of famine, and all the plenty ſhall be forgotten in the Land of Egypt. In a time of famine, we are rather quickned to remember former years of plenty, together with the waſt that we then made of it, and our unthankfulneſs for it. When the Iſraelites had nothing but Manna in the Wilderneſs, they complained (Numb. 11.5.) We remember the fiſh which we did eat in Egypt freely, the Cucumbers, and Melons, and the Leeks, and the Onions, and the Garlick. Now, when 'tis ſaid, that in the ſeven years of famine, they ſhould forget the ſeven years of plenty, the meaning is, they ſhould have no plenty at all; the forgetting of it was not the not having of plenty in their memories, but the not having it in their hands. When a people are in a time of trouble, they remember their former peace; and when in ſtraights, they remember their former liberty; but they are ſaid in ſtraights, and trouble, and famine, not to remember their liberties, peace and plenty, becauſe they have none of them. Thus here God hath made her to forget wiſdom, that is, ſhe hath no wiſdom, nor knowledg, nor underſtanding; and when it is ſaid, according to our Tranſlation, God hath deprived her of wiſdom, we are not to take it, as if God had taken that ſtock of wiſdom from her which once ſhe had; but his depriving her of wiſdom, is his not communicating wiſdom to her, or his not truſting her with a ſtock of wiſdom; for ſo it followeth, Obliviſci aliquis dicitur, cujus nullam unquam ſcientiam aut notitiam habuit. Druſ.

Neither hath he imparted to her underſtanding.

This latter part of the verſe explains the former, and ſhews that the Oſtriches want of wiſdom is not privative, but negative; God hath not taken it from her, but not given it her. But here it may be demanded, hath God given wiſdom, or imparted underſtanding to any Fowls of the Air? Are not theſe two words, wiſdom and underſtanding, too high for Beaſts or Birds, indeed, for the whole irrational part of the Creation? I anſwer, as the Oſtrich hath no true wiſdom nor underſtanding, ſo neither hath any Beaſt or Bird. Wiſdom and underſtanding taken ſtrictly, are proper only to rational Creatures, Men and Angels; there is no wiſdom where there is no reaſon: Yet wiſdom and underſtanding are aſcribed ſometimes to brutiſh Creatures, and here the Oſtrich, a brutiſh Creature, is ſaid to be deprived of them, or not to have them communicated to her, becauſe not ſo much as that ſhadow of wiſdom and underſtanding is given to her, which appears in ſome Beaſts and Birds. Brutes are ſaid to have wiſdom, becauſe they have that which ſerves their turn for their preſervation; and ſome of them are ſaid to have wiſdom, becauſe they are indeed wiſer, and more ſubtle than other brutes (Gen. 3.1.) yet all their wiſdom is nothing to the wiſdom of man. That Natural affection and forecaſt of Beaſts and Birds, in providing for, and bringing up their young ones, is their wiſdom; of this wiſdom God hath deprived the Oſtrich, neither hath he imparted unto her ſo much as this ſmall parcel of underſtanding, not ſo much as this ſhadow of underſtanding, which he hath beſtowed upon other, both Birds and Beaſts. And there appears ſomewhat in Nature, as a proof, that the Oſtrich is a fooliſh Bird, for her head is very little, and her brains (in proportion) much leſs. And that any one Oſtrich hath not much brains, may be collected from a piece of the Roman Hiſtory, which reports, that Heliogabalus the Emperour had the heads of ſix hundred Oſtriches prepared for him at one Supper, only for the brains ſake. 'Tis added alſo by the ſame Author, that the Oſtrich is Naturally deaf, and that there is no perfect Animal elſe, in the whole compaſs of Nature, that is deaf or wants the ſenſe of hearing. And needs muſt that Creature have little or no underſtanding, which hath no hearing, that being the ſenſe of diſcipline. All theſe conſiderations confirm what this Text in Job ſpeaks of her, that God hath not imparted unto her underſtanding.

Sapientia ſtruthioni non privativè ſed negativè deeſt. Eſt inferioris præſtantiæ non vitioſæ naturæ, vitium hominis natura eſt ceporis. Auguſt. Sapientiam & intelligentiam nominat induſtriam naturalem. Aquin. Sapientiam dicit naturalem affectum in ſuos, aut artem conſervandi, quod ex ſe natum. Druſ.

Bochartus.

Hence Note, Firſt, Some Beaſts of the Earth, and Birds of the Air, have ſomewhat that may be called wiſdom, ſo much at leaſt as ſerves their turn, and directs them to do what is beſt for themſelves and theirs.

Though the Oſtrich is ſhort of this ſhort pittance of underſtanding, yet moſt irrational Creatures have it.

Note, Secondly, Whatſoever looks like wiſdom and underſtanding, in a brute Creature, Beaſt or Bird, is the gift of God.

God is ſaid not to give or impart wiſdom and underſtanding to this brute Creature, therefore he gives it others. Wiſdom, ſuch as it is, in Beaſts and Birds, muſt be acknowledged to be gift of God. Not only every good gift in man, but every good gift in Beaſts, their ſtrength, their ſwiftneſs, their ſubtilty, and craft, their fore-caſt, are of the Lords plantation in them.

Thirdly, Note, God hath not given a like portion or meaſure of wiſdom and underſtanding to all brute Creatures.

Some have (in their capacity) a great deal, others very little, ſo little, that they may be ſaid to have none at all, as the Oſtrich in the Text; who (though in ſome things ſhe hath underſtanding, yet) as to her eggs and young ones, is a careleſs, witleſs animal. And there is a difference among men in wiſdom and underſtanding; ſome have a great portion given them of God, others have ſo little, that they may be ſaid to have none: The natural man hath no ſpiritual underſtanding (*Iſa.*27.11.) This is a people of no underſtanding; therefore he that made them, will not have mercy upon them; and he that formed them, will ſhew them no favour. What! Were they Brutes and Beaſts? No, poſſibly they were witty and ſubtle enough for the World, but they were a people of no ſpiritual underſtanding. Men full of Natural underſtanding may have none that is Spiritual. And as to Natural and Political wiſdom and underſtanding, there is a great difference among men: Some have enough to rule Kingdoms, others, not enough to govern a family, no, nor their perſonal affairs; yea, ſome men are ſo low in parts and underſtanding, that God may be ſaid to have deprived them of underſtanding, or not to have imparted wiſdom to them. And this offers us a ground of uſeful meditation. Let us bleſs God, that men have more wiſdom than brutes; and if any man have more wiſdom and underſtanding than his neighbour, let him acknowledg the goodneſs and bounty of God to him in it; for who hath made thee to differ in Natural wiſdom and underſtanding? As the Apoſtle ſpeaks of that great difference among men, grace and no grace, Who hath made thee to differ? How is it that one man hath grace, and an other hath no grace? Hath man made himſelf to differ in grace? No, it is of grace that any have grace: So who hath made thee to differ in common wiſdom and underſtanding? What, thy ſelf? ſurely no. You that ſeem to have as much wiſdom above other men, as men have above Beaſts, have not any of your ſelves; it is God who makes all men differ from Beaſts in underſtanding, and it is he that makes one man differ from another in underſtanding. He that hath almoſt as much underſtanding above other men, as men have commonly above Beaſts hath it all of God. Underſtanding is not of Nature, nor is it gotten (though it may be improved) by ſtudy and induſtry; Gold and Silver cannot purchaſe it, nor can our pains procure it. What man receives not, he hath not; nor hath any man more than he hath received. Now if common wiſdom be of God, and we owe him the glory of it; how much more is ſpiritual wiſdom, which is to fear him, and ſpiritual underſtanding, which is to depart from evil (Job 28. ult.) the gift of God!

What a mercy is it to have wiſdom,

Firſt, To know God in Chriſt, whom to know is eternal life.

Secondly, To know our ſelves loſt, miſerable and undone for ever without Chriſt.

Thirdly, To know the difference between good and evil, between light and darkneſs, truth and error, ſound doctrine and damnable, right worſhip and ſuperſtitious or Idolatrous.

Fourthly, To know our duty, what is incumbent upon us in this life. The wiſdom of the prudent is to underſtand his way (Prov. 14.8.) where to walk, what to do, that he may keep tite and cloſe to God, to know upon what bottom he is ſetled, and upon what ground he treads.

Fifthly, What a mercy is it for us, that live here on Earth, to ſee our way to that eternal life in Heaven!

Laſtly, What wiſdom and underſtanding hath God imparted to his people, and how thankful ſhould they be for it, that they are able while on Earth, to converſe and have communion with himſelf in Heaven! The Apoſtle ſaith (*Phil.*3.20.) Our converſation is in Heaven; with whom there? With God. True believers know how to converſe with God, and can ſay (in their meaſure, as the Apoſtle John, 1 *Epheſ.*1.3.) Truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt. This wiſdom hath God imparted to his faithful ſervants, and how thankful ſhould they be for it! The leaſt ray of wiſdom is from him; that in Beaſts, and that in common men, much more that in godly men. The wiſeſt in the World would have had no more wiſdom than an Oſtrich, hath not God provided better for them, and given them a richer furniture of internals or intellectuals, Further, Conſider this Oſtrich as a goodly Bird, having beautiful feathers, yet not a dram of wiſdom or underſtanding.

Hence Note, Fourthly, Many Creatures have a bodily beauty and ſtrength, yet little wit and underſtanding.

The Oſtrich hath a bulky ſtrong Body, as well as beautiful feathers; but her brains are as light as her feathers. And is it not ſo with ſome men? Their gay feathers are viſible; but where is their underſtanding?

Note, Laſtly, The ſame Creature may want wiſdom in one point, yet have it in another.

The Oſtrich, who as to taking care of her young ones, hath no underſtanding, is yet reported by Naturaliſts to be very ſubtle in ſome things; for when ſhe is purſued by the Hunter, ſhe gathers up ſtones with her claws, and caſts them back to the hurt of her purſuers. 'Tis ſo likewiſe among men, ſome are wiſe enough in this or that matter. while miſerably blockiſh and defective in all things elſe; And of all wicked men the Prophet hath left this character, They are wiſe to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledg. And that the Oſtrich hath this piece of knowledg and cunning, to do a miſchief to thoſe who intend her one, may be collected from her confidence, in that caſe, ſpoken of the next verſe.

Verſe 18. What time ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high, ſhe ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider.

Before we heard of the folly of this Creature, now of her pride and confidence.

What time, or at the time when ſhe lifts up her ſelf, that is, her head, neck, and wings on high, that ſhe may run the ſwifter; ſhe ſcorneth, &c.

בעת Juxta tempus.

And this ſhe doth when beſet by thoſe who would take her, then ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high, that is, as high as ſhe can, though (as was ſaid) very high ſhe cannot, and then ſhe caſts back ſtones upon her perſecuters. And hence ſome conceive theſe words give anſwer to a ſecret or unexpreſſed objection. For it might be ſaid, If the Oſtrich, which is of ſo heavy a body, be likewiſe of ſo dull a wit, having no wiſdom nor underſtanding; ſurely, then ſhe may be eaſily taken and deſtroyed? Not ſo neither; for God hath provided her a help againſt this time of danger, and therefore though ſhe be of a heavy body, and have little underſtanding in other things, yet ſhe underſtands how to ſhift for her ſelf; ſhe raiſeth up her ſelf as high as ſhe can, and fluttering with her wings (which ſhe holds up like ſails to the wind) ſhe drives on amain: Though ſhe keepeth ſtill upon her feet, or riſeth very little at any time above the ground, and is therefore ſaid to fly running, or to run flying, or, in a ſort, to ſail in the Air, very lightly touching the Earth, yet ſhe is ſomewhat lifted up, and being thus lifted up,

Ælian. l. 14. c. 20.
Plin. l. 10. c. 1.

Sublatis alis ut navigii velis curſu pernicíſſimo venatores deludit.

She ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider.

As much as to ſay, ſhe can out-run them all, and ſo cares not a ſtraw for them, let them do their worſt; ſhe ſcorns them, not becauſe able to reſiſt them, or as if ſhe thought her ſelf ſtronger than they, but becauſe by help of her wings, though on her feet, ſhe is ſwifter than they. So that, in plain courſe they can never over-take her, and therefore not take her; only by ſome ſlights and ſtratagems, ſhe is intangled and taken; ſhe may be over-reacht, but ſhe cannot be over-run. And ſo ſwift is her courſe, that it hath long ſince grown into a Proverb among the Arabians, who thus ſignifie a man of great expedition in buſineſs, He hath ridden upon the wings of the Oſtrich. What time ſhe lifteth up her ſelf on high, ſhe ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider.

Hence Note, Firſt, Dangers put all Creatures to their utmoſt ſhifts.

The Oſtrich being heavy bodied, hath no great mind to run, and being ſhort or weak-winged, hath little power to fly, yet when ſhe muſt, ſhe runs to purpoſe; ſhe will not loſe her life to ſpare her labour. Great dangers make us do great things. Fear adds wings to our feet; and makes a heavy Body mount and fly, rather than go. The Oſtrich (in that caſe) lifteth up her ſelf on high.

Note, Secondly, Nature teacheth us to ſeek our ſafety above, or on high.

Though the Oſtrich cannot ſore aloft in the Air as the Eagle, yet ſhe lifts up her ſelf as high as ſhe can above the Earth. Some ſeek for ſafety by creeping into the ground, and running into the holes of the Earth (Iſa. 2. 19. Rev. 6. 16.) But the beſt way for our ſafety, when we are purſued, is by lifting up our ſelves on high, and that to God; to get into his power, and mercy, and goodneſs; that's our way, and that's our wiſdom, when we are hunted and purſued by our enemies. I (ſaith David, Pſal. 121. 1.) will lift up mine eyes to the Hills, from whence cometh my help, that is, to God (verſ. 2.) When the Oſtrich is thus lifted up ſhe ſcorneth the Horſe and his Rider.

Hence Note, They who think they are out of danger, deſpiſe danger.

The Oſtrich looks upon her ſelf as out of danger, when ſhe is on high, and therefore ſcorns the Horſe and his Rider. Danger is not to be laughed, when we are under or within the reach of it; but we may laugh at it when we are out of the fear of it (Job 5. 22.) At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh. Why? Becauſe through the goodneſs of God thou ſhalt be provided againſt them, and prepared for them. A believer ſcorns the Horſe and his Rider, his ſwifteſt and moſt eager purſuers, becauſe he can lift up himſelf on high, or as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 33. 16.) He dwels on high, his place of defence is the munition of Rocks, bread ſhall be given him, his waters ſhall be ſure; he is ſafe from danger, and out of gun-ſhot: This makes him laugh at danger, at trouble, and the ſword. God who ſitteth in Heaven laughs at his enemies, and hath them in deriſion (Pſal. 2. 4.) why? Becauſe he knows, they who oppoſe him, can do nothing to annoy him; they cannot ruine his Kingdom, nor hurt his ſervants, how much ſoever they moleſt them; he ſits on high, he is above all his enemies. And as God lifted up in himſelf, ſo a godly man, lifted up on high in God, upon the wings of faith and love, ſcorns the Horſe and his Rider: For as the Apoſtle was (Rom. 8. 38, 39.) ſo he is perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor Powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor heighth, nor depth, nor any other Creature ſhall be able to ſeparate him from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, that is, they ſhall not be able to ſeparate him, either from that love that Chriſt bears to him, nor draw him off from that love which he bears to Chriſt. When once his Soul is drawn up to a due height in believing, he ſcorns all dangers, and in all theſe things is more than a Conqueror. A man that is a Conqueror, much more he that is more than a Conqueror, may ſcorn all dangers, and conquer them who think they have more than conquered him. From this whole verſe take theſe brief Inferences.

Firſt, That which will not ſerve all turns, may yet ſerve many turns.

Pennæ ſtruthionis currentem ſolum adjuvant, volatilem non reddunt.

We might think the wings of the Oſtrich were given her to no purpoſe, becauſe ſhe cannot fly aloft, nor make a lofty flight; yet they help her for another purpoſe, they help her much in running, though little or nothing in flying.

Secondly, That which is very beautiful may not be very uſeful.

The Oſtrich hath more beautiful wings than the Eagle, yet makes little uſe of them. We may in appearance be fit to do that which we cannot do. Thirdly,

God doth not uſually give all to one: He beſtows one thing upon this Creature, and that upon another.

The Oſtrich hath goodly feathers, yet bad wings; the Eagle hath no goodly feathers, yet good wings. One man excels in this gift, another in that, ſcarce any one hath all (1 Cor. 12. 8, 9, 10.) All have not the ſame gift, and none have all gifts, that all may be kept in dependance upon God, and be humble one towards another, ſeeing they muſt be beholden one to another. All men cannot do all things; And though all godly men can do all things (which are commanded of God as their duty) through Chriſt ſtrengthning of them; yet ſome godly men cannot do ſome things, which others can.

Laſtly, That which is conceived, and may well be the deſign of God in queſtioning Job about this Creature, was to teach him, and us in him, the wiſdom of God towards unwiſe Creatures, and the power of God in ſaving thoſe that are expoſed to danger; and ſo to quiet both Job's Spirit and ours in ſtaying upon his providence, when we are in greateſt ſtreights. What though we have not Eagles wings, yet between wings and feet we ſhall make a ſhift to ſhuffle out of danger; and if we cannot out-fly, yet we may out-run the Horſe and his Rider.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength? Haſt thou clothed his neck with Thunder?

Canſt thou make him afraid as a Graſhopper? The glory of his noſtrils is terrible.

He paweth in the valley, and rejoyceth in his ſtrength; he goeth on to meet the armed men.

THE Lord having occaſionally mentioned the Horſe, the hunting Horſe, at verſe 18. of this Chapter, queſtions Job, and enters a large diſcourſe about the Horſe, the War-Horſe, or Horſe for War; and is pleaſed to give us a moſt elegant and rhetorical deſcription of that kind of Horſes, exceeding all the fancies of the old Poets, and the ſtrains of Orators. The divine eloquence of this context, exceeds all competition and compariſon.

Equi generoſiſſimi elegantiſſima deſcriptio.

The War-Horſe is deſcribed two ways in this context, or with reſpect to a two-fold qualification.

Firſt, With reſpect to his force, at verſe 19. Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength? Haſt thou clothed his neck with Thunder?

Robur ejus in collo, animus in naribus indicatur, quibus iras efflare dicitur.

Secondly, To his fearleſneſs or courage, which is deſcribed in the ſix verſes following.

Firſt, By his ſlighting of all danger; Canſt thou make him afraid like a Graſhopper? (verſ. 20.) He mocketh at fear (verſ. 22.)

Secondly, His courage appears, as by ſlighting danger, ſo by that which is a conſequent of it, his forwardneſs to run upon danger; for ſo doth he, that goeth out to meet the armed men, or armies of men, verſ. 21. and turneth not away (as he doth not) from the Sword, verſ. 22. And ſo doth he, that ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage, that (for joy) believeth not that it is the ſound of the Trumpet; that ſaith among the Trumpets, Ha, Ha, &c. verſ. 24, 25.

If any ſhould ask a reaſon, why God beſtowed ſo much rhetorick upon a brute Beaſt, upon a Horſe? I anſwer; God, who is infinitely wiſe and holy, will not miſpend a word; he will not laviſh out lines vainly, as men often do; the Lord therefore had this deſign and ſcope in ſpeaking ſo largely and rhetorically of this generous Horſe, even thereby to ſet forth his own power, wiſdom and greatneſs in making him, and to convince Job yet farther of his own weakneſs and inability, as compared in ſome things with a Horſe.

Verſe 19. Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength?

The Hebrew word which we Tranſlate Horſe, is Sus, and thence the Latins have the word Pegaſus (as ſome conceive) which is as much as, The Horſe of the Fountain; and by the very ſame word, in ſound and letters, the Latines expreſs a Swine, and another Language, Silence. One of the Rabbins ſaith, he is ſo called from a word of the ſame, or a very neer ſound, in the Hebrew, though not in the ſame letters, ſignifying to rejoyce, becauſe the Horſe is a chearful Beaſt. Others from an Arabick word, ſignifying to govern or rule, becauſe he is a docile Creature, and ſoon ſubmits to government.

סוס Equus, unde Pegaſus, quaſi fontis Equus. Sus Latinis Porcum, Hebræis Equum, Flandris ſilentium ſignificat. Cornel. à Lap. סוס à שוש lætari. Rab. Becai.

Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength?] What Horſe? The word is indefinitely put in this 19. verſe, and may be taken for any horſe; yet the ſubſequent deſcription, reſtrains it to a particular ſort of horſes, horſes of war, or war-horſes. A horſe is a very uſeful creature, and there are ſix ſeveral uſes of the Horſe:

Firſt, For travel, which is the ordinary uſe: we ſay, this is a good travelling horſe.

Secondly, For burden, the carrying horſe.

Thirdly, For drawing Carts and Waggons, &c. the draught horſe.

Fourthly, For pleaſure, the hunting horſe.

Fifthly, For ſwiftneſs, the race horſe.

Sixthly, For war, the valiant horſe; that's the Horſe in the Text: Haſt thou given the horſe; that's the Horſe in the Text: Haſt thou given the Horſe

Strength?] Every horſe according to his uſefulneſs needs ſtrength, the war-horſe much more. Haſt thou given that horſe ſtrength which needs ſo much ſtrength? As if the Lord had ſaid, Job, thou ſeeſt the horſe is a ſtrong and ſtately beaſt, a beaſt of great force; how came he by his ſtrength? haſt thou given it him, or I? ſurely not thou, but I: it is I, who have made him ſtrong; it is I, who have filled him with courage, and fitted him for the battel. The Hebrew word, which we tranſlate ſtrength, doth not ſignifie ordinary ſtrength, but manly noble ſtrength; a ſtrength, not only of outward force, but vertue. The Root notes, a great, a potent man. It is not any kind of ſtrength which is here intended, but an active ſtrength; I may ſay, a manly ſtrength. Hiſtories report ſtrange things concerning the manly ſtrength of the Horſe; his is a generous ſtrength. Alexanders horſe, called Bucephalus, is famous for the greatneſs, both of his ſtrength and ſpirit. Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength?

גבורה à nomine גבר quod eſt vir, non qualemcunq; ſtrenuitatem importat ſed virilem & nobilem. Plin. l. 8. c. 24. Homer Iliad. 4.

Hence note, Firſt; The ſtrength even of a horſe, is the gift of God.

God is infinitely ſtrong and mighty; and whatſoever might or ſtrength is found in any creature, God is the Author of it: Strength in great proportion, is not the portion of every creature. Solomon (Prov. 30. 26.) ſpeaks of the Coneys as a feeble folk, they have little or no ſtrength; yet that they have little ſtrength, or that little ſtrength which they have is of God, as well as that the Horſe hath great ſtrength, or the great ſtrength of the horſe: The ſtrength of a beaſt is of God, as well as the ſtrength of man. The ſtrength of mans body is of God, as well as that more excellent ſtrength, the ſtrength of his mind, or the ſtrength of his underſtanding, judgment and memory. All ſtrength floweth from, and is to be aſcribed unto the ſtrong God. As no man gives it, ſo let no man take it to himſelf. Glory not in ſtrength; give God the glory of all ſtrength, even of the Horſes ſtrength.

Secondly, A Horſe having received ſuch mighty ſtrength, yet is ſerviceable to man, for very many, and very neceſſary uſes, as was toucht before, not only for pleaſure, for hunting and racing, but for burden and for travel, for draught and for war.

Hence Note, The power and goodneſs of God is much ſeen, and much to be acknowledged, in making a creature ſo ſtrong, yet ſubject to, and uſeful for man.

Some creatures have great ſtrength, yet are not, nor will be ſubject nor ſerviceable to man. It is ſaid at the 10. verſe of this Chapter, concerning the Unicorn, Canſt thou bind the Unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? The Unicorn hath great ſtrength, but man can get no ſervice from him; he cannot bind him in the furrow, nor make him do him any other work. Why is it that the Horſe, who is of great ſtrength, though poſſibly not of ſo great ſtrength as the Unicorn, is ſo ſerviceable? ſurely the reaſon is only this, Becauſe God by his power hath ſubdued the ſtrength of the Horſe to, and for the ſervice of man. Who could break the Horſe, who could handle and manage him, if God himſelf had not brought him to hand? The Elephant, greater in ſtrength than the Horſe or Unicorn, is yet made ſubject to the uſe of man, by the power and appointment of God. Take five Inferences from both theſe conſiderations: That the ſtrength of the Horſe, is of God; and that the Horſe, though mighty in ſtrength, is by God ſubdued to the uſe of man.

Firſt, If the ſtrength of horſes be the gift of God, then, do not glory in their ſtrength; though they are very ſtrong, yet rejoyce not in their ſtrength, but in God, who hath given them their ſtrength. David ſaith (Pſal. 147. 10.) The Lord delights not in the ſtrength of the Horſe. The Lord gives the Horſe ſtrength, but he delights not in it; no, nor in the legs of a man; The Lords delight is in them that fear him. The Lord tells us, he doth not delight in them, to teach us, that we ſhould not delight in them. The Lord delights not in the ſtrength of a horſe, much leſs in the ſtrength of thoſe men, who are like Horſes and Mules (of whom David ſpeaks, Pſal. 32. 9.) whoſe mouth muſt be held, in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto us, to do us a miſchief. Some men are ſtrong in body, and ſtrong in mind too; they have ſtrong underſtandings, and ſtrong memories; yet are but like ſtrong horſes, that muſt be held in with bit and bridle, elſe they will do more miſchief with their ſtrength, than the ſtrongeſt ungoverned horſes. In theſe the Lord delights not; he cannot delight in the ſtrength of any who are ſtrong to ſin, and to do wickedly; or to give it in the words of the Prophet, Iſa. 5. 22.) Who are ſtrong to drink wine, and to mingle ſtrong drink: ſuch a ſtrength ſome men glory in, but the Lord abhors all that ſtrength which is uſed and iſſued to the darkning of his glory.

Secondly, As we are not to delight in the ſtrength of horſes, but in God, who hath given them their ſtrength; ſo, whatever ſtrength we ſee in the horſe, or in any other creature, we ſhould give God the glory of it. Do not glory in the ſtrength of creatures, but in God, who gives them their ſtrength; that which he hath given, or cometh from him, ſhould return unto him in daily praiſe, or in the due acknowledgment of his power and goodneſs.

Thirdly, Uſe the ſtrength of horſes (I ſay alſo, your own ſtrength) for God, and not againſt him. We ſhould take heed of imploying the ſtrength which God hath given a beaſt, againſt God; much more ſhould we take heed of uſing our own ſtrength againſt him. When men imploy the ſtrength of a beaſt, or their own, againſt God, they imploy the gift againſt the giver, and ſo fight againſt God with his own weapons.

Fourthly, If the ſtrength of horſes be of God, or be his gift, Then truſt not in the ſtrength of horſes: Uſe the ſtrength of horſes, but do not truſt the ſtrength of horſes. If you truſt that ſtrength which God hath given to horſes, you make them your God. How often doth God forbid truſting in the ſtrength of horſes, as knowing that we are apt to truſt in any thing that is ſtrong, though but a beaſt (Pſal. 33. 17.) A horſe is a vain thing for ſafety, neither ſhall he deliver any by his great ſtrength. As if God had ſaid, you think a horſe can ſave you, but know, he is a vain thing. And when the Pſalmiſt ſaith, A horſe is a vain thing, he doth not mean it of a weak horſe, but of (ſuch a horſe as is here deſcribed) a horſe of the greateſt ſtrength imaginable, ſuch a horſe is a vain thing to ſave a man, neither can he deliver any by his ſtrength; and therefore the Lord, when he promiſed great deliverances to his people (leſt they ſhould expect it by the ſtrength of horſes) ſaith (Hoſ. 1. 7.) I will ſave them by the Lord their God, and will not ſave them by bow, nor by ſword, nor by battel, by horſes, nor by horſe-men: As if he had told them, do not look after creature ſtrength to be ſaved by; a horſe will be a vain thing to ſave you, and I can ſave you effectually without horſes; yea, I will. Hence the people of God (Hoſ. 14. 3.) when beaten off from all outward helps and truſts, are brought in, ſpeaking thus; Aſhur ſhall not ſave us; we will not ride upon horſes, neither will we ſay any more to the work of our hands, ye are our gods: Heretofore we thought to be ſaved by this and that, we thought, if we could have horſes enough they would ſave us; but now, Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, nor will we ride upon horſes. We may collect from (Pſal. 20. 7.) how the ſpirit of man runs out this way, Some truſt in chariots, and ſome in horſes; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God. The Law of Moſes gave great caution about this thing, limiting even the King in this caſe; and that Law was made for the King ſome hundred of years before they had a King (Deut. 17. 16.) He ſhall not multiply horſes to himſelf, nor cauſe the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he ſhould multiply horſes: As if it had been ſaid, take heed you do not put your confidence upon the ſtrength of horſes; though the Law deny not your King the uſe of Horſes, both for Civil and Military affairs, yet it limits him that he ſhall not multiply them, leſt, having many of them, he ſhould look upon them, as more than they are, or can be, his help, and ſo put confidence in them. Hence alſo is that reproof (*Iſa.*31.1.) Woe to them that go down to Egypt, for help, and ſtay on Horſes, and truſt in Chariots, becauſe they are many, and in Horſemen, becauſe they are very ſtrong. We ſee how the Spirit of man runs out to the Horſe which God hath made ſtrong, even forgetting God who hath made him ſtrong. That people thought themſelves ſtrong enough with Horſes without the ſtrong God, and therefore the Lord told them at the third verſe, The Egyptians are men, and not God, and their Horſes are fleſh, and not ſpirit; that is, they are weak and not ſtrong: Not that they were weak in themſelves, but weak to ſave and deliver them, or to give them victory in Battel; they are but fleſh, and not ſpirit: Fleſh notes weakneſs, and Spirit notes ſtrength; ſo that, though a Horſe hath a mighty ſtrength, yet if you truſt to him, he is but fleſh, that is, he is weak. And ſome conceive this was the reaſon why the Lord commanded Joſhua, in his War with the Canaanites, to hough their Horſes; as the rule is given (*Joſh.*11.6.) Thou ſhalt hough their Horſes, and burn their Chariots with fire; that is, cut their nerves, or as we ſay, their ham-ſtrings. Why did the Lord command him to hough their Horſes? Why might he not preſerve them for ſervice in his Wars? Doubtleſs it was, leſt he ſhould think that Horſes could do the work. And therefore according to this command of God, when David took a thouſand Chariots, and ſeven hundred Horſe-men from the Moabites, he houghed all the Chariot Horſes but reſerved of them for an hundred Chariots (2*Sam.*8.4.) He would not multiply Horſes to himſelf out of the ſpoils of the enemy, leſt he ſhould ſeem to truſt their ſtrength and numbers.

Fifthly, Fear not the ſtrength of Horſes. The Prophet ſaith to the fearful (*Jer.*12.5.) If thou haſt run with footmen, and they have wearied thee, how canſt thou contend with Horſes? When we have Horſes to contend with, 'tis a very dangerous conflict. The Prophet by foot-men and horſemen, intends leſſer or greater oppoſitions; when we have to deal with leſſer difficulties, we have to deal with footmen, but when with greater, then with horſe-men. If then you have to do with Horſes, either in the metaphor or in plain ſenſe, fear them not; why? For they are but Creatures; and God who hath given them their ſtrength, can take away their ſtrength, and make them uſeleſs (*Pſal.*76.6.) At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the Chariot and the Horſe are caſt into a deep ſleep. Suppoſe a multitude of Chariots and Horſes ſhould come againſt us, yet at the Lords rebuke, if he doth but ſpeak the word, if the God of Jacob do but give a rebuke, the Chariot and Horſes are laid in a deep ſleep; that is, they are as nothing or as dead. Death is a deep ſleep; and therefore, though Horſes have a mighty ſtrength, yet be no more afraid of them than of that which is dead; the Lord God who hath given them their ſtrength, can defend us againſt their ſtrength, or diſable them, notwithſtanding their ſtrength, to offend us. Haſt thou given the Horſe ſtrength?

Haſt thou clothed his neck with Thunder?

To cloth with, or to be clothed with this or that, is a very common Scriptural phraſe, metaphorically applied to things, both corporeal and incorporeal. Of the firſt ſort are all thoſe places of Scripture, where man is ſaid to be clothed with skin and fleſh (Job 10.11.) The fleſh with worms and clods of duſt. (Job 7.5.) The Fields with flocks (*Pſal.*65.13.) The Earth with Sea (*Pſal.*104.6.) The Sea with Clouds (Job.38.6.) The Heavens with blackneſs (*Iſa.*50.3.) Of the ſecond ſort, are all thoſe Scriptures which ſay, A perſon is clothed with righteouſneſs (Job.39.14. Pſal.132.9.) With ſalvation (Pſal. 132. 16.) With glory and beauty (Job 40. 10.) With power or ſtrength (Pſal.93.1. Iſa.51.9.) With the Spirit of God (Judg.6.34. 2 Chron.24.20.) With deſolation (Ezek.7.27.) With ſhame (Pſal.71.13. & 109.29.) And as both things and perſons are ſaid to be clothed with theſe, ſo to be clothed with any thing, notes two things; either, Firſt, that ſuch have much of it. Thus to be clothed with glory, is to be exceeding glorious; and to be clothed with ſhame, is to be exceedingly aſhamed; and to be clothed with pride, is to be exceeding proud; and to be clothed with righteouſneſs and honour, is to be exceeding righteous and honourable; and to be clothed with humility, is to be exceeding humble; and laſtly, to be clothed with the Spirit, is to be exceeding ſpiritual, and full of the Spirit. Or, Secondly, to be clothed with any thing that is good, notes it to be very becoming and ornamental to us, as rich and ſutable Garments are; or if it be bad, that it is very diſgraceful and detrimental to us, as filthy and uncomely Garments are. Now, here in the Text, when the neck of the Horſe is ſoid to be clothed with Thunder, it muſt needs note ſomewhat, in which the Horſe exceeds, and which is both an honour and an ornament to the Horſe. Haſt thou (ſaith God to Job, or I) clothed his neck with Thunder?

There are various Interpretations of the word which we here Tranſlate Thunder.

Firſt, Some affirm, That the word by us rendred Thunder, ſignifies nothing leſs than Thunder, or that it doth not ſignifie Thunder at all, neither in a proper, nor in a metaphorical ſenſe; but that it ſignifies the Horſes mane. Nor can it be denied, but that this form of ſpeaking is very apt and elegant, to ſay, the neck of a Horſe is clothed with his mane; as Birds may be ſaid to be clothed with feathers, or Beaſts with hair. And here the mention of the Horſes mane is fitly brought in, becauſe the ſcope of the place is to ſet forth the chief ſigns and conditions of a generous ſtomachful War-Horſe. For though the meaneſt Horſes have manes, and that of an ancient Author be true, in part, of all Horſes. That the mane is given them for an ornament; yet generous Horſes have thickeſt and fulleſt manes hanging down, and covering their necks, as the old Poets often deſcribe noble and Warlike Horſes. And that in this place of Job, not an ordinary thin or ſhort mane, but a thick and a deep one is intended, we may collect from the word clothed, which will not agree with thoſe of ordinary Horſes. The only difficulty with which this Interpretation is attended, is how to make it out that the Hebrew word (Ragnemah) ſignifies the mane of a Horſe, it being never uſed in any place of Scripture but this; and it is much queſtioned, whether the word be to be found in the writings of any of the Jewiſh Rabbins in that ſenſe. The only anſwer is, that it is to be reckoned among thoſe words (of which there are ſeveral in Scripture) which are only once read or uſed; and ſo the ſenſe of them is to be given from the ſcope of the place where they are uſed, not from their uſage in other places, they not being uſed in any place but one. This is a fair interpretation, that being granted, that the word Ragnemah hath no communion with the word Ragnam, which properly ſignifies Thunder.

Hic tonitru eſt רעמה cum tonitrus alias רעם dicitur. Veſtimenti nominè intelligo Jubas denſas & criſpantes. Cajet.

Zenophon in Comment. de re equeſtri.

רעמה "Ἅπαξ λεγόμενον. Arnol. Bootius. Animad. Sacræ. l. 3. c. 6. ſect. 10.

But, almoſt all other Interpreters agree, that Ragnemah is the ſame with Ragnam; and take the Hebrew letter ה in the end of it, to be only Paragogical, and ſo not making any alteration at all in the ſenſe.

Now this being the moſt received opinion, and our Tranſlators pitching expreſly upon it, ſaying, Haſt thou clothed his neck with Thunder? It is is queſtioned what is here meant by the word Thunder. No man can imagine that it ſhould be underſtood of proper Thunder; and in what the metaphor is couched, or whence to take the alluſion, that's the doubt.

Firſt, I ſhall not ſtay upon that weak conjecture, that by Thunder we are to underſtand the ſound, noiſe or ratling, which is made by the armour, ornaments or trappings, which are ſometimes put upon the necks and breaſts of War-Horſes, when they go out to Battle. We read that the Camels of Zeba and Zalmunna, conquered by victorious Joſhua, had ornaments upon their necks (Judg. 8.21.) But ſurely, the word Thunder ſutes not with ſuch ſounds; Thunder muſt needs relate to ſomewhat that is terrible, not ornamental; and all the ſound which the ratling of a Horſes armes or ornaments can make, is much too low for any reſemblance of Thunder, or to be compared with it; nor will the general ſcope of the queſtion comply with any ſuch Interpretation. For when God ſaith to Job, Haſt thou clothed his neck with Thunder? The queſtion denies; and the meaning of it is, Thou haſt not, but I have. Whereas if it were underſtood of artificial Warlike arms of defence or ornaments, Job might have anſwered the queſtion affirmatively, and have ſaid, Yes, I, or other men, have cloathed the neck of the horſe with them. And the Lord poſſibly put this queſtion, in oppoſition to all ſuch kind of defences and ornaments; As if he had ſaid, Thou, O Job, haſt or mayſt cloath the neck of the horſe with rich ornaments, and ſtrong arms to defend him; but haſt thou, or canſt thou cloath his neck with thunder? That's my work alone. Therefore ſomewhat is here intended by thunder, beyond what any man is able to cloath the neck of a Horſe withall.

De ſtrepitu monilium intelligit Munſterus. Inſtructos oſtro alipedes pictiſque tapetis. Aurea pectoribus demiſſe monilia pendent. Virg. l. 5.

Ἐνέδυσας δὲ τῷ τραχήλῳ αὐτοῦ φόβον. Sept.
Numquid indues collum ejus tremore Pagn.

Secondly, Some render thus, Haſt thou cloathed his neck with fear? another, with trembling? But ſome may ſay, how doth this ſerve to ſet forth the honour and commendation of the Horſe? yea, what can be ſaid more improperly of a brave Horſe, or more unſutable to the deſcription here given of him, than this, that his neck is cloathed with fear and trembling? I anſwer, 'tis true, if we take fear, as taking hold of or poſſeſſing the Horſe himſelf: But if we take it for that fear and trembling (which doubtleſs is the ſenſe of thoſe Tranſlations) with which the Horſe affects others, than to ſay his neck is cloathed with fear, that is, his appearance makes others afraid, is very proper to the diſcourſe in hand. And for as much as thunder makes the ſtouteſt Men fear and tremble, the Horſe, who doth ſo too, when he ruſheth fiercely into the battle, and chargeth the enemy, may ſignificantly enough, be ſaid, to have his neck cloathed with Thunder. How terrible a ſhock, even like a thunder-clap, doth a ſtout valiant Horſe make upon his adverſary, with the force of his neck and breaſt! And when Horſes come galloping upon us with their full ſpeed, 'tis uſual to ſay, they come thundering upon us.

Tonitru hic uſurpatur de fremitu, aut hinnitu equi. Druſ.
Num induiſti collum ejus fremitu? Bez.
Numquid adornas collum ejus ſonitu vehementi. i. e. Hinnitu? Vatabl.

Thirdly, Moſt Interpreters ſay confidently, that by thunder cloathing the neck of the Horſe, the neighing of the Horſe is intended. And ſome (who are not of this opinion) conceive, that if the Hebrew word (Ragnemah) ſignifying thunder properly, be here to be taken Metaphorically for neighing, then it were better to render the Text (nor as our laſt Tranſlators have done with thunder, but) as many have done, and among them our old Engliſh Tranſlators with neighing; to which effect they render this clauſe in our language thus, Haſt thou learned him to neigh couragiouſly. For (ſaith that learned Author, who oppoſeth this reading) it is uncomely, when a word hath two or more ſignifications, to retain that in the Tranſlation, which is leaſt commodious to hold out the meaning of the place in hand. And (ſaith he) it is moſt certain, that the word Thunder, is never uſed in the Latine Tongue; no, not by the boldeſt Poets, to ſignifie the neighing of a Horſe. Yet I ſee no cogent reaſon, ſeeing the Latine words which ſignifie to Thunder, are applied to ſeveral clamors and noiſes, much inferior to Thunder, why the word Thunder in the Noun may not be ſo applied; nor do I ſee any reaſon why the neighing of a mighty Horſe, being uſually accompanied (when he is in a rage) with fretting, chaſing, and ſnorting, may not be alluſively called thunder or thundering. I am ſure, the fretting and chaſing of a woman is ſo expreſſed by the Verb in the Holy Scripture (1 Sam. 1. 6.) where it is ſaid of Hannah, Her adverſary provoked her ſore to make her fret; the Hebrew is, to make her thunder. Now the fretting of a woman, though heightned to loud brawling, and (if I may uſe ſo coarſe a word) ſcolding, bears not ſo much proportion to the noiſe of thunder, as the neighing, ſnorting, and fretting of a great and generous Horſe. When a Horſe is enraged, we may ſay, ſparks leap out of his eyes like lightning, and a ſound out of his mouth like thunder, and a breath out of his noſtrils like ſmoke. And that the ſnorting and neighing of Horſes is dreadful, even like thunder, appears fully by that of the Prophet (Jer. 8. 16.) The ſnorting of his Horſes was heard from Dan (that is, from the utmoſt bounds of the Country) the whole Land trembled at the ſound of the neighing of his ſtrong ones. The neighing of Horſes, is a ſign of their courage and boldneſs, of their fearleſneſs and generoſity; which probably was the reaſon why the great Lords of Perſia agreed, that meeting all together in one place on Horſe-back, he ſhould be choſen Emperor whoſe horſe neighed firſt after they were met; they ſuppoſing it a good Omen or Sign, that the Rider would prove a perſon of great courage and ſpirit, whoſe Horſe firſt gave that token of it: Upon what occaſion the Horſe of Darius neighed firſt, and ſo got his Maſter the Empire, the Perſian Hiſtories will inform the Reader.

Arnold. Boot. Animad. Sacr. l. 3. c. 6. ſect. 3.
Tonare, intonare, l. 3. c. 11. ſect. 8

But to the point in hand. 'Tis evident from what hath been ſaid; that 'tis no uncoucht, nor far fetcht, much leſs forced metaphor, to expreſs the neighing of a furious fretting Horſe by thundering. And as the word rendred thunder, ſignifies (in the Verb) to be moved with choler and and indignation, ſo a noble-ſpirited Horſe, charging an enemy, ſhews a high ſtrain of rage and indignation, in which reſpect, together with his neighing, his neck may ſeem to be cloathed with thunder.

And though it be ſaid, that, as the neck is not reckoned among the inſtruments of ſpeaking in man, ſo it cannot be conveniently reckoned among the inſtruments of neighing in a Horſe, that properly belonging to the throat; and though I grant that when the Scripture ſaith (Pſal. 75. 5.) Speak not with a ſtiff neck; the word neck is not there to be taken, for the means or inſtrument of ſpeech, but notes only the manner of ſpeaking; namely, that there the Lord forbids wicked men to ſpeak ſcornfully, pertinaciouſly, or as Hannah expreſſeth it in her Song (1 Sam. 2. 3.) that they ſhould talk no more ſo exceeding proudly, nor let arrogancy come out of their mouth: Yet the throat being placed in and being a part of the neck, we may by a common ſynecdoche, of the whole for the part, avoid that difficulty. Nor doth the metaphor of cloathing (though, I confeſs it, moſt ſutable to the firſt interpretation, that of the mane) oppoſe this third of neighing; For when a Horſe neighs ſtrongly, the ſound coming out of his mouth compaſſeth him, his neck eſpecially, round about as with a garment. David deſcribing a wicked man, ſaith, he cloathed himſelf with curſing (Pſal. 109. 18.) Curſing goes out of the mouth of a wicked man, as neighing out of the mouth of a Horſe; and therefore, as when a man is much in curſing, he may be ſaid to cloath himſelf with curſing, as with a garment, ſo a Horſe which neigheth much, may (I conceive) be ſaid to have his neck cloathed with neighing.

Having thus far drawn out theſe expoſitions of this ſecond queſtion, which the Lord put to Job about the Horſe, Haſt thou cloathed his neck with thunder? I ſhall ſubmit them to the Readers judgment, and only ſay, that the firſt (if that word Ragnemah may ſignifie a Horſes-mane) is the cleareſt, and moſt literal of them all; and that among the ſecond ſort of expoſitions, the third is moſt received and approved.

From the firſt interpretation we learn,

> God hath beſtowed not only ſtrength, but ornaments upon the Horſe.

The mane of a Horſe is of little uſe (and therefore ſome cut it quite off) but it is a great ornament to the Horſe.

From the two laſt interpretations.

Obſerve, Firſt; The Horſe in his heat and rage is very terrible.

Thunder is ſo, and ſo muſt he needs be, whoſe neck is cloathed with any thing reſembling thunder.

Note, Secondly; It is of God that the Horſe is terrible.

The Horſe hath thunder about his neck, but it is God who hath cloathed his neck with it. If any Horſe, or any other creature be delightful to us, God hath made it ſo; and if any Horſe, or any other creature be thunder, dreadful and terrible to us, it is the Lord who hath made it ſo. This we find more clearly held out in the next verſe.

Verſ. 20. Canſt thou make him afraid as the Graſhopper: the glory of his noſtrils is terrible.

In the firſt part of this verſe, we have the courage of the Horſe ſet forth. That creature is full of courage, that cannot be made afraid: Thus the Lord ſpeaks to Job concerning the Horſe.

Canſt thou make him afraid as the Graſhopper?] The Chaldee, with whom one of the Rabbins joyns, rendereth, Canſt thou cauſe him to make a noiſe like a Graſhopper. Vehement motion cauſeth a ſound or noiſe in the air. When many Graſhoppers fly together, they make a kind of ruſhing noiſe. This expoſition agrees well enough with the word, which at ſecond hand ſignifieth to make a noiſe, that being cauſed by motion. Yet other conſiderations hinder from reſting in this interpretation. For ſeeing the whole diſcourſe here, inſiſts upon the deſcription of a generous Horſe and his qualifications, the noiſe or ſound which a Horſe makes in running, makes nothing to that purpoſe; for as much as it is common to all Horſes, even the baſeſt ſort of them, to make a ſound with their feet when they run. And if it ſhould be granted that great and generous horſes have ſomewhat peculiar in this, and make a greater ſound than common horſes in running, yet to take the compariſon from the ſound which Graſhoppers make in flying, doth eaſily refute this expoſition. We know indeed, what Pliny ſaith, Graſhoppers make ſuch a ſound with their wings in flying, that they may be thought ſome other kind of fowls: Yet we cannot therefore believe, that it is a proper ſimilitude, to compare the ſound which horſes make in running (who, as Poets uſe to phraſe it, make the earth tremble and groan) with that craſſing noiſe which Graſhoppers make while they fly in the air. For if the compariſon may at all be taken from flying-fowls, great fowls were much fitter for it, who uſe to fly in flocks together; Yet theſe greater fowls make no very great noiſe in flying, much leſs can Graſhoppers. And therefore the Poets, both Greek and Latine, though they affect to ſhaddow great ſounds and clamours, by a ſimilitude taken from flying-fowls, yet they do not take the reſemblance from the ſound which their flying makes with their wings, but from the ſound of chattering which they make with their bills while they fly; of which the Reader may find many inſtances given by the learned Author named in the Margin.

Abeneſe ut ſonitu edat.

Lib. 11. cap. 29.

Bootius animad. ſacra.

Seeing then fowls do not make any noiſe in flying, as may ſerve for a ſutable reſemblance of any great ſound, ſurely that ſmall noiſe which Graſhoppers make in flying cannot be a proper reſemblance of it. Further, here is nothing ſaid of many, or of a troop and body of horſes, but of a ſingle horſe, or of horſes ſingly and apart conſidered. Now that ſome one horſe ſhould be compared with one Graſhopper, as to the ſound which the one and the other makes in their motion, were no ſmall abſurdity.

This therefore may ſuffice for the laying aſide of that firſt interpretation of the whole clauſe, though the focre of the word doth not oppoſe it.

Secondly, Others read the Text thus, Canſt thou make him move leap or skip like the Graſhopper: As if the Lord had ſaid, It is not of thee, O Job, but of me, that the horſe hath this property to move himſelf like a Graſhopper.

An commovebis eum in morem locuſtæ. Druſ.

The motion of a Horſe may be compared to that of a Graſhopper in two reſpects. Firſt, In reſpect of his ſwiftneſs. Secondly, Of his ſubſaltation, or bounding and leaping. I conceive God had reſpect only to the latter, in theſe words: for ſeeing this whole context doth not handle the nature of the horſe in general, but only the marks or qualities of valiant horſes; therefore the mention of this (namely, the ſubſaltation of horſes) is much more proper than that of their ſwiftneſs or ſpeed in runing: For ſwiftneſs or ſpeed in running, is not appropriate or peculiar to generous horſes; it being certain, that as they excel the common ſort of horſes, both in the ſwiftneſs of their courſe, and in the continuance or laſtingneſs of it, ſo it is as apparent, that ordinary horſes will often run very ſwiftly, or with great ſpeed for a time. But as for that other motion of their bodies in which they imitate the leaping or skipping of Graſhoppers, that is proper to them.

And there are two ſorts of this motion proper to generous horſes. The one, in which ſtanding upon two feet only, either the hinder or the forefeet, the other part of their body is lifted up on high from the ground; which motion (being very dangerous to the Rider) we call bounding or to bound. The other ſort of ſaltatory motion, is that, whereby the horſe lifts up himſelf, with his four feet quite off the ground, and goeth as it were leaping, or intermingles ſaltation or leaping with his going. There is a twofold leaping. Firſt, When a horſe raiſeth himſelf over a bar, hedge or ditch, this is of daily uſe. The other, is only for pomp, when a horſe raiſeth his body upon plain ground to ſhew his activity, this we call curveting, as the proud ſtately gate of a horſe is by us called praunſing. Now of theſe two motions, bounding and curveting, the latter is rather to be underſtood in this place; that being moſt like the ſaltation, the leaping or skipping motion of a Graſhopper; and the other to be reckoned rather among the ill qualities, than the commendations of a horſe, which are here only taken notice of. Canſt thou make him leap or move like a Graſhopper? The Graſhopper moves with a kind of a leap. Naturaliſts tell us, that the hinder legs of Graſhoppers are much longer than their fore legs, to fit them for leaping; the Horſe in his leaping and curveting motion, clearly repreſents the motion of a Graſhopper. According to this expoſition, the great agility and nimbleneſs of the horſe is ſet forth, as before his ſtrength and courage. Haſt thou made the horſe ſo agile or active, that like a Graſhopper he doth as it were, leaping fly, and flying leap. A Horſe will do ſtrange feats of activity if well managed. This interpretation is much urged by ſeveral of the learned; yet I conceive the purpoſe of theſe words, is rather to ſet forth the boldneſs, than the nimbleneſs of the Horſe. Our Tranſlation carries this ſenſe clearly.

Bootius animad. ſacra.

Poſteri ora locuſtæ crura medis longiora ſunt, ut ambulet melius & attollatur facilius de terra. Ariſt. l. 4. de part. Animal. c. 6.

Numquid effeciſti ut equus motitet ſeſe inſtar Locuſtæ? i. e. Feciſtine equum agilem ſicut Locuſtam? Vatabl.

Tunc illi agilitatem dare poſſis qualem oſtendit, cum Locuſtæ modo ſubſaltat. Grot.

Canſt thou make him afraid as the Graſhopper.] The Graſhopper is a weak and frightful creature, he is ſoon ſcared, and quickly flies away. The word rendred a Graſhopper, ſignifies a multitude, becauſe they uſually go by multitudes (Prov. 30. 27.) The Locuſts have no King, yet go they forth all of them by bands; they go, as it were, an Army of them together. The Latine word Locuſta, is from an ill effect of Locuſts or Graſhoppers, becauſe they conſume, and in a manner, burn up every green thing in the places where they come. Hence that alluſive prohibition (Rev. 9. 4.) There came out of the ſmoak Locuſts; and it was commanded them that they ſhould not hurt the graſs of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any Tree, &c. Now, though the Scripture compares theſe creatures to a great Army (Joel 2. 25.) becauſe they go out in great companies, and do a great deal of miſchief: And though (Rev. 9. 7.) The ſhapes of the Locuſts (there ſpoken of) were like unto horſes prepared unto battle, that is, compleatly armed; yet the Locuſts are but a weak kind of Warriers, they are quickly ſcared, they are fearful creatures. Canſt thou make the Horſe afraid like the Graſhopper? When the Lord ſaith, Canſt thou make him afraid like the Graſhopper, his meaning is, The Horſe is of ſo ſtout a ſpirit, that he will not only not be afraid like the Graſhopper, but no more afraid than a Lion. So then, I conclude this part of the verſe contains not a ſimilitude, but a diſſimilitude between the Horſe and the Graſhopper; not a likeneſs between the Horſe and the Graſhopper in nimbleneſs, but their unlikeneſs in fearfulneſs. Canſt thou make him

Tremefacere. Jun. Piſc.

Locuſtæ ſunt fugaciſſimæ, & facile aguntur ventis. Ad levem aliquem ſtrepitum aut motum aufugiunt. Sanct.

ארבה Locuſta, quæ magna multitudine volitat.

Latinis Locuſtæ videntur dictæ quod locos urant, nam ſegetes morſu erodunt & tactu adurunt. River.

Locuſtæ equi cataphracti ſpeciem habent.

Afraid?] The word notes ſuch fear as is cauſed by an Earth-quake, Iſa. 13. 13. Joel 2. 10. Pſal. 109. 23. Neh. 3. 17. As importing, that though the Horſe ſhould hear a craſhing or ruſhing ſound, like that of an Earth-quake, when the ground under us opens and ſhakes, yet he is not moved nor quakes, as Mr. Broughton renders. The Horſe is rather enraged, than ſcared like a Graſhopper, by any noiſe; His ſpirit is rather whetted and inflamed, than cowed (as we ſay) and cooled by the ſtrongeſt alarms; as will further appear in the latter part of this deſcription. Horſes are obſerved ſometimes (as alſo men) quaking before a battle, yet not for fear, but with indignation. Canſt thou make him afraid? &c.

רעש timore & terræ motum indicat.

Hence Note; Firſt, The Horſe is a valiant and ſtout-hearted creature.

Not to fear, is a ſign of valour; but not to be made afraid, is much more a ſign of it than not to fear. When any one hath ſuch a ſpirit, that he doth not only fear, but cannot be made afraid, there's courage to the height: Such is the courage of the Horſe, nothing can make him afraid.

Obſerve, Secondly; The courage, as well as the ſtrength of the Horſe, is from God.

As every creature is not ſtrong, ſo not couragious. Some are very fearful, ſo fearful, that they are grown into a Proverb for fearfulneſs: Such are Hares and Harts, and the Oſtrich before ſpoken of. Nor hath every Horſe courage and boldneſs. Horſes given to ſtart, are fearful. God puts ſuch courage into ſome Horſes, that nothing can make them ſtart or fear. Courage is a gift of God beſtowed upon ſome men, and not upon others; ſome are as couragious as Lions, and others as fearful as Hares and Harts or Graſhoppers. We cannot keep ſome from fear; we cannot make others afraid. Canſt thou make him afraid as the Graſhopper?

Note, Thirdly; Where God gives courage, it is not in man to make afraid.

The courage of the Horſe appears yet higher in the next verſe.

The glory of his noſtrils is terrible.

The noſtrils are very conſiderable in horſes, and the largeneſs or openneſs of them, is a ſign of their goodneſs and ſtoutneſs. The glory of his noſtrils is terrible, or terror, that is, very terrible, his breathings are meer terror. This expreſſion of the Horſe, is ſomewhat like that given of St Paul, while Saul (Acts 9. 1.) Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter. Paul, before his converſion, breathed flames of fire, as it were, he breathed terror out of his mouth againſt the faithful people of God. Thus here, The glory of his noſtrils is terrible.

Meros terroris naribus ſpirat. Bez. Efflat patentibus naribus ventum calentem iræ & audaciæ indicem, quo videtur ille gloriari. Numquid poſuiſti gloriam narium ejus ut ſit terror? i.e. num effeciſti ut terreat homines fremitu narium ſuarum. Vatabl.

But, what is this glory of his noſtrils? Some ſay, theſe words are a deſcription of his neighing; and I grant, that ſound proceeding from his noſtrils, as from a trumpet, may well enough be called the glory of them; nor can it be denied, but that the neighing of great horſes is terrible. According to which reading, ſome ſay, the word which we tranſlate Noſtrils, ſignifieth in this place, that ſound of his noſtrils called neighing; and that the word by us rendred glory, doth rather ſignifie excellency or vehemency. And thus our old Engliſh Tranſlation gives it; His ſtrong neighing is fearful; or as others, His vehement neighing is terrible..

The Hebrew (as was toucht before) is Terror; nothing being more common in that language, than to uſe ſubſtantive words adjectively, or, as if they were Adjectives. Taking this ſenſe of the words, they deſcribe generous horſes neighing, when they go to battle, as if they would thereby at once proclaim and trumpet out their own courage, and terrifie or daunt the enemy; or, as if they would not only ſhew their own fearleſsneſs, but make their oppoſers afraid. This is a fair interpretation, yet becauſe (according to one Expoſition given, and much received, of the latter part of the former verſe, Haſt thou cloathed his neck with thunder? the neighing of the horſe hath been already ſpoken of, I rather conceive, that theſe words, The glory of his noſtrils is terrible, may be expounded either of theſe two ways.

First, That his wide, fuming, ſmoaking noſtrils (which are the glory and commendation of a horſe) ſtrike others with terror. Poets deſcribing the horſe, fancy him ſending fire out of his noſtrils, or breathing fire. And thus when God is angry, ſmoak and fire are ſaid to go out of his noſtrils (2 Sam. 22. 9.) Some underſtand that (Iſa. 2. 22.) of an angry furious man. As is if the Prophet had ſaid, fear not man, make no account of him, though enflamed with wrath and anger. The glory of his noſtrils is terrible.

—Frænoq; teneri impatiens crebras expirat naribus ignes. Sil. Ital. l. 6. Igneſcunt patulæ nares. Claud.

Secondly, Reading the words thus (as was ſaid) The glory of his noſtrils is terror; they may be expounded, not as implying the terror and fright which the horſe ſtrikes others with, but which others would fright the horſes with, while they brandiſh their ſwords, ſhake their ſpears, ſound their trumpets; from all which terror, the horſe is ſo far from running, that rather his courage is encreaſed, and his ſpirit hatred. Such noiſes, claſhings and clamors, will not ſcare the Horſe, as they do the Graſhopper; but the terror or matter of fear which is preſented before him, is the glory of his noſtrils, that is, it will but provoke him to anger and rage, or excite his courage, which makes his noſtrils ſmoak like fire, it cannot at all put him into a fear, and that's his glory.

Bellum quod eſt aliis ad terrorem, naribus ab equo perceptum, eſt ei ad gloriam, i.e. ad quandam animi magnitudinem. Aquin.

Hence Note, Firſt; That which any creature excels in, is his glory.

The horſe glorieth in his ſtrength; the courage and fierceneſs of the horſe appearing in his noſtrils, are his glory alſo. Whatever good man excels in, is his glory: if he excels in knowledge, or in ſtrength, or courage, or in holineſs, it is his glory; yea, men who excel in evil, count that their glory (Phil. 3. 19.) That which God excels in, is his glory; what is that? He (bleſſed be his name) excels in pardoning our ſins, in covering our iniquities, and therefore, It is the glory of God to conceal a thing (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 25. 2.) that is, ſin, by pardoning it. Kings muſt ſearch out the matter, but it is the glory of God to conceal a thing. That which any creature excels in, is his glory; that which the Scriptures declare God to excel in, is his glory, and that is moſtly his pardoning mercy.

Note, Secondly; The greateſt glory which ſome creatures have, is to be terrible to others.

To put others in fear, is all their glory, all that they glory in; their glory is not to ſave and to deliver, to comfort and to do good to others, but to vex and to terrifie.

From the ſecond interpretation, take this Note.

That which is very terrible to ſome, is a glory to others.

That is, It occaſions them to ſhew their glory, or cauſeth their glory to appear the more. Terror is the glory of the horſe; his noſtrils are never ſo glorious, as when you attempt to terrifie him. When that which is terrible is put to a true believer, then the glory of his ſoul breaks out, then he ſhews forth his faith in God, his integrity and faithfulneſs towards God; terror is the glory of his ſoul, as terror is the glory of the horſe, that is, it gives him occaſion to ſhew forth his glory.

Verſ. 21. He paweth in the valley, and rejoyceth in his ſtrength; he goeth on to meet the armed men.

Theſe words give a further proof of the courage of the horſe, or a ſign of it; for 'tis the property of the higheſt metal'd and beſt ſpirited horſes to do ſo, as impatient of a check by the bridle, and deſirous rather to be ſpurred upon an engagement with the enemy in battle. He paweth

In the valley.] Why in the valley? becauſe there battels, eſpecially horſe battels, uſed to be fought, rather than upon hills or uneven grounds.

There is another reading of the verſe; for the word tranſlated to paw, ſignifies alſo to dig: Hence ſome give it thus; He diggeth in the valley. The pawing of a horſe, is a kind of digging; for he hollows the earth, and makes a cavity in it by pawing. A mettl'd horſe cannot keep his feet, but will be traverſing his ground, and pawing with his feet, as vext at any delay or ſtopt of the battle; he cannot endure to be curb'd by the bit, having ſuch a mind (as was toucht before) to be upon the ſpur, in a full carreer againſt the enemy. Of ſuch pranſings, or (as the Margin hath it) tramplings or plungings of the horſe, Deborah ſpake in her triumphant ſong (Judg. 5. 22.) He paweth in the valley.

Terram ungula fodit Vulg. — Cavatq; tellurem. Virg. 3. Georg. Nec pes officium ſtandi tenet; ungula terram, crebra ferit, virtuſq; artus animoſa fatigat.

Hence Note; What we would fain have, or be at, we are very unquiet, and think long till we are at it.

This we may take in a ſpiritual ſenſe: A ſoul which hath a mind to do good, how impatient is he when he is ſtopt from doing it! A ſoul that hath a deſire to have communion with God on earth, how much troubled is he to be hindred! And a ſoul that hath a great mind to be with God in heaven, how doth he paw in the valley of this lower world, till he get higher and aſcend up to him! Auſtin ſaid, My heart is unquiet, I can have no reſt till I am with thee again. So the Apoſtle (Phil. 1. 23.) I deſire to depart, I would fain be out of this world; why am I thus wind-bound in the harbour? let me hoiſe ſail and be gone, the Sea-man is troubled to lie at an anchor, when he would be under ſail. Thus the generous horſe paweth in the valley, and Rejoyceth in his ſtrength.] And becauſe of that he rejoyceth in the battle; and becauſe of that, would fain be at the battle. A horſe being confident of his ſtrength, goeth on chearfully.

Sibi placet in ſuo robore. Bez.

The word rendred ſtrength, ſignifieth not only bodily robuſtiouſneſs, but any other abilities or excellent endowments. In which larger notion it is uſed (Dan. 1. 4.) where it is ſaid, The children that were to be choſen and bred up for the King, were ſuch as had ability to ſtand in the Kings Palace; that is, ſuch as were well qualified for that ſervice and attendance. In ſtrength of both kinds, a well diſciplined horſe may be ſaid to rejoyce.

כח Et vires denotat & alias præterea dotes.

The word rendred rejoyceth, may rather (ſay ſome) be here tranſlated, Exulteth, which imports ſomewhat more than rejoycing, or great rejoycing; and may not unfitly be attributed to beaſts, eſpecially to horſes, and chiefly to ſuch horſes as this Text ſpeaks of. Exultation is the expreſſion of any inward joy, by ſome outward act or geſture of the body; and to do that is very uſual with brave horſes, who being proud of, at leaſt much pleaſed with themſelves, are often ſeen pranſing and jetting as they go, and even artificially forming and compoſing their bodies, their heads and legs eſpecially, at every ſtep they take. So that theſe words, He rejoyceth, or exulteth in his ſtrength, ſeem to imply, that the horſe knoweth his own ſtrength and powers. It is commonly ſaid, If a horſe knew his ſtrength, he were not to be dealt with; but whether this be true or no, it appears by theſe words in the Text, that he hath ſome knowledge of his ſtrength, elſe he could not be ſaid to rejoyce in it. And this is very aptly inſerted here, becauſe hence it comes to paſs, that the horſe ruſheth ſo fiercely and fearleſly into the battle, which is the great ſcope of the whole deſcription given of him in this context. He rejoyceth in his ſtrength.

Hence Note, Firſt; They have much ſtrength for any work or ſervice, are joyful to go on to it.

David (Pſal. 19. 5.) compares the Sun to a ſtrong man, that rejoyceth to run a race. A ſtrong man is not afraid of, nor troubled at the race, but rejoyceth exceedingly in it.

Secondly, Note; What we have much of, or excel in, we are apt to rejoyce in.

The horſe hath much ſtrength, and he rejoyceth in it. This appears in all things; If we have much riches, how apt are we to rejoyce in them! If we have much wiſdom, or underſtanding, or parts, how apt are we to rejoyce in them! and therefore the Lord gives us that caveat (Jer. 9. 23.) Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom (as if he had ſaid, If a man have a great deal of wiſdom, or but a little more than his neighbour, he will be glorying in it, as the horſe in his ſtrength) and let not the mighty man glory in his might, nor the rich man glory in his riches. All theſe ſtops upon glorying, ſhew, that what we have much of, we are apt to glory in.

Note, Thirdly; To rejoyce in any ſtrength, or in any thing but in God and his favour, or as we enjoy God in any thing, is brutiſh, 'tis to the rejoyce as the horſe.

The only rejoyce as Chriſtians, who rejoyce in their ſtrength, and in their riches, and in their graces, as they find God in them, and as they flow from God. The Goſpel way of rejoycing, is to rejoyce in the Lord, not in our graces, not in our wiſdom, not in our righteouſneſs, but in the Lord. The horſe rejoyceth in his ſtrength.

נשׁק Arma ſignificat ſed propriè tela, atq; ea, quibus adorimur, congredimur. נשׁק eſt Græcè Oπλον omne teli & armorum genus. Merc. Hinc נשק oſculari ſalutare, quod ſalutantes dextra, petant atque occurrant invicem. Codurc.

He goeth on to meet the armed men.] The Hebrew is, He goeth on to meet the Armor, or rather Arms; that is, offenſive weapons, pikes and ſpears, which gall horſes, rather than defenſive, ſuch as ſhields, bucklers, and helmets, which only preſerve men from hurt and wounds; or we may take it in both, and ſo the meaning is, the armed men. He goeth on to meet them; he needs not be beaten, nor whipt, nor ſpurred on to the battle. The courageous horſe goes on, he retreats not, he retires not, he is a volunteer in the War, he is preſt by nothing but the nobleneſs and height of his own ſpirit, he goes to meet the armed men; though they meet him with deadly arms, with ſword and ſpear, yet he goes to meet them. The word which we tranſlate, Armed men, properly ſignifies to kiſs, or to ſalute, becauſe they who come to battle, do as it were, joyn hands and ſalute one another, though very coarſely, rudely, and roughly. He goeth on to meet the armed men.

Hence obſerve, The ſence of ability, much more confidence in ability, puts on to activity.

The Horſe rejoyceth in his ſtrength, he is ſenſible of, or finds his ſtrength for the war, and therefore he puts on.

Secondly, Note; What ever any man hath a mind or a delight to do, that he will go on in, or is free to do.

The Horſe goes on to meet the armed men, he doth not ſtand to receive a charge, but he ſeeks it. What any have a great mind to, that they are very forward in; you need not preſs a volunteer, nor ſpur a free, a valiant horſe on to the battle, you can hardly hold him in with bit and bridle. 'Tis ſo in any ſervice, where there is a heart ſet to it! with a love to it, O how do we go forth to it! we need not be haled nor driven to it. So in ſpirituals, a heart of that temper, anſwers every call (Pſal. 27. 8.) When thou ſaidſt, ſeek my face; my heart ſaid unto thee, thy face Lord will I ſeek. He preſently anſwers the Lords call to any duty, who hath a heart for it. What zeal, what freedom, what forwardneſs have we, to that we have a will and a mind to! An up-hill way, is all down-hill to a willing mind.

VERS. 22, 23, 24, 25.

He mocketh at fear, and is not afraid, neither turneth he back from the ſword.

The quiver ratleth againſt him, the glittering ſpear and the ſhield,

He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage, neither believeth he that it is the ſound of the trumpet.

He ſayes among the trumpets, Ha, ha, and he ſmelleth the battle afar off; the thunder of the Captains and the ſhouting.

These four verſes continue and compleat the deſcription of the goodly valiant War-horſe, in his ſecond qualification of boldneſs and courage, of which this Text gives as many proofs as can be imagined or expected.

שׂחק Spernit quod plenum eſt timore. Vatabl. Contemnit omnia metuenda. Elegans proſopopeia eſt; qua tribuitur experti rationis animali, quod hominis proprium eſt, ſc. videre arma.

He mocketh at fear.] And what greater argument of valour than than that? Fear, the abſtract is here put for the concrete; he laughs at fear, that is, that is, at thoſe things which are moſt to be feared, or which carry the greateſt command of fear in them. It is uſual in Scripture, to expreſs things greatly to be feared, by fear. As things greatly hoped for are called our hope, and things rejoyced in greatly are called our joy, ſo things greatly to be feared are called our fear; and in that ſence, above all, God is called the fear of his people; he is ſo much the object of fear, that the Scripture calls him fear. Jacob in his treating and contract with his Uncle Laban (Gen. 31. 53.) Sware by the fear of his father Iſaac, that is, he ſware by God, who alone hath this high honour to be ſworn by in a ſacred way. To ſwear, is a great part of divine worſhip, and is ſometime put for the whole of worſhip, Jacob ſware by the fear of Iſaac, that is, by God, who his father Iſaac feared, and in whoſe fear he walked all his days. Thus ſpake the Prophet (Iſa. 8. 12, 13.) Sanctifie the Lord of Hoſts in your hearts, and let him be your fear, which is quoted by the Apoſtle (1 Pet. 3. 15) Now as God himſelf is called fear, becauſe he is ſo exceedingly to be feared; ſo thoſe things which carry in them much fear, or which are much feared, in Scripture ſenſe and eloquence, are called fear; He ſcorneth or mocketh at fear. Thoſe things which make others tremble, he, as it were, makes a ſport at and plays with them. So the words are an expoſition of what was ſpoken at the cloſe of the 21. verſ. He goeth on to meet the armies, or the armed men, who are much to be feared and dreaded.

Quæ non curant homines rident.

In general, whatſoever is or may be matter of fear, that the horſe mocks or laughs at, that is, he counts no more of it, than we do of thoſe things we laugh at. What men regard not, care not for, that they laugh at, mock at. We ſay of a valiant ſtout-hearted man, he knows not what fear means. When once a Noble perſon, in great danger, was admoniſhed not to be afraid; he laid his hand upon his breaſt, and ſaid, Fear was never here yet, and I hope ſhall never enter. Thus the Horſe is here repreſented, as one into whoſe heart fear never entred; he mocketh at fear, חתת dejectus, abjectus, ſtratus, metaphoricè conſternatus fuit, mente jacuit.

And (as it followeth) is not affrighted.] The word which we render affrighted, imports the greateſt conſternation of mind, when the mind lies, as it were, proſtrate under utter deſpondency, breakings of ſpirit, and diſcouragements (Deut. 1. 21.) Neither any dreadful noiſe nor terrible ſight, neither the appearance nor the reallity of danger, abate the ſpirit or proweſs of the Horſe; He is not affrighted.

Hence, Note; Danger is the element of courage.

We ſee it in the Horſe, and it is much more ſeen in couragious men. You can no more caſt down true courage by repreſenting dangers, than you can drown a fiſh by caſting it into the water; it is in its element. It was the ſpeech of that great Alexander, being in a moſt hazardous undertaking, Now I ſee a danger ſutable to my mind, a match for my courage. The Horſe mocketh at fear.

Jam video animo meo par periculum.

Note, Secondly; That which is not feared, is uſually derided.

It is ſo with beaſts, and it is ſo with men; and what more uſual with ſome men, than to mock moſt at thoſe things which they ſhould be moſt afraid of? As there is a nobleneſs of courage in ſome men, which makes a mock of fear; ſo beſides that, there is a baſeneſs of ſpirit, a ſtupidneſs in other men, that make a mock at fear. Such was the ſpirit of Lots Sons-in-law (Gen. 19. 14.) who when Lot reported to them, the moſt dreadful thing that ever was in the world, a ſhower of fire and brimſtone, ready to fall down from heaven, upon the whole City to conſume it, He was to them as one that mocked; the meaning is, his Sons in-law mocked at what he reported, they laugh'd at his admonition. Such a kind of mocking at fear, we read in thoſe hardned and debauched ſpirits among the ten Tribes, when that good King ſent and admoniſhed them to return to the truee worſhip of God, and laid before them thoſe dreadful judgments that would ſurely overtake them if they did not (2 Chron. 30. 10.) They laughed to ſcorn the meſſengers, and mockt them: As if they had ſaid, What do you tell us of the wrath of God, and of his judgments, if we perſiſt in our way and courſe; we ſcorn your admonition, we regard not your threatnings. The character given of that people (2 Chron. 36. 16.) when wrath was breaking out upon them without remedy, was this, They mockt the meſſengers of God, and deſpiſed his words. To ſuch mockers at fear, I might take occaſion to ſay, as the Prophet in a like caſe (Iſa. 28. 22.) Be ye not mockers, leſt your bands be made ſtrong. There are ſome fears that it is our honour to mock at; but there are other fears that will be our ſhame and ruin to mock at: Of all ſuch,that will be true which the Lord ſpake by wiſdom (Prov. 1. 26.) I will mock when their fear cometh. They who mock when fear, that is, when fearful things are threatn'd in the name of the Lord; the Lord will mock at their fear when fearful evils fall upon them. Sinners will have little mind to mock at laſt. Such mockers at fear are propheſied of, before the coming of Chriſt, in thoſe two Epiſtles which are of a near complexion and conſtitution (2 Pet. 3. 4.) Knowing this firſt, that there ſhall come in the laſt days (mockers, or) ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts, ſaying, where is the promiſe of his coming. And in the Epiſtle of Jude (ver. 17, 18.) we have the ſame caution, Beloved, remember ye the words that were ſpoken before, of the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, how that they told you, there ſhould be mockers in the laſt time, who ſhould walk after their ungodly luſts. Take heed you be not found thus like the Horſe mocking at fear, though there be many caſes wherein it is the honour of man, eſpecially, of the ſervants of God, to be in this point like the Horſe, Who mocketh at fear,

Neither turneth he back from the ſword.] This latter part of the verſe is only a confirmation of what was ſaid before, and therefore I ſhall briefly paſs it. Thoſe appearances or realities of danger, at which we are affrighted, cauſe us to turn back; but the horſe not being affrighted with, turneth not back from the ſword. The Hebrew is, he turneth not back from the face of the ſword; further, the Hebrew is plural, from the face of the ſword. The ſword hath a face, it hath (as it were) many faces, and they all look very terribly; therefore not to be afraid of the faces of the ſword, is a high expreſſion of fearleſneſs. Not to turn back from the face of the ſword may have this ſence, not to fear when the ſword is very near him; when the ſword looks the horſe in the face, and makes dreadful faces, then he turns not back from it, nor yields a foot of ground. The Horſe doth not only mock at fear, or at things which are to be fear'd, when they are afar off, but when they are near, even, when the ſword is drawn and brandiſhed before his face. To talk great words, when an enemy is far from us, is the cowards guize; but when we ſee his face, to ſtand to it, is the trial of courage The Lioneſs is a very fierce and ſtout creature, and yet it is reported, that when ſhe is fighting for her whelps (at which time ſhe is moſt fierce and furious) ſhe caſt her eyes down to the ground, as not being willing to behold the weapons or hunting arms of thoſe who purſue her. But though the natural Hiſtorian reports ſome kind of fear in the Lioneſs, yet Solomon reports the courage of the Lion altogether fearleſs and undaunted (Prov. 30. 30.) He turneth not away for any; The Hebrew ſaith, from the face of any; we may ſay, man or beaſt, that is, he takes not a ſtep back for any; neither man nor beaſt can make him afraid. An ancient Writer, deſcribing the Lion, tells us, He never feareth, nor flyeth, nor haſteth away in the ſight of any; but though oppreſſed with the multitude or number of his purſuers, he make his retreat ſoftly and gradually, or by ſeveral ſtands, to ſee who dares engage him, as was ſhewed before at the 38. Chapter (ver. 39, 40.) Thus the valiant horſe behaves himſelf at the appearance and face of the ſword; he doth not only not turn quite away from the ſword, but doth not ſo much as turn his eyes from it, but looks it full in the face, though it ſheweth a dreadful and bloody face. God, who hath made the horſe for the ſervice of man in war, hath given him a ſpirit ſutable, he is not afraid of the ſword, nor of any other weapon of war, as will further appear from the next verſe, when from theſe words, I have briefly Noted,

Plin. nat. hiſt. l. 6. c. 16.

First, The face or appearance of the ſword is terrible.

The ſword is one of the moſt terrible things, which the Lord at any time threatneth againſt a ſinful people; the face of the ſword makes many mens faces gather paleneſs, and puts a palſie into their hands.

Note, Secondly; Where there is true courage, not only dangers afar off, but dangers at hand are not turned from.

It is ſaid (Pſal. 78. 8.) that, the children of Ephraim being armed, and carrying bows (they had both offenſive and defenſive weapons, yet) turned back in the day of battle. They marcht on poſſibly a great while very valiantly, as well as any in the army, and poſſibly made great boaſts what they would do; but when it came to the day of battle, when they ſaw the face of the ſword, then ſaith the Text, they turned back. A man of right mettal turns not back, his courage fails not, no not at preſent danger; and that's it which we are to conſider our ſelves in, as to our ſpiritual courage. It is an eaſie matter to ſlight dangers when they are unſeen, and only talked of; but when it comes to the day of battle, when ſwords are drawn, and you ſee their terrible faces, then not to turn back, that's courage indeed. And ſo we may underſtand the words of the Apoſtle (Heb. 10. 38.) where he brings in the Lord, ſpeaking thus; If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him, If any man draw back as a coward, or takes his heels in the day of battle (for of that he ſpake in the 34. verſe, telling us of thoſe, Who endured a great fight of affliction, even of thoſe that took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, and doubtleſs were ready to take joyfully the ſpoiling of their lives too: If any man in their caſe turn back from the very face of the ſword) My ſoul (ſaith God) ſhall have no pleaſure in him; he is no ſouldier for me, he is not fit for the ſpiritual warfare.

As in this verſe we have the ſword, ſo in the next, there is an enumeration of ſeveral other terrible Armes, the fight whereof gives no trouble to the horſe.

Verſ. 23. The quiver ratleth againſt him, the gliſtering ſpear and ſword.

Yet he turns not back; ſo we are to connect it.

The quiver ratles againſt him.] It was uſual in thoſe times to make much uſe of bows and arrows in war; and not only did the foot-men uſe the bow, but the horſe-men too.Some underſtand this ratling of the quiver, to be either of foot or horſe that come to charge; but we are rather to underſtand the ratling of the horſe mans quivers. Moſt creatures take fright at ratling noiſes, but this ratling makes not the horſe either to ſtart or turn, he flincheth not, nor draweth he back at the ratling of the quiver.

אשפה eſt pharetra, unde ſagittæ vocantur בני אשפה filii pharetræ. Lam.3.

The quiver ratleth againſt him. There is a twofold interpretation of theſe words, ariſing from the ambiguity of the prepoſition (על) by us rendred againſt, which others tranſlate by (ſuper) upon, conceiving that here mention is made of thoſe weapons which the Horſe with his Rider bear; as if the meaning were, The quivers which Archers on horſe-back, carry at their ſaddles or by their ſides, ratle upon him. But moſt (as our tranſlation hath it) render that prepoſition by, againſt, and ſo underſtand the whole verſe of thoſe armes, which the enemy or contrary party uſe in conflict.

Pharetra à ſeſſore ſuo geſtata fragore non terretur. Bez.

conflict. And that this is the better and more proper expoſition, is clear from the ſeries and tendency of the words; for here the valour and generoſity of the horſe is painted to the life, towards which the mention of thoſe arms, which the horſe himſelf or the horſe-man managing him beareth, doth not contribute the leaſt line or ſhadow; but the mention of thoſe ratling arms or of the ratling of thoſe arms, which the adverſe party bear and brandiſh againſt him, tends to a notable demonſtration of his courage. 'Tis a great evidence of a horſes boldneſs, to ruſh upon or charge an enemy, whoſe arms ratle againſt him, and who hold out weapons purpoſely fitted to wound, kill, and ſlay all that come near him. So that, what is ſaid (ver. 21.) He goeth on to meet the armed men; and (ver. 22.) He mocketh at fear, neither turneth he back from the ſword, is here further illuſtrated and heightned, by recounting ſeveral other deadly weapons of which the horſe is as dreadleſs. When the horſe moves much, the quiver ratles, ſo alſo do both ſpears and ſhields (as it followeth in the Text.)

The glittering ſpear and the ſhield.] Well ſurbiſht ſpears and ſhields glitter, or (as the Hebrew hath it) flame. The heads and points of ſpears being burniſhed and brighten'd, ſeem like burning fire or flames; yet the horſe is not moved by them. We read of a flaming ſword in a higher ſenſe (Gen. 3. 24.) as here of flaming ſpears and ſhields. Now as the claſhing and ratling of arms, ſo the brightneſs of them is terrible; but neither the one nor the other, neither the ratling quiver, nor the glittering ſpear and ſhield trouble the couragious horſe. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, not ſhield but, javelin, which is an offenſive or miſſive weapon; the word is rendred ſpear (Joſh. 8. 18. 1 Sam. 17. 45.) as alſo at the 29. verſe of the 41. Chapter of this Book. Theſe things laid together bring in, or make up a fuller proof of the horſes courage; the quiver ratleth againſt him, the ſpear and ſhield ratle too, yet he is not diſcouraged.

כידון ſæpe lancea redditur.

> Hence note; Firſt, The confuſed noiſe of weapons in war, wounds the ear and the heart, or the heart at the ear, as well as the ſharpneſs of their point or edge wounds the fleſh.

It is matter of amazement to hear the ſounding, the ratling, and the claſhing of arms, and other dreadful noiſes that the field is filled with in a day of battle (Iſa. 9. 5.) Every battle of the warrior is with confuſed noiſe; and 'tis much that the confuſion of the noiſe, doth not make a confuſion in the ſpirits of thoſe that are ingag'd in battle.

> Note, Secondly; Not to be terrified with noiſes and dreadful ſounds, ſhews ſtrength and ſtoutneſs of ſpirit.

It is a piece of valour in the Horſe, not to be troubled with or at the ratling of the quiver. The Lord to ſhew that he would totally take away the ſpirit of courage from his own people for their ſins (who had been ſo valiant to ſin againſt him, and would run upon ſin, notwithſtanding the ratling of his quiver, his threatnings, denounced againſt them) telleth them (Levit. 26. 36.) I will carry you into the land of your enemies. What then? And (ſaith he) upon them that are left alive of you, I will ſend a faintneſs into their hearts, in the land of their enemies, and the ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them. Now as it ſhews an extream cowardize and faintneſs of ſpirit, to ſhake and run at the ſhaking of a leaf; ſo to ſtand firm, to keep our ground and not be moved, when there is ſuch a noiſe and clattering, as even ſhakes the earth, and confounds all the elements (as it were) this ſhews a mighty courage.

Verſ. 24. He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage, &c.

Abſorbet terram, poetica locutio ſic vorare viam, vorare litteras. Druſ. Helluones librorum.

Still the expreſſions riſe higher and higher, the courage of the horſe tranſports him ſo far, that he even ſwalloweth the ground. We ſay of ſome hard and great ſtudents, they ſwallow up books, they make no bones of great books. So here, to ſhew the mighty courage and fierceneſs of the horſe, he is repreſented, as if he would eat up or ſwallow the very ground he treads on.

Facit foveam in terra. Tharg. Fodit. Pagn.

Yet many Expoſitors are not ſatiſfied, that the Hebrew word here uſed (גמא) ſhould be rendred to ſwallow; and therefore they tranſlate, He diggeth the earth with fierceneſs and rage; and expound it of his making holes in the ground, by pawing in the valley ſpoken of verſe 21. Mr. Broughton give it thus; With ſhaking and ſtirring he beateth upon the earth: The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith, He makes a hole in the earth. The authority of the Chaldee (ſaith Bootius) gives credit to this expoſition and ſtrengthens it; becauſe it ſhews, that the word in the Syriack tongue (many of which are uſed in this book of Job) may well ſignifie to dig or make a hole, ſeeing from this Verb a Noun is derived, which in that language ſignifies a hole or pit. And if we take this interpretation (ſaith he) the words would not be a bare, much leſs a needleſs repetition of what was ſaid (ver. 21.) He paweth in the valley. For though (according to this reading) the Text in both places ſpeaks of hollowing the earth, yet we may give this difference; the former being to be underſtood of thoſe lighter touches, which wanton luſty horſes with one foot give the earth; but this latter, of great and deep impreſſions which they make in the earth with all their feet, while heated with a deſire to charge the enemy, they are reſtrained and held in, till the ſignal be given.

Secondly, Others laying aſide the metaphorical ſenſe of the word ſwalloweth, expound it properly of his biting or gnawing the earth. A generous horſe, to ſhew how he would eat up the enemy when he comes at him, before he comes at him, doth not only paw in the earth with his foot, but gnaws the earth with his teeth, as if he would ſwallow it up. And to ſwallow up a thing imports in all languages, at leaſt a ſuppoſed or conceited eaſineſs of doing it. We, ſpeaking proverbially, uſe to ſay, we could do ſuch or ſuch a thing, as eaſily as we can eat or drink. The horſe when he cannot come preſently to wreck his rage upon the enemy, doth it upon the earth in gnawing of which he ſeems to tell his enemies, that he will tear their fleſh, and gnaw their bones as ſoon as he can come at them. And I find one, who by earth in this place, underſtands men (as all are) made of earth; but though it may bear a tolerable ſenſe, to ſay, that a horſe in his fierceneſs and rage, would even eat or ſwallow up the enemy; yet to expouud the earth by the enemy, exceeds (ſaith a learned Author) all abſurdity. But,

Morſu terram abſorbere videtur.

Thirdly, I rather conceive (as ſome of the Rabbins, and not a few of our Modern Writers do) that by ſwallowing the earth with fierceneſs and rage, we are to underſtand only the ſwiftneſs of his courſe or motion, when once he hath but the reins let looſe to the battle, he would run as if he would ſwallow the ground, and that ſhews his courage too, We ſay of a man that runs with ſpeed, he doth not feel the ground: The horſe is in ſuch extream haſt to be gone, and to be at the battle, that he runs, as if he neither felt nor left any earth under him. This interpretation is ſtrongly contended for, by learned Bochartus, in oppoſition to the former, and illuſtrated by many ancient teſtimonies concerning the fierceneſs and ſwiftneſs of the Horſe, which the Reader may conſult if he pleaſe. He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage.

Abſorbere terram dicitur phraſi Hebræa velociſſimè currere. Bold.

> Hence Note, In ſtrong and outragious paſſions, we think we can do impoſſibilities,

Even eat up the earth, and ſwallow the ground.

A verbo אמן credere aut fidelem eſſe.

Neither believeth he it is the ſound of the trumpet.] Beaſts have ſome kind of faith; they do ſomewhat which looks like believing. The Original word ſignifieth the proper work of faith.

But how can the horſe be ſaid, either to believe, or not to believe?

I ſhall give two interpretations of the words, in anſwer to this queſtion.

Firſt, thus: He believes not that it is the ſound of the Trumpet; that is, whereas it might be thought, that the ſound of the Trumpet ſhould terrifie him, he regards it no more than a man doth that which he doth not believe, he cares not for it, he is not at all troubled at it. Thus our Engliſh Tranſlation hath it; He regardeth not the noiſe of the trumpets.

Secondly, Thus: He believes not that it is the ſound of the Trumpet; that is, he hath ſo great a mind to the battle, that when the Trumpet ſounds indeed to the battle, he doubts it is not ſo, 'tis too good news to be true; he ſcarce believes his own ears; or, he deſireth the battle ſo much, that he believes the ſignal of it very little, and fears it is not ſo, but ſome falſe alarm. This is a good and probable interpretation, it being uſual among men (from whom in proportion to beaſts, eſpecially to gallant horſes, this affection may be transferred) hardly at firſt to believe or give credit to thoſe things which they extreamly deſire and wiſh, yea, long for. In this ſenſe it may well be ſaid of the Horſe, He believes not that it is the ſound of the trumpet.

Hence Note, That which is much deſired, is in ſome caſes hardly believed.

'Tis uſually ſaid, We eaſily believe that which we would or deſire to have; yet ſometimes we hardly believe that which we would have; that is, when we hear 'tis ſo, we are full of fears and doubts that the thing is not ſo, we are afraid that we ſhall not obtain ſo wiſhed and longed for an enjoyment; and do therefore not only queſtion the reports of others concerning it, as Jacob did the report of his other ſons concerning the life and high advancement of his ſon Joſeph in Egypt (Gen. 45. 26.) for as ſoon as he heard it, the Text ſaith, His heart fainted, for he believed them not, Now, not only do ſome (I ſay) in ſuch caſes hardly believe the reports of others) but even that which their own eyes behold. It is ſaid of the diſciples of Chriſt, when he appeared to them after his Reſurrection, and ſhewed them his hands and his feet (Luke 21. 41.) They believed not for joy; they were ſo glad of the thing, they could not believe their own eyes. In which ſenſe we are to underſtand that of Job, at the 24. verſe of the 29. Chapter; If I laughed on them, they believed it not. When the Angel told Abraham in the Tent (Gen. 18. 10.) I will certainly return to thee according to the time of life; and loe, Sarah thy wife ſhall have a ſon. Sarah over-hearing this good news, Laughed within her ſelf (verſ. 12.) Though it pleaſed her exceedingly, that ſhe ſhould have a ſon, yet ſhe laughed alſo in unbelief, and was therefore reproved (verſ. 15.) If ſhe had laught as Abraham did, at the day of Chriſt, who ſaw Chriſts day and rejoyced (John 8. 56.) that is, he laughed in faith, in aſſurance that it would come, ſhe had not been reproved; but Sarah laughed, as doubting, ſure this will never be; though might ſhe have had her wiſh, ſhe would of all things in the world, have deſired and wiſhed a ſon. Once more (Acts 12. 15.) when Peter was in priſon, and prayer made by the Church night and day, doubtleſs they prayed in faith for his delivery, yet when Peter was delivered, and knockt at the door, they ſaid to the Maid, who told them it was Peter, Thou art mad (ver. 15.) They could not believe it was ſo, while they heard it was ſo, and had been earneſtly praying it might be ſo. The valiant horſe deſires nothing more than an engagement in battle, but believes not it is the ſound of the trumpet.

Thus of the ſecond expoſition of theſe words, Neither believeth he that it is the ſound of the Trumpet. Yet ſome conceive, that though it be true, that generous and brave horſes are not only not affrighted at the ſound of the trumpet, but rather rejoyce (in their kind) at it, as is ſaid expreſly in the next verſe; yet it cannot be conveniently ſaid, that he hath ſo great a joy as to produce this diſ-belief: For ſo to rejoyce, as to be in a manner overcome with joy, and not to give credit to our eyes and ears, never happens, but as in extreamly great and extraordinary joys, ſo in unaccuſtomed and unexpected joys, which ſurely cannot well be affirmed of that joy which horſes are taken with at the ſound of a trumpet, ſignalizing a battle to enſue.

And therefore (becauſe it avoids this difficulty) I ſhall rather adhere to them, who render the words thus, Neither doth he ſtand ſtill (or keep his ground) when the trumpet ſoundeth. So Mr. Broughton renders expreſly; Neither ſtands he ſtill when the ſound of the Trumpet is heard. This interpretation ſuits beſt with the ſcope of the place; nor doth the force of the Hebrew Verb oppoſe it: for the Adjective which comes from the Participle of it, is often uſed to ſignifie firm, ſtable, ſure, durable; yea, and the Verb it ſelf is often taken in that ſenſe (Pſal. 78. 37.) They were not ſtedfaſt, or ſtood not faſt in his covenant, So (Deut. 28. 59.) the Lord threatned Plagues of long continuance, that is, ſtanding Plagues, or ſuch as ſhould hold long, and not ſtir from the place. Thus alſo it is ſaid (Exod. 17. 12.) The hands of Moſes were ſteady until the going down of the Sun. The ſame word doth elegantly ſignifie, both to believe and to be ſteady, or ſtand faſt; ſeeing it is faith or believing in God, which alone makes us ſteady or ſtand faſt, in all occaſions or temptations to the contrary; and therefore in this place we may moſt conveniently render, He ſtandeth not firm; he ſtands not ſtill, or keeps not his place at the ſound of the Trumpet, but is unquiet and in motion, as having an ardent deſire to be in the battle, as ſoon as ever he hears the Trumpet ſound. One of the ancient Poets expreſſeth this quality of a valiant horſe, almoſt in the ſame words, and altogether to the ſame ſenſe; He knows not how to keep his place; or, he cannot (as we ſay) for his heart, ſtand ſtill. So that as the eagerneſs of the horſe for the battle, even before the ſignal given, is ſet forth in thoſe words (verſe 21.) He paweth in the valley; and in the former part of this verſe, where 'tis ſaid, He ſwalloweth the ground with fierceneſs and rage; ſo the ſame height of ſpirit after the ſignal given, is further expreſſed in theſe words, thus tranſlated, He ſtandeth not ſtill (no ground will hold him, he will be gone if he can get head) when once he hears the ſound of the Trumpet.

Neq; conſiſtit firmus, cum ſonus tubæ editur. Jun. האמינ

Stare loco neſcit. Virg.

Hence Note, What we have much mind to do, we are glad of an opportunity to do it, and readily embrace it.

The Apoſtle ſaith of the old Patriarks (Heb. 11. 15.) Truly if they had been mindful of (that is, if they had had a mind to) that Country from whence they came out, they might have had oportunity to have returned. Now, as a man will not do that for which he hath an opportunity, when he hath no mind to it; ſo if a man hath a mind to do any thing, how ſoon doth he make uſe of the very firſt opportunity to do it. And doubtleſs it was a great trouble to the Philippians, who had a true deſire to ſhew their care of, and love to the Apoſtle Paul, that they lacked opportunity to ſhew it, and give a real proof of it (Phil. 4. 10) As opportunity is a gale to carry us on to action, ſo a willing mind is a gale to carry us to the improvement of any offered opportunity for action. Let us do good (ſaith the Apoſtle, Gal. 6. 10.) as we have opportunity. He that is ſlack to do good when he hath a fair gale of opportunity to it, declares plainly, that his mind is becalmed, and that he hath not the leaſt breath or gale of willingneſs in his mind to do good. It is our duty, not only to accept an opportunity to do good. when it falls right in our way but even to ſtep out of our way (ſo it be in a good way) to ſeek it. Davids enemies ſought occaſion, and ſo did Daniels (Chap. 6.) to do him a miſchief; and ſhall not we ſeek occaſions to ſhew mercy? &c. Let us (like the horſe in the Text) no ſooner hear the ſound of the Trumpet, a lawful call to any duty, for which we have alſo an open door, but (as he) rejoyce in it, ſtand ſtill no longer with a dull, ſhall we, ſhall we, in our mouths, but be gone, up and be doing.

Verſ. 25. He ſaith among the Trumpets, ha, ha, and he ſmelleth the battel afar off, the Thunder of the Captains and the ſhouting.

This verſe ſeems to give a reaſon of what was laſt ſaid in the former, eſpecially according to the latter Tranſlation of it. As if it had been ſaid, Therefore the generous horſe cannot ſtand ſtill, but is impatient of every moments delay, when he hears the Trumpet ſound, becauſe he is not only not aſtoniſhed at it, but rejoyceth, wiſhing for nothing more than the battle, of which he knows the ſounding of the Trumpet to be a ſignal.

He ſaith among the Trumpets, Ha, ha.] Some render theſe words, not barely as we, among the Trum[illegible] but thus; At the full ſound of the Trumpet; or, When [illegible]pet hath ſounded long and ſufficiently, then he ſaith, [illegible] ha. Reading the words thus, we may connect them with the latter part of the former verſe, Neither believeth he that it is the ſound of the Trumpet; that is, when the Trumpet begins to ſound, he doubts whether it be to the battle or no; but when the Trumpet ſounds long, when the ſufficiency of the Trumpet ſounds, or when it ſounds ſufficiently, ſo that it manifeſtly appears the battle is nigh, or at hand, then he ſaith, Ha, ha.

בדי שפר i.e. Quando tubarum clangor validus intenditur; vox בדי conſtat præpoſitione Beth & particula די quæ non eſt tantum adjectitia & Euphonica ſed copiam etiam ſignificat. Codurc.

That the word de in Bede is ſignificative, and imports ſufficiency, is the opinion of many interpreters, and that it is of the ſame ſenſe in this Text, as in that (Iſa. 40. 16.) Lebanon is not ſufficient to burn, nor the beaſts thereof ſufficient for a burnt-offering. Thus here, at the ſufficiency of the Trumpet, that is, when the Trumpet ſounds ſufficiently, abundantly, or clearly; or (as our old Engliſh Tranſlation hath it) when the trumpets make moſt noiſe, he ſaith, Ha, ha.

There are others of note, who judge that (די) de is only a ſyllabical addition of no ſignification, or adding nothing to the Prepoſition (ב) Be; and ſo render the words only thus: At the ſound of the trumpet; or as we, Among the trumpets, he ſaith, ha, ha. And that (די) De, is only expletive, not ſignificative, and ſo that word (בדי) Bede is no more than the Prepoſition (ב) Be, put alone, ſome would confirm by other Texts of Scripture, where it is conceived to be ſo uſed (Hab. 2. 13.) Behold, is it not of the Lord that the people ſhall labour (בדי אש) in the fire; and the people ſhall weary themſelves (בדיריק) for vanity? Theſe Words are found alſo (Jer. 51. 58.) in both which (ſaith a learned Author) that (די) De cannot ſignifie ſufficiency, both the ſenſe of the place ſhews, and almoſt all interpreters agree. And this alſo may be further confirmed by a like uſe of the ſame word, as it is put after כ Judg. 6. 5. and after מ Iſa. 66. 23. The Learned Reader conſulting the original, will eaſily obſerve (ſaith he) that in both thoſe places די hath no ſpecial ſignification.

Ad tubæ ſonitum. Trem. Inter buccinas. Pag.

Arnold. Boot. Animad. Sac. l. 3. c. 11.

Yet doubtleſs (conſidering that not one Iota or tittle in the Scripture is in vain) that additional word hath its uſe, and poſſibly is of more uſe than any have as yet well underſtood. For though it be granted, as Rabbi David ſaith in his Dictionary, that די in all thoſe places is paragogical; yet Paragoges may have more in them, than meerly the ornament of ſpeech. Our Tranſlators intimate as much (Hab. 2. 13.) where they do not render barely, in the fire, and for vanity, but in the very fire, and for very vanity. And therefore (with the good leave of that learned Author) I apprehend (with the Rabbin, whom he quotes, but likes not for this opinion) that in all places where this word is uſed, it hath a ſpecial force, declaring the greatneſs and continuance of the thing ſpoken of. And ſo in this place, we may take the meaning thus: As the generous horſe is always forward for the battle, ſo when the trumpet begins to ſound; but when the trumpet ſoundeth long (as the Lord ſpake to Moſes at the giving of the Law, Exod. 19. 13.) then the horſe (being fully aſſured that the battle will ſuddenly begin) is mightily affected with a kind of joy, which he expreſſeth as well and as fully as he can in his language, ſaying, Ha, ha, now 'tis as I would have it.

That this Interjection, ha, ha, imports joy and exultation, all agree; and it may note, not only that inward joy with which the horſe is affected at the ſound of the trumpet, but alſo that outward expreſſion which he makes of it by neighing, which may not improperly be called his ha, ha; the ſound which we hear in the air, when a horſe neigheth, ſymbolizing much with this Interjection, ha, ha, ſpoken by a man. And all men know (who know any thing of the qualities or cuſtoms of gallant horſes) that it is uſual with them to neigh when they are much pleaſed, and are upon a neer attainment of their deſire, or the injoyment of their pleaſures. Comparing the latter part of the former verſe, according to the ſecond expoſition of our Tranſlation, with this,

Emittit exultationis vocem. Aquin. Alacriter ſe ad pugnam parat. Scult. Ad lituos hilarem intrepidumq; tubarum proſpiciebat Equum. Statius l. 11 Theb.

> Obſerve, Aſſurance of what we would have, breeds extream joy and triumph in his ſpirit that would have it.

When the horſe finds it is the battle indeed, then he rejoyceth greatly. Men often break out into ſuch exclamatio[illegible]en having been long doubtful of a thing, and fearfu[illegible]t might iſſue, they at laſt ſee its iſſue anſwering the [illegible]moſt of their wiſhes and expectations (Pſal. 40. 15.) Let them (ſaith David) be deſolate for a reward of their ſhame, that ſay, Ah, ha, Ah, ha; that is, let them be rewarded with deſolation, for their ſhameful doings, in ſaying, Ah, ha, Ah, ha, becauſe they ſee me caſt down. To ſay, Ah, ha, at what is done, is as much as to ſay, it pleaſeth us well, it gives us high content. Thus alſo they cryed out (Pſal. 35. 21.) Ah, ha, our eyes have ſeen it. As the viſion we ſhall have in heaven, is faith perfected in the higheſt aſſurance imaginable; ſo in any caſe in this world, what of our deſires our eyes ſee, we take high content in. It is comfortable when we have ſome hope of what we deſire; but when we once ſee it, then we cry Ah, ha, if what our eyes ſee, be to us as theirs was to them in the ſame Pſalm, where they are again brought in ſaying, Ah, ha, ſo would we have it (ver. 25.) now it is as it ſhould be; we have been looking for ſuch a day a long time, but now it is come; Ah, ha, Ah, ha, So would we have it. And conſider it either in natural or ſpiritual things; there is a time as to ſpiritual things, when we do not believe the ſilver trumpet of the Goſpel ſounds mercy to us, that ſin is pardoned, that God is gracious; but when once there is a convincing ſufficiency of the trumpets ſound, when once our unbelief is fully overcome, and our hearts wound up to aſſurance, then the ſoul is in its triumph, and crys out (as the horſe, when he perceives the deſired battle approacheth) Ah, ha, Ah, ha.

This content of the horſe appears yet further in the next words.

He ſmells the battle afar off, the thunder of the Captains, and the ſhouting.

Theſe words hold out another matter, which doth much ſet forth and commend the honour of the horſe, and his deſire of the combat; He ſmells the battle. To be in battle pleaſeth him ſo well, that the ſmell of it is to him a delightful and pleaſant odour. The very ſtink of a Camp (as the Prophet calls it, Amos 4. 10.) is a ſweet perfume to his noſtrils. He ſmells a battle.

הריח Odorari, Olfacere.

He ſmelleth the battle afar off.] The Hebrew word ſignifieth properly to ſmell, or take the ſcent of any thing. And almoſt all interpreters, ancient and modern, retain that ſignification here; yet ſome there are who take ſmelling, in this place metaphorically, for perceiving, fore-apprehending, or preſaging. For the Hebrew (as ſome very well skilled in that language aſſure us) having no word which anſwers the Greek and Latine words (noted in the margin) ſignifying to perceive and feel, maketh uſe of this word in the Text for thoſe purpoſes. Thus 'tis ſaid (Judg. 16. 9.) When it (that is, the threed) toucheth (or as our old tranſlation hath it, feeleth) the fire. So (Iſa. 11. 3.) He (that is, Chriſt the Meſſias) ſhall be quick of underſtanding in the fear of the Lord. The Hebrew is, He ſhall ſmell or be quick-ſcented in the fear of the Lord. His very ſenſes ſhall be, as it were, toucht with or dipt in the fear of the Lord, that is, he ſhall religiouſly ſenſe or judge all things. The fear of the Lord ſhall be the rule or guide of all his ſenſes, as it follows in that verſe, He ſhall not judge after the ſight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears, that is, according to outward appearances and reports. Thus we may take the word in this paſſage; the horſe ſmelleth, that is, he perceiveth or apprehendeth the battle. Naturaliſts report wonders about the underſtand- of the horſes, and his ſagaciouſneſs in fore-ſeeing or preſaging battles: And this he doth, ſaith the Text,

Sentit aut præſentiſcit.

'Αισθάνεσθαι. Sentire.

Præſagiunt pugnam. Plin. l. 8. c. 42.

מרחוק

Afar off.] Our Tranſlation (with moſt others) take the Hebrew word as an Adverb of place; yet ſome conclude it to be an Adverb of time. So 'tis uſed (Iſa. 25. 1.) where the Prophet beſpeaks the Lord thus; Thy counſels of old (that is, thoſe counſels which thou, O Lord, haſt had a long time ago, or long before time) are faithfulneſs and truth. We alſo render the word, by long ago (1 King 19. 25.)

But it may be objected, Though the word in thoſe places notes time, yet it cannot do ſo in this place of Job; for in thoſe places alleadged, it ſignifies a vaſt ſpace of time before, whereas here in Job, if it denotes time, it is but a very ſhort ſpace of time, no more than the ſpace of time between giving the ſignal of a battle by ſound of trumpet, and the joyning of the battle. To this, the anſwer is; That this Hebrew word may be applied to a ſhort ſpace of time, as well as to a long one, ſeeing both the Greek and Latine words (ſet in the Margin) of the ſame ſignification, are uſed to note ſometimes, a very long, and ſometimes but a ſhort ſpace of time.

Πάλαι Olim.

Now according to this ſenſe of the word, this latter clauſe of the verſe is thus Tranſlated; He ſmelleth, or, perceiveth the battle is near at hand, or will ſhortly be: Which gives a very fair meaning of the Text, if that word, which all grant ſignifies time as well as place, doth alſo ſignifie a ſhort, as well as a long ſpace of time; for then the verſe runs clearly thus; At the full ſound of the trumpet, he ſaith, Ha, ha, ſmelling (or perceiving) that the battle is at hand. I leave this to the Readers judgment. Our own Tranſlation is an undoubted truth, both as to the ſignification of the word, and the experiences of the thing. A Gallant horſe trained up, and accuſtomed to War, when he ſees much ſtirring in an Army, and hears the trumpets ſounding, perceives a battle will be, though the armies be poſſibly a good diſtance of ground one from the other. Thus he ſmells the battle afar off, eſpecially when he hears that which follows in the cloſe of the verſe.

The thunder of the Captains and the ſhouting.

This is muſick to him. Here are two other antecedents of a battle, which the horſe takes notice of.

Firſt, The thunder of the Captains or Princes; that is, of the great Commanders and Generals of the field; who when they give out the word, they give it with a loud voice, they thunder it out. 'Tis no time to whiſper when armies are ready to joyn battle; and therefore Commanders lift up their voices like trumpets, or like thunder out of the clouds, that the Souldiers may hear them. And when Captains or Generals give exhortation to the Souldiers, they thunder out arguments to encourage them, and fire their ſpirits to the battle. The horſe doth as it were hear this thunder; oh! it pleaſes him when the military oration is made, and the Captain-general gives order for the battle.

Confuſus clamor exercitus præparantis ſe ad prælium. Aquin.

And the ſhouting.] What's that? Surely, the acclamation of the whole army: when the Captain, or Commander in chief, hath made his military Oration, then uſually the Souldiers ſhout and make an acclamation, in token of their willingneſs to fight, and readineſs for the battel: Thus the horſe ſmells the battel afar off, the thunder of the Captains and the ſhouting. The whole verſe may be read in this form; At the ſufficient ſound of the trumpet, and the exhortation of the Captains, together with the acclamations of the Souldiers, he ſaith, Ah, ha, (or rejoyceth) perceiving that the battel (though the armies be not yet joyned, but keep their ground at a diſtance) is at hand, or will ſuddenly be.

Having opened this whole context concerning the horſe, and given ſeveral obſervations from the parts of it; I ſhall for the cloſe of all ſhew how aptly this deſcription of the horſe repreſents, or is applicable unto two very different ſorts of men.

Firſt, The Horſe, as here deſcribed, is the embleme of a bold and hardned ſinner. The Spirit of God ſpeaks this expreſly (Jer. 8. 6.) I harkened, and heard (ſaith the Lord) but they ſpake not aright, no man repented him of his wickedneſs, ſaying, what have I done; every one turned to his courſe (what courſe? his ſinful courſe, how?) as the horſe ruſheth into the battle; as the horſe mocks at fear, and will not turn back from the ſword; As the horſe will not be affrighted at the ratling of the quiver, nor at the ſhaking of the ſpear; ſo hardned ſinners ruſh on, though you tell them there's deadly danger in it, and that the Sword of the Word points directly at them, and will cut them off: Yea, they will not turn back, though the Lord ſhould brandiſh a flaming ſword, as he did againſt Adam, to keep him from the tree of life, ſo to keep them from the tree of death; they, will for all this, ruſh on as the horſe to the battle. The wicked man is thus deſcribed in one place of this book of Job (Chap. 15. 25, 26.) where Eliphaz ſaith of him, He ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God (here's war with God) and ſtrengthens himſelf againſt the Almighty (that is, draws all his forces together; and what then? juſt as the horſe in the Text) He runs upon the thick boſſes of his buckler, even upon his neck. A wicked man, like the horſe, runs upon God, even upon the thick boſſes of his buckler. The Lord is there repreſented, by Eliphaz, as holding out a buckler againſt the ſinner; what's that? the Law, his Word of command, that's Gods buckler; and this buckler hath thick boſſes and ſharp points, eſpecially, in the middle, a great boſs with a pike, ſuch are all divine threatnings, yet the ſinner runs, as as a horſe, upon theſe thick boſſes of Gods buckler, his ſevereſt threatnings. Thus the horſe, and a bold ſinner are alike.

Secondly, The horſe is alſo the embleme of a bold Saint, or of a faithful ſervant of God. Such, ſpecially, were all the holy Martyrs; A chief among the Ancients ſaith expreſly, that in the Horſe, the Martyr may be ſeen; whom none account valiant but God himſelf, and they who are born of God. I may parallel a holy Martyr and the Horſe, in every particular mentioned in this context. Firſt, As the horſe is ſaid to receive his ſtrength from God (haſt thou given ſtrength to the horſe?) ſo it was with God who gave ſtrength to the Martyrs, to ſtand it out in the day of battle. Secondly, As God gives courage to the horſe, ſo it was God that gave courage to the Martyrs; and ſuch courage he hath ſometimes given, as hath made poor weak women as ſtrong and couragious, as the horſe in the Text: Perſecuters could not make the old Martyrs run like Graſhoppers; they have even mocked at fear, and would not turn back from the face of the ſword drawn out againſt them; no ratling of the quiver, nor claſhing of weapons could terrifie them; they have not been affrighted with Lions, Bears, Tygers ready to devour them; they have not been affrighted with the fiery furnace, nor with the moſt exquiſite torments that the wit or malice of man could invent. Jeſus Chriſt having inſtructed the Church his Spouſe (Cant. 1. 8.) what to do, he at the 9. verſe commends the Church in two things. Firſt, For her courage. Secondly, For her beauty. For her courage firſt, at the 9. verſe, and in that reſpect he compares her to a Company of horſes in Pharaoh's Chariots. But why doth he compare the Church to a Company of horſes in Pharaohs Chariots? I anſwer, it is well known, that the Kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh; and Egypt was very famous for horſes of war: therefore Chriſt makes this compariſon, to ſhew, that the Church being directed to keep cloſe to the ſhepherds tents, muſt expect that the world or the falſe Church, would vex and perſecute her; but ſaith Chriſt, my ſpouſe is like a company of horſes in Pharaohs Chariots, that is, ſhe will be as valiant in this war, in ſtanding for the truth againſt all falſe doctrine and idolatrous worſhip, as the moſt valiant horſes that ever were in Egypt, or in any part of the world have been in a day of battle. Experience (we know) hath made this good; for the true Spouſe of Chriſt, though poor, contemptible and weak, though women and even but children, though helpleſs ſheep and tender lambs, yet in battels of ſuffering for Chriſt, they have become as mighty as the mightieſt war-horſes, they have withſtood all the powers of the world undauntedly, and made them admire their courage, yea vexed and needed them with courage. Who but the Lord could arm his people with ſpiritual weapons, with power and courage, to overcome all their enemies, or to over-overcome them, as the word is (Rom. 8. 37.) which we render, more than conquerors; over what? over ſword, and nakedneſs, and perils, and danger, and death; we more then overcome all theſe (ſaith the Apoſtle there) though we are killed all the day long, and counted as ſheep for the ſlaughter, as he ſpeaks at the 36. verſe. And hence the Prophet ſaid (Zach. 10. 3, 5.) that though the Church, there called, the houſe of Judah, be weak like a flock, yet the Lord makes them as his goodly horſe in the battel. Our late Annotators give the ſenſe of the Prophet in thoſe words expreſly thus. Now that the Lord hath turned his favourable countenance towards his people, he hath endowed them with valour and ſtrength; ſo that of ſheep they are become a great war-horſe, with which the Lord will overcome and trample down his enemies; which may in part be underſtood of the Maccabees victory, but moſt perfectly of the whole Churches victories over the world and the devil. This victory the Church obtains over the devil by reſiſting, and over the world by ſuffering.

S. Auſtin.

Thus far of the valiant horſe. The Lords diſcourſe proceeds from this noble beaſt of the earth, to thoſe noble birds of the air, the Hawk and the Eagle.

VERS. 26, 27, 28, 29.

Doth the Hawk flie by thy wiſdom, and ſtretch out her wings towards the South?

Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command, and make her neſt on high?

She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the ſtrong place.

From thence ſhe ſéeketh the prey, and her eyes behold a far off.

Her young ones alſo ſuck up blood: and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe.

IN this Context the Lord paſſeth from the Beaſts of the Earth, to give a further demonſtration of his Power and Wiſdom appearing in the Fowls of Air; and here we have two inſtances, both in birds of prey, The Hawk, and the Eagle.

Job is firſt queſtioned about the Hawk in the 26th verſe, in which the Hawk is ſet forth two ways: Firſt, In general, by her flying, Doth the Hawk fly by thy wiſdom? Secondly, in ſpecial, by the courſe of her flight, and ſtretch forth her wings toward the South?

Secondly, Job is queſtioned about the Eagle, concerning which (Queen among birds) ſix things are here expreſly ſet forth, or diſtinctly expreſſed.

Firſt, Her high flying or mounting upwards, in the former part of the 27. verſe, Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command?

Secondly, Her high neſting or making her neſt on high, in the latter part of the ſame verſe; doth ſhe, at thy command, make her neſt on high?

Thirdly, She is here deſcribed by the choiſe of her abode, dwelling or habitation (ver. 28.) ſhe dwelleth and abideth on the rock, on the crag of the rock, and in the ſtrong place.

Fourthly, We have here the ſharpneſs of the Eagles appetite, and her quick endeavour to get food for the ſatisfying of it, in the former part of the 29. verſe. When ſhe is abiding upon the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and in her ſtrong place, from thence ſhe ſeeks her prey; ſhe is not idle there.

Fifthly, She is deſcribed by the ſharpneſs of her ſight, in the latter part of the 29. verſe, her eyes behold afar off. As if the Lord had ſaid, though ſhe dwells thus high upon the rock, and the crag of the rock, yet this doth not hinder her in the purſuit of her prey, for her eyes behold afar off.

Sixthly and Laſtly, We have here the matter, or nature of her own food and diet, together with the food of her young ones. We have here (as I may ſay) a Bill of the Eagles fare (ver. 30.) it is blood, and the fleſh of the ſlain, Her young ones ſuck up blood; and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe: That's her chief food and diet, the fleſh and blood of the ſlain. Theſe are the particulars which the ſpirit of God layeth down in the deſcriptions, both of the Hawk and Eagle.

From the whole I ſhall give only this general note, as to the Lords purpoſe in ſpeaking of theſe birds of prey, the Hawk and the Eagle, rather than of the Dove, or of any other fowl of a more harmleſs nature. I ſay, the Lord doth this to ſhew, that ſeeing his providence diſpoſeth of, and watcheth over theſe fowls of the air, which are ſo able to ſhift for themſelves, and are in their kind ſo little uſeful to man; then ſurely, he will not neglect man, nor any creature that is of neceſſary uſe to man.

Verſe 26. Doth the Hawk flie by thy wiſdom?

The word rendred Hawk comes from a root which ſignifies a feather or plume of feathers; becauſe, feathers are the inſtruments by which the Hawk flyeth. The ſame word ſignifies alſo to fly; the Hawk being a fowl of ſuch an excellent flight, may well be expreſt by a word which properly ſignifies flying.

The Hawk is numbred among the unclean birds in the Law of Moſes, which the Jews might not eat of (Levit. 11. 16. Deut. 14. 15.) The Hawk in its kind, or all kinds of the Hawk, are excepted out of their food, or not admitted at their table. Thoſe creatures which were uſeful to get man ſome kind of food, might not then be at all the food of man, in the Jewiſh Nation.

Nor will it be unprofitable, upon this occaſion, to take notice how the Lord then ſet bounds and limits to the appetite of man, which is ſo apt to exceed: He forbad ſeveral creatures to the Jews, for ſome of which, poſſibly, we can give no reaſon but his Soveraignty, he would have it ſo; and others were forbidden, becauſe poſſibly, feeding upon them was not ſo wholeſom for the body of man; and others God did except from the table of the Iſraelites, becauſe of ſome qualities which he did not like in them; and for that reaſon it is conceived the Hawk was excepted. The Jews might not feed upon the Hawk, becauſe ſhe is a bird of prey, and lives by ravening and killing other birds; ſuch was the law among the Jews: and though that law be now taken away, as the viſion ſhewed Peter (Act. 10. 15.) yet there are few that make Hawks their meat, or eat of them.

נץ accipiter à radice נצה quod plumam vel pennam ſignificat, quaſi nomen habeat in Hebr. à volando.

Dicitur Latinè accipiter ab accipiendo; propter inſitam & inſatiabilem rapacitatem. Accipiter avis regia, quæ plus animo quam ungulis eſt armata, & quod in quantitate corporis natura denegat, hoc ei in virtute & audacia animi rependit. Iſidor. l. 12.

The word by which the Hawk is expreſt in the Latine, ſignifies to take ~~or catch~~, whereby her ravening nature is denoted, becauſe ſhe catches and ſnatches all ſhe can for her living. Some of the Ancients tell us, that the Hawk is a very princely bird, who though ſhe hath not much in bulk of body, yet hath much in the generoſity of her mind, and is therefore joyned here with the Eagle, as if this were the Princeſs, and the Queen of birds. And ſome report, that there is no other among all the fowls of the air, that dares contend with the Eagle, but the Hawk. Ariſtotle reckons up ten ſorts of Hawks, and Pliny ſixteen: But I ſhall leave that diſcourſe to Falconers. It is enough for the opening of this Scripture, to intimate ſomewhat in general of the Hawk.

Noctua à cæteris avibus infeſtata auxiliatur accipiter, & bellum partitur. Plin. l. 10. c. 17.

Doth the Hawk flie.] The Hawk is deſcribed as flying. Some creatures are for going, ſome for running, but the excellency of the Hawk is in flying: And flying here is not to be taken in a general ſenſe, as oppoſed to running or going, for ſo it is common to all the birds of the air; there's not the leaſt, not any of the winged kind, but can fly little or much: But when he ſaith, Doth the Hawk fly? flying is to be underſtood ſpecially, of ſwift flying, and of long continued flying. The Hawk flies with wonderful ſwiftneſs. Hence among the Egyptians, the Hawk was a Hieroglyphick of the winds. And as the Hawk moves with wonderful ſwiftneſs, ſo with great perſeverance. Naturaliſts tell us, and it is the experience of many, that the Hawk will abide upon the wing, two, three, yea, four hours together in the purſute of, or in waiting for her prey; and hence ſome of the Ancients have made the flying of the Hawk, or the Hawk in his flying, an emblem of perſeverance. The Hawk moves in the air, as if he abode immoveably there.

Falco ſacer diutiſſimè volat, nec deſerit ad duarum triumvè, aut quatuor horarum ſpatium, ac ſi in aere immotus conſiſteret. Albert.

Doth the Hawk fly by thy wiſdom, or underſtanding?] Thou ſeeſt how perſeveringly the Hawk flies, and how cunningly or wiſely, to her beſt advantage: Doth the Hawk fly thus by thy wiſdom, or haſt thou taught the Hawk to fly thus? haſt thou inſtructed the Hawk to make this uſe of her wings? no, the Hawk flyeth by my wiſdom, I have given her this ſtrength, and taught her this skill, for God takes it unto himſelf; it is by my wiſdom and inſtruction that the Hawk flyeth.

The Vulgar Latine reads thus, Doth the Hawk feather her ſelf, or get her feathers by thy wiſdom? Our Tranſlation runs to the uſe of her feathers, this to the growth of her feathers; as if it had been ſaid, Doth the Hawk get her feathers by thy wiſdom, or haſt thou ſet her feathers ſo exactly in her wings? This reading may be taken two ways. Firſt, Doſt thou make the Hawks feathers grow at firſt, doth thou plant thoſe feathers in her wings? ſurely, no. Secondly, Doſt thou renew the Hawks feathers? When the Hawk hath mued or caſt her feathers (as they who are acquainted with Hawks know their natural cuſtom is) doſt thou cauſe them to grow again? Surely, no, thou didſt neither at firſt plant her wings with feathers, nor when ſhe hath caſt her feathers, doſt thou cauſe thoſe feathers to renew; that's a good reading: But I ſhall keep to our own. Doth the Hawk fly by thy wiſdom?

Numquid per ſapientiam tuam plumeſcit accipiter. Vulg.

Hence note; Firſt, The Lord hath given man ſome creatures more to ſerve his pleaſure, than his neceſſities.

Whatever ſervice the Hawk doth to man in catching the prey, the Partridge, or Pheſant, or other fowl, man might ſerve himſelf of them (as many do) ſome other and cheaper way, and not by Hawking. The Moraliſts could ſay (ſpeaking of ſuch like creatures) Man was loved by the ſupream Maker of all things, even to his delight and content. God hath given ſuch ſwift wings to the Hawk, not only to ſet forth his own power, but for mans pleaſure. Hawks are for the ſport and delight of Princes and great men; and ſeeing God hath made ſome creatures for the delight, more than for the neceſſity, for the pleaſure, more than for the need of man; O how ſhould man take heed of diſpleaſing God! Doth the great God of heaven and earth provide Hawks for mans pleaſure, and ſhall man take no care to pleaſe God! 'Tis lamentable to conſider, how moſt men diſpleaſe God by oaths and profanations of his Name, while they Uſq; ad delicias hominis à ſupremo conditore amantur. Senec.

they are taking that kind of pleaſure. And I may ſay, there is no kind of ſport which the indulgence of God hath allowed man, wherein God is more provoked and diſhonoured, than in this: What ſwearing, what curſing, is there in following this Game; If Hawks and Spaniels pleaſe not men in the purſuit of their pleaſures, how is the Name of God rent and torn, to his high diſpleaſure! How vain is that man, who takes pleaſure in ſin, or who ſins in taking his pleaſure! He makes his ſhort pleaſure-time a ſeed-time (without repentance) of his everlaſting pains and ſorrows.

Secondly, Whereas the queſtion is put, Doth the Hawk flie by thy wiſdom?

Note; It is by the wiſdom and teaching of God that the Hawk flieth.

Not only hath the Lord put the general power of flying into the Hawk, as into other Birds; but that ſpecial Excellency to fly ſo ſwiftly and ſtrongly, ſo cunningly and artificially. 'Tis not ſo much the Faulconer, who teacheth the Hawk, as God; then let us admire the wiſdom of God in the properties of every Creature. It muſt be confeſſed, that Hawks do ſtrange things; but whence is it? it is of God. Doth the Hawk fly by thy wiſdom? canſt thou manage the Hawk, or bring her to thy Lure? canſt thou make her go off after her prey? canſt thou reclaim her at thy pleaſure? Thou canſt not; only God can. And hence we may infer, If the flying of the Hawk be from the wiſdom of God, then ſee the wiſdom of God in the goings and doings of man. The way of man (ſaith the Prophet, Jer. 10. 23.) is not in himſelf, it is not in him that walketh to direct his ſteps; the wiſdom of the Lord doth it. If the wiſdom of the Lord orders the flying of a Bird in the Air, ſurely then 'tis the wiſdom of the Lord which manageth the motions of men on earth; he orders both the courſe and diſcourſe of man: when he pleaſeth he can take wiſdom from the wiſeſt men, and make even Judges fools. Judges are ſuppoſed and accounted the wiſeſt among men, yet the Lord can befool them ſo, that they ſhall not be able to ſee the things that belong either to their own peace, or the peace of others. The Lord, who gives wiſdom to beaſts and birds, can take it from men. Doth the Hawk fly by thy wiſdom? That's the general; then follows a ſpecial inſtance concerning the courſe of the Hawk:

And ſtretch (or ſpread) her wings towards the South.

The word rendred South, ſignifies the right hand. The South is ſo called, becauſe when a man turns his face to the Eaſt, or Sun-riſing, then the South is on his right hand.

But why is the Hawk ſaid to ſtretch forth her wings to the South? we may expound it two ways:

First, Thus: She ſtretcheth her wings to the South, when ſhe is upon the change of her feathers; of which a touch was given before. As if the Lord had ſaid, When the time cometh that the Hawk caſts her feathers, doth ſhe by thy wiſdom (for that we are to take in) ſtretch her wings towards the South, (as Naturaliſts tell us ſhe doth) for the cheriſhing of her new feathers? The South-wind being a warm wind, opens the pores of the body, and then the old feathers eaſily fall off, and the new ones come on; therefore when the Hawk loſeth her feathers, ſhe ſtretches out her wings towards the South. And as the wild unmanaged Hawks, who are at their own liberty, turn themſelves to the South at ſuch times, ſo the places where Faulconers keep Hawks to train them for ſervice, are built towards the South, that the warmth of the Sun may help the growth of their feathers.

תימן Auſter, meridies, à radice ימן dexter, dextra, quaſi plaga dextera, quia verſis ad orientom, ad dextram partem eſt meridies. Num edoctus à te accipiter, novis plumis, abjectarum veterum loco, receptis, alas Auſtro verſus calore ſolis, vegetandas expandit. Bez. Ælian. l. 14. c. 12. Accipiter tempore mutationis pennarum expandit alas ſuas ad Auſtrum, qui eſt ventus calidus: ut apertis poris veteres pennæ decidant, & novæ renaſcantur. Aquin.

'Tis not unworthy our remembrance, which ſome teach Allegorically from this natural inſtinct of the Hawk, helping her ſelf more eaſily, both to caſt and recover her feathers. A ſinner in his natural ſtate, is ſo feathered as he comes from the old Adam, that he had need to caſt the old, and get new ones. Now if the ſinner would do thus, or when he doth thus, he is taught by the wiſdom of God (not by the wiſdom of the fleſh) to ſtretch himſelf towards the South; that is, towards the pleaſant wind, and warm Sun of the Spirit of God, by which his old feathers of ſin drop off, and thoſe new feathers of grace and holineſs, of faith and repentance, of meekneſs and humility, of patience and ſelf-denial come on. Thus man is feathered by the ſecond Adam, when he hath caſt thoſe of the firſt; He turns himſelf to the South, he applieth himſelf to Jeſus Chriſt, the Sun of Righteouſneſs, whoſe bleſſed warmth fetcheth off his old black feathers, and cloaths him with new and beautiful ones. The Lord who teacheth the Hawk to ſtretch her wings to the South, muſt teach us to ſtretch our ſelves to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that our old feathers may fall away, and that we may be renewed by his Spirit.

Secondly, There is another account given about the Hawks ſtretching her wings to the South; for not only when the Hawk renews her feathers, doth ſhe return to the South; but wild Hawks that are at liberty, living in colder Climates, uſe in Winter to change their quarters, and turn to the South, that is, to thoſe Coaſts which are more favoured by the Sun, as they who write the nature of Beaſts and Birds make report. All kind of Hawks are tender, and cannot well abide the Winter cold, but get into the Sun, and ſometimes duſt themſelves in the Sand, when heated by the Sun, as in very hot ſeaſons they delight to bathe themſelves in water. It is ſaid, that the Egyptians uſed of old to picture, or repreſent the Sun in the ſhape of a Hawk: Firſt, becauſe the Hawk is a great lover of the Sun: Secondly, becauſe of the lively heat and ſpiritfulneſs of the Hawk, like that of the Sun; Thirdly, becauſe of the longevity of the Hawk (the Hawk is a long-lived Creature.) Fourthly, becauſe of the quick-ſightedneſs of the Hawk, whence they called the Hawk All-eye. And laſtly, becauſe of the ſwiftneſs of the Hawk. The Hawk flies with ſuch a ſpeed, as if he did emulate, or would imitate the Sun. The Hawk being thus like the Sun, and ſuch a lover of the Sun, they ſhadowed the Sun by the figure of a Hawk; all which may give us ſome intimation of the ground of what is here ſaid, That ſhe ſtretcheth her wings towards the South.

In auſtralem plagam avolat hiberno tempore. Plin. lib. 10. c. 8. Geſner. de avibus. Arenis etiam ſole caleſcentibus accipitrem gaudere accepi, atque in illas ſe mergere. Codurc. Accipiter dictus παντόφθαλμος quaſi omnoculus. Bold.

Hence note; God hath given Irrational Creatures a knowledge of what is moſt convenient for their own preſervation.

Why doth the Hawk ſpread forth her wings to the South? ſhe finds it beſt for her, and therefore doth (Jer. 8. 7.) The Stork in the Heaven, and the Crane, and the Swallow know the time of their coming. Whither? ſurely to ſome warmer Climate, when the weather is cold and offenſive to them in the place where they are; and when the heat returns to the Coaſts from whence they came, thither they return again; They know the time of their coming, they know when 'tis good for them to be in one Country, and when in another. And is not this a rebuke (as the Prophet there applieth it) unto a man, who many times knows not what's good for himſelf, knows not the Judgment of the Lord; that is, what God would have him to do, or what courſe to take in ſuch a time and ſeaſon, or under ſuch a Diſpenſation of Providence, knows not (as I may ſay) Winter and Summer, heat and cold, and ſo is not ſo wiſe as the Fowls of the Air generally are, or as the Hawk in particular is here ſaid to be, Who ſtretcheth her wings to the South. All the Children of men have, and the Children of God know they have a South to ſtretch their wings unto; that is, the goodneſs and power of God, as the Pſalmiſt ſpake, Under the ſhadow of thy wings ſhall be my refuge, till theſe calamities be overpaſt. I will ſtretch my ſelf to the South, to the love and favour of God; 'tis beſt for all men to ſtretch their wings toward thoſe wings of God in an evil day. All ſhould do as the Lord gives the invitation (Iſa. 26. 20.) Come my people, enter thou into thy Chambers, and ſhut the doors about thee; hide thy ſelf, as it were, for a little moment, until the indignation be overpaſt. Thus the Lord directs his people to ſtretch themſelves to the South, when 'tis cold and hard weather abroad in the world; and the Creatures ſpoken of by the Prophet, as well as the Hawk in the Text, will riſe up in judgment againſt us, if we ſtretch not our wings to the South, when we feel the Northern cold, and Winter-froſt taking hold of us.

I ſhall paſs from this part of the Verſe concerning the Hawk, when I have only minded the Reader, that ſome have found a two-fold reſemblance in the Hawk.

Firſt,

First, They reſemble the Devil and evil Spirits, to the Hawk, becauſe of their devouring nature. The old Poet ſaid, We hate the Hawk, becauſe ſhe is always in arms. And ſo is the Devil, he is always in arms, and at war with the Church of God, and with the ſouls of men; and we ought always to be in arms againſt the Devil, yea, to take to our ſelves the whole Armour of God, ſpoken of (Eph. 6.) to reſiſt him, and defend our ſelves.

Odimus accipitrem quia ſemper vivit in armis. Ovid.

Secondly, The Hawk is like wicked men, eſpecially in three things:

Firſt, For their ravenous nature, they love to deſtroy and live upon the ſpoil of others (Iſa. 33.1.)

Secondly, They are like the Hawk, preying moſtly upon thoſe that are moſt Innocent. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, The wicked devours the man that is more righteous than he. The Hawk purſues the Dove, and poor Partridge, harmleſs Creatures.

Thirdly, The Hawk is high priz'd when alive, but when dead, caſt out upon the dunghil, no man regarding her. He that took great delight in his Hawk while alive, will not call for it to his Table when dead. Thus wicked men may be in great eſteem while they live, but when once dead, they are as thrown upon the dunghil, their memorial rots, and is unſavoury. So much for the 26th verſe, wherein the Spirit of God calls Job to conſider the nature of the Hawk at any time flying, and ſometimes turning her flight to the South. And now the queſtion paſſeth from the Prince of Birds, to the Queen of Birds.

Verſ. 27. Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command, and make her Neſt on high?

The Eagle is a King or Queen, chief among the Fowls of the Air, as the Lyon is among the Beaſts of the Earth; and therefore the great King of Babylon is ſhadowed by a great Eagle with great wings (Ezek. 17.3.) And the Romans, who Lorded it long over the world, bare the Eagle in their Enſign.

The Hebrew word rendred Eagle, hath a double derivation. According to the firſt, it ſignifies Behold. The Eagle is ſo expreſt, becauſe ſhe hath (as the Hiſtorian deſcribes her) not only a quick and clear, but a ſtrong ſight, able to look full upon the Sun ſhining in its ſtrength, as if the name of the Eagle in Engliſh, were a Looker; the Eagle can look the Sun in the face. But according to a ſecond derivation given by Grammarians, it ſignifies ſtrait, or right forth. And the Eagle is ſo called, becauſe ſhe makes a direct courſe, as it were by a ſtrait line, in purſuit of her prey. Doth the Eagle נשר cum ſex punctis, aquila; ſic dicta, vel quod recto obtutu ſolem aſpiciat; & tunc congruentiam habet cum verbo שור vel quod volatum recta in prædam dirigat & tunc communicat cum verbo ישר Plin. l. 10. c. 3. & l. 39. c. 6.

Mount up?] The word in the Hebrew, ſignifies to get high, very high, extream high, and is therefore uſed in the Noun, to ſet forth the highneſs of God (Job 11. 8. Pſal. 113. 6. Iſa. 5. 16. Iſa. 52. 13.) It notes alſo the highneſs of Heaven (Iſa. 55. 9. Pſal. 103. 11.) which is called the Throne of God, and the Habitation of his Holineſs, and of his Glory. 'Tis uſed alſo to denote the height of a proud mans ſpirit, which would fain riſe up to the height of Heaven, and be like to the moſt High, yea, higher than the moſt High (1 Sam. 2. 3. Pſal. 131. 1. Iſa. 2. 11. Ezek. 16. 15.) In all theſe places, and many more, the word is applied to the highneſs of a proud mans ſpirit, which though it be indeed the loweſt and baſeſt thing in the world, yet it puts man upon high thoughts of himſelf, and upon high deſigns for himſelf, he would be mounting like the Eagle. Doth the Eagle

נבה Sublimis, elatus fuit, eminuit, per metaphoram ſupervivit.

Mount up?] The Eagles flight, or mount, exceeds the Hawks, or any other of the winged Train, in three things:

Firſt, In the ſwiftneſs of it. The Eagle hath great and long wings (Ezek. 17. 3.) and ſhe can make great haſt with them; therefore Solomon calling upon us, not to ſet our eyes upon riches, gives the reaſon of his counſel (Prov. 23. 5.) For riches certainly make themſelves wings, they fly away as an Eagle towards Heaven; that is, they are ſuddenly gone, and will not return at thy call. The Eagle will not come to the Lure, like the Hawk. To fly away as an Eagle, notes two things concerning riches; Firſt, That they will fly away ſwiftly, ſpeedily, they are ſoon gone; ſuch is the Eagles flight. Secondly, That they (often) fly away irrecoverably, there's no recalling them. The Scripture often expreſſeth the more than ordinary ſwiftneſs of men, by the ſwiftneſs of the Eagle. David lamenting the death of Saul and Jonathan, gives them this character (2 Sam. 1. 23.) They were ſtronger than Lyons, and ſwifter than Eagles; that is, they were exceeding ſwift. Our adverſaries were ſwifter than the Eagles, ſaid the poor captivated Church, when the Aſſyrian came in againſt them (Lam. 4. 19.) Read alſo Deut. 28. 49. Hoſ. 8. 1. Hab. 1. 8. Cicero the Orator, in his ſecond Book of Divination, tells us, that when one was to run a Race, reported to an Interpreter, that he dreamed he was turned into an Eagle; the Interpreter preſently anſwered, Then you ſhall overcome, or get the Maſtery: For the Eagle is the ſtrongeſt and ſwifteſt of all flying fowls.

Viciſti; iſta enim ave volat nulla vehementior. Cicer. l. 2. de divin.

Secondly, The Eagle exceeds all, as in ſwiftneſs, ſo in the uprightneſs of her flying: She flies right up; that's it which the Text takes notice of, She mounteth up; ſhe mounts up like an Arrow out of a Bow, whereas other Fowls, when they fly high, they do it obliquely, or ſidelong, by gyration, or fetching a compaſs; but the Eagle aſcends directly, not (as I may ſay) by winding ſtairs, but in a right line.

Non obliquo tramite ut cæteræ aves vel per gyrum ut accipiter, ſed recto ſurſum fertur. Ælian. lib. 14. c. 10. Aquila aerem volatu ſuperat, & ſublimius evadit. Oppian. Aquila in nubibus.

Thirdly, As the ſwiftneſs and uprightneſs of the Eagles motion, ſo the highneſs of it is wonderful. The Eagle mounts till ſhe is quite out of ſight; no bodily Creature can reach the Eagles altitude. One of the Ancients ſaith, The Eagle ſoars above the Air (he means, I ſuppoſe the lower Region of the Air) as if ſhe would viſit the ſtarry Heavens: And hence it is ſaid proverbially of any thing which we cannot eaſily reach or come at, 'Tis an Eagle in the Clouds. Her common attribute or Epithete is, The high-flying Eagle.

If it be queſtioned, why doth the Eagle mount up ſo high? theſe two reaſons may be given of it:

Firſt, That ſhe may come down, or ſtoop with greater force upon her prey; and that makes the Eagle ſo formidable to all the fowls of the Air. And hence the Poets call her a Thunder-bringer, becauſe ſhe mounts up on purpoſe to that amazing height, that ſhe may come down upon her prey more forcibly, even like a Thunder-bolt. And thus proud men deſire to get on high, that they may more eaſily make a prey of, and cruſh (as the Eagle doth) thoſe that are below them.

Aquila κεραυνοφόρος à Poetis dictus.

Secondly, The Eagle mounts thus high to pleaſe her ſelf, 'tis ſutable to her ſpirit. Every one would be in action, as he is in diſpoſition. The Eagle hath a high ſpirit, and ſhe muſt fly high, and at high things. The Eagle will not catch flies; ſhe ſcorns that game. Doth the Eagle mount up

At thy command?] The Hebrew is, At thy mouth; ſo the word is rendred in ſeveral other Scriptures (Numb. 13. 3.) And Moſes by the commandment of the Lord ſent them from the Wilderneſs of Paran; that is, he ſent the men that were to ſearch the Land; The Hebrew is, Moſes by the mouth of the Lord ſent them to ſearch the Land. Again (2 Kings 24. 3.) Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his ſight, for the ſins of Manaſſeh. As if it had been ſaid, When the Enemy made Inrodes upon the Children of Iſrael and Judah, how came this to paſs? Surely at the command of the Lord, or at the mouth of the Lord, came this upon Judah. It is the word in the Text; Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command? or, at thy mouth? One would think, that it is only the Eagles nature to mount up; there is ſomewhat in that, but that's not all, it is at the Lords mouth, at his command, and that we are ſpecially to take notice of here. What means this diſcourſe about the Hawk and Eagle, but to make us mount up our hearts to God, and acknowledge him in the motion of every Creature? It is at Gods mouth that the Eagle mounts up; but what's the command that the Eagle receives from God? Doth not the Eagle mount up by a natural inſtinct, or according to the Law of Nature planted in her? I anſwer, ſhe doth. Yet becauſe that natural inſtinct of the Eagle is of God, therefore we are to look upon the Eagle mounting up, as by a ſpecial order and command of God. And thus we are to underſtand the motion of all the Creatures, as conſequential of a command given out by God (Pſal. 148. 8.) Fire and hail, ſnow and vapour, ſtormy wind, fulfilling his word, or his command. Though there be a natural cauſe of the Creatures motion, of the motion of the wind, of the vapour, of the ſnow and hail, yet we muſt not ſtop at the natural cauſes, and look no farther, neither rain nor ſnow fall, nor winds blow, but at the command of the Lord: Nor doth the Eagle mount up at the bidding or teaching of man, but at the command of God, acting her natural inſtinct in doing ſo. Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command?

Facit hoc aquila naturali inſtinctu. Omnis autem naturalis curſus rerum, eſt quædam motio creaturæ ad præceptum Dei. Aquin. Dediſtine hanc naturam aquilæ ut attollat ſe in altum? Vatabl.

Hence note; The ſpecial motions of the Creature are of God.

Mans mouth or command, cannot make any Creature ſtir foot or wing. Who can make the Eagle mount, the wind blow, or the rain fall beſides God?

Secondly, As to the manner of this motion, its a mounting motion.

Note; The motion of the Creature upward, hath much of the command of God in it.

Some have (I know) mounting motions at the command of the Devil (the Lord hath the command of them, though they are not commanded by him) that is, the proud imaginations, the lofty thoughts of man, theſe mounting motions, are not at the command, but againſt the command of the Lord; the Lord ſuffers them, but they are from Satan, he puffs men up, he blows them up with pride. But both the natural mountings of the ſenſitive Creatures, and the gracious mountings of the new Creature on high, are by the command of God. True believers have loweſt or lowlieſt ſpirits, yet higheſt and nobleſt aims, not grovelling on, nor bowing to the Earth, but like an Eagle, mounting up on high: As this high flight of the ſoul is highly pleaſing unto God, ſo 'tis made by his ſtrength, and at his command: A believer flies high;

Firſt, In the Contemplation of divine things. What towring thoughts hath he concerning God, and the concernments of Salvation by Jeſus Chriſt! he is not mingling his ſoul with the duſt, nor mudding it upon the dunghils of this world: As his converſation or trade is for things above, ſo his mind and meditation is upon them.

Secondly, As he flies high in his contemplation about, ſo in his love to, and deſire of high things; he doth not nakedly contemplate things above, as a Philoſopher may do, but he hath ſtrong affections to, and longings after the injoyment and poſſeſſion of the things that are above; he is as much on high in his deſires and affections, as he is in his ſtudies and ſpeculations. And in both reſpects he mounts on high, in the power and at the command of God; who, as he hath taught the Eagle, ſo man much more, whither, and how far to aſcend. And he therefore mightily triumphs over this lower world, becauſe his ſoul is lifted up as an Eagle, by and upon the wings of Divine ſupport and acceptation. Doth the Eagle mount up at thy command?

Non ad præceptum hominis, aut ſuam ſolius voluntatem elevatur ſanctus, ſed dirigente & ſublevante Deo. Janſ.

And make her Neſt on high?] The Eagle doth not only mount on high (that may be from a ſudden overture or occaſion) but ſhe makes her Neſt on high. The word which we render on high, ſignifies ſeparated, becauſe high places are places ſeparated from ordinary concourſe. Eagles covet to make their Neſts in places furtheſt remote from all acceſs both of men and beaſts. The beſt of high things, ſpiritual things, are ſeparated from this world, they are above the wiſdom and way of the world, and that's the reaſon why the world cannot bear them. I touch that only from the Notation of the word.

The Eagle makes her Neſt on high.] But doth ſhe ſo, O Job, at thy command? doſt thou direct her where to make her Neſt, or how? It ſeems the Lord teacheth birds to make their Neſts. The leaſt bird is directed by God as well as the Eagle: It is by his counſel that ſome birds make their Neſts very low, and that others (among which the Eagle eſpecially) make their Neſts on high. Pliny ſaith, no man can reach or touch the Eagles Neſt. We look and find birds neſts in every buſh, but who ever found the Eagles Neſt, ſuch an Eagles Neſt as is here ſpoken of? There are (I grant) ſome Eagles that make Neſts in high Trees, but the Eagle here intended makes her Neſt upon inacceſſible Rocks. When the Lord would reach the height of mans wiſdom, in ſetting himſelf above the reach of danger, it ſpeaks thus (Jerem. 49. 16.) Though thou ſhouldſt make thy Neſt as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, ſaith the Lord. 'Tis a proverbial ſpeech, and 'tis joyned with ſetting our Neſt among the Stars, in the 4th verſ. of the Prophecy of Obadiah. The Idumeans, with and about whom the Prophet there ſpake, dwelt in mountainous places, and flattered themſelves in the ſtrength and ſafety of the Country, as if it had all been an Eagles Neſt. The Eagle makes her Neſt ſo high, that 'tis, as it were, next to the Stars. But why doth the Eagle make her Neſt ſo high? there are two or three reaſons given of it, by the Searchers of Nature.

Nidos ejus nemo attigit, nidificat in excelſiſſimis rupibus. Plin. *l.*10. c. 6.

Firſt, For her ſafety, high things probably are moſt out of danger, there is a height which is very dangerous, and there is a height that is out of the reach of danger, ſuch is the height of the Eagles Neſt.

Secondly, Naturaliſts ſay, the Eagle makes her Neſt ſo high, becauſe ſhe cannot, without ſome difficulty, raiſe her ſelf from the Earth; if ſhe ſits low, ſhe cannot eaſily mount up, ſhe hath a heavy body, though a ſtrong wing: and therefore the wiſdom of God inſtructs her to make her Neſt on high, that ſhe may with that advantage riſe out of it, and mount up from it. The Eagle doth not as the Oſtrich, lay her Eggs in the duſt, or in the ſand, but ſhe makes her Neſt in high places, that ſo ſhe may be both ſafe in her Neſt, and the ſooner take her flight out of it.

Thirdly, The Eagle makes her Neſt on high, becauſe there the Air is pureſt, and ſhe is greatly delighted and pleaſed with the purity and ſweetneſs of the Air.

Fourthly, 'Tis ſaid alſo the Eagle makes her Neſt on high, becauſe ſhe loves from thence, as from a Watch-tower, to behold and feed her eyes upon the fair and beautiful face of the Heavens.

Gaudet ex hiſce ſpeculis cœlum contemplari. Oppian.

In theſe four reſpects we ſhould be like the Eagle, and make our Neſt on high. The Eagle doth not only mount high, but makes her Neſt on high. Some men mount high, that is, have high notions and ſpeculations, in which they ſeem to be rapt up (as the Apoſtle once truly was) to the third Heavens; yet they make not their Neſt on high, they do not abide there, their delights are here below, and ſo is their Neſt, the reſidence and reſt of their ſouls. The Neſt of the rich mans ſoul, in the Goſpel, was in his full Barns. O how many ſpeak high, diſcourſe high, profeſs highly, Heaven-high; yet, when all's done, their Neſt is upon the Earth: They talk as high as the Eagle mounts, yet their Neſt is as low as that of the Oſtrich, in the duſt. Let us remember, as to mount high, ſo to make our Neſt on high. The Apoſtle could ſay (1 Phil. 3. 20.) Our converſation is in Heaven; not only muſt we be ſpeaking high, but acting on high too; we muſt ſit and brood there, as the Eagle upon her Neſt. Let us ſay of God, as Moſes the man of God did in his prayer (Pſal. 90. 1.) Lord, thou haſt been our dwelling place in all Generations; thou art ſo, and thou ſhalt be ſo for ever. Thus we are taught, not to imitate the fooliſh Oſtrich, building our Neſt in the duſt, but like the noble Eagle (being lifted up by the mighty power of the holy Spirit) making our Neſt, or taking up our reſt in Heaven, which is, as the higheſt, ſo the ſafeſt place of all.

Thus far of the Eagle in two of her properties. Firſt, Her high flight. Secondly, Her high Neſt.

The third thing ſpoken of in this Context concerning the Eagle, is the choice of her abode or habitation.

Sicut aquila motum habet in altum, ita etiam in altis converſatur, quod pertinet ad nobilitatem naturæ ſuæ. Aquin.

Verſe 28. She dwelleth and abideth on the Rock, upon the crag of the Rock, and the ſtrong place.

As the Eagle flieth very high, ſo ſhe abideth on high places. Her abiding ſo high, ſhews the nobility and generoſity of her nature; ſhe doth not only mount up on high ſometimes, and make her Neſt on high in breeding time, but ſhe dwells on high, ſhe dwelleth and abideth there. The word which we render abideth, ſignifieth properly tarrying for a night, or taking up a nights-lodging; but we are not to confine the Eagles abode to a night, to this or that night, here the word notes conſtant, continued reſidence, ſhe dwelleth and abideth on the Rock, there's her place, her Palace, there this Queen of birds keeps Court, there ſhe abideth, excepting in two caſes. Firſt, When ſhe is minded to mount up and take her pleaſure. Secondly, When ſhe flies off to ſeek her prey, as will appear further in the next verſe, but take her generally, there ſhe abides. Naturaliſts deſcribe a ſort of Eagles, which chuſe, and love to dwell or inhabit woods, plains, and by the Sea-ſhore; יתלונן à radice לון manſit per noctem unam pernoctavit. Sola ſine clangore, ſine murmuratione converſatur in montibus. Plin. *l.*10. c. 3. Ariſt. *l.*9. c. 32. de natura animal.

but the Eagle here deſcribed dwells on the Rock; and not only ſo, but שׁנ סלע Dentem vocat prominentiam, aut quod præruptum eſt in rupe. Druſ.

Upon the crag of the Rock.] The Hebrew is, upon the tooth of the Rock. Mr. Broughton renders, In the edge of a Rock. The crag of a Rock doth much reſemble both a tooth and the edge of a thing; for 'tis ſharp like an edge, and appears in form like a tooth: Now upon that part of the Rock, which is moſt craggy and ſtands out like a tooth, there the Eagle abides, there ſhe pearcheth. And Naturaliſts tell us, though ſhe pearches upon a hard Rock, yet ſhe is very careful of her Talons, leſt they ſhould be blunted or receive any injury from the hardneſs of the Rock, ſhe is very curious of them, knowing of what uſe they are to her. Thus ſhe abides upon the Rock, and upon the crag of the Rock; or upon the tooth of the Rock. It doth not ſatisfie the Eagle to build or abide upon any part of the Rock, but ſhe chuſeth that part of it for her habitation which is moſt inacceſſible, leſt ſhe ſhould have any diſturbance by ill Neighbours, or the Air be infected with ill ſmells. Saint Hierome ſaith, the Eagle builds in this manner, leſt Adders or Snakes ſhould ſpoil her Eaglets, or young ones; and that the Amethyſt-ſtone, which is an Antidote or Preſervative againſt poyſon, is found in her Neſt. She abides on the crag of the Rock.

מצודה Arx, propugnaculum, munitio, cognationem habet cum verbo צוד quod venari eſt Hebræis. Moller. in Pſal. 91. v. 2.

And the ſtrong place.] We might well enough conceive, that when it is ſaid ſhe dwells on the Rock, that ſhe dwells on the ſtrong place, for the Rock is a ſtrong place; yet the Holy Ghoſt is pleaſed to ſet it out diſtinctly, On the Rock, upon the crag of the Rock, and the ſtrong place. Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, On a Fortreſs; ſhe dwells on the Rock, as on her Caſtle or Tower. The word ſignifies any place of defence, and Grammarians tell us, it comes from, or hath near cognation with a word that ſignifies to hunt, or purſue the Game; and the reaſon given for it is, becauſe when perſons are purſued in war, or troubled in peace (as weaker birds by birds of prey) they have their recourſe to ſtrong places for refuge and ſafety. The Eagle needs a ſtrong place, for ſhe hath Enemies, and therefore is taught to fortifie her ſelf, or to get into ſtrong places for her ſecurity againſt them. From all theſe expreſſions, that the Eagle dwelleth on the Rock, upon the crag of the Rock, and ſtrong place,

Note; Nature teacheth the Creature in general, much more man, to provide for his own ſafety.

That is, God hath put ſuch an inſtinct into the nature of all the Creatures, as to provide for their own ſafety: The Eagle will dwell on the Rock, ſhe will not venture her ſelf every where. And according to the ſtate and condition of Creatures, ſuch is the proviſion which they make for their ſafety (Pſal. 104. 18.) The high hills are a refuge for the wild Goat, and the ſtony Rock for the Coney. The wild Goats have their refuge, and the Coneys have their refuge, and they are taught whither to fly from the face of danger. There is no Creature but hath a refuge in time of danger; and therefore we commonly ſay, Times of danger diſcover our refuge.

Now if the Lord hath taught the fowls of the Air, and the beaſts of the Earth to look to their own ſafety, to get to the Rock, and the ſtrong place; then doubtleſs he hath taught his ſervants, all that are godly, to ſeek and haſten to a refuge, both for their ſpiritual and corporal ſafety. David often diſcovers his refuge in the Pſalms (Pſal. 18. 2.) When at the firſt verſe he had in plain language called the Lord his ſtrength, I will love thee, O Lord, my ſtrength; he preſently adds a number of Metaphors, to ſhadow out the ſame thing, The Lord is my Fortreſs, my Rock, and my Deliverer, my God, my ſtrength, in whom I will truſt; my Buckler, and the horn of my Salvation, and my high Tower. He calleth God his Rock twice in that verſe. God is not only a Rock, but the only Rock in which his faithful people find ſhelter. Moſes ſaid in his prayer (Pſal. 90. 1.) Lord, thou haſt been our dwelling place in all Generations. Where do believers dwell? in God himſelf; as the dwelling of the Eagle is in the Rock, ſo the dwelling of a believer is in God, his Rock. They may be ſure of ſafety who are ſo houſed, who are houſed in God (Pſal. 91. 1.) He that dwells in the ſecret places of the moſt High, ſhall abide under the ſhadow of the Almighty: I will ſay of the Lord, he is my Refuge, and my Fortreſs, my God, in him will I truſt. Thus as the Lord hath taught the Eagle to look out a ſtrong place for her ſelf, ſo he hath taught his people; and it will be as much their wiſdom, to learn of the Eagle to provide againſt danger, as to learn of the Ant to provide againſt hunger.

As in this 28th verſe we have had the dwelling of the Eagle deſcribed; ſo in the next, we have both the ſharpneſs of her appetite, and the quickneſs of her ſight.

Verſ. 29. From thence ſhe ſeeks her prey, and her eyes behold afar off.

The fourth thing conſiderable in the Eagle, is the ſharpneſs of her appetite; ſhe hath a great heat of ſtomach, and a ſtrong digeſtion, therefore ſhe muſt be ſeeking prey.

From thence.] That is, from the Rock her dwelling place, from the tooth of the Rock; From thence ſhe ſeeks her prey. And 'tis conceived, that the reaſon why ſhe builds ſo high is, that ſhe may from thence with more advantage ſpy out and ſeek her prey. The Hebrew is, ſhe diggeth her prey from thence. That an Eagle ſhould dig, and dig in the Air, is an elegant expreſſion. Diligent ſeeking or ſearching, is ſignified by digging in the Hebrew language. They that dig for a thing ſeek it earneſtly; and therefore to ſhew how earneſtly the Eagle ſeeks her prey, ſhe is ſaid to dig for it. The Lord to ſhew the open ſinfulneſs of Iſrael told them (Jer. 2. 34.) In thy skirts is found the blood of the Souls of the poor Innocents. That which is in a mans skirts is eaſily ſeen; and hence the Lord adds, I have not found it by ſecret ſearch, or as the Margin hath it, by digging; that's the force of the word, it notes a diligent ſearch or ſeeking; the Eagle ſeeks, as if ſhe were a digging for

Her prey.] What is her prey? The Eagle hath a ſtrong ſtomach, and the word here uſed ſignifies any thing eatable. Naturaliſts ſay ſhe feeds upon fowls of the Air, the Dove, &c. ſhe feeds alſo upon Sheep, Lambs, Hares; and 'tis ſaid, ſhe hath a great mind to Hares, they being not only meat, but medicine to her. Naturaliſts tell us alſo, that the Eagle feeds upon Fiſh, and that in her flight ſhe can diſcern the Fiſh in the Sea: and ſome tell us, that ſhe loves Shell-fiſh, the Crab-fiſh eſpecially very much; this is her prey: from thence ſhe ſeeks her prey, whether moving in the Air, or upon the Land, or in the Water; ſhe ſeeks her prey where ever 'tis to be had, and ſhe will have it if it be to be had above ground, yea, if it be to be had in the water.

Hence note; Hunger makes active.

We ſay hunger breaks thorough ſtone walls, or ſtrong holds. Whither will not the Eagle dig to ſatisfie her appetite? I need not ſtay upon the general truth; I would only add this, it is certainly ſo in ſpirituals. Soul-hunger, our hunger after Righteouſneſs, will make us active. Thoſe Eagles, the Saints, having a ſtrong appetite to the things of God, will dig for their ſatisfaction, they will ſeek after food for their Souls till they are ſatisfied. Sometimes poſſibly there is a glut of food, and then they will ſcarcely look after it; but if once they are pinched with famine, then they look after food. That of the Prophet (Amos 8. 11.) anſwers this of the Text, I (ſaith the Lord) will ſend a famine among you: not a famine of bread, but of hearing the Word of the Lord. And what then? Why then they ſhall wander from Sea to Sea, and from the North even to the Eaſt, they ſhall run to and fro to ſeek the Word of the Lord, and ſhall not find it. The Eagle here ſeeks her prey, and gets it; but they ſhall ſeek the Word of the Lord, and not have it, becauſe they were unthankful for it, and unprofitable under it, when they had it. 'Tis a ſad hunger to be pincht with the want of the Word, which is ſpiritual food; but that's a bleſſed hunger which is not from want of, but from a true and ſtrong deſire after the Word or ſpiritual food. True believers, abiding in a right frame, have a great deſire and hunger after ſpiritual food, even when there is greateſt plenty of it; when there is (as we ſay) a glut of it, they are not glutted with it; the more they are ſatisfied with it, the more they would have of it; their appetites and ſatisfaction are interchangeable; they are hungry, yet ſatisfied; they are ſatisfied, yet hungry; and therefore they are always ſeeking their ſpiritual prey. It is a ſore judgment when they that have had much of this ſpiritual food, and have not had a hunger after it, are cut ſhort and deprived of it. The Lord often lets thoſe hunger after it in want, who have not hungred after it in enjoyment.

As the Eagle hath an eager appetite, a ſharp ſtomack; ſo an excellent eye, a ſharp ſight, as it followeth.

Her eyes behold afar off.] To behold or ſee, is the work of the eye; and to behold afar off, is the excellency of the eye in that work. The Eagle ſeeks after her prey, and her eyes behold afar off. Some render which her eyes behold afar off, that's a good reading; rhe Conjunctive Particle and is not in the Original Text, and therefore we may ſupply it by the Relative (which) as well as by the Conjunction (and.) Naturaliſts tell us, that the Eagle hath ſo ſharp a ſight, that when ſhe is mounted quite out of our ſight, out of the ſight of any man, and is as it were in the Clouds, that even then ſhe doth perfectly behold her prey, and that is afar off indeed; even at that diſtance ſhe beholds the Hare in the buſh, and the Fiſh in the water. There are almoſt incredible things related, as to the acuteneſs of the Eagles ſight; and the reaſon given by ſome of her quick-ſightnedneſs, is this in nature, becauſe her eye lieth very deep in her head, and ſo hath a great advantage in ſeeing, the light being the more compaſſed by, and the rays the more ſtrongly gathered into her eye. I ſhall not diſcuſs the validity of this reaſon, all agreeing in the thing, that the Eagle ſees very exactly, and afar off: And as ſhe hath a very clear, ſo a very ſtrong ſight, ſo ſtrong that ſhe can ſteadily behold the Sun ſhining in its ſtrength (as it was toucht before) thoſe beams which blind us, and oppreſs our eyes, are pleaſing to hers. It hath been a torture which ſome Tyrants have uſed, to hold open a mans eye directly to the Sun beams, and ſo blind him, and quite extinguiſh the ſight of his eye. Now that which blinds us, and puts out our eyes is pleaſant, delightful, and as ſome expreſs it, healing and refreſhing to the eyes of the Eagle: And hence 'tis ſaid of her, that ſhe tries her young ones, whether they be of a right breed or no, in this manner; ſhe holds them up to the Sun, and if they can bear the beams of the Sun with open eyes, they are right, otherwiſe ſpurious. The Eagle is ſo ſharp-ſighted, that an Eagles eye is the Proverb for a ſharp ſight. Her eyes behold afar-off. Not in the ſenſe we find the phraſe uſed (Pſal. 138.6.) where it is ſaid, Though the Lord be high, yet hath he reſpect unto the lowly, but the proud he knoweth afar off, that is, he regards them not. We put a word of that ſignificancy in the Meeter, He contemning, knows them afar off, that is, as perſons that he cannot abide to have near him. The proud and lowly are alike near in place to God, yet not in reſpect. But of that only by the way. The Eagles beholding things afar off, is not (I ſay) like the Lords beholding perſons afar off; thoſe things which are afar off, in place from the Eagle, ſhe ſees them as if they were at hand: Thus ſhe beholdeth afar off.

Phœbæa dubios explorat lampade fætus. Silius Ital.

Hence, obſerve; God hath given more excellent ſenſes to ſome ſenſitive Creatures than to others of that kind, yea, than to thoſe of a higher kind, the rational.

Not only doth the Eagle exceed other Fowls of the air, but all the men on earth in eye-ſight. And as an Eagle hath a natural eye-ſight beyond man; ſo a godly man hath a ſpiritual eye-ſight beyond all other men, the eye-ſight of faith, by which he ſees not only things afar off, but things inviſible, yea, him that is inviſible, as Moſes did (Heb. 11. 27.) A believer hath an Eagles eye; his eyes, as hers, behold afar off.

Verſ. 30. Her young ones alſo ſuck up blood, and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe.

This verſe holds out the ſixth property of the Eagle; what kind of food ſhe and her young ones live upon is here expreſt.

אפרוחים Pulli avium à flore, quod efflorescunt, & emergunt ex ovo. Merc.

Her young ones.] Or her putters forth. By which we are to underſtand ſuch young ones as are ready to put forth feathers, but cannot yet fly abroad to ſhift for themſelves; or they are ſo called, becauſe young ones are put forth of the Eggs. What do they? they ſuck up blood. The word notes a very greedy ſucking, it is a double word, and ſo implies, as it were, a double drinking, a drinking with ſuch haſt, that they are ready to choak; and ſo Maſter Broughton tranſlates it expreſly, Her young ones near choak ſwallowing blood, they ſwallow it ſo greedily, that they are ready to choak themſelves with it; that's a good reading. The Septuagint ſay, her young ones are ſprinkled with blood, as they that feed upon raw fleſh, eſpecially when newly killed or torn, are ſpeckl'd or ſprinkled with blood: Her young ones are rolled or wallowed in blood, ſaith another. All readings ſhew what proviſion ſhe makes for her young ones while under her keeping, and how they keep themſelves when gone off from her hand; ſhe brings up her young ones to her own trade, feeding them with fleſh, and acquainting them with the ſweet of blood; ſhe and her young ones are all of a diet. 'Tis ſaid of the Eagle, that ſhe never drinks water, nor is at all thirſty; but both ſhe and her young ones ſuck up blood.

Φύρονται. Conſperguntur. Sept. volutantur. Auguſt.

Hence note; What young ones are uſed to, that they will afterwards follow.

Young Eagles are uſed to blood in the Neſt, and therefore delight in blood all their days afterwards (Prov. 22.6.) Train up a Child in the way he ſhould go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. If a Child be trained up in a good way, he will not depart from it when he is old; 'tis uſually ſo, or probably it will be ſo. Though the Golden Youth-age of ſome hath ended in a Leaden old age, yet it is moſt probable, if a Child be bred up in a good way, he will hold it; and if in an ill way, he will hardly leave or be beaten out of it: Uſually ſuch as the inſtitution and inſtruction of Youth is, ſuch will their after-converſation be. Her young ones alſo ſuck up blood; and, as it follows, Progenies, ſtimulante fame feſtinat ad illam. Quam primum rupto prædam guſtaverit ovo. Juven. Satyr. 14.

Where the ſlain are, there is ſhe.] This ſhews us yet more fully, what the Eagle lives upon, Where carcaſſes be, reſort they, ſaith Mr. Broughton. Some interpret the Text, not of bodies ſlain, but of bodies to be ſlain; where Battles are to be fought, thither the Eagle reſorts. Natural Hiſtorians tell us, Eagles will preſage or ſmell a battle, ſome ſay, ſeven days before 'tis fought, others three, at leaſt two; ſo that not only where the carcaſſes are, but are like to be, thither the Eagles gather. Yet ſome contend very much, that there is a ſort or Race of Eagles ſo noble, that they will not feed upon a dead carcaſs, but live upon herbs; but that moſt Eagles feed upon bodies ſlain, none deny. This Scripture of Job is alluded to by Chriſt himſelf (Mat. 24. 28. Luke 17. 37.) and both upon the ſame accounts, the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the glorious coming of Chriſt, and the end of the world. In Matthew he ſaith, Whereſoever the carcaſs is, there will the Eagles be gathered together. And in Luke, Whereſoever the body is, thither will the Eagles be gathered together. S. Matthew ſaith, Where the carcaſs is, and S. Luke ſaith, Where the body is. There are various interpretations of theſe two Scriptures, both quoted (as is generally conceived) from the Text under hand. Some expound them only of the deſtruction of the Jews by the Romans, and give the ſenſe thus; That whereas Chriſt had foretold the deſtruction of the Jewiſh State and Temple by the Romans, and that it ſhould fall upon all places, even at once like Lightning, ſo that it would be in vain for them to run from one City or Country to another, in hope to avoid the vengeance, becauſe whereſoever the Jews ſhould be, or whitherſoever they ſhould retire to hide and ſave themſelves, thither would the Roman Armies come (whoſe Enſign was the Eagle) and finding them out, ſlay and deſtroy them. As if the Lord Chriſt had ſaid, This threatned deſolation will be univerſal, and unavoidable; where ever any Jews are, there the Romans will be. Thus the whole body of the Jewiſh Nation is compared to a carcaſs or body, and the Romans to Eagles. That ancient Prophecy (Deut. 28. 49.) may be applicable to this final deſtruction of the Jewiſh Nation; The Lord ſhall bring a Nation againſt thee from far, from the end of the earth (as ſwift) as the Eagle flieth, a Nation whoſe tongue thou ſhalt not underſtand.

חללים Non pro occiſis ſed mox occidendis accipio. Bold. Ælian. l. 14. c. 13. Una quæ Jovis appellatur carnes non attingit, ſed ad victum ei herba ſatis eſt. Ælian. Ariſtot.

Dr. Hammond.

But though it be both very probable in it ſelf, and very ſuitable to the words of Chriſt in S. Matthew, that the deſtruction which the Roman Eagles brought upon the body of the Jewiſh Nation, is there implied; yet Chriſt ſpeaking of his own coming to judge the world (as well as of the Romans to deſtroy the Jews) there is (I conceive) more in it than that, when Chriſt ſaith, Whereſoever the carcaſs is, there will the Eagles be gathered together. And why may we not ſay, that Chriſt compares himſelf to the Carcaſs or Body, and Believers to the Eagles, who ſhall reſort and be gathered to him whereſoever he ſhall appear? Taking the words in this latter ſenſe.

Euthymius. Theophylactus. Ambroſius.

Some expound them of true Believers gathering to Chriſt, as the Carcaſs or Body, every day by faith. One of the Ancients ſaith, when Chriſt being laid in the grave, was firſt reſorted to by Mary, the Wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalen, and Mary the Mother of our Lord, and by the Apoſtles, then were the Eagles gathered about the Carcaſs: And ever ſince Chriſt aroſe from the dead, Believers have gathered together about him, and fed upon him as Crucified, or as that bleſſed Carcaſs who procured life for them by his death; whereſoever Chriſt Crucified is preached, thither true Believers gather, and many who believe not are added to the Church.

Again, others expound it of the Saints gathering to Chriſt at the laſt day. Our late Annotators dealing with theſe words, as reported (Luk. 17.37.) ſay, that by the flight of the Eagle is ſignified the ſudden aſſembling of the Saints unto Chriſt coming unto Judgment, anſwerable to that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15.52. as alſo to that, 1 Theſ. 4.17.

Now though according to this Allegorical interpretation of the Texts in S. Matthew and Luke, Chriſt is the Carcaſs, and Believers the Eagles; yet I ſhall cloſe my interpretation of this Text in Job, to which both the Evangeliſts allude, by ſhewing that in other Scriptures, ſuch things are ſpoken of Chriſt himſelf, as hold out a likeneſs between him and the Eagle, in many reſpects.

Firſt, As the Eagle is the Royal Bird, the Princeſs or Queen of Birds, ſo Jeſus Chriſt is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth (Rev. 1.5.) And again (Rev. 19.16.) King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. As the Eagle among Birds, ſo Chriſt among both Man and Angels, hath the preheminence.

Secondly, As the Eagle mounts up, ſo alſo did Jeſus Chriſt (Pſal. 68.18.) Thou haſt aſcended on high; yea, ſo high hath Chriſt aſcended, that the Eagle cannot follow him: The Heaven to which natural Eagles mount, is (as I may ſay) but a Pavement to that which Jeſus Chriſt aſcended to. Chriſt had a high flight, he mounted up to the Heaven of Heavens, far above all viſible Heavens (Eph. 4.10.) he is made higher than the Heavens (*Heb.*7.26.)

Thirdly, Hath the Eagle a piercing eye? ſo hath Jeſus Chriſt; he (not only from the height of the Clouds, whither the Eagle mounts, but) from the higheſt Heavens, can look into the ſecret of every mans heart, even into the hell of a bad mans heart, and ſee what's doing there, what's lying there. It was ſaid of Chriſt while on Earth (John 2.25.) He needed not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, for he knew what was in man; and ſtill he looks quite through man, through the wiſeſt, cloſeſt, and moſt reſerved among the Sons of men. All things are naked and open before the eyes of him (this Eagle) with whom we have to do; his eyes behold afar off.

Fourthly, Hiſtorians tell us, the Eagle fights or wars with Dragons and Serpents, and overcomes them. Jeſus Chriſt, this Eagle, hath fought with that great Dragon the Devil, and bruiſed the head of the Serpent (*Gen.*3.15.)

Fifthly, The Eagle is very tender and careful of her young ones. Now, as an Eagle (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 32.11, 12.) ſtirreth up her Neſt (that is, thoſe in her Neſt) fluttereth over her young, ſpreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; ſo the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no ſtrange God with him. God bare the Iſraelites on Eagles wings (out of Egypt) and brought them to himſelf (Exod. 19.5.) that is, he brought them ſpeedily and ſafely, and ſo he bore them all the years of their journeying in the Wilderneſs. The Eagle beareth her young ones upon her wings, that they may be ſafe (ſhe muſt be hurt before her young ones can, while ſhe bears them there.) Thus Chriſt bears his people on his wings, yea, in his boſom, The Eternal God is their refuge, and underneath are the Everlaſting Arms (Deut. 33.27.)

Ælian. l.14.c.14.

Sixthly, Naturaliſts tell us, the Eagle gives her young ones of her own blood, when ſhe cannot get other blood for them to drink or ſuck. This is moſt true of Chriſt; he ſuffered himſelf to be wounded for us; his hands and feet, yea, his very heart was pierced, that we might have his blood to drink in believing. My blood (ſaith he, *Joh.*6.) is drink indeed.

Aquila vocatur Ἀετὸς propter longæ vitatem: vivit annos centum. Epiphan.

Seventhly, The Eagle is long-lived. The Greek expreſſeth her by a word ſignifying Longevity; and ſome give the reaſon, not only from the excellent temperament and conſtitution of her body, but alſo becauſe ſhe lives in ſuch pure Air, free from ill vapours and noyſom ſmells. Jeſus Chriſt is not only long-lived, but he lives for ever, he was from Everlaſting, and will be to Everlaſting; he is the King Eternal (1 Tim. 1.17.) the Eternal Father, (*Iſa.*9.6.)

Thus we ſee how Chriſt is like the Eagle, in theſe ſeven particulars; I ſhall ſhew ſeven more, wherein true Chriſtians alſo are like the Eagle.

Firſt, Doth the Eagle fly high? ſo do they by the wings of faith; They mount up (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 40.31.) with wings as the Eagle.

Secondly, Hath the Eagle a clear ſight? doth ſhe ſee far off? ſo Saints by faith can ſee far off (Iſa. 33.17.) Their eyes ſee the King in his beauty, they behold the Land that is very far off. Which Scripture, though it be properly and litterally meant of beholding King Hezekiah in his Earthly Glory, yet it is much more verified of a Believers ſeeing his King, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in his Heavenly Glory, and of his beholding Heaven, which may well be called the Land of Farneſs and Diſtances, or (as we tranſlate) The Land very far off. Stephen the Protomartyr, had a clear intellectual ſpiritual eye, when he ſaid (Acts 7.56.) Behold, I ſee the Heavens opened, and the Son of Man ſtanding on the right hand of God. Believers have a clear Eagle-eye here, and they ſhall have a much clearer eye hereafter, when they ſhall ſee Chriſt as he is (1 John 3.2.) All Saints will be more than Eagle-eyed in Glory.

Thirdly, Doth the Eagle dwell on a Rock? ſo doth every true Believer (Iſa. 33.16.) His place of defence ſhall be the Munitions of Rocks; bread ſhall be given him, his water ſhall be ſure. The Apoſtle tells us who the Rock is (1 Cor. 10.4.) The Rock which followed them was Chriſt.

Fourthly, Doth the Eagle renew her ſtrength? ſo do Believers when any oldneſs is coming upon the new Creature (as it doth ſometimes) then they renew their ſtrength by looking to Jeſus Chriſt, who is at once their Righteouſneſs and their Strength: He ſatisfieth their mouth with good things, ſo that their youth is renewed as the Eagles (Pſal. 103.5.) As the Lord often brings his people low by bodily ſickneſs and weakneſs, and then renews their natural health and ſtrength: So when there are decays and declinings upon their ſouls, he renews their ſpiritual health and ſtrength (Iſa. 40.31.) They that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, and then (as was ſaid before) they ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles. The Eagles youth is renewed by the growth and ſucceſſion of new feathers (of the ſame kind) in the place of the old; but a believer reneweth his youth or ſtrength, by caſting off gradually the remainders of the old man which is corrupt, and by putting on more of the new man (who is quite of another kind) created after God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs (*Eph.*4.24.)

Fifthly, Can the Eagle look fully upon the Sun? Surely Believers have not only as clear, but as ſtrong a ſight as the Eagle; they can look upon Jeſus Chriſt the Son of Righteouſneſs with open face. For as this Son of Righteouſneſs hath ſaid, Behold me, behold me (Iſa. 65.1.) and again, Look to me, and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the Earth (Iſa. 45.22.) that is, all ye that dwell on Earth, even to the ends of it; ſo he gives a power, or a ſpiritual eye to behold and look upon him; and that beholding or looking is a healing to them, as the beholding of the Sun is to the natural eye of the Eagle (Mal. 4.2.) To them that fear my Name ſhall the Son of Righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings.

Sixthly, Do Eagles ſuck blood, both young and old? ſo do Believers. The firſt living of the new Creature is upon blood; every godly man drinks the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt by Faith, as offered to him, both in the Promiſes, and in the Ordinances of the Goſpel. A Believer could not live a moment, nor have any ſubſiſtence in grace, if he had not (as the Eagle) blood to ſuck in and drink. A godly man is nouriſhed by a believing Contemplation upon the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the effuſion of his blood.

Seventhly, Doth the Eagle feed upon the ſlain? ſo Believers feed upon Chriſt as ſlain. Chriſt by his death is become our food to Eternal Life, (Joh. 6. 51,53.) Though the raiſed and glorified Body of Chriſt be entred into the full poſſeſſion of a Divine and Eternal life, and though we by faith look to Jeſus Chriſt, not according to the fleſh, nor as dead, but as living and ſitting for ever at the right hand of the Father, there making interceſſion for us; yet we muſt look to him as entring into the holy place by the ſacrifice of himſelf, and with his own blood, not with the blood of others (Heb. 9. 24, 25, 26.) The Apoſtle told the Corinthians, I determined to know nothing among you, but Jeſus Chriſt and him crucified; that is, ſo to know him, as to feed upon him my ſelf; and ſo to make him known to you, that you might feed upon him alſo.

Further, It is conſiderable, that as Believers in Scripture are compared to Eagles, and the Lord is ſaid to have born the old Church of the Jews upon Eagles wings; ſo under the Goſpel Eagles wings are ſaid to have been given to the Chriſtian Church, whereupon ſhe was born out of the reach of danger (Rev. 12. 13, 15.) And when the Dragon ſaw that he was caſt to the Earth, he perſecuted the woman that brought forth the man-child. And to the woman were given two wings of a great Eagle, that ſhe might fly into the Wilderneſs, (that is, convenient and ſufficient means to further her flight and retirement) into her place, whereſoever it is) where ſhe is nouriſhed for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent. All the means of the Churches eſcape from danger are ſhadowed by two wings; not but that God hath more means than two, by which his Providence works and procures the ſafety of the Church; but, becauſe it had been improper, ſpeaking of her flight, to expreſs more wings than two: For the Seraphims, which are deſcribed, having each one ſix wings (Iſa. 6. 2.) yet two of them only were put to that uſe of flying. And theſe two wings given to the Church, are ſaid to be the two wings of an Eagle, becauſe among all the winged Tribes, Eagles are ſtrongeſt and ſwifteſt of wing; they can fly faſteſt, and they can fly furtheſt, as in height, ſo in length. Nor are the wings given the Church, barely called the wings of an Eagle, but of a great Eagle, implying not only the beſt kind of wings, but the beſt wings of that kind; not only the wings of an Eagle, but of a great Eagle. By all which is meant, the wiſe and tender care of God over his Church in times of greateſt danger, when the Dragon becomes a Serpent, or the Serpentine Dragon ſeeks moſt to annoy her.

Thus far the Lord hath been interrogating Job, not only about the Inanimate Creatures, the Heavens, the Air, the Sea, the Earth, but alſo about ſeveral Animals; in the leaſt of which, becauſe they not only have a being, but life, ſenſe and motion, more of the power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God ſhines forth, than in the greateſt of the former. And all the queſtions propoſed to Job in theſe two Chapters have (as hath been hinted heretofore, and ſhould be conſtantly minded) this general ſcope to convince (as then Job, ſo now) all men, both of their own nothingneſs, and of the all-ſufficiency, wiſdom, care and power of God, who hath ſo wiſely made, and doth ſo wiſely diſpoſe of all the Creatures which he hath made. And therefore man who hath received more from God than they all, and of whom God is more tender than of them all, ſhould ſubmit to the diſpoſe of God in all things, without diſputing about, much more without murmuring at, or complaining of his Diſpenſations in one kind or other.

The Lord (though he had done much in the way of interrogating) hath not yet done interrogating Job concerning the works of his hands. Nevertheleſs, before he proceeded any further, to inquire of him about the Creatures, he ſaw it fit to feel his Pulſe a little, by a cloſe application of what he had already ſaid, mingled with high language and cutting reproofs, thereby to try what effect this forepaſſed diſcourſe had wrought upon him, or whether he were come to a more humble and ſubmitting frame than before, as will appear in opening the former part of the Chapter following.

CHAP. XL. Verſ. 1, 2.

Moreover, the Lord anſwered Job, and ſaid,

Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty, inſtruct him? he that reproveth God, let him anſwer it.

IN the two former Chapters we have heard what the Lord ſaid to Job out of the Whirlwind, with what queſtions he apposed him about the works of Creation and Providence: To all or any of which Job being unable to make Anſwer, eſpecially to give a preſent and perfect Anſwer, the Lord (it ſeems) gave him ſome little reſpite to recollect himſelf, in expectation of his Anſwer; but finding him ſilent, proceeds in this Chapter, to urge him yet further upon the whole matter for an Anſwer; yea, the Lord having ſaid all this to him, ſets it home upon him with this ſharp reprehenſion.

Moreover, the Lord anſwered Job, and ſaid, Shall he, &c.

As if he had ſaid, O Job, hadſt thou diligently conſidered my work of Creation in making, and my work of Providence in governing this whole world, even the motions of the leaſt and moſt inferiour Creatures therein contained; ſurely thou hadſt never ventured to think what thou haſt uttered, and now thou canſt not but ſee how unduly thou haſt complained of my proceedings with thee; nor canſt thou be unconvinced how unable thou art to enter into the ſecrets of my Counſel, for as much as the cauſes of many leſſer and common things in the world are ſecrets unto thee, and ſuch as exceed the reach of thy underſtanding. Thus we may conceive the Lord at once ſpeaking to, and ſeverely reprehending Job, in the words which follow.

Verſ. 2. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty, inſtruct him?

Shall he, or can he, ſurely he ſhall not, ſurely he cannot. There are ſeverrl readings of this former part of the Verſe; I ſhall only name four, and then come to the Explication of the words, as they lye in our Tranſlation.

Firſt, The words are rendred thus, Is it wiſdom or learning to contend with the Almighty? This reading puts the latter words firſt. Is it wiſdom or inſtruction, or is that man well inſtructed, or well in his wits, who contends with the Almighty? The ſenſe of that reading is plain, and the improvement of it might be very uſeful: for indeed theſe two are utterly repugnant and contrariant, To contend with God, and to be wiſe, to contend with God, and to ſhew our ſelves well taught. That man hath not received inſtruction, either by or about Divine Correction, who mutters or quarrels at God correcting him: For how wiſe ſoever he is in his own eyes, he ſhews himſelf a very fool, at leaſt, as to that point, or attempt, very fooliſh. So then 'tis a great truth which this reading holds forth, Is it wiſdom, is it learning, to contend with the Almighty? Whoſoever doth ſo, errs in doing ſo, and will at laſt both ſee and feel his errour by ſad experiences.

Rabbi David.

Non eſt, ille eruditus, neque bene obſequens divinæ diſciplinæ, qui Deo caſtiganti obſtrepit & litem intendit. Vatab.

Secondly thus, Should he be inſtructed who contends with the the Almighty? This Tranſlation may have a double interpretation. Firſt, Surely that man deſerves not to be inſtructed, but corrected, who contends with the Almighty; he deſerves not to be taught, but to be puniſhed. Should he be taught that contends with the Almighty? Doubtleſs only, as Gideon taught the men of Succoth (Judg 8.16.) with bryars and thorns of the wilderneſs; that is, with ſevereſt chaſtiſements. Secondly, Should he be inſtructed that contends with the Almighty? That is, is a Learner a competent match for God? is one that needs inſtruction and teaching, fit to take up the Bucklers, and enter the Field of diſpute with God? He had need to be a Maſter, not a Scholar; a Teacher, not a Learner, that undertakes to deal with God. That man had need be skilled and well furniſhed, he had need be (as we ſpeak) his Crafts-maſter (and all little enough, yea all too little) who contends with the Almighty.

Numquid contendet cum omnipotente, quem ille caſtigat? Lavat.

Thirdly, The word which we render to inſtruct, ſignifies alſo to correct: taking it ſo, the Text is thus rendred, Shall he contend with the Almighty, whom he corrects? or, Shall a man corrected by or under the correcting hand of the Almighty, contend with him? Shall any give God words for his blows, or expoſtulate the matter with him? No man may (with ſuch a ſpirit) ſay unto God, What doſt thou? whatſoever he ſuffers; nor may any man be diſpleaſed with what God doth, whatſoever he is pleaſed to do either with himſelf or others.

Nonne contentioni cum Deo caſtigatio, ſupple, debetur?

Laſtly (which was hinted in the ſecond) Doth not contending with the Almighty deſerve chaſtening? Certainly it doth; or, Is not chaſtening due to contending (that is, to contenders) with God? Doubtleſs it is. He that will contend with God, though but in words, is worthy of no anſwer nor ſatisfaction, but in blows. Every one of theſe Tranſlations hath a fairneſs in it, as alſo with the Hebrew Text; but I ſhall inſiſt upon our own reading only, and give you ſome few notes from that.

Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty, inſtruct him?

There is a twofold contending.

Θεόμαχοι.

Firſt, By force and ſtrength of arm, or ſtrength of arms. We cannot ſuppoſe the Lord ſpeaking here of ſuch a Contention. There were a ſort of robuſtious men, Gyants of old, called Fighters with God; and many profane Atheiſts have blaſphemouſly ſet themſelves againſt Heaven, as if they would pull God from his Throne. Such as theſe are not the Contenders with God here intended; Job was far from being a man of that ſpirit.

Qui offert ſe diſputaturum cum eo. Aqu.

Secondly, There is a contending with God by force of argument, or by reaſonings. This I conceive is here meant; Job was often found in theſe contendings with God. But ſhall any man think to Logick it with God? to enter a diſpute with God? to argue with or reply upon him, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 9.20.) O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Arguing and replying are a kind of contending, and this is of two ſorts;

Firſt, With the Word of God, declaring what God would have us do, or what God would have us believe. Thus many contend with God, even as many as ſubmit not to his Word. This is a common quarrel, whether the Word of God or mans will ſhall ſtand, whether the Law of God, or the luſts of men ſhall carry it, and bear the ſway. The Apoſtle is expreſs in it (Rom. 8.7,8.) The carnal mind is enmity againſt God; and if ſo, then it contendeth with God, for enmity will be contending, and what kind of contending is there meant, appears in the next words; it is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be. Every natural man, till ſubdued and conquered by Grace, is contending with the Word of God; he ſubmits not to what God would have him do, nor to what God would have him believe; he will not form either his faith or his life as God would have him. Infinite are the contentions of man with God in this notion; but neither is this the contending here aimed at, and I would ſpeak to no more than is directly to the ſcope of the Text. Therefore

Secondly, There is a contending with the works of God, or with what God himſelf hath done, or is doing. Thus alſo there are many Contenders with God in the world, and this is the contention here ſpoken of, a contention about the works of God, what God either hath done, or is doing. All the debate which Job had with God, was about his dealings with him. God had laid him low, and ſtript him naked; God had broken his Eſtate, and filled his body full of ſores and pains; God had wounded his ſpirit, and filled his ſoul with gall and wormwood; God had withdrawn himſelf or his comforts from him, and his friends were againſt him, or at beſt, but miſerable comforters were they all: Now though he was a patient man, yet under theſe preſſures he often broke out into impatient ſpeeches. Thus Job contended with the Almighty, Moreover the Lord anſwered Job, and ſaid, ſhall he that contendeth with the Almighty (about what he is doing)

Inſtruct him?] Shall he have the better of him, and be able to teach him, or put him in a better way than he is in? Shall he give God the Rule, the Law how to guide the world more equally in general, or him in particular. Whether the contention lieth about the Providence of God to the whole world, or any Nation, Family, or Perſon, it comes under the ſame queſtion, Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him? That is, Can he direct God to do and order things better, or put them into a righter or more equitable courſe than they are diſpoſed in? No, he cannot. Who is the Pleader (ſaith Mr. Broughton) that will inſtruct the Omnipotent? let him come forth, and try his skill. Thus the Lord (yet in a tender and fatherly way) derides the folly of Job, who would needs attempt (upon the matter) to teach him who is perfect in knowledge, and to over-rule his decrees and determinations, who is not only, The Lord Chief Juſtice of all the World, but Juſtice it ſelf, and the ſole rule of it. Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him?

Hence obſerve; Firſt, There is a ſpirit in man, in weak ſinful man, ready to contend with the Almighty God.

The queſtion in the Text may be reſolved into this Poſition, There are Contenders with God. There are Contenders with the Word of God (as was ſhewed before) There are Contenders alſo with the Works of God, or with God about his Works, as I ſhall ſhew further now; and this will ſoon appear, if we do but compare the 4th verſe of the 51th Pſalm, with the 4th verſe of Rom. 3. In the Pſalm David made Confeſſion of his ſin, of that ſpecial enormous ſin Adultery, with the Murder that followed it. Againſt thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight, that thou mighteſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and clear when thou judgeſt. As if David had ſaid, I humbly confeſs my ſin, my adultery, and my murder; that when-ever the Lord ſhall bring any chaſtiſement upon my perſon, or upon my family, when ever he ſhall afflict me or mine greatly, he may be juſtified in ſo doing; or that all the world may ſee that God had great reaſon to correct me, and ſo juſtifie him in it. For ſome poſſibly may ſay, with wonder, at the hearing of it, What! the Lord correct David? ſuch a man as David? ſo holy a man as David? ſo juſt and upright a man as David? Yes, and the Lord is juſt in doing it; and David confeſſed his ſin, that God might be juſtified when he ſhould ſpeak terrible things, and be cleared when he ſhould judge, that is correct and afflict him terribly; as the word is uſed (1 Cor. 11.31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged; that is, we ſhould not be chaſtened, as 'tis expounded (verſ. 32.) When we are judged (ſaith the Apoſtle there) we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world. Now thoſe words ſpoken by David, are applied by the Apoſtle (Rom. 3.4.) to vindicate the Honour of God againſt all aſperſions whatſoever, in his proceeding with man; Let God be true, and every man a lyar, as it is written, that thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged. In the Pſalm the words are active, That thou mayeſt be clear when thou judgeſt. But S. Paul following, as I remember, the Septuagint, renders them paſſively, That thou mayeſt overcome when thou art judged. As if he had ſaid, Some take upon them to judge God (they who judge him, contend with him) that is, they judge and paſs ſentence upon his works; now (ſaith the Apoſtle) Let God be true, and every man a lyar, that thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome when thou art judged, that is, that all men may ſee and ſay thou art righteous, though thou afflicteſt the godly (for they ſin) and though thou condemneſt the wicked, for they ſin and repent not of their ſins.

Theſe two Scriptures conſidered either apart, or compared red together (beſides many more which might be called into this ſervice) are a clear proof that there are Contenders with God about his works. Yet poſſibly ſome may ſay, ſurely there are none to be found ſo bold and preſumptuous; What contend with God?

I anſwer, Firſt, There are ſome who do it very openly, avowedly, and with a bare face; they ſtick not to ſpeak their diſſatisfaction concerning the works of God, and belch out blaſphemy againſt what he hath done, or is doing in the world. Such doubtleſs were they, of whom it is ſaid (Iſa 8.21.) They ſhall paſs through it hardly beſtead and hungry; and it ſhall come to paſs, that when they be hungry, they ſhall fret themſelves, and curſe their King, and their God, and look upward; not in faith and patience, as they who in ſuch extremities call earneſtly and humbly upon God, but in paſſion and vexation, as they who wickedly curſe God, and depart from him. Such alſo are they ſpoken of (*Rev.*16.9) who being ſcorched with great heat at the pouring out of the fourth Vial upon the Sun, blaſphemed the Name of God, who had power over thoſe plagues, and repented not, to give him glory.

Secondly, I anſwer, There are many who do this ſecretly, or within their teeth; they bite in their words, yet 'tis the language of their hearts in tumultuating thoughts, ariſing and working there about the works of God: and thus a good man, a Job (who was a good man of the firſt form) may be found contending with the works of God. Any diſcontent with the works of God, is a degree of contending with God about them. Any ſecret riſing of heart againſt what God doth, is in this ſenſe, a ſtriving with God; yea, our being not fully pleaſed and ſatisfied with what God doth, is in ſome ſenſe a contending with God: And if all this be to contend with God, how many are there that contend with God! and who almoſt is there that doth not? Who can ſay in this thing, my heart is clean? Who can ſay, but at one time or other, he hath contended with God. Remember, when we would have things after our mind and mode, when we are not free to comply with the will of God, this is to contend with God. There are two Caſes, as to the common ſtate of the world, in which the hearts even of good men, are very apt to riſe againſt the work of God.

Firſt, When they ſee the wicked proſper, and carry all before them in the world; then they are ready to ſay, Why doth God ſuffer this? Jeremiah had much ado to keep his heart from contending with God in this caſe (Jer. 12. 1.) And David could hardly keep his from it (Pſal. 73. 2, 3.) As for me, my feet were almoſt gone, my ſteps had well nigh ſlipt; for I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. And for this he befooled himſelf (verſ. 22.) So fooliſh was I, and ignorant; I was as a beaſt before thee. Thus David was, and many more have been offended at the work of God, in giving good to bad men; and that's the firſt Caſe.

Secondly, When good men are vexed, oppreſſed, and trodden under feet, as mire in the ſtreets; what riſings of heart, and what unſatisfiedneſs of ſpirit is there in many good men! In both theſe Caſes there is much contending with God, though in both, our hearts (upon many accounts) ſhould acquieſce and reſt in the will of God; who, in the former, doth not declare himſelf a friend to evil men; nor doth he in the latter, declare himſelf an Enemy to thoſe who are good.

But ſeeing there is a ſpirit in man, even to contend with God, let us watch our ſelves in this thing, that ſuch thoughts riſe not; or let us carefully ſuppreſs them as ſoon as they are riſen. It is good for us, and our duty, to keep down the Contendings of our hearts with men, for we are very apt to be out with one another. 'Tis ſad to ſee breaches, the fruit of heart-burnings, between man and man. But much more ſhould we keep down thoſe contendings, yea quench the firſt ſparks which may kindle heart-burnings about the works of God, for they may ſoon come to be Contendings with him. For the cloſe of this point, take theſe four Conſiderations, which may move all ſorts of men to watch their hearts againſt Contendings with God, whether as to his dealings in the world, or with themſelves.

Firſt, Remember, Whatſoever the Lord doth, he may do; for he is an abſolutely Sovereign Lord, and therefore not to be contended with about any thing he doth, becauſe no way accountable for any thing he doth, as hath been ſhewed upon ſeveral occaſions offered in opening this Book. He is Lord of our being, and hath given to all life, breath, and all things, as the Apoſtle told the ſuperſtitious Athenians (Acts 17. 25.) and may not he do what he will to all beings, in whom all have their being; and who hath given all things to all which concern that being? He is our Maker, and hath not the Potter power over the Clay, to do what he will with it? Hath not the Creator power over the Creature, to diſpoſe of it as he pleaſeth? (Iſa. 45. 9.) Let the Potſheard ſtrive with the Potſheards of the Earth. If any will be ſtriving, let them ſtrive with their like; Potſheards with Potſheards, not Potſheards with the Potter, to whom they are ſo unlike. The Lord uſed no other argument but this to quiet all (Pſal. 46.10.) Be ſtill, and know that I am God; remember that, and you will either not begin, or quickly have done contending with God: Yet in that Pſalm the Lord is repreſented making moſt dreadful work, Come, behold the works of the Lord, what deſolations he hath made on the Earth. Though God make that which was as a Garden, to become a deſolate Wilderneſs, yet contend not with him; be ſtill, and know that he is God.

Secondly, Remember whatſoever work the Lord makes in the world, it is all righteous work; there is nothing amiſs in it. He is a Rock (ſaid Moſes, Deut. 32. 4.) His work is perfect, for all his ways are Judgments (not as Judgments are oppoſed to Mercies, but to Injuſtice, as it followeth in that verſe) a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he. To this David gives witneſs (Pſal. 145. 17.(The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. Not only is he righteous and holy in this and that way or work, but in all his ways and works; in ways of Judgment, as well as in ways of Mercy; in ways of deſtruction, as well as in ways of Salvation. He is righteous in pulling down, as well as in building up, in rooting up, as well as in planting. Now if there be a righteouſneſs in all the ways and works of God, who ſhall contend with him about any of his ways or works?

Thirdly, All the works of God have an infinite wiſdom in them; they are done wiſely, even in exacteſt wiſdom; and ſhall we fools contend with him, who is not only a wiſe God, but the God only wiſe (Rom. 16. 27.) and all whoſe works are done in, and according to the Idea or Platform of his own Infinite and Eternal Wiſdom. The fooliſhneſs of God (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 1. 25.) is wiſer than men; that is, the wiſeſt men are meer fools to God; or that work of God, which ſome men call fooliſhneſs, is infinitely more wiſely done, than the wiſeſt work that the wiſeſt men in the world ever did, or can do, with all their wiſdom.

Fourthly, Let all that fear and love God, eſpecially take heed of contending with God about any of his works; for God is good to all ſuch in all his works, and all his works are good to ſuch. Shall any contend with God about that which is for their own good? Not only are thoſe works of God good to ſuch which are good in themſelves, that is, which we call good, being favourable Providences, and for our comfort and ſupport in this world; but even thoſe works of God which we call croſs Providences, or Providences which bring the Croſs with them, are all good to ſuch, even to all them that love God, and are the called according to his purpoſe (Rom. 8. 28.) Shall they contend with God about any thing, who hear and may be aſſured, that he hath an intendment of good to them in all things? (Pſal. 73. 1.) Truly God is good to Iſrael; that is, though he afflicts them, and the Cup be very bitter which he gives them to drink, yet he is good to them. Or thus, Truly God, not the world (or though the world be not) is good to Iſrael. Once more, we may take the Pſalmiſt thus, Truly God is good to Iſrael, not ſo (as to them) to the world, though (as it followeth in the Pſalm) they enjoy never ſo much worldly good.

Theſe Conſiderations may perſwade all not to contend with God about his works, to which I ſhall add only this counſel: If the works of God are grievous to us at any time, let us go the right way to work in our Contendings with him. For I do not urge this point, as if we ſhould ſit ſtill, and let the Lord alone (as he ſeemingly ſaid to Moſes, Exod. 32. 10.) when he dealeth out hard and grievous things to us. There is a contending with God by ſupplication and prayer, by mourning and humiliation; this becomes us when the works of God are hard, when they are breaking, deſolating, ſcattering, and afflictive towards us. Take heed of diſcontent with Providence, yet wreſtle and contend earneſtly with God by prayer, when Providences go hard with you, or with the whole Iſrael of God. Moſes in a holy manner aſſaulted God, and contended with him in that caſe; and therefore the Lord ſaid to him (in the place laſt mentioned) Let me alone, as we ſay to a man that contends and ſtrives with us, Let me alone. Moſes was contending with the Lord about that Diſpenſation, but it was in a gracious way: and ſo may we, yea ſo muſt we. The Lord expects prayer in all ſuch caſes, which if it be (as it ought to be) earneſt and fervent, is a ſtriving, a contending with him, very pleaſing and acceptable to him. When the Providences of God were grievous to Jacob, and he feared they might be much more grievous to him, the Text ſaith he wreſtled with the Angel; but how was that? The Prophet Hoſea tells us (Chap. 12.4.) it was by weeping and making ſupplication. The Apoſtle uſeth the ſame expreſſion (Rom. 15.30.) I beſeech you brethren, that you ſtrive together with me in your prayers to God for me; that is, let you and I ſet our ſhoulders to it, wreſtling with God in the actings of faith for mercy. This is a dutiful contending with God, a bleſſed ſtriving with God; Let us ſtrive ſo, and we ſhall (as Jacob did) prevail with God, and obtain the bleſſing. We may warrantably and confidently venture upon this contention with God; as for any other, take heed of it, forbear it, why ſhould we meddle to our hurt, as the King of Iſrael cautioned the King of Judah, when he would needs be contending with him (2 Kings 14. 10.) The Lord may contend with us, and he will when we give him cauſe; yet he hath aſſured his people, that he will not contend for ever, nor be always wroth (Iſa. 57. 16.) But we muſt humble our ſelves under his mighty hand always (as the Apoſtle directs, 1 Pet. 5. 6.) and not contend with him at all, unleſs in the ſenſe and way laſt opened. It is as much our duty to let God do what he will, what he pleaſeth with us patiently, as to do readily whatſoever his will and pleaſure is.

Secondly, In that the Text ſaith, Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him?

Obſerve; They who contend with God, or are diſcontent with the works of God, ſeem to themſelves able to inſtruct and teach God.

That's the thing at the bottom which the Lord would convince Job of. Diſcontented perſons ſeem to ſay unto God, they could put things into a better way, if they had the handling of them; or that they could model the Government of the world more equally, if it were in their hands. Such is the pride and ſinfulneſs, or the ſinful pride of mans heart, that he thinks himſelf able to inſtruct God, and teach him to mend his work. Some have been ſo arrogant and preſumptuous, as to ſay, they could have mended ſome things in the natural Fabrick of the world, had they been the contrivers of it; and many have ſaid, at leaſt in their hearts (where the Fool ſaith there is no God) that they could mend the Providential Fabrick or courſe of it. Beware of theſe preſumptions. Remember, it is our duty to be inſtructed by God, to receive inſtruction from God. Woe to thoſe who would give him inſtruction (Job 22.22.) Acquaint thy ſelf now with him, and receive the Law at his mouth; that is, the rule of all thy actions, but do not give the Law to him. No man hath more need of inſtruction, than he who thinks he can give inſtruction to God. It is ſaid proverbially, when we ſee an inferiour, much more a ſmatterer in any Art or Science, offer to controul a perfect Artiſt; What, A Sow or a Swine teach Minerva! how much more may we ſay ſo of the moſt Learned, that controul God, or contend with him about his works! The works of God of every kind are ſo exact in every kind, that it is impoſſible to find any real defect or redundancy in them. To go about to mend them, is to mar them; to alter them, were to deface them. Thoſe things which men call or count the blemiſhes of Gods works, are the true beauty of them; and what they contend with him about, is the commendation of them, and the glory of his workmanſhip. And as at laſt Jeſus Chriſt will preſent the whole Body of Believers, or the perſons of all that believe, to himſelf a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing (Eph. 5. 27.) ſo he will at laſt repreſent the Providences of God, or his works of Providence, both in the Church, and all over the world, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing. Only here will be the difference, the Church will be preſented not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing (ſhe hath had her ſpots and wrinkles, and many ſuch things) But the works of God ſhall then be repreſented, as never having had any ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; that is, then it ſhall be made appear, that they were always without ſpot or wrinkle, altogether juſt, righteous and perfect.

Sus Minervam.

Further, From the whole ſentence, in that here we have an intimation of mans contending with God, and preſuming to inſtruct him, take theſe two Inferences from it.

Firſt; There is much pride in the heart of man.

There would never be any contending with God, were there not much pride in the heart of man; For (Prov. 13. 10.) only by pride cometh contention: If ſo, then where no pride is, there is no contention. There are indeed ſeveral other occaſions of contention; ſome out of covetouſneſs, others out of malice, contend with their Neighbours, yet all may be reſolved into this, the pride of mans heart; pride bears part with all the occaſions and cauſes of contention. It ſhould be matter of great humiliation to us, that our hearts are proud at all; but that they riſe even to ſuch a height of pride as produceth contention, and trying Maſteries (as it were) with God himſelf, how ſhould that humble us. And if to contend with man, our equal, be a ſymptome of pride, what is it to contend with God, who is infinitely above all men!

Secondly, Take this Inference from it. There is a great deal of folly bound up in the heart of man.

If man were not vain and fooliſh, he would not willingly do any thing that ſhould have the leaſt ſignification of a contention with God, much leſs that which can ſignifie nothing elſe. Solomon ſaith, fools will be medling; it is higheſt folly to be thus medling with Gods matters. Again, it is a ſufficient proof of our ignorance and folly, to attempt (in any way) to inſtruct God, or teach him, either what to do, or how to do; either when to do, or in what meaſure to do, or towards whom to do any of his works; but they who are unſatisfied with the works of God, and in that ſenſe contend with him about them, make an attempt always in ſome of theſe reſpects, ſometimes in all of them, to inſtruct and teach him: Is not their folly manifeſt to all men, who are not as fooliſh as themſelves? Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty inſtruct him?

He that reproveth God, let him anſwer it.

This ſecond part of the verſe is of near alliance to the former. Contending with God, is indeed a reproving of God: Theſe two Acts expound each other, yet more diſtinctly; to reprove ſuppoſeth:

Firſt, The finding of a fault.

Secondly, A rebuke given for that fault. There muſt be a fault found, elſe we cannot juſtly reprove; and a fault being found, we may juſtly rebuke the fault. So then, to reprove God, implies a finding of a fault with Gods works, and then a kind of rebuking God for that fault; and if all this be in a reproof, then to reprove God for any of his works, is a daring work indeed. I grant the word rendred reprove may be taken in a milder ſenſe, He that argueth or pleadeth with God: Our reading heightens the ſenſe of the Hebrew word, or takes it in the higheſt ſenſe, He that reproveth God,

Qui vult Deum arguere, aut cum Deo diſputare, reſpondeat ad unum aliquod eorum, quæ in medium attulit. Druſ.

Let him anſwer it.] That is;

Firſt, Let him anſwer the former queſtion, whether he be able to inſtruct God or no, or (according to the other reading) whether he doth not deſerve puniſhment for contending with God?

Secondly, Let him anſwer it, that is, let him anſwer all thoſe queſtions propoſed in the two former Chapters. As if God had ſaid, Job, thou haſt reproved my works, yet canſt not anſwer my queſtions. So Mr. Broughton carrieth the ſenſe; Let the reprover (ſaith he) of the Puiſſant ſpeak to any one of theſe things.

Thirdly, Let him anſwer it, that is, let him anſwer for ſo doing, let him bear his puniſhment. There is a twofold anſwering; Firſt, A Logical anſwering. Secondly, A Forinſecal anſwering. Or there is an anſwer in Schools, and an anſwer in Courts.

An anſwer in Logick is made three ways. Firſt, By denying. Secondly, By granting. Thirdly, By diſtinguiſhing or limiting the Propoſition and matter propoſed. Logicians in Schools anſwer by denying, or by granting, or by diſtinguiſhing. The diſtinguiſher grants ſomewhat, and denies the reſt.

An anſwer in Law, if the matter be criminal, is made by pleading guilty or not guilty to the Indictment. If the matter be civil, to anſwer, is to ſhew our right, to take off the charge, or defend our title. There is alſo an anſwering in Law by ſubmitting, and that two ways. Firſt, By ſubmitting to the mercy of the Court. Secondly, To the penalty of the Law.

Now, when the Lord ſaith in the Text, Let him anſwer it; I conceive we may take it not only in a Logical ſenſe, let him anſwer it (if he can) by reaſoning, but in a Court ſenſe, let him anſwer it by bearing the penalty of his raſhneſs and folly; as we ſay to one that hath wrong'd us, It ſhall coſt you dear, you ſhall anſwer it: I conceive (as was ſaid) we may underſtand it here both ways. Let him that reproves God, anſwer it, either as a Diſputant in Schools, or as a Defendant in Courts of Law; and if he cannot anſwer it as a Logician, by giving a reaſon for what he hath done, he ſhall certainly anſwer it in Court, by undergoing the penalty of the Law for what he hath done.

Some tranſlate thus, He that argues with, or reproves God, ought to anſwer it; that is, he muſt not think it enough to put in a charge, or to give a reproof, but he muſt make it good. He that reproveth a man ought to give a ground of his reproof; how much more he that reproveth God! The Text concludes it ſhould be ſo, yea, that it ſhall be ſo. He that reproveth God, let him anſwer it.

Hence note, Firſt; 'Tis dangerous, 'tis at our peril, to find fault with what God doth.

He that doth ſo, muſt and ſhall anſwer it; there's no avoiding it. There are two ſorts of reproving which are our duty. Firſt, The reproving of other men, when we have an opportunity and a call (Levit. 19. 17. Gal. 6. 1.) As all they who reprove God ſhall anſwer it; ſo many ſhall anſwer it, becauſe they have not reproved men. Secondly, It is a duty to reprove our ſelves, and a great point of wiſdom to ſee what is reproveable in our ſelves. Many are quick-ſighted at finding faults in others, but very blind as to finding out their own. I may add, it is both a great duty, and a ſign of much Grace, meekly to take and receive a reproof from others. Now, as it is our duty to take a reproof from others, when we have failed, and to ſee our own faults, and reprove our ſelves for them; as alſo wiſely to reprove others for the faults we ſee in them, ſo it is our ſin, danger and peril, to reprove God, in whom there is no fault, nor can be. And if any ſay, we never had a thought of reproving God, know, if you find fault with the works of God, you reprove God, to find fault with what God hath done to you, or your Relations, is to reprove God, and this you muſt anſwer, or anſwer for it. Will a Maſter in any Art, endure that an ignorant perſon ſhould find fault with his work? how then will the Lord take it, if men ſhall come into his great Shop, the World, and find fault with this and that, and the other work of his? There is no temptation that Satan our great Enemy doth more follow us with, than this, even to make us find fault with the works of God. There are theſe two things about which Satan labours much: Firſt, to keep us from finding out the faults of our own works, which are almoſt nothing elſe but faults. Satan would perſwade us that we have done all well, when we have done that which is altogether evil, or ſtark naught for the matter of it; and how doth he hinder us from ſeeing our faults. in the manner of our doing good works! he would not ſuffer us to have the leaſt ſuſpition that we may have done evilly, while we have been doing good. Secondly, Satans great buſineſs is to put us upon finding faults (where none are) in Gods works. Almoſt all the murmurings of the Sons of men ariſe from this miſconceit in man, that there is ſomewhat amiſs in the works of God towards them, or that he hath not dealt well and wiſely with them. This falſe and blaſphemous principle Satan would plant and water in the hearts of all men, as he did (to the overthrow of mankind) in the heart of the firſt man: This, this is his work; and he hath got a great victory over that ſoul, who either ſees not the faults of his own works, or finds fault with the works of God.

Nemo in officina audet reprehendere fabrum; & audet homo in hoc mundo reprehendere Deum? August. in Pſal. 145.

Further, theſe words, Let him anſwer it, may imply the Lords gentleneſs and mildneſs in ſpeaking to Job. The Lord doth not thunder againſt him, but ſaith, come let me ſee what you can anſwer, let me hear what you can ſay in favour of your ſelf, either to ſhew the equity of what you have ſaid in reproving me, or any iniquity in what I have done in afflicting you; I give you free leave to ſpeak for your ſelf. Some inſiſt much upon this ſenſe, and it may yield us this note;

God is very gracious in condeſcending to man.

He is willing we ſhould anſwer for our ſelves, and do our beſt to clear our ſelves, when we have done our works amiſs, or have ſpoken amiſs of his.

VERS. 3, 4, 5.

Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid,
Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth.
Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea twice, but I will proceed no further.

IN the former verſe, the Lord urged Job to anſwer; He that reproveth God, let him anſwer it. Job being thus urged by the Lord to anſwer, gave his anſwer, and the anſwer which he gave was this in general, That he could not anſwer: Or, we have here,

Firſt, An humble confeſſion of his utter inability to anſwer.

Secondly, His ſetled reſolution not to anſwer. His inability to anſwer, appears at the 4th verſe; Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. His reſolution not to anſwer, or only to give this for an anſwer, That he could not anſwer, is expreſſed in the 5th verſe; Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea twice, but I will proceed no further.

Jobs ſpirit, it ſeems, was much appaled by the Lords appearance to him, and immediate parley with him; his underſtanding alſo was much puzled, yea non pluſt, with thoſe many and intricate queſtions which God had put to him; and therefore he ſubmits, at once acknowledging he had done amiſs in his over-free diſcourſes before, and promiſing that he would run that courſe no more.

Verſ. 3. Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid,

What he ſaid by way of anſwer, followeth.

Verſ. 4. Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer?

Behold.] Job doth not conceal nor cover, but calls all eyes to the view of his own vileneſs. Behold. Let God behold, let Angels behold, let men behold, what now I my ſelf behold, that

I am vile.] The root of the word, which we tranſlate vile, ſignifies three things. Firſt, To be light, or of little weight; and becauſe light things are lightly eſteemed, therefore it ſignifies; Secondly, To be contemned, or that which is contemptible; and, Thirdly, Becauſe light things, and things contemptible, are alſo vile things; therefore, as we tranſlate, it ſignifies vile. As if Job had ſaid, I am light, I have no ſubſtance, no ſolidity in me, I am but as chaff, or, as a feather, I bear no weight, I deſerve no eſteem, no reſpect, I am vile. As the Hebrew word for honour and glory, is derived from a root which ſignifies heavineſs or weightineſs, whence the Apoſtles phraſe in the Greek tongue (2 Cor. 4. 17.) which we tranſlate, an exceeding weight of glory. Glory is ſuch a weighty thing, that we muſt have other manner of ſhoulders, other manner of ſtrength than now we have, before we can be able to bear the weight of it. Fleſh and blood, as it is unrefined, or meerly natural, would ſoon ſink under that weight. Now, I ſay, as glory and honour are expreſt by a word which ſignifies weightineſs; ſo that which is vile and contemptible, is expreſt by a word that ſignifies lightneſs, or to be light. Thus ſaith Job, Behold, I am light; or, Behold, I am vile.

קל Et levem & vilem ac contemptum eſſe ſignificat.

There are two other Tranſlations of theſe words, whereof the one refers to the ſpeeches, the other to the actions of Job.

Qui leviter loqutus ſum reſpondere quid poſſum. Vulg.

Firſt, The old Latine Tranſlation ſaith thus, I have ſpoken lightly; how ſhall I anſwer thee? Ours refers to his perſon, I am light, or, I am vile; that to his words, I have ſpoken lightly. To ſpeak lightly, or vainly, is to be vain and light. Some words have a great deal of weight in them: words of truth, words of ſoberneſs, holy words, gracious words, are weighty words; evil words, impertinent words, unprofitable words, ſpecially corrupt, filthy, ſinful words, are light words; how many words ſoever of thoſe ſorts any man ſpeaks, they are all light words, they have not a grain of goodneſs, and therefore not a grain of weightineſs in them. That's a good ſenſe.

Ἰδοὺ κούφως ἐποίησα. Ecce leviter feci. Aquila.

Secondly, One of the Greek Tranſlators renders, Behold I have done, or acted lightly. There is lightneſs in our actions, as well as in our ſpeeches. We ſay, ſuch a man is of a light, that is, of a vain carriage; and we ſay of another, he is a grave man, or there is gravity in his carriage. Thus ſome ſpeak and act gravely, or weightily; others ſpeak and act looſely, lightly. When Job ſaith, Behold, I am vile, it may take in both, I have ſpoken lightly, I have done lightly; and therefore I am light, therefore I am vile, or contemptible.

Cum nihil ſim. Sept.

Yet further; The Greek Septuagint tranſlates, I am nothing; they carry the ſenſe to the loweſt and leaſt imaginable: There is nothing leſs than nothing. How ſhall I anſwer thee, ſeeing I am nothing? All that I am is ſo light a thing, that I am nothing at all; that is, nothing of worth, nothing of value; I am of ſo little validity, that I have ſcarce any entity. From all theſe readings, we may fully gather up Jobs ſenſe in this ſelf-abaſing confeſſion, Behold, I am vile.

Laſtly, For the clearing of theſe words, conſider, we are not to underſtand Job when he ſaith, I am vile, as ſpeaking only with reference to his then preſent, ſad, ſorrowful, deplorable condition: ſometimes ſuch are accounted vile by men, who are low and mean in the eye of the world. Job did not count himſelf vile upon that conſideration, becauſe ſtript of all his worldly greatneſs, power and glory, health and ſtrength; he did not call himſelf vile, becauſe of the preſent Diſpenſation of God towards him, but he called himſelf vile, with reſpect to the common natural condition of mankind, or as he was a ſinful man, though his Providential condition had been never ſo good and proſperous. Behold, I am vile.

Hence obſerve; Firſt, Man at his beſt eſtate is vile.

David ſaith, he is even then altogether vanity (Pſal. 39. 5.) and what is vile if that be not? or what can he be viler than that which is altogether vanity? Man is vile;

Firſt, If we conſider the matter of his body: Was he not originally made of the duſt, and moulded out of the clay, which we tread upon, and trample under feet? In which ſenſe, among others, the Apoſtle (Phil. 3. 21.) calls our body a vile body; the materials of it being vile, it is alſo vile.

Secondly, Man is very vile, chiefly vile, through the ſinfulneſs both of his nature and life. Sin renders us vile indeed; corruption makes us of no reputation. Though man as to the matter of his body, might have been called vile in the day of his Creation, yet he had never deſerved that diminiſhing title, if he had not ſinned. Sin hath degraded man, and laid him low; ſin hath diſhonoured man, and made him vile, even viler than the duſt out of which he was made.

Thirdly, Man is vile, with reſpect to all thoſe evil conſequences and effects of ſin, which have poſſeſſed, or are ready to poſſeſs: Firſt, our bodies; ſuch are weakneſs, ſickneſs, pains, and all manner of diſeaſes. Secondly, our names; ſuch are reproach, infamy, and diſgrace. Thirdly, our eſtates; ſuch are poverty and want. Fourthly, our perſons; impriſonment and reſtraint. Fifthly, our ſouls; ſuch are blindneſs and ignorance in our minds, ſtubbornneſs in our wills, inordinacy in our affections. Theſe conſequences of ſin, as well as ſin it ſelf, eſpecially thoſe conſequences of ſin which are themſelves ſinful (as thoſe laſt mentioned are) render us vile.

From this firſt Obſervation, take theſe four inferences.

Firſt, If man be vile in that threefold reſpect before ſpoken of (he is ſo in many more) then let not any man prize himſelf much. We do not prize vile things without us; why then ſhould we much prize our ſelves who are vile? We are very apt to have thoughts of our ſelves beyond our ſelves, or to think of our ſelves beyond what is meet. Did we remember that we were vile, high thoughts of ſelf would ſoon down, and we would ceaſe from our ſelves, as well as from other men, ſaying, Wherein are we (men) to be accounted of? (Iſa. 2. 22.) The beſt man, of meer men, hath but a little breath in his Noſtrils, and he hath much ſin in his ſoul; wherein then, or for what (as a natural man) is any man to be accounted of? Did we know our ſelves more (underſtandingly) we ſhould know our ſelves leſs (valuingly.) In which ſenſe Job ſaid (Chap. 9. 21.) Though I were perfect, I would not know my ſoul. It is our ignorance, who and what we are, which cauſeth us to have high thoughts of our ſelves; as it is our ignorance, who and what Chriſt is, which cauſeth us to have ſuch low thoughts of him, and ſuch ſlow or ſlight deſires after him (Joh. 3. 10.)

Secondly, As becauſe we are vile, we ſhould take heed of prizing our ſelves much, ſo we ſhould more take heed of being proud of our ſelves at all. Indeed where the former is, where any perſon, man or woman ſets too high a price upon ſelf, it is very hard to abſtain from pride in ſelf; for, pride in ſelf, ariſes from over-prizing of ſelf: We firſt think too well of our ſelves, and then are lifted up in our ſelves. As it is through the power of faith, that our hearts are lifted up to God, and in God; ſo whenſoever our hearts are lifted up in our ſelves (glorying in our own attainments) or to our ſelves (gaping after our own ends) it proceeds from pride.

Thirdly, See the exceeding goodneſs of God, who hath put honour upon vile man. We have made our ſelves vile, and ſo we ſhould reckon our ſelves; yet the Lord is pleaſed to eſteem his people highly, and make them honourable (Iſa. 43. 4.) Since thou waſt precious in my ſight, thou haſt been honourable. Job was vile (as he confeſſeth) in his own ſight, yet he was precious in Gods ſight. And thus the Lord eſtimates all that are godly, all that are true believers, though vile and of no value in themſelves, nor in their own ſight, yet precious they are in his ſight; Since thou waſt precious in my ſight, thou haſt been honourable. We are never truly honourable, till precious in the ſight of God. There is a Bubble which the world calls Honour, a wind of fame, with which many are much affected, and with which ſome are inveſted, who are not at all precious in the ſight of God. The beſt, the trueſt honour, ariſeth from preciouſneſs in the ſight of God; they who are eſteemed by God, are indeed perſons of eſtimation. His Grace ſhewed favourably and freely to us, his Grace working mightily and effectually in us, puts a bleſſed worth upon us, though we are vile in our ſelves, and ſo accounted by the world.

Fourthly, See the goodneſs of God in this alſo, that though we are vile, yet he is pleaſed to ſet his heart upon us, and to mind us. We little mind vile things; light things, trifles, we ſlightly paſs by. We are but a light thing, a vile thing in our ſelves, yet God not only hath us in his heart, but ſets his heart upon us. Thus ſpake Job in the loweſt Ebb of his outward felicity, and he ſpake it admiringly as well as truly (Chap. 7. 17.) What is man, that thou ſhouldſt magnifie, and that thou ſhouldſt ſet thine heart upon him? When he ſaith, What is man? it is as if he had ſaid, Man is but a vile thing; yet the Lord is mindful of him, yea, magnifieth him. And though the Lord forbids us to ſet our hearts or affections on Earthly things, (Col. 3. 2.) on the beſt of Earthly things, all which are comprehended under that one word or title, Riches (Pſal. 62. 10.) And though the reaſon why he forbids us to ſet our hearts upon theſe things, is becauſe they are vile, yet he is pleaſed (O Infinite Goodneſs!) to ſet his heart upon us though we are vile, and conſidered as ſinful, much more vile than they, even than the vileſt of them. We have the like queſtion put again (Pſal. 144. 3.) Lord, what is man that thou takeſt knowledge of him, or the ſon of man, that thou makeſt account of him? What is man! 'Tis a diminiſhing queſtion, implying, that man is a vile thing, or a nothing. Is it not then a wonderful thing? is it not the fruit of rich and free grace, that God ſhould take an account, or make ſuch an account of man? And if God ſets his heart upon man; who is ſo vile, how ſhould man ſet his heart upon God, who is ſo infinitely excellent! God may be ſaid to deſcend, ſurely he condeſcends exceedingly, when he ſets his heart upon vile man. The Lord humbleth himſelf (ſaith David, Pſal. 113.6.) to behold (that is, to take any notice of, or to take into his conſideration) the things that are in Heaven, and in the Earth; how much more doth he deſcend, condeſcend and humble himſelf, when he ſets his heart upon vile man! Now, doth God ſet his heart upon vile man (which is an humbling to him) and ſhall not vile man ſet his heart upon the great and glorious God, which is not only his duty, but his felicity, his honour, and exaltation!

Again, Job ſaith, I am vile. What was Job? a godly man ſure, a holy man by Gods own teſtimony, yet even he ſpeaks at this low rate of himſelf, Behold, I am vile.

Hence note, Secondly; The better we are, the leſs we eſteem our ſelves; and ſtill the better and better we grow, the lower are our thoughts of our ſelves.

There is no greater argument of height in Grace, than low thoughts of ſelf. Next to Faith in Chriſt, Self-denial, or to deny our ſelves, is the great duty of the Goſpel (Mat. 16.24.) Now, as to deny our ſelves is to be very low in our own eyes, ſo it is one of the higheſt acts of Grace in us, and requires not only truth of Grace, but much ſtrength of Grace to act it. And hence it comes to paſs, that the higher and ſtronger any are in Grace, they are ſtill lower and leſſer in their own ſight, becauſe true height and ſtrength of Grace works the ſoul to more ſelf-denial. And therefore, as a godly man is vile, ſo he is made more ſenſible of his own vileneſs, the more he increaſeth in godlineſs; ſo that if any have low thoughts of him, he hath lower of himſelf. None can think him lower in truth, than he thinks himſelf; I am light, ſaith he, I am vile. Though he well underſtands his ſtate, his priviledge, and his intereſt in Chriſt through grace, and underſtands it ſo well, that he values it above all the world, and would not part with it for the whole world, yet he is ſtill vile in his own eyes, and low in his own rate-books. Abraham the chief of believers, ſaid (Gen. 18.27.) Behold, now I have taken upon me to ſpeak unto the Lord, who am but duſt and aſhes. So David (2 *Sam.*7.18.) What am I? and what is my fathers houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? How ſenſible was he of his own vileneſs, who ſpake thus, who yet was a man after Gods own heart, and the beſt of Kings?

Further, Conſider the time when Job was brought to this humble confeſſion and acknowledgment of his own vileneſs; he had not ſpoken thus before, but was much in juſtifying himſelf, eſpecially as to the ſincerity of his heart and ways, and he did it even to offence; but the Lord having dealt roundly with him, he crys out, I am vile.

Hence, obſerve; The dealings of God with man aim moſtly at this great mark, to humble him, and to make him ſee his own vileneſs.

We quickly ſee, or are quick-ſighted to ſee and take notice of any good in us, or done by us, to make us proud inſtead of thankful; but we are dull of ſight to ſee or take notice of that in us, or done by us, which may humble and lay us low: And therefore we put God to it to ſhew us our vileneſs, by ſevere and humbling Diſpenſations. There are two great things which God would bring man to: Firſt, To make him know how vile he is: Secondly, To make him know how excellent, how glorious himſelf is. The Lord never left battering Job by afflictions, and following him with queſtions, till he brought him to both theſe points; Behold, I am vile (ſaith he in this place) I know thou canſt do every thing, and that no thought can be withholden from thee, ſaid he afterwards (Chap. 42.2.) in which words he highly exalted God, in the glory both of his power and wiſdom. As one great purpoſe of the Goſpel is to exalt man, and lift him up unto a moſt glorious condition in and through Chriſt; ſo another great purpoſe of the Goſpel is, to lay man low in himſelf, or to take him quite off from his own bottom. The Apoſtle often inſiſts upon that, as one grand deſign of the Goſpel with reſpect to man (1 Cor. 1.26.) Ye ſee your calling, Brethren, that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, &c. are called. He tells us at the 29th verſe why it is ſo, Even that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence. But (ver. 31.) that according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. All the dealings of God, both in Law and Goſpel, both in his Providences, and in his Ordinances, tend to bring man off from, and out of himſelf; and till that be effected, neither Ordinances nor Providences have their due effect upon him. We muſt come to Jobs acknowledgment, that we are vile, that we are nothing, and that God is all to us in Chriſt, before we are Chriſtians indeed.

Fourthly, The former diſcourſe ſheweth, that God was come very near to Job, he ſpake to him out of the Whirlwind, his appearance was very dreadful: And then Job cryed out, Behold, I am vile.

Hence obſerve; The more we have to do with God, and the nearer God comes to us, the more we ſee, and the more we are made ſenſible of our own vileneſs.

Unuſqui que ſibi dum tactu veri luminis illuſtratur, oſtenditur. Greg.

Man is clearly diſcovered and known to himſelf, when he beholds God in the ſhinings of Divine Light, and not till then. Job was higher in his own thoughts than became him, till God came thus near to him; and when God came yet nearer to him, and diſcovered himſelf (as he afterwards did) yet more fully to him, then Job did not only ſay (as here) I am vile, but I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes. This firſt approach of God in ſo eminent and illuſtrious a way or manner, wrought much upon him, but the ſecond more. The light of God ſhews us our darkneſs, the power of God our weakneſs, his wiſdom our folly, his purity our uncleanneſs, his Majeſty our vileneſs, and his Allneſs or All-ſufficiency being ſeen, gives us to ſee our utter deficiency and nothingneſs. Still in proportion to the nearneſs of God to us, or our nearer and clearer apprehenſions of him by Faith, we are carried further out of, and further off from our ſelves; and thus 'tis in our attendance upon God in the Ordinances of worſhip. The reaſon why many come to Ordinances with proud hearts, and go away proud is, becauſe they have little or no Communion with God in them by Faith, or God doth not manifeſt himſelf to them by his bleſſed Spirit. They who have ſeen the power and glory of God in the Sanctuary (as David profeſſed he had ſometimes done, and longed to ſee it again (Pſal. 63.1,2.) they will ſay with the ſame David (Pſal. 131.1,2.) Lord, our heart is not haughty, nor our eyes lofty, our ſoul is like a weaned child.

Laſtly, Job was waiting for the goodneſs of God to him, or for deliverance out of his ſad condition; and doubtleſs he was convinced, that the moſt probable way to it, was to leave off contending with God, and to be found humbling himſelf before him, in this or a like confeſſion, Behold, I am vile.

Hence note; There is nothing that doth more ſweeten and mollifie God (or, I may ſay, any ingenuous Adverſary) towards us, then an humble acknowledgment of our own vileneſs and unworthineſs.

Sciebat Jobus contra ſpiritum humilem inermem eſſe Dei manum

When our hearts are truly humbled, mercy and deliverance are at hand. Job was no ſooner made deeply ſenſible of his vileneſs, but mercy came in. The only skill of this excellent Wreſtler (as one calls him) was to caſt himſelf down at Gods foot. There is no way to get within God, and to prevail with him, but by ſubmitting to him. The Lord layeth down his Rod, when we lay down our Pride; and caſts his Sword out of his hand, when we caſt our ſelves at his feet. And in all our afflictions, whether Perſonal or National, till we acknowledge (not formally, but in a deep ſenſe of our own vileneſs) that we are vile, in vain do we cry for deliverance, or hope for mercy. When we are loweſt in our own eyes, we are neareſt to our Exaltation; when once we ſay in our hearts we are nothing, we deſerve nothing, we have ſpoken lightly, we have done lightly, Salvation will not tarry. (1 Pet. 5.7.) Humble your ſelves under the mighty hand of God, and he will lift you up in due time. If we would be lifted up out of any affliction, we muſt be at this humbling work. We ſhall never work (as I may ſay) upon the Heart of God, unleſs we are thus at work with our own hearts, or till this work be done upon our hearts. Our great work lies within, eſpecially in a day of tryal and tribulation, ſuch as Job was in. Job was ſpeedily reduced to his former honour and greatneſs, when once (through grace) he had wrought his heart to this confeſſion. Behold, I am vile;

What ſhall I anſwer thee?] As if Job had ſaid, Truly I have nothing to anſwer thee; Thou, O Lord, haſt given ſuch demonſtrations of thy greatneſs, of thy power, of the excellency of thy wiſdom, of thy goodneſs, that I have nothing to ſay, but this, that I can ſay nothing. What ſhall I anſwer thee? I know not what to anſwer, or I have nothing to anſwer. As in a great ſtrait, when we know not what to do, we uſually ſay, What ſhall we do? So here, it ſheweth that Job was no way able to anſwer, when he ſaid, What ſhall I anſwer? The Hebrew is, What ſhall I return, or turn back? We may exemplifie this paſſionate interrogation, by that of the Patriarch Judah (Gen. 44.16.) when Joſeph would have detained Benjamin (having found the Cup in his Sacks mouth) Judah ſaid, What ſhall we ſay unto my Lord? what ſhall we ſpeak? or how ſhall we clear our ſelves? Here are three queſtions to ſhew that he had nothing to anſwer. Firſt, What ſhall we ſay to my Lord? Secondly, What ſhall we ſpeak? Thirdly, How ſhall we clear our ſelves? Truly, we know not what to ſay, nor ſpeak, nor how to clear our ſelves. The plain truth is, we have nothing at all to anſwer for our ſelves, but to yield our ſelves to thy mercy. Thus Job, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee, the great God, the holy God, the mighty God, the wiſe God? what ſhall I anſwer thee?

Hence note; When God is Opponent, no man can be Reſpondent?

God can put ſuch queſtions, and make ſuch objections, as no man is able to anſwer. Thus ſpake Job at the third verſe of the ninth Chapter; If he (that is, God) will contend with him (that is, with man) he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand: Which implieth, that not only not one among very many men, but that not one among all men, or that not any man is able to anſwer, if God will contend. The Apoſtle ſaith of all men in a ſtate of ſin (Rom. 3. 19.) We know, that what things ſoever the Law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the Law; that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God. If the Lord ſhould make objections againſt, or charge ſinners, according to the ſtrictneſs and ſeverity of the Law, the beſt, the holieſt of men could not find an anſwer, or no anſwer would be found in their mouths: how much leſs could any anſwer him, who not only were altogether born in ſin, as all are, and as the proud Phariſees told the poor man in the Goſpel he was (Joh. 9. 34.) but abide and continue in ſin? How will the mouths of all ſuch be ſtopt with a ſenſe of their ſelf-guiltineſs? how mute, how anſwerleſs will they ſtand before God? or ſay, as Job in the Text (but in a ten thouſand times ſadder plight than he) What ſhall we anſwer? It is the happineſs of humbled ſinners that they have Chriſt to anſwer for them, ſeeing in that caſe no ſinner can anſwer for himſelf. And ſuch is the Majeſty and glory of God, when it breaks forth in any caſe to a poor Creature, that it leaves him quite anſwerleſs, and takes away not only all matter of diſpute, but of ſpeech; and therefore Job reſolves upon ſilence, as appears by what he ſaith in the laſt clauſe of this verſe.

I will lay my hand upon my mouth.] As if he had ſaid, That all may ſee I know not what to anſwer, I will ſtop up the conveyance of anſwers. What this Scripture phraſe, to lay the hand upon the mouth, imports, hath been opened (Chap. 21. 5.) In brief, Jobs meaning in reſolving thus was, as if he had ſaid, I will impoſe ſilence upon my ſelf. Or thus, Lord, thou ſhalt not need to ſilence me, or to ſtop my mouth, I will do it my ſelf; I know not what to anſwer thee; but if I did; if I could gather up ſomething that might look like an anſwer, yet I will not anſwer, I will lay my hand upon my mouth.

Further, when he ſaith, I will lay my hand upon my mouth, it may imply, that he would fain have been anſwering, though he could not tell what to anſwer. The tongue, if left at liberty, if not checkt, will be making anſwers, when it cannot anſwer any thing to purpoſe; and therefore as David ſaid (Pſal. 39. 1.) I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. So would Job here, while the Holy One was before him, fearing he might further give offence, while he went about to take off offences. The tongue of a good man needs a bridle; and the better any man is, the more he bridles his tongue.

Conſtituo linguæ licentiam perenniter coercere.

Job had offended with his tongue; though he had not ſpoken wickedly, yet he had ſpoken raſhly and inconſiderately, and now he ſaith, I will lay my hand upon my mouth.

Hence note; We ſhould be very watchful over that which hath been an inſtrument or an occaſion of ſin.

He that hath offended with his mouth, ſhould lay his hand upon his mouth, and take order with his tongue: It is better to be ſilent, than to offend in ſpeaking. Pambo (as the Church Hiſtorian reports) confeſſed, that in forty nine years he had ſcarcely learned the meaning of, or the duty contained in the firſt and ſecond verſes of the thirty ninth Pſalm, concerning the due reſtraint and government of the tongue.

Socrates l. 4. Hiſt. Eccleſ. cap. 18.

Secondly, Note; It is neceſſary ſometimes to abridge our ſelves in what we may do, leſt we ſhould do what we may not.

Hoc ſupplicii genus linguarium appellant. Sanct.

This is a holy revenge; and it is one of thoſe ſeven effects of godly ſorrow which works repentance, not to be repented of (2 Cor. 7. 11.) We ſhould (in ſome caſes) forbear to ſpeak at all, for fear we ſhould ſpeak amiſs. They who are truly wiſe, are much aſham'd to ſpeak, when once they ſee their errour in ſpeaking, or how apt they are to err in ſpeaking; and therefore lay that penalty upon their tongues, either to ſpare ſpeaking, or to ſpeak very ſparingly. 'Tis ſeldom that the tongue is left looſe, but it ſpeaks looſly, and it often ſpeaks thoſe things which give occaſion of offence both to God and man. As all iniquity ſhall (at laſt) ſtop her mouth (Pſal. 107.42.) that is, evil men (the Abſtract is put for the Concrete) ſhall be ſo aſhamed and confounded for their evil deeds, that when they are charged with them, or convinced of them, they ſhall hold their peace, as if their mouths were ſtopped, or like the man that came to the Feaſt in the Goſpel without his Wedding-garment, they ſhall be ſpeechleſs (Now, I ſay, as all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth for ſhame) ſo it is good for the beſt ſometimes to ſtop their own mouths, for fear they ſhould ſpeak any iniquity. This godly fear, as well as a gracious ſhame, for what he had ſpoken amiſs before, cauſed Job to ſay, I will lay my hand upon my mouth, which reſolve he further confirms in the next verſe.

Verſ. 5. Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea, twice, but I will proceed no further.

Agnoſcit ſe imparem eſſe ſuſtinendæ diſputationi cum Deo, illo ſummo & æterno bono. Pro unum & duo licet vertere ſemel & bis; ſic אחת בשנה ſemel in anno intrabit Pontifex ſanctum ſanctorum. Levit. 16. 34. Druſ.

Once have I ſpoken.] That is, once have I ſpoken amiſs: not that he never ſpoke but once, for he had ſpoken often; but once he had ſpoken amiſs, and been too forward with his tongue.

But I will not anſwer.] That is, I will not ſpeak ſo again. But had Job ſpoken amiſs but once? he confeſſeth more in the latter part of the verſe.

Yea, twice, but I will proceed no further.] Once, yea twice. Some Interpreters are much in ſhewing what that once or twice ſpeaking ſhould be.

Firſt, Some ſay it was that he ſo importunately deſired to plead with God. Secondly, Others, that he did ſo much juſtifie himſelf; for though he did well in maintaining his integrity, yet his over-doing it, or being ſo much in it, was not well. Others, That his once was his complaining of the afflictions of the godly, eſpecially of his own, as if they were too heavy, and he not weighed in an evil ballance, at leaſt afflicted more than needed. That his twice, was his heightning the proſperity of the wicked, as if God favoured them; at leaſt, that he did not puniſh them as they deſerved, nor ſhew diſpleaſure enough againſt them. But we need not ſtay upon ſuch particulars, nor take once and twice ſtrictly. This expreſſion, once, yea twice, implies only, that he had ſpoken often; I have ſpoken not only once, but twice; that is, I have ſpoken ſeveral times amiſs. The firſt ſtep beyond once is twice; and who knows how much beyond twice he had ſpake? when he ſaid, once have I ſpoken, yea twice, the meaning plainly is, I have ſeveral times ſpoken amiſs. We had this form of ſpeech (Job 33. 14.) where Elihu told Job, that the Lord ſpeaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not; that is, he ſpeaks often, in a dream, in a viſion of the night, and man underſtands not the meaning of it. So here, I (ſaith Job) have ſpoken once, yea twice, or many times.

But I will proceed no further, or I will not add, ſaith the Hebrew. I will no more Apologize for my ſelf, nor ſtand in

Yyyy

in my own defence (for in ſo doing, I ſhall ſtand in my own light) but lay my ſelf low in the preſence of God. As if he had ſaid, My ſin is already too great, in that I have divers times ſpoken too boldly and freely, if not preſumptuouſly about thy proceedings, but I will refrain from offending in that kind any more. The ſum of all that Job had ſpoken may be thus conceived. Now Lord I confeſs to thee, and before all the world, my ſin and folly in queſtioning any of thy dealings with me, inſtead of ſubmitting to them, eſpecially in urging a hearing of my cauſe in thy preſence: Therefore I revoke my challenge, and caſt my ſelf at thy footſtool, acknowledging my ſelf (in compariſon of thee) every way vile and baſe, utterly unable to ſatisfie any of thy demands. And, as I my ſelf purpoſe, ſo I humbly beg leave of thee, that I may be ſilent. I grant all that thou haſt ſaid of thy own greatneſs, and of my vileneſs, and I bewail my over-daring raſhneſs: I will not defend pertinaciouſly, what I have ſaid unadviſedly; and to make ſure of that, I am reſolved to ſay no more; leſt carried out in heat of ſpeech, I ſhould heat my paſſions; leſt, multiplying words, I ſhould multiply my errours, and ſo daſh againſt the ſame Rock again.

Firſt, In that Job confeſſeth once have I ſpoken, yea twice.

Note; A good man may fall often.

Once, and more than once, once and twice, yea, more than twice. We cannot limit the number, nor ſay to this or that number the failings or ſinnings of a good man may come, and no further. Though it be very ſad to multiply ſins, yet the beſt of men have multiplied them.

From the latter words, I will proceed no further.

Note, Secondly; Though a good man may fall often, yet a good man will not take leave to ſin often, no nor once.

He will not give himſelf a liberty to proceed or continue in ſin. When he hath ſinned once or twice, he does not ſay, poſſibly I may ſin again, therefore what ſhould I trouble my ſelf about it? who knows how often any man may ſin? no, though he knoweth not how often he may ſin, yet he will not give himſelf liberty to ſin, not only, not knowingly, but not at all, once more; but ſaith, in the ſtrength of Chriſt, I will proceed no further, I will do ſo no more, A gracious heart is ſo far from taking liberty to ſin often, that he takes up a reſolve not to ſin, and will to the utmoſt watch againſt, and keep himſelf pure from ſin, eſpecially from his ſpecial ſin; as David did, who ſaid (Pſal. 18. 21.) I have kept my ſelf from mine iniquity. As if he had ſaid, There is an iniquity which dogs me, and follows me, a ſin which eaſily beſets me; but I have kept my ſelf, to the utmoſt of my power, from falling into that iniquity. And, I ſay, though a good man may multiply iniquity, yet woe to thoſe who give themſelves ſcope to multiply iniquity, or to commit any one iniquity. The voice of true repentance is this, I will ſin no more. Though I deny not, but a man who hath truly repented of ſome particular ſin, and ſincerely purpoſed not to commit it any more, may (being over-powred by corruption and temptation) be overtaken with the ſame ſin again; yet the voice of true repentance is this, and thus the penitent ſoul ſpeaks in truth, I will ſin no more, I will proceed no further.

Again, Job had been confeſſing his fault, his failings, Once have I ſpoken, yea twice. The words are a penitent confeſſion, or the confeſſion of a Penitent. Now, ſaith he, I will proceed no further.

Hence note, Thirdly; When ſins and failings are heartily and penitently confeſſed, they are not perſiſted nor perſevered in.

He that hath really confeſt his ſin, will (to his utmoſt) put a ſtop to his ſin; he will be ſo far from renewing or continuing in it, that he ſets himſelf might and main (and prays in aid from God) againſt it. True confeſſion of ſin is always ſeconded and followed with forſaking of ſin. The Prophet calling the people of Iſrael to repentance, ſaid (Iſa. 1. 16.) Ceaſe to do evil. It will not avail us to ſay, we have done evil, unleſs we ceaſe to do evil. The promiſe of mercy is not to bare Confeſſors, but to thoſe who are alſo forſakers of ſin (Prov. 28. 13.) He that confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſin, ſhall find mercy (Prov. 30. 32.) If thou haſt done fooliſhly, lifting up thy ſelf, or if thou haſt thought evil, lay thy hand upon thy mouth, do no more; that is, do not open thy mouth to ſpeak a word in defence of it, do not put forth thy hand any more to act it. Every unfeigned confeſſion of any one ſin, is a real profeſſion againſt that, and againſt all other ſins. That man (let him be who he will) is not a confeſſor of ſin to God, but a mocker of God, who confeſſeth a ſin, and takes no care to keep himſelf pure, not only from that, but from every ſin. The Apoſtle John doth not only ſay, Whoſoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; but, he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God (1 Epiſt. 3. 9.) Not that he hath not a natural power to ſin; but he hath not a will, a mind to ſin, or he ſins not with the full conſent or ſwinge of his will, or he hath a ſincere bent of will againſt every ſin, and would ſin no more. How wicked and bent to back-ſliding were thoſe Jews, to whom the Lord ſaid by his Prophet (Iſa. 1. 5.) Why ſhould ye be ſtricken any more? ye will revolt more and more. The will of a wicked man is wholly for ſin: the will of a godly man (as ſuch) is wholly againſt ſin; ſo that when he ſinneth, he may be ſaid to ſin againſt his own will, as well as againſt the will of God; and therefore, being convinced that he hath ſinned, though but in paſſion, or by impatient words (as Jobs caſe was) he gives his honeſt word for it (as Job here did) that he will proceed no further.

Confeſſio peccati eſt profeſſio deſinendi peccare. Hilar. in Pſal. 136. Irriſor eſt non pœnitens, qui adhuc agit quod pœnitet. Bernard.

In theſe three verſes, Job hath ſhewed his repentance for his unwary ſpeeches, and exceſſes in language; he hath confeſſed his own vileneſs, and ſits down as ſilenced by God, yea, as impoſing ſilence upon himſelf. Thus he is got a good way in the work of Humiliation; yet he was not come quite through, he had not yet made ſuch a confeſſion of his ſin, nor was his heart ſo humbled as it ought to be, before God would raiſe him up; and therefore in the following part of this Chapter, and in the next, God ſets upon him again, and ſpeaks to him a ſecond time out of the Whirlwind. The Lord had begun to humble him, and Job had begun to humble himſelf, yet the Lord deals further with him to humble him more, and ſpeaks to him again out of the Whirlwind: What again out of the Whirlwind? Yes; Then anſwered the Lord unto Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid, &c.

And not only ſo, but after the Lord had put many queſtions to him about himſelf, as before about ſeveral Creatures, he had a reſerve of two Creatures more to queſtion with him about, that would more aſtoniſh him than all the reſt, Behemoth and Leviathan.

Thus we ſee, when once the Lord begins to humble a ſoul, he will make through work of it, and never give it over, till he hath brought him to the duſt indeed. Job was ſo far humbled, that he had no more to ſay unto God; but God had much more to ſay unto Job, and all for this end, that he might humble him more, as will appear in opening that which followeth.

VERS. 6, 7, 8.

Then anſwered the Lord unto Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid,

Gird up thy loyns now like a man; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

Wilt thou alſo diſannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous?

IN the former verſe Job gave out in the plain Field, confeſſing himſelf overcome, not by rigour and force of arms, but by reaſon and ſtrength of argument, or rather by that which is above all reaſons and arguments, the Soveraign Power and Authority of God; and thereupon he reſolved to meddle no more, to anſwer no further; and that, though he had ſpoken once, yea twice, yet he would not proceed, he would add no more, he had enough of it, he had already ſpoken too much, much more (with reſpect to God) than came to his ſhare. Hereupon the Lord, at this ſixth verſe, begins again to ſpeak and anſwer him; and his Anſwer is contained and continued quite through this fortieth Chapter, together with the whole one and fortieth, and in it we may conſider theſe four things diſtinctly.

Firſt, A Preface, at the ſixth verſe; Then anſwered the Lord unto Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid.

Secondly, We have here a Challenge, at the ſeventh verſe, Gird up thy loyns now like a man; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

Thirdly, We have in this Anſwer of God, a reproof of Job, or a vehement expoſtulation with Job, in the eighth and ninth verſes; Wilt thou alſo diſannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous? Haſt thou an arm like God? canſt thou thunder with a voice like him? Thus he expoſtulates, thus he reproves.

Fourthly, We have here a large proof or demonſtration of the Greatneſs, Power, Wiſdom, and Soveraignty of God; for the further conviction and humiliation of Job. And this proof or demonſtration of the Power of God is laid down two ways.

Firſt, By his Providential actings, in deſtroying proud and wicked men. This we have in the 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 verſes; Deck thy ſelf now with Majeſty and Excellency, and array thy ſelf with Glory and Beauty; caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath, and behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him. As if the Lord had ſaid, theſe things I do; I look on every one that is proud, and bring him low, I tread down the wicked in their place, &c. All this I can do, and do in my Providences daily; Job, canſt thou do ſo too? Thus we have a proof of the great Power and Soveraignty of God taken from his Judiciary proceedings with proud men.

Secondly, He gives a proof of his great Power by a double inſtance, from the work of Creation; as in the former Chapter by the works of Providence alone, ſo here by the works of Creation and Providence too. And this double inſtance is given in two great vaſt living Creatures; one of them the greateſt upon the Earth, the other the greateſt in the Waters.

The firſt is Behemoth, the vaſteſt Creature that breaths upon the Earth, who is deſcribed from the 15th verſe of this Chapter, to the end.

The ſecond is Leviathan, the vaſteſt Creature in the Water, who is deſcribed quite through the one and fortieth Chapter. The Lord having ſpoken of many other Creatures formerly, in the forming and ordering of which, his Power and Wiſdom ſhine forth; he reſerved theſe two to cloſe with, that Job by the conſideration of them, might ſee what a poor thing himſelf was, and how unable to grapple with the great God, who made thoſe great Creatures; for that is the general iſſue. If God hath made ſuch huge Creatures as theſe, then what a one is God! how mighty and powerful is God! what is the cauſe, if the effects are ſuch? what is the fountain, if we ſee ſuch ſtreams? Such is the drift of God in this his laſt anſwer to Job, and theſe are the parts of it. We may ſum up all in this brief; here Humane Weakneſs and Divine Power are compared together; mans nothingneſs, with Gods Allneſs or All-ſufficiency, that ſo man (Job in ſpecial) might be convinced, and conclude that he could no more charge God with any fault, than he was able to reſiſt his power.

So then, this whole Oration or Diſcourſe tends to the confirmation of Job, yet more, in believing the irreſiſtible Providence of God; which when he ſhould well underſtand, he would no more doubt of his Juſtice, nor accuſe his judgments of ſeverity, nor would he any more deſire to debate with God as he had done.

Nor can theſe things be preſſed too often upon the holieſt among men, man being not only by nature altogether unbelieving, but having ſo much unbelief mingled with his graces, as ſad experience teacheth him at all times, eſpecially in times of great affliction and temptation. So much of the whole anſwer, and the ſtate of it; now for the particulars.

Verſ. 6. Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid.

Then.] That is, when Job ſaid he could not, or he would not anſwer, or had no more to anſwer, Then, the Lord anſwered; or, to go a little further.

Then.] When Job had humbled himſelf, and ſaid he was vile, even then the Lord anſwered him, and he anſwered him out of the Whirlwind.

Then the Lord anſwered Job.] Not ſo much to his ſpeech, as to his ſilence; for Job reſolved to ſay no more, yet the Lord anſwered; and the Lord anſwered him

Out of the Whirlwind.] At the firſt verſe of the 38th Chapter, we read of this Whirlwind, and of the Lord anſwering out of it.

What a Whirlwind is, was there opened, and ſeveral points of obſervation given from it, which I ſhall not now at all touch upon, nor meddle with; and yet, though the words in this 6th verſe of the 40th Chapter, are the very ſame with thoſe in the firſt verſe of the 38th Chapter, yet from their placing and their repeating here, we may profitably take notice of ſome things for our inſtruction.

Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the Whirlwind, and ſaid.] The Whirlwind being here ſpoken of a ſecond time, 'tis queſtioned by ſome, whether this were a Whirlwind of greater force, or of leſs than the former, or the ſame. The ground of the Query is from a little variation which is in the Hebrew Text. In the 38th Chapter an Article is prefixt to the word Whirlwind, which (ſay ſome) intends the ſenſe, noting it to be a very vehement Whirlwind: But in the 40 Chapter, that Article is left out; upon which they collect, that this latter Whirlwind was not ſo fierce, nor ſo vehement as the former. But this is only a conjecture; nor can any thing be ſolidly grounded upon ſuch Grammatical differences; yea ſome, notwithſtanding that defect of the Article, conceive the Whirlwind here in this Chapter, was more vehement than that in the former Chapter. But I ſhall not ſtay about that Query, nor diſcourſe any thing concerning the nature of the Whirlwind, which was toucht before at the 38 Chapter, but ſhall Obſerve, Firſt; God hath terrible ways of revealing himſelf, as well as ſweet and gentle ways.

To ſpeak out of a Whirlwind, is a dreadful manifeſtation. The Whirlwind, and ſpeaking out of it, notes a legal diſpenſation, or a miniſtration of terrour, ſuch as the Law was publiſhed in, of which we read in the 19th of Exodus, which was ſo terrible (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 12.) that Moſes himſelf ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake. The Lord hath his Mount-Sinai diſpenſations, in thunder and lightning, and with a terrible voice; and he hath alſo his Mount-Sion diſpenſations in ſweet and precious promiſes, and Goſpel-Ordinances; he hath his beſeechings, his intreatings, his wooings, his invitings. Divine diſpenſations vary. 'Tis ſaid (1 King. 1.6.) in the Hiſtory of Eliah, that when the Lord appeared, there was an Earthquake, and the Lord was not in the Earthquake; there was a mighty wind, and the Lord was not in the wind; there was fire, and the Lord was not in the fire: At laſt, there came a ſtill ſmall voice, and there the Lord was. The Lord waved the dreadful manifeſtation of himſelf, by Winds, Tempeſt, Thunder, Fire, Earthquake, and came only in a ſtill voice. The reaſon why the Lord doth thus variouſly diſpenſe himſelf, ſometimes in a Whirlwind, ſometimes in a gentle Gale, is to anſwer the ſeveral tempers and ſpirits of men; where the ſpirits of men will not bow, the Lord knows how to break and bring them down; and where the ſpirits of men are already bowed and broken, humbled and melted, the Lord knows how to comfort and confirm them: He will not break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax. And when it is ſaid, He will not break, the meaning is, he will bind up and ſtrengthen the bruiſed reed: And when it is ſaid, He will not quench, the meaning is, he will blow up and kindle the ſmoaking flax, that is, weak believers, or ſouls afflicted under the ſenſe of their own weakneſs and ſinfulneſs, or ſinful weakneſſes.

As 'tis a great part of the wiſdom of the Miniſters of the word, to divide the word aright, that is, to give every one a portion ſuitable to his condition (they muſt ſpeak to ſome, as it were, in a Whirlwind, in the Whirlwind of the Law; they muſt ſpeak to others in a ſtill voice, that of the Goſpel; they muſt threaten and terrifie ſome, comfort and refreſh others) So the Lord himſelf deals; he hath many ways of humbling the Creature, and as many ways of comforting the Creature; he ſpeaks in a Whirlwind (as I may ſay) when he threatens in the Law, he ſpeaks dreadfully, ſometimes by his Providences and Judgments (there's a voice in them) he ſpeaks terribly to us in our own perſonal afflictions, and when under ſad diſpenſations. All this is, as it were, a ſpeaking in the Whirlwind. And he ſpeaks graciouſly, winningly, and comfortably, or to the hearts of his people, even when he leads them into the Wilderneſs (Hoſ. 2. 14.) The Apoſtle ſaith, Knowing the terrour of the Lord, we perſwade men; that is, we perſwade men by the terrour of the Lord: and ſo, knowing the goodneſs and the mercy of the Lord, we perſwade men; that is, we perſwade them by the goodneſs and the mercy of the Lord. I (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 12. 1.) beſeech you by the mercies of God, preſent your bodies, &c. Of ſome we muſt have compaſſion, making a difference; and others ſave with fear (Jude verſ. 22, 23.) that is, we muſt put them in fear, that they may be ſaved; or (as I may ſay) ſcare and fright them to heaven.

th:

Secondly, Conſider, who it is that the Lord ſpake to in a Whirlwind; he ſpake to Job.: and who was Job? ſurely a very godly man, a man that feared God, a man that had a very noble teſtimony from God himſelf, and yet here God ſpake to Job himſelf in a Whirlwind.

> Hence note; The beſt of men may ſometimes need the terrible appearances of God, to humble them, and to bring them to a due confeſſion of their ſins.

Certainly God would not have ſpoken to Job in a Whirlwind, if there had not been cauſe for it; he would not have ſpoken twice in a Whirlwind, if there had not been double cauſe for it. The Apoſtle Peter ſaith (1 Eph. 1. 6.) Te are in heavineſs through manifold temptations (that is, afflictions and tryals) if need be. We ſhould never feel any affliction from the hand of God, never be in heavineſs, if there were not need. There is need that the holieſt in this world ſhould ſometimes be made heavy, or that heavineſs ſhould be upon them for a time. We ſhould always have calms and fair weather, never any ſtorms, nor tempeſts, nor whirlwinds from God, did not our needs call for it. As we every day need bread, which is therefore called by Chriſt our daily bread; ſo moſt days we need a Rod, either the Rod of his mouth to reprove us, or the Rod of his hand to chaſten us: And we do ſo, eſpecially for theſe reaſons.

Firſt, To bring us into a deep ſenſe of our own vileneſs, to humble us, to lay us low.

Secondly, To make greater impreſſions upon our hearts, of the Power and Soveraignty of God, of the Holineſs and Righteouſneſs of God. It is, that we might know our ſelves more, and that we might know God more, that God ſpeaks to us in whirlwinds, in terrible diſpenſations.

Further, As this is a ſecond whirlwind, as it is a ſecond ſpeaking to Job, a good man, in a whirlwind;

> Obſerve; God will not give over terrible diſpenſations and appearances, till he hath brought man to his purpoſe.

God hath an end, a purpoſe in every work, and every work of his goeth on, till he hath attained his purpoſe. As the word which goeth out of the Lords mouth ſhall not return unto him void, but ſhall accompliſh that which he pleaſeth, and proſper in the thing whereto he ſends it (Iſa. 55. 11.) So the work which God takes in hand, ſhall not be in vain, but ſhall proſper to the purpoſe for which he undertakes it. Now if any ask what is the purpoſe of God in Whirlwind Diſpenſations? that was ſhewed before, even to make us more humble, and to have higher thoughts of God in every reſpect.

But ſome may ſay, Job had very low thoughts of himſelf before he had ſaid, I am vile; doubtleſs Job ſpake this in great humility: why then doth the Lord ſpeak to Job in a whirlwind again, ſeeing he was truly humbled at his firſt ſpeaking?

I anſwer, Though Job was humbled, yet he was not humbled enough, he was not yet laid low enough, nor melted down enough; and therefore God ſpake to him in a whirlwind again. It would not ſerve his turn, barely to ſay I am vile, God muſt have more of him than that, he muſt make a fuller confeſſion of his fault than that; God brought him at laſt to ſay, I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes, which is a deſcription of deepeſt humiliation. Now becauſe Job was not come to that, but had only ſaid, I am vile (though there was matter of great humiliation in that) the Lord queſtions with him again in a whirlwind. This ſhould be of great conſideration to us in any day of affliction.

For if God hath not his purpoſe in bringing the firſt affliction, we ſhall be ſpoken to in a whirlwind a ſecond time. We are apt to wonder and think it ſtrange, that God ſhould ſpeak terribly to us ſo often, that he ſhould renew our afflictions, and make us new croſſes. We think, if we do but make a light confeſſion of our ſins, and ſay, we are vile; preſently the ſtorm ſhould ceaſe, and the affliction be removed. Let us not deceive our ſelves, Job had ſaid he was vile, yet God continued the ſtorm, becauſe he was not yet low enough. 'Tis not enough for us that we are truly humbled. As there muſt be truth in our humiliation, ſo there muſt be depth in it; for queſtionleſs, when Job ſaid before, I am vile, he did not diſſemble with God, he was hearty in it, and ſpake his heart; what he ſpake was from his very ſoul, and in ſincerity, he did not complement with God, he did not flatter God with his mouth, nor lye unto him with his tongue, as the Iſraelites did (Pſal. 78. 36.) his heart was right with God, as theirs was not (ver. 37.) yet becauſe his ſpirit was not come down as it ſhould, therefore he muſt be awakened and humbled more with another whirlwind, he muſt be further ſchool'd, that he might give further glory to God in his own abaſement.

> And hence we may infer; If the Lord ſpake thus to Job, and may ſpeak thus terribly to any good man, once and again? Then with what terrour, in how dreadful a whirlwind, will God at laſt ſpeak to all the wicked of the world?

If he ſpake out of a whirlwind to a Job, a gracious godly man, what will that whirlwind be out of which he will ſpeak to a Pharaoh, to prophane and hard-hearted ſinners! As our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſaid of himſelf in the Goſpel, If it be thus done to a green tree, what ſhall be done to the dry? If God hath whirlwinds for his Jobs, for his own people, who are as green flouriſhing trees in grace and holineſs; what will he do with the dry ſticks of the world? And I may argue it as the Apoſtle doth (1 Pet. 4. 13.) If judgment begin at the Houſe of God, what ſhall the end be of them that obey not the Goſpel? what ſhall their end be? no man is able to ſay, no nor to conceive how ſad it will be. Judgment begins at the Houſe of God; God will not ſpare his own Houſe, nor his own Houſhold, he will not ſpare his Servants and Children when they ſin; he is no cockering Father, he will correct his own Children; he will not only ſweep his houſe, but he will ſhake his houſe; and he ſhakes it, becauſe it is no better ſwept, nor kept more cleanly. And if for theſe, and ſuch like reaſons, we at any time ſee Judgment beginning at the Houſe of God, we may ſay with aſtoniſhment, What will the end of thoſe be who obey not the Goſpel! What will become of the wicked and ungodly, of thoſe who openly prophane and blaſpheme his Holy Name! O what appearances ſhall they have of God, and how ſhall they appear before God! We read in the 25th of Jeremy, of a Bowl of blood given him to carry about to the Nations. A terrible Meſſage he is ſent about; he carries a Cup of Blood about, and bids the Nations drink, they muſt drink it; and ſaith the Lord, If they ſhall refuſe to take the Cup at thy hand to drink, then ſhalt thou ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, ye ſhall certainly drink: Why? For loe, I begin to bring evil upon the City which is called by My Name; and ſhall ye be utterly unpuniſhed? As if the Lord had ſaid, I have brought evil upon Jeruſalem, upon my own people, and they have drunk very deep of that bitter Cup; and do you, O ye Uncircumciſed Nations, think that you ſhall eſcape? We may conclude, the Lord hath a terrible ſtorm to bring upon the wicked and ungodly of the world, when we hear him ſpeaking to his own people in whirlwinds. Conſider this ye that forget God (as ſuch are admoniſhed, Pſal. 50. 22.) leſt he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver. For our God ſhall come, and ſhall not keep ſilence; a fire ſhall devour before him, and it ſhall be very tempeſtuous round about him, as 'tis ſaid at the third verſe of that Pſalm. And Then, as 'tis threatned (Pſal. 2. 5.) ſhall he ſpeak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure. That ſpeaking will indeed be ſpeaking out of a whirlwind, which ſhall hurry them away into everlaſting darkneſs.

Thus far of the manner of Gods ſpeaking to Job the ſecond time; it was ſtill out of the whirlwind. Now followeth the matter ſpoken, or what he ſpake to him.

> Verſ. 7. Gird up thy loyns now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

I ſhall add but little about this verſe, becauſe we have had it almoſt word for word (Chap. 38. 3.) where the Lord thus beſpake Job, Gird up now thy loyns like a man, for I will demand of thee, and anſwer thou me.

Theſe words this ſecond time ſpoken or repeated by God to Job, fall under various apprehenſions, theſe four eſpecially.

Firſt, Some look upon them meerly as a Challenge ſent of God; Gird up now thy ſelf like a man; come ſtand to thy work, or rather ſtand to thy word, do thy beſt.

Secondly, Others expound them as an irony or divine ſcorn, put upon Job to humble him. Come, Gird up thy loyns like a man; don't flinch for it, ſtand to it, thou wilt ſurely make good the day with me.

Thirdly, Many (in a milder ſenſe) look upon theſe words meerly as Counſel given to Job; as if the Lord had ſaid, I mean to deal further with thee; therefore come now, prepare and addreſs thy ſelf to the buſineſs; I give thee leave to make the beſt thou canſt of thy cauſe.

Eſto bono animo, &c.

Fourthly, We may take theſe words, as ſpoken to Job for his comfort and incouragement. The Lord ſeeing him as it were ſinking, and refuſing to ſpeak, ſaith to him, be not troubled, be of good chear man, Gird up thy loyns like a man. As the words are taken for a Challenge, and under the notion of a ſcorn put upon Job, I ſhall not ſtay upon them.

This phraſe (Gird up thy loyns) was opened at the 38th Chap. 'tis a metaphor taken from Travellers, or thoſe that go about any buſineſs; who wearing long garments, uſed to gird them up, that they might be more expeditious, whether for labour or for travel.

Thus the words are matter of Counſel and incouragement given to Job, and under that notion I ſhall note two things from them.

Firſt, As they are words of counſel, the Lord having further buſineſs with Job, or more to do with him, adviſeth him to gird up his loyns like a man.

Hence obſerve; When we have to do with God, we ſhould put out our ſelves to the uttermoſt.

To gird up our loyns like a man, imports our beſt preparation; and ſuch preparation we need for every holy duty. When we are to pray, we had need gird up our loyns like men, for then we are to wreſtle or ſtrive with God, we muſt work it out with God in the duty of prayer; and if our garments hang looſe, that is, our affections be upon the Earth, and our hearts in the corners of the world, how can we prevail with God in prayer? we muſt gird up our loyns like men, when we declare our deſires and requeſts to God in prayer, and expect that God ſhould anſwer us. The holy Prophet complained of the Jews failing in this (Iſa. 64. 7.) There is none that calleth upon thy Name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee. Doubtleſs many called upon God in thoſe days, but they did not ſtir up themſelves to take hold of God by Faith, and ſo their prayers went for no prayers. And when we go to hear the word (wherein God deals with us) we had need gird up the loyns of our minds, elſe we cannot mind the word while we hear it, nor remember, much leſs practiſe the word which we have heard. The Scripture often calls us to preparation for every duty: What can diſcompoſed perſons, looſe-ſpirited perſons, looſe-loyn'd perſons do with God, or for God? When we have any thing to do with God, any thing to do for God, we ſhould do our beſt, and be at our beſt, we ſhould play the men. Mr. Broughton expreſſeth it well, though not clear to the words in the Original, Let me ſee thy skill, or how skilfully thou canſt handle the matter with me. The Lord would have us ſhew our skill when we have any thing to do with him, or to do for him; we ſhould then play the men, and not the children, much leſs ſhould we play the fools, be ſlothful, ſluggiſh, and careleſs.

Eſpecially we ſhould do this with reſpect to the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt in the great day of our account: Chriſt himſelf gives the rule, Stand with your loyns girt, and your lamps burning, as thoſe ſervants that wait for their Lords coming. When Chriſt our Lord comes, all muſt come before him, but none ſhall be able to ſtand before him, but they who ſtand with loyns girt; that is, who are ready, and in that readineſs wait for his coming.

Secondly, Taking theſe words as words of incouragement; Gird up thy loyns like a man; Poor heart, do not faint.

Note; When God intends and purpoſeth to humble his people moſt, he would not have them deſpair in the leaſt.

When God lays them in the duſt, he would not have them ſink in deſpair, but be of good cheer. God loves to ſee his people humbled, but he doth not love to ſee them dejected. As God would have us ſenſible, ſo comfortable. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, ſaid the Lord (Iſa. 40. 1.) when he ſaw they were ready to ſink, he commanded comfort to be ſpoken to them. He gives Cordials and Reſtoratives, when he is ſpeaking out of a whirlwind; and therefore he ſaid to Job, Gird up thy loyns like a man.

But however the Lord is either counſelling or comforting Job in theſe words, he checks and reproves him in the next.

Verſ. 8. Wilt thou alſo diſannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous?

Theſe are words of reproof, and a very great reproof they are. Here the Lord begins to chide, and expoſtulate with Job.

Wilt thou.] 'Tis a quick kind of ſpeech; ſuch Queſtions have much ſpirit and life in them. How now Job, Wilt thou diſannul my judgment?

But what is meant by diſannulling, what by the Judgment, that God ſaith Job was about to diſannul?

To diſannul, is to make void, to fruſtrate, to break a thing, ſo as it ſhall not ſtand in any ſtead, or be of any force; it is applied to the breaking of an Oath, to the breaking of a Covenant, and to the diſappointment of counſels and purpoſes. Read Num. 30. 14, 15. 1 Kings 15. 19. Jer. 33. 20. Pſal. 33. 10, 11. Iſa. 8. 10. Thus ſaith the Lord, Wilt thou diſannul, or make void my Judgment?

Irritum facere eſt ſimplex verbum contrarium verbo confirmandi, aut ratum firmumque aliquid faciendi.

The Septuagint render it as a Negative Command, Do not thou repel or reſiſt my Judgment. An Ancient Greek Tranſlator renders it as we, by way of Queſtion, What, wilt thou repel or oppoſe my Judgment? The word is applied to great ſinnings (Ezra 9. 13.) And after all this that is come upon us, &c. ſeeing our God hath given us ſuch deliverance as this, ſhould we again break thy Commandments, &c. But did Ezra think, that after that they ſhould no more break the Commandments? Taking a breach of the Commandments barely for ſinning, he could not expreſs it ſo; therefore by breaking the Commandments, he means diſannulling the Commandments: What is that? 'Tis ſo to break the Commandments, as if we would reſcind and repeal them. There is ſuch a kind of ſinning, as if men would not only ſin againſt the Law, but ſin the Law away, or out of doors, as if men would ſin the Bible out of the world: that's the meaning of the word there, If we ſhall again break thy Commandments; for it followeth, and joyn in affinity with the people of theſe abominations. 'Tis not breaking the Commandments by any ſin, but to ſin ſo as if we would make them all void, and reverſe the Statutes of Heaven. Thus the word is uſed by David (Pſal. 119. 126.) which doth much clear the ſenſe of this Text, Lord, it is time for thee to work; Why? for they have made void thy Law. 'Tis the ſame word here in Job, They have diſannulled thy Law. 'Tis high time for God to awake, to beſtir himſelf, and look to men, when they come to this height of ſinning, to make void and diſannul his Law, by ſetting up their own luſts. Some would even enact their own luſts, and throw down the Law of God. That's the ſignificancy of the word here uſed; ſaith God to Job, Wilt thou diſannul my Judgment? Wilt thou make it void, or break the courſe of it? Wilt thou change it, and put or introduce ſomewhat of thine own in the room and place of it, as ſome gloſs the words? Wilt thou diſannul

Μὴ ἀποποιῦ μȣ̃ τὸ κρίμα. Ne repellas judicium meum. Sept.
Ἢ ἀποποιῇ μȣ̃ τὸ κρίμα. Numquid repelles judicium meum? Symmach.

An etiam mutabis judicium meum? Targ.

My Judgment?] Judgment, I conceive, in this place is taken for that courſe of adminiſtration which God uſes in the world, whether with particular perſons, or with Nations. As if the Lord had ſaid, Thinkeſt thou thy ſelf not only able to comprehend the reaſon of all my adminiſtrations towards thy ſelf or others, but wilt thou alſo preſume to ſubject them to thy will and wiſdom; as if thou couldſt adminiſter them with more equality and righteouſneſs, or to better purpoſe than I have done? The courſe or way of Gods diſpenſation, is Gods Judgment; and 'tis called his Judgment:

Firſt, Becauſe it proceeds upon the higheſt reaſon, upon the cleareſt acting of judgment and underſtanding; and in that ſenſe 'tis always Judgment. For God is a God of Judgment (Iſa. 30. 18.) That is, of the higheſt reaſon and underſtanding in all matters that he doth.

Secondly, 'Tis called Judgment, becauſe oftentimes theſe adminiſtrations are as a ſentence pronounced and given out by God, whether againſt particular perſons or Kingdoms, and ſo have Judgment in them, that is, wrath and puniſhment. Judgment is often put for puniſhment. In this ſenſe we are to underſtand it here. Wilt thou diſannul my Judgment? particularly with thy ſelf. I have taken this courſe with thee, I have brought all theſe afflictions upon thee, I have broken thy Eſtate, I have broken thy body, I have broken thy ſpirit; this is the courſe I have taken with thee: wilt thou diſannul this courſe that I have taken with thee? ſurely thou ſhouldeſt not, I know thou canſt not. So then, the Lord expoſtulates thus with Job, as if he would have croſſed all his proceedings and dealings with him, or would have reſcinded as it were the Sentence and Decree of God concerning him. Wouldeſt thou have me to change either the matter, manner, or meaſure of thy Chaſtnings? No, my will, not thine, ſhall be the rule of them. Wilt thou diſannul my Judgment? Now from this ſenſe of the words,

> Note, Firſt; It is impoſſible to reverſe, reſcind, or diſannul the Judgment of God.

The Lord ſpeaks to Job as attempting a thing beyond himſelf, or beyond his power. What, ſaith the Lord, wilt thou diſannul my Judgment? ſurely thou wilt not venture at that, thou wilt not offer that; 'tis more than thou or any man can do. The Lords Judgment, or the way which he will take with any man, no man can ſuperſede or ſtop; no man can hinder him in it. What the Lord determines, what he gives forth, it ſhall ſtand. Balaam could ſay (Numb. 23. 20.) The Lord hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it. The Judgment of the Lord at that time towards Iſrael, was a Judgment or Sentence of Favour and Mercy; therefore ſaith Balaam, The Lord hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it. And if the Lord gives out a Sentence of affliction, or commands a croſs upon any man, who ſhall reverſe it (*Pſal.*33.10.) The Counſel of the Lord ſhall ſtand, and the thoughts of his heart to all Generations. They ſhall ſtand; who then ſhall make them fall? The ſentences or judgments of men are often diſannulled by men, and they may always be diſannulled by God (*Lam.*3.38.) Who is he that ſaith, and it cometh to paſs, when the Lord hath not commanded. The Lord can diſannul all the judgments of men, of the wiſeſt men in the world; but none can diſannul the Lords Judgments, and make them void. There are but two ways by which the Judgment, that is, the Sentence, or the reſolution and purpoſe of a man is diſannulled.

Firſt, By the power of the party againſt whom the Judgment is given. Sometimes there is a Sentence given againſt a man, which comes to nought, 'tis made void; why? there's no power can execute it upon him: David ſpake much in that language, Ye Sons of Zerviah are too hard for me.

Secondly, Sometimes the Judgments of men are diſannulled by a Superiour Authority; one Court recals or takes off the Judgment of another: But neither of theſe ways can the Judgment of God be diſannulled. If God give out a Sentence againſt a perſon, his Power, how powerful ſoever he is, ſhall never hinder the execution of it; though he be (as it's ſpoken in Amos) as high as the Cedar, and as ſtrong as the Oak, yet he ſhall not hinder the Judgment of God. And as there is no man hath power of arm, or of arms, to hinder the Judgment of God; ſo there is no Authority Superiour to, or above Gods. There's no Court above the Court of Heaven, to which Appeal may be made, to get Gods Sentence diſannulled, or his Judgment reverſed; therefore the Judgment of God cannot be diſannulled.

And ſeeing the Judgments of God, as taken for the Sentence which he hath declared againſt ſinners, ſuch as that (Rom. 2. 9.) Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul that doth evil, &c. cannot be diſannulled; what cauſe have we to bleſs God for Chriſt, who hath endured that Judgment in his own perſon, which could not be diſannulled nor made void; and hath alſo (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Col. 2. 14.) blotted out the hand-writing of Ordinances that was againſt us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his Croſs. Yet

> Obſerve, Secondly; The Judgments of God are by him accounted as diſannulled, or made void by us, when we do not ſubmit to them, nor humble our ſelves as we ought under them.

This was Jobs caſe. Why doth God ask him whether he would diſannul his Judgment? ſurely, becauſe he had made many complaints (as hath been ſhewed in this Book) about the dealings of God with him: The Lord interpreted this as a diſannulling of his Judgment. If we are not ſatisfied with the Judgment of God, though it be a Judgment of anger and diſpleaſure towards us, we, as much as in us lies, diſannul the Judgment of God. Let us often remember this, The way of Gods proceeding with us, his way of adminiſtration towards us, is his Judgment; now if it be a way of affliction, if he ſpeak terribly to us, let us take heed of complaining, leſt we be found diſannulling his Judgment. We may come under the compaſs of this Charge before we are aware. As for inſtance;

If we ſhall ſay, we could bear any Judgment but this, any affliction but this; this is to diſannul the Judgment of God. Let us ſay, whatever the affliction is, it is beſt for us, and God hath moſt righteouſly brought it upon us.

Again; If we ſhall ſay, we could be patient even under this Judgment of God for the matter of it; but when we conſider the degree of it, that it goes ſo far, and wounds ſo deep, who can bear it? Thus Job complained (*Chap.*6.2.) Oh that my grief were throughly weighed, and my calamity laid in the balances together; for now it would be heavier than the ſand of the Sea: therefore my words are ſwallowed up. It was not ſo much the matter of his affliction, as the degree, or weight, or extremity of it, which put him to thoſe grievous complaints. Now if we are not patient and quiet under that very degree of the Judgment which God is pleaſed to heighten it unto, this is a diſannulling of his Judgment; therefore let us take heed of complainings upon that account.

Yet further, Others will ſay, If this Croſs had been for a ſhort time, we could have born it; but it hath been long upon us already, and we know not how long it may continue, we can ſee no end of it. Take heed of theſe complainings; for this alſo is to diſannul the Judgment of God, if we find fault with the length of the Croſs. Though we may cry with the ſouls under the Altar, How long, Lord, how long, yet we muſt not ſay it is too long.

Laſtly, There is this alſo at which many are much troubled, and ſo even diſannul the Judgment of God; for, ſay they, if it were but in ſome one thing that we were afflicted, we could bear it; but we are afflicted in body, and afflicted in mind, and afflicted in our children, and afflicted in our eſtate, we are afflicted in our credit, and in all our comforts; if it had been in ſome one thing, we could have ſat down quietly under it; but now it's affliction all over. Take heed, for this alſo is to diſannul the Judgment of God. And if any of theſe be to diſannul the Judgment of God, how ſoon may we do it? And if they are not, as to either, free from this charge, who ſhew ſome impatience and trouble of ſpirit under the ſeverer dealings of God, what ſhall we ſay of thoſe who openly murmure, and even rage againſt them?

Thirdly, Wilt thou diſannul my Judgment?

> Note; God takes it as a high affront, and a diſhonour, when his Judgment is touched, or when his Judgment is not quietly ſubmitted to.

Wilt thou, ſaith he, What! diſannul my Judgment! The Apoſtle ſaith, Let God be true, and every man a lyar. Let the Judgment of God ſtand, though we fall.

Fourthly, Conſider what a huge boldneſs it is in a Creature, to do or ſay any thing which may be interpreted a diſannulling of the Judgment of God.

Fifthly, Conſider how ſinful a thing it is for any to go about to croſs the adminiſtration of God. Somewhat we may do, in all the Judgments or ſad Diſpenſations of God; we may pray about them, and we may in an humble ſubmiſſion expoſtulate with God about them; but we muſt take heed of an unquiet ſpirit under them, or of any riſings of heart againſt them: Pray we may about them earneſtly, inſtantly, and importunately, and the more the better, yet ſtill quietly ſubmit; and the more quietly we ſubmit to them, the more fit we are to pray to, and wreſtle with him about them, that he in his own good time, and in his own way, would remove them from us. Wilt thou diſannul my Judgment ?

Wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous ?

Theſe words may be taken as an Expoſition of the former. As if the Lord had ſaid, Either I muſt be condemned, that thou mayſt be righteous, or thou muſt be condemned, that I may be righteous; now whether it be meet that I or thou muſt be condemned, do thou judge. While thou inſiſteſt ſo much upon thine own Innocency, thou ſeemeſt to caſt blame upon my Juſtice. Either I have wronged thee by afflicting thee without juſt cauſe, or thou haſt wronged me by intimations that I have done ſo: One of theſe muſt needs be true, ſeeing there is no middle between them. Conſider then which is moſt probable, that I have wronged thee, or thou me. Theſe are immediate contraries; ſo that the one being granted, the other muſt be denied. Now wilt thou accuſe me of injuſtice in afflicting thee, that thy cauſe may be eſteemed juſt ?

But did Job ever accuſe or condemn the Lord?

I anſwer, Not directly (as hath been ſhewed heretofore) It never came into Jobs heart to accuſe God of unrighteouſneſs: but becauſe by ſome miſunderſtood ſpeeches of his, they about him judged he had; therefore the Lord put this queſtion home to him, that he might exonerate and clear himſelf. The only matters in which he might ſeem to condemn God as unrighteous, was his ſpeaking ſo much of his afflicting the righteous, and proſpering the unrighteous; or his inſiſting ſo much upon the defence of his own righteouſneſs before men, ſeemed to derogate from, or intrench upon the righteouſneſs of God. So then Job did not intentionally caſt any aſperſion or blot upon the Juſtice of God; he only intended, in what he ſaid, to ſhew that the affliction that was upon him, was not for his ſin, but for his tryal, when he ſpake ſo much of his own righteouſneſs; and yet becauſe he was a little too laviſh in ſpeech, and too paſſionate, the Lord here puts this queſtion to him, Wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous ? 'Tis I that juſtifie thee, and wilt thou condemn me? The Lord is righteous, and all men are unrighteous; and ſhall any man do that which caſts a note of unrighteouſneſs upon God? Wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous ?

Hence note, Firſt; He that is much in the juſtifying of himſelf, when he is under the Judgment or afflicting hand of God, doth upon the matter condemn God.

Job was much in juſtifying himſelf, though not with an intention to condemn God, yet the very action ſpake this in the opinion of others, that he thought himſelf not righteouſly dealt with, or at leaſt rigorouſly dealt with. He that maintains his own right too much in affliction, chargeth God with wrong, though he never meant it: And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Let God be true, and every man a lyar. A godly man in a good frame, though he cannot charge himſelf with any crime, nor is conſcious of any way of wickedneſs, that he hath lived in, yet approves and juſtifies the Lord in all his dealings with him; and therefore we muſt take heed (it is a tender point) how we juſtifie our ſelves, eſpecially under the afflicting hand of God. If we juſtifie our ſelves, there is ſomewhat of condemnation caſt upon God; therefore ſtill you ſhall find that the holieſt ſervants of God in their Confeſſions charge all upon themſelves. Righteouſneſs belongs to God, but to us ſhame and confuſion of face. So ſpake Ezra, and ſo ſpake Daniel. It is very dangerous to, and we quickly may reflect upon the Juſtice of God, and derogate ſomewhat from him, by our juſtifying of our ſelves.

Deum injuſtitiæ accuſare videbatur qui juſtos affligeret. Merc.

Obſerve, Secondly; 'Tis our duty in all things whatſoever God doth, to juſtifie him.

As it is the higheſt grace which God manifeſts to the Creature, to juſtifie man. It's God that juſtifies, who ſhall condemn? So it is one of the moſt excellent duties of man, to juſtifie God. It is a high grace of God to man, to juſtifie man; but it is only the duty of man to juſtifie God in all things. Let him do what he will with perſons or Nations, let him break them all to pieces, let him lay all waſt and deſolate; in all this we are to juſtifie God. We ſhould rather be willing to appear ſinful, and that we are puniſhed for our ſins and evil deeds, than ſo much as in appearance to queſtion or make the leaſt doubt of the Juſtice of God, or give others the leaſt ſhadow of an occaſion to queſtion or doubt it.

In dubio ſemper adverſum nos pro duo ſentiendum eſt. Merc.

That of the Schoolmen bears much weight in this caſe, If (ſaith he) two are equal, and a fault is to be laid upon one of them, it is not reproveable if one of them purge himſelf of the fault charged, although he be blameable in the opinion of others; becauſe man naturally loveth himſelf more than another. But where there is ſo great a diſtance as between God and man, man ſhould rather take the blame to himſelf, though unjuſtly laid on him, than caſt it upon God; which he cannot do but unjuſtly. And therefore God in arguing with Job, propoſeth the ſuperlative excellency of himſelf above man.

Aquinas.

Obſerve, Thirdly; We ſhould be much in judging our ſelves.

Wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous ? Thou ſhouldeſt condemn thy ſelf, and judge thy ſelf; thy judgment is upon a wrong object. Self-judgment is good, but judging of God, oh how ſinful is that (1 Cor. 11. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. Our buſineſs is to judge our ſelves, and for not judging of our ſelves, it is, that we meet with ſo many judgments from the hand of God. Therefore God judgeth us, becauſe we do not judge our ſelves. And therefore let every mouth be ſtopt; it ſhall be ſo at laſt as the Apoſtle concludes (Rom. 3. 18.) Every mouth ſhall be ſtopt, and all the world ſhall become guilty before God. We are ſelf-guilty, and therefore ſhould be ſelf-condemned. 'Tis a dreadful thing in one ſenſe to be ſelf-condemned, as it is ſpoken of the Heretick (Tit. 3. 11.) He is condemned of himſelf: He is condemned of himſelf, while he doth juſtifie himſelf. 'Tis the worſt of condemnations, to be condemned of our ſelves, by juſtifying of our ſelves; but it is good to condemn our ſelves, in judging or in humbling our ſelves. David was much in ſelf-cenſuring and ſelf-judging, when he found himſelf envying the proſperity of the wicked, and ſaid, he had cleanſed his heart in vain, he ſoon after cenſures himſelf for both (Pſal. 77. 22.) So fooliſh was I and ignorant, even as a beaſt before thee. As if he had ſaid, what a fooliſh Creature am I thus to condemn God in his proceedings, and to talk of my own Innocency? Let us not boaſt of, but (as Mr. Calvin expreſſeth it upon the Text) let us win our ſpurs by condemning our ſelves: For that is the only way to honour and exalt God. If we would get honour to our ſelves, it muſt not be by conteſting with God, but by humbling our ſelves before him; there's no obtaining with God, by contending with him, much leſs by condemning him.

VERS. 9.

Haſt thou an arm like God? or canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

THe Lord at the ſixth verſe of this Chapter, entered upon a vehement expoſtulation with Job, to humble him, and bring down his ſpirit; and that Job might be thorowly humbled, here the Lord in this ninth verſe ſheweth what a diſparity there was between himſelf and Job, as before in his righteouſneſs, Wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayſt be righteous? art thou more righteous than I? So here in his power;

Verſ. 9. Haſt thou an arm like God? canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

As if the Lord had ſaid, Let me ſee what thou canſt do, or whether thou canſt do like God, ſeeing thou carrieſt thy ſelf ſo unlike a man? That's the ſcope and tendency of this ninth verſe, as of thoſe that went immediately before.

The whole verſe conſiſts of two convincing queſtions. The firſt in thoſe words; Haſt thou an arm like God? The ſecond in theſe, Canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

Haſt thou an arm like God?] The arm, properly taken, is a noble and an eminent limb, or member of mans body.

Nor hath any Creature, nor is any Creature ſo much as ſaid to have an arm but man. And ſome may ſay, ſeeing the arm is a bodily member, how can God, who hath no body, be ſaid to have an arm? I anſwer; 'tis true, God is a Spirit, without diſtinction of parts; yet frequently in Scripture, as humane paſſions, ſo bodily parts are aſcribed to God improperly, or by a figure. And becauſe the arm is a ſtrong and noble member of mans body, that member by which man puts forth the greatneſs of his ſtrength, that member by which he doth and atchieves great things; therefore the arm in Scripture ſignifies power, and is the Embleme of might and ſtrength. In this Language the Lord threatned old Eli the High-Prieſt (1 Sam. 2. 31.) Behold the days come that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy fathers houſe,&c. that is, I will take away thy power, and the power of thy family. Thus (*Zech.*11.17.) Woe to the Idol Shepherd that leaveth the Flock, the ſword ſhall be upon his arm; that is, his power ſhall be broken, and he made uſeleſs, as that man is whoſe arm is wounded. And as the arm notes Miniſterial Power, ſo Magiſtratical Power, whether abuſed or rightly uſed (Job 35.9.) They cry out by reaſon of the arm of the Mighty; and (Chap. 38.15.) The high arm ſhall be broken.

Now as the arm is put for the power of man, ſo for the power of God (Pſal. 98. 1.) O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done marvellous things; his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory. Read alſo (Iſa. 59. 16. and Iſa. 63. 12.) and here in the Text, Haſt thou an arm like God? Is thy arm like Gods arm? that is, is thy power like Gods power?

Hence note; Firſt, God hath a mighty power? He hath an arm.

There are three Scripture expreſſions, which in a gradation hold forth the power of God.

Firſt, The Finger of God (*Exod.*18.9.) When the Magicians could not imitate Moſes in the Plague of Lice, then they ſaid unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God; that is, the power of God is eminent in this Miracle, it exceeds our power, we not only cannot do the like, but nothing like it, as we did before in ſemblance of thoſe former Miracles. Thus Chriſt himſelf being blaſphemed by ſome of the Jews, who ſaid, He caſteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of devils, anſwered (*Lu.*11.20.) If I by the Finger of God caſt out devils, &c. that is, if I by the power of God, or by the holy Spirit (ſo another Goſpel hath it (Mat. 12. 28.) If I by the Spirit of God) caſt out devils, &c.

Secondly, The power of God is expreſſed by the hand, which containeth all the fingers (Iſa. 59. 1.) Behold, the Lords hand is not ſhortened that it cannot ſave, that is, his power is not abated; he hath a long hand ſtill, his power to ſave is as great as ever it was. The ſame Prophet ſaith (Chap. 9. 17.) The hand of the Lord is ſtretched out ſtill, that is, his power is ſtill at work to puniſh impenitent ſinners. How much and how long ſoever God hath puniſhed ſinners, he can puniſh them longer and more; if they continue longer in ſin, or ſin more and more.

Thirdly, We have here in this Text, and in many others, the arm of God (that's more than his hand) ſignifying the fulneſs of his power. Not that there are any real gradations in the power of God; but there are gradations in the exerting and putting forth of his power. Sometimes God putteth forth his power (as it were) by a finger only, as Rehoboam ſaid (1 Kings 12. 10.) My little finger ſhall be thicker than my fathers loyns; that is, the leaſt that I will do in my government ſhall be more afflictive and burdenſome to you (if you call it a burden) than the moſt that my Father Solomon did in his. At another time God putteth forth his power by his hand, you may ſee his whole hand, that is, fuller and clearer evidences of his power, in what he doth or hath done, that is, in his works of Providence, whether in breaking down, or building up. And laſtly, he ſheweth his arm, his ſtretched-out arm, that is, the fulneſs of his power. God hath power, great power, mighty power, he hath an arm, an out-ſtretched arm; and this arm of God is ſpoken of in Scripture for a fourfold uſe.

Firſt, For the ſafe guarding of his people; 'tis a protecting arm. The arm of God with us ſignifieth our ſafety. The Prophet ſpeaking of the dealings of God with his ancient people, ſaith (Iſa. 63. 12.) He led them by the right hand of Moſes with his glorious arm, that is, his protecting arm, by which he ſaved that people from the wrath of Pharaoh in their firſt advance out of Egypt, and from the wrath of all their enemies, in all their incampings and marches to Canaan, was very glorious. This glorious arm of his, is a defence upon all his glory (Iſa. 4. 5.) that is, upon his whole Church, for there his truth, holineſs, and holy worſhip, which are his glory, are held up, and held out. The Church of God is ſo much for the glory of God, that 'tis called his glory.

Secondly, As the Lord hath a protecting arm from evil, ſo an arm delivering and pulling out of evil. The deliverance which God wrought for the Iſraelites in bringing them out of Egypt (Exod. 6. 16. Deut. 5. 15. and Deut. 7. 19.) is ſaid to be done by an out-ſtretched arm, that is, by his power viſibly put forth, and even to the utmoſt, in the wonderful effects of it. All the while God did not deliver Iſrael out of their bondage, he might be ſaid to draw in or hide his arm; but when he delivered them, then he was ſaid to ſtretch it out.

Thirdly, As the arm of God is for the protection and delivering of his people, ſo for the deſtroying of his and their Enemies. God hath a deſtroying arm, and of that Moſes ſpake (*Deut.*33.27.) The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlaſting arms; and he ſhall thruſt out the Enemy from before thee (that's ſometimes the work of the Everlaſting arms of God) and ſhall ſay, deſtroy them.

Fourthly, The Lord hath an aſſiſting, helping, ſtrengthning arm to carry us thorough any good work or duty, which he calleth us unto (*Iſa.*53.1.) Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? that is, who hath received power to believe, and do according to what the Lord hath revealed? The arm of God works powerfully, not only upon the outward man, but upon the heart of man, for the converting and ſaving of ſouls (Pſal. 110. 3.) In the day of thy power thy people ſhall be willing. The power of God put forth upon the inner man, for full conviction and ſound converſion is greater than any power that worketh upon, for, or againſt the body of man. God hath a mighty arm for all theſe purpoſes, and for many more, even for as many as he is pleaſed to make uſe of it, or imploy it in.

And if any ask, How mighty is his arm?

I anſwer, No man knoweth how mighty it is; only this we know, It is Almighty. What the might of Almightineſs is, who can underſtand! Moſes ſpake admiringly more than knowingly to this point (Pſal. 90. 11.) Who knoweth the power of thine anger? The anger of God is beyond comprehenſion, and ſo is his love; Who knoweth the power of his love? We are exhorted (Eph. 3. 19.) To know the love of God, which paſſeth knowledge. What the heighth, depth, length and bredth of divine love are, and anger, no man knoweth; nor doth any man know the dimenſions of Divine Power. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of God as a Spirit, ſaith (1 Tim. 6. 16.) Whom no man hath ſeen, nor can ſee. So we may ſay of God as powerful; no man knoweth, nor can know how powerful he is. He muſt be as powerful as God, who knoweth how powerful God is.

Only this we may ſay, Firſt, his power is ſo great, that he can do all things, and he can do all things with eaſe, There is nothing hard to God. Hard things are eaſie to God. Some things are hard, and others eaſie to men; but to God all things are alike. Not only is nothing too hard for the Lord, as he ſaid to Abraham (Gen. 18. 14.) but the truth is, nothing is hard to him.

Secondly, His power is ſo great, that he can do whatſoever he willeth, or hath a mind to do (Job 23. 13.) He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth. And as the Lord can and will do whatever he hath a will to do, ſo to clear the point a little further, we may boldly ſay, he hath a will to do all things of theſe three ſorts:

Firſt, He hath a will to do whatſoever he hath promiſed, purpoſed, or determined to do. Now, if we duly weigh what great things theſe are in the Promiſes and Purpoſes, in the Counſels and Decrees of God to do in the world, we may ſoon conclude with truth and ſobriety, that great things will be done in their proper times and ſeaſons.

Secondly, The Lord doth aſſure us, he hath a will to do whatſoever we ask of him in faith, and according to his will. If we have a rule for our asking, or if we ask by rule, we have a Gods Word for it, that it ſhall be done and given to us according to our askings (1 John 5. 14.) And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. What is that? is it only that he perceives or knows what we ask? No, his hearing is the granting and giving what we ask. God is ingaged by his gracious promiſe, that his arm ſhall do all that we pray for right for the matter, and aright for the manner, in faith and in ſincerity.

Thirdly, It is the will of God to do whatſoever is for the real good of his people, though (poſſibly) they ask it not. It is the will of God, not only to do what we ask, but many times, more than we ask. As God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think (Eph. 3. 20.) ſo he actually doth for us much more than we ask or think. The Lord expects we ſhould pray for every good thing which he hath promiſed; and therefore he had no ſooner made many large and moſt gracious promiſes of doing great things for the Church, with this aſſurance (Ezek. 36. 36.) I the Lord have ſpoken it, and I will do it. But preſently he adds (verſ. 37.) Thus ſaith the Lord God, I will yet for this be enquired of by the houſe of Iſrael, to do it for them. We ſhould extend our prayers and our ſeekings to the utmoſt line of the Word, or our prayers ſhould be commenſurate both to Propheſies and Promiſes: Prayer helps them all to the birth, and they ſeldom bring forth alone. And indeed prayer is nothing elſe, in the matter of it, but a turning or putting the Promiſes into Petitions, 'tis a ſuing out the good of the Promiſe: Yet there are ſome good things in the Promiſes which we cannot reach, or at leaſt are not mindful of. There is a great latitude in the Promiſes; The Commandments of God are exceeding broad (Pſal. 119. 96.) Who can find out all the duty of them! And doubtleſs the Promiſes are exceeding broad; who can find out all the mercy in them! The Apoſtle Peter (2 Epiſt. 1. 4.) calls them exceeding great and precious Promiſes; they are exceeding good, and they are exceeding great, they are as great as they are good; and who hath a heart great and good enough to ſee and ſue out all the good and great things in them? Now, I ſay, though (poſſibly) we ask not all for the good of the Promiſe (at leaſt not expreſly) yet it is the will of God to do all that for us, and to beſtow all that good upon us which he hath promiſed. He hath preventing Grace; his firſt Grace he always giveth unmasked. When he begins to manifeſt himſelf to a poor ſoul to bring him out of a ſtate of darkneſs, is ſuch a ſoul begging this of God? no, he is running from, and rebelling againſt God. I am found of them that ſought me not, ſaith the Lord (Iſa. 65. 1.) Now, as they who are not the Lords, receive grace to become his unasked; ſo they that are the Lords, through grace, receive many mercies unasked. God will not fail in giving all that he hath promiſed, though we fail in asking ſome things promiſed: His arm is powerful enough to do what he willeth; and this is the will of God, to fulfil or make good all his Promiſes. Men often out-promiſe themſelves, but God doth not. Haſt thou an arm like God?

Hence take theſe inferences; Firſt, If the Lord hath ſuch a mighty arm, then let us take heed we do not provoke the Lord to turn his arm againſt us.

That's the uſe which the Apoſtle makes of this point, and which naturally floweth from it (1 Cor. 10. 22.) Do ye provoke the Lord to anger? are ye ſtronger than he? The Apoſtles ſenſe hits the language of the Text fully; as if he had ſaid, Have you an arm like God? There's no compariſon between yours and his; He can cruſh you before the Moth (Job 4. 19.) that is, as ſoon as, or before a Moth is cruſhed, which crumbleth to duſt with the leaſt or lighteſt touch of the hand, or little finger.

Secondly, If the Lord have ſuch an arm, then let us labour to get and ingage the arm of the Lord for our help.

Men love to be on the ſtronger ſide; and ſome reſolve to be on the ſtronger ſide, though it ſhould be, or not regarding whether or no it be the worſer ſide. Now ſeeing all have a natural deſire to intereſt themſelves where the greateſt ſtrength is, becauſe there probably and rationally the greateſt ſafety and beſt ſhelter is; then, how ſhould we labour to get and aſſure an intereſt in God, which cannot be done but by being on Gods ſide (that is, by keeping cloſe to him in all the duties of holineſs and righteouſneſs) for doubtleſs he is ſtrongeſt; his ſide is not only a good, but the beſt, not only a ſtrong, but the ſtrongeſt ſide. Hath any man an arm like God? Can all men, ſhould they joyn all their arms in one, make an arm like Gods? They cannot. Nor is there any arm ſtrong, but in or by the ſtrength of Gods arm. As old dying Jacob ſpake while he was bleſſing his Son Joſeph (Gen. 49. 24.) The Archers have ſorely grieved him, and ſhot at him, and hated him; but his Bow abode in ſtrength, and the arms of his hands were made ſtrong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob. How were his arms made ſtrong! How did his Bow abide in ſtrength! It was by the hands (that is, by the power) of the mighty God of Jacob. Nothing made him ſtrong, nor to abide in ſtrength, but the arm of the mighty God. In this arm of God, the Church triumphed of old (Pſal. 124. 1, 2, 3.) If it had not been the Lord, who was on our ſide, now may Iſrael ſay, If it had not been the Lord, who was on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us, then they had ſwallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled againſt us: Their wrath was kindled into a burning flame, yet we were not burnt, much leſs utterly conſumed, becauſe the ſtrong God was with us; or becauſe, as the Pſalm concludeth, Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made Heaven and Earth. What help can we need at any time, which he cannot give us, who made Heaven and Earth without any help or helper? It is an impregnable Tower of comfort, that at what loſs ſoever we are, we may find help, or help is to be had in God.

Thirdly, If God hath ſuch a mighty arm, then let us truſt him.

We may truſt to his ſtrength; and when his ſtrength is indeed truſted to, our truſt is withdrawn from all other ſtrengths. We may uſe the arm or ſtrength of Creatures, while we truſt in the arm or ſtrength of God; but while we truſt in the ſtrength of God, we muſt truſt in no ſtrength but his, nor, if we really truſt him, can we. When Senacherib King of Aſſyria invaded Judah with a mighty Hoſt, Hezekiah thus incouraged his people (2 Chron. 32. 7, 8.) Be ſtrong and couragious, be not afraid nor diſmayed for the King of Aſſyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him, for there be more with us than with him; with him is an arm of fleſh, but with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles; and the people reſted themſelves upon the words of Hezekiah King of Judah. They had an arm; what arm? not an arm of fleſh (like Senacheribs) but the arm of the Lord for their help, and that carried the day. Created power is too ſlight to be truſted, but the power of the Creator calls for all our truſt. We cannot truſt Creatures too little (as to ſucceſs) nor can we truſt God too much. Hath any man an arm like God?

A fourth Inference may be this; If the Lord hath ſuch an arm, ſuch power, this ſhould incourage us to the duty of prayer.

We are eaſily perſwaded to ſeek to him for help, who hath ſtrength to help, eſpecially when we know that he hath an inclinableneſs of will to help us. Hath not the Lord a ſtrong arm? hath he not an inclinable will? Let us then in all our needs pray as the Church did (Iſa. 51. 9.) Awake, awake, put on ſtrength, O arm of the Lord (the Lord and his arm are the ſame) awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old; art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? The Lord hath a mighty arm, yet his arm or power ſeemeth to be ſometimes (as it were) aſleep; that is, not to act, or not to take notice how it is, or how matters go with the Church. Now, when at any time it is thus, our duty is to awaken the Lord by earneſt prayer; Awake, put on ſtrength, O arm of the Lord. It is a mercy when we have an heart to pray, and a God to pray unto, who can quickly put on ſtrength; that is, give undeniable Evidences that he hath a ſtrong arm, yea, infinitely the ſtrongeſt arm; which may be

A ſecond obſervation, taken or ariſing from theſe words, as ſpoken comparatively, Haſt thou an arm like God?

The arm or power of the Creature, is nothing to the arm or power of God; no Creature hath an arm like Gods.

There is nothing in the world conſidered in a gradual difference, ſo unlike another, as the arm of God, and the arm of man are. Mans arm is ſo ſmall a thing compared with Gods, that it is a very nothing, not ſo much as a Candle to the Sun, nor as a drop to the Ocean, nor as one ſingle duſt to the Globe or Body of the whole Earth. No Rhetorick can ſpeak diminutively enough of mans arm, compared with Gods, nor can any Divinity uttered by men or Angels: yet how apt is man to have too high thoughts of mans arm, and too low of Gods. Were it not that men are apt to have too high thoughts of mans arm, and too low of Gods, this queſtion had never been put to Job, Haſt thou an arm like God? Job had been a man of as big an arm, as moſt in his days. 'Tis ſaid of him, that he was the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt (Chap. 1. 3.) And he ſaid of himſelf (*Chap.*29.25.) That he ſate chief, and dwelt as King in the Army. Now ſhould we look upon Jobs arm, not as (when God ſpake this to him) lean and thin, and extreamly fallen away, if not quite withered, but as it was at beſt, fulleſt, thickeſt, ſtrongeſt, before he fell into that affliction, or after his reſtauration out of it; yet what was Jobs arm or power, in his higheſt advancement, to the arm and power of God! might not God then have ſaid to him, as well as when he ſaid it, Haſt thou an arm like God? or hath any man at this day? Surely (ſaith David, Pſal. 62. 10.) men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye, to be laid in the ballance (that is, if they are truly weighed, eſpecially if they are weighed with God) they are altogether lighter than vanity. For, Firſt, the power of man to help, is weak and vain (Pſal. 33. 16.) There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an Hoſt; a mighty man is not delivered by much ſtrength. And that's an unqueſtionable truth, whether we underſtand it of his own ſtrength, or of the ſtrength of any others, who come in and contribute their utmoſt to his aid and aſſiſtance. And this is one reaſon, why the Lord calls us off from truſting to the arm of man (Pſal. 146. 3.) Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help. True, may ſome ſay, it were a folly to truſt in weak Princes, to truſt in them for help, who have no power to help; but we will apply to mighty Princes, we hope there is help in them: No, thoſe words, In whom there is no help, are not a diſtinction of weak Princes from ſtrong, but a concluſion, that there is no help in the ſtrongeſt. That's ſtrange; what? no help in ſtrong Princes! If he had ſaid, no help in mean men, carnal reaſon would have conſented; but when he ſaith, Truſt not in Princes, nor in any ſon of man, one or other, who can believe this? yet, this is a Divine Truth, we may write inſufficiency, inſufficiency, and a third time inſufficiency, upon them all; the cloſe of that verſe in the Pſalm may be their Motto, There is no help in them. And if any ſhall truſt in man for help, ſome one of, if not all, theſe evils or ſad iſſues will follow.

Firſt, He will be deceived and diſappointed; what he looked upon as a Rock, will prove but a Sand; what he took for a Cedar, will prove but a Reed; and the more he leans upon it, the more it fails him, as the Scripture ſpeaks.

Secondly, He will be aſhamed and vexed (Iſa. 20. 5.) They ſhall be afraid, and aſhamed of Ethiopia, their expectation, and of Egypt, their glory; that is, which they gloried in, and believed would bring them in much glory, or into a very glorious condition. They probably expected help from Ethiopia, but they gloried in the fore-thoughts of that help which they preſumed Egypt would give them, but they gloried in that which ſoon proved their ſhame.

Thirdly, If any truſt in any arm of fleſh, it will bring a curſe upon him (Jer. 17. 5.) Curſed be the man that maketh fleſh his arm, and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord. Nor doth the Prophet only pronounce a curſe upon that man, but explains the curſe, or tells him plainly what it ſhall be, both in the negative, and in the affirmative; He ſhall be like the heath in the deſert, and ſhall not ſee when good cometh, but ſhall inhabit the parched places of the wilderneſs, in a ſalt Land, and not inhabited. Then, ceaſe from man whoſe breath is in his Noſtrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of? Whatſoever account is to be made of man, this is not, that he ſhould be truſted in. We may apply to men for help, but we muſt not truſt in them, as if they could carry the matter for us; Have men an arm like God? Mans is but a weak and withered arm; and as the arm of man is not to be truſted in for any help he can give us, ſo

Secondly, The arm of man is not to be feared for any hurt he can do us. Theſe two have a near relation to, and dependance upon each other; for they who are ſo ſtrong, that we are ready to truſt them if we can make them our friends, thoſe we are as ready to fear, if they turn our Enemies; and they who never truſt in man unduly, will not fear man but according to duty. And we have no reaſon, if we conſider that, and what the arm of man is in the hand of God, to fear the arm of man. The Scripture ſpeaks often of the Lords dealing with the ſtrongeſt arm of man (Ezek. 30. 21.) Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh, King of Egypt; and loe, it ſhall not be bound up to be healed, to put a Roller to bind it, to make it ſtrong to hold the Sword. Pharaoh had an hurting arm, an arm ſtretched out againſt the Iſrael of God; but God did more than hurt, he broke that arm. And conſider how the Spirit of God followeth the Metaphor, It ſhall not be bound up. Pharaoh would fain have got his broken arm ſet, hoping it might be ſtronger than ever: No, ſaith God, It ſhall not be bound up to be healed, to put a Roller to bind it, to make it ſtrong. As if the Lord had ſaid, Pharaoh may call for his Chirurgions to bind up his broken arm, yet it ſhall be without effect; all their skill and Chirurgery ſhall be in vain, his arm ſhall not be healed, not made ſtrong. Again (Jer. 48 25.) The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken. A ſavage beaſt cannot hurt us when his horn is cut off, nor can a cruel-hearted man with a broken arm. In theſe and many other Scriptures we ſee, both that mans arm is in the hand of God, and what God doth often to mans arm; upon which conſiderations he infers (Iſa. 51. 12.) I am he that comforteth thee; Who art thou that art afraid of a man that ſhall die, and of the ſon of man that ſhall be made as the graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker? As if the Lord had ſaid, doſt thou hear and believe that I have a ſtronger arm than man? and art thou, who haſt an intereſt in me, afraid of a man? We have cauſe to fear man, when we do that which is evil; the Magiſtrates arm beareth not the Sword in vain, for he is the Miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil (Rom. 13. 4.) But to all them who remain peaceably in their duty to God and man, Jeſus Chriſt hath ſaid, (Luke 12. 4, 5.) Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that, have no more that they can do: But I will forewarn you whom you ſhall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. Chriſt, who gave but a ſingle prohibition of our fear of man, gave a double charge to fear God, knowing that to be the beſt cure of, and remedy againſt any undue or ſinful fear of man.

Further, ſeeing God hath ſuch an arm, let us be much in the conſideration of it, let us often meditate upon the ſtrength of his Arm, his Almighty Power. The mighty God is as a weak one to us, both for the doing us good, and the keeping us from evil, till we ſit down, and believingly meditate upon his Almighty Power and Greatneſs. As David called the faithful of old to view the ſtrength of Sion (Pſal. 48. 12.) Walk about Sion, and go round her; mark well her Bull-warks, and tell her Towers. So I may call upon all to view the ſtrength of the God of Sion, and to remember his arm, which is the only ſtrength, the Bull-wark, the Tower of Sion. Be ſtill (ſaith the Lord, Pſal. 46. 10.) and know that I am God. We never truly know either that God is, or what God is, we know him not to be God, but carry it as if he were but a man, till we are ſtill, that is, compoſed into a deep ſilent conſideration of his Eternal Power and Godhead, or that he is God. And the godly have done ſo, eſpecially in two caſes.

Firſt, When they ſaw little humane ſtrength, little of mans arm for them.

Secondly, When at any time they ſaw the arm of man great and ſtrong againſt them. In both which caſes we find David often in the Pſalms, and other good Kings wholly taken up in the thought of, and in acting their Faith upon the arm or power of God. Thus did King Aſa (2 Chron. 14. 11.) and thus did King Jehoſaphat (2 Chron. 20. 6, 12.) O Lord God of our Fathers, art not thou

God in Heaven? and in thy hand is there not power and might? ſo that none is able to withſtand thee? O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might againſt this great company that cometh againſt us; neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon thee.

So much of the firſt humbling queſtion in this verſe, Haſt thou an Arm like God?

A ſecond followeth; Or,

Canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

To thunder, may be taken either properly for the ſending out of that loud and terrible ſound or crack, which we ſometimes hear from the Clouds, and ſo we may underſtand it here, Who can make a Thunder-clap like God? Natural Thunder is a token of Gods Power, and 'tis a dreadful token. Should I expound and proſecute the Text in the letter, 'tis a great truth, and of uſeful conſideration. The voice of God in Thunder exceeds the voices of all men.

But in Scripture to Thunder is often taken improperly, and ſo it ſignifieth any mighty ſpeaking, or ſpeaking with mighty effect. Hence thoſe two Eminent Apoſtles (James and John) were called Boanerges, that is, Sons of Thunder, becauſe they preached ſo powerfully for the converſion and ſalvation of ſinners. And in the Chapter before the Text (Job 39. 25.) we read of the Thunder of the Captains, that is, of the Captains loud voice, giving Exhortations, Orders, and Commands to their Army ready for battle. The power that goeth forth with the Word of God, is the thunder of his voice. It was ſaid of Pericles, a great Orator among the Grecians, that he did thunder and lighten upon his Auditors; ſuch was the power of his Rhetorick, that he did ſhake, as it were, that whole Country with his voice.

Hoc inſtrumento efficax Dei juſſio ſiſtens atque exhibens quicquid vult ſignificatur. Lcc.

Pericles Olympius (ſic enim propter vim eloquentiæ dictus eſt) fulminabat, intonabat, confundebat Græciam. Plutarch.

Now, as in the former queſtion, the Lord ſet forth his mighty ſtrength, in acting, by his arm, Haſt thou an arm like God? So here he ſetteth forth his mighty power, in ſpeaking, by Thunder, Canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

Hence, note; The voice of the Lord is a powerful voice.

To thunder is to ſpeak, but it is no ordinary ſpeaking that is intended by it. To thunder is to ſpeak, not only weightily, but powerfully, ſomewhat paſſionately, if not diſpleaſedly, and with a mighty impreſſing force, as alſo with an extenſion and intenſion of the voice. To lift up the voice like a Trumpet (as the Prophet was commanded, Iſa. 58. 1.) hath all this in it, much more to lift up the voice like thunder; and ſuch is the voice of God. The ſtrongeſt and moſt Stentorean voice of man is but a whiſper, and cannot ſtartle a Mouſe, or give me leave to ſay (as we proverbially ſay) the ſtrongeſt and moſt Muſical-mouthed man, ſpeaks but like a Mouſe in a Cheeſe, his voice is indeed a meer ſilence in compariſon of the thunder of Gods voice. The whole 29th Pſalm is a proof of it; which though it be true of the natural Thunder, yet 'tis chiefly to be underſtood (as hath been ſhewed) of the metaphorical or ſpiritual Thunder, the power that goeth forth with the ſpeakings of God. And that there is a Thunder, a mighty power, accompanying the Word of God, may appear in theſe particulars.

Firſt, The bare ſaying voice of God is exceeding powerful. To ſay a thing, is as little as may be towards the effecting of it. But if God do but ſay, let ſuch a thing be, it is ſo; yea, his ſaying (no more is expreſt) gave all things a being: He only ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light, &c. (Gen. 3. 3.) That ſaying was a commanding, as the Apoſtle expounds it (2 Cor. 4. 6.) God who commanded light to ſhine out of darkneſs, &c. The ſaying voice of God hath a commanding power in it, that is, every thing is done and cometh to paſs as he ſaith (Pſal. 33. 6.) By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth. And if the whole world was the product of a word from God, what cannot God produce in the world, by ſpeaking the word?

Secondly, How powerful is the expreſly or directly commanding voice of God, if his ſaying voice be ſo powerful! When the Lord gave the Law (Exod. 19. 16.) what voices? what thunderings were then heard! The ſaying of God is a virtual Command, but he gives formal Commands alſo. And when he gave the Law, or Ten Commandments, the Thunder of his voice made all the people tremble, and ſtand afar off. And if (as that notion hath often been well inforc'd) God thundered with ſuch a voice at the giving of the Law, with what a dreadful voice will he thunder when he comes to Judge thoſe who have broken, and impenitently continu'd in the breach of the Law.

Thirdly, There is a mighty power, as in the bidding, ſo in the forbidding or reſtraining voice of God. He by the voice of his word can put a ſtop to Creatures, when they are in their ſtrongeſt Career, and ſwifteſt motion. What is ſwifter in motion than the Sun? All Creatures on Earth, or in the Air, are but ſlugs to the Sun; the Eagle upon her wing is but a Snail to the Sun; yet God can forbid the Suns motion (Job 9.7.) He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not; That is, if he ſend forth a Prohibition to the Sun, it will not ſtir forwards one foot, till he takes off his Prohibition, and bids it fulfil its wonted courſe; as in Joſhua's days (Chap. 10, 12.) and at his command it will go backward, as in the days of Hezekiah (2 Kings 20. 11.) Further, The Lords voice diſannuls and makes void the commands of any Creature (Lam. 3. 32.) Who is he that ſaith it, and it cometh to paſs, if the Lord have not commanded it? They reckon (as we ſay) without their Hoſt, who hope to carry on any work without Gods concurrence; for he can give a Negative to all our Affirmatives, and make all our Wheels, either ſtand ſtill, or go backward.

Fourthly, There is a Thunder in the teaching voice of God. His teaching voice is a very ſtill voice, yet 'tis a very ſtrong voice; the Soul falls down at the ſound of it. 'Tis promiſed (Iſa. 54. 13.) that we ſhall be all taught of God, that is, effectually taught; ſo taught, as to receive inſtruction. The teaching voice of God makes the ignorant knowing, and the fooliſh wiſe. The Lord (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 8. 11.) ſpake unto me with a ſtrong hand, and inſtructed me, that I ſhould not walk in the way of this people. There had need be a ſtrong hand in the voice of that inſtruction, which keeps us out of the common walks of the world. Yea, there is ſuch a power in the teaching voice of God, that like a Thunderbolt, it overthroweth and ſo pulls down all the ſtrong holds of ſin, caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) Thus God thunders againſt ſin, and batters ſinners; which is infinitely harder to do, than to batter and level the walls of a City to the ground with thundering Cannon. The weapons of our warfare, for the conqueſt of ſouls to Chriſt, are all laid up in, and fetcht out of the Arcenal of the holy Scriptures, or Word of God; and, O what work have they made in the world! How many have fallen, by ſubmitting to them, to their own Salvation! and how many more have fallen, by reſiſting them, to their own everlaſting deſtruction!

Fifthly, There is a mighty power in the reproving voice of God. When God deals verbal rebukes to ſinners, as well as verberal, he often makes their beauty to conſume away like a Moth (Pſal. 39. 11.) The Lord profeſſeth to all hardned ſinners, whoſe Conſciences now give them no reproofs, and who preſume God will give them none neither, that he hath thundering reproofs ready for them (Pſa. 50.21.) I will reprove thee, and ſet them (that is, thy ſins) in order before thine eyes. O conſider this (as 'tis adviſed in the next verſe of the ſame Pſalm) ye that forget God, leſt he tear you in pieces with the thunder of his reproof.

Sixthly, There is alſo a mighty power in the comforting voice of God. O what a vertue is there in thoſe ſecret whiſpers, wherein God ſpeaketh peace to his people (Hoſea 2. 14.) I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderneſs, and ſpeak comfortably unto her, or to her heart. A Thunder (as to power) goeth with this voice of God: This hath a power to ſettle a ſhaking or diſconſolate Soul, and nothing but the power of Gods voice can do that. When none can comfort, the Lord can. To comfort the Conſcience, is (ſaid Luther) as great a work as to make a world.

Seventhly, There is a mighty power, as in the promiſing or comforting voice of God, ſo alſo in his threatning voice. The Lord thunders reproofs againſt thoſe that have ſinned, and he thunders threatnings to keep all from ſinning; and how terrible that voice is the Apoſtle knew, who ſaid, Knowing the terror of the Lord we perſwade men (2 Cor. 5. 11.) And as the Apoſtle knew it by believing it, ſo all final unbelievers ſhall know it by their ſenſe and feeling of it.

Eighthly, There is a thunder of power in the propheſying voice of God. When the Lord fore-tells what ſhall come to paſs, who can withſtand it? We find thoſe propheſies, which hold forth the ruin of Chriſts enemies and of his Church, ſhewred in with thunder (Rev. 8. 15. and Rev. 11. 19.) which did not only ſhew that thoſe propheſies ſhould be certainly and ſolemnly fulfilled in their ſeaſon, but that they ſhould be terribly fulfilled, or fulfilled with a terror, like that of Thunder. All propheſies ſhall effectually come to be fulfilled; therefore power is in them.

Ninthly, What a power is there in the ſwearing voice of God. Firſt, God ſwears ſometimes in his wrath (he did ſo againſt that people of old; I ſware to them in my wrath, that they ſhould not enter into my reſt: And ſo powerful was that oath, that not a man of them could come into Canaan, their Carcaſes fell into the wilderneſs. And as when the Lord ſwears in his wrath; ſo, Secondly, When he ſwears in love and mercy, there's irreſiſtible power in that alſo. Thus God ſware and made oath to Abraham (Heb. 6. 17.) Wherein God willing more abundantly to ſhew unto the heirs of promiſe, the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lie, we might have ſtrong conſolation, &c. To David alſo God ſware in love (Pſal. 89. 35, 36.) Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, that I will not lie unto David. His ſeed ſhall endure for ever, and his throne as the Sun before me, &c. The oath or ſwearing voice of God is ſo ſtrong, that we have reaſon enough both of ſtrong fears, when he ſweareth in wrath, as he did againſt the children of Iſrael; and of ſtrong conſolation, when he ſweareth in love, as he did to Abraham and to David. And wo to thoſe who believe not when God ſwears either in wrath or in love.

Tenthly, There is a mighty power in the Judging voice of God. When he ſhall ſpeak from his Throne in that great day, what a Thunder will there be in his voice? When in that Judgment-day he ſhall acquit his elect, that voice will have a raviſhing power in it: And when his condemning ſentence ſhall be pronounced againſt the wicked, that voice will have an aſtoniſhing power in it, beyond that of Thunder. And it is to be conſidered, that in many places of Scripture, where the eminent judgments of God are mentioned, his voice or thunder is mentioned, as going before or accompanying, thoſe ſolemn and tremendous diſpenſations (Pſal. 18. 13. Pſal. 68. 33, 34, 35. Iſa. 30. 30. Jer. 25. 30. Joel 4. 16.)

To conclude this point, ſeeing there is a power, like that of Thunder, going forth with the voice of God, in the effectual miniſtrations of his Word; let us well conſider, whether God hath ſpoken to us effectually, yea or no; have we known the thunder of his Spirit? hath there come a mighty power upon us, with the voice of his Word? if the voice hath not reach't our hearts, and reformed our lives, we have not heard the thunder of Gods voice, but only the voice of man, or a ſound in the air beating the outward ear. Naturaliſts ſay from experience, that by the power of thunder and lightning, the ſword is ſometimes melted, while the ſcabbard is unhurt. And from experience, they that are ſpiritual can alſo ſay, that the thunder of Gods voice melteth the ſoul, while it only toucheth the ear. Therefore we have reaſon diligently to enquire, what power hath come with the word ſpoken; have we found the commanding, the promiſing, the threatning, the inſtructing, the comforting voices of God effectual upon our hearts? Bleſſed are they who have been thus Thunder-ſtruck. And all they who have been thus ſtrucken out of themſelves, and into Chriſt, may truly ſay, what that people ſaid flattering and blaſphemouſly, at the Oration of Herod (Acts 12. 22.) It is the voice of God, and not of man. Though the ſound of the words came in mans voice, yet the power of them came in Gods voice; for who can thunder with a voice like him? or who indeed hath any thing like ſuch thunder in his voice but he?

Further, the Lords deſign being to humble Job, in putting theſe queſtions, Haſt thou an arm like God? or canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

Note, Man is never convinced, either of his own weakneſs and unworthineſs, till he is taught to conſider the power, greatneſs, and mightineſs of God.

Till God is great and high in our thoughts, we are great and high in our own: And when God is great in our eyes, we are little in our own, and ſo are all things elſe; then our power is nothing to the power of God, our holineſs nothing to the holineſs of God, our wiſdom nothing to the wiſdom of God. 'Tis good thus to compare to our ſelves with God, that we may ſee and be convinced, how infinitely below God we are in all that we have and are. David ſaid (Pſal. 39. 5.) Mine age is as nothing before thee. It is ſo in all other things; our wiſdom is nothing before God, our holineſs is nothing before God, our ſtrength is nothing before God. As thoſe ſearchers of Canaan ſaid (Numb. 13. 33.) We ſaw the Giants there, and we were as Graſhoppers in their ſight. We thought our ſelves tall men, before we ſaw thoſe high-ſtatur'd Giants; but having ſeen them, we were but Pigmies, yea, but as Graſhoppers. So we think we have a great deal of power, and wiſdom, and holineſs, till we look upon God, and then we are convinced of our own meanneſs and poverty. The Apoſtle ſaith in higheſt truth and honeſty, as well as modeſty (2 Cor. 10. 12.) We dare not make our ſelves of the number, or compare our ſelves with ſome that commend themſelves; but they meaſuring themſelves by themſelves, and comparing themſelves amongſt themſelves are not wiſe. And why not wiſe? becauſe they ſeem to be too wiſe, or think themſelves very wiſe. We get ſome opinion of our own wiſdom, and holineſs, and goodneſs, and righteouſneſs, comparing our ſelves with men like our ſelves; but if we would compare our ſelves with God, we ſhould ſoon ſee what poor things we are. What pittiful creatures do we appear when compared with our Creator! and we ſhall have profited well by this Scripture, if we make this uſe of it; and leave priding our ſelves as men, by comparing our ſelves with men. One man ſaith, I am as good as that man; and another ſaith, I am as wiſe as that man; and a third ſaith, I am as holy as ſuch a man. O that we would but think what the goodneſs, wiſdom, and holineſs of God are: ſuch holy thoughts wrought upon the heart, will free us from all high thoughts of our ſelves, and then we ſhall look for our all in Jeſus Chriſt; then, as the Prophet gives us the true form of Goſpel-ſpeaking (Iſa. 45. 24.) Surely ſhall one ſay, in the Lord I have righteouſneſs and ſtrength. And ſo will every one ſay who ſeeth (which is true of all men) that his own ſtrength is weakneſs, and his righteouſneſs a filthy rag, compared with the ſtrength and righteouſneſs of God: Our arm, our voice, our ſelf-all, or our all of ſelf, will vaniſh and diſappear, if once God appear to us in the glory of his arm and voice. Haſt thou an arm like God? or canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?

VERS. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

Deck thy ſelf now with majeſty and excellency, and array thy ſelf with glory and beauty.

Caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath: and behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him.

Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low: and tread down the wicked in their place.

Hide them in the duſt together, and bind their faces in ſecret.

Then will I alſo confeſs unto thee, that thine own right hand can ſave thee.

In the former verſe the Lord having queſtioned Job concerning his power (haſt thou an arm like God? canſt thou thunder with a voice like him?) ſeems now to put him to the uſe of his power. If thou haſt ſuch an arm as I, and canſt thunder with ſuch a voice as I? then come on, Deck thy ſelf with majeſty and excellency, &c. As if he had thus ſpoken to Job, I who have ſuch an arm, I who thunder with ſuch a voice, can quickly deck my ſelf with ſuch majeſty and excellency, I can quickly caſt abroad ſuch rage and wrath, as will abaſe and utterly break all the proud ones of the earth, and deſtroy the wicked: Job, canſt thou do this? canſt thou deck thy ſelf with ſuch majeſty? canſt thou caſt abroad ſuch a rage of thy wrath, as will abaſe and bring down the proud, and deſtroy the wicked? if thou canſt do it, let me ſee thee do it.

So then, as in the former verſe, we had a compariſon between Jobs power and the power of God, by way of interrogation, Haſt thou an arm like God? ſo here God doth the ſame thing with Job, by an ironical injunction, juſſion or command; Deck thy ſelf with majeſty, let us ſee what a man thou art, put thy ſelf into thy faireſt dreſs, and moſt tremendous appearance.

There are two things in this context, in which Job is called to ſhew himſelf like God, if he could.

Firſt, In the majeſty and excellency, in the glory and beauty of his perſon (ver. 10.) Deck thy ſelf with majeſty, &c.

Secondly, In the mighty effects of his anger and diſpleaſure, (ver. 11.) Caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath, &c. And this the Lord bids him do; Firſt, More particularly, In abaſing the proud. Secondly, More generally, In deſtroying all the wicked of the earth. (ver. 12, 13.) Now in caſe Job could approve himſelf thus powerful, and appear like God, either in the majeſty of his perſon, or in the mightineſs of his diſpleaſure againſt proud and wicked men, then ſaith the Lord ver. 14. I will confeſs unto thee, that thine own right hand can ſave thee, that is, I will yield thee the cauſe, I will acknowledge that thou, who canſt thus bring down the pride of men in the height of their iniquity, art alſo able to help thy ſelf out of all thy miſery; yea, that thou art able to contend with me, who often have done, and ſtill can do theſe great things with eaſe, with the turning of my hand, with a word of my mouth; yea, then I will confeſs that thou art as I am, that thou art God as I am: But alas poor worm, thou canſt do none of theſe things, therefore humble thy ſelf and be quiet under mine afflicting hand. This ſeems to be the general ſcope of the holy Ghoſt in theſe five verſes, even yet further to convince Job, that he had not an arm like God, nor could thunder with a voice like him, foraſmuch as he could not put forth ſuch acts, nor ſhew ſuch effects of power as God both had and could put forth and ſhew in the face of all the world.

Verſ. 10. Deck thy ſelf now with majeſty, &c.

Deck, or adorn thy ſelf the word ſignifieth to adorn, (to put on ornaments) make as a fair a ſhew of thy ſelf as thou canſt. The Apoſtle (Gal. 6. 12.) ſpeaks of ſome, who deſired to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh. The Lord bids Job make as fair a ſhew of himſelf as he could in fleſh;

Deck thy ſelf,] Let thy majeſty proceed from thy ſelf. Thus it is with God; he needs no hand to adorn and deck him, to apparel him, or put on his robes, as the Kings and Princes of the earth need, others deck them, others adorn them and put on their robes, but the Lord decks himſelf. Now ſaith the Lord to Job, Deck thy ſelf as I do,

With majeſty and excellency.] Kings and Princes are decked with majeſty and excellency at all times, a majeſtick excellency is inherent in their eſtate; and when they ſhew themſelves in ſtate, or ſhew their ſtate, they put on their Crowns and Robes. Thus ſaith the Lord to Job, Put on majeſty and excellency. Both words ſignifie highneſs, exaltation; and are often uſed to ſignifie pride, becauſe they that are high and exalted, are uſually proud, and are always under a temptation to be proud of their highneſs and greatneſs. And theſe words which here in the abſtract we tranſlate majeſty and excellency, are rendred in the concrete, proud (ver. 11, 12.) Behold every one that is proud (ver. 11.) Look upon every one that is proud (ver. 12.)

גבה
גאה

Majeſty is proper to Kings, and therefore we ſpeak to them in that language, Your Majeſty.

Excellency belongs to perſons of great dignity; we ſay to Princes and great Commanders, Your Excellency, becauſe they excel and exceed others in honour and power. Moſes ſpake ſo of God (Exod. 15. 7.) In the greatneſs of thy Excellency, thou haſt overthrown them that roſe up againſt thee. In the greatneſs of thy Excellency, or in the greatneſs of thy lifting up and exaltation; the word notes both Gods high magnificence (Pſal. 68. 35.) and mans pride or haughtineſs (Pſal. 10. 2.) The wicked in his pride (or haughtineſs of ſpirit) perſecutes the poor. Deck thy ſelf with Majeſty as a King, and with Excellency as a Prince; put on thy Imperial robes, and thy Princely garments. Yea, further,

Array thy ſelf with glory and beauty.] Here are two other ornamental expreſſions, Glory and Beauty. Glory is man in his beſt array, or mans beſt array; yea, Glory is God in his beſt array, or Gods beſt array. The perfect happineſs of man in heaven is called glory; mans beſt ſuit, is his ſuit of glory. Grace, which is our beſt ſuit on earth, is ſometimes called glory (2 Cor. 3. 18.) We are changed from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord; that is, from grace to grace. Mans firſt change is from ſin to grace, his ſecond is from grace to grace, or from one degree of grace to another. Grace is glory begun, and glory is grace perfected. Now, as glory is mans beſt ſuit, ſo glory is, as I may ſay, Gods beſt ſuit. He is, as the God of all grace (1 Pet. 5. 10.) ſo the God of all glory; for all glory is to be given unto him, and his glory will he not give to any other. The glory of God is twofold. Firſt, Eſſential and internal, for ever unchangeaby abiding in himſelf; indeed the very Eſſence of God is glory. Of this we read (Exod. 33. 18.) I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee, I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee, and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will ſhew mercy to whom I will ſhew mercy; this kind of glory I will ſhew thee, but thou canſt not ſee my face and live, that is, my eſſential glory.

Dicimus etiam nidui dedecori vel ignominia; nam quare ornamur vel dedecoramur ea eleganter nidui dicimur. Druſ. Gloria eſt clara cum laude notitia. Ambroſ. הוד Notat ſpendorem & claritatem, quæ efficere poteſt aſſenſum & confeſſionem apud ſpectatores ad gloriam ipſius, quod omnia agit θεοπρεπῶς Deus non habet circundatum decorem, quaſi ſuper additum ejus eſſentiæ, Sed ipſa eſſentia ejus decor eſt. Aquin.

Secondly, There is a providential or external glory of God; the manifeſtations of God in his greatneſs, goodneſs and power, are his glory. Thus 'tis ſaid at the dedication of Solomons Temple (1 King. 8. 11.) The glory of the Lord filled the houſe of the Lord; that is, there was a glorious and wonderful manifeſtation of the preſence of the Lord in his houſe. Whatever God manifeſts of himſelf, whether his power, or his goodneſs, or his mercy, or his grace, or his patience, or his juſtice, is his glory. The Lord often arrayeth himſelf with theſe glories; that is, he declares both by his word and by his works, that he is powerful, good, merciful, gracious, patient and juſt towards the children of men. The Scripture calleth God the glory of his people (Pſal. 106. 20.) that is, it is the glory of any people, or that which they ſhould glory in, that God is known to them, or that they are owned by God. But the idolatrizing Jews changed their glory into the ſimilitude of an Ox that eateth graſs; that is, they changed God, who was their glory, and in whom they ſhould have gloried, into the form of an inglorious beaſt, while they either worſhipped the image of a beaſt, or their God in that image.

And it is conſiderable, that the Apoſtle (Rom. 1. 23.) at leaſt alluding to (as the reference in our Bible intimates) if not quoting that place laſt mentioned in the Pſalm, whilſt he ſpeaks of the idolatrous Gentiles, doth not ſay (as there) They changed their glory, &c, for the true God was not the glory of the Gentiles in thoſe days, they owned him not as their only God (having many Idol-Gods) nor did he own them as his people; and therefore the Apoſtle did not, nor could he in truth ſay of the Gentiles, They changed their glory, &c. But thus he ſaith, They changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things. The Gentiles did not change the incorruptible God, their glory into an image, but they changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image, &c. And in that reſpect the idolatry of the Jews (a people knowing the true God, yea, and glorying in him) was worſe than the idolatry of the Gentiles, who knew him not, nor ever gloried in him, nor accounted him their glory. But to the point in hand. As that is Gods glory which mainifeſts his glory,

So in general, any thing which maketh man ſhine forth commendably or honourably to others, or gives him a preheminence above many others (as neer relation to God ſpecially doth) may be called his glory. Whatſoever is beſt in us, or to us, is our glory. The ſoul of man is his glory, becauſe it is his beſt part. The body is a poor thing to the ſoul; the body is but a ſhell, the ſoul is the kernel; the body is but the ſheath (as the Chaldee calls it, Deut. 7. 15.) the ſoul is the ſword, though uſually we take more pains for the body than for the ſoul, as if we prized it more. When Jacob ſaid (Gen. 49. 6.) O my ſoul, come thou not into their ſecret; unto their aſſembly, mine honour, be not thou united; he meant (ſome ſay) the ſame thing by his ſoul, and by his honour or glory, becauſe the ſoul is the moſt glorious and honourable part in man, and that which men ſhould be moſt careful of. Thus likewiſe the tongue of man is called his glory (Pſal. 57. 8.) Awake my glory, that is, my tongue. The tongue being that organ or inſtrument whereby the wiſdom and prudence of man is held forth, and he made glorious in the world, 'tis thereſore called his glory. The tongue of man is alſo called his glory, becauſe with that he giveth glory to God, by praiſing him, and confeſſing his name, together with his truth, unto ſalvation. And as glory is the beſt of man, ſo of any other creature (1 Cor. 15. 16.) There is one glory of the Sun, and another of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars; for one Star differs from another Star in glory; that is, there is one excellency, uſe, or operation in this Star, and another in that: Or, One Star differs from another Star in glory; that is, their light, influences and effects differ, ſome being more, others leſs operative upon ſublunary bodies. When the Lord ſaid to Job, Array thy ſelf with glory, his meaning is, ſhew thy beſt; and he means the ſame, when he adds, Array thy ſelf (with beauty.)

הדר

Verba originalia fere ſunt ſynonyma.

Beauty is the natural ornament of the Body, of the face or countenance eſpecially. Theſe two words, glory and beauty, are often joined together in Scripture (*Pſal.*21.5. Pſal. 45. 3.) where we render them honour and majeſty. We may thus diſtinguiſh between them, taking the one for that which appears outwardly, in veſtures and geſtures, in actions and works; and the other as importing that reverence and veneration which is given to ſuch, as appear in that ſplendor and dignity, or which their ſplendor and dignity ſtirs up in others: But we need not ſtand to diſtinguiſh them, the words being often uſed promiſcuouſly. And here the Lord is pleaſed to imploy many words to the ſame purpoſe, to ſhew what great ſtate he had need be in that contends with him: As if he had ſaid, O Job, although thou didſt not ſit upon a dunghil, or wert not bound to thy bed by the cords of thy affliction, but didſt ſit upon a Kingly throne, ſhining in robes of royalty, couldſt thou in all thoſe ornaments equal thy ſelf to me, in majeſty and excellency, in glory and beauty? Deck thy ſelf with majeſty and excellency, &c.

Hence Note; Firſt, God himſelf is full of Majeſty, of Excellency, of Glory, and of Beauty.

I put them all together in one Obſervation, becauſe the tendency of them all is one. The Scripture often ſets forth the Lord thus adorned, thus decked (Pſal. 93. 1.) The Lord reigneth, he is cloathed with majeſty, he is cloathed with ſtrength, wherewith he hath girded himſelf. Again (Pſal. 69. 6.) Honour and majeſty are before him, ſtrength and beauty are in his ſanctuary (Pſal. 104. 1.) Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul; O Lord, my God, thou art very great, thou art cloathed with honour and majeſty. This cloathing, this array, which the Lord called Job to put on, is properly his own; and though God will not give his glory to another, yet here he bids Job take his glory, and ſhew himſelf in it to the utmoſt if he could. Many have affected or invaded Gods glory, but none could ever attain or reach it. God calls man really to partake of glory with him, but man cannot take his glory upon him and be man. The humane nature of Chriſt could never have received nor born that glory, but as united to, and ſubſiſting in the perſon of the Son of God, according to that prayer of his (John 17. 5.)

More diſtinctly; If God be thus cloathed, Then

Firſt, We ſhould tremble before him. Majeſty is dreadful. The majeſty of Kings, who in nature are but men, is very dreadful; how much more the majeſty of God who is King of Kings, the King immortal, and reigns for ever. We have this trembling three times repeated, with reſpect to the majeſty of God (Iſa. 2. 10, 19, 21.) where the mightieſt and greateſt of the world, called there high Mountains and ſtrong Towers, Oaks and Cedars, are ſaid to go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. And though the people of God have great cauſe to rejoyce at his majeſty, as 'tis propheſied they ſhall (Iſa. 24. 14.) They ſhall lift up their voices, they ſhall ſing for the majeſty of the Lord (nothing cauſeth the hearts of the righteous to rejoyce, more than the majeſty of God) yet they ought to rejoyce, and ſo they do, with trembling (Pſal. 2. 11.) or with a holy awe of God impreſſed upon their hearts; for the majeſty of God is a very dreadful, tremendous, awful majeſty. And the more we have truly taſted the goodneſs and mercy of God, the more ſhall we tremble at his majeſty; yea, the Lord will have his majeſty not only taken notice of, but trembled at; and therefore he reproves thoſe (Iſa. 26. 10.) who would not behold his majeſty. The majeſty of the Lord, like himſelf, cannot be ſeen or beheld in it ſelf, yet it ſheweth it ſelf many ways, though few behold it, or tremble at it; and the reaſon why they tremble not at it, is, becauſe they do not, or rather (as the Prophet there ſpeaks) will not behold it, no, not when it ſhines in the plaineſt demonſtrations, whether of wrath againſt wicked men, or of love and mercy to the godly, as clearly as the Sun at noon day.

Secondly, As we ſhould tremble at the majeſty of the Lord, ſo admire his excellency; they that excel others, eſpecially they who excel all others in any kind, are much admired. The Lord is cloathed with excellency, how then ſhould we admire him! and ſay, Who is a God like unto thee? This God is our God.

Thirdly, Seeing the Lord is cloathed with glory, we ſhould glorifie him; and that, Firſt, is his eſſential glory, Secondly, in the glory of his acts and operations. We ſhould glorifie him for the greatneſs of his power, eſpecially for the greatneſs of his grace, becauſe the grace and mercy of God are his glory; as the Apoſtle ſpake in that prayer (Eph. 3. 16.) That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory (that is, of his grace and favour towards you) to be ſtrengthned with might by his Spirit in the inner man. And as the grace and goodneſs of God is his glory, ſo alſo is his holineſs (Exod. 15. 11.) Who is a God like unto thee, glorious in holineſs? Let us glorifie God, in and for all his glories, in and for the glory of his power, mercy, grace and holineſs.

Fourthly, God is arrayed with beauty. Beauty is a taking thing; then how ſhould our ſouls delight in the Lord! We delight in things that are beautiful, we love beauty; how ſhould this draw forth our love, our affections to God! All the beauty of the world is but a blot, 'tis darkneſs, and a ſtained thing, in compariſon of the Lords beauty, the beauty of his holineſs; and therefore if we have a love to beauty, let us love the Lord, who is arrayed with beauty, even with the perfection of beauty.

Laſtly, In general; Seeing the Lord is deckt with majeſty and excellency, arrayed with glory and beauty, let us continually aſcribe all theſe to God. What God is, and hath ſhewed himſelf to be, we ſhould ſhew forth (1 Chron. 29. 11.) Thine, O Lord (ſaith David) is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majeſty; for all that is in heaven and earth is thine. David aſcribed all to God there, as alſo (Pſal. 145. 10.) All thy works praiſe thee, O Lord, and thy Saints ſhall bleſs thee; they ſhall ſpeak of the glory of thy Kingdom, and talk of thy power, to make known to the ſons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majeſty of his Kingdom: thy Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations. Thus Saints are to blazon the name of God, and to make his praiſe glorious. The Apoſtle Jude concludes his Epiſtle with this Doxology: To the only wiſe God our Saviour (that is, Jeſus Chriſt) be glory, and majeſty, and dominion, and power, now and ever, Amen.

Further, to remember the majeſty and excellency of God, may and ſhould be,

Firſt, an incouragement to ſerve him. Who would not ſerve a Prince, who is decked with majeſty and excellency, who is arrayed with glory and beauty? who would not ſerve ſuch a King as this? How ambitious are men to ſerve thoſe who are deckt with worldly majeſty and excellency? ſhall not we have a holy ambition to ſerve the Lord, who is thus decked and arrayed!

Secondly, This may exceedingly hearten and embolden us againſt all the danger we may meet with in the Lords ſervice. If we encounter with hardſhips and hazards in Gods work, let us remember, he that is cloathed with majeſty and excellency, &c. can protect us in his ſervice, and reward us for it; we can loſe nothing by him, though we ſhould loſe all for him, life and all.

Thirdly, This ſhould fill our ſouls with reverential thoughts of God continually. Did we know the Lord in theſe divine diſcoveries of himſelf, in his majeſty and excellency, in his glory and beauty, how would our hearts be filled with high thoughts of him! we would neither ſpeak nor think of God, but with a gracious awe upon our ſpirits.

Fourthly, This ſhould provoke us in all holy duties to do our beſt. The Lord reproved the Jews (Mal. 1.8.) when they brought him a poor lean ſacrifice; Offer it now unto thy Governour, will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon? Shall we put off God, who is full of majeſty and excellency, of glory and beauty, with poor, weak and ſickly ſervices, ſuch as our Governours, men in high place and power will not accept from our hands, but turn back with diſdain upon our hands. The worſhip and ſervice of God conſiſts not in a bodily exerciſe, nor in any outward beauty; he is a ſpirit, and muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit and in truth; that is, in truth of heart, according to the truth of his word, which the Apoſtle calls the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt (2 Cor. 11.3.) The glory and beauty of God is ſpiritual, and the beauty that he muſt be ſerved with, is, above all, the inward beauty of faith and love, and holy fear in our hearts.

Fifthly, If God be thus deckt with majeſty, &c. This may aſſure us in praying to him and calling upon him, that we ſhall not ſeek him in vain: It is worth the while to attend ſuch a God, and pour out our hearts before him. We may ſafely depend upon God for all, ſeeing majeſty and excellency are his. The Lords prayer by which we are to form, or unto which we ſhould conform all our prayers concludes with this, thine is the kingdom, power and glory; all is thine, and therefore we have great encouragement to ask all of thee. Men can give to thoſe that ask them, according to the extent of their power. There is a confluence or comprehenſion of all power in the majeſty, excellency, and glory of God, and therefore he can give whatſoever we ask.

Now, as, that God is thus deckt and arrayed with majeſty and excellency, is implied in this Text; ſo 'tis alſo implied, that he hath thus deckt himſelf, while he ſaith to Job, Deck thy ſelf with majeſty and excellency.

Hence obſerve, Secondly; The majeſty and excellency, the glory and beauty of God, are all of and from himſelf.

He is the fountain as of his own being, ſo of the majeſty and excellency, of the glory and beauty of his being; he decks and arrays himſelf, he is not decked by others. Moraliſts ſay, honour is not or reſides not in him that is honoured, but in him that honoureth; yet here honour is ſeated in him that is honoured. We honour God, and give glory to him, but we cannot add any honour to him, all is originally in himſelf; he is the beginning without beginning of his own majeſty. And as Gods majeſty is his own, ſo of his own putting on; he borroweth nothing from the creature, nor needs he any creature to deck him. He is not what others will make him or have him to be, but what he is, he is of and from himſelf.

Thirdly, Obſerve; The majeſty and glory of the greateſt among men, is the gift of God.

Deck thy ſelf with majeſty, ſaith God to Job; but Job could not deck himſelf; he could not put a clothing of majeſty, and excellency, of glory and beauty upon himſelf. All that man hath is received from God, and is but a ray from his unconceiveable light. As all our ſpiritual array, deckings and ornaments, are put on us by God (Ezek. 16. 10, 11.) I cloathed thee with broidered work, I covered thee with ſilk, I decked thee alſo with ornaments, I put a jewel on thy forehead, &c. So all civil ornaments are put on man by God. I girded thee (ſaid God of Cyrus, Iſa. 45. 5) though thou haſt not known me; that is, I gave thee all thy power and greatneſs, thy honour and dignity, though thou tookeſt no notice of me in doing it, nor that I did it. Thus it is ſaid of Solomon (1 Chron. 29. 25.) The Lord magnified Solomon exceedingly in the ſight of all Iſrael, and beſtowed upon him ſuch royal majeſty, as had not been on any king before him in Iſrael. And thus ſpake Daniel to Belſhazzar, concerning his father Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 5.19.) And for the majeſty that he (that is, God) gave him, all Nations, People and Languages, trembled and feared before him. All the majeſty and excellency, all the glory and beauty of the greateſt Monarchs, is derived from God.

Fourthly, Obſerve; The majeſty and excellency, the glory and beauty of man, is nothing to Gods.

Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 6. 29.) Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. Solomon was a King in the greateſt majeſty and excellency, glory and beauty of any that ever was in the world; yet ſaith Chriſt, he was not decked like one of theſe Lillies: then how far ſhort did his glory fall of the glory of God! how doth all the glory of the world vaniſh and diappear at the appearance of the glory of God, even as the luſtre of the moon and ſtars doth at the riſing of the thrice illuſtrious Sun! And as mans glory is nothing to Gods while it laſts or endures, ſo it is nothing to his in the laſtingneſs and duration of it. Dominion and majeſty are Gods, and ſhall be aſcribed to God everlaſtingly. It is ſaid of Ahaſuerus (Eſther 1.4.) that he ſhewed the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent Majeſty many days, even an hundred and fourſcore days; but the Lord ſheweth his excellent Majeſty for ever and ever, for it abides for ever: and if ſo, what is the majeſty of man compared with the Lords (Iſa. 40. 6.) All fleſh is graſs, and the goodlineſs of it is as the flower of the field. The majeſty and excellency, the glory and beauty of man, is but the goodlineſs of fleſh, or the beſt of a fleſhly, earthly ſtate; and what is that, but the goodlineſs of a fading flower, or of the graſs that is cut down and withers, yea, which ſometimes withers before it is cut down, as David ſaith (Pſal. 129. 6, 7.) the graſs doth upon the houſe tops, which withereth afore it groweth up; wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth ſheaves his boſom.

Fourthly, Note, The way to lay the creature low, is to conſider the Majeſty of God.

Why doth the Lord call Job to deck himſelf with humane majeſty and excellency? was it not to bring him to a due conſideration of his own divine majeſty and excellency? Job muſt compare himſelf with God in his glory, that he might fall down convinced, that himſelf had no glory.

Thus the Lord ſhewed Job his own meanneſs and exility, by bidding him imitate the divine Majeſty and excellency.

Secondly, The Lord calls him further, to imitate him, if he could, in the mighty effects of his power or in his powerful works, againſt proud and wicked men.

Verſe 11. Caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath.

As if he had ſaid, let me ſee now what a man thou art, or rather, what a God thou art, when thou art enflamed with anger.

Caſt abroad.] That is, furiouſly diſperſe and ſcatter thy rage or rages. The word ſignifies a ſcattering after breaking to pieces (Pſal. 2. 9.) As a Potters veſſel, when it is broken, is ſcattered abroad, ſo ſaith the Lord, ſcatter abroad the (rage) of thy wrath; the Hebrew word is, The paſſing of thy wrath. Rage makes a ſpeedy paſſage, it hath a ſwift motion, and do thou caſt it abroad while 'tis ſtirring and in motion, let it not cool, caſt it abroad hot. The word notes a violent hurrying along, Scatter abroad the rage

נפצ Notat confractionem cum diſperſione. עברה Indignatio d tranſeundo vel quod citò tranſeat. Ira furor brevis eſt.

Of thy wrath.] Or as the Hebrew hath it, of thy noſtrils. Raging appears by breathing, or in the quick ſtirring of the noſtrils when we breath; but why would the Lord have Job ſhew his rage? The anſwers is, do it to the deſtruction of the proud.

Behold every one that is proud and abaſe him.

Go, look upon proud ones in thine anger, deal with them as they deſerve. The word implies more than bare beholding.

There is a twofold beholding of things or perſons.

Firſt, With favour, delight and pleaſure (Pſa. 33.18. and 34. 15.) In both places the Lord is repreſented, beholding or caſting an eye upon his people, with grace and favour, for their good and comfort.

Secondly, There is a beholding with anger and diſpleaſure; that is the meaning here: behold every one that is proud, behold them all, not only to take notice of them who they are, but behold them as I do, in wrath and anger, Behold.

Every one that is proud.] Be they few or many, great or ſmall, ſhew thy ſelf againſt every one that is proud, and

Abaſe him.] Every proud man is as a mountain. Go, ſhew thy ſelf like me, behold thoſe that are as mountains among men, and make them valleys, abaſe them; that's the Lords work, and the meaning of his word here; as if he had ſaid, I have a power, that though proud ones are as great mountains, yet I can make them as valleys. The Lord ſpeaks this again at the beginning of Verſ. 12. Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low.

Here is an elegant repetition of the ſame thing, almoſt in the ſame words, meerly to inforce the matter. Look on every on that is proud, bend thy bows, look frowningly upon him, as if thou wouldſt look him through.

Ὑπερήφανον δὲ σβέσον. Superbum extingue. Sept.

And bring him low.] The Septuagint ſay, quench him. The proud man is all in a flame; now ſaith God, behold this proud man and quench him, extinguiſh him, put him out. Thus the Lord calls Job to expreſs his diſpleaſure in theſe effects againſt proud men, that he might appear in wrath like him: As if the Lord had ſaid, I behold the proud man, and I abaſe him; I look upon the proud man, and bring him low, now let me ſee you do ſo too. Canſt thou with a look only abate their pride, and bring down the pomp of man? Caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath.

Hence Note, Firſt; There is wrath in God.

Habet ira Domini ſuam energiam nunquam egreditur vana.

God knoweth how to caſt forth his wrath as well as to ſend forth his love, or ſhed it abroad (as the Apoſtles word is, Rom. 5. 5.) in the hearts of his juſtified ones, by the holy Ghoſt, which is given unto them. The wrath of God (ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, Rom. 1. 18.) is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs. The wrath of God is ſuch as we can neither, Firſt, withſtand; nor, Secondly, avoid; there's, no out-running, no making an eſcape from it, but only by Jeſus Chriſt, and therefore the Apoſtle gives that glory to him alone (1 Theſſ. 1. 10.) Even Jeſus, which delivered us from the wrath to come. There is a wrath to come, which God will ſcatter over all this ſinful wicked world; bleſſed are they that are delivered from it. Yea, not only is there wrath in God, but a fierceneſs of wrath, terrible wrath, ſuch as will cauſe the wicked (as was ſaid before) to run into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth (Iſa. 2. 19.) Let us mind this wrath and the fierceneſs of it; and let us bleſs the Lord, who hath ſent Jeſus Chriſt to deliver us from this wrath, and from the fierceneſs of it. When wrath ſhall be caſt abroad upon the wicked world, that it falls not upon the godly, is the fruit of higheſt and freeſt love. And though they ſip of the cup, yet that they drink not the dregs of it is rich mercy (Pſal. 75. 98.) In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red, it is full of mixture, and he poureth out the ſame (in this pouring out (poſſibly) a godly man may drink ſomewhat of it, eſpecially in a time of common calamity) but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring them out and drink them. It is of the Lords mercy, and becauſe his compaſſions fail not, that we are delivered from the fierceneſs of his wrath, and from drinking the very dregs of the cup of his diſpleaſure.

Conſider further, upon whom this wrath will be exerciſed, Caſt forth the rage of thy wrath, behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him: This the Lord bids Job do, to ſhew what himſelf uſually doth.

Hence Note, Firſt; The Lord takes ſpecial notice of proud perſons.

He beholds them, he looks upon them. As it is ſaid of Saul (1 Sam. 18. 9.) He eyed David from that day forward, that is (which was his great ſin) he caſt a revengeful envious eye upon him: Thus when the holy God ſeeth wicked men grow lofty and proud, he eyeth and beholdeth them from that very day, with an eye of juſt revenge, or with a purpoſe to break them and be revenged on them. God beholds them, as I may ſay, with an evil eye, that is, with an intent to bring evil upon them. He (ſaith David, Pſal. 138. 6.) knoweth the proud afar off. As it is ſaid of the Father of the humbled Prodigal in the Parable, (Luke 15.) When he was yet a great way off, his father ſaw him, and had compaſſion. So God quickly ſpies out a proud man, even a great way off, and hath indignation againſt him; or, as we may rather expound the Pſalm, He knoweth the proud afar off; that is, a proud man ſhall never come near him, he will not admit him into his preſence, much leſs into his imbraces, To be known afar off, is to be far from the favourable or reſpectful knowledge of God; yea, to thoſe whom the Lord knows afar off in this world, he will ſay in the next, I never knew you, depart from me, ye workers of iniquity (Mat. 7. 23.)

Secondly, Note; God is able to, and will caſt down proud men.

That which he would have Job do, he himſelf (as was ſaid) uſually doth; He beholdeth the proud, and abaſeth them, he layeth them low. Nebuchadnezzar, that proud Monarch, was brought to that confeſſion (Dan. 4. 37.) Now I Nebuchadnezzar praiſe, and honour, and extol the King of Heaven, all whoſe works are true, and his ways judgment, and thoſe that walk in pride he is able to abaſe. If men will be proud and lofty, the Lord both knoweth very well how, and is able very eaſily to bring them down. And as he knows how, and is able to deal with proud men, ſo he deſires and delights to deal with them, above all ſorts of ſinners; his greateſt conteſts are with the proud (Iſa. 2. 12, 13, 14.) The day of the Lord of Hoſts ſhall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up (in his own conceit eſpecially) and he ſhall be brought low, and upon all the Cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the Oaks of Baſhan, and upon all the high mountains, &c. What meaneth the Prophet by theſe? is the Lord angry with trees and mountains? Theſe are but the ſhadows of great and proud men; the day of the Lord ſhall be upon every one of them, and his hand will be heavy upon them in that day. Proud men look upon themſelves much above others; but as God is above them, ſo he loves to ſhew himſelf above them, eſpecially when they ſhew out their pride. As Jethro ſaid to Moſes (Exod. 18. 9, 11.) Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods, for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he was above them. God ſheweth himſelf above all, when he acts above proud men, and acts them down in their proudeſt actings.

And as the Lord delights to bring proud men down; ſo he will certainly do it, he is reſolved upon it, He looketh upon every one that is proud to abaſe him. The angels that fell were proud, they kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their habitation, they did not like the ſtate wherein God had placed them; and therefore God caſt them down, and he hath reſerved them in everlaſting chains under darkneſs unto the judgment of the great day (Jude 6.) When man in Paradiſe began to be proud and would be more than God made him (God made him above all earthly creatures, but he would be as God, as his Creator; he would be, as it were, the founder of his own happineſs; pride and unbelief at once took hold of him and lead him to his ſin-fall, and) then followed his fall, his judgment-fall, God caſt him down, God abaſed him, and not only that proud man, but mankind for his pride; they being in him, his pride was theirs. And to this day God hath all along ſet his face againſt all proud men, and the pride of all men, (James 4. 6.) God reſiſteth the proud. The proud contend with God, they, as it were, wage war with God, and therefore God will wage war and contend with them, he reſiſteth the proud (Prov. 3. 34.) Surely he ſcorneth the ſcorner, but he giveth grace to the lowly. The Lord hath two great works to do in the world. The firſt is, to lift up and exalt the humble. The ſecond is, to humble and pull down the proud. Theſe two are the daily products of divine providence. And the Lord is ſo much an enemy to pride, that if he ſee it in any of his own ſervants, he will abaſe them and lay them low for it; as we ſee in the caſe of that good King Hezekiah, His heart being lifted up (not in thankfulneſs, nor in zeal for the ways and things of God, as once it was, but in pride) there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jeruſalem (2 Chron. 32. 35) The Lord will not bear it, when his own bear or behave themſelves proudly (Prov. 29. 23.) A mans pride (any mans pride) ſhall bring him low; that is, he ſhall be brought low for his pride, or his pride will bring him into ſuch extravagant ways as will be a means to bring him low.

Thirdly, Note, God can eaſily abaſe and caſt down proud ones.

If any ask, how eaſily can he do it? I anſwer, He can do it with a look; Look upon every one that is proud, and bring him low, ſaith God to Job, ſhew thy ſelf like me in this, I can do it as eaſily as look upon him. God by a caſt of his eye can caſt down all proud men; as the Lord can help his people with a look. David deſired no more for his portion, but that God would lift up the light of his countenance upon him (Pſal. 4. 6.) that is, that God would look upon him favourably: And that prayer is made three times (*Pſal.*80 4 7,19.) Cauſe thy face to ſhine upon us, and (we have enough) we ſhall be ſaved, we ſhall be delivered, we ſhall be protected. A good look from God is all good to man. God with a good look can ſave us; and if God withdraw his eye from any, and will not look upon them, if he turn his back upon them, or hide his face from them, his favour is withdrawn, and they are helpleſs. Now as God can ſave his people with a ſmiling look, ſo he can deſtroy his enemies with a frowning one. His look is as powerful and effectual to deſtroy, as it is to ſave; though to look ſavingly be much more the delight of God (if I may ſo ſpeak) than to look deſtroyingly. It is ſaid, God looked through the pillar of fire and the cloud, upon the Hoſts of Pharaoh, and troubled them, and took off the Chariot wheels (Exod. 14. 24.) Surely God abaſeth the proud men of the World eaſily, when he doth it with a look. He indeed (as the holy Virgin ſpake in her ſong, Luke 1. 51, 52.) Sheweth ſtrength with his arm (or the ſtrength of his arm) when he ſcattereth the proud in the imaginations of their hearts, and puts down the mighty from their ſeats, and exalteth them of low degree; yet all this the Lord can do with a look from Heaven, The habitation of his Holineſs, and of his Glory. Now,

If the Lord deal thus with proud men, take theſe inferences from it.

Firſt, Hath God ſuch an evil eye upon proud men, will he caſt them down? Will he certainly do it? And can he eaſily do it? Then woe to proud men; 'tis the word of the Prophet (*Iſa.*28.1.) Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim; that is, to thoſe who crown themſeves with pride, and make that their glory and their honour which will prove their ſhame and downfal: And theſe the Prophet calls the drunkards of Ephraim (I conceive) he means not thoſe that drink themſelves drunk with wine, but thoſe that are drunk with their own preſumptions, with the pride of their Spirits, or, as many alſo are, with vain hopes and expectation. We have vain confidents and expectants ſo expreſſed (Nahum. 1. 10.) While they are folded together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they ſhall be devoured as ſtubble fully dry; that is, while they are drunken with pride and ſelf-confidence to carry all before them, while they are thus folded together like thorns, in their plots and contrivements, while they are drunken with falſe hopes, they ſhall be devoured as ſtubble fully dry; that is, they ſhall be utterly conſumed and devoured.

Secondly, If there be ſuch a woe to proud ones, if the Lord had ſuch a bad eye upon them, and is able to lay them low, and will certainly do it, and can eaſily do it, we had need conſider who are the proud ones. Pride is an evil weed, yet it groweth many times in the beſt ſoil, even in a good heart; and it is no eaſie matter to find out who are the proud men intended in this Text and Point; yet I anſwer,

In general, Firſt, All they are proud who value themſelves very highly, yea, they are proud who put any undue value upon themſelves; we can ſcarcely value our ſelves any thing at all, but we ſhall over-value our ſelves, for we are worms and no men, ſaith David: He ſaid alſo, What is man, O Lord, that thou art mindful of him? Man is ſo ſmall a thing, that the Pſalmiſt could hardly tell what he is, or what to make of him; ſure enough man is no ſuch thing as moſt men make of themſelves. Doubtleſs, if we have any high thoughts of our ſelves, we over-think our ſelves; and uſually they that have leaſt true worth, have greateſt thoughts of their own worthineſs. Man hath loſt all, is ſtript of all, as he cometh into the World, yet he is proud as if he had all. As they that have much are proud, or in great danger of pride, ſo it is a truth, that they who have nothing are often proud too. The Apoſtle bids Timothy (1 *Tim.*6.17.) Charge them that be rich in this World, that they be not high-minded. And among rich men, they who (as I may ſay, according to the phraſe of the World) have raiſed their own fortunes, are moſt apt to be proud; and there are two reaſons of it, Firſt, Becauſe of the change of their ſtate; they were low and empty, but now they are high and full, This change of their condition, changeth their diſpoſition; and (as we ſay) Their blood riſeth with their good. Secondly, That which they have is (ſay they) of their own getting; they think their skill and their diligence hath got it. Hence Job proteſted, If I rejoiced becauſe my hand hath gotten much. Nebuchadnezzar boaſted of his great Palace, becauſe he had built it; Is not this great Babel that I have built? Now, as they are apt to be proud who have much, eſpecially when it is of their own acquiſition (though indeed we have nothing meerly of our own acquiſition) ſo they who have little or nothing, are not out of the danger of pride; poor and proud is ſo common, that it is grown into a proverb. And they eſpecially, who are poor in ſpirituals, grow proud in Spirit, as it was with the Laodicean Angel (*Rev.*3.17.)

But further, they are proud who lift up themſelves in any thing of ſelf; as, Firſt, in their natural parts, wit, underſtanding, memory, elocution; Secondly, in their acquired parts, learning, knowledg, skill; Thirdly, in their moral vertues, ſobriety, temperance, juſtice; Fourthly, in their ſpiritual graces, faith, love, ſelf-denial ('tis poſſible to be proud for a fit of theſe, or to have a fit of pride come upon us upon the exerciſe of theſe) Fifthly, in their holy duties and performances, prayers, faſtings, &c. Sixthly, in their legal righteouſneſs and good deeds, alms, charities. We ſeldom do well, or any good, eſpecially (as we ought, and duty binds us) much good, but we think too well of our ſelves (that we are better than we are) or too much both of the good we have done, and of our own goodneſs. As the great goodneſs of God, or the greatneſs of his goodneſs appears chiefly in this, that he can make all things, even evil things, and thoſe not only the evils of trouble, but the evil of ſin, work together for our good (Rom. 8. 28.) ſo the great evil of mans heart, or the greatneſs of that evil, appears chiefly in this, that it cauſeth all things, even good things, and thoſe not only the good things of this natural life, but the good belonging to, and done in the power of a ſpiritual life, to work to our hurt, ſometimes for a time, and would to our ruine for ever, did not the Lord over-rule it. Seventhly, the ſavour which they have with men, whether they be the mighty, the Princes and Powers of the World, or the many, the common people of the World. How are ſome lifted up, becauſe they are the darlings of the people, becauſe the multitude eyes them, points at them, and applauds them! To be lifted up in any of theſe things, or in any thing elſe (and what is there, not only of an Earthly, but of an Heavenly pedigree and extraction, in which the vain heart of man is not ready to be lifted up unduly, forgetting God from whom all good comes; to be lifted up, I ſay, in any of theſe things) lays man open to the wrathful reſiſtance of God, and all ſuch God will bring down and abaſe; therefore let us be empty of our ſelves, and beware of being found among the proud, yea, of being in any kind or degree proud. It is dangerous to have any pride found in us, but woe to thoſe who are found proud.

Thirdly, If the Lord hath ſuch an eye to, and upon proud men, and will thus bring them low, Then let us not be afraid of proud men; why ſhould we be afraid of them who are falling (*Prov.*15.33.) The fear of the Lord is the inſtruction of wiſdom, and before honour is humility. But what ſaith the ſame Solomon (*Prov.*18 32.) Before deſtruction the heart of man is haughty. As ſoon as ever we ſee any man ſhewing a proud heart by pride of life, we may quickly conclude the Lord is about to pluck him down. One very great reaſon why the Lord hath laid many, who were once as Mountains, low as Valleys, was the pride of their hearts. When pride buds, the rod bloſſometh; that is, God is preparing for the correction, if not for the deſtruction of proud ones. And as it is ſad to ſee pride bud at any time, ſo then eſpecially, when the rod bloſſometh, that is, when God is correcting us with his rods.

Fourthly, Then do not envy proud ones. We are apt to envy thoſe that are high in place, though they are proud in Spirit; but, do not envy proud ones, how high, how great ſoever you ſee them, for they are in danger of falling, according to the truth of this Scripture, and many others. When proud men are in their fulleſt ruff, and higheſt aſcent, then they are neareſt a dreadful downfal; Before deſtruction the heart of man is haughty (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18. 12.) and before honour is humility. And the Apoſtle Peter having given this counſel to thoſe who are humbled by affliction (1 Epiſt. 5. 6.) humble your ſelves under the mighty hand of God, ſubjoins this comfortable promiſe in the cloſe of the verſe, That he may exalt you in due time.

Fifthly, Then pride is a very provoking ſin. The Lord who declares himſelf againſt all ſorts of ſinners, declares himſelf moſt againſt proud ſinners (Prov. 16. 5.) Every one that is proud in heart, is an abomination to the Lord; and mark what followeth in the ſame verſe, though hand join in hand, he (that is, the proud man) ſhall not be unpuniſhed. Pride is the Devils ſin, the Devil is that Myſtical Leviathan ſpoken of in the forty-firſt Chapter of this Book, who is a King over all the Children of pride. They who are not ſubject to God (proud men above all men are not) are the Devils ſubjects; He is a King over all the Children of pride. There are four things in which the provocation of the ſin of pride conſiſts, any one of which may provoke God to pull down proud ones.

Firſt, Proud men ſet themſelves in the place of God, Lucifer (by whom the proud Babylonian is meant) ſaid (Iſa. 14.14.) I will be like the Moſt High. Thus the Lord ſaid of the Prince of Tyrus (Ezek. 28.2.) Becauſe thine heart is lifted up, and thou haſt ſaid I am a God, I ſit in the ſeat of God, in the midſt of the Seas; yet thou art a man and not God, though thou ſett thy heart as the heart of God. See how that proud Prince thought to carry it as God, as if he had been the founder of his own ſtrength. How can the Lord but be provoked with ſuch an affront as this? Proud Babylon ſpake this language, and at as high a rate (Iſa. 47.8.) I am, and none elſe beſides me (is not this to ſpeak juſt like God) I ſhall not ſit as a widow, neither ſhall I know the loſs of Children.

Secondly, As pride is an uſurpation of the place and power of God, ſo of the providence of God. A proud man knoweth not to acknowledg God in any mercy, nor how to be humbled under the hand of God in any affliction. He minds not God either in what he enjoyeth, or in what he ſuffereth; is not this a provocation?

Thirdly, Pride muſt needs provoke God, as a proud man ſets himſelf againſt all the Commands and Laws of God. God cannot but be provoked, to ſee all his Laws and Commands ſlighted by man. A proud man will keep no bounds, nor would he be kept in any.

Fourthly, Pride is a Mother ſin, it brings forth many other ſins. As Unbelief is a Mother ſin, ſo is Pride (Hab. 2.5.) He is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his deſire as Hell, and is as death, and cannot be ſatisfied, but gathereth unto him all Nations, and heapeth unto him all people. The pride of the Aſſyrian put him upon other ſins, upon oppreſſion eſpecially; he could not keep at home, nor be contented with his own Dominion, though a very large and vaſt one; he muſt go abroad, and invade other mens Territories; his pride ſent him to do miſchief, and he enlarged his deſire as Hell. Proud men muſt oppreſs and wrong others, to bring in fewel for their own luſts. Pride calls in aid from many ſins to ſerve its turn.

Laſtly, If pride provokes God, if he looketh upon every one that is proud, to abaſe him and bring him low; then how ſhould we labour to be humble ones, that the Lord may look upon us with a favourable eye, and ſo he doth upon all them that walk humbly with him. As God reſiſteth the proud, ſo he giveth grace to the humble, that is, favour. The humble ſhall have his favour, and the proud his frowns. As to do juſtly, and to love mercy, is the ſum of all duty to man; ſo to walk humbly, is the ſum of all duty to God (Mic. 6.8.) They who walk humbly, walk not only holily, but ſafely. They who are low in their own eyes, are under the ſpecial protection of the high God.

The Lord having called upon Job to ſhew the effect of his wrath againſt one ſort of bad men, the proud, calleth upon him in the next words, to ſhew the effects of his wrath upon all ſorts of bad men, comprehended under this general word, The wicked.

And tread down the wicked in their place.

The Lord bids Job do this if he could (indeed he could not) that he might ſhew himſelf a competent match for God. As if the Lord had ſaid, I tread down the wicked in their places, do thou ſo, too, if thou canſt. God had ſaid before, Abaſe every one that is proud, and bring him low; now he ſaith, Tread down the wicked.

Tread them down.] As mire in the ſtreet: We tread upon vile and contemptible things. To tread upon any thing, a perſon eſpecially, notes utter contempt of him, and abſolute conqueſt over him; and therefore (Joſh. 10. 24.) to ſhew the compleat victory which the Lords people had got over the Kings of Canaan, Joſhua called for all the men of Iſrael, and ſaid unto the Captains of the men of War which went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of theſe Kings; and they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them. And that's it which the Apoſtle gives (in way of promiſe) as an aſſurance of our conqueſt over the evil Spirit, the Devil (Rom. 16.20.) God ſhall bruiſe (we put in the Margin, tread; the Greek word ſignifies, to bruiſe by treading; God ſhall tread) Satan under your feet ſhortly, that is, God will give you a full and final victory over the Devil. We have a like expreſſion or promiſe (Pſal. 91.13.) Thou ſhalt tread upon the Lion and Adder; the young Lion and the Dragon ſhalt thou trample under feet. God will give his people power, not only over hurtful Beaſts, but over men, which are hurtful as thoſe Beaſts, and over Satan, who is eminently ſhadowed by the Lion, the Adder, the young Lion, and the Dragon; in that evil Spirit all theſe evil Beaſts are trodden under feet, that is, ſubdued and conquered. When David would ſhew how he (in caſe he were faulty) was willing to be made a very ſlave to his enemies, he phraſes it thus (Pſal. 7.5.) Let the enemy perſecute my Soul and take it, yea, let him tread down my life upon the Earth, and lay mine honour in the duſt; that is, let him have full power over me, let me be at his mercy, though he be mercileſs. Once more (ſaith the Church, Pſal. 44 5.) Through thee will we puſh down our enemies, through thy name will we tread them down that riſe up againſt us. Thus the Lord beſpake Job, Come, ſaith he, Let me ſee you tread down the wicked, get an abſolute conqueſt over them, that they may riſe up no more in this World to do wickedly. Tread down

The wicked.] The word wicked is often taken largely, ſo every man in a ſinful ſtate, may be called a wicked man; every perſon unconverted or unregenerate, every perſon that hath no true grace, is wicked. There is no middle eſtate among men, between good and bad, converted and unconverted; yet here the wicked are not to be taken only in a large ſenſe, for ſinners in common, but ſtrictly,

Firſt, For the proud before ſpoken of, There the Lord ſaid, abaſe the proud, here he ſaith, Tread down the wicked; that is, the wicked who are proud. To be wicked and to be proud are the ſame: For as moſt wicked men are proud, ſo all proud men are wicked; for pride it ſelf is a great wickedneſs: And it is pride that cauſeth moſt men to do wickedly, even to rebel againſt God and his righteous Laws, to riſe up againſt his ways and truths. When we have ſaid of a man he is proud, if we have not ſaid all evil, we have ſaid one of the worſt evils of him; and that which lays him open, as to ſuffer the worſt penal evils, ſo to do the worſt ſinful evils.

Secondly, If we take the words diſtinctly (as we may) then by the wicked are meant groſs and flagitious ſinners, notorious ſinners; for though, as I ſaid before, any one that hath not grace, may be called wicked, yet properly, and in Scripture ſenſe, wicked ones are notorious, preſumptuous, and flagitious ſinners, ſuch a ſin with as high hand, and with a ſtiff neck.

Thirdly, By the wicked we may eſpecially underſtand oppreſſors, who are troubleſome and vexatious to others. As ſome are wicked in taking their own pleaſure, and in ſatisfying their vain deſires; ſo many are wicked in vexing, afflicting, and oppreſſing others. The Hebrew word for a wicked man, ſignifies ſuch a one as is both unquiet himſelf, and will not ſuffer others to be quiet. In any of, or in all theſe three notions, we may expound the word wicked here; the wicked are proud ones, or notorious evil ones, or oppreſſors to others. Tread down the wicked

In their place.] The Hebrew is Under them, The word alſo ſignifieth (as we render) a proper place; and that's conſiderable. Tread them down in their place. The Lord doth not ſay in thy place, but in their place; which may note theſe two things.

Firſt, Whereſoever thou findeſt them, tread them down.

Non eſt difficile ſuperbum hominem & potentem in alieno loco ſuperare, quia in eo minus habet potentiæ. Sanct.

Secondly, In their place, that is, where they flouriſh moſt, where they are beſt rooted, or moſt ſtrongly ſecured; where they have the greateſt advantages and ſtrengths to ſave them harmleſs. That is ſpecially a mans place, where he ſeateth and hopes to ſettle himſelf. Now ſaith God, Tread them down in their place. I do ſo, I deſtroy the wicked, when and where they think themſelves ſafeſt, where they think no hand can touch them, nor arm reach them, there my foot ſhall tread them down. O Job, canſt thou do thus? or do thou thus, Tread down the wicked in their place. And as it followeth in the next verſe to the ſame effect,

Verſ. 13. Hide them in the duſt together, and bind their faces in ſecret.

That is, Bring them to utter deſtruction, to condign puniſhment, even to death. Some expound hiding in the duſt, by laying in dungeons and filthy priſons. Secondly, Others ſay to hide in the duſt, notes death, or to lay them in their graves. Duſt thou art (ſaid God to Adam, Gen. 3. 19.) and to duſt thou ſhalt return. That is, thou ſhalt die, and be put in thy grave; which poſſibly, is called, the duſt of death (Pſal. 22. 15.) Hide them in the duſt of the earth, let them appear no more above ground to trouble thee or others. Hide them in the duſt

Together.] That is either,

Firſt, All at a time. Thus the Lord can do, he can deſtroy all the wicked at once, at one time, in one hour. Or,

Secondly, Together; that is, in one place. God can gather the wicked all together, and ſo make an end of them together, both as to time and place.

Yet I conceive neither of theſe are here intended; for God doth not uſually deſtroy the wicked all at one time, nor all in one place; he hath ſeveral times and ſtages to act his providences in and upon, ſo that, to hide them in the duſt together, is but this, to hide them alike, to put them all into the ſame condition, at one time or other, in one place or other, that they may be able to do no more miſchief.

Bind their faces in ſecret.] That's the laſt expreſſion, ſhewing what God doth, and what he bid Job do, Bind their faces in ſecret. There may be a twofold interpretati- of theſe words; either,

Firſt, In alluſion to men condemned, whoſe faces uſe to be covered; a Sentence of death being pronounced and paſſed upon them, they were as it were hid from the light of the living. Thus as ſoon as Ahaſuerus the King had paſſed ſentence againſt Haman, they covered his face (Eſther 7. 8.) or

Secondly, This covering their faces may be an alluſion to actually dead men, whoſe faces if they die among men, eſpecially among friends, are always bound up and decently covered. When Chriſt called Lazarus out of the grave, the Text ſaith (John 11. 44.) He came forth, his face being bound about with a napkin. So then, to bind their faces in ſecret, is as if it had been ſaid, bring them to death, or put them to death. Thus the Lord calls Job to that in three particulars, which himſelf will certainly do.

Firſt, To Tread down the wicked.

Secondly, To Hide them in the duſt together.

Thirdly, To Bind their faces in ſecret.

The Notes which I ſhall give from theſe words, will be grounded upon that three-fold interpretation of the word wicked. And

Firſt, As the wicked are taken for the ſame with the proud in the former verſe,

Obſerve, Proud men are wicked men.

Behold (ſaith the Prophet, Mal. 4. 1.) The day of the Lord ſhall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly ſhall be ſtubble. The proud, and they that do wickedly go together. The proud do wickedly, and are therefore deſervedly numbred among the wicked. Pride is the firſt of thoſe ſeven things which are an abomination to the Lord (Prov. 6. 16, 17.) There are ſix things that the Lord hates, yea, ſeven are abomination to him. A proud look, that's firſt; and if a proud look, then certainly a proud heart, and a proud ſpirit. Proud perſons have not onely a chief, but the firſt place by name among thoſe whom the Lord abominates. And in that black Catalogue of eighteen ſorts of wicked ones, that ſhall trouble the world in the latter days, the proud are not the laſt nor the leaſt; (2 Tim. 3. 2, 3, 4, 5.) In the laſt days perilous times ſhall come, why? what ſhall make them ſo? The reaſon follows, For men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, covetous, boaſters, proud. Now though the proud man comes in the fourth place, by name, yet he is in the firſt place as to influence; for what is the reaſon why men over-love themſelves? is it not becauſe they are proud, and have too high thoughts of themſelves? David (Pſal. 119. 21.) ſheweth the wickedneſs of proud men, or that proud men are extreamly wicked, while he ſaith to and of God, Thou haſt rebuked the proud that are curſed, which do erre from thy Commandments. The proud are ſuch as continually wander out of the ways of truth and holineſs. Pride will not let us keep Commandments ('tis the humble ſoul which keeps them) and therefore pride may be called the breach of all the Commandments; and if ſo, proud men muſt needs be the very firſt-born of the wicked; and therefore David ſaith of them, that they are not only the rebuke of God, but under his curſe, which is the peculiar portion and puniſhment of the wicked. And what the way of proud men is, both in doing and ſpeaking, the ſame David tells us (Pſal. 75. 4, 5.) I ſaid unto the fools, deal not fooliſhly; and to the wicked, lift not up the horn, lift not up your horn on high, ſpeak not with a ſtiff neck, that is, be not proud. Wicked men lift up their horn and tongue, they cannot but ſhew their pride in word and deed. The Devil is the wicked one (Matt. 13. 19.) The high-way ground having received the ſeed, 'tis ſaid, the wicked one (that is, the Devil) cometh and catcheth it away. And when the world is ſaid to lie in wickedneſs, or in the wicked one (1 John 5. 19.) The meaning is, that the Devil over-rules the carnal world. Now, as the Devil is the wicked one, ſo he is the proud one alſo. Pride was that wickedneſs for which God trod him down, and his wickedneſs ſtill continueth in tempting men to, or in puffing them up with pride. It is the buſineſs of the wicked one, the Devil, to make men proud, becauſe he knows pride will make them wicked, and do wickedly. Pride hardneth the mind (as Daniel ſaith it did Nebuchadnezzar, Chap. 5. 20.) Now what wickedneſs is there, which a hardened mind will not attempt to do! Pride put Herod upon ſeeking the blood of Chriſt, who came to ſave and waſh ſinners with his blood.

Proud men are very wicked as they deſpiſe other men (a proud man thinks no man ſo good as himſelf, or himſelf too good for all other men) Some proud men are ſo wicked, that they deſpiſe even God himſelf. The proud man lifts up himſelf againſt the Word of God, ſlights the promiſes, regards not the threatnings of God; his heart is lifted up againſt the Commandments of God, nor doth he value the comforts of God; he neglects the Ordinances of God, nor doth he reverence the Providences of God. He that doth, or is ready to do all this, is ſurely a deſpiſer of God himſelf. How wicked a man is he, whoſe heart is lifted up both againſt God and man!

Secondly, Conſider the wicked proud man, as one whom God treadeth down.

Then, Obſerve; God puniſheth ſinners with that which is moſt croſs to their luſts.

What more croſs to a high-ſpirited man, than to be brought low; and who can be brought lower than he that is trodden down. As God ſometimes puniſheth Drunkards with thirſt, and Gluttons with hunger, and covetous perſons with poverty. There is one ſaith Solomon, (Prov. 11. 29.) that with-holdeth more than is meet (he doubtleſs is a covetous man that doth ſo) and it tendeth to poverty. So God puniſheth proud ones, by that which is moſt contrary to their nature, he abaſeth and layeth them low. The Prophet tells us (Iſa. 3. 16, 17.) how the Lord would puniſh wanton women, who were proud either of their natural beauty, or artificial dreſſes and ornaments. The daughters of Zion (ſaith he) are haughty, and walk with ſtretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and making a tink-

a tinkling with their feet; there's their pride: but what was their puniſhment? the next words reſolve us. Therefore the Lord will ſmite with a ſcab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will diſcover their ſecret parts; they were proud of that which covered their skin, and therefore the Lord puniſht them with ſcabs, or covered their skin with ſcurf and ſcabs; and as there the Lord ſhews what he would bring upon, ſo what he would take from them. (Verſ. 18.) In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinckling ornaments about their feet, and their Cauls, and their round tyres like the Moon. And (Verſ. 24.) it ſhall come to paſs that inſtead of ſweet ſmell there ſhall be ſtink, and inſtead of a girdle a rent, and inſtead of well ſet hair baldneſs, and inſtead of a ſtomacher a girding of ſack-cloth, and burning inſtead of beauty. What could be more contrary to the pride of theſe women, than that which the Lord brought upon them, or puniſhed them with. What do proud women more deſire than beauty and bravery? And what do proud men look after, but to be reſpected, honoured, and to have every one point the finger at them, or bow the knee to them? Now when the Lord blaſts proud women in their beauty and bravery, when he blaſts proud men in their honour and eſtimation, when he thus abaſeth and treads them down, he toucheth them in that which the ſpirit of pride prizeth moſt, and with greateſt regret parteth from. Pride is a baſe height of ſpirit, therefore the Lord abaſeth the proud. There are five words in the Text, all tending directly to croſs the ſpirit of a proud man.

Firſt, He ſhall be abaſed.

Secondly, He ſhall be brought low. A proud man would fain be high, he would ſit at the upper end of the Table, yea, he would ſit at the upper end of the World too; but, ſaith the Lord, he ſhall be brought low.

Thirdly, What would a proud man do? He would tread upon the necks of all others, but he ſhall be trodden under foot.

Fourthly, Where would the proud man be? He would be conſpicuous in high places, but he ſhall be hid in the duſt.

Fifthly, He would be lookt at by all men with admiration, but, ſaith God, his face ſhall be bound in ſecret; he loves to appear and make a fair ſhew in the fleſh, but he ſhall not appear at all. Proud ones cannot get ſo high, but God in his Juſtice will get above them, and ſtrip them of that wherein they have chiefly prided themſelves. Read (Iſa. 14.11,12, 13,14,24,25. and *Iſa.*23.9.) Thoſe Scriptures tell us how the Lord deals with proud men, according to their pride, or rather contrary to their pride, he gives them that which they moſt diſguſt, and takes that from them which they moſt paſſionately deſire.

Secondly, Take wicked men in the common notion, for thoſe that do evil at the higheſt rate, that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with cart-ropes. Then,

> Obſerve, Firſt; Wicked men, that is, impenitent ſinners, high-handed ſinners, are in a very ſad condition, and ſhall come to a ſad concluſion.

The Lord will tread them down (Pſal. 9. 16, 17.) The wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hands, yea, the wicked ſhall be turned into hell. That is, the utmoſt of ſorrow and ſuffering ſhall be their portion (Iſa. 3. 11.) Wo to the wicked, for the reward of their doings ſhall be given them. (Iſa. 57. 21.) There is no peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked. As the tumultuouſneſs of their own ſpirits will not let them be at peace, ſo neither will the righteouſneſs of God.

Secondly, From thoſe expreſſions, Tread down the wicked in their place, hide them in the duſt together, bind their faces in ſecret.

> Obſerve; God will at laſt purge and rid the world of wicked men.

As wicked men would fain purge and rid the world of godly men, they would deſtroy all the ſeed of the righteous; ſo certainly God will deſtroy the wicked of the world, and rid the world of them, though not at once of every wicked man, yet in their times and ſeaſons, that they ſhall not do the miſchief which their hearts are full of. The laſt of the Prophets ſpeaks as much of the Lords vengeance upon all the wicked (Mal. 4. 1.) The day of the Lord (ſpeaking of ſome great day of the Lords appearance) ſhall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, ſhall be ſtubble; and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, that it ſhall leave them neither root nor branch. 'Tis utter ruin to be deſtroyed root and branch; ſuch ſhall the ruin of the wicked be. Thus alſo the Prophet Iſaiah comforts the Church (Chap. 52. 1.) Awake, awake, put on thy ſtrength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jeruſalem, the holy City; for henceforth there ſhall no more come into thee, the uncircumciſed and the unclean. The wicked of the world are the uncircumciſed, they have not the ſpiritual circumciſion, the circumciſion of the heart; theſe ſhall no more trouble Jeruſalem, nor tread in Zions Courts. (Nahum 1. 15.) Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace; O Judah keep thy ſolemn feaſts, perform thy Vows, for the wicked ſhall no more paſs through thee, he is utterly cut off. The Hebrew is, Belial ſhall no more paſs through thee: That is, ſuch as caſt off the yoke of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhall no more bring Judah under their yoke. This is alſo witneſſed by another holy Prophet (Zech. 14. 21.) In that day there ſhall be no more the Canaanite in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts, they ſhall no more mingle themſelves with the faithful ſervants of God, much leſs rule over them. Canaanites have often been in the houſe of the Lord, but the Canaanite ſhall not always be there; God will ſweep them out of his houſe. Anſwerable to theſe propheſies ſpeaks the laſt propheſie (Rev. 21. 27. Chap. 22. 15.) which ſome interpret of a glorious ſtate of the Church here, and 'tis undoubtedly true (as all agree) of the Church in glory: No unclean thing ſhall enter; without ſhall be dogs. Then indeed, God will abaſe the proud, and tread down the wicked, in their place.

> Hence Note, Thirdly; No outward advantages (and except thoſe they have none) ſhall ſtand the wicked in ſtead, or keep them from falling.

God will tread them down in their place; when they are where they would be, upon their own ground, they ſhall be worſted. The Scripture ſpeaks often of treading down the wicked, notwithſtanding their greateſt advantages. Union is a great advantage for preſervation, yet (Iſa. 8. 9.) Aſſociate your ſelves, O ye people and ye ſhall be broken in pieces; and give ear all ye far Countreys, gird your ſelves, and you ſhall be broken in pieces; take counſel together, and it ſhall come to nought, ſpeak the word, and it ſhall not ſtand. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will not take you at an advantage, before you are gathered together, before you are girded; I will not ſurprize you unarmed and unprovided; do your beſt to ſave and ſecure your ſelves from my vengeance. Aſſociate your ſelves, gird your ſelves, take counſel together, and then I will tread you down. Neither ſtrongeſt aſſociations, nor wiſeſt conſultations, nor higheſt reſolutions, nor compleateſt preparations for action (though ye have ſpoken the word and are girt) ſhall avail you in the day of my wrath. Thus the Lord beſpake Jehoiakim by his Prophet (Jerem. 22. 15.) Shalt thou reign becauſe thou cloſeſt thy ſelf in Cedar? As if he had ſaid, becauſe thou doſt make ſuch proviſion for thy own ſafety, doſt thou think to be ſafe? or canſt thou ſhelter thy ſelf againſt me? Again (verſ. 23.) O Inhabitant of Lebanon, that makeſt thy neſt in the Cedars (Cedars are high trees and ſtrong) how gracious ſhalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain of a woman in travel. The Lord puts a ſcorn upon them, ſuch a kind of ſcorn (but not as hers, without cauſe) as Michael put upon David (2 Sam. 6. 20.) how glorious was the King of Iſrael to day. Were not you very glorious when you danced uncovered before the ark? Thus, I ſay, the Lord puts a holy ſcorn upon the wicked, when they are in their Cedar-neſts; How gracious wilt thou be, when pangs of ſorrow come upon thee? Take one Scripture more (Jer. 49. 16.) Thy terribleneſs ('tis ſpoken of Edom) hath deceived thee, (thou thoughteſt thy ſelf ſo terrible that none durſt touch thee, yet, thy terribleneſs hath deceived thee) and the pride of thy heart, O thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, and holdeſt the height of the hill; though thou ſhouldſt make thy neſt as high as the Eagles, I will bring thee down from thence, ſaith the Lord. Thou haſt all the advantages, thou haſt a rock for ſtrength; and thou art upon a hill for height, yea, upon the height of the hill; thou art above all; but though thy neſt were as the Eagles, I will pluck thee thence. Thus the Lord treads down the wicked in their place, in their fortifications, in their mounts and towers; when they have ſecured themſelves moſt by counſels, and friends and ſtrong-holds, then and there he treads them down, even in their place.

Fourthly, Note; God is known to be God, or ſheweth himſelf to be God by abaſing the proud, and by treading down wicked men.

I ground it thus. The Lord would have Job ſhew himſelf like God, or act as God doth, by treading down the wicked. God made himſelf known to be God, by the Plagues which he brought upon Pharaoh, as well as by the deliverance and ſalvation which he wrought for Iſrael (Exod. 8.22. Exod. 9.14.) I will ſend all my plagues upon thy heart, and upon thy ſervants, and upon thy people, that thou mayſt know that there is none like me. In very deed for this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. Thus alſo ſaid David (Pſal. 9.16.) The Lord is known by the judgement that he executeth, that is, by puniſhing the wicked he is known to be the Lord. God is known by his works, as well as in his word: power and greatneſs, and wiſdom and juſtice are viſible in his judgments.

There was a third ſort of wicked men named in opening the Text, which I ſhall but touch in this obſervation. Such they were deſcribed to be as are unquiet themſelves, nor will they ſuffer others to be quiet by their good wills; they are troubled that any live peaceably by them: The Lord will tread down theſe unquiet wicked ones alſo. The Scripture is full of this truth (Iſa. 33.1.) Wo to thee that ſpoileſt, and thou waſt not ſpoiled; and dealeſt treacherouſly, and they dealt not treacherouſly with thee: when thou ſhalt ceaſe to ſpoil, thou ſhalt be ſpoiled; and when thou ſhalt make an end to deal treacherouſly, they ſhall deal treacherouſly with thee.

Vexatio verba limata extorſit, mens pia & caſta permanſit.

Now the Lord having put Job to all theſe trials of his ſtrength (thereby to ſhew himſelf able to contend with him) tells him plainly, if thou canſt do theſe things, if canſt abaſe the proud, if thou canſt tread them down, hide them in the duſt, and bind their faces in ſecret; Then

Verſ. 14. Will I confeſs that thine own right hand can ſave thee.

Confeſſio pro laude & honorifico teſtimonio ſæpe ponitur in Scriptura. Palmam tibi cedam, &c. Bez. Hoc ſolius Dei eſt qui quod eſt, per ſe eſt, & à quo omnis poteſtas & dignitas.

Then will I confeſs.] That is, when thou haſt done all theſe things, I will give an honourable teſtimony of thee, I will not hide thy power; and then I will acknowledge, thou haſt ſome colour to conteſt with me, and art able to uphold thy ſelf. Theſe mighty acts are proper and peculiar to me; yet thou ſeemeſt to ſay, thou canſt do all theſe, elſe, ſurely thou hadſt never offered to contend with me. That's the ſcope of theſe words, Then will I confeſs

That thine own right hand can ſave thee.] Or that thou canſt be a ſelf-ſaviour, or that thou art ſelf-ſufficient, as I am, and haſt no dependance upon any; and then thou needeſt not complain that I do not help thee, for thou canſt help thy ſelf.

Thine own right hand can ſave thee.] The hand is an inſtrument of help, eſpecially the right hand; and then the right hand ſaves, when it either keeps us from danger, or delivers us out of it.

Queſt. But did Job ever ſay his own right hand could ſave him?

Anſw. Job never ſaid it, nor thought it, his mind was pure from ſuch blaſphemy; yet he ſometimes ſpake as if he had been ſomewhat more than a man, eſpecially, when he ſpake of debating his matters and arguing with God.

Firſt, In that the Lord ſaith, in caſe Job could do all thoſe things, he would confeſs that his own right hand could ſave him,

Note, He that can deſtroy all others, can ſave himſelf.

Illa facere poſſe, & ſeipſum ſalvare unius, & ejuſdem ſunt virtutis.

There goes no more to ſave our ſelves out of any trouble, than to deſtroy all others. The Apoſtle James ſaith (Cap. 4. 12.) There is one Law-giver, who is able to ſave and deſtroy. God is this law-giver, he is able to do both; and becauſe he can deſtroy all, he can ſave all, and will ſave all that truſt in him. The devil is called a deſtroyer, he is called Abaddon in Hebrew, and Apollyon in Greek, that is, a deſtroyer (Rev. 9.11.) but he cannot deſtroy all; if he could, he would ſoon make ſad work, none ſhould be ſaved. There is but one law-giver, who can ſave and deſtroy, take away life and give life; he can do the one as well as the other, and both as often as he will. The Lord hath an abſolutely ſupream power over men, and may diſpoſe of them for life or death as he pleaſeth; even, eternal life and death, ſalvation and damnation are in his hand; 'tis therefore a fearful thing to fall into the hand (the revenging hand) of the living God (Heb. 10.31.) upon the neglect, much more upon the deſpiſing and contempt of the covenant of life and peace by Jeſus Chriſt, as 'tis ſaid at the 29. verſe of that Chapter. Chriſt is the beſt friend and the worſt enemy; To him belong the iſſues from death (Pſal. 68.20.) and he hath the keys of death and hell (Rev. 1.18.) Let us rejoyce with trembling before him, who is able to ſave and deſtroy.

Secondly, Note; Man cannot ſave himſelf by the beſt of his power.

No, not by his own right hand. Man cannot ſave himſelf, Firſt, from temporal evils; he cannot ſave himſelf, from ſickneſs nor from poverty, he cannot ſave himſelf from any danger that is ready to fall upon him; nor can the ſtrongeſt creatures ſave him (Pſal. 33.17.) A horſe is a vain thing to ſave a man, and man is as vain a thing to ſave himſelf; a horſe cannot deliver us by his great ſtrength, or by the greatneſs of his skill and wiſdom. Secondly, much leſs can man ſave himſelf from ſpiritual and eternal evils. While we conſider, Firſt, out of what miſery we are ſaved. Secondly, from what mighty enemies we are ſaved. Thirdly, from whoſe wrath we are ſaved. Fourthly, what price was required, that we might be ſaved. Fifthly, what mercy and grace were needful to ſave us: we muſt needs confeſs, that our right hand cannot ſave us, ſpiritually and eternally. Who can ſave himſelf out of the hand of that great enemy the devil, and his legions of darkneſs? who can ſave himſelf from that gulf of miſery, into which ſin hath plunged us? who can deliver himſelf from the curſe of the Law, or from ſin, the ſting of death? who can deliver himſelf from the power of his luſts, from the pride, unbelief, covetouſneſs and hardneſs of his own heart? Our own right hand cannot ſave us from any of theſe evils. The devil and the world are too ſtrong for us, and ſo is every luſt and corruption of our own evil hearts. Can we by any power of our own convert our ſelves, or preſerve our ſelves after converſion? Can we get out of the Kingdom of darkneſs by our own power? or put our ſelves into the Kingdom of light by our own power? That we are either temporally, or ſpiritually, or eternally ſaved, is all from the power, from the right hand of God, not at all from our own. Unleſs we give all to God, we take all from him. He that is our God, is the God of ſalvation, and unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death (Pſal. 68.20.) Salvation of every kind, and the iſſues from every kind of death, are of the Lord.

Thirdly, Note; God can ſave alone, or by his own right hand.

That the Lord would have Job underſtand; and this we underſtand from other Scriptures (Pſal. 17.7.) Shew thy marvellous loving kindneſs, O thou that ſaveſt by thy right hand thoſe that put their truſt in thee. This is one of Gods royal Titles, Thou that ſaveſt by thy right hand (Pſal. 98.1.) O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done marvellous things, his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory (Pſal. 44.4.) Thou art my King of old, commanding deliverances for Jacob. How eaſily can the Lord ſave with his hand, who can ſave with his tongue, and deliver by commanding deliverances? Nor is it one deliverance only which the Lord commands, but many, yea, any: That Pſalm gives it plurally, commanding deliverances. The Prophet ſpeaks of this ſole and ſolitary ſaving power of God (Iſa. 59.16.) He ſaw that there was no man (that is, no man that offered any help) and wondred that there was no interceſſor (that is, no man to ſpeak a good word for them) therefore his arm brought ſalvation to him, and his righteouſneſs it ſuſtained him. And again (Iſa. 63.5.) I looked, and there was none to help, and I wondred that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought ſalvation to me. This is it which was ſaid before (verſ. 3.) I have trodden the wine-preſs alone, and of the people there was none with me.

Hence we may infer; Firſt, If the Lords right hand can ſave alone, then there can never be too few hands for God to ſave us by.

There may be ſometimes too many for God to ſave us by, but never too few. Why? becauſe he can ſave by his own right hand. The Lord ſaid to Gideon (Judg. 7.2.) The people that are with thee, are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands (they were ſo many, that the ſole ſalvation of God would not appear) leſt Iſrael vaunt themſelves againſt me, ſaying, mine own hand hath ſaved me. Though we have but little ſtrength, yet it may be too much for Gods purpoſe, we being apt to boaſt our ſelves, when we have any hands to ſave us, as if our own right hand had ſaved us.

Secondly, If God can ſave by his own right hand, Then, when we ſee none, when we ſee nothing to ſave us by, let us truſt God alone.

If God be with us we have ſtrength enough, and hands enough with us. It is all one with the Lord, to ſave by few or by many, yea, by few or by none at all, for his own right hand can do it.

Thirdly, Then truſt in Gods right hand alone for ſalvation, how many hands ſoever you have at any time at work for your ſalvation.

This is our ſin, that when we have many hands to ſave us, we truſt in them, rather than in the right hand of God. The Lord often and uſually makes uſe of mans hand to ſave us by (Obad. ver. ult.) And Saviours ſhall come upon mount Zion to judge the mount of Eſau, and the Kingdom ſhall be the Lords. Now, though the Lord uſeth other right hands to ſave us by, and to judge the wicked by, beſides his own, yet we muſt truſt in his alone; for 'tis he alone that ſaveth us, by what hand ſoever our ſalvation is wrought or brought to us.

Fourthly, Obſerve; To ſave by a ſelf-power, is the ſole prerogative of God.

Divinitatis gloriam ſibi arrogant, & (quaſi) Deum agere volunt.

Only he who ſtands upon his own bottom, or ſubſiſts in and of himſelf alone, can ſave or do any thing of himſelf alone. And as none can do any thing alone, or by a ſelf-power, but God; ſo none ſhould preſume that they can do, or undertake to do the leaſt thing alone. We may, yea, we muſt uſe our hands; that is, do our endeavour for the accompliſhment of every work (for God doth not work ſo as to let man ſtand ſtill and be idle) but we muſt not ſo much as have a thought, that we can effect any thing by our hands. That wiſe woman Abigail intimated to David (1 Sam. 25.31.) that, if he had gone on to avenge himſelf upon Nabal with his own hand, it might have proved grief to him, and offence of heart, that is, trouble of conſcience. Now, as we muſt not at all uſe our own hand in avenging our ſelves, nor think of avenging our ſelves by our own right hand (for ſaith God, Vengeance is mine, and I will repay it:) ſo it is exceeding ſinful to imagine that we can ſave our ſelves, or do any thing, effectually, towards it by our own hand. I may ſee theſe four things, to ſhew the ſinfulneſs of ſuch an imagination.

Arnold Bootius, Animad. ſacr. in vetus teſt. l. 3. c. 2.

Firſt, It is high preſumption to think ſo. It was the preſumption of the great Aſſyrian (Iſa. 10.13.) to ſay, By the ſtrength of my hand have I done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent; and I have removed the bounds of the people (he had no mind to remove their bonds) and have robbed their treaſures, and I have put down the inhabitants like a valiant man. So we render the ſimilitude, Like a valiant man, and ſo do moſt interpreters, both ancient and modern; yet a late learned critick diſſenting from them all, renders, I have knockt them down, or ſlain them, like a beaſt or bullock for ſlaughter or ſacrifice. Which expoſition he confirms, as by the ſenſe of the word there uſed, ſo by the cuſtom of ſpeaking in all languages, it being uſual to compare great ſlaughters of men to the ſlaughtering of beaſts; but of this by the way. Now, whether we take our reading or this, either of them ſets out the preſumptuous boaſting of the Aſſyrian King, that the ſtrength of his own right hand had done all thoſe great things.

Secondly, 'Tis fleſhly confidence, ſuch a confidence as God will reject (Jer. 2.37.) to think we can do any thing by our own hand.

Thirdly, It is a ſlighting of, and departing from God to think ſo (Jer. 17.5.) Curſed be the man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm (whether his own fleſh or other mens fleſh, what fleſh ſoever it is that he maketh his arm, curſed be he, and what follows) and whoſe heart departeth from the Lord. As if he had ſaid, every time we think to ſave our ſelves by our own right hand, we do curſedly depart from the Lord. The truth is, we can no more ſave our ſelves, than we can make our ſelves; we can no more preſerve our being, than we can give our ſelves a being; it is from the Lord that we have a being, or are preſerved from a miſerable being.

Faciunt vim ſuam, Deum ſuum.

Fourthly, They who think they can ſave themſelves by their own hand, put themſelves into the place of God, and take upon themſelves to be God. The King of Iſrael ſaid well (2 King. 5.7.) when the King of Syria ſent Naaman his ſervant to heal him of his Leproſie, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth ſend me to recover a man of his Leproſie? Whoſoever thinks he can heal, or ſave by his own power, takes upon himſelf, as if he were God. Many make their force their God. That Heathen King (Hab. 1.11.) aſcribed his power to his god. So we render the words; yet ſome expound them, as if Nebuchadnezzar, in the pride of his heart, refuſing at that time to acknowledge any God but himſelf, aſcribed his power to himſelf. But ſuppoſing according to the ſupplement of our Tranſlation, and the expoſition of many more, that he aſcribed his power not to himſelf, but to his Idol-god; how great a rebuke will that acknowledgement of his be to any, who worſhipping the true God, ſhall yet aſcribe their power to themſelves, and ſo take upon themſelves to be God? Jacob ſaid to Rachel, when ſhe was ſo impatient for children, Am I in the place of God? To give effect, is the work of God; and therefore, for us to think we can give effect to what we do, is to take upon us to be God. The King of Tyrus is therefore ſaid, To ſet his heart as the heart of God, (Ezek. 28.6.) becauſe he thought he could defend and ſecure himſelf by a ſelf-power and ſtrength, or by a ſelf-wiſdom and policy. Let us renounce our own arm, and power, and ſtrength, and right hand, in all things; let us look upon our own right hand as weak and withered, unable to bring any thing to paſs, but as the Lord ſhall be pleaſed to put forth his right hand to ſtrengthen ours. And when we are thus ſenſible of our own weakneſs, and alſo humbled under a ſenſe of it, then the Lord gives out moſt ſtrength to us; yea, makes us able to do all things (which are our duty, and we have a call to do) through Chriſt ſtrengthning us (Phil. 4.13.) And as we ſhall find Chriſt ſtrengthning us to do, ſo to ſuffer all things when we are weak in our ſelves. The Apoſtles experience taught him to ſay ſo (2 Cor. 12.10.) I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſts ſake; for when I am weak that is, in my ſelf) there I am ſtrong; that is, in the Lord.

Thus the Lord hath been dealing with Job to humble him, by putting him upon thoſe things which he himſelf alone can do; by which he taught Job, and teacheth us and all men, that no man can ſave himſelf by his own right hand. There is no ſalvation in any name, in any hand, but in Jeſus Chriſts; much leſs ſpiritual or eternal ſalvation.

VERS. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24.

Behold now Behemoth, which I made with thee, he eateth graſs as an Ox.

Lo now is ſtrength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly.

He moveth his tail like a Cedar: the ſinews of his ſtones are wrapt together.

His bones are as ſtrong pieces of braſs: his bones are like bars of iron.

He is the chief of the ways of God: he that made him, can make his ſword to approach unto him.

Surely the mountains bring him forth food: where all the beaſts of the field play.

He lieth under the ſhady trees, in the covert of the reeds and fens.

The ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow: the willows of the brook compaſs him about.

Behold, he drinketh up a river, and haſteth not: he truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth.

He taketh it with his eyes; his noſe pierceth through ſnares.

THe Lord having ſpoken in the former context concerning proud men, when he alone is able to abaſe, to lay low, to tread down, as 'tis there expreſt; he preſently ſubjoyns, not only the mention, but a very large and accurate deſcription of two huge, vaſt and (as to bigneſs) monſtrous creatures; the one belonging to the Land, the other to the Water. In the making and governing of both which, his mighty power and wonderful providence are clearly ſeen, and ought to be religiouſly, both acknowledged and adored, theſe being ſuch as man could not ſubdue, nor make any uſe of, unleſs God had ordered and over-ruled them for the ſervice and benefit of man; one of them he hath ſubdued to the ſervice of man, Behemoth, and the other to the benefit of man, even the great Leviathan.

Many of the Ancients draw this whole diſcourſe about Behemoth and Leviathan, into an Allegory, underſtanding by them. Firſt, The Devil; Secondly, Antichriſt, together with all the oppreſſive and afflictive powers of this world. But though we may make ſome uſe and improvement of the Allegory, yet doubtleſs theſe two creatures are here intended primarily in a proper and literal ſenſe; even as the Lord before in a proper and literal ſenſe diſcourſed with Job concerning the Lion, the wild Goat, the wild Aſs, the Unicorn, the Horſe, and ſeveral other creatures, mentioned in the 39. Chapter of this Book. And therefore it was well ſaid by an ancient Writer upon this place. We are not ignorant that many have expounded this Scripture in an allegorical way, of the Devil; but we muſt firſt attend the Hiſtory, and then make ſome uſe, for the profit of the hearer, out of the Allegory.

Nec illud nos fugit in diabolum hæc dicta eſſe nonnullos exiſtimaſſe; verum primo hiſtoria danda eſt opera deinde utilitati ſuccurrendum auditoris, nec contemnenda Anagogia. Chryſoſt.

The Lord in preſenting this and that other vaſt creature to Job, ſeems thus to beſpeak him, That thou, (O Job*) mayſt know the better how to take meaſure of thy ſelf, and how to keep thy due diſtance in ſpeaking to me (of which* Job had not been ſo obſervant as he ſhould) I ſet before thee two ſtupendious creatures, both the work of my hands, both at my diſpoſe and command; and by thy inability to deal with them, thou mayſt learn how unable thou art to ſtrive or contend with me. Or thus, If thou (O Job*) doſt not yet underſtand what a poor creature thou art, and how uncomely a thing it is for thee to murmur at, and find fault about my proceedings with, and providences towards thee, in laying thoſe ſore afflictions upon thee; or if thou doſt not yet underſtand how uncomely thou haſt carried it towards me, in calling me to account for my actions with thee, yet learn it, at leaſt, at the ſight, or upon conſideration of theſe beaſts. Canſt thou match either the Elephant or the Leviathan? Canſt thou find any error in their frame or conſtitution, when thou haſt viewed all their parts which I will particularly ſet out before thee? Art thou ſtrong as* Behemoth, and mighty as Leviathan? Canſt thou withſtand their ſtrength or might? dareſt thou contend with them, or ſtand before them? If not, how dareſt thou contend with me? how dareſt thou ſpeak words which may bear ſo much as the ſhadow of any contention with me, or diſſatisfaction with what I have done?

Thus the Lord who had exemplified his power and wiſdom to Job in divers creatures of a leſſer ſize and port, now gives inſtance in two of the greateſt, the Elephant and Leviathan, which may well be called The chief patterns or pieces of divine power and skill, that ſo, Job might be further convinced, and more deeply humbled by theſe viſible things, of the inviſible power of God, or might learn how mighty that God is that made them, how mighty that God is who rules and over-rules them. The one would trouble all at Land, and the other all at Sea, if God did not bind and bridle them. This doubtleſs, or ſomewhat like this, is the general ſcope of the Lords long diſcourſe about theſe two famous creatures, even to ſhew how much man is below God, ſeeing he is ſo much (in many things) below theſe beaſts; or, that man who in many things is no match for theſe creatures, cannot poſſibly be a match for God, who made them. Thus much in general.

Verſe 15. Behold now Behemoth.

We have a deſcription of Behemoth ſix ways in this context.

Firſt, He is deſcribed by his procreating or efficient cauſe, God himſelf; Behold now Behemoth which I made: He is my work, my workmanſhip.

Secondly, He is deſcribed by his conſerving cauſe, or that which is the matter of his nouriſhment and preſervation, in the cloſe of the 15. verſe, He eateth graſs like an Ox. And (ver. 20.) Surely the mountains bring him forth food.

Thirdly, He is deſcribed by his mighty ſtrength; by the ſtrength of his loins and belly (ver. 16.) by the ſtrength of his tail and genitals (ver. 17.) and by the ſtrength of his bones (ver. 18.) from all which, the Lord concludes in the 19. verſe (which are the words I ſhall chiefly inſiſt upon) his excellency above all other beaſts, He is the chief of the ways of God; and yet how great and vaſt ſoever he is, his ſtrength is weakneſs in compariſon of God; for as 'tis ſaid, God is able to tame him, and ſubdue him; in the latter end of the 19. verſe, He that made him, can make his ſword to approach unto him. The former part of this 19. verſe heightens all that hath been ſpoken before concerning the power of Behemoth, which is the third thing whereby he is deſcribed.

Fourthly, He is deſcribed by his harmleſsneſs towards other beaſts (ver. 20.) Surely the mountains bring him forth food, where all the beaſts of the field play. As if God had ſaid, this is no ravenous beaſt, though a great beaſt, for all the beaſts of the field; little or great, one and the other, play about him, they do not run away, they are not frighted at the ſight of him, as if they ſaw a Lion or a Tyger.

Fifthly, He is deſcribed by the place of his repoſe and ſhelter, where he delights to reſt himſelf, and take his eaſe (ver. 21, 22.) He lieth under the ſhady trees, under the covert of the reeds and fens; the ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow, the willows of the brook compaſs him about.

Sixthly, He is deſcribed by his deep and dreadleſs drinking, in the two laſt verſes of the Chapter; Behold he drinketh up a River, and haſteth not (for fear) he truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth (not an ordinary River, but Jordan) a high expreſſion, to ſhew the extream thirſt of this creature (according to our reading) and how large a cask he hath to hold his liquor; He truſteth that he can draw up Jordan with his mouth; he taketh it with his eyes (he thruſts his head into the water up to the eyes) and his noſe pierceth through ſnares. By theſe ſix particulars this creature is deſcribed; upon all which, I ſhall add ſomewhat diſtinctly and briefly.

Behold now Behemoth, which I have made with thee.

God calls Job to a very attentive conſideration, being to enter upon a diſcourſe about the creature. Behold, is a uſual word of attention, it alſo is a word which carries admiration in it; it gives us warning, that the matter following is of no ordinary importance; and ſurely, that which followeth here is not. Behold now Behemoth.

Hence Note, The works of God, eſpecially his great works, are very attentively to be conſidered.

Let's not think it a matter of indifferency, whether we conſider theſe works of God, yea, or no. Here is a Behold prefixt, leſt we ſhould ſay, what ſhould we ſtay our minds upon beaſts, upon Behemoth or Leviathan, we have other more ſpiritual objects to think upon? 'Tis true, we have; but we muſt take heed of ſlighting theſe objects, eſpecially when God doth, as it were, travel by his Spirit, to ſet them forth before the eye of our mind, in their utmoſt grandure and excellency. We ſhould not paſs the leaſt works of God lightly by, much leſs ſhould we ſo paſs by the great works of God. We ſhould not lightly paſs by the leaſt mercy of God, but think much of little mercies; little mercies are great mercies to us, ſeeing we are leſs then the leaſt of them (as Jacob ſpake, Gen. 32. 10.) but we muſt eſpecially conſider great mercies, great deliverances, great ſalvations; upon them our minds muſt ſtay or make a ſtand, and our meditations dwell. We are alſo to conſider, and well to view all our ſins, our little ſins, our leaſt failings, ſeeing they have a greatneſs in them, as being committed againſt the great God, and as being able to do us great hurt, and to draw down great wrath upon us, if not repented of, and turned from; but our great ſins muſt much more be viewed and conſidered: And every godly man doth ſo, he holds the eye of his Soul upon the ugly face of great ſins, eſpecially, to diſcover the deformity and iniquity of them to the utmoſt, that he may be greatly humbled for them. Now, as we ſhould not lightly paſs by our leaſt mercies and ſins, but very deeply conſider our great mercies and ſins, ſo we ſhould not neglect the leaſt creature, the leaſt work of God (the great wiſdom and power of God are viſible in the leaſt) but we ſhou'd ſeriouſly conſider the more noble creatures, and the greater works of God, whether they be works of creation, or works of providence. I may ſay as Chriſt (*Matth.*23. 23.) about tything mint, anniſe and cummin; theſe things ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Chriſt uſed a piece of rhetorick; when he ſaid, You ſhould not leave them undone, his meaning was, you ſhould do thoſe greater things of the Law, judgment, righteouſneſs, and faith, with greateſt exactneſs. So I ſay in this caſe, you are not to leave the leaſt pieces of Gods work in creation or providence, unviewed, unconſidered, unmeditated; but his great works, his Behemoths, you ſhould behold, ſtudy and admire, or behold and ſtudy with admiration. When I conſider (ſaith *David, Pſal.*8 3) the Heavens, the work of thy hands, the Sun and the Moon, &c. This implyeth, that David did often conſider the Heavens, thoſe great pieces of Gods work, as alſo the great Luminaries there placed and moving with admired ſwiftneſs and evenneſs continually. Though we are chiefly to behold ſpiritual things, yet we muſt not think our time loſt in beholding natural things; though we ſhould ſpecially behold Gods gracious works, the works of grace, the workmanſhip of God in framing the new creature, yet we muſt alſo behold the old creation, and view every piece of it, eſpecially the great pieces of it. Again, though we ſhould behold and be looking to the Author and finiſher of our faith; though we ſhould, as the Baptiſt called ſome to do in his time, and all to do in all times (John 1.29.) Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the World (our eyes and our hearts, the eye of our faith ſhould be upon Chriſt the Lamb of God, more, ten thouſand times more, then upon Leviathan or Behemoth) yet 'tis our duty to behold Behemoth and Leviathan. Jeſus Chriſt ſaith (Iſa. 65. 1.) Behold me, behold me; 'Tis the word here in Job. Jeſus Chriſt ſpeaks there as if he would call off our eyes and hearts from all things in the world, to behold himſelf; and in compariſon, ſo we ſhould. He is the moſt amiable ſight or ſpectacle in the world, and therefore ought to be the deſire of our eyes; yet in their places, there are other worthy ſpectacles for us to behold, eſpecially as they hold forth, and as in them we may behold, the power, wiſdom and goodneſs of God. Let no man ſay we loſe our time in a due meditation upon any of the creatures which God hath made; for he hath made them, that we ſhould behold and meditate upon them.

בהם
בהמה
Pecus majus

Behold now Behemoth.] The word Behemoth is applicable to, or may ſignifie any greater or great beaſt of the field (Gen. 3.14.) The Lord ſaid unto the ſerpent; becauſe thou haſt done this, thou art curſed above all cattle, and above every beaſt of the field. And again, Every beaſt of the forreſt is mine (ſaith the Lord, Pſal. 50. 10.) and the cattle upon a thouſand Hills. Hence ſome conceive that we are here to underſtand beaſts in general, the word Behemoth being in the plural number. Behold now the beaſts; as if the Lord pointed at all the beaſts of the field in this Behold. And 'tis a truth, we are to conſider them all; but it is very improbable that in this place God calls Job to behold the beaſts of the field in general, and not rather ſome one in ſpecial: And I may give four reaſons for it.

Firſt, Becauſe in the former Chapter God had ſpoken of divers particular beaſts of the earth; and therefore doubtleſs here alſo he ſpeaks of ſome particular beaſt.

Secondly, That creature which is joyned with Behemoth in this diſcourſe, is by moſt taken for a particular kind of fiſh in the Sea; and therefore 'tis moſt congruous, that Behemoth ſhould denote ſome particular kind of beaſt at Land.

Thirdly and chiefly, The deſcription given here of Behemoth will not fit all ſorts of beaſts in the field, it will not fit a ſheep, nor a bullock. What is ſaid of Behemoth exceeds the proportion and conſtitution of all ſuch and many other beaſts.

Fourthly, Behemoth is ſaid to feed, where all the beaſts of the field do play (Ver.20.) and therefore we cannot underſtand all the beaſts of the field by him; no, nor (which ſome of the Jewiſh writers inſiſt much upon) all the greater beaſts of the field. And therefore we may conclude, that this word Behemoth (though in it ſelf a plural word) is here intended of a ſingular beaſt; and, becauſe there is no greater beaſt upon the earth then the Elephant; therefore moſt interpreters (both ancient and modern) determin it upon the Elephant, to whom (among all the beaſts of the Earth, thoſe ſix particulars (mentioned in the following deſcription of Behemoth) are ſuppoſed moſt fitly to agree.

And whereas 'tis objected, the word Behemoth is of the plural number, that is eaſily anſwered, and wiped off; for nothing is more uſual in the Hebrew language, then to expreſs great things by a plural word; and ſo the Elephant may be called the beaſts, either, Firſt, with reſpect to the vaſtneſs of his body, as if he did comprize, or were a comprehenſion of all other beaſts. Or, Secondly, with reſpect to ſome extraordinary qualification or eminency found in him, in which reſpect, it is ſaid at the 19. verſe, He is the chief of the ways of God. As the Hebrew ſets out excellent things by words of the ſuperlative degree, ſo likewiſe by words of the plural number, or it uſeth the plural number to ſignifie the ſuperlative degree. The Elephant is the Beaſt, the Beaſt of Beaſts, a beaſt above all beaſts. Thus (*Prov.*1.20.) Chriſt is called in the plural number Wiſdoms, becauſe of the excellency of his wiſdom. Again (*Prov.*9.1.) Wiſdom (ſo we Tranſlate, but the word is Wiſdoms) hath built her houſe, That is, Jeſus Chriſt hath. And he is expreſt by a plural word, to note that all ſorts and degrees of wiſdom meet in him; according to that of the Apoſtle (Col. 2. 3.) In him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledg. As David when he would ſhew how very fooliſh and beaſtly he had been, in miſ-judging the diſpenſations of God; Firſt, in afflicting the godly; Secondly, in proſpering evil men: When (I ſay) he conſidered, how fooliſhly he had done in envying at, or in being troubled about their proſperity; he concludes (*Verſ.*22.) So fooliſh was I and ignorant, even as a beaſt before thee. The Hebrew uſeth the word in the Text, Behemoth, even as beaſts before thee. As if he had ſaid, the beaſtlineſs of all beaſts centred in me, and all their ignorance, while my ſpirit was ſo troubled in this matter concerning the providences of God, towards my ſelf who ſerve him, and thoſe who ſerve him not. Thus David, that he might fully acknowledg, how very a beaſt he was, in ſo ſpeaking and ſo thinking, calls himſelf Behemoth, Beaſts. This may ſuffice to ſatisfie the Reader why we expound the Text of a particular beaſt, and why moſt pitch it upon the Elephant among all beaſts in ſpecial, though the word be of the plural number. There being no proper or peculiar name in Scripture for the Elephant, it is moſt probable that he is here named by this Appellative word plural.

Behemoth forma plurali nuncupatur Elephantus more Hebræorum, qui pluralibus nonnunquam pro ſuperlativis uti ſolent. Latini quoque hiſtorici ſæpe cum de Elephanto loquuntur, Belluam, abſolutè nominant. Druſ.

Yet (before I ſtep further into that large deſcription which the Lord gives of Behemoth) I cannot forbear to take notice, that the ſame induſtrious and learned Author, who varyeth in opinion (as was there ſhewed) about the Reem, by us rendred the Unicorn, varyeth here as much in his Opinion about Behemoth, intimated by our tranſlators in the Margin, and affirmed (as himſelf confeſſeth) by the moſt general voice of modern interpreters, to be the Elephant.

Bochartus parte poſteri lib. 5. c. 15.

I ſuppoſe it will not be unacceptable to the Reader, if I here offer a brief account of thoſe reaſons which prevailed with him to turn off from the common opinion concerning this Animal, which he gives as followeth.

‘In the fortieth and forty-firſt Chapters of the Book of Job (ſaith he) Behemoth and Leviathan are ſo deſcribed, that 'tis apparent they are beaſts of a huge bulk; Whence it comes to paſs, that moſt of the latter Writers have thought Behemoth to be the Elephant, and Leviathan the Whale; this being without controverſie the greateſt Animal that lives in the waters, and that the greateſt that lives upon the Land. To whoſe Judgment I ſhould have willingly aſſented, but that conſidering the matter more narrowly, I ſaw many thing ſpoken of them, even in approved verſions, which no way agree with the nature of the Elephant and the Whale. I ſhall not ſay that Interpreters prepoſſeſſed with this opinion, have wreſted ſome things another way, which if they were rightly unfolded according to the Hebrew, it would appear as clear as the light, that under theſe names Behemoth and Leviathan, two animals are characteriz'd extreamly different from the Elephant and the Whale; but which they are, is not eaſie to determin. Yet it doth not a little pleaſe me, that Beza and Diodate, men of a moſt clear judgment, and of no ordinary learning, do conclude Leviathan to be the Crocodile of Nilus. Whence I have a ſtrong conjecture, that Behemoth is an animal of the ſame neighbourhood, even an Inhabitant of Nilus, called Hippopotamus (or the River-horſe.) I would have none troubled with the newneſs of this opinion, but firſt weigh my reaſons; whereof let this be the firſt: That, as upon the former ſtage, in the cloſe of the 38. and throughout the 39. Chapter, only terreſtrial animals were preſented; ſo it ſeems moſt congruous, that upon this only aquatical or water-animals ſhould be preſented, leſt the courſe of proceeding ſhould be diſordered. So that, Leviathan (as all agree) being a creature that lives in the water, 'tis probable Behemoth doth ſo too, both being deſcribed in the ſame ſeries of diſcourſe. That the ancient Jews were of this opinion, may be collected out of the ſecond Book of Eſdras, Chap. 6. Verſ. 47, 48, 49. where Behemoth is placed among the aquatical Animals, created the fifth day. Further, the Hippopotame and the Crocodile, are fitly joyned together, becauſe there is a great likeneſs of nature between theſe two for both are very big and fierce, and amphibions, and four-footed, and both have one common habitation, the River Nilus; which Pliny alſo takes notice of (Lib. 28. Cap. 8.) and therefore moſt Writers handle them together. Nor doth the name Behemoth unfit the Hippopotame, ſeeing the Hebrew word Behema is appliable to all four-footed beaſts, to thoſe eſpecially which are of greater bulk, as is the Hippopotame; of which the Ancients ſpeak variouſly, becauſe the ſtature of beaſts of the ſame kind is alſo various. None make him leſs then Ariſtotle, who gives him the bigneſs of an Aſſe. But Herodotus ſaith, he is as big as the biggeſt Ox. In Diodorus he is deſcribed no leſs then five cubits. Achilles Statius ſaith, he is in appearance and compoſure of his parts, like a horſe, but three times as big. Moreover, the ſame Author calls him, The Egyptian Elephant, becauſe he is judged next him in ſtrength. Hence it is that barbarous Writers (who the Author means by them, I do not well underſtand) compare the Hippopotame with, or preſer him before the Elephant in ſtrength and ſtature; of which the Author gives other proofs; and adds, I know Mercer and others define the Hebrew word Behema, a four-footed beaſt of the Earth, as if it were applicable to terreſtrial animals only; but the Arabians teach otherwiſe, that Bahima (which in their Idiom is the ſame with the Hebrew Behema) ſignifies four-footed beaſts living in the water, as well as thoſe that live upon the Land. Nevertheleſs, if it were true, that the word Behema is applicable to terreſtrial beaſts only, yet the Hippopotame may be reckoned among them, becauſe he is an Amphibion, or an Animal that lives partly on the Land, and partly in the water. Secondly, Becauſe he is in ſhape like thoſe beaſts which live only upon the Land. Surely there is no water-animal that is ſo like Land ones as he is. Whence it is, as I conceive, that among all water-animals, he alone may be called, by way of Excellency, Behema or Behemoth, which according to the Egyptian dialect, is a word of the ſingular, not of the plural number; of which he gives many parallel inſtances in other words of the ſame language.

The Learned Author having laid down theſe general reaſons, or grounds of his opinion, goeth on with an elaborate expoſition of the Text in Job, in purſuance of, and conformity thereunto. And though I ſhall not depart from the common opinion, that by Behemoth the Elephant is meant here, and afterwards the Whale by Leviathan (having indeed caſt my meditations ſo, long before this noble work of Bochartus came to my hand) yet I owe ſo much reverence and reſpect to the name and labours of ſo worthy a perſon, as to give hints in paſſage, concerning, at leaſt ſome of thoſe particulars in the Text, which he conceives moſt fitly agreeing to the Hippopotame in the Lords deſcription of Behemoth, and to the Crocodile, in his deſcription of Leviathan, leaving the Reader at liberty to pitch his judgment, as he finds light and Reaſon leading him.

For, though to hit the right meaning of every word in Scripture, is not only moſt deſirable and aimable, but that which we ſhould make conſcience of (in which regard we are much indebted to their labours who contribute any further help towards that attainment) yet in this matter an unwilling miſtake is not very dangerous, there being ſo great a likeneſs between ſome creatures, in their nature, ſtature, qualities and parts, that where the Spirit of God in Scripture intends one by ſuch a name, another may eaſily be taken as intended by it.

Further, take which you will of theſe Animals, whether the Elephant or Hippopotame for Behemoth, or the Whale or Crocodile for Leviathan, there are ſome things in the textual deſcription of them by God himſelf, which cannot without difficult objections be applied, either to the one or to the other. All which ariſe, not from the darkneſs of the Scriptures, but, from the darkneſs of our underſtanding both as to the Scripture themſelves, and the creatures treated of in them.

All that I ſhall ſay in this controverſie about the two creatures here, and in the next Chapter ſpoken of, is,

Firſt, That the moſt common and received opinion, among very learned men, is, that by Behemoth is meant the Elephant; not the Egyptian Elephant, as the Hippopotame hath been called, but the proper Elephant. As alſo, that by Leviathan we are to underſtand the Whale, or ſome mighty fiſh of the Cetacean breed. Now as 'tis never good to follow the practice or example of the rude and ignorant multitude, ſo we ſhould not eaſily recede from the opinion and judgment of a grave and knowing multitude.

Secondly, I ſuppoſe it will not be denyed, that the Elephant is an Animal much more known, and of a more honourable report then the Hippopotame, and that the Whale for greatneſs much exceeds, and is in that reſpect, at leaſt, more famous then the Crocodile. Therefore the Lord ſpeaking of the chief works of his hands, among viſible irrational creatures, in this latter part of his ſpeech to Job, may be conceived to intend the former under both titles, rather then the latter.

Thirdly, I muſt confeſs, I have a little prejudice againſt expounding Behemoth by the Hippopotame, and Leviathan by the Crocodile, even for this reaſon, becauſe they are Amphibious; for, Firſt, as all creatures of that ſort have an uncouthneſs, and a kind of monſtroſity in their naturals; ſo they have no commendable ſignification in our morals, they bearing the reſemblance of indifferent and middle men, who are (as we ſpeak proverbially) neither fleſh nor fiſh, who abide neither at Land nor in the water, neither in this nor that, but to ſerve their own turns and reach their own ends, can be here and there, or any where, or any thing. Now the Lord deſcribing here (as was ſaid before) ſuch animals as are the chief of his ways and works, Amphibious (to me) ſeem not ſo competent for, nor deſerving of ſuch high Elogiums. Secondly (with the ſavour of that learned Author) it appears to me more probable, that God intended to conclude his ſpeech to Job about the creatures, by ſetting thoſe two before him which are moſt eminent, the one upon the Land, the other in the Sea, rather then by ſetting two before him, either of which are challenged in part by both. Nor is it to me very probable, that God having deſcribed ſeveral perfect fowls of the Air, and beaſts of the Earth, ſhould not inſtance in any one perfect fiſh of the Sea, which he hath not done, unleſs Leviathan be, not an Amphibion, but, a perfect fiſh. Somewhat further may be offered towards a proof, that Leviathan is ſo, when I come to the 41. Chapter; I ſhall now proceed with Behemoth. Behold now Behemoth, which

I made with thee.] Here Behemoth is deſcribed by his Author and maker. I made him (ſaith the Lord) he is my workmanſhip; and I made him

With thee.] God ſpake thus, as it may be conceived,

Firſt, To humble Job by this conſideration, that the Elephant or Behemoth was of his making as well as himſelf; as if, when the Lord ſaid, I made him with thee, his meaning were, He is thy fellow-creature.

Secondly, I made him with thee; That is, though he be a great beaſt, the greateſt that lives and moves on the earth, yet I made him as well as I made thee, or the leaſt worm of the Earth.

Thirdly, Theſe words, I made him with thee, may be referred to the time of Behemoths making, I made him the ſame day with thee; for all the beaſts of the Earth were made upon the ſixth day, the ſame day in which man was made.

Fourthly, Which I made with thee, That is, I made him to be with thee; I did not make Behemoth as I made Leviathan, to play in the Sea, but I made him to be with thee on the Land, that thou ſhouldeſt behold him, and take notice of him, or that he ſhould be under thy hand; yea, not only ſo, but (contrary to the nature of wild beaſts) to love thy company, and to deſire converſe with thee, to be guided by thee, and in many things to act with a kind of reaſon and underſtanding like thee, or as thy ſelf and other men do.

Fifthly, Which I made with thee, That is, for thee; I made him for thy uſe, I made him to ſerve thee. Though he be thus great and vaſt, yet he will be thy humble ſervant. There will be occaſion afterwards to ſhew further, how ſerviceable and uſeful Elephants are to man.

Sixthly, I made him with thee, That is, I made him as nigh to thee as any of the unreaſonable creatures; yea, nigher to thee then any of the unreaſonable creatures, for I have made him excel them all as thou excelleſt him, he is above other irrational creatures, as thou art above all irrationals: He (next to Angels and men) is the chief of my ways. The word, made, may import this alſo, and ſo it is uſed (1 Sam. 12. 6.) The Lord advanced (the Hebrew is, Made) Moſes and Aaron. The Lord hath ſo made the Elephant, that he hath alſo advanced him above all the beaſts of the field. I have ſet him as near the ſeat of reaſon as might be, and not be rational.

In all theſe reſpects we may underſtand the Lord ſaying to Job, concerning Behemoth, I made him with thee. He is thy fellow-creature; and how great ſoever he is, he is my creature. I made him the ſame day that I made thee, and I made him to abide in the ſame place with thee, or where thy abode is; I made him alſo for thy ſervice, and that he might be a meet ſervant for thee; I have made him almoſt a partaker of reaſon with thee, ſo far at leaſt a partaker of reaſon, that he will very obſequiouſly ſubmit to, and follow the conduct of thine; and though he be the ſtrongeſt beaſt on earth, yet thou mayeſt find him acting more according to thy reaſon then his own force or ſtrength.

There is yet another interpretation of theſe words given by Bochartus, which favours his opinion, that Behemoth is the Hippopotame or River Horſe. Whom I have made with thee, or rather near thee, or hard by thee; That is, in thy neighbour-hood, in a Country which borders upon thine. As if (ſaith he) God had ſaid to Job, I need not fetch arguments from far to prove how powerful I am, ſeeing I have them at hand: For among the beaſts which I made in Nilus, which is near thy Country Arabia, how admirable is the Hippopotame? And that the Hebrew word [עם] ſignifies by or near, as well as with, he gives many examples; Joſh. 7. 2. Judg. 9. 6. Judg. 18. 3. Judg. 19. 11. 2 Sam. 6. 7. 2 Sam. 20. 8. which the Reader may peruſe and conſider.

Tecum, vel potius juxta te.

Thus the Elephant was made with man. But how lives he? how feeds he? Not like man.

He eateth graſs as an Ox.] From theſe words alſo the Author laſt mentioned collects an argument for the ſtrengthening of his interpretation. The Ox and Elephant (ſaith he) are alike labouring beaſts, and therefore no wonder if they feed alike, or live upon the ſame kind of food; but that the Hippopotame, which is an aquatical Animal, and abides for the moſt part in the bottom of Nilus, ſhould eat graſs like an Ox, this is ſtrange, and matter of wonderment. Nor is it for nothing, that he is compared to the Ox, whom he reſembles not only in his food, but in the bigneſs of his body and in the ſhape of his head and feet; whence the Italians call him Bomarin, that is, the Sea-Ox.

Yet theſe words may very well be applied to the Elephant, It being only true, that his food is graſs, but a merciful wonder that it is ſo; For did this vaſt creature live upon prey or the ſpoil of other beaſts, what havock, yea devaſtation, would he make to ſatisfie his hunger! So that theſe words, He eateth graſs as an Ox, may carry this ſenſe: As if the Lord had ſaid, Though I have made this beaſt ſo great and ſtrong, yet he is no dangerous, no ravenous beaſt; he doth not live by preying upon other beaſts, by tearing and worrying ſheep and Lambs, as Lions, and Bears, and Wolves do; this great and mighty creature eats graſs like an Ox. Thus God would have Job take notice what way he hath provided for the ſubſiſtence of the Elephant, He eateth graſs as an Ox; yet not altogether as the Ox. His food is as the food of an Ox for the matter, both eat graſs, but he doth not eat in the ſame manner as an Ox. Why, how doth an Ox eat? By licking up the graſs with his tongue into his mouth, as he is deſcribed (Numb. 22. 4.) but the Elephant gathers up the graſs with his trunk, and then puts it into his mouth. Naturaliſts give theſe two reaſons why the Elephant cannot eat like the Ox.

Firſt, Becauſe of the ſhortneſs of his Neck.

Secondly, The littleneſs of his Tongue, which lies ſo far within his Mouth, that it cannot eaſily be ſeen; and therefore he crops the graſs with his trunk, and putting it into his mouth, grinds it with his teeth.

Ne ore paſcatur adminiculo linguæ ut boves, impedit colli brevitas & linguæ quoque quæ illi animali perexigua eſt, & interius poſita, ita ut eam vix videre poſſis. Decerptam proboſcide herbam, dentibus quos utrinque quatuor habet commolit. Ariſt. l. 2. de Hiſt. Animal. c. 5. 6. Προβοσκὶς à βόσκω, Paſco.

He eateth graſs like an Ox. He is like the Ox, as to what he feeds upon, not as to the way of his feeding. So then, though the Elephant be ſo bulky and big-bodied, yet, by the Lords Ordination, he is as harmleſs as a labouring Ox, he will not hurt any beaſt of the field. This phraſe, Eating like an Ox, is uſed to ſet forth the peaceableneſs of his Nature. Thus thoſe bleſſed times are deſcribed, when the power of the Goſpel ſhall overcome the wrath and enmity which is in the Serpents ſeed againſt the ſeed of the Woman (Iſa. 11. 7.) The Cow and the Bear ſhall feed their young ones, and the Lion ſhall eat ſtraw like the Ox. Lions will be quiet; That is, the ſpirits of thoſe men, who have been like Lions and Bears, even they ſhall eat ſtraw like the Ox, they ſhall not hurt the Lambs and Sheep of Chriſts flock and fold. The ſame Prophet ſhadows the peaceableneſs of thoſe Goſpel times under a like Allegory (Chap. 65. 25.) where having ſhewed (Verſ. 24.) the goodneſs and tenderneſs of God in hearing the prayers of his people, It ſhall come to paſs that before they call, I will anſwer, and while they are yet praying, I will hear; he preſently ſhews how good and kind God (who hath the ſpirits and paſſions of all men in his hand) will make the moſt rough-ſpirited and paſſionate men, to his people. The wolf and the Lamb ſhall feed together, and the Lion ſhall eat ſtraw like the Bullock: That is, they who were ſometimes as fierce as evening wolves, ſhall quietly and ſweetly converſe with the Lambs of Chriſt, &c.

Quoties de feris beſtiis dicitur quod fænum comeſturæ ſint ſicut bos, metaphoricè innuitur eos manſuefieri & cicurari.

Thus here the Lord ſpeaks of the Elephant eating graſs like an Ox, to ſhew, that though he be exceeding ſtrong, yet he is of an exceeding quiet and harmleſs diſpoſition. And Naturaliſts tell us, he is ſo gentle and harmleſs, that he will take meat out of a mans hand, like a Dog or Spaniel.

Non aliter quam perparvili catelli ex hominis manu gaudere cibum ſumere. Ælian. cap. 9. & 30.

Thirdly, The Elephant is deſcribed by his ſtrength.

Verſ. 16. Lo, Now (or Behold, it is the ſame word.)

As in the former Verſe God awakened the attention of Job, to conſider this Beaſt in general, with a Behold, ſo here coming to particulars he reaſſumeth the ſame note of admiration and ſerious meditation, Lo now, or Behold,

His ſtrength is in his loins.] He hath ſtrength proportionable to his greatneſs. And as Sampſons ſtrength was ſymbolically in his locks, ſo the Elephants ſtrength is naturally in his loins; there's the ſeat of ſtrength in moſt creatures. His ſtrength is in his loins; That is, he hath very ſtrong loins, and is therefore very ſtrong: the loins being, as was ſaid, the natural ſeat of ſtrength. To gird up the loins to do a thing, is to do it ſtrongly. A weak man, a man of little ſtrength, is ſaid to have no loins, or to be (if I may ſo ſpeak) a loinleſs man. And hence the failing or ſhaking of the loins, notes the failing of ſtrength, and want of ſpirits, to atchieve any great thing. David ſpeaking of the woful condition of the rejected Jews, and the curſe of God upon them, gives it thus (Pſal. 69. 23.) Let their eyes be darkened, that they ſee not, and make their loins continually to ſhake; That is, let them always be in a weak and low condition, let them not gather ſtrength nor courage: The effect of which curſe is evident upon that people at this day, their loins ſhake, they gather no conſiderable ſtrength, they do no conſiderable thing, nor ſhall, till they return to the Lord. It is ſaid of the vertuous woman (Prov. 31. 17.) She girdeth her loins with ſtrength, That is, ſhe is ready and able for any work or action within her ſphere, or becoming her ſex. And when the Lord called the Prophet to lay to heart the grievous evils of thoſe times, he ſaith (Ezek. 21. 6.) Sigh to the breaking of thy loins; That is, ſigh, mourn, and lament, till thou haſt ſighed away all thy ſtrength, till thou art become feeble with mourning, lamenting, and ſighing. The Elephant is mighty and ſtrong, His ſtrength is in his loins.

Elumbus ſive elumbis, quaſi ſine lumbis, i. e. viribus. Druſ.

Non rectè noſtri quod de lumbis dicitur ad libidinem accommodant, cum Elephas tradatur eſſe animal maximè pudicum. Merc.

And his force in the Navel of his Belly.

As much as to ſay he is ſtrong every-where; he is ſtrong in back, and ſtrong in belly. The Navel is the ſtrength of the lower parts of the body, as the loins of the upper. The Navel is as the center of the body, there is a colligation or knitting of ſeveral veins and arteries, which paſs from thence into ſeveral parts of the body, as Anatomiſts obſerve. There is ſo much force in the Navel, that it may well be called the ſecond ſeat of ſtrength. When the Lord would encourage us to fear him, and depart from evil, he makes this a motive (Prov. 3. 8.) It ſhall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones; That is, thou ſhalt have much health and ſtrength, much comfort and ſweetneſs in thy life.

His force is in the Navel of his Belly.] His ſtrength is not in Horns to do hurt, as the Bulls and Unicorns; nor in his claws, to tear, as the Lions and Bears; but in his Loins and Navel. As if the Lord had ſaid, I have placed the ſtrength of Behemoth, where it may be moſt uſeful or ſerviceable, and leaſt hurtful: I have endowed and furniſhed him with wonderful ſtrength; but how, and where? Not in any offenſive part, his head hath no horns, his feet no claws, to do miſchief with; but to the end he might be more ſerviceable to man in bearing burdens, I have placed it chiefly in his Loins and Belly.

Yet ſaith the learned Bochartus, This latter part of the verſe doth not agree with the Elephant, ſeeing both Pliny and Solinus teach us, that the Elephant hath indeed a very hard skin upon his back, but a ſoft one under his belly; whence it is (ſaith he) that the Rhinoceros fighting with the Elephant, aims chiefly at his belly, which he knows is his tendereſt part. He gives many other proofs of this, as alſo that the Hippopotame hath a skin ſo extreamly thick and hard, that 'tis even impenetrable.

To this I may anſwer, That though it be granted that the Hippopotame hath a very hard skin all over his body, and not at all denied that the skin of the Elephant is ſofter by much under his belly, then upon his back; yet it cannot (in my underſtanding) be hence concluded that he hath not a great force in the Navel of his Belly. For though he hath not a hardneſs there to reſiſt the point either of a natural or artificial weapon, yet he may have a force there enabling him to do mighty things. 'Tis rather from the compactneſs, or well knitting of the Navel, that he or any other like creature hath his force, than from the hardneſs of it; nor doth the Hebrew word [און] here rendred force, ſignifie any force depending upon the hardneſs of any part; but that force which ariſeth from the good conſtitution of the body (Gen. 49. 3.) or from the plentifulneſs of a mans outward eſtate or ſubſtance (Job 18. 7. Hoſ. 12. 8.)

What the Elephants ſtrength and force is, appears yet further in that which followeth.

Verſ. 17. He moveth his tail like a Cedar.

Some take the tail properly. Secondly, Others ſay it cannot be ſo underſtood; for though the Elephant be a vaſt creature in other parts, yet his tail is but ſmall, and ſmaller then ſeems to anſwer the vaſt proportion of ſo great a beaſt, and therefore cannot reſemble a Cedar.

Secondly, Others expound the Original word, of his ſnout or trunk, which is of great force and ſtrength; and they conceive it may well be underſtood of his trunk or ſnout, both becauſe that is great and long like a Cedar; as alſo, becauſe the trunk being ſo principal a part of this beaſt, it is not probable the mention of it ſhould be wholly omitted in this deſcription, and ſo ſmall and inconſiderable a one as the tail taken notice of. Thus Mr. Beza renders, He moveth his prominent part or trunk, which is as the Cedar. And the latter part of the verſe he renders to the ſame ſenſe, The ſinews of the terribleneſs thereof, are wrapped together; That is, though his trunk be very great, yet he eaſily turneth it as he liſteth, or at pleaſure, it being wholly compact of ſinewes ſtrongly twiſted together; and is of ſuch force, that it may well amaze and terrifie a man of greateſt courage. The word which we tranſlate ſtones, properly ſignifieth fears, and is rendred in all other places of Scripture where it is uſed; and hence that reading of Mr. Beza, The ſinewes of the terribleneſs thereof. This opinion is altogether diſliked by Mercer. I leave it to the Readers judgment.

Thirdly, Many expound it of his genitals, and connect the ſenſe with that which followeth;

The ſinews of his ſtones are wrapt together.] Or (as Mr. Broughton) platted in and out as branches. As if it had been ſaid, in the heat of his luſt he erecteth or moveth his generative part like a ſtrong Cedar-tree, being corroborated from natures conduit pipes, the ſinews of his ſtones, which are complicated or wrapt together, like the roots of a great grown tree in the earth, or like its branches in the Air.

Etſi caudam habeat quæ magnitudine cedrum æquare videatur, tamen eam facile movet. Inſignis hyperbole. Merc.

Sunt qui caudam hic putant appellari promuſcidem Elephantis; planè alienè. Merc.

Rigor caudæ, i. e. Genitalium. σεμνότης.

יחפוץ De libidine accipio; libidinatur caudam inſtar cedri, i. e. libidinando facit inſtar cedri. Coc.

Penem κατ' ἐυφημισμὸν. Jun. Membrum Genitale. Piſc. Scult.

Nervi quos medici cremaſteras vocant à teſtibus ad penem deducentes ramis arborum conferuntur.

Verſ. 18. His bones are as ſtrong pieces of braſs.

Bones are the ſtrength and ſtability of the body, and they keep the body ſtrait. Bones are to the body as poſts to a houſe, the ſtays and ſupporters of it. Bones alſo are as an armour or corſelet on the body, to defend and preſerve the more noble parts, the heart, liver and lungs, from danger and annoyance; and therefore it was neceſſary the Lord ſhould ſpeak of Behemoths bones, when he ſpake of his ſtrength. His bones

Are as ſtrong pieces of braſs.] As bars of ſteel, ſaith Mr. Broughton, or as conduit pipes of braſs; ſo the words may be read, and then they refer to thoſe bones that are hollow. Some conceive, his bones are ſaid to be as ſtrong pieces of braſs, becauſe the Elephant cannot bow (that's an old opinion) as if he were all bone, and had no joints; which opinion is at large confuted by a learned Phyſician, in his Book of vulgar Errors, with proves, and experience teacheth, that the Elephant hath Joynts with his bones, as other living creatures have, though not ſo apparent. His bones being great and ſtrong, he muſt needs be very ſtrong. It is ſaid (Gen. 49. 14.) Iſſachar is a ſtrong aſs: The Hebrew is, Iſſachar is a bony aſs; which we well render a ſtrong aſs, able to bear great burthens, ſtrength lying ſo much in the bones. And to ſhew that the bones of the Elephant are more then ordinarily ſtrong, they are compared to braſs. Job ſaith, in his complaint at the ſixth Chap. Is my fleſh braſs? Am I ſtrong like braſs? The bones of the Elephant are ſo, and not only ſo, but

Dr. Brown of vulgar errors. lib. 3. c. 1.

Aſinus Oſſeus, i. e. robuſtus.

His bones are like bars of Iron.] The word here rendred bones, is not the ſame as in the former part of the verſe. Mr. Broughton tranſlates by a general word, his hard parts are like ſtaves of Iron: But we may well keep to the word bones, yet underſtand them of a different ſort of bones; as in the former part, hollow bones, ſo in this latter, ſolid bones; or in that, leſſer, in this, greater bones; or in that, upper bones, which are as rafters, in his lower bones, thoſe in the thighs and legs, which are as poſts.

His bones are like bars of Iron.] Iron is the ſtrongeſt of all metals, as we read in the viſion of the four Monarchies (Dan. 2. 1.) The image had a head of Gold (ſignifying the Babylonian Monarchy) breaſts of Silver (ſignifying the Perſian) belly of braſs, ſignifying the Grecian, but it had legs of Iron, ſignifying the Roman Monarchy; of which 'tis ſaid in the 40. verſe, The fourth Kingdom ſhall be ſtrong as Iron, foraſmuch as Iron breaketh in pieces and ſubdueth all things. So then, when the Lord ſaith, His bones are like bars of Iron, this importeth that the bones of Behemoth are exceeding ſtrong, as ſtrong as if made of Iron. We call a very ſtrong man, Iron-ſides. The Elephant hath Iron-ſides, His bones are as bars of Iron. Bochartus denieth not, that the bones of the Elephant are very hard and ſtrong, yet affirms from ſome Authorities, that the bones of the Hippopotame are harder. If it be ſo, yet the Elephants bones are hard and ſtrong enough to anſwer the compariſons in this part of the deſcription of Behemoth. Now here the Epiphonema, the triumphant concluſion which the Spirit makes of all this.

Verſ. 19. He is the chief of the ways of God.

The word is, He is the head of the ways of God: Or, he is the beginning of the ways of God, as the word is uſed (*Gen.*1.1.) In the beginning God created the Heavens and the Earth. There is a twofold beginning or head (as we may ſay) Firſt, there is a beginning as to time; ſo the word is taken in Geneſis: There in the beginning, is, in the firſt of time, God created the Heavens and the earth, ſo Gen. 10. 10. The beginning of his Kingdom was Babel, or, there he began his Kingdom, the beginning in time, as well as place, was there. Secondly, There is a beginning which notes priority in dignity, though not in time; beginning imports excellency, and is as much as chief. 'Tis uſual in ſeveral languages, to call that which is chief, the firſt or head of any thing (*Exod.*30.23.) It ſhall be of pure myrrh (the Hebrew is) head of myrrh, that is, chief or prime myrrh, pureſt myrrh. Thus ſaid David, (Pſal. 119. 160.) Thy word is true from the beginning. The Hebrew ſtrictly taken, is, The beginning or head of thy word is true, or truth. As if David had ſaid, That which is moſt eminent and chief in the word of God, is the truth of it; that which rules and reigns, and holds (as it were) the headſhip in and throughout the word of God, is the truth of it, or Gods trueneſs and faithfulneſs in making it good: and therefore the firſt thing which faith doth, is to ſet to its ſeal that God is true; true of his word, or that his word is true (John 3. 33.) The Greeks call honey the firſt of ſweetneſſes, becauſe it is the ſweeteſt of all natural things. Now here, when the Text ſaith, he is the chief, or beginning of the ways of God, we are not to take it of a beginning in time, ſeveral creatures were Seniors to Behemoth, being made before him, but in excellency, which we render clearly, He is the chief of the ways of God.

Mel dicitur ἀρχὴ γλυκασμάτων, quod dulcedine præſtat rebus omnibus.

But you will ſay, how is the Elephant the chief of the ways of God. Are not Angels and men (at leaſt) above him?

I anſwer, There is a twofold chief; Firſt, Abſolute; Secondly, in its kind. Behemoth is the chief of the ways of God, not abſolutely, not as if God had made nothing more excellent then the Elephant, but in his kind, that is, among the beaſts of the earth he is the chief, and as we ſay, bears away the bell from all the reſt. Behemoth is not only of the firſt three, but (like Adino the Tachmonite among Davids worthies) he is the firſt of the firſt three, among all the irrational creatures which move upon the face of the earth. And though in ſome one thing many excel him, yet taking him altogether, he excels them all, He is the chief of the ways of God, that is, of the works of God.

The works of God are called his ways, becauſe he appears and ſtands forth in his works, as man doth in his way. God did not appear at all till he did create, and then he appeared glorioſly in all his divine perfections of power, wiſdom and goodneſs. And as he appeared in the works of creation, ſo he daily appeareth in his works of providence as in his way, for in them alſo it is ſeen how powerful, how wiſe, how good he is. Behemoth, both as to creation and providence, is the chief of the ways or works of God in his kind: Angels and Men are indeed above him, but as for other creatures, Behemoth is the chief. Thus the Lord having ſpoken of many particular excellencies in this creature, recapitulates or ſums up all that he had ſaid (like an eloquent Orator) in theſe crowning words, He is the chief of the ways of God.

Hence Note; Firſt, There is a difference as to excellency, or there are degrees of excellency in the works of God.

God hath beſtowed more upon ſome creatures, then he hath upon others. God beſtowed moſt upon man in the firſt creation; for how excellent ſoever he made any viſible creature, yet it is ſaid of no creature, he made him in his image, after his likeneſs, till he came to man: and the new creature which comes in by redemption, is far more excellent then man in his firſt creation. Now, I ſay, as man is far more excellent then all earthly creatures, he is next to Angels; man is placed in the uppermoſt form of the viſible world. So among the creatures, there are ſome that very much excel others; here's one called the chief of the ways of God himſelf. This is not an Orators flattery: the Spirit of God gives Behemoth this Encomium, this commendation, he hath precedency by a divine right. All creatures are not alike, they cannot all be chief, and there are none like this, he is the chief of all. Among the inanimate creatures there is a gradual difference (1 *Cor.*15. 40.) There are cœleſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial; but the glory of the cœleſtial is one, and the glory of the terreſtrial is another: and all cœleſtial bodies are not alike, for, There is one glory of the Sun, and another of the Moon, and another of the Stars, and one Star differs from another in glory. There are alſo various excellencies, both as to kind and degree, among vegetatives or plants. What is a Nettle in the Ditch, to Hyſſop in the Garden? And what is the Thiſtle in Lebanon, to the Cedar in Lebanon? that's one of the loweſt and moſt ignoble plants, this one of the higheſt and moſt honourable. Conſider animals. What variety among the fiſh of the Sea! What is a Sprat to a Whale? What variety among the fowls of the Air! What is a Sparrow to the Eagle? What variety among the beaſts of the earth! What is a Bullock to an Elephant, or an Aſs to a Lion? Conſider rationals. Men are not all alike: ſome men do almoſt as much excel other men, as all men excel beaſts; yea, there is a difference in the ſame man, his Soul is more excellent then his body; ſome parts of the body are more excellent then others, ſome powers and faculties of the Soul are more excellent than the reſt. The Apoſtle (1 *Cor.*12.28,29.) ſpeaking of the Church, ſhews how God hath put the guides of it into ſeveral ranks: He hath ſet ſome in the Church; Firſt, Apoſtles; Secondly, Prophets; Thirdly, Teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diverſities of tongues. Are all Apoſtles? Are all Prophets? Are all Teachers? Do all ſpeak with tongues? Are all workers of miracles? Are all chief? Are all in the firſt rank? No, ſome are in one condition, ſome in another. And thus it is in the world, God hath ſet ſome Kings, all others Subjects; and among them, ſome are Lords, ſome Judges and Magiſtrates, &c. Are all Kings? Are all Lords? Are all Judges and Magiſtrates? Surely not. To have all men of one order, would put all men, and all things too, out of order. There is a chief among beaſts; And thoſe men are worſe then beaſts, who acknowledg not a chief among men. God is not the author of confuſion, as in all the Churches of the Saints (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 *Cor.*14.33.) ſo, I may ſay, in all the Kingdoms of the world.

And if ſo, I would only infer, then let none be troubled that they are not chief, no, nor that they are not of equal rank with other men; let us be content with our ſtation, though it be a low one. 'Tis beſt for us to be where God hath placed us, and to be thankful for what God hath given us, though in gifts and parts we are much inferior to many. God doth not beſtow a like meaſure of gifts, no, nor of grace upon all. And though it may be a favour and a mercy to have outward preheminency above others, yet to love or affect preheminency, as the Apoſtle John taxed Diotrephes, is very ſinful. The Apoſtle would have us covet earneſtly the beſt gifts (1 *Cor.*12.31.) and he there minds us of a better thing to be coveted then the beſt gifts, that is, grace, Faith, Hope, Charity; to covet theſe is a bleſſed covetouſneſs: Yet neither are theſe to be coveted meerly for ſelf-ends, but as by them we may be fitted and furniſhed to do good, to honour God, and ſerve our generation according to his will. To affect chiefdom in any thing but in grace and goodneſs is not good; and our affecting of them muſt be without affectation, though it ought to be with ſtrength of affection. And if we are chief, or have the preheminence above others in the things of this world, it will be well with us (as to that matter) if we are, where the hand of God, not any ambitious deſires or practiſes of our own, hath ſet us. It was the Lord who made and called Behemoth, The chief of his ways.

Bochartus conceives this high commendation well becoming the Hippopotame. For though (ſaith he) he be a pernicious animal, yet there are many things in him, which may move admiration; the vaſt bulk of his body, his huge ſtrength, his impenetrable hide, the ſtupendous wideneſs of his mouth, his prodigious voracity, the whiteneſs and hardneſs of his teeth, his living in common in the ſea, land, and river, and together with ſo great a hardneſs of his skin, a ſagacious ingenie, exceeding all irrational anima's, as he is reported by Ammianus in his 22. Book, of which he there gives two proofs, not omitted by Pliny and Solinus.

Yet if what is written of the Elephant may obtain credit, I much believe that he bears away the bell from the Hippopotame for natural ſagacity and ingenuity, as alſo for quantity, and largeneſs of his limbs, and ſo of his whole body. And there are many things wherein the Elephant is reported to excel all other beaſts: I ſhall give inſtance in Twelve, and leave the matter of difference between him and the Hippopotame, which ſhall carry the day for chief of the ways of God (which God himſelf affirms of Behemoth) to the Readers vote.

Alii ad duodecimum alii ad decimum tertium dodrantem excelſitate procedunt, alii ad decimum quartum. Ælian. l. 1. c. 2. A Dodrans is nine inches; which being reduced to our meaſure, 14 of them make 10. foot and a half. Plinius l. 8. c. 10. Cæſar. Scal. Exercit. 204.

Firſt, He is ſaid to excel all beaſts in the bulk of his body, or bigneſs. He hath huge limbs, huge bones, and a height commenſurable. Natural Hiſtorians give us theſe dimenſions and proportions of him. His height (I mean, if fully grown) is reckoned (according to our meaſure) ten foot and a half. Others report, that in India there are Elephants of thirteen foot and a half in height: and what the bulk of his whole body is, we may collect by his teeth. The Elephant hath two teeth growing upward out of his lower mandible or jaw, of a vaſt bigneſs, and eight foot in length. Cæſar Scaliger ſaith (from the report of ſome Indian Hiſtorians) that two of thoſe teeth have weighed three hundred twenty and five pounds. So big they are, that the Indians uſe them for poſts to their Houſes. The Scripture tells us, that Solomons throne was made of Elephant teeth or Ivory, as we tranſlate (1 Kings 10. 18,22.) And if any deſire further information concerning the greatneſs of his body, and his admirable Qualities, let him read Pliny, in his eighth Book, the twelve firſt Chapters.

Ædificia evertunt magnos dentes admovendo. Ariſt. de Hiſt. Animal. l. 9.

The ſecond thing, wherein the Elephant ſeems chief, and to excel all the beaſts of the earth, is his ſtrength; which is ſo great, that with his trunk he will overthrow a great tree or a Houſe. Elephants have ſuch ſtrength of body, that in war they carry upon their backs great towers made of timber. We read (1 Mach. 6. 37.) that Antiochus had thirty Elephants in one battle which bare towers, in every one of which were thirty and two fighting men with their weapons. What a vaſt ſtrength hath this creature, which can bear a tower with thirty and two men, and their inſtruments of War: And from this we may gather, not only the mighty ſtrength of his back or loins, but alſo of his belly or navel (mentioned Verſ. 16.) for thoſe huge towers upon his back, muſt of neceſſity be faſtened by huge bands under his belly.

Maximum inter animalia eſt Elephas, & proximum humanis ſenſibus. Plin. l. 8. c. 1. Ad rationale animal proxima accedit. Strabo.

Thirdly, The Elephant may be called chief of the ways of God among beaſts, as to his underſtanding. He hath a kind of natural rationality, and is therefore ſaid to be next man, or to come neareſt man of any creature. There is no beaſt more prudent then the Elephant, ſaid the Roman Orator.

Fourthly, The Elephant excels all beaſts in the ſtrength of his memory; and he is memoriz'd for his memory of three things eſpecially. Firſt, For his memory of commands and inſtructions given him. Secondly, Of courteſies done him. Thirdly, Of unkindneſſes and injuries offered him.

Fifthly, He is the chief of the ways of God, in that which muſt needs follow the former two, his underſtanding (ſuch as it is) and memory, that is, his teachableneſs, or aptneſs to learn what is taught him. Though he be a wild beaſt, yet he is eaſily tamed or brought to hand; and when he is tamed, he is as eaſily taught. The higheſt excellency of man, is when (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of a Biſhop, 1 Tim. 3.) he is apt to teach; and the next excellency of man is, when he is apt to be taught. It is the miſery of many, that they have none to teach them; and it is the wickedneſs of not a few, that they will not be taught, nor receive inſtruction. The Elephant is in nothing more eminent, than in his aptneſs to be taught, or in his readineſs to receive the impreſſion of any thing ſpoken to him, and fitting for him to learn or do. The Elephant is an apt Scholar, he ſoon grows perfect in any piece of art or activity taught him. Some tell us, Elephants have learnt the art of dancing, and that they have learnt to draw the letters of the Greek Alphabet with their feet, and that they learn to make legs (as we ſay) or do obeyſance to Kings, and to preſent them with Crowns.

Juxta ſenſum humanum intellectum habet. Solinus. Elephanto belluarum nulla prudentior. Cic. de Nat. Deorum.

Regem adorant, genua ſubmittunt, coronas porrigunt. Plin. l. 8. c. 1. Funambulos ſe vidiſſe, & qui Græcas litteras pedibus exararent, teſtatur Plin. l. 8.

Sixthly, Beſides their teachableneſs, their tractableneſs and gentleneſs is wonderful. Some are apt to learn, yet will not be governed, will not be brought to good manners. Elephants are highly commended, not only becauſe they are apt to be taught, but ready to be commanded. Whatever you bid them they preſently obey. There's no creature ſo quiet, ſo meek, ſo ſubmitting as the Elephant; he hurts none, unleſs provoked, and will gently help the weak. They who write the nature of the Elephant aſſure us, that when once he is broken or tamed by man, he is ever after obedient to him, and gives him all manner of obſervance; that he even forms himſelf to the diſpoſition of his Maſter or Owner, will take meat out of his hand like a little Dog, that he will (as it were) hug and embrace his Maſter when he comes near, and will ſuffer him (without hurt) to put his Head within his Mouth.

Elephanto admorum facilitatem erudito nihil mitius, nihil ad id quod volumus obtemperatius. Ælian. lib. 4. Ariſt. l. 9. c. 46. Ubi ſemel hominus imperio ſubjectus eſt, omnia ei abſequia præbet, & ab eo capit morum ſimilitudinem, gauditque non minus quam parvi canes ex manu ejus cibum capere, venientem ſua promuſcide complectitur quinetiam caput intra ſuas fauces immittere hominem patitur. Phillo. l. 2. c. 5. Plin. l. 8. c. 7. Plin. l. 8. c. 5.

Seventhly, He exceeds others beaſts in uſefulneſs. He is not tractable only for a ſhew or for ſport, but he is for real ſervice. In times of peace he will do all manner of work, till the ground, carry burdens, and he is of great uſe and ſervice in time of war.

Eighthly, This is admirable in the Elephant, that being ſo vaſt a creature, he hath ſuch agility of body, as was touched before; he will expreſs thoſe geſtures and motions, which require greateſt activity.

Ninthly, the Elephant is highly commended for his modeſty and chaſtity.

Tenthly, For his faithfulneſs in any thing that he is charged with or ordered to do. The faithfulneſs of the Elephant exceeds belief. There are not only marvels, but miracles reported by Hiſtorians worthy of credit, concerning their fidelity to their maſters or owners, and their kindneſs and gratitude to thoſe who have ſhewed them kindneſs.

Eleventhly, The Elephant is famous for compaſſionateneſs to any that are in diſtreſs; what uſe they can be of, they will be to ſuch. Quintus Curtius reports, how the Elephant of Porus, an Indian King, when the King being wounded fell down, took him up tenderly with his trunk, and ſet him again upon his back.

Twelfthly and laſtly, Elephants excel in longevity or length of life. They live not only long, but very long; the God of Nature having given them an excellent conſtitution or temperament of body. Good Authors tell us, they live commonly two hundred years, ſome three hundred years; and 'tis reported ſome have lived five hundred years.

Diutiſſime vivit. Ariſt. l. 4. c. 10. de Hiſt. Animal Strabo. l. 15.

In all theſe reſpects, we may conclude Behemoth, the chief of the ways of God. In many things he comes near to man, and in others he much exceedeth him. From all that hath been ſaid of this mighty beaſt, take theſe inferences.

Firſt, See the goodneſs of God unto man, who hath made this vaſt ſtrong creature mans ſervant, and ſo ready to obey mans command, to bear mans burdens, and to till the earth for man, which 'tis ſaid (Chap. 39. 9.) the Unicorn will never do. Will the Unicorn be willing to ſerve thee? Canſt thou bind the Unicorn in the furrows? will he harrow the valleys after thee? But the Elephant will do theſe ſervices, he is willing to ſerve man in peace, and to aſſiſt him in his Wars. Though man be of little ſtature and ſtrength compared to an Elephant, yet God hath ſubdued the Elephant to the will, and under the power of man. Is not this a great argument of Gods great goodneſs to man? And is it not a ſtrong obligation upon man to be obedient and ſerviceable to God, who hath made ſuch a creature ſerviceable and obedient to him?

Secondly, This ſhews us, as the goodneſs of God to man, ſo the over-ruling power of God; who can make the greateſt ſtrength of his creatures, which left to themſelves might do abundance of miſchief and be hurtful, yet uſeful and helpful to us. What a world of harm might the Elephant do, yet (as was ſaid) he never hurts any, unleſs provoked. Let us adore the power of God, who over-rules the mighty ſtrength of this creature, cauſing him to lay it out in a way of helpfulneſs and advantage to mankind. As we ſhould take notice of the goodneſs of God, when he over-rules men who have power to hurt, from doing hurt, as he did Laban, who told Jacob (Gen. 31. 29.) It is in the power of my hand to do you hurt, but the God of your Father ſpake to me yeſternight, &c. Many may have power in their hands to cruſh us in a moment, yet God ſtops them from ſuch a uſe of their power: this is a great argument of the goodneſs of God. Some men would be like Lions or Bears, if God did not check them, as David was confident he would (Pſal. 76. 10.) The wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee, the remainder of wrath thou wilt reſtrain. Many have great power, and great wrath with it, and what would they not do in their powerful wrath, if God did not reſtrain all the over-plus and remainder of it, which ſerves not to advance his praiſe. Some have much wrath, but no power; theſe would do hurt if they could, but they cannot do much hurt. Others have much power, but no wrath; theſe will do no hurt, yet they could. A third ſort have both, they are full of power, and full of wrath; theſe both can and would do much hurt, did not God bind or bound them, ſtop them or reſtrain them. Now, I ſay, as we ſhould reverence that powerful goodneſs of God, which meekens mighty beaſts, and keeps them from doing hurt, ſo we ſhould reverence and adore that power and goodneſs, or good power of God, which bridles evil men from doing hurt with their power.

Thirdly, We may infer this by way of inſtruction from the premiſes.

> Men, who as to the matter and original of their bodies, are but like to beaſts, are alſo exceeded by beaſts in many bodily powers and abilities.

What is the ſtrength of a man to the ſtrength of an Elephant? And what is mans age, or the length of his life to an Elephants? And whereas men have five bodily ſenſes, there are creatures that exceed them in all. One creature hath a quicker ear, another a more curious feeling, a third hath a more piercing eye, a fourth excels in ſmelling, and a fifth in taſting. Man is excell'd in his natural powers, even by meaneſt animals: This ſhould humble us; And if it ſhould humble us, that we are exceeded by them, as to ſenſitive or bodily powers, how ſhould it ſhame us to be exceeded by them, as to inward indowments, as to underſtanding and vertue, as to our morality and good behaviour. Be not (ſaith David Pſal. 32. 9.) as the horſe and mule which have no underſtanding. Yet (Pſal. 49. 20.) man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh. How ſad is it to ſee men who have underſtanding, yea, who are (as to worldly concerns) men of great underſtanding, like horſes and mules, who have no underſtanding! They who have not a right underſtanding, an underſtanding to know and do the will of God (a good underſtanding have all they (and none but they) that do his commandments, Pſal. 111. 10.) are (in Scripture ſenſe) men of no underſtanding. What a reproach is it to any man, what a blot in the Eſcutcheon of a man in honour, that it ſhould be ſaid of him, and he not able with truth to gain-ſay it, that he hath not ſo much underſtanding as an Elephant! That he is not ſo docile and teachable as an Elephant! That he is not ſo gentle and tractable as an Elephant! What, not ſo obedient to due commands, not ſo ſubmiſſive as an Elephant! What, not ſo ſerviceable and uſeful as an Elephant! What, not ſo modeſt and chaſt as an Elephant! What, not ſo compaſſionate, not ſo faithful as an Elephant! O how ſhould it ſhame us! The Scripture often ſhames us with our coming behind beaſts (Iſa. 1. 3.) The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his maſters crib; but Iſrael doth not know, my people do not conſider: They have not ſo much knowledg nor conſideration as the Ox and the Aſs. So again (Jerem. 8. 7.) The Stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the Turtle, and the Crane, and the ſwallow obſerve the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of their God. Nor was this a reproof to the prophane world, but to the profeſſing people of God, the Jews, that they were not ſo knowing, nor skilled in the judgments of God, that is, to know and do what the judgments of God called them to do, and be, as the Crane and Swallow were obſervant of, and knew what to do, and where to be, in all changes of times and ſeaſons. And thus the ſlothful man is reproved (Prov. 6. 6.) Go to the Ant thou ſluggard, conſider her ways and be wiſe; thou haſt not ſo much wit as an Ant. This were a ſhameful rebuke upon Heathens: let it not fall upon any who profeſs themſelves Chriſtians.

Nos aper auditu, nos vincit aranea tactu, Vultur odoratu, linx viſu, ſimia guſtu.

Fourthly, If beaſts exceed man in ſome things, then how much doth God exceed man in all things? The reaſon why God preſented this Behemoth to Job, was to let him ſee how much himſelf exceeds man, ſeeing Behemoth is not ſo much to him, as the leaſt fly to man. All creatures put together are but as the duſt of the ballance, and as the drop of the bucket to God. Thus we ſhould raiſe our ſelves, and wind up our hearts into a conſideration of the greatneſs and Almightineſs of God, when we behold great and mighty creatures. The greatneſs of the creatures ſhould be as a ladder to lift us up to God, and thereby to take meaſure (as we are able, or as well as we can, for indeed we cannot) of his immenſurable greatneſs; that's the right uſe of their greatneſs. And if by the ſight and conſideration of theſe creatures, we do not fall down and humble our ſelves, if we lie not at the foot of God, who is infinitely above theſe creatures, and our ſelves too, we neglect the ſcope of this Scripture, and of all Scriptures of like import. God is known (via eminentiæ) by way of eminency, in every creature, moſtly in the moſt eminent creatures, ſuch as this, whoſe deſcription hath been thus far opened.

Now having had this high encomium of Behemoth from the Lords own mouth, he is the chief of the ways of God; what follows, even this, that how great ſoever this creature is, God knows how to deal with him; and God would have Job underſtand that alſo, that how great ſoever he had made him, he was able to match him, yea, to overmatch him. Behemoth is no match for God; For as it followeth in the cloſe of this 19. verſe,

He that made him, can make his Sword to approach unto him.

He that made him.] Theſe words are a periphraſis, or a circumlocution of God. The Text doth not ſay, God can make his Sword to approach unto him; but He that made him can, &c.

> Hence Note; God muſt and will, and he loves to be owned as a Maker.

God hath often revealed himſelf under this Title, The Maker of Heaven and of Earth, and of all things both in Heaven and in Earth. God is the Maker of all in a threefold ſenſe, and he loves to be acknowledged as ſuch in them all. Firſt, he is the Maker of all things and perſons in their natural being. Secondly, he is the Maker of all perſons in their civil being: He makes the rich, and he makes the poor; he makes the high, and he makes the low, that is, he makes one man rich and another poor, one high and another low in this world. Thirdly, he is the Maker of all perſons in their ſpiritual or holy being; he makes a man good, who was bad; he makes him humble, who was proud; he makes him heavenly, that was earthly; he makes him ſpiritual, who was carnal, and not only fleſhly, but in the fleſh (Rom. 8. 8.) The making of the new-man, is that for which the Lord is eſpecially to be owned and honoured. We are to honour God as he is the Maker of all creatures; but we are eſpecially to honour him as he is the Maker of the New creature. To be the Maker of the creatures, great or ſmall, is the ſole priviledg of God. And let us remember, that as God himſelf hath made all things, ſo he hath made all things for himſelf, That is, All beings ought to live unto him, and act for him, who is the firſt being; to Him who hath given us life and breath and all things, and in whom we live, and move, and have our being, unto him we ſhould dedicate our life and breath and all things. And did we truly know (which every one preſumes he knoweth) God to be our Maker, or as our Maker, it would have a mighty influence upon our hearts and lives, and even make us live to God. What ſhould not we do for him that made us? And what cannot he do with us that made us? As the Text here ſpeaks of the great Behemoth, He that made him

Can make his Sword approach unto him.

There are two readings of theſe words.

Firſt, thus, He that made him, made his Sword to be near him; That is, as God made Behemoth, ſo God made a Sword for him, that is, (according to this reading) for his uſe, or for him to uſe. God hath made him a weapon: But what is the Sword which God hath made him? They who inſiſt upon this reading, taking alſo Behemoth to be the Elephant, ſay, 'tis that natural member commonly called his Trunk; That is to the Elephant as a Sword, both to defend himſelf, and to offend and wound thoſe that moleſt him. Thus Mr. Beza gloſſeth it; God who made him, hath furniſhed him with convenient weapons, or with a weapon fit for his turn. And the ſame ſaith another learned interpreter, following this Tranſlation, God hath armed him with a Trunk, as with a ſtrong and a mighty Sword. There is a truth in this Tranſlation and Interpretation, and it hath the ſuffrage of many worthy men for it, as the principal, if not the ſole meaning of theſe words. God who made Behemoth, hath alſo made him a Sword to defend himſelf with, that his vaſt body ſhould not be liable to every danger and affront. Take one Note from this reading.

Armavit illum Deus manu, ſeu proboſcide, quaſi gladio validiſſimo. Jun. Piſc.

As God hath given the Creatures a being, ſo means to protect and preſerve themſelves in their Being.

He that made him hath given him a Sword, he hath not left him naked or unarmed. Many creatures, I mean of the irrational creatures, have natural weapons, Horns, Hoofs, Teeth, and Claws, to defend themſelves with, and offend thoſe with, that trouble them. Others have only defenſive Arms, as it were, for ſafety againſt annoyance, ſhells, and thick skins. Many have neither offenſive, nor defenſive arms, who yet by their natural ſwiftneſs ſhift for themſelves by flight, and out-run their dangers. There is no creature, but hath ſome way or other for its defence. As man (the chief creature) God hath given him Reaſon to provide all ſorts of lawful means for his preſervation and defence. Take it alſo ſpiritually; God having made any man a New creature, gives him a Sword, and means of defence, to preſerve himſelf in his ſpiritual being. Every godly man hath ſpiritual weapons, the whole armour of God, for his defence againſt the Devil, his ſpiritual enemy. The Apoſtle leads us into Gods Armory, and ſhews us what weapons God hath made for the ſpiritual man, or for the preſervation of man in his ſpiritual ſtate and being (Eph. 6. 13, 14, &c.) The Girdle of Truth, the Breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, Feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, The Shield of Faith, to quench the fiery darts of the Devil, The Helmet of Salvation, and the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. Thus God hath armed the New Creature with a Sword; he that made him, hath made him weapons of defence and offence, to ſave his ſoul from the wounds of temptation, and to reſiſt, yea, overcome the Tempter. Thus, as the Lord who made Behemoth, hath made him a Sword, ſo he hath provided weapons, or means of defence for all other creatures, for man eſpecially, and moſt ſpecially for man in his ſpiritual condition, that his immortal Soul may be ſafe, whatever becomes of his frail fleſh, or mortal body. So much of and from that firſt Tranſlation, He that made him, made his Sword to be near him.

Yet before I come to explain our own Tranſlation, I ſhall here again mind the Reader, what learned Bochartus underſtands by the Hebrew word rendred Sword, in reference to the Hippopotame. He that made him (ſaith he) hath given him (Harpen) a ſickle, or crooked Sword. Our Dictionaries render the word Harp, a Wood-knife, as alſo a Sythe. This crooked Sword or Sickle, denotes, ſaith he, the long, ſharp, and ſomewhat bowed teeth of the Hippopotame, with which he doth as it were reap, or cut down corn and graſs, when he comes on Land to feed; as ſeveral Greek Poets, by him named, deſcribe the manner of the Hippopotame's feeding; which muſt be granted, compIyeth well with the words in the next verſe, where 'tis ſaid of Behemoth, The Mountains bring him forth food. Yet I ſee no reaſon, but that thoſe great teeth of the Elephant (which ſurely are no hurtleſs weapons) as alſo his Promuſcis or Trunk (though commonly called his hand) may be compared to, and expreſſed by a Sword, if that be true which good Authors ſay he doth with them.

The Second reading of the Text, which Bochartus ſaith, a very learned Interpreter perceiving the inconvenience of the former, as to the Elephant, took up, is, alſo, ours,

He that made him, can make his Sword to approach unto him.

His Sword,] That is, his own Sword, Gods Sword. God hath a Sword, and he can make his Sword approach Behemoth; That is, As ſtrong as Behemoth is, God that made him, and gave him his ſtrength, can ſubdue him, can pierce his skin, though very hard, and wound him to the very heart; he can break his bones, though they are like ſtrong pieces of braſs, and bars of Iron.

So then, the meaning of the words (according to our Tranſlation) is plainly this. As if the Lord had ſaid, Though Behemoth be very vaſt and big, ſtrong and terrible, yet I can quickly bring him down, and vanquiſh him.

Quaſi à Solo Deo ſit occidendus. Druſ.

Some oppoſe this Tranſlation and expoſition, becauſe the Hebrew word which we render to approach, is not applicable (ſay they) to an hoſtile approach, but rather to an amicable and friendly approach: Now to come upon one with a Sword, is an hoſtile approach, 'tis to come as an enemy, which (ſay they) that word will not well bear.

But I conceive this to be a miſtake; for in Scripture, once, if not oftner, the word is uſed to denote an hoſtile approach, or an aſſault (1 Sam. 17. 40.) where David incountring Goliah, tis ſaid, He took his ſtaff in his hand, and choſe five ſmooth ſtones out of the brook, and put them in a ſhepherds bag, which he had even in a ſcrip, and his ſling was in his hand, and he drew near (or approached) to the Philiſtim. Now how did David approach the Philiſtim? Surely, not to ſalute him as a friend, but to deſtroy him as an enemy, as in the iſſue he did. Though the word commonly ſignifieth a friendly approach, yet the Scripture applyeth it alſo to an enemy-like or violent approach; and therefore that objection is of no force to invalidate our Tranſlation, or the Interpretation given of it: He that made him, can make his Sword approach unto him.

Hanc expoſitionem reſpuere videtur verbum רגש Accedere faciet applicabit, quo nulla notatur hoſtilitas, ſed potius amica conjunctio. Piſc.

But what is this Sword, that God makes to approach unto Behemoth?

I anſwer, This Sword is any thing whereby God is pleaſed to ſubdue or deſtroy Behemoth, or the Elephant; whatever inſtrument God will uſe, that's his Sword; or whether God will uſe any other creature to kill the Elephant, that creature is his Sword. 'Tis ſaid, that the Rhinoceros (his ſworn enemy, if I may ſo ſpeak) gets his ſharpned Horn, under his belly, and paunches him. 'Tis ſaid alſo, that the Dragon, loving to ſuck or drink his blood, kills him. Now whether the Elephant fall by theſe beaſts and ſerpents, or be ſlain in battle and war by men, he may be ſaid to fall by the ſword of God, or that God makes his ſword approach unto him. The ſword of God is the power of God put forth by this, or that, or any means, for the ſubduing or deſtroying of this mighty creature. He that made him, can make his ſword approach unto him.

From this rendring, and the interpretation given of it, which is very plain and obvious, Obſerve; There is no creature, ſo great, ſo ſtrong, but God is able to ſubdue and conquer him.

He that made the creature, can make his ſword approach unto him. God can maſter whatſoever he hath made. Behemoth, the Elephant is a creature of a vaſt bigneſs, a creature of admirable ſtrength, yet down he comes, down he falls, as ſoon as ever God draws near with his ſword. The inanimate creatures, the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the Seas, the Earth, are ſtrong and powerful; yet God can ſhake the Earth, and calm the Sea, he can ſeal up the Stars, and ſtop both Sun and Moon in their courſe, and make them ſtand ſtill as a ſtone. God who made the fire hot and burning, can take away the burning heat of it, which is ſo connatural to it. And as he ſubdueth inanimate or liveleſs creatures, ſo (as here in the Text) the animate or living creatures. The Lord, who hath made the Elephant, the Lion, the Bear, the Tyger, can quickly put a ſtop to the power and rage of any of them. We may exemplifie it alſo in man, a rational creature. Some men, in compariſon of others, are like Behemoths, like Elephants, great, powerful and ſtrong, Nimrods of the earth, mighty hunters: The Lord can make his ſword approach to any of them. The Lord hath infinitely more ſtrength and power in himſelf, than he hath placed or planted in any creature. For, what is the ſtream to the fountain? What is the light in the air, to the light in the Sun? The ſtrength of the creature, is but a ſtream or a beam iſſuing from God. The ſtrength of the Elephant is no more to God, than the ſtrength of a ſilly Mouſe; the ſtrength of an Eagle no more to God, than the ſtrength of a Fly; the ſtrength of a Leviathan in the ſea (of whom in the next Chapter) is no more to God, then the ſtrength of a Shrimp or Sprat. God can ſoon deſtroy the roaring Lions, the raging Bears, the fierce Tigers, and ravening Wolves of this world. Nothing is ſtrong before the ſtrength of God, or before the ſtrong God.

Now, if the Lord hath a power whereby he can quickly over-power the moſt powerful creatures; then this teacheth us,

Firſt, Not to truſt in the power of any creature. Though you have an Elephant, a Behemoth for your help, do not truſt in him. The Lord that made him, can quickly make his ſword approach unto him; the Lord can make him as weak as water, and of as little uſe to you as a little child. The ſtrong ſhall be as tow, and the maker of it as a ſpark (that is, the work or idol which he hath made ſhall be as a ſpark to tow) and they ſhall both burn together, and none ſhall quench them (Iſa.1.31.) How often are we called off from truſt in any creature, from truſt in horſes, from truſt in man! There's no help in the ſtrongeſt creatures, unleſs, Firſt, God gives them ſtrength, and works with their ſtrength. Secondly, There is no help in any creature, if God ſets his ſtrength againſt him. Therefore truſt not in any creature.

Secondly, This teacheth us, Not to fear the power of any creature while God is with us. If an Elephant, a Behemoth be againſt us, we need not fear him. Thus the Apoſtle concludes, while he puts that ſuppoſition (Rom. 8. 28.) If God be with us, who can be againſt us? That is, to hurt us. His meaning is, none can. There are none in the world againſt whom ſo many are, as againſt thoſe with whom God is, that is, whom he owns, loves and favours. Chriſt told his Diſciples of this (*Joh.*15.19.) I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. But though they with whom God is, are hated of the world, or have the world againſt them, yet the world cannot be ſo againſt them, as to harm or hurt them; for he that made them can make his ſword approach to thoſe that would, that is, they are fully in and under his power. The Prophet uſeth this argument (*Iſa.*54.16,17.) Behold, I have created the Smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an inſtrument for his work, and I have created the waſter to deſtroy: Even the waſters of the world, they that make ſpoil of all, all they are of my creation; I have made them, and ſeeing I have made them, ſurely, I can hinder them in any of their waſting and deſtroying purpoſes; and therefore the Lord in the next words gives a full and moſt comfortable aſſurance to the Church, notwithſtanding the skill of the Smith in making inſtruments, and the ſtrength of the Waſter to deſtroy with them, No weapon that is formed againſt thee ſhall proſper, and every thing that ſhall riſe againſt thee in judgment, thou ſhalt condemn; this is the heritage of the ſervants of the Lord, and their righteouſneſs is of me, ſaith the Lord. The very ground upon which the Lord aſſured them, that no weapon formed againſt them ſhould proſper, was, becauſe the Smith, and the Waſter too, were both of them his creatures or of his making, as the Text ſpeaks of Behemoth. God can make his ſword approach beaſts in the likeneſs of men, as well as beaſts in their own likeneſs. And hence it is, that the Holy Ghoſt expreſſeth all thoſe powers of the World, which ſhould afflict the Church in ſeveral ages, by the name of beaſts, all of Gods making. Daniel in his 7. Chapter had a viſion of four great beaſts that came up from the Sea; whereof the firſt, was like a Lion; the ſecond, like a Bear; another, like a Leopard; and a fourth, dreadful, and terrible, and ſtrong; ſo exceedingly dreadful, terrible and ſtrong, that (as if no beaſt could be found like it) it is not expreſſed by the likeneſs of any beaſt. But what were theſe beaſts? 'Tis anſwered (*Verſ.*17.) Theſe great beaſts which are four, are four great Kings, which ſhall ariſe out of the Earth, that is, four ſucceſſions of Kings. The Babylonian, the Perſian, the Grecian, the Roman powers were thoſe great beaſts. Now the Lord who made them, made his ſword approach unto every one of them, as the Hiſtories, both of the Church and of the world, hold clearly out. The Lord who made that great Behemoth the Babylonian power, and that great Behemoth the Perſian power, that great Behemoth the Grecian power, as alſo that great Behemoth the Roman power, hath made his ſword, in ſeveral ages, and by ſeveral ſteps or degrees, approach unto them. So in the Revelation of Saint John, the great beaſts there mentioned, what were they, but the powers of the earth ſet againſt the Church of God? We read (*Revel.*12.3.) of a great red dragon; this red dragon was the heatheniſh Roman power perſecuting the Church. Again (*Revel.*13.1.) John ſtood upon the ſand of the Sea, and ſaw a beaſt riſe up out of the Sea, having ſeven heads and ten horns. What was this beaſt? Maſter Mead ſaith, that by this beaſt, and his ſeven heads, and ten horns, we are to underſtand the Pope, with the companies or aſſociations of all thoſe Princes that put themſelves under his power; all theſe were figured (ſaith he) by that beaſt riſing up out of the Sea. At the 11. verſe of the ſame Chapter, Saint John ſaith, I beheld another beaſt coming out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he ſpake like a dragon. Apocalyptical Interpreters have various opinions about this ſecond beaſt, but whoever, or whatever this or the former beaſt is (to be ſure they are ſome body) the ſpirit of God repreſents them as terrible Behemoths; and the Church hath no help nor comfort againſt them, but that in the Text, He that made them, can make his ſword approach unto them. The Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 27. 1.) ſpeaks of the Lords ſword, and of the uſe he will put it to; In that day the Lord with his ſore, and great, and ſtrong ſword ſhall puniſh Leviathan, the piercing Serpent, even Leviathan the crooked Serpent, and he ſhall ſlay the Dragon that is in the Sea; That is, overcome the Devil and all his inſtruments, who oppoſe and would deſtroy his Vineyard of Red wine, that is, his Church. Thus we ſee how the Lord in all ages paſt hath, and how we are aſſured concerning the Ages to come, that he will make that good concerning myſtical Behemoths, which here he ſpeaks concerning the natural Behemoth; He that made him, can make his ſword approach unto him.

The Lord having thus far deſcribed Behemoth by ſeveral parts of his body, and by his great ſtrength or power, proceeds to deſcribe him further, by the manner of his life, or by his meat, drink and lodging, in the latter part of this context, to the end of the Chapter.

Verſ. 20. Surely the Mountains bring him forth food, where all the beaſts of the field do play.

In theſe words we have the proviſion which God hath appointed for Behemoth, and where. Though he be a very great beaſt, and therefore needs much food, yet the Lord hath ſtore enough for him, and hath ſet him where he may feed his fill. The Mountains bring him forth graſs; That is, all ſorts of herbage and green things.

בול pro יבול Quicquid terra profert, ut ſunt herbæ & arbores.

And though this part of the deſcription of Behemoth may ſerve the Hippopotame, who as Bochartus ſaith, feeds upon the Hills and Mountains (ſuch as they are) which lie near the River Nilus, as other Amphibions do (the Morſe eſpecially) in other parts of the world; yet no man can deny, but it doth as well (that I ſay not, much better) agree to the Elephant, that the Mountains bring him forth food. The words are plain, and need no explication.

Note two things from them; Firſt, God provideth food for all creatures, even for Behemoth.

He provides them food, from the greateſt to the leaſt; they are at Gods finding. And doth God take care for Behemoths, for Elephants, or, as ſome determine it, Hippopotames, River-Horſes, and Sea-monſters? Surely then (as David ſpake, Pſal. 111.4.) He will give meat to them that fear him, he will ever be mindful of his Covenant. This Inference hath been made from other paſſages in the former Chapter; I only remind the Reader of it here. The Lord, who provideth mountains of graſs or graſs upon the mountains, for Behemoth, hath mountains of proviſion for all his faithful ſervants.

Secondly, Note; God provides proportionable food for all his creatures.

Behemoth is a vaſt creature; therefore God hath whole mountains for him to graze upon, he is not ſhut up in a little pytle or narrow field, he hath large mountains for his ſtore; and will not the Lord give proportionable ſupplies to his people according to all their needs? If our needs be great, his ſtore is greater, The world is mine (ſaith God, Pſal. 50. 12.) and the fulneſs of it. He that is the fulneſs of all things, and hath in his power, and at his diſpoſe, the fulneſs of all the world, will not let them, of whom the world is not worthy, want any thing that is good and expedient for them. The mountains and valleys too, yea, deſerts and hard rocks, ſhall bring them forth food; God will turn ſtones into bread, and rocks into water, rather then they ſhall want. As David ſaid (Pſal. 34. 10.) The young Lions (ſo I may ſay, the Elephants) do lack and ſuffer hunger; but they that ſeek the Lord, ſhall not want any good thing; That is, Lions and Elephants ſhall rather want then they. Surely the mountains bring him forth food,

Where all the beaſts of the field play.] This argues the mild nature and gentleneſs of Behemoth, the Elephant, as was ſhewed at the 15. verſe; he lives upon graſs, not upon fleſh, as Lions and Bears; he lives upon graſs, and therefore all the beaſts of the field play where the Elephant feeds, for they know he will not eat nor feed upon them, he eats only graſs. Natural Hiſtorians tell us, that the beaſts ſeem to rejoyce when they ſee the Elephant, becauſe, they know he will not hurt them; not only do they feed with him to ſatisfie hunger, but play and ſport for delight.

Hence Note; Firſt, God can reſtrain the ſtrongeſt and moſt dangerous Creatures from hurting the weakeſt.

The beaſts would have little heart to play where the Elephant feeds, were he as fierce and cruel as he is great and ſtrong. Thus the Lord orders the ſpirits of powerful men, or of men in great power, into ſuch meekneſs and gentleneſs, that even the meaneſt live quietly and peaceably by them without fear of hurt, as was toucht before. The Church is ſet forth playing, as it were, not only where the Elephant, a gentle beaſt feeds, but where wild and ravenous beaſts feed (Iſa. 11. 6, 7, 8, 9.) The wolf ſhall dwell with the Lamb, the Leopard ſhall lie down with the Kid, the Calf and the young Lion and the Fatling ſhall lie down together, and a little Child ſhall lead them; That is, the Wolf ſhall not hurt the Lamb, the Leopard ſhall not trouble the Kid: Yea, ſaith that illuſtrious Prophecy (Ver. 8.) The ſucking Child ſhall play on the hole of the Aſp, the weaned Child ſhall put his hand on the Cockatrice den, they ſhall not hurt nor deſtroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth ſhall be full of the knowledg of the Lord, as the waters cover the Sea. The care of God over his Church and ſervants appears two ways;

Mitiſſimus eſt Elephas, neq; illius congreſſum exhorrent cætera animalia, ſed læta in iiſdem paſcuis verſantur. Plin. l. 69. c. 9.

Firſt, In hiding them from ſuch as would do them hurt. As it is ſaid (Jer. 36. 26.) when Baruch and Jeremiah had done that ſervice commanded them by the Lord, Jehoiakim was angry, and ſent to take them; but ſaith the Text, The Lord hid them. So the Lord moved Obadiah to hide his Prophets by fifty in a cave, from the wrath of Ahab and Jezebel (1 Kings 18.) Now as the Lord keeps his ſervants, by hiding them from thoſe who are enraged againſt them, ſo

Secondly, By meekning their ſpirits, as he doth the Elephants towards the beaſts of the field, ſhewing them much kindneſs, and ſuffering them in a ſort to play before them, that is, to enjoy great tranquillity. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, it was the Lord who turned the heart of the Egyptians to hate his people, and to deal ſubtilly with his ſervants (Pſal. 105. 25.) And 'tis doubtleſs of the Lord, that any ſhew them favour, and deal kindly with them.

Again, from theſe words, Where all the beaſts of the field play,

Note; Secondly, A playing life, is the life of a beaſt.

All beaſts would live ſo; wild beaſts do live ſo. As it is ſaid of the Leviathan in the Sea (Pſal. 104. 26.) There go the Ships, there is that Leviathan whom thou haſt made to play therein. A life of play, is a beſtial life. It is ſaid (Zach. 8. 5.) in a way of promiſe, That boys and girls ſhould play in the ſtreets, but men and women muſt work; it were a ſhame to deſcribe them playing. The life of man is not a playing life, but a labouring life. How beaſt-like do they live, who (as it is ſaid of the people of Iſrael, Exod. 38.6.) Eat, and drink, and riſe up to play; That's juſt like a beaſt, feed on the mountains, and then play upon the mountains. Let us follow Solomons counſel (Eccleſ. 9. 10.) Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. We have ſeen Behemoth feeding, let us now ſee him lodging and repoſing himſelf.

Verſ. 21, 22. He lieth under the ſhady trees, in the covert of the reed and fens: the ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow, the willows of the brook compaſs him about.

Theſe two verſes hold forth the manner of Behemoths repoſe, how and where he takes his eaſe, He lieth under the ſhady trees, &c.

Some of the Jewiſh Rabbins read theſe two verſes with an interrogation Negative, thus; Doth he lie under the ſhady trees, in the covert of the reeds? Do the ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadows? Or the willows compaſs him about? Implying, that Behemoth is ſo vaſt a creature, that he can hardly find trees to ſhadow him, or willows of the brook to compaſs him about. But though Behemoth be a great and tall beaſt, yet I nothing doubt but there are trees in and about the places which he frequents, great and tall enough to ſhadow him from the Sun when he ſtands upright, yea, and reeds of a ſufficient height to be a covert to him when he lieth down. And therefore as it was an overboldneſs in thoſe Rabbins to put an interrogation where they found none, ſo there is no need that an interrogation ſhould either be found or put there. Indeed Bochartus, who judgeth reeds much too low to make a covert for the Elephant, tells us out of Ælian, That Elephants go by very great trees, as we by ſtanding corn, and that ſome of them are taller then trees. Which I conceive, can be underſtood no other way then by a high ſtrain of Rhetorick: But ſuppoſe it true in plain and proper ſenſe, yet this gives the learned Bochartus no advantage (to which end he alledgeth that of Ælian) for the accomodating of this part of the deſcription of Behemoth to the Hippopotame rather then the Elephant, becauſe he tells us from ſeveral Authors, firſt, that the Hippopotame is not only three times bigger then the horſe, but ſecondly, that he is of equal ability with the Elephant, and for the moſt part greater. Whence it is (ſaith he) that ſome Writers compare the Hippopotame with the Elephant, both in ſtrength and ſtature, or prefer him before the Elephant; which reports (ſaith he) although they be a little ſtretcht, yet 'tis manifeſt, that the Hippopotame comes behind few animals, either in bigneſs or ſtature (that is, tallneſs) of body. And if ſo, then the Reeds of the שכב Et cubo & dormio; ſæpius cubo, nam dormio potius ישו Dicitur. Druſ.

Fen

Ælian. l. 7. c. 6.

Bochartus part. poſt. l. 5. c. 15. p. 755.

Fen fit him as ill for a covert as the Elephant; yet I am enough ſatisfied, that they may very well fit either of them, And though the Elephant uſually ſleepeth ſtanding, and rarely lyeth down to ſleep, yet (which is not denied) if he ſometimes or at any time lyeth down to ſleep, 'tis ſufficient to anſwer the purpoſe of this Text; which ſaith (Verſ. 21.). He lyeth under the ſhady-trees, in the covert of the Reeds and Fens. And Verſ. 22. The ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow, the willows of the brook compaſs him about.

'Tis uſual with, and even natural to cattel of all ſorts, to ſeek ſhelter under ſhady trees, when the fiery heat of the Sun offends them; and as Behemoth ſeeks out any ſort of ſhady trees, ſo it ſeems he hath a peculiar delight in, and poſſibly a phancy to

The willows of the brook.] Willows are ſo called, becauſe they moſtly grow near to brooks, and always proſper beſt in mariſh or mooriſh grounds. Some trees will not grow in watery places, ſuch are the Cypreſs and Cheſt-nut-trees; others will not grow well any where elſe, ſuch are the Alder and the Poplar trees, Willows eſpecially: Willows love brooks, and Elephants love both brooks and Willows, if thoſe ancient Natural Hiſtorians, mentioned in the Margen miſ-report them not. The Elephant (ſaith one of them) loveth rivers, and though he be not a river Animal, yet he may be called a river-ſide or river-bank Animal; and (ſaith the other) Elephants are greatly pleaſed with rivers, and wander much about ſtreams of water, though they cannot ſwim, by reaſon of the greatneſs of their bodies.

Sicut aquas odere cupreſſi, juglandes, caſtaneæ, ita non niſi in aquoſis proveniunt ſalices, alni, populi. Plin. l. 16. c. 18.

Elephas amat amnes & quamvis fluviatile non ſit tamen riparium dici poteſt. Ariſt. l. 9. c. 46.

Elephantes gaudent amnibus maxime & circa fluvios vagantur, cum alioquin nare propter magnitudinem corporis non poſſunt. Plin. l. 8. c. 10.

That is (I confeſs) a rare notion, and ſingularly ſubſervient to his opinion, that Behemoth is the Hippopotame, which the learned Author, ſo often already mentioned, gives us; namely, that by the word rendred brook, we are here to underſtand the river Nilus in Egypt. And therefore he tranſlates the Text, not as we, The Willows of the Brook, but The Willows of Nilus compaſs him about. And that the Hebrew word (Nahal) ſignifieth Nilus, he puts beyond contradiction, by quoting many expreſs places of Scripture, where it is ſo uſed (Nu. 34.5. Joſh. 15.4.47. 1 Kings 8.65. 2 Kings 24.7. Iſa. 27.12.) which he alſo confirms by the Authority of ſome Ancient Latin Poets, who call Nilus a Torrent or a Brook. Now though this hath very great weight with me, and may with any ingenious Reader, to perſwade him, that the Hippopotame is intended by Behemoth rather then the Elephant,

Yet with the favour, and good leave of this worthy Author, and with ſubmiſſion to more able judgments, I would offer theſe two things to the Readers conſideration.

Firſt, That though the word Nilus may draw its original (as he ſhews) from the word Nahal, according to its ancient pronunciation Neel; yet in on one of thoſe Scriptures by him quoted, and lately noted, is the word Nahal uſed alone (as it ſtands in this Text of Job) to ſignifie Nilus; for in all thoſe places the word Egypt is added. Now when the words are put together, The River of Egypt, no man can doubt but Nilus muſt be underſtood by it. But when the word Nahal, ſignifying a Brook, Torrent or River, is found ſingle and alone, there is no neceſſity that it ſhould ſignifie Nilus, the word indifferently and in common, being applicable to any brook or River in any part of the whole world, as well as to Nilus in Egypt.

Secondly, In one place of the holy Scripture, where this whole expreſſion in Job, The Willows of the brook is found, not Nilus, but ſome other brook or river is without all controverſie intended. The children of Iſrael for the celebration of the feaſt of Tabernacles were commanded (Levit. 23.40.) to cut down the boughs of thick trees, and the Willows of the brook, &c. Which ſurely could not be meant of the Willows growing about the River Nilus in Egypt; for they were come out of Egypt, and this was an ordinance which the children of Iſrael were commanded to obſerve in the Land of Canaan. And as in this place of Moſes we have the Willows of the brook, ſo (Iſa. 15.7.) we have, the brook of the Willows, whither the ſubſtance of the Moabites ſhould be carried, by themſelves (ſay ſome) for ſafety, by their enemies, ſay others, as ſpoil. I do not find any who follow this tranſlation, interpreting the brook of the Willows by Nilus in Egypt, but ſeveral of Euphrates by Babylon in Chaldea, to which that ſpeech of the Captive Jews there (Pſal. 137.1,2.) may give ſome light.

Theſe two things conſidered, the words of the Text in Job concerning Behemoth may, at leaſt, with a fair probability, be applied to the Elephant. The ſhady trees cover him with their ſhadow, the Willows of the brook compaſs him about.

Hence Note; Firſt, God provides not only for the being of his Creatures, but for their comfortable being.

As the Elephant hath food upon the mountains to keep him alive, ſo ſhady trees to keep him cool. And thus the Lord takes care for man; he hath not only given him bread to eat, but conveniences for his delight and comfort. God makes proviſion, even for our delight, while we are in the fleſh; let us take heed we make not proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts of it. The Elephant hath not only graſs, but ſhadows.

Secondly, Note; The inconveniencies and annoyances which come to us by one Creature are helped by ſome other.

God hath ſo provided, that look in what one creature doth annoy us, another relieves us. The Elephants are much annoyd by the heat of the Sun, but they find relief under ſhady trees. The heat of the Sun is cured by ſhades and gentle winds, in thoſe parts of the world that are under or near the Line; the Lord hath provided cool briezes, which blowing there fan the air, and make it very pleaſant by attempering the heat. If there be poiſon in one creature to annoy, there is an antidote in ſome other to help. And in this the goodneſs of God ſhines moſt clearly, that all the inconveniences and annoyances, which come to us by men, yea, which come to us by our ſins, are all remedied by Jeſus Chriſt, or we have relief by Jeſus Chriſt againſt them all. When the heat of any affliction moleſts us, we may ſit down (as the Church ſpeaks, Cant. 2.3.) under his ſhadow with great delight, and his fruit will be ſweet unto us. Jeſus Chriſt is to all believers, not only as the ſhadow of a tree, but as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land (Iſa. 32.2.) The Lord hath provided us ſhady trees, and the Willows of the brook (bleſſed and precious promiſes) to compaſs us about in all our troubles.

Thus God hath given Behemoth help againſt immoderate heat; But he is ſubject to much thirſt alſo; for that he hath help at hand too, ſtore of water.

Verſ. 23. 24. Behold he drinketh up a River and haſteth not, he truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth; he taketh it with his eyes, his noſe pierceth through ſnares.

We have had Behemoth feeding upon the mountains, and repoſing in the ſhadows; here we have him drinking in or at the River. Theſe two verſes, as they ſtand in our tranſlation, may in a fairer ſenſe be applied to the Elephant: but before I come to that, I ſhall give a brief account of that Tranſlation given by the learned Author before named; according to which, the 23. Verſe is not only beſt, but only applicable to the Hippopotame. Behold, let a River preſs (or come upon) him, he will not fear; he is ſafe, though Jordan iſſue forth upon his mouth.

Ecce premat (eum) fluvius, non trepidabit, ſecurus erit quamvis Jordanes erumpat in os ejus. Bochar.

Now it's eaſily granted, that the talleſt and ſtrongeſt Elephant, would have cauſe enough to fear, if a whole River, ſuch a great and deep one as Jordan eſpecially, ſhould preſs upon him and over-whelm him, for as the Elephant is no ſwimmer, ſo he muſt have a liberty of breathing, nor can he hold his breath very long; and therefore (as it is ſaid) ventures to go no further into the water, than he can hold and keep his ſnout above water, to draw in air and maintain reſpiration. So that in this the Hippopotame hath the advantage of the Elephant, as being able to hold his breath much longer. For though (ſaith he, alleadging Ariſtotle for it) as the Sea-calf, the Crocodile and Sea-ſhell-fiſh, ſo alſo the Hippopotame will be ſuffocated in the water at laſt, unleſs he take ſome breathing times; yet 'tis certain, he can hold his breath a long time, abiding (not being able to ſwim) whole days at the bottom of Nilus, cteeping or lying upon the ouze, till night approaching, he goeth out to feed.

Lib. 8. de Hiſtoria Animal. cap. 2.

The nature of this animal being ſuch as hath been deſcribed, the Tranſlation in hand anſwers it clearly.

Yet, ſeeing there are other Tranſlations of this 23. verſe, left us by very learned men, and ſkilful in the Hebrew tongue, which may well comply with the nature of the Elephant, it cannot ſavour of pertinacy, to give them ſo much reſpect as to lay them before the Reader, and leave him to his own choice in this matter. And,

Premit fluvium ita ut non feſtinet, confidit quod Jordanem educet in os ſuum.

Firſt, Let us conſider that in which Bochartus joyns thoſe four Worthies, Pagnine, Arias, Mercer and Junius, whoſe Tranſlation runs thus; He checks a River, ſo that it haſtneth not; he is confident that he can draw out Jordan into his mouth. Here indeed are great Hyperboles. 'Tis high language, to ſay, an Elephant by interpoſing his body like a bank, can ſtay the courſe of a River, or ſwallow it down at a draught; yet it would be no hard labour to ſhew that the Scripture hath many expreſſions in it of as high a ſtrain as this. We read of Cities walled and fenced up to heaven (Deut. 9. 1.) And the Evangeliſt John, ſuppoſeth Chap.21.25. that if all the things which Jeſus Chriſt did in the days of his fleſh, here on earth, ſhould be written, that even the world it ſelf could not contain the Books which ſhould be written. But I ſhall not ſtay upon this, nor doth the learned Bochartus inſiſt upon it: he could admit the Hyperboles in that Tranſlation, if the Tranſlation it ſelf were conſiſtent with the Hebrew Text, in reference to which he takes five exceptions againſt that Tranſlation; to every one of which I ſhall only give my apprehenſion, and ſo paſs on.

The firſt is, That the Authors of this Tranſlation, ſuppoſe the Hebrew word for River, and that for Jordan, to be of the accuſative Caſe (as Grammarians ſpeak) whereas in the Original, they have no note of the accuſative Caſe prefixed. I may ſay to that, The note of the accuſative Caſe is not always prefixt, where the word is ſo taken, eſpecially where the word can be no otherwiſe taken, as in the ſenſe of theſe Tranſlators it cannot be in this place; for they taking Behemoth to be the agent in both parts of the verſe, as alſo the River in the former part, and Jordan in the latter, to be patients, could not ſuppoſe any otherwiſe of thoſe words, then that they are of the accuſative Caſe; whereas Bochartus taking Behemoth to be the patient, and the River in the former part, as alſo Jordan in the latter part of the verſe, to ſuſtain the place of Agents, muſt needs ſuppoſe the contrary.

Secondly, ſaith he, Thoſe words (ita ut) ſo that, are not in the Hebrew. I anſwer, ſuch is the conciſeneſs of the Hebrew tongue, that all Tranſlators make uſe of ſome fitting words (which they diſtinguiſh from the pure Text, by a different character in Printing and Writing) to clear up the ſenſe of the Text in the notion of their Tranſlation.

חפז

Thirdly, he ſaith, The word rendred to Haſten, ſignifieth not to haſten ſimply, but to haſten for fear. That's yielded on all hands; and in that ſenſe I ſhall make uſe of it, in opening our own Tranſlation. All that I ſhall ſay to this exception, is, that the learned Authors of this Tranſlation, who well underſtood the full ſignification of that word, might conceive that the ſame word is not always uſed by the holy Ghoſt in the ſame latitude of ſignification, and therefore render this word, which ſignifies to haſten for fear, barely to haſten. Further, I may add, that this word which ſignifies to haſten for fear, is rendred alſo barely to fear; and why not then barely to haſten? The one Tranſlation leaving out the former part of the full ſenſe, as the other doth the latter part of it.

The fourth exception reſpects only the phraſe or manner of ſpeech uſed in that Tranſlation, as not yielding a commodious ſenſe. I ſhall ſay no more but this to it; that when either man or beaſt drinks, he doth both draw out and draw in, he draweth the liquor out of the veſſel, and into his mouth.

הגיח

Fifthly, 'Tis ſaid, the word uſed by Job, ſignifies neither to educe or draw out, nor to induce or draw in, but to break forth, as appears (Job 38. 8. Judg. 20. 33. Dan. 7. 2.) It doth ſo in thoſe three places now mentioned; yet all the Lexicographers which I have ſeen, render the Verb (educere as well as erumpere) by a word ſignifying the force of another, drawing out a thing, as well as the breaking out of a thing by its own force. And ſo a Noun ſubſtantive derived from this Verb is uſed (Pſal. 22. 9.) which place we render thus, Thou art he that took (or dreweſt) me out of the womb. And though it be true, that Infants may be ſaid to break out of the womb, yet 'tis not by any power of their own, but by the power of God; and therefore it may much rather be ſaid, that God takes or draws them out of the womb, then that they break or make their way out.

Thus far of this Tranſlation, as alſo of the grounds of that learned Authors diſſatisfaction with it. All which objections riſe up alſo againſt our Engliſh tranſlation, both being near the ſame in words, and fully the general ſcope and ſenſe. And I would add this for the honour of our Tranſlators, that I am much perſwaded they did not render the Text thus, as perſons prepoſſeſſed with an opinion, that the Elephant muſt needs be intended here under the title Behemoth, but becauſe they then ſaw good ground for it in the Grammatical conſtruction and meaning of the Hebrew Text. What they would do now (were they living) upon the diſcovery which this worthy perſon hath lately made I dare not ſay, but ſhall proceed to the explication of this verſe, as they have left it.

Behold he drinketh up a River.] The word which we tranſlate to drink up, ſignifies to rob, to oppreſs; ſo ſome render it here, He robbeth a River, he ſteals away all the water: that's a high ſtrain of Rhetorick to expreſs Behemoths great drought; he drinks, as if at a draught he meant to drink a River dry.

Verbum עשק ſignificat ad ſe rapere per vim vel per fraudem.

And haſteth not.] There is a twofold rendring of that: Firſt, thus; He drinketh a River that it haſteth not, referring this not haſting to the River, and then the meaning is, He drinks ſo deep, that he even ſtops the current or courſe of the River. A River whoſe waters are either drawn away, or neer dryed, cannot run with wonted ſwiftneſs. This is another hyperbolical ſtrain, as if an Elephant were able to exhauſt a River. Great Armies have ſtopped the courſe of Rivers with drinking, they have drunk Rivers dry; in alluſion to which, it may be ſaid of the Elephant, He drinketh a River, that it haſteth not. So Mr. Broughton reads it, Lo, he robs a River that it haſteth not. We tranſlate, He drinketh a River,

And haſteth not.] That is, the Elephant doth not haſt. This may have a twofold reference.

Firſt, To his patience in thirſt. Though he drinks much when he comes to it, yet he can bear thirſt very patiently a long time. An ancient Writer affirms, the Elephant will live eight days without drinking; if ſo, he haſteth not to drink: though he drinks very much when he comes to it, yet he is not haſty to drink, he can forbear for eight days together.

Ælian. l. 14. c. 44.

Secondly, This may have reference (which I conceive moſt congruous) to his courage: He haſteth not; That is, he doth not drink in fear, he takes his leaſure. Hiſtorians ſay of the dog drinking at Nilus, he doth but take a lap and away, he is afraid the Crocodile will come and catch him; And hence we ſpeak proverbially of thoſe who do but touch at a matter and leave it, They do like the dog at Nilus. This is a truth too, He drinketh up a River, and haſteth not. The Elephant is a ſtout, ſtrong creature, he fears no hurt, and therefore drinks as much as he will, and in as much time as he will.

חפז Feſtinavit, pavorem connotat. Tanquam canis ad Nilum. Non feſtinat nec trepidat bibere ut canis quum aquam ſumit è Nilo metuit ſibi à Crocodilo, &c. Druſ.

Once more, ſome ſay, he haſteth not to drink, becauſe he ſpends ſome time to trouble and mud the water with his feet before he drinks; for he cannot abide (ſaith an ancient Author) to drink clear water: yea, ſome ſay, he therefore troubleth the water before he drinketh, becauſe he cannot endure to ſee his own ſhape in the water; for which reaſon, 'tis alſo affirmed, that the Indians will not lead their Elephants by the waters at full Moon, but at new Moon only, when the air being darker, the water is to us leſs pellucid.

Ælian. l. 14. c. 44. Claræ aquæ potia Elephanto inimiciſſima, turbulentam & ſordidam ſuaviſſime bibit.

He truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his Mouth.

This is another high expreſſion, to ſhew the Elephants vaſt drinking. Jordan was a great River. The Elephant doth not only think that he can drink up a ſmall Brook or Rivulet, but a great River, that he can draw up the River Jordan into his mouth. In the greatneſs of his thirſt, he doth ſo much ſlight any ſmall Brook or Pond, that he is confident, were he at the banks of Jordan, he could drink it dry. Thus, as before of his eating, he had whole mountains to feed on; ſo here of his drinking, he draws a whole River, Jordan, into his mouth.

Hence Note; Firſt, That which is too much for many of ſome one kind, may be but enough for one of another kind.

A little drink will ſerve a Dove. We ſay of a man who drinks ſparingly, He drinks like a Sparrow; and we may ſay of a great drinker, he drinks not only like a Fiſh, or like a Horſe (which are common ſayings) but like an Elephant. The Elephant drinks deep. Natural Hiſtorians report the meaſure of his drinking; he takes in the quantity of fourteen Macedonian Pitchers or Tankards (how much they contain of our meaſure, I cannot ſay, but queſtionleſs they contain very much) for his mornings draught, and eight for his evenings draught. Hence the Proverb, An Elephant could not drink ſo much.

Mane quatuordecim amphoras ſive metretas Macedonicas bibit, veſpere Octo. Ariſtot.

Secondly, Note; If brute creatures eat or drink much, it is from their conſtitution, not from their luſt.

The Elephant drinks much, yet only what his nature and neceſſity, or the neceſſity of his nature, requires; he doth not drink thus in wantonneſs, or to ſatisfie a luſt; he drinks much, but he is no drunkard. There are three things in the Elephant which clear him, that his great drinking is not from his luſt, but need; Firſt, his natural conſtitution is very hot; that requires the more drink. Secondly, the climate wherein he is bred is very hot: the Elephant cannot well endure cold, and the heat of the Country makes him drink much. Thirdly, The greatneſs of his body; he hath a vaſt body, and that muſt needs require a great quantity of drink to fill it. The Elephants great drinking will not excuſe the drunkard, who drinks to exceſs; what he drinks, is but commenſurate to the greatneſs of his body, and the neceſſities of nature; 'tis not to ſerve a luſt, or to pleaſe his appetite. That which followeth, is the proſecution of the ſame thing.

Verſ. 24. He taketh it with his eyes, his noſe pierceth through ſnares.

There are various Tranſlations of this verſe: I ſhall name but one beſides our own, and that preſents it interrogatively, or as an interrogation Negative; Will any take him in his ſight? (or in his eyes?) or bore his noſe with a ſnare? Thus ſeveral underſtand this verſe, as importing an utter impoſſibility to take the Elephant (as we ſpeak) by fair play. Poſſibly, by cunning and ſubtilty, coming behind him, or at unawares, you may entrap him; but, Can men take him before his eyes, to pierce his noſe with many ſnares? So Mr. Broughton renders. They cannot do it. Solomon ſaith (*Prov.*1.17.) In vain is the net ſpread in the ſight of any Bird. You cannot take a little Bird if he ſees you, much leſs Behemoth; no, you muſt do it by ſlight if you do it at all. Nor will the Hippopotame be taken (as we ſpeak) by fine force, but only by fineneſſes, or devices made by art to ſurprize him, as Bochartus ſhews out of ſeveral ancient Authors. So that as in many other things, ſo in this, the manner of their taking, the Elephant and he are much alike; and therefore the leſs wonder if one be taken, or miſtaken for the other.

An in oculis capiet eum quiſquam, tendiculis perforabit naſum; i. e. aperte, & non inſidiis ſtructis. Jun.

Non niſi ex inſidiis capi poteſt Elephas. Plin. l. 8. c. 8, 9.

Our Tranſlation ſaith, He taketh it with his eyes. What doth he take? What is the thing taken? Surely, according to this reading, he takes the River Jordan it ſelf with his eyes; That is, he is exceedingly taken with beholding the River: And this is a further heightning of his thirſt. As if it had been ſaid, He is ſo thirſty, that when he ſees the River, he takes it with his eyes, or is exceedingly pleaſed to ſee the River; the very ſight of the water makes him glad.

Yet Further, ſome of the Rabbins expound it thus; He taketh it with his eyes; That is, when he cometh to a River, he is ſo thirſty, that he thruſts his head in up to his very eyes, as if he were to drink with his eyes. This alſo ſignifies his greedineſs in drinking.

Naſum uſq; in profundum fluvii oculis tenus immergit, ut aquam abunde capiat. Aben Ezra.

Hence Note; Nature is much pleaſed with the ſight of that which it much deſireth and wanteth.

As ſoon as the Elephant can but get a ſight of the River, how doth it pleaſe him? We have a ſaying, It is better to fill a mans belly than his eye, and it is a truth. He that hath a great deſire to meat or drink, is much pleaſed to ſee either. And 'tis a truth in every thing, the ſight of that is very pleaſing to us, which we greatly want, and much deſire. Therefore Solomon gives councel (*Prov.*23.31.) Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup. They that are given to drink, are pleaſed when they ſee the cup, they take it with their eyes, or, their eyes are taken with it. 'Tis ſo in ſpiritual things alſo; that which we greatly deſire and want in ſpirituals, O how pleaſant is the ſight of it! how glad are we when we can take it with our eyes! Thus ſpake David (Pſal. 63.1,2.) O my God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee; my Soul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh longeth for thee, in a dry and thirſty Land where no water is, to ſee thy power and thy glory (O that I could but ſee them, I would take them with my eyes) as I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary. As if he had ſaid, there I have ſeen the flowing forth of thy goodneſs, of thy power and glory; but now I am in a dry Land, O how I long to ſee thy power and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeen thee in thy Sanctuary! He ſpeaks to the ſame purpoſe (Pſal. 27.4.) One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſeek after, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord. The ſpiritual ſight of God is moſt ſweet in his Ordinances. The very outward enjoyment of thoſe who miniſter ſpiritual things is pleaſant: Hence that promiſe (Iſa. 30.20.) Thine eyes ſhall ſee thy Teachers; There is ſomething in that: how much more ſweet is it to have a ſpiritual ſight of ſpiritual things! The ſenſe of ſeeing is delightful; what then is the grace of ſeeing! The Elephant taketh it with his Eyes.

His noſe pierceth through ſnares.] That is, he thruſteth his noſe, his trunk into the River; and if there be any ſnares there, ſet and prepared on purpoſe to entangle him, or if any thing be there accidentally, which may annoy him, he breaks through them all; he is ſo thirſty that a ſmall matter doth not hinder him in drinking, he makes way through all impediments, that he may take his fill of drink; his thirſt being urgent, drink he will whatever comes of it.

Hence Note; That which any creature hath a great deſire to, he will make his way to it through difficulties and dangers, he will break through ſnares to attain it.

David had a great deſire to the water of Bethlem, but there lay an Army between him and the Well, yet three men would venture through an Hoſt of enemies, to fetch him water. If any have a vehement thirſt after Gods Word, the water of Life, they will break through ſnares for it; though Armies lie in the way, yet there are three ſtrong men in them (an enlightned underſtanding, a rectified will, and good affection) that will venture to get the water of Bethlem for their inſtruction and conſolation. Natural creatures will not ſtand upon dangerous difficulties, to come at that which is much deſired by them; how much leſs they who are ſpiritual?

So much of this greateſt terreſtial animal Behemoth, and of the Lords power in making and ordering him. In the next Chapter the Lord proceeds to humble Job yet more, by ſetting before him the greateſt animal in the waters, the mighty Leviathan.

CHAP. XLI. Verſ. 1, 2 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an Hook? Or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down?

Canſt thou put a Hook into his Noſe? Or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

Will he make many ſupplications unto thee? Will he ſpeak ſoft words unto thee?

Will he make a covenant with thee? Wilt thou take him for a ſervant for ever?

Wilt thou play with him as with a Bird? Wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the Merchants?

Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed Irons? Or his head with fiſh-ſpears?

Lay thine hand upon him, remember the Battle, do no more.

Behold, the hope of him is in vain: ſhall not one be caſt down even at the ſight of him?

None is ſo fierce that dare ſtir him up: who then is able to ſtand before me?

Who hath prevented me, that I ſhould repay him? Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven, is mine.

This whole Chapter gives us a large diſcourſe, concerning the greateſt, the largeſt living creature that God made in this viſible world, the Leviathan. The whole may be divided into two general parts;

Firſt, A Narration.

Secondly, A Concluſion.

In the Narrative part, Leviathan is deſcribed four ways.

Firſt, By the bigneſs and vaſtneſs of his body, which is implyed in the firſt and ſecond verſes; he is a creature ſo big and bulky, that there is no holding him with a cord or line; he is too big, too boiſterous for an Angler to deal with. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an hook? Or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down? &c. (Verſ. 1,2.)

Secondly, This Leviathan is deſcribed by the ſtoutneſs and untractableneſs of his ſpirit; there is no bringing him to any ſubmiſſion, to any ſervice or compliance. Will he make many ſupplications unto thee? Will he ſpeak ſoft words unto thee? Will he make a Covenant with thee? &c. (Verſ. 3,4,5.)

Thirdly, He is deſcribed by the difficulty and danger, if not impoſſibility of taking or catching him; he will hardly be taken any way, no, not by the moſt forcible ways, to make either meat or Merchandize of him. Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the Merchants? Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed Irons? Or his head with fiſh-ſpears? &c. (*Verſ.*6,7,8,9. and in the former part of the 10. Verſe.) Thus far Leviathan is deſcribed in his greatneſs, in his ſtoutneſs, in the difficulty and danger of catching him, if he can be catched at all.

Now, the Lord having proceeded thus far in the deſcription of, or doctrin about Leviathan, he makes Uſe and Application of all that he had ſaid, before he comes to the fourth particular; and this Application or Uſe which the Holy Ghoſt makes of his deſcription thus far given, conſiſts in two things.

Firſt, Hence the Lord infers his own irreſiſtibleneſs, and the utter inability of any creature to contend with him (in the cloſe of the 10. Verſe) Who then is able to ſtand before me? If none can ſtand before this creature, can any ſtand before the Creator! That's the firſt Inference.

Secondly, The Lord makes a further Inference from it concerning his own ſelf-ſufficiency, or abſolute independency upon any creature, either for counſel what to do, or for aſſiſtance in doing it. Thus much is clearly affirmed in that queſtion, at the beginning of 11. Verſe, Who hath prevented me, that I ſhould repay him? As if the Lord had ſaid, Let the man come forth that hath contributed any thing to me, in any of my works, or that hath given any help in the doing them, and he ſhall be well rewarded for his pains. Both theſe Inferences or Uſes, the Lord confirms by a grand Aſſertion or Maxim, in the cloſe of the 11. Verſe; Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven, is mine. If all be mine, then who can ſtand before me? If all be mine, then who hath prevented me, that I ſhould repay him? This is the Application, theſe the Uſes, which the Lord himſelf makes of the doctrin laid down about this creature, the Leviathan: Theſe Uſes cloſe the third part of the deſcription of Leviathan. The fourth part of his deſcription, contains many particulars concerning his parts, power, and proportion, as alſo the wonderful effects of his power, all which are ſet down in higheſt ſtrains of divine rhetorick, from the 11. Verſe to the end of the 32.

The ſecond part of the Chapter I call the concluſion, and it flows naturally from the whole foregoing diſcourſe, in the two laſt verſes of it; Upon earth there is not his like (the Lord ſaid concerning Behemoth, He is the chief of the ways of God, That is, upon earth; and here he ſaith of Leviathan, Upon earth there is not his like,(no, not Behemoth himſelf) he is made without fear, he beholdeth all high things, he is a King over all the Children of Pride. Thus far concerning ſtate and parts of the whole Chapter, in which the Lord hath this general ſcope, even to humble Job yet more. As if he had ſaid, That thou, O Job, maiſt ſee and be convinced of thy preſumption in pleading with me; look upon Leviathan, conſider whether thou art able to deal with him; if not, how canſt thou deal with me who made him, and can both maſter and deſtroy him when I will? Thus the Lord makes his triumph over creatures mightier in outward force then man, to the intent all men may know, they ſhall certainly fall, and be utterly confounded, if they lift up themſelves againſt God. All which will appear further, in opening the deſcription of this Leviathan.

Verſ. 1. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an Hook?

For the clearing of theſe words, and towards the clearing of all that follows, I ſhall ſhew, Firſt, the ſignification of this word Leviathan, or what it imports. Secondly, what kind of creature this Leviathan is, or is conceived to be.

לוה Additus, adjunctus.

The word Leviathan is derived from an Hebrew root, which ſignifies added to, or joyned together. When Leah had brought forth a third ſon to Jacob, ſhe called his name (from this word) Levi, and ſaid, Now my Husband will be joyned to me, becauſe I have born him three ſons (Gen.29.34.) And it is ſuppoſed, that this creature is ſo called upon a double reſpect.

Firſt, Becauſe of the faſt-joyning or cloſure of his ſcales (*Verſ.*15,16,17.)

Secondly, Becauſe he is ſo great of body, that he appears as if many bodies were joyned and knit together in his.

And becauſe the Hebrew word for a Dragon is Thannin, ſome have conceived, that the laſt ſyllable in Leviathan is a contract of that, and added to Levijath, as implying, that in one Leviathan many Dragons were conjoyned. But I rather adhere to that learned Author, who takes Leviathan to be a ſimple, not a compound word, and ſaith, That the laſt ſyllable than, belongs to the form of the Noun, as in Nebuſhtan, &c. And he finds the root of the word Leviathan, neither in the Hebrew, nor in the Syriack, but in the Arabick language, where it ſignifies, to wind, plight or fold together, fitly intimating the crooked winding poſtures and motions of that animal called Leviathan.

Leviathan ſinuoſum eſt animal & in plures ſpiras volubile. Bocha.

But, what is this Leviathan?

Firſt, Moſt of the Ancients, both Greek and Latin, turn this Scripture wholly into an Allegory, expounding, as Behemoth before, ſo here Leviathan, wholly of the old enemy of mankind, the Devil. 'Tis true, that many things here ſpoken of Leviathan, are applicable to the Devil; but to bring all to that ſenſe, is doubtleſs a forcing or ſtraining of the Text. Others, who proſecute the Allegory, apply it to bad Princes, who having great power, uſe it for the oppreſſion and vexation of thoſe that are under their dominion. Nor can it be denyed, that the King of Babylon was intended by the Prophet, under the word Leviathan (*Iſa.*27.1,2.) as Pharaoh King of Egypt is expreſly called (Tannin, or) a Sea-Dragon, *Ezek.*29.3. and Chap. 32. 2.

Hebræi grandiores omnes piſces ſc. cetacei generis, hac voce ſignificari putant. Merl.

Secondly, Several of the Jewiſh Writers expound Leviathan, not of any particular ſpecies, or ſort of fiſhes; but in general, of all great fiſhes.

Thirdly, The moſt general, and hitherto moſt received opinion, concludes Leviathan to be among all fiſhes, the Whale in particular.

Fourthly, Beza of the former age, and in this, Bochartus, confidently aſſert, that Leviathan is the Crocodile. The general reaſon given for it by them, is, becauſe what is here ſpoken of Leviathan, is not every way ſutable nor agreeable to the Whale; and they who expound Leviathan by the Whale, are as confident that ſeveral things here affirmed of Leviathan, are not agreeable to the Crocodile.

What my own apprehenſions are in this matter of difference, whether the Whale or the Crocodile be intended by Leviathan, I have already declared, at the fifteenth Verſ. of the fortieth Chapter, where the Lord begins to preſent Behemoth, purpoſing alſo in the ſame continued ſpeech to preſent Leviathan to the conſideration of Job, in the livelieſt colours, and higheſt expreſſions of divine eloquence, for his yet fuller conviction and humiliation. There (I ſay) the Reader may find my thoughts about this matter; yet in opening the Text, I ſhall touch at moſt of thoſe particulars which the learned Bochartus takes notice of, either as more clearly, or as only applicable to the Crocodile; leaving the Reader (as was there ſaid) at his liberty to determine his own thoughts, where he ſees moſt reaſon and faireſt probability. For it muſt be confeſſed, that there are no ſmall difficulties in making out the common and hitherto moſt received opinion, that Leviathan is the Whale, as will appear in our paſſage through this Chapter; and therefore I dare not be very poſitive, much leſs tenacious in it. For though it be an unqueſtionable truth, and to be received, and to be as the matter of an hiſtorical faith, becauſe God hath ſaid it, that there is a living creature in the compaſs of nature, exactly anſwering every particular in the following deſcription of the Leviathan, yet it is queſtionable what that creature is; and to ſay, the Crocodile is meant by Leviathan, or the Whale is meant by Leviathan, is only matter of opinion, and the judgment of man.

Verſ. 1. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan?

τὸν δράκοντα. Sept.

Our Tranſlators ſay in the Margin, a Whale, or a whirlepool. The Septuagint renders, Canſt thou draw out the Dragon? As if by way of eminence, Leviathan were the chiefeſt and greateſt among all that are or may be called Dragons. And ſay ſome, the word Leviathan is the ſame with Thannin, which in the Hebrew ſignifies a Dragon. Inſomuch that theſe two words, Thannin and Leviathan, are taken in Scripture promiſcuouſly (Pſal. 74. 13, 14.) Thou breakeſt the heads (Thanninim) of the Dragons in the waters (we put Whales in the Margin), Arias renders the Text ſo) then followeth in the next verſe, Thou breakeſt the heads of Leviathan in pieces, &c. Meaning in both verſes Pharaoh and his Captains, who purſued Iſrael, not only to, but into the Red-Sea, and were drowned. Thus alſo theſe two words are uſed (Iſa. 27. 1.) where, Leviathan, the piercing (or croſſing the Sea like a bar) Serpent, even Leviathan the crooked Serpent, whom the Lord will puniſh with his ſore, and great, and long ſword, as 'tis ſaid in the former part of the verſe, is the ſame with the dragon that is in the Sea, whom he will ſlay, as 'tis ſaid in the latter part of the verſe. Some of the Jewiſh Writers diſtinguiſh theſe two only in growth or greatneſs, defining Leviathan to be a great Thannin or Dragon. But as the word Thannin doth ſo ſignifie a Dragon, that yet it is often applied to ſignifie Whales and Sea-beaſts, becauſe they in ſome ſort reſemble the form and flectuation of Dragons; thus 'tis ſaid (Gen. 1.21.) that on the fifth day God created great (Thanninim) Whales. Now (I ſay) as in Scripture the word Thannin is rendred Whale, ſo Whales and ſuch like great fiſhes are in Scripture expreſſed by the word Leviathan. And in one place (poſſibly in more) nothing elſe can be underſtood by the word Leviathan, but the Whale or fiſhes of the Cetacean or Whale kind. The Pſalmiſt being wrapt into an admiration of the works of God, or rather of God in his works, ſpeaks thus (*Pſal.*104.24,25,26.) O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wiſdom haſt thou made them all: The earth is full of thy riches. So is this great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great beaſts: There go the ſhips, there is that Leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein. Now though it be granted, that in ſome places of Scripture, other animals, and for inſtance, the Crocodile of Nilus, may be underſtood by Leviathan, yet in this place of the Pſalm the Crocodile cannot be underſtood: For the Leviathan there ſpoken of, abides in the great and wide Sea, where the ſhips generally go. Now though Nilus may be called a Sea, as Lakes and great Rivers ſometimes are in Scripture, yet it cannot be called the great and wide Sea; 'tis at moſt but a ſmall and a narrow Sea, and therefore we find the river of Egypt, that is, Nilus and the great Sea, diſtinctly and diſtinguiſhingly mentioned (*Joſh.*15 47.) So then it appears that the Whale is ſomewhere meant by Leviathan. And foraſmuch as there is an Emphaſis put upon the Leviathan ſpoken of in the Pſalm, he being there called that Leviathan; as if it had been ſaid, though there are other Leviathans, ſuch as are Dragons, Crocodiles, in other great waters, yet the chief and great Leviathan of all, is an inhabitant of the great and wide Sea: Now ſeeing the Leviathan, deſcribed in Job, hath ſuch characters given of him, as plainly ſhew that he is the chief Leviathan, it may, with fair probability, be ſuppoſed, that he is the Leviathan ſpoken of in the Pſalm; and if ſo, then the Leviathan in Job cannot be the Crocodile, for the Crocodile is not an inhabitant of the great and wide Sea. Let that be conſidered as to the negative: and what the whole Text in Job holds out for the affirmative, I ſhall leave it to conſideration, as I paſs through the ſeveral parts of it.

Facetæ & ironicæ ſunt interrogationes, quæ habentur quinque primis verſibus.

תמשך pro התמשך ה Interrogativum rectè ſuppletur ex collatione proximè ſequentium. Piſc.

Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with a hook?

The firſt thing conſiderable in Leviathan, is the greatneſs and vaſtneſs of his body, which (as was ſaid) is plainly intended in theſe words, Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with a hook? Or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down? As if the Lord had ſaid, Thou canſt draw up ſome great fiſhes with a hook and line; and if it ſhould be told thee, there is a fiſh ſo big that no man with hook and line is able to draw him out of the water, thou wouldſt ſay, that muſt needs be a huge fiſh; now ſuch a one at leaſt, is Leviathan. This the Lord would convince Job of, in putting this queſtion, Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with a hook? Thou canſt not; Leviathan is too heavy for thy draught. The interrogation is a negation; Canſt thou? Thou canſt not draw out Leviathan with all thy ſtrength; if thou hadſt the ſtrength of ten men, thou couldſt not draw him out? Little fiſhes, yea, very great fiſhes may be drawn out, but Leviathan cannot, he will break all thy tackling.

Further, Canſt than draw out Leviathan with a hook and line? No, nor with a cart-rope. As if we ſhould ſay to a man, canſt thou knock down an Ox with a fillip of thy finger? No, nor with the force of thy fiſt.

And as this queſtion, Canſt thou? &c. Implies that man cannot, ſo it ſeems to intimate, that God can as eaſily take up this huge Leviathan, as any man can draw up a ſmall, even the ſmalleſt fiſh with hook and line, or play with it in the water. As he that made Behemoth, can make his ſword approach unto him (Chap. 40. 19.) ſo he that made Leviathan, hath a hook to draw him out with. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an Hook?

Or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down?

If the fiſh bite, the hook takes him by the tongue or jaws. The Hebrew word is, Canſt thou take him with a cord which thou drowneſt? That which is let down deep or far into the water, may be ſaid to be drowned in the water. Unleſs the line or cord of the angle, ſink deep into, or be drowned in the water, the hook is uſeleſs; and therefore the Angler hath a lead faſtned upon his line to make it ſink deep, as well as a cork or quil to keep it from ſinking too deep. Canſt thou draw out his tongue with a cord, which thou drowneſt or letteſt down?

Unum hoc animal terreſtre linguæ uſu caret. Plin. l. 8. c. 25.

The mention of the tongue in this latter part of the verſe is made uſe of by ſome, as an argument to prove that Leviathan cannot be the Crocodile, who, as Naturaliſts write of him, hath no tongue: his mouth is wide, but tongueleſs. To this objection, Beza gives one, and Bochartus adds a ſecond anſwer. The former ſaith, it is not ſtrictly affirmed in the Text, that Leviathan hath a tongue; 'tis only denied, that he hath a tongue in which a hook or cord may be faſtned. The latter ſaith, that the Crocodile is not altogether tongue-leſs, but only (as we ſpeak in another ſenſe) tongue-tied: He hath a tongue, but 'tis an immoveable one, cleaving faſt to his lower jaw. And this Bochartus confirms by ſo many unqueſtionable authorities, as may eaſily remove this objection from weakning his aſſertion. Canſt thou draw out his tongue with a cord?

Verſ. 2. Canſt thou put an hook into his noſe, or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

Conſtringes nè inſerto junco, ut piſcator minutos piſces? Jun.

Some expound this verſe only as a further illuſtration of the former, in reference to the taking of this fiſh. But, rather, it is an alluſion to the cuſtom of fiſher-men, who when they have taken fiſh, put a thorn through their noſe, and hang them up to be ſeen, or for ſale. The word tranſlated an hook, ſignifies properly a pond or ſtanding water (Pſal. 114. 8.) and then a bull-ruſh, becauſe bull-ruſhes grow in ſtanding waters or by pond-banks. We take it metaphorically for a hook, becauſe a hook is like a bull-ruſh with its head hanging down (Iſa. 58. 5.) Is this a faſt that I have choſen? A day for a man to bow down his head as a bull-ruſh?

Further, to put a hook into the noſe, ſignifies theſe two things in Scripture. Firſt, To repreſs the rage or wrath of man. And Secondly, to divert or turn him aſide from his purpoſe (2 Kings 19. 28. Ezek. 19. 4.) And ſo in this place, the ſignificancy of the phraſe may be thus conceived, Canſt thou, O Job, abate the fury, or ſtop the courſe of Leviathan? Canſt thou put a hook into his noſe?

Or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

And ſo carry him away with thee. Some underſtand it as an alluſion to the ringing of a Bear or Swine. Canſt thou over-power him, and boring his noſe, put a ring into it, as into the ſnout of a Swine or Bear, and ſo lead or carry him whither thou pleaſeſt, as a beaſt which thou haſt tamed and brought to hand?

Theſe two verſes have the ſame tendency, both ſetting forth the greatneſs of Leviathan, as to the weight and bulk of his body. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan? Canſt thou put an hook into his noſe? &c.

Hence Note; The Lord is to be admired and magnified in, and for the greatneſs and vaſtneſs of any Creature.

There are two things about which the Lord is to be magnified in his creatures.

Firſt, In their qualities. There are ſome little, very little creatures, in whoſe qualities the Lord is greatly to be magnified. The Piſmire, a poor little thing, little bigger then a pins-head, hath an admirable wit and fore-caſt. The Crane, the Turtle, the Swallow, are but ſmall creatures; yet they obſerve or underſtand their times, much better then many men, and are not only to be imitated by men in that quality, but to be admired for it.

Secondly, Other creatures are to be admired for their quantity or bigneſs, and of this ſort Leviathan is chief. The reports of the Ancients concerning the bigneſs of Leviathan, are almoſt beyond belief. One reports their bodies as big as four acres of ground; that they appear like mountains or ſmall iſlands in the Sea; that ſome being meaſured, have been found ſix hundred foot in length, and three hundred and ſixty in breadth: And that, leſt they ſhould come in ſhallow waters, or be foundred by coming too near any ſhoar, they have always a little fiſh, called Muſculus, for their guide or leader, which is to them inſtead of eyes. Late Navigators, and they who make it their buſineſs to follow the Whale-fiſhing, have ſeen Whales of very vaſt dimenſions, and that ſometimes they endanger the overthrow of conſiderable Ships; which argues their extraordinary ſtrength and greatneſs.

Cetos 600. pedum longitudinis, & 360. latitudinis in flumen Arabiæ intraſſe tradit Plin. l. 32. c. 1.

Muſculus piſcis dux cetorum oculorum vice fungitur. Plin. l. 8. c. 2.

Heathens have ſaid, that though it cannot be denied, but there are many wonderful creatures to be ſeen upon the land, yet the ſea is the great ſtore-houſe of wonders: And we may give it in theſe three things.

Firſt, It is wonderful, that in the ſea there are ſuch various kinds of fiſhes. It is not imaginable how many ſorts of fiſh the ſea affords. I once heard a very learned Gentleman, and a great Traveller, ſay, that being abroad upon publick ſervice, and entertaining the Ambaſſador of another State at his table, the feaſt was wholly of fiſh, and the fiſh were only ſhell-fiſh variouſly cookt, every diſh having the ſhells laid about the verge of it, the fiſh being taken out; yet the Ambaſſador could not give a name to any of them, having never ſeen their like in any part of the world where he had been. Now if a wiſe knowing man, at ſo great a feaſt, could not give a name to any one ſhell-fiſh before him, what variety of kinds is there in the Sea, take all together!

Secondly, 'Tis wonderful to conſider, the huge multitude which is of every kind of fiſh in the Sea. The kinds are exceeding many, and there are innumerable of every kind.

Thirdly, That is wonderful, which I am now upon, the vaſtneſs, the greatneſs of ſome kinds. Not only is Leviathan, but ſeveral other fiſhes of the Sea, bigger then any beaſt upon the land. Let us conſider the greatneſs of the creatures, to lead us into the conſideration of the greatneſs of God. How great, how mighty is that God, who hath made ſuch great, ſuch mighty creatures!

Secondly, From theſe words, Canſt thou draw up Leviathan with a Hook?

Note; Great things cannot be done ordinarily with ſmall means.

A hook and a line may ſerve the turn, to draw up any ſmall and ſome great fiſhes, but they will not ſerve turn to draw up a Leviathan. There muſt be a proportion between the inſtrument and the work, elſe nothing can be done in a natural way. As we need not call for a beetle to kill a fly; we may do that with a touch of the finger: in which ſenſe David ſpake (1 Sam. 24. 14.) Againſt whom is the King of Iſrael come forth? Againſt a dead dog or a flea? As if he had ſaid, I wonder thou ſhould'ſt raiſe an army againſt me, who have ſo little ſtrength, and intend thee no hurt, had I ſtrength (as I have had opportunity) to do it. Now (I ſay) as we need not uſe great means to effect little things, ſo we muſt uſe great means to do great things, and we ſhould uſe means proportionable for the doing of every thing. You cannot batter down a ſtone wall, or a ſtrong tower with paper-ſhot, nor with a pot-gun, no, you muſt plant cannon for that ſervice.

Again, when this Scripture ſaith, Canſt thou draw out Leviathan? The emphaſis (as was ſhewed before in opening the words) lieth in the word thou. As if the Lord had ſaid, thou canſt not, but I can.

Hence, Note; The Lord is able to do the greateſt things by ſmalleſt means.

Leviathan to God is but as any little fiſh to us, which is taken with a hook and line. To take up Leviathan, to do the greateſt thing, is as eaſie to God, as the leaſt to man. As the power of God ſupplyeth all the weakneſs of the creature to do any thing, ſo it ſurpaſſeth all that ſtrength and greatneſs of the creature, which may ſeem to hinder him from doing any thing with it or upon it. He (ſaith the Apoſtle, Phil. 3.21.) ſhall change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body (how ſhall he do this?) According to the working of his mighty power, whereby he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf. The Lord can, doubtleſs, ſubdue Leviathan to himſelf by the working of that mighty power, which ſubdueth all things to himſelf. And it is much more eaſie for Chriſt to ſubdue any Leviathan, then to change our vile body into the likeneſs of his own glorious body. For, as Jeſus Chriſt was (once) declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the ſpirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection (that is, his own reſurrection) from the dead; ſo he will again declare himſelf to be the Son of God with power, according to the ſpirit of power, by our reſurrection from the dead. He that can draw our duſt out of the Grave with a word, can ſoon draw Leviathan out of the deepeſt gulf in the Sea by his hook and cord.

This may comfort thoſe, and ſtrengthen their faith, who at any time ſee Leviathans ready to ſwallow them up, as the Whale did Jonah. As the Lord prepared that great fiſh to ſwallow up Jonah (Jonah 1.17.) ſo he commanded that great fiſh to deliver him back ſafe again; or, as that Scripture ſaith, (Chap. 2.10.) He ſpake to the fiſh, and he vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Both were acts of great power, and teach us, that the Lord hath a ſoveraign commanding power over all, even the greateſt creatures.

The Lord hath a hook for Leviathan. He had hooks for Pharaoh, The great Dragon in the midſt of his Rivers (Ezek.29.3,4.) And of him the Lord commanded the ſame Prophet to ſpeak in a like notion (*Ezek.*32.2.) Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh, and ſay to him, thou art like a young Lion of the Nations, and thou art as a Whale in the Seas, and thou cameſt forth with thy Rivers, and troubledſt the waters with thy feet, and fouledſt their Rivers; therefore I will ſpread out my net over thee, and they ſhall bring thee up in my net. I have a net for thee, ſaith this Chapter; I have hooks for thee, ſaith that other. The Prophet Iſaiah, to engage the Lord to do ſome great thing for his Church, minded him of what he had formerly and anciently done for Iſrael (Iſa.51.9.) Awake, awake, put on ſtrength, O arm of the Lord, awake as in the ancient days, as in the generations of old; art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? This Rahab was Egypt, and the Dragon was Pharaoh, as Interpreters generally agree. The Pſalmiſt reports the dealings of God with Pharaoh and Egypt, in language nearer that of the Text (*Pſal.*74.13,14.) Thou breakeſt the heads of the Dragons in the waters, thou breakeſt the heads of Leviathan in pieces, and gaveſt him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderneſs; That is, the remembrance of that mercy, and of the mighty power of God in deſtroying Pharaoh and his Egyptian Hoſt, who purſued them after their departure from Egypt, to the red Sea, was to be food for their faith in all the dangers and hardſhips which they were like to meet with in their travels, through the howling wilderneſs to the Land of promiſe. Take one Scripture-inſtance more (2 Kings 19.28.) Sennacherib was a Leviathan, he came up againſt Hezekiah to deſtroy him and his people, which provoked the Lord to ſpeak thus of him, Becauſe thy rage againſt me is come into my ears, therefore I will put my hook into thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, and turn thee back by the way thou cameſt. Thus far of the firſt thing in the deſcription of Leviathan, his greatneſs.

The ſecond part of his deſcription, ſheweth the ſtoutneſs and ſtubbornneſs of his ſpirit, he will not comply, he will not yield, he will not any way ſubmit. This is laid down in the 3, 4, & 5. Verſes.

Verſ. 3. Will he make many ſupplications to thee?

The word in the Hebrew, properly ſignifies deprecation, which is prayer for the turning away of evil; when evil is near, then we deprecate it. Will he do this? Not he: He will not petition thee, he ſcorns to petition thee, or to cry for quarter.

Precamur bona, deprecamur tantum mala.

But, it may be ſaid, can fiſhes pray or make ſupplications? To do ſo, is at leaſt the work of rational creatures. I anſwer, theſe words are to be underſtood by that figure Proſopopœia, frequently uſed in Sripture, when acts of Reaſon are attributed to irrational, yea, to ſenſleſs and lifeleſs creatures. The very hills and valleys, the Seas and waters praiſe God by a figure; and here by a like figure, Leviathan will not make ſupplications unto man; which ſhews the ſtoutneſs of his ſpirit. As ſome priſoners taken in War, ſcorn to ask their lives; ſo if Leviathan were taken with a hook, he would make no ſupplications, nor beg your favour, ſo ſtout is he; his heart is too great, his ſtomach too big for any kind of ſubmiſſion, Will he make many ſupplications unto thee? No, he will make none at all. This is further expreſſed in the latter part of the Verſe.

Per Proſopopœiam tribuit ei orationem.

Will he ſpeak ſoft words to thee?] Mr. Broughton renders, or Will he ſpeak to thee tenderly? Will he flatter or humour thee, that he may get looſe or be freed from thee. When the Gibeonites (Joſh. 9.9.) were afraid they ſhould be taken and deſtroyed, they came and begged peace, they ſpake ſoft words. There are words of two ſorts.

ברבות pro רכות ſc. מלות Mollibus vel blandis verbis aut ſermonibus. Piſc.

Some are very hard words; and hard words wound like hard blows. And (though no blows are given) The Lord will come to execute judgment upon the ungodly, for all their hard ſpeeches, (Jude, *Verſ.*15.) Many ſpeak words as hard as ſtones, they throw hard words at the heads and about the ears of others, hard words of threatning, and hard words of reviling; for theſe the Lord will judg the ungodly, as well as for their ungodly deeds.

Now, as there are hard words, ſo ſoft words. What are they? Soft words are words of intreaty, words of meekneſs, words of love, words of ſubmiſſion; theſe are ſoft words. Will Leviathan make ſupplications? Or, Will he ſpeak ſoft words? Again, ſoft words are often flattering words, which are therefore compared by the Prophet (*Ezek.*13.18.) To pillows ſowed under the arm-holes. Will Leviathan flatter himſelf into thy favour? Will he lie down like a Spaniel, and fawn upon thee? No, he is too high-ſpirited to bow, too ſtiff to ſtoop, he will ſpeak no ſoft words. A ſoft anſwer (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 15. 1.) turneth away ſtrife. 'Tis good when a queſtion is put to us, to give a ſoft anſwer: And if when we have hard words ſpoken to us, we return hard anſwers, they will quickly ſtir up ſtrife. Solomon hath a ſtrange expreſſion (Prov. 15.15.) A ſoft tongue breaketh the bones. The tongue naturally, is a ſoft, fleſhy, ſpungy member of the body; yet there is nothing hath more hardneſs, I may ſay more bones in it then the tongue; but 'tis the ſoft tongue which breaketh the bones, not the bones of the body, but of the mind: and the meaning is this, If the ſpirit of a man be as ſtiff as the bones of his body againſt you, yet if you ſpeak ſoft words, you may break him, and bring him to your deſire; whereas, if you be high and ſtiff, if you give hard for hard, it turns to an exaſperation. It were no great loſs, if they could ſpeak no more then Leviathan, who like Leviathan, know not how to ſpeak ſoft words. And uſually, they who are freeſt to ſpeak ſoft words of flattery, are furtheſt from ſpeaking ſoft words of love or charity, of gentleneſs and true ingenuity. 'Tis good, and our wiſdom in two caſes, to ſpeak ſoft words in truth, even to thoſe who are none of the beſt.

Firſt, To avoid hard dealing, from thoſe who have us in their power: and they who are afraid of hard dealing, will ſure enough ſpeak ſoft words; whereas a man that cares not how hardly others deal with him, cares not to ſpeak ſoft words.

Secondly, 'Tis wiſdom to ſpeak ſoft words, when we are in expectation or under hope of receiving benefit or good from any, in the power of whoſe hand it is to do us good. They have reaſon to give good words, who would receive any good. Thus ſome ſpeak ſoft words to divert evil, others ſpeak ſoft words that they may obtain good. As for Leviathan, he is here repreſented in the pride of his heart, as neither fearing any hurt you can do him, nor deſiring you ſhould do him any good; and therefore, Will he ſpeak ſoft words to thee? No, not he.

Loqui mollia inferioris eſt.

Hence Obſerve; The ſtrong and mighty will not make ſupplications, nor uſe intreaties.

They who think they have enough in themſelves, will not make ſupplication to God himſelf, they will not intreat his favour, nor ſpeak ſoft words to him. There are many ſuch proud ſtout-hearted Leviathans in the likeneſs of men (Jer. 10.25.) Pour out thy wrath upon the families that call not upon thy name. There are whole families that will not make ſupplications to God. What are theſe? A company of Leviathans, that think they have enough of their own, and live in a ſelf-ſtrength, or in a ſelf-ſufficiency, as if they were not beholden to God for any thing they have, nor deſired to have any thing of him. The Lord ſpeaks of a generation of men, who ſhame the counſel of the poor, becauſe the Lord is his refuge (Pſal.14.6.) that is, becauſe they in all their wants, dangers and diſtreſſes, had recourſe to God by prayer, as their only refuge. Of what ſpirit thoſe men were, who ſhamed or were aſhamed of this counſel and courſe of the poor, he tells us at the 4. verſe of that Pſalm; They eat up my people as they eat bread, and call not upon God. We (thought they) have enough of our own, ſtrength enough of our own, we are Leviathans, we need not be beholden to God. It is an argument of a wicked, ſtout, high mind, not to make ſupplications (*Prov.*18.23.) The poor uſeth intreaties, or, the poor ſpeaketh ſupplications. They that are poor in outward things, will ſpeak very humbly to thoſe above them; and if we know our own ſpiritual poverty, that we are weak, empty creatures, even nothing-creatures, if we are poor in ſpirit, we will be uſing many entreaties to get in with God, and to move him to have mercy upon us. None but humble ones, and ſuch as ſee their wants and dangers, that they are hardly beſtead in this world, or are convinced that all the good and great things they have, yea, that the greateſt things they can have in this world, can ſtand them in no ſtead without God, will ſpeak ſoft words of ſupplication unto God. Leviathan never thinks himſelf in danger or in want, and therefore he ſcorns all the world; and in this he is an emblem of all carnal worldly men. And as Leviathan will make no ſupplications, nor ſpeak ſoft words, ſo, Verſ. 4. Will he make a Covenant with thee?

Some who think themſelves too high to make ſupplications to others, may yet poſſibly make a covenant with them. But, Will Leviathan make a covenant with thee? He will not. The word which we tranſlate a Covenant, ſignifies two things. Firſt, to chuſe, becauſe a Covenant is to be made by choice perſons, and upon choice terms. Secondly, it ſignifies to eat, becauſe they were wont to feaſt when covenants were made. The Hebrew is, Will he ſtrike or cut a covenant with thee. The reaſon of that, was, becauſe they were wont to divide a beaſt, and paſs between the parts of it at the making of a Covenant (*Jer.*34.18.) They did cut the calf in twain, and paſſed between the parts thereof. Will Leviathan cut a Covenant with thee? As he will not ſpeak thee fair, nor endeavour to ſoften thy heart towards him, by ſpeaking ſoft words to thee, were he in thy power, ſo he will never enter covenant with thee, to become thy ſure friend, much leſs thy faithful ſervant; as it followeth in the Text.

An ſcindet vel ſecabit? Heb. Fœdus factum erat, adhibita ſectione vituli.

Wilt thou take him for thy ſervant for ever?

Many are Covenant-ſervants for a time, ſome for ever. Theſe four things follow in order. Firſt, Some for fear make ſupplications. Secondly, They ſpeak ſoft words. Thirdly, They make a covenant or promiſe. Fourthly, They offer their ſervice to thoſe in whoſe hand they are. But Leviathan will do none of theſe, from firſt to laſt. Wilt thou take him for thy ſervant for ever? If thou wilt, he will not. Suppoſe thou hadſt taken Leviathan with a hook, and hadſt him faſt in thy power with a cord, will he be thy ſervant as long as he lives? King Benhadad being taken in War, ſent to King Ahab, and ſubmitted to him as a ſervant, that he might have his life (1 Kings 20. 32.) Thy ſervant Benhadad ſaith, I pray thee let me live. But this Leviathan is ſo ſtout, that he will not ask his life of any man, nor will he ſerve any for an hour, much leſs for ever.

Qui jure belli occidi potuit, non duram ſubit conditionem, ſi paratam mortem cum longa ſervitute commutat. Sanct.

Will he make a covenant with thee? Wilt thou take him for thy ſervant for ever?

That is, will he become thy ſervant by covenant, or thy covenant-ſervant? Covenants bind ſervants to duty. There are two things in a ſervants covenant. Firſt, it obligeth him to work. Secondly, it aſſureth him of a reward. Gods covenant with us aſſures us of mercy, I will be to you a God, I will pardon your ſins, I will do you good; and then it requires duty, You ſhall be to me a people, you ſhall walk humbly and uprightly before me, you ſhall ſerve me for ever. Wilt thou take Leviathan to ſerve thee For ever?] But are any ſervants, or ſhall any (except God himſelf) be ſerved, for ever? Why then ſaith the Lord. Wilt thou take him for thy ſervant for ever? Some are taken ſervants only for a year, ſome for ſeven years, others for life. They who are ſervants for life, are and may be called our ſervants for ever: ſo that when the Lord ſaith, Wilt thou take him for thy ſervant for ever? The meaning is, will he be thy ſervant as long as he liveth? And indeed the life of a beaſt may well be called his for ever; foraſmuch as he hath no life after this life, nor being after death. The word rendred for ever, comes from a root in the Hebrew, which ſignifieth to hide, or to be hidden, becauſe Eternity, which is for ever in ſtrict ſenſe, is alogether hidden and without end: and if for ever be taken only for a long time, indefinitely, that's a hidden thing too; who knows when a long time will end, if no end be aſſigned to it? The life of man is his for ever in this world; for how ſhort ſoever it is, no man knows the end of it, and ſo to him it is a hidden thing. In this ſenſe alſo the life of a beaſt is a hidden thing as to the natural end of it, and ſo his for ever. Wilt thou take him to be thy ſervant for ever? Or, Will he be thy everlaſting ſervant?

Hence Note; All the creatures were made for mans ſervice, and were once his ſervants.

And therefore when creatures will not ſerve us, eſpecially when they riſe againſt us, we ſhould remember, as our fall in Adam, ſo our own failings in the ſervice of God. The unſerviceableneſs of the creature to us, is a fruit and an effect of our unſerviceableneſs and diſobedience to God. That word of God (Gen. 1. 28.) which I may call the charter of mans Lordſhip over the creature, reached Leviathan himſelf; And God bleſſed them, and God ſaid, be fruitful, and multiply and repleniſh the earth, and ſubdue it, and have dominion over the fiſh of the Sea, &c. That includes dominion over the Leviathan. The Apoſtle James alſo (*Chap.*3.7.) ſpeaks of mans dominion over the fiſh of the Sea, Every kind of beaſts, and of birds, and of ſerpents, and of things in the Sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind. Man was originally inveſted with a power, to tame, not only things on earth, but things in the Sea, even the mighty Leviathan. And when the Lord after the flood reſtored the world, and renewed mans charter, he put in this among the reſt of his grants, the ſubjection of the fiſh of the Sea (*Gen.*9.1,2.) And God bleſſed Noah and his ſons, and ſaid, be fruitful and multiply, and repleniſh the earth, and the fear of you, and the dread of you ſhall be upon every beaſt of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, and upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fiſhes of the Sea; into your hand they are delivered: The very fiſh of the Sea ſhall fear and reverence you. But as we quite forfeited the priviledg of the firſt charter by the firſt general fall, ſo our after perſonal falls have doubtleſs much abated the priviledges of this renewed charter. When we break commandments we weaken our intereſt in, and loſe the benefit of promiſes and priviledges. Man by falling from the commands of God, loſt his command of the creatures; or, man by ſin, loſt, Firſt, the command of himſelf, and then his command over the creatures. Sin hinders our preſent enjoyments, and will, unleſs repented of by us, and pardoned by God, cut us off from our future hopes. We ſhould behold and bewail it, as a part of that great curſe fallen upon us by the ſin of Adam, and our own perſonal ſins, that many creatures refuſe to ſerve us. Will Leviathan (ſaith God to Job) make a covenant with thee? Will he be thy ſervant for ever? That's the fourth particular mentioned in the third and fourth verſes, wherein the unſubmiſſiveneſs and ſtiffneſs of this Leviathan is ſet forth; he will not make ſupplications, he will not ſpeak ſoft words, neither will he be thy covenant-ſervant for ever. And as he is not for mans work, ſo not for his ſport.

1. Imperium ſui.
2. Imperium ſuum.

Verſ. 5. Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? Wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

Or, as Mr. Broughton renders this latter clauſe, Wilt thou tie him for thy young girls? This verſe holds out a further evidence of the ſtoutneſs of Leviathan. Some creatures, though they will not work, yet they will play and make you ſport; but Leviathan is ſo ſtout, that he will neither do you any work, nor make you any ſport.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird?

The word ſignifies any ſmall bird, eſpecially a Sparrow, with which Children uſe to play. Leviathan will not play with man; nor is he to be made a play, or to be ſported with. When the Philiſtines had put out Sampſons eyes (who was once as terrible to them as a Leviathan) they called for him to make them ſport; and the Text ſaith (Judg. 16.25.) He made them ſport, though they quickly found he was not a man to be ſported with. We ſay proverbially, 'Tis ill jeſting with edge-tools; I may ſay, 'Tis ill ſporting with Leviathan. The vulgar Latin Tranſlation ſaith, Wilt thou cozen or enſnare him as a bird? Canſt thou entangle him as a little bird with lime-twigs? Or entice him into thy net, and then make ſport with him? Leviathan is a great player, and very game-ſome; but he will not play at any game with us, nor can we play at any game with him, but Hazzard. That he is very gameſome when and where he pleaſeth, the Pſalmiſt tells us, ſpeaking of the great and wide Sea (Pſal. 104.26.) There go the Ships, there is that Leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein. He is made for play, not for work; but where doth he play? Leviathan will play in the Sea, but he will not play at Land. Wilt thou play with him as with a bird?

Numquid illudes ei ſicut avi. Vulg.

Wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

Or for thy maid-ſervants? Or for thy little maiden daughters? Young maidens or girls delight in birds, and if they get one tyed by a ſtring, they play with it. Thus we ſee Leviathan will have no dealing with us, neither in earneſt nor in jeſt, neither at work nor play, he will neither ſerve us, nor ſport with us. Wilt thou play with him? &c. Some creatures are made for play, for ſport, others for work and ſervice; yet here is one (and there are more of that temper) ſo fierce, ſo ſtout, that he will be brought to neither; he will not ſerve you, as 'tis ſaid in the former verſe; he will not play with you, nor dare you play with him. In this latter verſe, Leviathan is ſomewhat like that untoward and froward generation, of whom Chriſt ſpake (Matth. 11.16.) To whom ſhall I liken this generation? They are like to Children ſitting in the market-place, and calling unto their fellows, and ſaying, we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. So we may ſay of this Leviathan, if you mourn to him, he will not lament; if you pipe to him, he will not dance. A proud untractable ſpirit will not comply nor bow either way; he will neither weep nor rejoyce with you, faſt nor feaſt with you, work nor play with you.

Thus we have had the deſcription of Leviathan; Firſt, by the greatneſs of his body (Verſ. 1,2.) Secondly, by the ſtoutneſs of his ſpirit (Ver. 3,4,5.) The five verſes following, ſhew the great difficulty or extream danger of taking, or of catching him, which is the third part of his deſcription.

Verſ. 6. Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the Merchants? &c.

Fiſhermen uſe to go out in companies; and having ſped well in fiſhing, they firſt eat part themſelves, and make merry as at a banquet; the remainder they ſend to market, or ſell to Merchants for profit: They ſhall do neither with Leviathan, for they cannot take him. 'Tis a vain thing to talk of dividing the Bears skin, before we have taken the Bear.

Shall the companions make a banquet of him?

That is, either, Firſt, Shall they eat him, ſhall he be the matter of the banquet, the chief diſh at the feaſt? Or, Secondly, Shall they rejoyce and make merry, becauſe they have catcht Leviathan, and gotten ſuch a prize. Underſtanding the words in this latter ſenſe, Leviathan being caught, is the occaſion, not the matter of the banquet. As if it had been ſaid, Fiſher-men, or their ſocieties, ſhall never have cauſe to rejoyce and triumph at the captivity of Leviathan, nor ſay, they have gotten him into their hands or cuſtody, to lade their veſſels, and fill their ware-houſes, to vend him out again, and fill their purſes, as it followeth in this Verſe.

Shall they part him among the Merchants?

The word rendred Merchants, is according to the Hebrew Canaanites. Merchants were ſo called, becauſe there was much Merchandiſe uſed by and among the Canaanites, their country lying near the Sea. Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? &c.

Cananæorum nomen in Scriptura paſſim pro Mercatoribus uſurpatur; quod ea gens negotiationi & mercimoniis addicta fuerit, ob maris viciniam. Merc.

Hence Note; Firſt, That which is got by hard and perilous labour, makes the labourers merry when they have got it.

The Text ſeems to ſay; If they could but get Leviathan into their hands, what feaſting would there be, or there would be great feaſting! He that by diligent ſearch finds that bleſſed treaſure in the field, of which Chriſt ſpake in the Parable (Mat. 13.44.) he (I ſay) for joy of it, ſells all that he hath and buyeth that field. And as they, who have found Chriſt, that treaſure, have cauſe to rejoyce with great joy: So when any good is found, or gained by hard labour, 'tis matter of joy.

But is banqueting and feaſting all that Fiſher-men aim at, when they labour and venture ſo hard to catch Leviathan? Surely no, they aim at profit more then at pleaſure, it is to ſell off what they get to the Merchants.

Hence Note; Profit puts men upon hard and perilous labours.

What almoſt will not men do? whither will they not venture for profit? Gain ſweetens labour; and the hope of a market, the hardneſs of the undertaking.

Shall they part him among the Merchants?

Hence we may Note; Merchandiſe is of very antient uſe.

Merchants have been of old buying and ſelling, conveighing by Land, tranſporting by Sea, the commodities of one country to another; as it turns to the riches, ſo to the honour, and manifold advantages of mankind. Only let Merchants be wiſe to trade heaven-ward, as well as earthward; and be careful they make not ſhipwrack of a good conſcience, while their ſhips and goods eſcape it. Let them often remember the Apoſtles admonition (1 Cor. 7.29,30.) The time is ſhort; let them that buy, be as if they poſſeſſed not; and they that uſe this world, as not abuſing it; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. Be not unwiſe Merchants, ſuch as mind not the true treaſure, the right pearl of price.

The Lord having in this ſixth verſe intimated, how hard a task, and how hazardous it is to take Leviathan, ſpeaks it expreſly in the next.

Verſ. 7. Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed Irons, or his head with fiſh-ſpears?

Barbed Irons and fiſh-ſpears are inſtruments in uſe at this day for the taking of Whales, and ſuch like Sea-monſters. Now, ſaith the Lord, though thou canſt not draw up Leviathan with hook and line, yet poſſibly thou thinkeſt, he may be conquered with barbed Irons and ſpears. The word here rendred barbed Irons ſignifies thorns, becauſe ſuch Irons are ſharp like thorns. The skin of a well-grown Whale is extream tough, and not eaſily penetrated; ſo that the Lord might well ſay, Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed Irons? Or his head with fiſh ſpears? Yet, I conceive, theſe queſtions do not import an utter impoſſibility, but the extream difficulty of taking the Leviathan, what animal ſoever it is. The learned Bochartus takes theſe words, as much favouring his opinion for the Crocodile; For (ſaith he) they who write about the manner of catching the Whale, teſtifie that he is overcome with ſhowers of barbed Irons, caſt or poured upon him by the Sea-men that compaſs him about; but as for the Crocodile, his skin is altogether impenetrable. But I ſhall defer any further diſcourſe about this point, which is the chief proof againſt the Whale, till I come to the 15. verſe, and thoſe which follow, in a deſcription of the ſcales of Leviathan. And from the preſent words, Canſt thou fill his skin with barbed Irons? &c. I ſhall only,

Note; That which is very hardly done, may be ſpoken of as if it could not be done at all.

As becauſe it is a hard thing for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Chriſt ſaith, 'tis eaſier for a Camel to paſs through a needles eye: At which word, his Diſciples being amazed, cryed out, Who then can be ſaved? Thus the Prophet ſpake, to ſhew the extream difficulty of reclaiming an accuſtomed ſinner (Jer. 13.23.) Can the Ethiopian change his skin? Then may he that is accuſtomed to do evil, learn to do good. It is not altogether impoſſible for one that is accuſtomed to do evil to learn to do good (through the grace of God he may repent) but, becauſe it is a very difficult thing, therefore the Scripture ſpeaks of it as if it were an impoſſible thing, even as impoſſible as for an Ethiopian to change his hue, or the blackneſs of his skin, which no labour, nothing but a miracle can do.

The difficulty of dealing with this Leviathan, is yet more plainly expreſſed in the next words.

Verſ. 8. Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle: do no more.

Demulceeum & experire utrum ea potiri poteris. Jun.

Thoſe words, lay thy hand upon him, may be taken three ways.

Firſt, Lay thy hand upon him gently, or to ſtroke him. As if it had been ſaid; When thou canſt not take him by force with barbed Irons and fiſh-ſpears, then lay thy hand upon him tenderly and friendly, try thy utmoſt skill (as before thy utmoſt ſtrength) whether thou canſt take him by fair means, by ſoothing or tickling him (as ſome fiſhes are taken) about the gills.

Secondly, (To which interpretation I rather adhere, than to the former) This conceſſion, lay thine hand on him, carrieth a ſenſe of hoſtility; as if it had been ſaid, as we often ſay in ſuch caſes, Touch him if thou dareſt; thou hadſt as good have let him alone, thou hadſt as good eat thy nails as meddle with him; uſe the leaſt violence to him at thy peril be it, he will quickly make thee repent thy raſhneſs, and thou wilt have little mind to fight it out with him.

Thirdly, Lay thine hand upon him, may be taken in this general ſenſe; improve the utmoſt of thy skill and ſtrength, of thy force and fraud, do thy beſt every way, yet thou ſhalt not be able to take him.

Remember the battle, or (as Mr. Broughton renders) look for War.

Si tam audax fueris ut ferire ipſum ſuſtinueris, cogita illum pugnaturum, & ſi potes fuge, neque iteres ictum. Coc.

Conſider what will come of it, if thou layeſt thy hand upon him; for doubtleſs, he will be upon thy back preſently. Therefore,

Do no more.] Some render it as a threat, If thou ſhalt do more, he will quickly diſpatch thee, or thou wilt have little mind to meddle any more with him. We read it, as an admonition, do no more; That is, forbear. Some put both theſe latter branches of the verſe together, thus, Thou ſhalt no more remember the battle; That is, there will be an end of thee, thou wilt have done fighting with him or any other, if thou beginneſt to fight with Leviathan. The clear ſenſe of the whole, to me, is this: If thou put thine hand upon him, if thou meddleſt to take him either by force or craft, if thou doſt ingage any way with him, thou wilt be forc'd to remember the battle, thou wilt find thou haſt cauſe to remember it as long as thou liveſt; if thou layeſt, or ſhalt lay thy hand upon him, thou wilt think of the battle, that thou haſt made a raſh adventure, nor wilt thou venture ſo again, thy own harms will make thee wiſer, and thy ſad experience (the Miſtreſs of fools) will teach thee to take heed.

Non erit tibi poſthac de prælio cogitandum. Actum enim erit de te ſimul ac manum immiſeris. Merc. Ictus piſcator ſapit. Adag.

Now according to this reading, and the ſenſe given of it, the Imperative is put for the Future, which (as the Learned tell us) is uſual in Scripture, and the conditional term If is underſtood and placed at the beginning of the ſentence, which is familiar in the Hebrew tongue: And ſo inſtead of, lay thy hand on him, &c. (as we render) the words run thus, If thou ſhalt lay thy hand on him, thou wilt remember the battle, and do no more. This is a clear ſenſe, and ſo likewiſe is that other, which bids him do it at his peril; lay thine hand upon him if thou wilt, adventure to take him if thou dareſt; but remember the battle, conſider what will come of it, and do no more I adviſe thee. Thus it ſeems to be ſuch a conceſſion as Solomon gives the young man (Eccleſ. 11.9.) Rejoyce, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart chear thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy own heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes; but (what follows?) Know, for all theſe things God will bring thee to judgment. So here the Lord ſeems to ſay, Go, lay thy hand on him, go, take Leviathan if thou canſt; but remember the battle, remember Leviathan is a terrible creature, and therefore I adviſe thee to do no more, or to have no more to do with him, venture no further, he is a perillous beaſt.

Thus the Lord might ſay to Job; Thou haſt been very buſie to call for an account from me, and to be dealing with me; but art thou able to deal with Leviathan? Conſider then how thou canſt deal with me; therefore ſit down quietly, take heed of the leaſt thought that my ways towards thee want the leaſt grain of juſtice, or that they are wanting of mercy and loving kindneſs; contend no longer, ſtrive no more with me, who have more ſtrength then ten thouſand Leviathans; and with whom to contend, 'tis ten thouſand times more dangerous, then with Leviathan. Remember the battle, do no more.

Hence Note; Firſt, It is good to remember the iſſues of actions before we act.

Lay thy hand upon him; but conſider what will come of it, what it may coſt thee: As in that great buſineſs of our receiving Chriſt in the Goſpel, put your hand to the Plow, put your hand to the profeſſion of the Goſpel; but pray remember the battle: you may come to a great battle, you may have to deal with proud Leviathans, before you have made good your good profeſſion. This was Chriſts counſel (Luke 14. 28, 33.) to all his Diſciples, Which of you intending to build a Tower, ſitteth not down firſt, and counteth the coſt? &c. Or what King going to make War with another King, ſitteth not down firſt, and conſulteth? &c. Whether he can maintain the War, he remembers the battle; ſo, &c. The believing Jews (Heb. 10.34.) endured a great fight of affliction after they were illuminated, and had received the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There are two things which we ſhould be very much in remembering. Firſt, Our duty (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) Remember now thy Creature in the days of thy youth. Secondly, Our danger; or, take both together, what danger duty may engage us in; elſe when danger comes we ſhall ſoon forſake our duty. Many take up a profeſſion of Chriſt, who never thought of the danger, of the tryals, afflictions and temptations, which might befal them for his ſake; they remembred not the battle, and ſo have either preſently been overcome and fallen in it, or have unworthily forſaken their colours, and run from it.

Secondly, Note; It is beſt not to do, or forbear to do that which we cannot but ſee (if we have our eyes in our heads) will be dangerous to us in the doing.

We are not always to forbear the doing of thoſe things that will be dangerous to our outward man (for ſo the beſt things may be) but thoſe things that will be dangerous to our bodies and ſouls too, we muſt always forbear to do; in all ſuch caſes it is our duty to remember the battle, and do no more. Will any wiſe man engage in danger which can produce no profit? There are ſome things which we are to do, and do again, though our danger be never ſo great, yea, though we loſe our lives in doing them: But there are many things we may not do if we fore-ſee danger. The Apoſtle Paul (Acts 27.9,10.) being at ſea, ſaid I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only to the lading of the ſhip, but to our lives alſo; therefore he tells them (*Verſ.*21.) Sirs, ye ſhould have harkened to me, and not have looſed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loſs; that had been their wiſdom, when they were warned of the danger, not to have gone on. When there is danger to our bodies only, and we ſee no benefit that may countervail the danger, 'tis folly to proceed. I may urge this point ſpecially in caſe of ſin: Take heed of doing any thing that is evil; remember the battle that ſin will bring you to. Sin will bring you to a terrible battle, to ſuch a battle as no man can ſtand in or eſcape. Sin brings to a battle infinitely more dangerous then that with Leviathan. Sin provokes God to battle; and when God is angry, we may more ſafely contend with ten thouſand Leviathans, then with him. When you are tempted to put your hand to ſin, O remember the battle, remember the battle. Thou (poſſibly) wilt have a ſore battle in thy own conſcience, and that's a dreadful Leviathan; but that's not all, remember the battle with God, who is greater then conſcience; you muſt come to judgment, remember the battle of that day, or that day of Battle, with impenitent and hardned ſinners, and ſin no more; give it over, as you love your lives, as you love your precious ſouls, and the everlaſting peace or welfare of them. You cannot ſin without a great deal of danger, even the danger of eternal wrath and death.

Thus I have touched at ſome things from this third part of the deſcription of Leviathan. He hath hitherto been ſet before us: Firſt, In the huge bulk and bigneſs of his body. Secondly, In the ſtoutneſs of his ſpirit; he will neither make ſupplications, nor enter covenant; he will neither ſerve you, nor ſport with you; both which, Behemoth, the Elephant, will do. Thirdly, In the difficulty and danger of taking him; So much danger is in it, that if you lay your hand on him, it were beſt to remember the battle, and do no more. Yet the Lord ſpeaks more concerning the danger of medling with Leviathan, in the ninth verſe throughout, and in the former part of the tenth.

Verſ. 9. Behold, the hope of him is in vain.

As if the Lord had ſaid, if none of theſe means can take Leviathan, then the hope of him that goes about to take him is loſt and fruſtrate; if by theſe means he cannot be taken, then there is no means to take him, for he cannot be taken by any means. The hope

Dicendum fuerat ſpes tua, ſed in genere dicere voluerit, &c. Merc.

Of him.] That is, of him that goes about to catch Leviathan. In order of ſpeech it ſhould have been ſaid, thy hope will be in vain, for God was ſpeaking before to Job; yet he doth not ſay thy hope, but the hope of him, that is, the hope of any man will be in vain: as if he had ſaid, not only ſhalt thou labour in vain, to graple with this Sea-monſter Leviathan, but all men elſe, whoſoever they are, that attempt or go about to take him. The hope of him is

כזב Mentitur reipſa vel verbis.

In vain.] The Hebrew is, the hope of him lyeth. It is uſual both in the Hebrew and Latin tongue, when our hopes and endeavours fail, or are fruſtrate, to ſay, they lie, or deceive us; and the reaſon is, becauſe ſuch a man promiſed himſelf great things, and had confident expectations, without ſucceſs. Thus 'tis ſaid. (Hab. 3. 17.) Although the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, we put in the Margin, lie. The Husband-man having beſtowed much labour upon the Olive, and looking for much fruit, may be deceived, and ſo all that labour beſtowed in dreſſing and looking to the Olive-tree failing and being loſt, the labour of the Olive (or the pains taken about the Olive-tree) is ſaid to lie. The hope of him ſhall be in vain, or lie.

Our hope is ſaid to be in vain three ways.

Firſt, When we hope for much, and get but little, according to that of the Prophet, convincing the Jews of their neglect in building the Temple (Hag. 1. 9.) Ye looked for much, and behold it came to little; ye hoped for a plentiful harveſt, ye thought to have had a great crop, but it went very cloſe together; ye looked for cart-loads, but had ſcarcely handfuls: So ſome expound, or give the meaning of that Propheſie (Iſa. 49.4. & 6. compared) It is a Propheſie of Chriſt; at the 4. verſe Chriſt ſaith, I have laboured in vain, I have ſpent my ſtrength for nought, and in vain. Why did Chriſt ſay he had laboured in vain? He tells us the reaſon at the 6. verſe; And he ſaid, that is, the Lord ſaid to him, It is a light thing that thou ſhouldeſt be my ſervant to raiſe up the Tribes of Jacob, and to reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael; I will alſo give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayſt be my ſalvation unto the end of the Earth. Chriſt looked upon his labour as labour in vain, if he had died to redeem the Jews only, and therefore, ſaith God, I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayſt be my ſalvation to the end of the Earth; and then, I hope, thou wilt not think thy labour in vain. Now when the Lord had granted Jeſus Chriſt, that he ſhould not only be ſalvation to the Jews, but alſo to the ends of the Earth, or to the Gentiles; he no longer ſaid, I have laboured in vain, but thought himſelf well rewarded for all his coſt and pains, for all that he did or ſuffered, to bring about and effect the ſalvation of man. Hope is in vain when we have, and get but little, expecting much.

Secondly, Hope is much more in vain, when we hope for much, and get nothing at all. As Peter ſaid to Chriſt (Luke 5. 5.) We have toyled all night, and have taken nothing. That's like fiſhing for Leviathan; ſuch hope is utterly in vain. Such a vain hope the Church ſpake of (Jer. 8. 15.) We looked for peace (looking is an act of hope) and no good came, no good at all; that hope is vain, when we look for peace, and no good, no benefit comes. And thus the Lord ſpake of his ſmiting in vain, (Jer. 2. 30.) In vain have I ſmitten your Children. Why in vain? They have received no correction, that is, they were never a whit the better for it, they were not amended by it. When God ſpends his rods upon us, and we neither ceaſe to do evil, nor learn to do good, then he correcteth us in vain. And when he ſends his word, and we receive no good by it, no inſtruction by it, then his word is in vain. To waſh an Æthiopian, is the emblem of labour in vain, becauſe, how much ſoever you waſh him, he is not at all the whiter, nor is any change wrought in his complexion.

Thirdly, Hope is yet more in vain, when we look for good, and get hurt inſtead of good. The Prophet complained (*Jer.*8.15.) not only thus, We look for peace, and no good came; but (as it follows) for a time of health, and behold, trouble. But what was the time of health which they looked for, or what was the health which they looked for at that time? There is a two-fold health, a health of the body natural, and a health of the body politick, which conſiſts in proſperity and peace; for this health they looked, but behold trouble. So (*Jer.*14.19.) We looked for peace; and there was no good; and for a time of healing, and behold trouble. Thus the Lords Vineyard, that is, the Church of the Jews diſappointed the Lords expectation (Iſa. 5. 5.) when, while he looked for grapes, it brought forth wild grapes, that is, as 'tis explained (*Verſ.*7.) Oppreſſion inſtead of judgment, and inſtead of Righteouſneſs a cry. This was the quite contrary; and this is the worſt way of having our hope in vain. It is ſaid (Job 27. 8.) What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his Soul? Suppoſe a hypocrite hath gained much in this world, yea, ſuppoſe he hath got or gained all the world, yet what is his hope when God taketh away his ſoul? Then he will not only find no God, but much trouble, pain, and anguiſh, and wrath, and hell for evermore upon him. When Chriſt ſaith (*Mat.*16.26.) What is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own Soul? His meaning is not only this, that he ſhall have no profit at all, but he ſhall be utterly undone and broke for ever. How vain then is the hope of that man, yea, how vain a man is that, who hopes for profit or gain, in doing that which endangers the loſs of his ſoul, much more that by which his ſoul is abſolutely and for ever loſt.

Thus hope is in vain; Firſt, when we hope for much, and get little; Secondly, when we hope for much, and get nothing; Thirdly, when we hope for good, and get hurt. Now, in theſe two latter ſenſes we are to take the meaning of God here. A man may hope by uſe of means to catch Leviathan, yet he gets nothing, yea, probably loſeth much, or gets much hurt. Behold, the hope of him is in vain.

Hence Note; Firſt, It is hope of gain that uſually puts men upon action.

The Lord ſuppoſeth that they who undertake the taking of Leviathan, hope to gain much by taking him. 'Tis hope of attaining, that encourageth to doing. No man would be ſtirring, much leſs beſtir himſelf about any buſineſs, were it not for hope of getting. And as it is hope of attaining that puts upon doing, ſo it is hope of attaining that puts us upon ſuffering. Who would ſuffer for Jeſus Chriſt, if he had not a hope of attaining ſomewhat better than he can loſe by his ſufferings? Therefore Jeſus Chriſt hath ſet that hope before us. To ſuffer rightly for Jeſus Chriſt, is ſo honourable, that we ſhould ſuffer willingly, though we get nothing by it: yet he hath ſet a reward before us, a crown, by his Croſs; he hath aſſured us all our loſſes, even our loſs of life for his ſake, ſhall turn to our gain and profit. Hope of attaining is the motive to every undertaking. No wiſe man will meddle with doing that, which is either impoſſible to be done, or altogether unprofitable when it is done. Were it not for hope, the heart would faint. Firſt, in labouring. Secondly, in ſuffering. Thirdly, in waiting. Hope is like a Helmet upon the head, when we are in danger of blows (2 *Theſ.*5.8.) and like an Anchor, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, when we are in ſtorms (*Heb.*6 19.)

Secondly, The Lord having ſaid before, Remember the Battel, and do no more, adds, The hope of him is in vain.

Hence Note; It is a vain thing to go about that, which we ſee no ground of hope to have ſucceſs in, to do good upon, or to get any good by.

As the Apoſtle exhorts us, To be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, foraſmuch as we know (true believers do know, and all men ſhould know) that our labour is not in vain in the Lord; ſo we have ground enough to dehort all men from thoſe works, which we know, or may know, will be in vain. And if ſo,

Then, Firſt, How vain a thing is it for any man to ſin? Is there any thing to be gotten by ſin? I may well ſay to ſinners, as the Lord ſaith to Job, in the latter end of the 8. Verſe, Do no more, ſin no more; your hope is in vain that think to gain by ſin, that hope to make your ſelves rich, great or happy, by ſin; Do no more, your hope is in vain. The Apoſtle puts the Queſtion (*Rom.*6.21.) What fruit had you then in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? Have you got any benefit by them? Have you got any thing worth the getting? All that is gained by ſin, will turn to loſs at laſt. Samuel charged the Iſraelites upon this account (1 *Sam.*12.21.) Turn ye not aſide (That is, do not ſin, do not turn the Law of the Lord, do not depart from God, why?) For then ſhould you go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. If you turn aſide from the ways of God, to by-ways; from the truths of God, to error; from the true worſhip of God, to idolatry; and from communion with God, to creature-comforts and contentments; you go after vain things which cannot profit. To be vain, and to be unprofitable, are the ſame thing. Take heed of ſin, for you cannot make any profit of it, you cannot raiſe any true revenue out of it, you will one time or other be aſhamed (as the Prophet ſpeaks) of all thoſe revenues; your hope that way is vain.

Secondly, Then how vain a thing is it to oppoſe the Church of God! Why? Becauſe there is no ground of hope for ſucceſs in that attempt. The world hath been upon it all along, but they could never effect nor accompliſh what they have imagined; they have done all, but proſper in it; they never had their end, which is the end or total deſtruction of the Church. Pharaoh would oppoſe and vex Iſrael, the Church of God, and keep them low; but he could not attain his end, for the more he oppreſſed them, the more they multiplied; therefore all ſuch are ſaid to imagin a vain thing (*Pſal.*2.1,2.) Why do the Heathen rage, and the people imagin a vain thing? The Kings of the earth ſet themſelves, and the Rulers take counſel together, againſt the Lord and againſt his anointed, but all in vain. Nothing leſs came of it, then what they imagined, or their imaginations came to nothing, yea, brought them to nothing. I (ſaith the Lord, *Zach.*12.3.) will make Jeruſalem a burdenſome ſtone for all people; all that burden themſelves with it, ſhall be cut in pieces. If any meddle with Jeruſalem, they will find they lift at a very heavy ſtone, and that they meddle not with their match; they ſhall ſurely be not only overmatcht, but overthrown at length, who do ſo. The Church is founded upon a rock, and the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it (Matth.16.18.) That is, neither the counſels nor confederacies, neither the power nor the policy of men or devils, ſhall be able to prevail againſt it. The Hiſtory of the Church, ſaith of Diocleſian a cruel perſecuter, that for very vexation he gave up the Government of the Empire, becauſe he ſaw he could not ſuppreſs Chriſtianity by all his machinations againſt the Chriſtians. And doubtleſs they in the Goſpel (John 12.19.) were not a little troubled, when they ſaid among themſelves, Perceive ye how we prevail nothing? Behold, the world is gone after him.

Thirdly, Note; The loſs of hope, or hope loſt, is the greateſt loſs.

When God would ſhew mans worſt condition, he ſaith, His hope is in vain; he doth not ſay, his labour is in vain, but, his hope is in vain; that pincheth moſt of all, and that's it which will pinch Hypocrites moſt at laſt, who were in hope of injoying God; but not only their labour, but their hope ſhall be in vain: when they come big with expectation, and ſay, Lord, Lord, we have done thus and thus; when, as the fooliſh Virgins, they ſhall knock boldly, and cry earneſtly, Lord, Lord, open to us, the anſwer given them will be only this, I know you not; That is, I know you not for mine, as you preſumed your ſelves to be, even while you walked (not as mine, in wiſdom, but) in your own folly. This loſs of hope will grieve more then the loſs of Heaven. As Chriſt told the Phariſees, You ſhall weep, and gnaſh your teeth, when you ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and you your ſelves thruſt out. You thought that you ſhould be ſaved above all men; but ſaith Chriſt, you ſhall be thruſt out, and loſe your hopes. This the Lord ſpeaks, to ſhew the worſt of their condition, who attempt to take Leviathan, Their hope ſhall be in vain.

In the latter part of the verſe, the Lord gives us a farther account, why their hope is in vain.

Shall not a man be caſt down at the ſight of him?

Is there any hope of taking him, at whoſe very ſight a man ſhall certainly be caſt down? There is a twofold caſting down.

Firſt, a caſting down by outward violence, when a man is thruſt down (as we ſpeak) by head and ſhoulders. Thus David caſt down Goliah, by a ſling and a ſtone.

Secondly, There is a caſting down by inward trouble; as we uſually ſay, ſuch a man is mightily caſt down. Trouble of ſpirit, heart-vexation, and fear, caſt down many before any hand toucheth them. Chriſt ſpeaking of Capernaum, ſaith (Luke 10.15.) And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to Heaven, ſhalt be thruſt down to Hell. As if he had ſaid, thou haſt been high in thy expectations, and highly priviledged in thy enjoyments, having had the Goſpel preached to thee; but thou ſhalt not only fall down, but thou ſhalt be thruſt down into Hell, with a kind of violence. When the Lord in the Text ſaith, Shall not one be caſt down? We are to underſtand it of a caſting down by the ſtrong impreſſion of aſtoniſhment and fear, of dread and trouble, ſeizing upon the mans ſpirit who comes near Leviathan, and therefore it followeth, Shall not one be caſt down

At the ſight of him?] A man ſhall no ſooner ſee him, but he ſhall ſink; and if ſo, then how little hope hath any one to grapple with him, and to take him? There is ſmall hope of overcoming this Leviathan, when a man at his ſight, or as far off as he can ſee him, is ſo afraid of him as to be caſt down with fear. The very ſight of a Whale is a terror to Mariners and Sea-men, they are afraid their Ship may be overturn'd and ſpoiled by him.

Some read the words thus; Will he be caſt down even at the ſight of him? And they give this meaning of it. Will the Leviathan be caſt down at the ſight of a man, when he cometh prepared to take him? Thou thinkeſt Leviathan a poor ſpirited fiſh; or that he will be afraid of thy looks, or to ſee thee, as other fiſhes are, who when they ſee or apprehend a man near, ſcuttle away, as we ſay; but thou wilt find Leviathan is a fiſh that will not be afraid at the ſight of thee. This is a good ſenſe, but I conceive that before given more ſutable; that the ſight of Leviathan, or a Leviathan, as ſoon as ſeen, is ſo terrible, that a man will be ſtricken with fear as ſoon as he ſeeth him. Shall not one be caſt down at the ſight of him?

> Hence Note; Firſt, The ſight of the eye worketh much upon the heart.

The Lord ſaith not, Shall not one be caſt down by the force of him, but, at the very ſight of him. The eye hath a mighty operation upon the inward man, yea, upon the whole man; the eye hath a mighty force upon the heart as to three things.

Firſt, It hath a mighty force upon the heart as to joy. If we ſee a perſon that we have a great deal of love for, how do we rejoyce preſently at the ſight of him! 'Tis true alſo of things. It is ſaid of Jacob (Gen. 45. 27.) When he ſaw the wagons which Joſeph had ſent to carry him, his ſpirit revived; it put a new life into him, to ſee that which gave him much aſſurance, that he ſhould ſee a perſon that was the deſire of his eyes, his beloved ſon Joſeph; it revived the old man, and made him even young again. And as a pleaſing ſight made old Jacob, as it were, begin to live again; ſo old Simeon rejoyced ſo much at the ſight of Chriſt, that he had done with living, or had enough of it, and therefore ſaid, Now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation; That is, he had ſeen Chriſt with the eye of his body, and he had a ſight of Chriſt by the eye of his faith; this ſight lifted him above all things ſeen. A ſenſitive ſight of good, doth very much chear, refreſh, and rejoyce the heart, much more an intellectual ſight; how much doth the ſight of faith refreſh the Soul, and cauſe us to rejoyce! It is ſaid of believers, They rejoyce with joy unſpeakable and glorious, at the ſight which they have of Chriſt by faith (1 Pet. 1. 8.) Whom having not ſeen, ye love; in whom, though now you ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoyce with joy unſpeakable and full of glory. Whom haveing not ſeen, that is, with bodily eyes; and, in whom, though you ſee him not, That is, ſenſitively, yet believing: What is believing? It is the ſight of the Soul. Faith gives the Soul a view of Chriſt in all his excellency and glory, in his love and in his lovelineſs, in his righteouſneſs and holineſs: faith gets a view of Chriſt in all his beauty; and beholding him, we rejoyce with joy unſpeakable. If the ſight of the bodily eye cauſeth the Soul to rejoyce, how much more the ſight of the eye of faith! the eye of either fixed upon deſirable objects, affects the heart with joy.

Secondly, The ſight of the eye fixt upon ſorrowful objects, affects the heart with ſorrow (Lam. 3. 51.) Mine eye affects my heart, ſaid lamenting Jeremiah; That is, ſeeing the calamities that are upon my people, I cannot but weep and mourn. Chriſt ſaith of the yet blinded and hardned Jews, They ſhall look on me whom they have pierced, and they ſhall mourn (Zach. 12. 10.) They ſhall ſhed tears of true repentance, when they ſhall ſee him with an eye of ſenſe, joyned with an eye of faith, whoſe blood they ſhed. Some of them ſaw him once an eye of ſenſe, without an eye of faith, and then they ſhed his blood; but when they ſhall ſee him with both, or only with an eye of faith, they ſhall mourn for ſhedding it. When good Nehemiah heard in what a ruinous condition the City Jeruſalem was, he ſate down, and wept, and mourned certain days (Neh. 1. 4.) his ear affected his heart, how much more would his eye, had he been a ſpectator (as afterwards he was) of thoſe ruins!

Thirdly, The ſight of the eye affects the heart with fear. There are ſome ſights very dreadful; ſo ſaith the Text and Point, Shall not one be caſt down at the ſight of him? This leads to a ſecond Note, which is this:

> The Lord hath put a terribleneſs upon ſome creatures, with reſpect to man.

Man is a terror to ſome creatures; yet others are a terror, or very terrible to man. Let us conſider, and uſefully remember this, for it is a fruit of ſin. What is the reaſon we are caſt down at the ſight of any creature? We may thank our ſins for it; all our troubleſome paſſions came in at that door. Why is man afraid or ſeized with a kind of horror, at the ſight of a Toad or Serpent? Of a Bear or Lion looſe? How comes it to paſs, that man, whom God made Lord over all the creatures, doth fear any, eſpecially ſo many of them? Is not this a conſequent, yea, an effect of ſin? When God made the Covenant with Noah (Gen 9. 2.) God bleſſed him and his ſons, and ſaid unto them, be fruitful and multiply, and repleniſh the Earth: and the fear of you, and the dread of you, ſhall be upon every beaſt of the Earth, and upon every fowl of the Air, upon all that moveth upon the Earth, and upon all the fiſhes of the Sea; the fear and dread of you ſhall be upon them. 'Tis of the Lord that any of the creatures are afraid and ſtand in awe of us; we have deſerved, that the very Sheep and Dove ſhould be a terror to us. 'Tis of the Lord that the fear and dread of us is upon any creature, and 'tis from our ſin that any creature is a fear and dread to us: It is a mercy that ſo many creatures are afraid of us; that any of the creatures ſtand in fear of us, is a fruit of the goodneſs of God; and that we are afraid of any creature, is a fruit of our ſin. Let us make a good uſe of this word, Shall not one be afraid at the ſight of him?

> And hence we may infer; If the ſight of ſome creatures aſtoniſh us, how will the ſight of God, of an angry God aſtoniſh us!

All the dread and terribleneſs that is in a Lion, or Bear, or Dragon, what is it to what is in God? With God is terrible Majeſty. The terribleneſs of the moſt terrible deadly creature, yea, of death, the King of terrors, is but a ſcare-crow to the terribleneſs of God; and it is God who hath planted terror in any creature, in man eſpecially. What is the reaſon why Kings and inferiour Magiſtrates are ſo terrible to evil men? Is it not becauſe God hath planted ſuch a terribleneſs in them, or hath cloathed them (with his own garment) terrible majeſty towards evil doers? (Rom. 13. 3, 4.) Now I ſay, if ſome creatures are ſo terrible, that a man is caſt down at the ſight of them, then how terrible is God! The Apoſtle John (Rev. 6. 15, 16, 17.) repreſents a world of wicked ones, or all the wicked of the world, caſt down at the ſight of Jeſus Chriſt; The Kings of the Earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief Captains, and the mighty men, and every bond-man, and every free-man, hid themſelves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains, and ſaid to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who ſhall be able to ſtand? Some are caſt down at the ſight of Leviathan, but all the unbelieving world ſhall be caſt down at the ſight of Chriſt; all the unbelieving Kings, Princes, and Potentates of the world ſhall be caſt down before Chriſt; O how dreadful will he be to them! and therefore (I would conclude with that) let us be caſt down at the ſight of ſin, which hath cauſed the ſight of the creature, and of God alſo, to be ſo dreadful to us. God had never been terrible to us, had it not been for ſin; nor had the ſight of any creature been terrible to us, had we not ſinned. When Adam had ſinned, then God was terrible to him, then preſently he hid himſelf. O therefore be caſt down at the ſight of ſin, which hath made both God and many creatures a terror, a caſting down to us. How terrible this creature Leviathan is to man, appears further, by what the Lord ſaith next.

> Verſ. 10. None is ſo fierce that dare ſtir him up: who then is able to ſtand before me?

The former part of this verſe, carrieth on the matter of the whole former verſe, None is ſo fierce that dare ſtir him up;

that is, Leviathan is a creature ſo fierce, ſo cruel, that none, how fierce ſoever, dare provoke him, no, nor awaken him. The words may be taken two ways.

Firſt, None dare ſtir him up when he is aſleep.

אבור Crudelis, ſævus, ferox, immiſericors.

Secondly, No man dares challenge or provoke him when he is awake. The word rendred fierce, properly ſignifies cruel, becauſe cruelty makes men fierce, or becauſe fierce men are uſually very cruel. None is ſo fierce as to ſtir him up.

Hence Note; Firſt, There is no wiſdom in provoking an enemy that is too ſtrong for us.

Wiſe men, though bold, and poſſibly cruel too, yet when attempts are exceeding dangerous, will not venture. Phyſicians will not ſtir ſome humors in the body, for it would be like ſtiring of a fierce Lion that is aſleep; they dare not provoke them, but do all they can to attemper and allay them; to ſtir ſuch a humour were to ſtir Leviathan. He hath more raſhneſs then courage, who meddles with more then his match, or (as ſome ſay) conjures up a ſpirit, that he cannot lay again.

Secondly, Saith the Lord, none is ſo fierce or cruel that dare ſtir him up. He means not cruel to Leviathan, but to himſelf; none is ſo cruel to himſelf, as to go about to ſtir up Leviathan, becauſe there is ſo much danger in that attempt.

Whence, Obſerve; They who run themſelves upon great dangers unadviſedly are cruel to themſelves.

They are their own enemies, and the greateſt enemies to themſelves. How cruel then are ſinners to their own Souls, who are ſo fierce as daily to ſtir up Leviathan! (Prov. 6. 33.) Whoſoever committeth adultery with a woman hath no underſtanding; he that doth it deſtroyeth his own Soul; ſurely then he is cruel to his own Soul: he ſeems to be very kind to his harlot, but he is very unkind, yea, cruel to himſelf (Pro. 8. 36.) He that ſinneth againſt me (ſaith Wiſdom) wrongeth his own Soul: all they that hate me, love death. 'Tis Chriſt that ſpeaks thus, he that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own Soul, he is cruel to himſelf. Many, when they ſin, do it to pleaſe themſelves: O what a good turn do they hope to do themſelves, when they venture upon unlawful pleaſures or profits; But he that doth ſo, hateth me (ſaith Chriſt) and he that hateth me, loves death. How cruel is that man to his own life, that is in love with death; yet ſo in truth are they who love any ſin, by ſinning. You may (as was toucht before) ſtir up and awaken a ſleepy conſcience, and conſcience may be more terrible then Leviathan; yea, by ſin, you may awaken and ſtir up the ſleeping vengeance of God, who is more then a thouſand Leviathans, and conſciences. Once more remember, that poſſibly, by not ſtirring up your ſelves to take hold of God, you may ſtir up God to be angry with you, as 'tis ſaid (Iſa. 64. 6, 7.) Our iniquities like the wind have taken us away. What follows? And (or for) there is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee. Which words, as I apprehend, may be taken two ways. Firſt, As ſhewing their ſluggiſhneſs, that though their iniquities, that is, the puniſhment of their iniquities, carried them away, or they were carried away as a puniſhment of their iniquities, yet they did not ſtir up themſelves to call upon the name of God, nor to take hold of him. Secondly, As ſhewing the reaſon, why their iniquities carried them away, even, becauſe they did not ſtir up themſelves to take hold of God. Their not ſtirring up themſelves to take hold of God, ſtirred up God againſt them. If we do not ſtir up our ſelves, eſpecially, when at any time we are compaſſed about with ſins and dangers, or with dangers procured and brought upon us by our ſins, as with Leviathans, we may ſtir up God againſt us as a Leviathan. And therefore let us take heed, leſt we be found fierce and cruel againſt our own Souls, by ſinning againſt God, or by not ſtirring up our ſelves to take hold of God; ſuch neglects are full of provocations.

Hitherto we have had inſtruction concerning this Leviathan, how great, how ſtout, how fierce and cruel he is: now the Lord makes application. He hath been diſcourſing about a huge tremendous Sea-monſter; but what is all this for? Surely, for very great uſe: And the Lord maketh uſe of it two ways.

Firſt, In this verſe, to ſhew his own irreſiſtibleneſs. If none can ſtand before Leviathan, then who can ſtand before me?

Secondly, In the 11. Verſe, to ſhew his own independency, that he hath no need of any creature: Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him? And all this the Lord makes good by that great aſſertion, for whatſoever is under the whole heaven is mine; This great Leviathan is mine to do what I will with him. This is the ſum of that two-fold Application, which the Lord makes from the hitherto deſcription of Leviathan; the firſt part whereof is expreſſed in the latter part of the 10. Verſe.

Who then is able to ſtand before me?

As if the Lord had ſaid, no man is able to ſtand before me. If this creature, Leviathan, be ſo terrible, that no man is able to ſtand before him? Then, who can ſtand before me? For all the ſtrength and courage that Leviathan hath, I have given him, and 'tis nothing to what I have; 'tis not ſo much to me as a drop of the bucket, or a duſt of the ballance, to the whole world. Can none ſtand before Leviathan? Who then can ſtand before me?

Quis reſiſter poterit vultu meo? Scult.

One Tranſlation ſaith, Can you reſiſt before my look? As God had ſaid before, one ſhall be caſt down at the ſight of him, namely, of Leviathan; ſo here, Can any man ſtand before me, or at the ſight of me? Is any man able to abide my look, the majeſty of my eye? Surely no. The ſenſe is much the ſame with that of our reading, Who then is able to ſtand before me?

Hence, Obſerve; Our inability to ſtand before mighty creatures, ſhould mind us of our utter inability to ſtand before the Almighty God.

This is the moſt proper uſe that ever was made of a doctrin. The Lord made a promiſe (and it was a very wonderful promiſe which the Lord made) to Joſhua (Joſh. 1. 5.) There ſhall not any man be able to ſtand before thee all the days of thy life. What a promiſe was here to a man! Joſhua was indeed one of the worthieſt warriers that ever was upon the earth, and may well be reckoned, not only one of, but the chief or moſt worthy, among the nine Worthies of the world, ſeeing no man could ſtand before him, nor ſhould, in way of oppoſition, all the days of his life. Now if the Lord promiſed ſuch a power unto Joſhua, and made it good, that none ſhould be able to ſtand before him all the days of his life; then who among the Children of men ſhall be able to ſtand before God? The Prophet Malachy ſpeaking of Chriſts coming (Chap. 3. 1.) ſaith, Behold he ſhall ſuddenly come into his Temple, even the Meſſenger of the Covenant. But what follows? (Verſ. 2.) Who may abide the day of his coming? If there was ſuch a terribleneſs in Chriſts coming in the fleſh, as to the ſpiritual power and effects of it, that the Prophet ſaith, Who may abide the day of his coming? O then, who ſhall be able to ſtand before Chriſt, when he ſhall come in glory to judg the earth? If they could not abide the day of his coming, when he came with refiners fire, and fullers ſope, how will they be able to ſtand before him, when he cometh with conſuming fire! No man can ſtand before God, in any of theſe four ways.

Firſt, In his own wiſdom, to plead it out with God. If we plead with God, our wiſdom will be found fooliſhneſs, and we our ſelves ſhall be confounded as fools. The Lord (ſaith Job, Chap. 12. 17.) maketh the Judges fools. Judges are uſually full of wiſdom, yet God maketh even them fools. God in ſtrict ſenſe maketh none, nor would he have any made Judges, but the wiſe; yet he himſelf can make the wiſeſt of them fools. And if ſo, then there is no ſtanding before God in our own wiſdom.

Secondly, There is no ſtanding before God in our own ſtrength or power. Our ſtrength is but weakneſs, yea, rottenneſs to his, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 5. 24.) Their root ſhall be rottenneſs, and their bloſſom ſhall go up as the duſt. Thus it is with all fleſh; if they ſtand in their own ſtrength, their root (which is their ſtrength) ſhall be as rottenneſs, and their bloſſom (which is their beauty) ſhall go up as the duſt.

Thirdly, There is no ſtanding before God in our own righteouſneſs, to be acquitted, accepted, and juſtified. There are many deficiencies and flaws in our righteouſneſs, therefore we cannot ſtand before God in it; there is much unrighteouſneſs in our righteouſneſs, therefore we cannot ſtand before God in it; and how righteous (if I may ſo ſpeak) ſoever our righteouſneſs is, or may be, yet we cannot ſtand before God in it, becauſe he hath appointed another righteouſneſs, or the righteouſneſs of another, even the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, for us, to ſtand before him in.

So then, if we would ſtand before God, all theſe muſt be laid down; we muſt lay down our own wiſdom, we muſt become fools, that we may be wiſe; we muſt lay down our own ſtrength, we muſt become weak, that we may be ſtrong; and we muſt lay down our own righteouſneſs, and look upon our ſelves as guilty Creatures, as condemned perſons, as caſt and loſt, in our ſelves: We muſt have nothing, but the wiſdom, and ſtrength, and righteouſneſs of God to ſtand before God in, that is, we muſt ſtand before God by faith: God is not terrible to ſuch, they may ſtand before God; the pooreſt ſinner may ſtand before God in the wiſdom, and ſtrength, and righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. Thus we may anſwer the queſtion; Who can ſtand before me? Saith God: I can ſtand before thee, ſaith a believer; I can ſtand before thee with boldneſs, being quit of ſelf-wiſdom, ſtrength and righteouſneſs, and looking to Chriſt Jeſus for all.

How ſweet, how gracious, and how delightful is the preſence of God to an humble believing Soul, to a broken-hearted ſinner! The Lord ſaith, I will dwell with ſuch a one; he ſhall not only come and ſtand before me, but I will come and ſit down with him, I will take up my aboad in an humble Soul, in an empty Soul. Who is able to ſtand before me? (ſaith God) None can in their own wiſdom, ſtrength or righteouſneſs, but in Chriſt we may. From hence we may more than conclude,

Fourthly, That there is no ſtanding before God in our ſins. God is terrible to ſinners, that is, to thoſe who continue in the love and practice of their ſins: God is of purer eyes, than to behold and approve evil. David having ſpoken of thoſe (*Pſal.*1.1.) that ſtand in the way of ſinners, ſaith (at verſ. 5.) there is no ſtanding for them in the Judgment. They that ſtand in the way of ſinners, cannot ſtand at the Judgment ſeat of God. Job ſaid (*Chap.*13.16.) A Hypocrite ſhall not come before him, that is, he ſhall not come with acceptance before God. Though Hypocrites will thruſt themſelves into the preſence of God, yet they ſhall not come before him; though now an Hypocrite may come before God in any outward performance, yet not with any acceptance: And to be ſure he ſhall not come before God in glory; and if he ſhall not come before him, how can he ſtand before him? The Lord will even blow him away. Only they that fall down before God are able to ſtand before him. We muſt fall down before God, in a ſenſe of our own vileneſs and wretchedneſs, and then we ſhall be able to ſtand before him, and to behold his pleaſed face by an eye of faith: A ſtout ſinner ſhall never ſtand before him. It is ſaid (*Zech.*3.1.) Joſhua ſtood before the Angel of the Lord. He had much ado to keep his ſtanding; why? Becauſe the Devil ſtood there to reſiſt him, and pointed to his filthy garments: But the Angel pleaded with the Lord, to take away his filthy garments; and when they were taken away, then he was able to ſtand before God. It is ſaid (Zech. 4. 14. which is conceived to be meant of Joſhua and Zerubbabel) Theſe are the two anointed ones, which ſtand before the Lord of the whole Earth. And as they in the type, ſo all that are Olive-branches, that have the pure oil of the Spirit, may and ſhall ſtand before God. We become Olive-branches in Chriſt, having the oil, or the graces of the Spirit, ſent down into our hearts, according to the promiſe. Holy and humble Souls, Olive-branches, they that are full of the grace and Spirit of our Lord Jeſus, ſhall ſtand before God; but as for man himſelf, that is, man in himſelf, in his own wiſdom, ſtrength or righteouſneſs, above all, in his ſins and unrighteouſneſs, can never ſtand before God. If he cannot ſtand before Leviathan? How can he ſtand before the Lord? This is a great Goſpel truth given in by himſelf, while he is treating of the Sea-monſter. There is no ſtanding before God in our ſelves; there is no ſtanding before God without a Mediator: and there is no Mediator but Jeſus Chriſt, who is both God and Man, or God-man, for man to ſtand before God in.

Thus much of the firſt uſe or inference, which the Lord makes from all that he had ſaid of Leviathan. The ſecond inference followeth in the next verſe.

Verſe 11. Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him?

As in the former verſe the Lord gave us inſtruction concerning his own all-ſufficiency and irreſiſtible power, Who can ſtand before me? So in this, he inſtructs us concerning his own abſolute independency, Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him? Both which parts of the Application, the Lord ſhuts up with an Aſſertion of his univerſal ſoveraignty and Lordſhip over all Creatures, in the cloſe of this eleventh verſe, Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine.

Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him?

Maſter Broughton renders, Who gave me any thing firſt, that I may pay him again. Theſe words the Apoſtle Paul plainly alludes to (ſome conceives he quotes them) in the 35. verſe of the 11. Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Romans, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counſeller? Or who hath firſt given to him? And it ſhall be recompenſed unto him again. So ſaith Saint Paul; and here the Lord himſelf ſaith, Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him? As much as to ſay, Who hath firſt given to me? And it ſhall be recompenſed unto him again.

הקדימני מי
Quis præceſſit me?

Who hath prevented me?] The Lord ſeems in theſe words, to make proclamation all the World over, to enquire among Angels and Men, who it is, or whether there be any one that can come forth and ſay, he hath prevented him.

Quis oſtendit mihi viam in cretione totius mundi? Vatabl.

To prevent, is to be aforehand with another in courteſie or kindneſs, in help or aſſiſtance. God prevents man in all theſe, but no man hath prevented God in any one of them. We may give a three-fold interpretation of this divine challenge.

Firſt, Who hath prevented me, or who was afore-hand with me in the work of Creation? Who helpt me to make Leviathan? You ſee what a piece of work he is, how vaſt, how dreadful a Creature he is: Who helped me? Or who gave me any help in the forming, or Creating of him? Several expound this queſtion of the Lords independency in the work of Creation; none began to him, none directed him how to Create, none counſelled him what to Create. The Apoſtle uſeth that word, Who hath been his counſeller? No man hath been the Lords counſeller, nor did he need any counſel, in or about any of his works. And as none were his counſellers to give him advice, ſo none were his helpers to give him any aſſiſtance, to bring the work about; no hand hath been put to it, but his own; no hand was at it, nor in it, but his own. I am he (ſaith the Lord, *Iſa.*54.24.) that maketh all things, that ſtretcheth forth the Heavens alone, that ſpreadeth abroad the Earth by my ſelf; I have done all alone, all by my ſelf, the Angels did not help me. As God made the Angels without help, ſo he uſed not the help of Angels in making any thing elſe.

Secondly, Who hath prevented me, in governing and diſpoſing the affairs of the World? I have had no counſel hitherto for that: And ſhall any now take upon them to teach me the art of government.

Thirdly, In general, Who hath prevented me? That is, who hath done me any good office? Who contributed the leaſt benefit to me? To whom am I beholden for the leaſt mite?

That I ſhould repay him.] That is, that I ſhould be engaged to repay him. The word which we render to repay, ſignifies properly to make peace; becauſe when debts are paid, and what is due diſcharged, then all is quiet, there is no matter of difference remaining. As if the Lord had ſaid, If any one can produce any bill, or bond, or make proof, that I ſtand indebted to him, I am ready to ſatisfie him, and to diſcharge all my obligations. Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him?

ואשלם à verbo שלם

Hence Note, Firſt, God will not be in any mans debt.

If any can make it good, that they have prevented him, that they have given him counſel or aſſiſtance in his works of Creation and providence, or that they have done him the leaſt courteſie, they ſhall receive to the full worth and value of it. What we do in way of duty to the Lord, he is ready to reward us for it; we ſhall not loſe our labour, though God be no gainer by it: And though it be through his grace, ſtrength and aſſiſtance, that we do any good, yet we ſhall be rewarded as if we had done it alone. Surely, then God would not be in our debt, if we could do any thing alone, or that did in it ſelf oblige him.

Secondly, Note, God is afore-hand with us, not we with him.

The Lord prevents us, we do not prevent him: That's it which the Lord would then have Job, and now us to underſtand, by this queſtion, Who hath prevented me? Even that himſelf hath prevented us all, and in all, by his grace and goodneſs, in any good we have received or done. David waited for this preventing grace (Pſal. 59. 10.) The God of my mercy ſhall prevent me, he ſhall let me ſee my deſire upon mine enemies; he ſhall prevent, not only my endeavours, but even my deſires and wiſhes. Yet what in this Pſalm he profeſſed an aſſurance of, in another Pſalm (to ſhew that our aſſurance of mercy muſt not give a ſtop to duty) he puts into a prayer (Pſal. 79. 8.) O remember not againſt us former iniquities, let thy tender mercies ſpeedily prevent us, for we are brought very low. The Lord hath preventing mercies for his people, in their low eſtate. Though we do not prevent the Lord, though we are not afore-hand with him by our preparations and prayers, by our repentings and reformings in our low eſtate, yet he hath mercies ready and prepared for us; yea, though we come forth to meet the Lord (as we are adviſed, Amos 4. 12.) humbling our ſelves before him, in prayers and tears, yet this doth not prevent the Lord, but he prevents us by his grace and favour, helping us to mourn and pray. And as the Lord always prevents us by helping us to pray, ſo he ſometimes prevents us with an anſwer to our prayers, before he helps us to pray (Iſa. 65. 24.) It ſhall come to paſs, that before they call I will anſwer, and while they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear; that is, they ſhall have an anſwer to their prayers, before they have made their prayers: So that, when we have made many prayers, and have been long in prayer, much faſting and humbling our ſelves, yet mercy prevents us. Mercy comes uſually, before we are well fitted for mercy, always before we have merited or deſerved it.

But ſaith not David (Pſal. 88. 13.) Unto thee have I cryed, O Lord, and in the morning ſhall my prayer prevent thee. Here David ſeemed to be afore-hand with God. Who hath prevented me? Saith God; yet David ſaid, My prayer ſhall prevent thee. The meaning is only this, That David would pray very early and very earneſtly, or that David would watch unto prayer, and ſo if poſſible, even prevent God; not that his prayers did indeed prevent God, but he was reſolved to ſet ſo hard to, and ſit ſo cloſe at the duty of prayer, that if ſuch a thing could be, he would even prevent him, he would, as we may ſay, take God before he was awake, as the Pſalmiſt ſpake elſewhere, Ariſe, O God, why ſleepeſt thou? Their prayer may be ſaid to prevent God, who pray early and earneſtly, according to that of David (Pſal. 5. 3.) My voice ſhalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. And again (Pſal. 119. 140.) Mine eyes prevent the night watches. He was at it very early, he ſought the Lord very diligently. That's all we are to underſtand by ſuch expreſſions; for the Lord is then afore-hand with us in mercies, when we are moſt early and moſt inſtant in our duties. The Lord, who is the beginning and the end, and who knows the end of all things from the beginning, often gives us our end, or what we aimed at in prayer, before we begin.

Thirdly, Note, God is ſelf-ſufficient, he can do his whole work alone.

Take it in the inſtance of the Text, he needs no help to create Leviathan, nor needs he the help of any Creature to deſtroy Leviathan; what he made without help, he can (as I may ſay) unmake without help. The Lord, who is all-ſufficient to do any work, or bring what he pleaſeth to paſs for us, is alſo ſelf-ſufficient, or able to do any work, or what he pleaſeth, for himſelf, that is, to pleaſe himſelf. It is a great honour to God that he can command what he will, and whom he will, to help him in any of his works; but it is a far greater honour to the great God, that he needs not any help to do or bring about any of his works. When the Apoſtle had ſaid, Who hath given to him? And it ſhall be recompenced unto him again: (Rom. 11. 35.) He preſently gives this reaſon (which is the point in hand) (verſ. 36.) For of him are all things; that is, he is the ſole efficient of all things, all things are from him, as from the firſt principle or mover; and he orders all things (as it followeth in the ſame verſe) through him are all things. As of him are all things in their conſtitution, ſo through him are all things in their diſpenſation. We have the work of Creation in the firſt part of the verſe, Of him are all things, and the work of providence in the latter, Through him are all things; that is, he diſpenſeth end diſpoſeth all things. And thus ſpake the ſame Apoſtle to the great Philoſophers at Athens (Acts 17. 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being. As if it had been ſaid, Of him are all things, and through him are all things; and therefore, to him are all things. All Creatures turn about, as in a circle, to their Creator; all things end in him, or he is the end of all, as all things began in him, and by him.

Deus eſt omni modo omnium rerum cauſa. 1. Cauſa efficiens ἐξ αὐτοῦ 2. Cauſa adminiſtrans δι' αὐτοῦ. 3. Cauſa finalis εἰς αὐτὸν, ad quem omnia quaſi in circulum redeunt.

This truth is a ſpring of comfort and conſolation to all the faithful; or, from this general head many ſtreams flow, which may both inſtruct and comfort the City of God. From hence we may learn, or be inſtructed,

Firſt, Creatures, one or other, men or Angels, cannot merit any thing at the hand of God. Man gives God nothing, but what he firſt receives from him; for, who hath prevented him? Therefore there's no merit, preventing-mercy excludes and ſhuts it out of doors.

Secondly, Which followeth upon that, God is debtor to no Creature; he oweth us nothing, we owe him all. Who hath prevented me? ſaith God. If we have any thing, we have it from him, but he hath nothing from us; therefore we are in his books, he is not at all in ours. All that God is indebted to us, is by his promiſes, which proceed freely from himſelf; we receive no good upon the worthineſs of what we have done, but becauſe he hath aſſured us we ſhall receive good if we do good, ſo and ſo, or are ſuch and ſuch. God gives us much, but retributes us nothing; all his rewards are free gifts, or pure alms.

Deus factus eſt debitor non aliquid à nobis accipiendo, ſed quod ei placuit promittendo. Aug. de verb. Dom. Ser. 16. ἀνταπόδοσις, Nihil aliud eſt quam δόσις, Deus enim proprie non retribuit ſed tribuit.

Thirdly, God can do no Creature any wrong. Man hath no right to any thing he hath inherent in, or, ariſing from himſelf; nor hath man obliged God at all to give him any thing, Therefore he can do man no wrong, how little ſoever he gives him, or how much ſoever he takes from him. So that, if any man ſhall ſay, he will not contend with me by right, but by might, and ſhall complain that ſomething is taken from him which he would not, or not given him which he would; what right hath any man to plead with God upon, who hath no right to any thing, but by the gift of God?

Fourthly, Then the grace of God to man, is altogether free. Many expound this Scripture, as denying the foreſight of mans works, or worthineſs of his faith, or perſeverance in grace, as to the grace of Election. God did not elect us, becauſe he fore-ſaw any worthineſs in us, nor will he ſave us upon the deſert of any thing done by us. The foundation-ſtone of Election, and the top-ſtone of Salvation, are laid in free grace.

Fifthly, We have no reaſon to be diſcouraged, what deficiency ſoever we ſee in the Creature, as to any thing we deſire God ſhould do for us, foraſmuch as none have prevented God, either with counſel or aſſiſtance in any of thoſe great things which he hath already done, either for our ſelves or others. What cannot he do for us alone, who made Heaven and Earth alone! The Lord can begin and finiſh, how and when he pleaſeth: He is a Rock, and his work is perfect. As in ſpirituals, he is the Author and finiſher of our faith, (Heb. 12. 2.) ſo in temporals, he is the Author and finiſher of all our comforts, deliverances and ſalvations. When we have no help at all in our ſelves, nor in any Creature, there is enough to be had in God (Hoſea 14. 3.) With thee the fatherleſs find mercy; that is, they find mercy with thee (and if mercy, then help) who are as helpleſs as a fatherleſs Child, they eſpecially who look upon themſelves as fatherleſs, what help and ſtrength, what fathers or friends ſoever they have in this world, if God be not their help and ſtrength, their friend and father. When we are convinced that only God can help us, when we have other helps, then God alone alone will help us, though we have no other helpers; as he promiſed Judah (Hoſea 1. 7.) I will have mercy upon the Houſe of Judah, and will ſave them by the Lord their God, and will not ſave them by Bow, nor by Sword, nor by Battel, by Horſes nor by Horſe-men. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will do all for Judah my ſelf alone, though I could have others to do it by. It is ſeldom that God hath (as School-men ſpeak) an immediate attingence upon any effect (he commonly uſeth inſtruments) yet he ſometimes hath, and hath as often as himſelf pleaſeth. As our mercies are always of grace only, ſo ſometimes they are wrought out by the power of God only: And what power ſoever is ſeen working at them, 'tis his power that doth the work; his wheel is in every wheel.

Nemo ut divina illum ſubſequatur gratia prius aliquid contulit Deo; ſi ergo & electi præveniente ſe gratia ſequuntur & reprobi juxta quod merentur accipiunt, & de miſericordia inveniunt electi quod laudent, & de juſtitia non habent reprobi quod accuſent. Bene igitur dicitur quis ante dedit. Greg.

Sixthly, What cauſe have we to magnifie the free grace and mighty power of God. He is able to do for us, though all oppoſe him; and he is willing to do for us, though none, nor we our ſelves prevent him. Such is the power of God, that he can over-come all oppoſition in others, againſt what he hath a mind to do for us; and ſuch is the freeneſs of his grace, that it over-paſſeth, or rather paſſeth by all thoſe indiſpoſitions in us, which might cauſe him to forbear doing, or have no mind to do, any thing for us.

Seventhly, If none have prevented the Lord, if all the good we have, and all that we ſhall have, floweth freely to us, then we ſhould be very thankful to God for every good we have received, and very full of purpoſes to praiſe him for whatever we ſhall further receive. This inference the Apoſtle makes in the laſt words of (Rom. 11.) Of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory for ever, Amen. Let us never be found ſacrificing to our own net, nor burning incenſe to our own drag, as if by them our portion (in ſpirituals or temporals) were fat, and our meat plenteous. Let us put praiſe far from our ſelves, and ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Not unto us, not unto us, but to thy name, O Lord, be praiſe and glory.

Laſtly, Let us be very humble. The Lord puts this queſtion to Job to humble him; and it was ſhewed in the beginning of the Chapter, that the deſign of God in preſenting this vaſt Creature Leviathan to the view or conſideration of Job, was to humble him: For ſeeing the Lord hath made all things and can do all things of himſelf, and doth them for himſelf, let us lie in the duſt before him, let us take heed of pride, high thoughts, and boaſting words, in any thing we have, and are; let us ſay (as the Apoſtle, Rom. 3. 27.) Where is boaſting? Where is pride? He anſwers, It is excluded. But by what Law? Why cannot boaſting come in? Is it kept out by the Law of works, by any thing that we have done? No, boaſting would never be ſhut out, if we could do any thing of our ſelves; therefore, ſaith he, this comes to paſs by the Law of faith, by caſting our ſelves wholly upon God, both as to our juſtification and ſalvation. That God doth all things of himſelf, ſhould render us nothing in our ſelves. Who hath prevented me that I ſhould repay him?

The Lord having made theſe uſes of what he had ſaid concerning Leviathan, proceeds to a general aſſertion (as was ſaid) in the cloſe of this eleventh verſe.

Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine.

Poſſum illi amplam mercedem ſi velim reddere, cum omnia quæ ſub cœlo uſpiam gentium ſunt; mea ſint, meum eſt aurum.

These words are interpreted by ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers, in connexion with what went before, thus: Who hath prevented me, and I will repay him? As if the Lord had ſaid, Do not think that I have not enough by me to repay you, for your counſel and aſſiſtance, if you dare ſay, I have had any from you; for, Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine. That's a good ſenſe, ſhewing the Lords ſufficiency to make good his offer. Some make great promiſes of what they will do, when they have not wherewithal to do it. Yet rather,

Secondly, We may expound this aſſertion, as carrying on the former Argument, or further to prove that no man can prevent the Lord, ſeeing all is his already. Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine (ſaith he) The Creatures are all mine, I challenge all, I lay claim to all; whether therefore I give to one, or take from another, no man hath reaſon to queſtion me, or to ask of me a reaſon, why I did or do ſo; for, all is mine own. And when the Lord ſaith, Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine, his meaning is, not only that all under Heaven, but that Heaven it ſelf, and all that is in Heaven, is his alſo. The Lords Eſtate or Right, is not confined to the things which are under the Heaven. So that, when he ſaith, Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine, he ſaith in effect all is mine. Thus Moſes expoundeth this aſſertion (Deut. 10. 14.) Behold, the Heaven, and the Heaven of Heavens is the Lords thy God, the Earth alſo, with all that therein is. The reaſon why the Lord ſpeaks here only of this eſtate under Heaven, is becauſe he was diſcourſing with Job of this inferiour World, and the furniture of it; and it was enough for him to underſtand, as to the preſent debate, that all under Heaven was the Lords: But in truth, not only is the Earth, the Sea, the Air, with all their fulneſs and furniture, the Lords, but the Heaven, and the Heaven of Heavens, is the Lords, with all their beauty and glory.

Hence Note, The Lord is the great proprietor of all things in this World.

Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is the Lords, or all is the Lords. Firſt, by Creation, he hath given all things their being. Secondly, all is the Lords by preſervation, he keepeth all things in their being; Jeſus Chriſt upholds all things by the word of his power (Heb. 1. 3.) that is, by his powerful word. The ſame commanding word which gave all things their being in the beginning, hath hitherto preſerved their being, and will to the end. And not only ſo, but, Thirdly, all things are his in poſſeſſion, the Lord hath all in his hand: In whoſe hand ſoever the things of the World are, they are all in the Lords hand. As Abraham ſaid, in his Treaty with the King of Sodom (Gen. 14. 22.) I have lift up my hands to the moſt high God, the poſſeſſor of Heaven and of Earth (Pſal. 24. 1.) The Earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof, the World, and they that dwell therein; that is, they are all at his diſpoſe. And again, The World is mine, and the fulneſs thereof, ſaith the Lord himſelf (Pſal. 50. 12.) and therefore, if I were hungry, that is, if I needed any thing, I would not tell thee, that is, complain to thee, or go a begging to thee, who art but a beggar; I can help my ſelf, and take what and where I will. There is a fourth title, by which all things under Heaven are the Lords, even by Redemption. The Lord hath reſtored the whole World to a kind of new life, by the death of his Son; Jeſus Chriſt is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of them which believe (1 Tim. 4. 10.) All have ſome benefit by Redemption; and ſo, whatſoever is under the whole Heaven, the whole Syſtem of Heaven and Earth, is the Lords by Redemption; though the ſpecialty of Redemption be theirs only, and intended to them only who believe; who as they have a peculiar portion (a Benjamins Meſs) in the grace of Redemption, ſo the Lord calleth them his peculiars (Exod. 19. 5.) Ye ſhall be a peculiar treaſure unto me, above all people, for all the Earth is mine. And they are called the Lords portion (Deut. 32. 9.) The Lords portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.

Thus, as all under the whole Heaven is the Lords, ſo all is his by a fourfold title, by the titles of Creation and Suſtentation, and Poſſeſſion and Redemption. All things viſible and inviſible have been Created, are ſuſtained and poſſeſſed by him as their great Lord; and all things viſible have been redeemed by him from preſent periſhing, and a world of them in this World, that they ſhould never periſh, but have everlaſting life, John 3. 16.

From this general aſſertion, That whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is the Lords, take theſe following Inferences.

Firſt, Then the Devil is a lyar, a great lyar; for (Matth. 4) in his laſt aſſault againſt Chriſt, he boaſted that he would give him all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and the glory of them, whereas the truth is, he hath not a ſhooe-latchet at his diſpoſe: While the Devil ſaith, all is mine, the truth is, nothing is his but a lye, of that he is the father. As he hath not given a being to the leaſt worm; ſo he cannot diſpoſe of the leaſt worm, he is not worth a ſtraw, for all is the Lords.

Secondly, Hence we learn, That there is a lying Spirit in moſt of the Children of men, even in all them who look upon any thing they have as their own. There is a ſenſe in which we have a right to and a propriety in what we have, and may call it ours; but that Spirit which moves in moſt of the Children of men, is a lying Spirit, when they ſay, this and that is their own. David (Pſal. 12. 4.) brings in the wicked, ſaying, With our tongue will we prevail, our lips are our own, who is Lord over us? What, have not we, who have ſo many Lordſhips, the Lordſhip of our ſelves, the Lordſhip of that little piece of our ſelves, our lips? But were not their lips their own? Not, in the ſenſe they ſpake it, as if they were accountable to none for them; for their next word was, Who is Lord over us? Thus moſt do, they look upon their lips, and all the members of their Body as their own; but what ſaith the Apoſtle (1*Cor*.6.20.) Glorifie God in your Body, and in your Spirit, which are Gods. And (verſ.19.) Ye are not your own. Your Body is not your own, but it is the Lords; then much leſs are the things that you have your own; your Land is not your own, nor your Cattel your own, the Beaſts of the Earth are not your own, nor the Fiſhes of the Sea your own; nor is a hair of your head your own, nor a pin upon your ſleeve: They are all the Lords. Is it not then a lying Spirit which poſſeſſeth every man among the Children of men, who look upon themſelves, and what they have, as their own? Their Houſes and Lands are their own, their Gold and Silver are their own; who is Lord over them or theirs? O let ſuch remember, that themſelves, their Houſes and Lands, their Gold and Silver are the Lords, and that the Lord ſaith expreſly, The Silver is mine, and the Gold is mine (Hag.2.8.)

Thirdly, If all be the Lords, then the Lord is able to ſupply the wants of all who wait upon him, and to ſupply them plentifully. The Lord ſupplieth the wants of all Creatures. The Lord keepeth a great Houſe, he feedeth all that he hath made, he provideth food for Leviathan, he ſatisfieth every living thing (Pſal. 145.16.) and (Pſal.115.16.) The Heaven, even the Heavens are the Lords, but the Earth hath he given to the Children of men, that is, whatſoever of the Earth the Children of men, that is, men in common, or mankind, have, the Lord hath given it to them; and ſeeing his own Children have need of it, ſurely he will not deny it them. The Lord (I ſay) hath given the Earth to the Children of men; and if the Lord hath beſtowed the Earth on men, as men, then much more hath he the Earth to beſtow upon his own Children. Chriſt in his Sermon upon the Mount (Matth.6.32.) aſſureth them of it, Your Heavenly father knoweth that ye have need of theſe things. Food and clothing is in your fathers hand, your father is rich, he is rich indeed, and therefore he can ſupply your wants. If Children do but remember, that their Father hath ſuch and ſuch Lands and Houſes, they think they ſhall be well provided for; how much more may a godly man ſay, my Father hath a great deal of Land, the whole Earth is his, and therefore I ſhall be provided for? The Apoſtle improves this poſition twice (1*Cor*.10.) Firſt, to make uſe of our liberty, in eating whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, asking no queſtion for Conſcience ſake; for (ſaith he) the Earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof (verſ.26.) He makes uſe of it, Secondly, to perſwade us not to abuſe our liberty (verſ. 28.) But if any man ſay unto you, this is offered in ſacrifice unto Idols, eat not for his ſake that ſhewed it (do not offend him) and for Conſcience ſake (do not offend thy ſelf) The Earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof. As if he had ſaid, why ſhouldſt thou trouble thy ſelf or others, by eating ſuch meat? Seeing there is enough to be had without running ſuch a hazard, and thou mayſt take thy choice all the World over, for the Earth is the Lords.

Fourthly, This grand Aſſertion carrieth in it great encouragement, to be much in the Lords work: Why? Becauſe he is able to give us a good reward. We ſhall not need to fear any loſs of labour in doing what we do for him, he can recompence us fully, for all is his under the whole Heaven; he is able to pay us well for any ſervice we do him. Saul wondered why the Benjamites followed David (what's the matter? ſaid he 1*Sam*.22.7.) Hear ye Benjamites, will the Son of Jeſſe give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you Captains of thouſands, and Captains of hundreds? Can the Son of Jeſſe do theſe things for you? It is a wonder that any ſhould ſerve him, that hath nothing to beſtow upon them; but who can wonder that the people of God ſhould ſerve him, and ſtick cloſe to his ſervice, while they do but remember that he hath Fields and Vineyards, the Silver and the God, together with all the great offices and preferments, that he hath in his hand. This was the Motive which the Apoſtle uſed to edge his exhortation (1*Cor*.15.5,8.) Be ye ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know, that your labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord. He ſaith as much (1*Tim*.4.8.) Godlineſs is profitable unto all things, having the promiſe of the life that now is and of that which is to come. Godlineſs hath the promiſe of a comfortable portion in this life; as well as of a full one in the life to come.

Fifthly, Fear not to loſe for Chriſt. Do not fear to loſe any thing under Heaven for Chriſt, for whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is Chriſts; he is able to make up all again. We need not wonder at that promiſe which is made by Chriſt, He that ſuffers loſs of any thing for my name ſake, ſhall receive a hundred-fold, now in this time (Mark.10.36.) Not only doth the Lord promiſe a hundred-fold, in ſweet inward contentments in this time, to them who loſe for him; but he is able to ſupply a hundred-fold, even in this life, of the things of this life: And as he is able, ſo he will ſurely fulfil it, according to that promiſe, when he ſees it fit to give, or us fit to receive ſuch enjoyments. O, ſaith one, I may loſe my Lands, and my Trade, ſaith another, and I my liberty ſaith a third. As many fear and fly from ſuffering, becauſe of the puniſhment of ſenſe, ſo not a few, becauſe of the puniſhment of loſs; they are in danger of loſing all, and they are not willing to loſe any thing for Chriſt. Now, I may anſwer all, who upon that account, fear of loſs, refuſe to ſuffer for Chriſt, as the Prophet did that King of Judah (2 Chron. 25.9.) who, when he had word brought him from the Lord, that he muſt let go the Army of Iſrael, that he had hired againſt the Edomites, preſently objected, But what ſhall I do for the hundred talents of Silver, that I have given to the Army? The man of God anſwered, The Lord is able to give thee much more then this: Do thou obey the Lords command, and do not trouble thy ſelf about the hundred talents, the Lord is able to give thee more than this. This hath been the queſtion of many when called to ſuffer, What ſhall we do for the hundred talents? What ſhall we do for our worldly ſubſtance, and ſubſiſtence? What ſhall we do for a lively-hood? I may ſay as the Prophet then did, the Lord is able to give you abundantly more than what you loſe for him.

Sixthly, As we ſhould not fear to loſe for the Lord's ſake, ſo let us not forbear to give for the Lords ſake. Some are afraid to give for the Lords ſake, to ſupply the neceſſities of their Brethren; but remember what you give to the poor, you lend to the Lord, and to ſuch a Lord as hath all things under the whole Heaven for his. If we give the Lord is able to repay us. The Apoſtle makes uſe of this very argument (Phil.4.18,19.) I have all, and abound, I am full, having received of Epaphroditus, the things which were ſent from you, an odour of a ſweet ſmell, a ſacrifice acceptable, well pleaſing to God. What follows? But my God ſhall ſupply all your needs, according to his riches in glory by Chriſt Jeſus. Do not think you ſhall want, becauſe of the ſupply you give to my wants; no, my God ſhall ſupply your wants or needs, according to his riches in glory, that is, according to his rich and glorious grace. There is no need to be ſupplied in the glory of the next life; but there is a glory in rich grace which readily and plentifully ſupplieth all our needs in this life.

Seventhly, If all under the whole Heaven be the Lords? Then all places are the Lords. This is comfortable to thoſe, who are at any time Gods out-caſts; he can ſay to any place, as he did to Moab (Iſa. 16.4.) Let mine out-caſts dwell with thee, &c. All Countries are the Lords, he can make room for his in any part of the World, for all the World is his. The Lord provided a place for the Church (Rev.12.6, 14.) when ſhe was caſt out, The Church fled into the Wilderneſs, where ſhe had a place prepared of God. The Wilderneſs was her troubleſom condition, but the Lord provided a place for her then and there. The Lord can command a place for his any where; if not in one Country, yet in another, becauſe all the Countries and Kingdoms under Heaven are his demean; he is Lord over all, bleſſed for evermore. Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is his, both in his poſſeſſion, and at his diſpoſition.

Eighthly, If all that is under the whole Heaven be the Lords? Then go to God for all (Phil.4.5.) Let your moderation be known unto all men, the Lord is at hand; he is at hand as a Judg to right you, and he is at hand as a Father to provide for you; therefore be careful in nothing, but let your requeſt be made known unto God by prayer and ſupplication.

If you would have any thing of the Earth, you muſt go to God for it, as well as for Heaven it ſelf.

Ninthly, If all things under the whole Heaven be the Lords? Then whatever good things you have under the whole Heaven, acknowledg the Lord as the Donor and giver of them all (1 Chron.24.14.) When David, together with the Princes and People of Iſrael, had offered ſo freely towards the building of the Temple, he ſaid, Lord, who am I, and what is my people? That we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly after this ſort, for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. He acknowledged the Lord as the giver of all, that himſelf and his people had given to the Lord.

Tenthly, Is all the Lords? Then, uſe all as the Lords, and not as your own. Remember you are but Stewards; God hath a title paramount to all you have: Do not uſe what is yours as your own, but as the Lords; you are but Stewards of the things you have in this World. The Lord rebuked Iſrael (Hoſ.2 8,9.) for uſing their riches, their corn and wine, otherwiſe than he had appointed; they did not uſe them as Stewards they uſed all as Lords, not as the Lords: They thought it was their Gold, and their Silver, and their Wine, and their Oil, their Wool, their Flax, and they beſtowed all upon an Idol, and prepared all for Baal. See what the Lord ſaith in the next verſe, Therefore will I return and take away my Corn in the time thereof, and my Wine in the ſeaſon thereof, and will recover my Wool and my Flax. All theſe are mine, and you uſe them as your own, and beſtow them upon Baal. Thus men beſtow their Gold and Silver upon their luſts, upon their pride and intemperance, upon their revenge and uncleanneſs, yea, to adorn their Idols; take heed of applying your poſſeſſions to wrong uſes. God is the Lord of all, and he will have an account of Lords, as they have of their Stewards, what they have done with all, for they are but Stewards.

In the Eleventh place, Then the Lord may give and take off all that is under Heaven, when he pleaſeth, and how he pleaſeth, to whom he pleaſeth, and from whom he pleaſeth. May not he do what he will with his own? (Matth.20.25.) If he gives to one, he giveth but his own; and if he takes from another, he taketh but his own; if he gives another much, and you but a little, you muſt be quiet and ſubmit, he giveth but his own. If he give much of this Worlds good to evil men? If he adorn and beautifie them with all outward bleſſings, who hath any thing to ſay againſt it? what though men, meaſuring things by their own reaſon, ſee no reaſon, yet let them know what he beſtoweth, is of his own, not of any mans poſſeſſion; and if he beſtow great things upon the unworthy, he doth no wrong to thoſe that are worthy, much leſs to thoſe who are as unworthy as they: The benefits he beſtows upon any are no wrong to others. Upon this ground the Lord commanded the Nations quietly to ſubmit to Nebuchadnezzar King of Babilon (Jer.27.4,5,6.) Thus ſhall ye ſay to your Maſters (The word is given by Jeremiah from the Lord to the Meſſengers of ſeveral Princes) I have made the Earth, the man, and the Beaſt that are upon the ground, by my out-ſtretched arm, and by my great power, and have given it unto whomſoever it ſeems meet unto me. And now I have given all theſe lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, &c. And the Beaſts of the Field have I alſo given to ſerve him: And all Nations ſhall ſerve him, &c. Thus if the Lord gives, he giveth his own, and if he takes all away from any, it is but his own; thus Job quieted his Spirit at firſt, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

In the Twelfth place, If all be the Lords under the whole Heaven, then, be ſure you pay your Land-lord your oent. Shall we live in the Lords Houſe, and uſe the Lords Land, and not pay him his rent? Let us pay the Lord his rent, for we are all Tenants and Tenants at Will. Pay him his rent; you will ſay, what is that? It is the rent of praiſe and obedience; the Lord hath a ſervice due to him for all.

In the Thirteenth place, Let all the godly rejoyce. All that is under the whole Heaven is Gods, it is in the hand of their friend and father; all their enemies are in the hand of the Lord, their tongues are the Lords, and their power is the Lords, and all they have is in the hand of the Lord; and therefore no wonder if David concluded (Pſal.144.15.) Happy are the people that are in ſuch a caſe, yea, happy is that people whoſe God is the Lord, for they have him, who is Lord of all, of all under the whole Heaven.

Laſtly, If all be the Lords under the whole Heaven, then, let us above all things labour to aſſure an intereſt in the Lord. To be able to ſay the Lord is our God, is the ſureſt way to a worldly eſtate; if we have him who hath all, we have all; as one ſaid, If God be mine, then all is mine. 'Tis the happineſs of all the people of God, that God is theirs; This God is our God, we have waited for him. The Lord, who is our God, is the God of ſalvation. Believers appropriate God to themſelves; they do not ſtand talking of Gold and of Silver, of Houſes and Lands, but, ſay they, God is our God. Keep cloſe to God in Chriſt, and he will keep you. You cannot but have enough, when you have God, who hath all things under Heaven, yea, and all things in Heaven.

VERS. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.

Who can diſcover the face of his Garment? Or who can come to him with his double bridle?

Who can open the doors of his face? His teeth are terrible round about.

His ſcales are his pride, ſhut up together as with a cloſe ſeal.

One is ſo near to another, that no air can come between them.

They are joined one to another, they ſtick together that they cannot be ſundred.

THE Lord having ſpoken both of the quantity or greatneſs, and the quality or ſtoutneſs of Leviathan; having alſo, made application of both, in the former part of the Chapter, he now proceeds to a more particular deſcription of him.

Verſe 22. I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.

We have here God ſpeaking, I (ſaith the Lord) will not conceal his parts. There is a two-fold opinion about the connection or dependance of this verſe.

Some join it with the former, the eleventh verſe, Who hath prevented me, that I ſhould repay him? Whatſoever is under the whole Heaven is mine. Now, in caſe any one ſhould ſtand forth with that boldneſs as to tell the Lord, he had prevented him, he had been afore hand with God; well, ſaith the Lord, if any will undertake this, if any man dares affirm, that he hath prevented me, I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion, I will do him no wrong, I will not ſhadow, nor obſcure his worth; I will ſet him forth in his faireſt colours, or paint him to the life, in all that he is, in all that he can ſay, or do, or ſhew himſelf to be in ſuch a conteſt with me, or in his undertaking me about this matter. And when that's done, I ſhall eaſily, and quickly convince him, or make him both ſee and confeſs, that he is a poor weakling, that he is nothing, or, if any thing, vile, compared with me: For if I do but oppoſe to him the parts, powers, and comlineſs of Leviathan, he will find himſelf over-matched. Thus, I ſay, ſome conceive the Lord referreth to the former words, as promiſing to do him right, that ſhould accept the challenge there made, and ſay, that he had prevented God, or had been aforehand with him.

Si quis me anteverteret, aut ſuperior me eſſe poſſet, ejus laudes utique celebrarem. Merc.

Others give it thus, if any man ſhall venture to anſwer my challenge, I will not conceal his lies (ſo the word, by us Tranſlated parts, is rendred, Chap.11.3.) nor his boaſting words, nor the rhetorical ornaments, nor the comely proportion of his ſpeech, in pleading and arguing with me; all which will be found upon trial, to be but lies, vain flouriſhes, and meer ſophiſtical fallacies.

Alii, non tacerem mendacia; ita ſumitur, ejus בד enim cap. 11.3. Merc.

But I rather take this verſe as a general Preface to that which the Load intended further to ſay, in the deſcription of this mighty Creature, Leviathan. As if he had ſaid; O Job, that thou mayeſt be yet more fully convinced, how unable thou art to deal with this mighty fiſh; and mayſt therein ſee, yet more clearly, how unable thou art to ſtand before my power, who have given both being and power to this Creature, I ſhall go on, to give thee a more lively picture, a more particular narrative, a fuller character of him ; and, as it were, anatomize this Sea-monſter in all his parts, powers, and proportions.

So then, in this context, and forward to the end of verſe 32. we have the fourth part of the deſcription of Leviathan, even, by the diſtinct parts of his Body, together with the wonderful powers, effects, and operations that appear in them ; as acted by that courage, ſtoutneſs, and greatneſs of ſpirit, with which God hath clothed him.

I will not conceal his parts.

Miosis, celebratur ejus membra. Druſ.

The Hebrew is, I will not be ſilent about his parts. And when the Lord ſaith, I will not conceal, nor be ſilent, his meaning us, I will fully, largely, and evidently declare the parts, the power, and the comely proportion of Leviathan; I will view, as it were, all that is moſt obſervable in, and about him ; I will do it exactly, not ſlightly, or perfunctorily, but like an Oratour declare all his excellencies ; I will not let ſlip, nor omit any thing that is material or conducible to his commendation. So that, when the Lord ſaith, I will not conceal, he intends much more than he expreſſeth ; As the Prophet alſo did (Iſa. 62. 1.) when he ſaid, For Zions ſake will I not hold my peace ; meaning, that he would pour out his heart, and make a loud cry, in prayers and ſupplications for Zions ſake. That's the import of his words, I will not hold my peace : As alſo, of thoſe (verſ. 6.) Ye that make mention of the Lord, or, ye that are the Lords remembrancers (in the concerns of Zion) keep not ſilence. The meaning is, ſpeak much for Zion. A man doth not keep ſilence, nor hold his peace, who ſpeaketh only a word or two. But the Lords remembrancers muſt ſpeak to the full, much and often ; they muſt urge him with many arguments, and plead hard, till he bring forth Salvation in Zion, I urge this Scripture, as parallel to the Text in hand, where the Lord ſaith, I will not conceal, when his purpoſe was to ſpeak copiouſly and largely.

And here the Lord ſetteth down three things concerning Leviathan, which he will not conceal ;

First, His parts.

Secondly, His power.

Thirdly, His comely proportion. To theſe three heads, all that can be ſaid of Leviathan is reducible.

בדי

I will not conceal his parts or members. This Creature is made up of ſeveral heterogeneal parts or members. The word rendred parts properly ſignifie the bar or bolt of a door, as alſo the boughs of a Tree : There is a great elegancy in that metaphor, becauſe the members of the Body in any Creature, are as ſo many boughs ſhot out from the ſtock of a Tree. I will not conceal his parts.

But, what are the parts which the Lord mentions, or would not conceal ?

I anſwer, The word parts, in our language and common ſpeech, ſignifieth the inward abilities, and faculties of any man. We ſay, ſuch a one is a man of excellent parts, or he hath good parts, that is, he is a wiſe man, an underſtanding man, a well-ſpoken man. But here in this place, the word parts notes only the limbs, members, and organs of the Body, or the ſeveral pieces of the whole compages or frame of the Body. Of theſe parts the Lord ſpeaketh in the following part of the Chapter. And he ſpeaketh,

First, Of his skin (verſ. 13.)
Secondly, Of his jaws and teeth (verſ. 14.)
Thirdly, Of his ſcales (verſ. 15, 16, 17.)
Fourthly, Of his noſtrils, eyes, and mouth (verſ. 18, 19, 20, 21.)
Fifthly, Of his neck (verſ. 22.)
Sixthly, Of his fleſh all over (verſ. 23.)
Seventhly, Of his heart (verſ. 24.)

All theſe, if not more particular parts, the Lord mentions in this Chapter ; and therefore he might well ſay, I will not conceal his parts.

Nor his power.] Parts are one thing, and power is another. There may be great bodily parts, where there is but little power. That which maketh parts excellent, is when they are full of power, or when outward parts are accompanied with inward parts, which are the accompliſhments of them. I will not conceal his power.

Notum ut דבר pro re ſumatur. Druſ.

The Hebrew is, The word or matter of his power. Maſter Broughton renders, I will not conceal the ſpeech of ſtrength, that is, the matter of his ſtrength. The Hebrew word ſignifies, not only a word, but matter, or thing ; I will not conceal the things of his power. Theſe powers are expreſſed afterwards.

First, In his noſtrils ; By his neeſing a light doth ſhine, in the former part of verſ. 18.

Secondly, In his eyes ; They are like the eye-lids of the morning, in the latter part of verſ. 18.

Thirdly, In his mouth ; Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and ſparks of fire leap out (verſ. 19.) Heat riſeth out of the vital power of any Creature. Leviathans heat is ſo great, that it is called fire ; and from thence, ſmoke goeth out of his noſtrils, as out of a ſeething-pot, or cauldren (verſ. 20.) yea, his breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth (verſ. 21.) All theſe expreſſions ſhew the mighty heat within him.

Fourthly, In his neck (verſ. 22.) In his neck remaineth ſtrength. He hath not only a neck, but a ſtrong neck.

Fifthly, In his heart (verſ. 24.) His heart is as firm as a ſtone, yea, as hard as a piece of the nether mill-ſtone.

Sixthly, Such is his power, that he is terrible to others (verſ. 25.) When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid. Yea,

Seventhly, Such is his power, That nothing can annoy him, the Sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold, the Spear, the Dart, nor the Habergeon (verſ. 26.)

And Laſtly, Such is his power, That he maketh the deep to boil like a pot, he maketh the Sea like a pot of ointment : He maketh a path to ſhine after him : One would think the deep to be hoary (verſ. 31, 32.) Thus the Lord deſcribes, not only the parts, but the power of Leviathan. And in the Hebrew, the word is plural, powers, which intimates the greatneſs of his power, or that he is powerful in every part, each part being full of power.

There is a two-fold power. First, of ſtrength. Secondly, of authority. Leviathan hath no power of authority, though he be called a King over all the Children of pride. But he hath a mighty power of ſtrength; That's here intended, I will not conceal his parts, nor his power,

Non tacebo gratiam diſpoſitionis ejus, i. e. dicam, quam concinnè membra ejus compoſita ſunt.

Nor his comely proportion.] Or the grace of his diſpoſition. That's the emphaſis of the Hebrew. There is a two-fold diſpoſition ;

First, Of the mind, which we commonly call a mans diſpoſition.

Secondly, Of the Body, which conſiſts in the right placing of the parts, their ſymmetry, order and proportion. Hence we Tranſlate fully, His comely proportion. Maſter Broughton renders it, The grace of his frame, that is, the due compoſition and feature of all the members of his Body.

Ironicè dictum ; cum enim horrifica ſit immaniſſimi monſtri diſpoſitio, & conformatio totius corporis, nihil in illo gratiæ, & venuſtatis eſſe poteſt. Cajetan.

Some expound theſe words Ironically ; As if when the Lord ſaith, I will not conceal his comely proportion, his meaning where his monſtrous uncomlineſs. But by their leave, how great, or vaſt ſoever any Creature is, there may be a comlineſs, and proportion, or a due diſpoſition of the members of his Body, as well as of a leſſer, or little one. There are three things which make up the compleat natural comlineſs of a Creature. First, Diſtinction of members; there muſt be parts. Secondly, Strength for the exerciſe of the parts. Thirdly, A due proportion of the parts one towards another ; that's it which we properly call feature. There may be beauty, but no comelineſs, without a due diſpoſition or proportion of parts ; and where there is a due proportion of parts, there is comelineſs, how great ſoever any Creature is. All theſe concur in Leviathan ; First, parts ; Secondly, power ; Thirdly, proportion ; and therefore he is, though a Monſter for bigneſs, yet a comely Creature. I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.

> Hence Obſerve, First, God hath beſtowed excellent parts, power, and proportion, upon all his Creatures, eminently upon ſome of them.

Whatſoever the Lord made, he made it (as 'tis ſaid) in number, weight and meaſure, that is, exactly. The Fowls of the Air ; the Beaſts and creeping things of the Earth, the Fiſhes of the Sea ; all of them according to their kind, have excellent parts, power, and comelineſs of proportion. David ſpeaking this in general, brings it down to the particular under hand. (Pſal. 104. 24.) O Lord, how manifold are thy works (that is, the works of Creation) in wiſdom haſt thou made them all (all of them, even to the very Fly, are wiſely made, in wiſdom haſt thou made them all) the Earth is full of thy riches, verſ. 15. So is this great and wide Sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great Beaſts; there go the Ships, there is that Leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein. Leviathan is made in wiſdom, or wiſely made; the wiſdom, as well as the power of the great God is viſible, in the making and compoſure of him.

Secondly, Obſerve, God is pleaſed to ſet forth and in ſetting forth, the particular excellencies of natural Creatures.

I will not (ſaith the Lord) conceal his parts, &c. God (who is without parts) is ſeen in the parts of every Creature, and therefore he hath not concealed their parts. Men do not light a Candle (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 5. 15.) and put it under a buſhel, but on a candleſtick. God hath lighted a Candle for us to ſee himſelf by, in making the parts of every Creature, and he hath put that light on as many candleſticks, as he hath made diſcourſes or diſcoveries of them in any part of the Scriptures; and that he hath done eminently in the latter part of this Book of Job.

Now if God be thus pleaſed in declaring the parts of natural Creatures, How much more is he pleaſed in declaring the parts and excellencies, or thoſe moſt excellent and amiable parts of the new Creature! That is, the excellencies of man in his inner man. David ſaith (Pſal. 147. 10, 11.) He delighteth not in the ſtrength of the Horſe, he taketh no pleaſure in the leggs of a man. The Lord taketh pleaſure in them that fear him, in thoſe that hope in his mercy; and with them he is much taken: He is infinitely more pleaſed in ſpeaking of their parts, and powers, and comely proportion, than in thoſe of Leviathan, or of any the moſt comely and beautiful Creature in the World. Jeſus Chriſt could not conceal the parts, the power, nor the comely proportion of his Spouſe, that is, of his Church (Cant. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4.) Behold, thou art fair my love, behold, thou art fair, thou haſt Doves eyes within thy locks, thy hair is as a flock of Goats that appear from mount Gilead; thy teeth are like a flock of Sheep, that are even ſhorn, &c. Thy lips are like a thread of ſcarlet; thy ſpeech is comely; thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks; thy neck is like the tower of David; thy breaſts are like two young Roes, that are twins, which feed among the Lillies. Thus Jeſus Chriſt, you ſee, was ſo far from concealing, that he gave his divine rhetorick full ſcope to depaint all the lineaments, parts, powers, and comely proportion of his Spouſe, the Church. Jeſus Chriſt was ſo raviſht with the beauty which himſelf had put upon the Church, that like an amorous wooer, he could not (if I may ſo ſpeak) contain himſelf from crying up her comely proportion. The rareſt bodily beauty takes the heart, and affects the eye of Chriſt, no more than the gaſtly appearance of a rotting carcaſe, unleſs he ſees ſpiritual beauty there too; and where he ſees that, he is highly pleaſed, though the Body, where ſuch a Soul lodges, hath an appearance as little attractive or deſireable, as that of a rotting carcaſe.

Thirdly, Conſider the reaſon why the Lord inſiſts ſo much in declaring the parts and powers of Leviathan; the reaſon was, that God might declare his own power: It was not for Leviathans ſake that God declared his parts, &c. but that he might declare himſelf in Leviathan.

Hence Note, The parts, powers, and comely proportions of the Creature, clearly evidence the excellencies of God.

The Lord chiefly proclaimed his own name, when he proclaimed the name of Leviathan (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the Creation of the World are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead. The unſeen God hath made all things, that he may be ſeen in them. When he makes a Comment upon his own works, why is it? But that he may make a Comment upon himſelf, and expound his own glory in them. And as the excellencies of the Lord are ſeen in the works of Creation, ſo in the works of providence; and he hath therefore made ſo many declarations of them to us, that his power, wiſdom, and juſtice may ſhine through them to us (Pſal. 75. 1.) That thy name is neer, thy wondrous works declare. And he ſaid to Pharaoh (Exod. 9. 16.) For this cauſe have I raiſed thee up, for to ſhew in thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout all the Earth. All that the Lord doth to, or in the Creature, is to get himſelf a name, and a glory; therefore let us give God the glory of his power, wiſdom and goodneſs in all his works. It was the ſaying of one of the Ancients, A Pagan may deny that there is a Chriſt, but a Pagan cannot deny Almighty God. A Pagan may deny Chriſt, for that's meerly matter of faith; but ſenſe will lead a Pagan to believe there is a God, or ſome omnipotent power that hath wrought all theſe things. If we ſee a ſtream, that aſſures us there is a Spring or Fountain; if we ſee a goodly Palace built, that aſſures us it had a builder; a maker. And if the ſtream be full, what is the fountain? If the Palace built be great and magnificent, how great, how magnificent was the builder! Every Houſe (as the Author to the Hebrews ſaid upon another occaſion, Chap. 3. 4.) is builded by ſome man, but he that built all things is God.

Negare Paganus Chriſtum poteſt; negare Deum omnipotentem non poteſt. Auguſt. ſer. 139. de Temp.

Fourthly, Seeing the Lord is pleaſed to read ſuch a natural Philoſophy Lecture upon this Creature, we may take this Obſervation from it.

God would have man know the parts and powers of the Creatures.

Why doth the Lord in this Book, ſpeak at large of them, and of their powers, but that we may take notice of them, and underſtand them? Or that we ſhould ſearch and ſtudy them? What the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks concerning the works of providence, is true of the Lords works in nature (Pſal. 111. 2.) The works of the Lord are great. And (verſ. 4.) He hath made his wonderful works to be remembred; that is, that they ſhould be ſpoken of and memoriz'd. And therefore having ſaid at the beginning of the ſecond verſe, The works of the Lord are great, he adds in the cloſe of it, Sought out of all them that have pleaſure therein. His work is honourable and glorious, &c. The works of God are to be ſearched to the bottom (though their bottom cannot be found) by all thoſe that have pleaſure, and delight either in God, or in his works; and they therefore ſearch them out alſo, becauſe they increaſe and better their knowledg of God the Creator, by increaſing and bettering their knowledg about the Creature.

From the whole verſe we may infer,

Firſt, If God will not conceal the parts, the power, and comlineſs of his Creatures, then let not us conceal the power, the glory, and the excellency of God: Yea, let us with heart and tongue declare the glorious perfections of God, how holy, how juſt, how wiſe, how merciful, how patient and long-ſuffering a God he is. When God makes the Creature known to us, he would much more have us know himſelf, and make him known. David's heart was ſet upon this duty (Pſal. 9. 14.) Thou haſt lifted me up from the gates of death, that I may ſhew forth all thy praiſe, in the gates of the daughter of Sion. As if he had ſaid, This, O Lord, was thy deſign in lifting me up from the gates of death, that is, from deadly danger, or killing diſeaſes, that I might declare thy praiſe in Sions gates, or, that I might declare how praiſe-worthy thou art to all who come into the gates of Sion. And again (Pſal. 118. 17.) I ſhall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord. In the fourtieth Pſalm, which is a Prophecy of Chriſt, he ſpeaks in the words of the Text (verſ. 10.) I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation, I have not concealed thy loving kindneſs and thy truth from the great congregation. As the Lord ſaith here concerning Leviathan, I will not conceal his parts, ſo ſaith the Prophet, I will not conceal his loving kindneſs and truth, &c. Which, as it is moſt true of Chriſt, whoſe work it was to do ſo, as alſo the end of all his works, ſo it ſheweth what we ought to do, and what ſhould be the end of all our works, not to conceal the righteouſneſs and goodneſs of God, but declare them in the great congregation. And as Chriſt declared the glory of the Father, ſo ſhould we the glory of Chriſt, We read the Church engaged in this. As I ſhewed before, Chriſt could not conceal the parts of the Church, ſo the Church could not conceal the parts of Chriſt (Cant. 5. 9.) There the queſtion is put to the Church; What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou doſt thus charge us? The Church being asked this queſtion, will not conceal the parts, nor the power, nor the comely proportion of Chriſt her Beloved, but gives a copious Narrative of his gracious excellencies (verſ. 10.) My Beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefeſt among ten thouſand; his head is as moſt fine Gold, his locks are buſhy, and black as a Raven; his eyes are as the eyes of Doves by the Rivers of waters, waſhed with milk, and fitly ſet; his cheeks are as a bed of ſpices, as ſweet flowers; his lips like Lillies, dropping ſweet ſmelling myrrh; his hands are as Gold-rings, ſet with Beryle; his belly is as bright Ivory, overlaid with Saphyrs; his legs are as pillars of marble, ſet upon ſockets of fine Gold; his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the Cedar; his mouth is ſweet, yea, he is altogether lovely, This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O Daughters of Jeruſalem. Thus, as Chriſt concealed not the parts of the Church, ſo the Church concealed not the parts, the power, and comely proportion of Chriſt. And did we more conſider who Chriſt is, and what he is, both in himſelf, and unto us, we ſhould be more, both in admiring within our ſelves, and in reporting to others, his parts, his power, and comely proportion.

Secondly, If God hath not concealed the knowledg of his Creatures from us, if he hath not concealed the parts, &c. of Leviathan from us, Then certainly he will not conceal the knowledg of himſelf, and of his Son, from us. We may get to Heaven, or be ſaved, though we know not the Creatures thus diſtinctly; but without the knowledg of God in Chriſt, we know no ſalvation (Acts 4. 12.) If therefore the Lord hath acquainted us thus particularly with the knowledg of the Creatures, which is an inferior and not ſo neceſſary a knowledg, doubtleſs he hath acquainted us with the knowledg of himſelf, which is altogether neceſſary. This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent (John 17. 3.) It is an uſeful knowledg to know the Creature, to know the Leviathan; but it is of abſolute neceſſity to know God the Father, Son and Spirit. God hath not concealed himſelf from us, nor his will from us, neither what he would have us do and believe, nor what he will do for us. The Apoſtle Paul could ſay to the Church at Epheſus, I have not ſhunned to declare to you the whole counſel of God (Acts 20. 27.) The Lord hath not ſhunned to declare his counſel for our direction, for our inſtruction, for our caution, and for our conſolation; he will not conceal the knowledg of himſelf from us, in what is needful for us to know unto ſalvation.

Deus non deficit in neceſſariis.

The Lord having thus prefaced in his purpoſe to declare the parts, &c. of Leviathan, comes in the next words to declare his parts.

Verſe 13. Who can diſcover (or uncover, as ſome) the face of his Garment.

That is, his Garment. The word rendred face is redundant. As to flie from the face of a man, is to flie from a man; and to flie from the face of the Sword, is no more than to flie from the Sword. The face of any thing ſtrictly taken, is the ſuperficies of a thing, or that which is uppermoſt. The face of the Earth is the upper part of the Earth, not the whole Earth. But here the face of Leviathans Garment, is his whole Garment.

But then the queſtion is, what is this Garment? I may give you a fourſold anſwer.

First, Some learned Interpreters are of opinion, that the Sea it ſelf is here intended by this Garment, becauſe the Whale doth, as it were, wrap himſelf in the waters, as we do in a Garment. The Sea is his Garment, ſaith Mr. Broughton; who can take that from him, and bring him to Land?

Quis poteſt illam è mari in ſiccum adducere, & nudam ſiſtere coram hominibus? Jun. Piſc.

Secondly, Others conceive, that by this Garment, we are to underſtand, the skin of the Leviathan. The Natural Garment of every Creature is skin. At firſt mans, not only Natural, but only Garment, was his skin, and afterward his artificial Garment was made of skins. Who can diſcover the skin of the Leviathan? That is, who can flay off his skin, and ſo ſtrip him of his Garment?

Thirdly, Others who interpret this Garment, the skin, yet conceive it ſpoken, not of the skin of his whole Body but the skin about his face, and which hangeth over his eyes, which no man is ſo hardy (unleſs he be fool-hardy) as to open and take away.

Indumentum ceti vocat cutem, qua tanquam indumento tegitur. q. d. quis detraxit ei cutem? quis excoriavit eum? Druſ. Merc.

De balenæ ſcribitur quod oculi ejus gravi ſuperciliorum pondere operiuntur & prominentia illa quaſi veſtiuntur; nemoque audet corium illud, quod facies indumenti appellatur attollere, confeſtim à bellua vorandus. Paraph.

Fourthly, Some take theſe words as a proverbial ſpeech, who can take away a piece of his skin, or touch his skin? As we commonly ſay of a proud and wrathful man, who dares touch him, or pull off ſo much as a ſingle hair from his beard?

Parœmialis locutio eſſe videtur, q. d. quis audet vel cuticulæ ejus particulam detrahere: ut de homine ſuperbo & iracundo dicimus; ne pilum quidem barbæ audes ei extrahere. Bold.

I ſhall pitch upon the ſecond interpretation, that by the Garment of Leviathan is meant his skin, which is his Natural Garment. There are many remarkable things ſpoken afterwards in this Chapter, about the skin of Leviathan; here 'tis called the Garment.

Hence Note, God hath given every Creature ſome kind of Garment or covering.

The Whale hath his Garment; he could not abide the water without it. All Trees and Plants have a Garment, the rind or bark; they could not abide the Air without it. Every Beaſt and Bird hath a Garment; they could not abide either heat or could without it. 'Tis ſaid of man in the ſtate of innocency, that he was naked (Gen. 2. 18.) And the man and the woman were both naked, and were not aſhamed: Yet they were not quite naked, they had a Natural Garment, though not an artificial one, their skin; yea, they had a better Natural Garment than their skin, their innocency, and that was the reaſon, why they were not aſhamed. Since the Fall, mans Natural Garment is not enough to keep him from either cold or ſhame, he muſt have an artificial Garment over that; nor is any artificial Garment, how thick, or rich, or coſtly, or faſhionable ſoever, enough to keep him from ſhame, he muſt have a Spiritual one; he muſt (as the Apoſtle exhorts, Rom. 13. 14.) Put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; he muſt put on the new man, which after God is Created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs (Eph. 4. 24.) elſe he hath reaſon to be aſhamed. All are naked, till they put on this Garment, Chriſt and his Graces. And they that have put on this Garment, ſhall be clothed with the Garment of joy and glory. Being clothed thus, we ſhall not be found naked, as the Apoſtles word is (2 Cor. 5. 3.) The Lord hath beſtowed a Garment upon every Creature, and upon man, Garments of beauty and glory. Who can diſcover the face of his Garment?

Or who can come to him with his double bridle?

There is much contending about the meaning of theſe words, or what is meant by this double bridle; but I ſhall not make any ſtay about it.

The Text may be read thus: Who can come within his double bridle. The Geneva Tranſlation is near ours; Who can come to him with a double bridle? But what is this double bridle?

First, Some underſtand this double bridle as a part of Leviathan. Who can come to his double bridle? Or into the doubling of his bridle? As the verdure or greenneſs of graſs is put for green graſs, ſo (ſay ſome) the duplicature or doubling of his bridle, is nothing elſe but his double bridle, that is, his jaws or mouth, which have ſome reſemblance to a bridle when they are opened, or at their end. Now according to this reading, the meaning is, who dares come within his lips or jaws, which look like a double bridle? Surely no man dares make ſuch an adventure, ſeeing his jaws are ſo vaſt, or wide, and terrible, that it may even ſtrike a man of courage with terror, or into a fit of trembling to look into them.

Intelligit os aut labia, quæ diducta fræni duplicati ſpeciem habent. Druſ.

Secondly, Others (becauſe the jaws are ſpoken of afterwards) underſtand this double bridle, of any thing which man may attempt to put into his jaws to ſubdue him with; as if it had been ſaid, who can coerce or bridle him, though he have never ſo ſtrong a bridle, though he have a double bridle? The word rendred bridle, properly ſignifies the rein of a bridle. There are two words by which a bridle is expreſſed, the one ſignifying the bit, which is put into the mouth of a Horſe, the other the head-ſtall and reins. which a Horſeman holdeth in his hands. Here we may take it for the whole bridle, and that the ſtrongeſt bridle, as we render, a double bridle: As if it had been ſaid, who dares come near Leviathan, as we commonly do to a Horſe, to put a bridle into his mouth? Who will undertake to halter or bridle him, with all his skill and ſtrength? Thus the Relative His doth not reſpect Leviathan, but the man who comes to bridle him: And this is moſt probable, becauſe, if by the double bridle we underſtand the jaws of Leviathan, this would be the ſame with what is ſpoken plainly in the next words.

Fræna nominantur eæ partes quæ utrinq; ad maxillas deſinunt. Quis cum fræno duplicato audeat accedere ad eum, ut ejus rictui inſerat, ſicut fit equo. Sed malo parabolice intelligere pro labiis. Merc.

Verſe 14. Who can open the doors of his face?

The Lord compareth the gaping jaws of Leviathan to doors, to which alſo the lips are compared in Scripture (Pſal. 141. 3.) Keep the door of my lips. As by a Metaphor our lips are called doors, ſo Leviathans jaws bear the ſimilitude of a two-leav'd door; which, who can open? This ſeems to carry on the alluſion to a Horſe, whoſe mouth muſt be opened before he can be bridled. Who can force Leviathan to gape, that he may put a bridle into his mouth? That which is ſaid of him in the latter part of the verſe, may make any one afraid to do ſo, for

His teeth are terrible round about, or terrour is round about his teeth.

His teeth are not to be meddled with, they are ſo terrible. As the holy Prophet ſaid to Paſhur, that falſe Prophet, Thy name ſhall be called Magor Miſſabib, terrour round about (Jer. 20. 2.) So the teeth of the Leviathan are terrour round about. If any one come near him, he will ſee reaſon enough to be afraid. His teeth are terrible. Dread dwells round about his teeth; and why ſo? Why are his teeth ſo terrible? Surely, becauſe they are ſo hurtful, he being able to tear any man to pieces, or to break a mans bones with his teeth.

Per gyrum dentium ejus formido. Hieron.

Hence Note, That is terrible to us, which we perceive hurtful to us.

The teeth of Leviathan are terrible round about, becauſe he can ſoon cruſh thoſe that come near him with his teeth. Now, if that be terrible, which we ſee can hurt us; Let us remember how terrible the unſeen God is! His teeth as I may ſay) are terrible round about. The Apoſtle tells us (ſo, while he ſaith (2 Cor. 5 11.) Knowing the terror of the Lord (that is, knowing how terrible the Lord is) we perſwade men. God loves to ſave, but he can deſtroy us, ſooner than Leviathan can cruſh us, were we between his teeth. The conſideration of the terribleneſs that is in any Creature, ſhould lead us to conſider how terrible the Lord is to thoſe who provoke him. Are the teeth of a Leviathan, or teeth and paws of a Lion terrible? Is the ſting of a Serpent, or the poiſon of Aſps terrible? How terrible then is the wrath of God! As what is ſweet, and comfortable to us in the Creature, ſhould lead us to conſider how ſurpaſſing ſweet and comfortable God is; ſo that which is dreadful, and terrible in the Creature, ſhould lead us to conſider how dreadful and terrible God is. And as it is good for us, often to ſay unto our ſelves, O how good is God! So to ſay, O how terrible is God! Yea, David would have us ſay ſo unto God (Pſal. 63. 3.) Say unto God (that is, acknowledg with admiration) how terrible art thou in thy works! And (verſ. 5.) Come and ſee the works of God; he is terrible in his doings towards the Children of men. Yea, God is terrible to his own people (Pſal. 68. 35.) O God! thou art terrible out of thy holy places, that is, out of the Church and Church aſſemblies: The Lord many times declares himſelf very terribly in thoſe ſacred aſſemblies. How terrible was God in his Church, when he devoured Nadab and Abihu with fire, for offering ſtrange fire before him, which he commanded not! (Levit. 10. 1, 2.) How terrible was the Lord out of his Church, when he ſtruck Ananias and Saphira dead! (Acts 5. 5, 10.) how terrible was the Lord out of his holy place, the Church, to the Corinthians! concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 11: 30.) For this cauſe (that is, their unworthy partaker of the Lords Supper) many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep. God deals terribly with thoſe who are not regardful of him, who prepare not themſelves with due and reverential reſpect to his holineſs, for holy duties. He is a jealous God, and he will not hold them guiltleſs (that is, he will hold them very guilty, or deal with them as with guilty perſons) who take his name in vain (Exod. 20. 7.) When the Law was given, ſo terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake (Heb. 12. 21.) The Lord appeared thus terrible at the giving of the Law, to ſhew how terrible he will be to ſinners, who tranſgreſs the Law, and repent not of, nor turn from their ſins and tranſgreſſions; yea, the Lord (for their trial) ſhews himſelf very terrible to good men; to broken-hearted and repenting ſinners. Heman had long and ſad experience of this (Pſal. 88. 15.) I am afflicted, and ready to die from my youth up: While I ſuffer thy terrours, I am diſtracted. And for this Job made that grievous complaint (Chap. 6. 4.) The arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poiſon whereof drinketh up my Spirit, the terrours of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me. Now if the Lord make ſuch a terrible War upon Saints, if he terrifie them, even till he hath diſtracted them; how will he draw up his terrours as an army, or his army of terrours, in battle array againſt the wicked and ungodly! How often doth the Lord expreſs himſelf by terrible things againſt ſuch? As he ſometimes deſtroyeth ſinners ſecretly, or without any appearance of terrour (Hoſea. 5. 12.) I will be unto Ephraim as a moth. So often openly, he comes upon them as a Lion, or as a Bear, (Lament. 3. 10.) He was unto me as a Bear lying in wait, and as a Lion in ſecret places. The Lion and Bear often lie cloſe, and in ſecret places, to wait for their prey; but they no ſooner get them within their reach or danger, but they riſe up and devour them openly.

Again, If we are afraid to meddle with terrible things? How ſhould we fear to meddle with ſin! Sin hath terrible teeth, it will bite like a Serpent (Prov. 23. 32.) and tear like a Lion. 'Tis ſin that maketh all things terrible to us. God himſelf is not terrible, but as we are ſinners: Sin hath made all things terrible, and troubleſome to us that are ſo. The teeth of Leviathan had not been terrible to man, if man had not ſinned againſt God. His teeth are terrible round about.

Beza ſeems to object from this part of the deſcription of Leviathan, that the Whale cannot be meant by Leviathan, becauſe the Whale hath no teeth.

I anſwer, Firſt, Though Whales, catcht by our Seamen, have no teeth properly taken, yet they have ſomewhat which is Analogical to teeth, they have that in their mouths, which is as terrible as teeth.

And Secondly, Naturaliſts tell us, and Beza himſelf confeſſeth, that there are many fiſhes of the Whaley kind, which have very terrible teeth. And though Bochartus inſiſteth much upon the teeth of the Crocodile, which for number are threeſcore, and for their nature terrible enough; yet he doth not at all improve this part of Leviathans deſcription againſt the Whale, which, I ſuppoſe, he would have done, had he found it unapplicable to the Whale.

Phyſeterem & Orcam præcipuè dentatos dicunt.

Now as Leviathan is armed with teeth, as offenſive weapons, to hurt others, and to be a terrour to them, ſo with defenſive arms to ſecure himſelf from hurt, as it followeth,

Verſe 15. His ſcales are his pride, ſhut up together as with a cloſe ſeal.
16. One is ſo near to another, that no air can come between them.
17. They are joined one to another, they ſtick together, that they cannot be ſundred.

In theſe three verſes Leviathan is deſcribed. Firſt, By the confidence which he hath in his ſcales; they are his pride, being like bucklers of braſs. Secondly, By the natural cloſeneſs of his ſcales; ſo cloſe they are, as if ſealed, that no air can come between them. Thirdly, By the indiſſolubleneſs of his ſcales; they are joined ſo faſt one to another, that they cannot be ſundred.

His ſcales are his pride.] The ſtrong ſhields have pride, ſaith Maſter Broughton; that is, his ſcales, which are as ſo many ſhields for his defence, are his pride. The word is not elſewhere rendred ſcales, but ſtrong pieces (Chap. 40. 18.) and here it may be rendred, ſtrong pieces of ſhields, ſcales reſembling ſhields, both in their faſhion and uſe.

His ſcales are his pride, that is, he is proud of his ſcales. Whatſoever a man is proud of, may be called his pride. If a man be proud of his riches, then his riches are his pride; if of his parts, then his parts are his pride: if of his ſtrength and beauty, then ſtrength and beauty are his pride. Leviathan's ſcales are his pride, that is, he is proud of his ſcales.

Here again it is objected, as before about teeth, The Whale hath no ſcales, therefore Leviathan cannot be the Whale. The learned Bochartus inſiſts much upon this argument againſt the Whale, proving alſo by many authorities (which is clear to ſight in thoſe carkaſſes of Crocodiles which are among us) that the Crocodile hath great and ſtrong ſcales, and thoſe very cloſely laid, or joined together. The objection hath much weight in it, yet theſe two anſwers are given to it.

Balenarum & Elephantorum cutes ſumme duræ ſunt, & propemodum inſenſibiles. Galenus l. 3. de uſu partium.

First, Though Whales taken in theſe parts of the World have no ſcales, properly ſo called, yet they have a very thick and hard skin, reſembling ſcales. The skin of the Elephant, and of the Whale, is extream hard, and almoſt inſenſible, ſaid the Oracle among Phyſitians.

Quot ei ſquamæ tot clypei quibus adverſus omnem vim tegitur.

Arianus memorat ex Nearcho viſum cetum in littus ejectum cubitorum quinquaginta corio ſquamoſo tam craſſo, ut cubitum æquaret.

Secondly, It is reported, that ſome Whales, or Whales in ſome parts of the World, have huge ſcales. There was ſeen caſt upon the Sea-ſhore (ſaith one) a monſtrous fiſh of fifty cubits long, which had ſcales all over of a cubit thick. Theſe were ſtrong ſcales indeed: And though we have not known or heard of any ſuch in theſe parts of the World, yet who can ſay knowingly there are none ſuch in any part of the World, as litterally anſwer the deſcription of Leviathans ſcales. I grant, that the three exceptions, which Bochartus takes againſt the teſtimony of Nearchus are very conſiderable. Firſt, That he ſtands alone, and is but a ſingle witneſs. Secondly, That he doth not ſay he ſaw ſuch a Whale, but only heard it of certain Marriners, who ſaid they ſaw ſuch a one; which ſort of men are not always to be credited. And he adds, Thirdly, That though Nearchus ſhould have ſaid, that himſelf had ſeen ſuch a Whale, yet little credit were to be given him, he being an Author of no good credit. Theſe conſiderations, I confeſs, may ſomewhat weaken the teſtimony of Nearchus; yet I ſee no reaſon, why they ſhould utterly infringe and diſable it. For, firſt, one man may ſpeak truth in it ſelf, as well as two or three, though the teſtimony of one be not ſo authentick to others, as the teſtimony of two or three. Secondly, Though ſome Mariners over-reach in their reports, yet it doth not follow that they did ſo from whom that report came. And, Thirdly, Though Nearchus be juſtly charged with failing, and falſeneſs in ſome things, yet none can ſay, his whole Book is nothing elſe but a bundle of lies. And if there be any truths in his writings, as I ſuppoſe, no man will deny, but there are many; then why this report of a Whale, or mighty fiſh, of that kind, with great ſcales, may not be reckoned among the truths contained in his writings, rather than among the lies, let the Reader judg.

Now though it be queſtioned, what Animal this Leviathan is? Yet 'tis out of queſtion, that he hath ſcales upon him, or that which amounts to ſcales; for (ſaith the Lord) his ſcales are his pride.

Geneva Tranſlation.

גאוה Superbia, magnificentia, verbum medium.

Some render the word thus; The majeſty of his ſcales is like ſtrong ſhields. He is like a Curaſſier or an Horſe-man, armed Cap-a-Pe, or all over. But I ſhall abide in our own reading, His ſcales are his pride, or his height; his Spirit is heightned by them.

Hence Note, Firſt; There is a kind of pride in brutes and irrational Creatures.

Pride ſtrictly taken, is proper to man; yet there is more than a ſhadow of pride in brutes. Even as a man is proud of fine new cloths, ſo is a Horſe of his trappings; or as a man is proud of a ſtrong gliſtering ſhield, ſo is Leviathan of his ſcales. And I may ſafely ſay, that as ſome Beaſts are proudiſh, ſo all proud men, ſo far as they are proud, are brutiſh. It is not for want of grace only, but for want of a due exerciſe of reaſon, that any man is proud.

Secondly, Note, Extraordinary attainments or injoyments, are occaſions of pride.

Why are Leviathans ſcales his pride? 'Tis becauſe they are ſo ſtrong and cloſe, that he thinks himſelf ſafe from all injuries under their ſhelter. The word properly ſignifieth a buckler of molten braſs. They who are armed with ſuch a defenſive weapon, fear neither Sword nor Spear. Any great injoyments or attainments, are occaſions of pride. The Peacock is proud of his feathers, and the Horſe of his ſtrength; and men are proud of their riches and worldly abundance (1 Tim. 6. 17.) Charge them that are rich in this World, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches. Some good men, no ſooner get a few golden ſcales, or their ſcales a little gilded, but they begin to be proud; therefore the Apoſtle gave Timothy that charge, to warn ſuch rich men as profeſſed the true faith of the Goſpel to take heed of high-mindedneſs. And as men are apt to be proud of their riches, ſo are women of their beauty, and the learned of their knowledg, and the wiſe of their underſtanding, and great men of their power, and godly men (if they have but gifts beyond their brethren) are apt to be proud of them: And as ſome are proud of the gifts given them by God, ſo many are proud of the gifts given by them to men, I mean, of their good deeds or works of charity. Salvation (ſaith the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 2. 9.) is not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt. If ſalvation were by working (either by works of grace, or gracious works, towards God, or works of charity towards men) men would be boaſting, which is properly the work of pride. Again, men are very apt to be proud of their priviledges. The Nation of the Jews, how proud were they of that priviledg, that they were Abraham's Children, that they had the Law and Temple? Whence the Apoſtle left that ſerious admonition to the Gentiles (Rom. 11. 20.) Becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith; be not high minded, but fear. Do not pride your ſelves in your priviledges as they did, leſt you alſo be broken off as they are. Laſtly, ſome have been proud, even of their graces; that of the Apoſtle argueth it (1 Cor. 4. 6, 7.) Who hath made thee to differ? (thou haſt grace, and another hath none; who hath made this difference between thee and him? Hath not God?) what haſt thou, that thou haſt not received? Why then doſt thou boaſt as if thou hadſt not received it? Even they that have received grace, are in danger of boaſting, as if they had not received it. I may ſay, as of all proud men, ſo of all men, who are but toucht with pride, as here it is ſaid of Leviathan, Their ſcales (ſome attainments or other) are their pride. And hence we may infer, If great attainments are an occaſion of pride; then

Let us pray for an humble heart in high injoyments and attainments. If you have ſtrong ſcales, much ſtrength about you, or in you, beg hard for humility; be not like Leviathan, let not your ſcales be your pride. His ſcales are his pride,

Shut up together as with a cloſe or ſtrait ſeal.

Things ſtraitly ſealed up, can hardly be parted. How cloſe the ſcales of Leviathan are, is further ſhewed, Verſe 16. One is ſo near to another, that no air can come between.

Ne ſpiraculum quidem incedit per eas. Hieron.

The Lord doth not ſay, you cannot put a ſtraw, or a hair between, but no air can come between. The air is the moſt ſubtile thing in nature; the air paſſeth through not only little cranies, but imperceptible pores; yet the juncture of Leviathans ſcales is ſo cloſe, that the ſubtile air cannot paſs between. The next verſe is only an heightning of the ſame thing.

Verſe 17. They are joined one to another, they ſtick together that they cannot be ſundred.

Vir fratri adhæret.

Scales are lap't one over another, like the tiles of an Houſe they ſtick like boards glued. The Hebrew is, they are joined a man to his Brother. 'Tis common in that language to call two things joined together a man and his Brother, or a woman and her Siſter. Thus (Exod. 25. 20.) And the Cherubims ſhall ſtretch forth their wings on high, covering the Mercy-ſeat with their wings, and their faces ſhall look one to another; The Hebrew is, ſhall look a man to his Brother. Again (Exod. 26. 5.) Moſes giving direction about the loops, for the Curtains of the Tabernacle, ſaith, Fifty loops ſhalt thou make in the one Curtain, and fifty loops ſhalt thou make in the edge of the Curtain, that is, in the coupling of the ſecond, that the loops may take hold one of another; the Text is, a woman of her Siſter. Thus union is expreſſed; becauſe 'tis ſuppoſed a man and his Brother, a woman and her Siſter, keep near together in love. Leviathans ſcales are joined as cloſe together as a man and his Brother, or as a woman and his Siſter, that is, they are moſt cloſely joined, or as ſome take the alluſion, they ſtick together as Priſoners, that are linked and chained one to another. This union or cloſeneſs of Leviathans ſcales, ſhews both his ſtrength and his ſafety.

Hence Note, Unity is a great means to keep any ſtrong and ſafe.

How cometh Leviathan to be ſo ſafe? His ſcales are cloſe together. If he had never ſo ſtrong ſcales, were they not joined together, they could be no ſafety to him; union makes every thing ſtronger and ſafer. A company of arrows, bound up together, how ſtrong are they? By which Sylurus invited his Sons to unity. Ahab, no doubt, had very ſtrong armour, armour of proof, but it had joints in it (1 Kings 22.34.) And ſo, A certain man drew a bow at a venture, and ſmote the King of Iſrael, between the joints of his harneſs. Death, the deadly arrow, made its entrance at the joints of his Armour. Weak things cloſely joined together become ſtrong, and ſtrong things wanting union prove weak. Satan is the ſtrong man Armed, and the Scriptures of truth tell us, that Satans Kingdom is not divided, there is no caſting out Devils by Belzebub. Satan and his agents ſtick together, as the ſcales of Leviathan, in oppoſing the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt (Pſal. 83. 5, 6, 7.) They have conſulted together with one conſent, they are confederate againſt thee. Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek, the Philiſtines, with the Inhabitants of Tyre, Aſſur alſo is joined with them. Theſe were all cleaving together, as cloſe as the ſcales of Leviathan, in oppoſition to Iſrael. Herod and Pilate, once no good friends, laid down all their animoſities, and cleaved cloſe together, like the ſcales of Leviathan, to crucifie Chriſt; and ſo have evil men, in all ages, to hinder the progreſs of his Kingdom. It is ſaid (Revel. 17. 12, 13.) of the ten horns (which are there expounded to be ten Kings) theſe have one mind. They who ſeldom agree in their own affairs, agree all in aſſiſting the Beaſt, as 'tis there ſaid, Theſe have one mind, and ſhall give their power and ſtrength unto the Beaſt. The Scripture takes notice of this their union, not as a good thing, but as a ſtrange thing; that ten Kings, of different Nations, of different Intereſts and diſpoſitions, ſhould agree in giving their power and ſtrength, that is, their civil power, the power of their Kingdoms to the Beaſt; that is, to uphold his Kingdom, which is, doubtleſs, the Kingdom of Antichriſt. How may this ſhame thoſe, who profeſs a love to, and themſelves ſubjects of the Kingdom of Chriſt, for their diviſions! Godly men ſhould cleave together, as the ſcales of the Leviathan which cannot be ſundred, in that which is good. And are not their differences and diviſions, their diſtances and breaches to be lamented? Which are ſo very great and wide, that not only the thin circumambient Air, but groſs circumventing Bodies, may come between them. So far are they oftentimes from cleaving together, in duty to God and man, like the ſcales of Leviathan, that they hang together (as we ſay) like ropes of ſand. The Evangeliſt Luke ſpeaks of a time (Acts 4. 32.) When all believers were like the ſcales of Leviathan, Then the multitude of them that believed (that is, all they that believed) were of one heart, and of one Soul. Here they were not only joined, like the ſcales of the Leviathan, but they were joined, as if they were all but one ſcale. Godly men ſhould carry it towards one another, as members of the ſame Body, and acted by the ſame Spirit. They who have relation to thoſe ſeven ones mentioned (Epheſ. 4. 4, 5, 9.) ſhould labour to be one, ſhould be found endeavouring (as 'tis there ſaid, verſ. 3.) To keep the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace.

Further, by way of alluſion. The luſts of carnal men in general, are like the ſcales of Leviathan, ſticking ſo cloſe to them, and one to another, that the Spirit of of God, in the Miniſtery of his word finds no paſſage between, till he makes one, yea, hardneſs of heart, obſtinacy and impenitency are expreſſed by this word (Lam. 3. 65.) Give them, O Lord (ſaith he) hardneſs of heart, thy curſe unto them. Give them ſorrow of heart; ſo our Tranſlation renders it. The Hebrew is, Give them a ſhield upon their heart. The word is the very ſame, which is here Tranſlated ſcales, the ſcales of Leviathan being as ſo many ſhields, ſo ſtrong and thick, that nothing can enter. It is ſad, when we have ſcales on our eyes. It was ſaid of Saul, when in that viſion he was ſtricken blind, and before he received his ſight, ſcales fell from his eyes. Ananias being ſent to him, ſaid (Acts 9. 17.) Brother Saul, the Lord (even Jeſus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou cameſt) hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receive thy ſight, and be filled with the holy Ghoſt; and immediately there fell from his eyes, as it had been ſcales, &c. All men naturally have ſcales on their eyes. It is ſad to have a ſcale on the eye, any thing that doth hinder the ſight of ſpiritual things; but how ſad is it to have ſcales on the heart alſo! To all impenitent perſons, their luſts are as ſo many ſcales and ſhields upon their hearts; and they have ſo many ſcales upon their hearts, and thoſe ſuch hard ones, that nothing but an Almighty power can make entrance or impreſſion. None are in ſo much danger, as they that are fenced and armed with theſe ſcales. It is beſt for man to open a naked breaſt, to receive every ſtroke which the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, makes upon him.

VERS. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.

By his neeſings a light doth ſhine, and his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning.

Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and ſparks of fire leap out.

Out of his noſtrils goeth ſmoak, as out of a ſeething pot, or caldron.

His breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.

In his neck remaineth ſtrength, and ſorrow is turned into joy before him.

The flakes of his fleſh are joined together, they are firm in themſelves, they cannot be moved.

His heart is as firm as a ſtone, yea as hard as a piece of the nether mill-ſtone.

When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid; by reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves.

IN the former context, the Lord ſpake of the covering or skin, of the jaws and teeth, of the face and ſcales of this Leviathan. In this he proceeds yet further, to draw out the deſcription of this vaſt Creature.

First, By his ſtrong neeſings, verſ. 18.

Secondly, By his ſhining eyes, in the latter part of that verſ. 18.

Thirdly, By his flaming mouth (verſ. 19.)

Fourthly, By his ſmoaking noſtrils (verſ. 20.)

Fifthly, By his fiery breath (verſ. 21.)

Sixthly, By his ſtiff neck (verſ. 22.)

Seventhly, By the firmneſs of his fleſh (verſ. 23.)

Eighthly, By the firmneſs and hardneſs of his heart (verſ. 24.)

Ninthly, By a twofold effect of all theſe, even upon the mightieſt of the ſons of men, when he appears to them, or when they behold him in his motions.

Firſt, He makes them afraid (verſ. 25.)

Secondly, He cauſeth them to purifie themſelves, in the cloſe of that verſe. In theſe particulars we have a proſpect of the whole context. I ſhall but lightly touch at the moſt of them, and a little inſiſt upon the laſt, which we ſhall find moſt uſeful for inſtruction and admonition.

The four firſt verſes hold out, upon the matter, the ſame thing, namely, the fierce and furious ſpirit of Leviathan, diſcovered in his neeſings, eyes, mouth, noſtrils, breath, all which are expreſſed by elegant metaphors, alluding to, or by compariſons made with light and fire, with lamps and ſparks, with ſmoak and flame.

Eſt frementis iraſcentiſq; ceti deſcriptio. Bold.

Verſe 18. By his neeſings a light doth ſhine.

The firſt thing deſcribed in the former context, was Leviathans terrible head; the firſt in this, is the power of his brain. Naturaliſts teach us, that neeſing is cauſed by the thin and ſubtile vapours included in the ventricles of the brain, which Nature ſtriving to expel and put forth, cauſeth that which we call neeſing; So then, neeſing is an effect of the expulſive faculty in the brain. The Jewiſh Rabbins have two obſervations about neeſing.

First, They ſay, neeſing is a good ſign in prayer; and the reaſon of it, as I conceive, is this, becauſe it ſhews there is warmth and heat in the brain, and ſome fervency of Spirit in Sternutatio efficitur ex ſubtili vapore incluſo in ventriculis cerebri, conante natura vehementius expellere & expurgare. Galen. l. 2. de ſympt. cauſis. c. 2, 3.

Inter orandum bonum eſt ſignum ſternutare. Sternutamentum bonum eſt ſignum ægroto. Dicta Rabbinorum. Merc.

in the duty. That's the reaſon (I ſuppoſe) why they ſay neeſing is a good ſign in prayer.

Secondly, Both they and others ſay, Neeſing is a good ſign in a ſick man. We ſay commonly, Neeſing is a ſign of health, it ſhews a vigour and quickneſs in the natural ſpirits, reſiding in the brain.

Si rochos edit ſternutanti ſimilis, emicat flamma. Bez.

Balæna ex βάλλειν ab emittendo & fundendo aquas. Iſid.

Ora Balænæ habent in frontibus, ideoque ſumma aqua natantes in ſublime nimbos efflant. Plin. Natur. Hiſt. l. 9. c. 6.

Sternutationes ejus faciunt ſplendorem, dum aqua albeſcens in aere diſpergitur. Piſc.

His neeſings.] But what are theſe neeſings of Leviathan? They who hold Leviathan to be the Crocodile, ſay, when he is ſunning himſelf, or lyeth open with his face to the Sun, this cauſeth him to neeſe or ſneeſe, and then his breath breaking out forcibly at his noſtrils, is like a ſhining light. 'Tis ſaid alſo, that the Whale neeſing, ſpouts out water, at thoſe pipes or holes which he hath placed or made naturally upon his head or forehead (he hath as mouth (as it were) on the top of his head, not to eat with, but to ſpout out water with) as when a man neeſeth, there comes out a vapour at his noſtrils; ſo the Whale is ſuppoſed to neeſe, when he blows out ſhowers of water through thoſe pipes, up into the Air. The word by which the Whale is expreſſed in Latine, ſignifies this action, or, his ſpouting out water; and by theſe ſpoutings or neeſings, we may ſay (as it followeth in the Text)

A light doth ſhine.] Becauſe the water which he ſpouts up into the Air, with a great and vehement force, meeting, as it were, mingling with the light there, looks like light, and hath a great brightneſs in it; ſo that this action of Leviathan, and the effect or concomitant of it, is as applicable to the Whale as to the Crocodile.

And his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning, or, like the dawning of the day.

Aqua quæ per duas fiſtulas quam longiſſimè ſurſum ejaculatur, Balæna, ſplendores dicuntur, quia lucant & candidant. Sanct.

Palpebræ pro oculis, metonymice ſumuntur.

So we Tranſlate theſe words (Job 3.9.) Let it not (that is, let not the night in which I was conceived) ſee the dawning of the day, or (as the Margin hath it) the eye-lids of the morning. Leviathans eyes are ſaid to be like the eye-lids of the morning, becauſe of the lightſomneſs of them. Chriſt ſaith (*Matth.*6.22.) The light of the Body is the eye. We may call it ſo in a double reſpect. Firſt, becauſe the eye is the moſt lightſom part of the Body, or hath moſt light in it. Secondly, becauſe the eye gives or lets in light to the whole Body. They that want eyes, or their eyeſight, dwell in darkneſs. The eyes of Leviathan are not only light in themſelves, but are like the eye-lids (that is, eyes) of the morning. But wherein doth this lightneſs conſiſt? I anſwer, in two things.

Firſt, His eyes are very great, in proportion to his head and body.

Secondly, His eyes are very clear. And ſo Leviathans eyes may be ſaid to be like the eye-lids of the morning; Firſt, in their greatneſs; Secondly, in their brightneſs or clearneſs. It is uſual in Scripture to mention the morning light, when it would expreſs the cleareſt light. The Prophet (*Iſa.*58.8.) aſſuring the Jews of the greateſt outward proſperity, in caſe they kept a true Faſt, ſaith, Then ſhall thy light break forth as the morning. And when the Prophet Amos deſcribes God, making the morning darkneſs (Chap. 4.13.) As alſo, turning the ſhadow of death into the morning (Chap. 5.8.) his meaning is, that the Lord can eaſily, and at pleaſure, change a ſtate of greateſt proſperity, into adverſity; and a ſtate of deepeſt adverſity, into cleareſt or higheſt proſperity.

But ſome may ſay, if the Lord intended to ſet forth the exceeding clearneſs of Leviathans eyes, it might ſeem more proper to have compared them to the light at noon-day, than to the morning light.

I anſwer, Though the light at noon-day is clearer than that in the morning, conſidered in it ſelf; yet conſidering the morning light, with reſpect to its nearneſs or neighbourhood to the foregoing darkneſs, ſo we are more ſenſible of that than of the light at noon-day. Contraries placed neer together, illuſtrate each other. For, as ſoon as the morning appears, light conveys it ſelf all over the Hemiſphear, and makes a wonderful change in the Air. The morning light coming ſuddenly, and immediately after diſmal darkneſs, affects us more than the light at noon-day, though greater and clearer. Leviathans eyes ſhine bright, even like the eyelids or eyes, that is, the light of the morning. The Ancients give report, that Dragons and Serpents have flaming eyes.

Ardentes oculos ſuffectos ſanguine & igne. Virg. l. 2. Æn.

Exilit in ſiccum flammantia lumina torquet. Virg. *l.*3. Georg.

This (ſaith Bochartus) is very true of the Crocodile, whoſe eyes are ſo bright, that the Egyptians uſed to paint a Crocodiles eye, when they ſhould ſignifie the morning light; whereas great Authors write, that the eyes of the Whale are even covered with the weight of their eye-brows, or with fat, and are little bigger than the eyes of ſome ſort of Bullocks; whence it comes to paſs, that the Whale loſing his guide, daſheth againſt Rocks and Sea-ſhallows. Thus he. To which I ſhall only oppoſe the teſtimony of no inconſiderable Writer, who affirms of the Whales in the Seas of Norway, that their eyes in the night time ſhine like a huge flame, ſo that the fiſher-men, who are abroad at Sea, judg them to be great fires. And to what Bochartus ſaith of the Whale, that he is ſo dim-ſighted when deep in the Sea, that he cannot find his way without a guide, I may reply from his own ſhewing out of ſeveral Authors, that the Crocodile is no better at ſeeing when much under water, they teaching that the Crocodiles eyes are dull while in the water, but out of the water very quick or ſharp-ſighted, as if then at laſt he recovered his eye-ſight; and if ſo, he hath no advantage of the Whale in that particular.

Oculi noctu coruſcant, ingentium flammarum modo; Procul enim viſi à piſcatoribus, ignes eſſe grandes putantur. Olaus lib. 21. c. 6.

Verſe 19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and ſparks of fire leap out.

That is, ſomewhat goes out of his mouth like burning lamps and ſparks of fire. This is a demonſtration of the extream natural heat of Leviathan: There's a continual fire in his mouth; then what is in the Kitchin of his ſtomach, for the digeſtion and concoction of his meat? If ſparks of fire leap out of his mouth, as out of the mouth of a furnace, then we may conclude, there's a great fire kept within.

Verſe 20. Out of his noſtrils goeth ſmoak.

We had fire before, and now comes ſmoak. We uſually ſay, Where there's ſmoak there is ſome fire; and ſurely where there is ſo great a heat, there muſt be or hath been ſome ſmoak, Out of his noſtrils goeth a ſmoak. What is ſmoak? 'Tis Air aduſt (ſay Philoſophers) Much heat draws out the airy part of the fewel, and turns it into ſmoak. Leviathan having ſuch a fire in his bowels, needs muſt ſmoak go out of his noſtrils, which are as a double chimney to vent it; or to keep the metaphor in the Text, Smoak goeth out of his noſtrils

Fumus eſt aer aduſtus ex multitudine caloris. Aquin.

As out of a ſeething Pot or Caldron.

The Hebrew is, a blown Pot, becaſe blowing makes a Pot ſeeth quickly and fiercely. A Caldron is a great veſſel, wherein much may be ſodden or boiled at once, and boiling ſends out a great fume or ſmoak. The Hebrew word rendred Caldron, properly ſignifies a copper or brazen Kettle, in which dying ſtuff is boiled for the colouring of cloth. It ſignifies alſo a pond, and ſo a great veſſel like a pond; as that in the Temple was called a Sea, for its greatneſs.

Verſe 21. His breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.

אנמון Ahenum reddidimus ex conjectura, proprie ahenum magnum inſtar ſtagni, quod אנם dicitur. Druſ.

This verſe, with the former three, tend all to one purpoſe. Leviathans heat is ſo vehement, that his breath kindleth coals. The Hebrew is, His ſoul or life kindleth coals. The ſoul and life of irrational Creatures is the ſame, and both are but breath, His breath kindleth coals; that is, his breath is ſo hot, that it will even kindle dead or unkindled coals. Mr. Broughton renders, His breath would ſet coals on fire. The breath of the Whale is not only compared to a great wind, iſſuing out of a pair of bellows, which ſoon kindleth a ſpark into a great fire, but is it ſelf here compared to a fire by a ſtrong Hyperbole, like that which concludes this matter.

And a flame goeth out of his mouth.

That is, a heat as from a flame, or ſuch a heat as a flame giveth.

Theſe four verſes may be improved for our uſe, in two things.

Firſt, To inform us how terrible ſome Creatures are. There is nothing which is not terrible in this; His mouth ſends out a burning lamp, and ſparks of fire; ſmoak goeth out of his noſtrils, coals are kindled by his breath, and a flame goeth out of his mouth. What's the meaning and import of all this? not that Leviathan hath theſe, or doth theſe things indeed; but in his wrath (for this is the deſcription of an inraged Leviathan) he appears as if he were nothing but heat, and would ſet the very Element of Water on fire, and turn the very Billows of the Sea into burning flames.

Secondly, If the Lord hath put ſuch a fierceneſs into this Creature when he is angry, what is there in the Lord himſelf when he is angry! The Lord in his anger is deſcribed like this Leviathan (Pſal. 18. 7, 8.) Then the Earth ſhook and trembled, the Foundation alſo of the Hills moved, and were ſhaken, becauſe he was wroth (what follows?) There went up a ſmoak out of his noſtrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured; coals were kindled by it. The words are almoſt word for word, the ſame with thoſe in the Text. The Lord is ſet forth, as uſhered by fire (Pſal. 50. 2, 3.) Out of Zion, the perfection of Beauty, God hath ſhined. Our God ſhall come, and ſhall not keep ſilence, a fire ſhall devour before him, and it ſhall be very tempeſtuous round about him. Again (Pſal. 97. 2.) Clouds and darkneſs are round about him (verſ. 3.) A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his Enemies round about; that is, he deſtroyeth his Enemies in his anger, as if he conſumed them by fire. Once more (Iſa. 33. 14.) The ſinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurprized the hypocrites; who among us ſhall dwell in the devouring fire? who amongſt us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings? Thus the Scripture ſpeaks of the Lord in his wrath. And doubtleſs the flaming anger of Leviathan, when provoked, is but like a warm Sun-ſhine, compared with the provoked anger, and hot diſpleaſure of God againſt preſumptuous ſinners. Who is able to abide his wrath? who (in ſin) can dwell with thoſe everlaſting burnings? who (unpardoned) can ſtand before the devouring fire, and flames of the Lords diſpleaſure? Thus we have the diſcovery of Leviathans furious heat; he is all in a flame.

Now the Lord having ſhewed what work Leviathan makes with his mouth and noſtrils, which belong to his head, he comes next to his neck.

Verſ. 22. In his neck remaineth ſtrength, and ſorrow is turned into joy before him.

Leviathans head is ſtrongly joyned to the reſt of his body, by his ſtrong neck; yet ſome queſtion whether the Whale hath any neck or no, becauſe no diſtinction (which in other Creatures is viſible) appears between his head and his body. The Learned Bochartus makes this another Argument againſt the Whale, and a little reflects upon Diodate, who joyning fully with him in Opinion, that Leviathan is the Crocodile, yet lets go this hold, yielding that the Crocodile hath no more neck than the Whale, as the neck is taken ſtrictly for that diſcernable diſtance between head and ſhoulders; and though he himſelf grants that ſeveral other Authors, by him alledged, ſay the Crocodile hath no neck, yet he anſwers, 'tis ſafer to credit Ariſtotle, who ſaith the Crocodile hath a neck, and gives this reaſon for it, becauſe thoſe Animals which have no neck at all, cannot move their heads, whereas the Crocodile (by the teſtimony of Pliny, and others) can turn his head upwards, or hold it up backwards to bite his prey.

To this ſome anſwer, and I conceive their anſwer may ſatisfie in this point, That how little, or how undiſcernable ſoever the ſpace is between the head and the body of any Animal, the very joyning or coupling of them together, may be called his neck; and in that ſenſe the Whale hath a neck as well as the Crocodile. To this I may add, that the ſhorter the neck of any Animal is, the ſtronger it is; and that complies fully with what is here ſaid of the neck of Leviathan.

In his neck remaineth ſtrength.] The Hebrew is, Lodgeth. And ſo Mr. Broughton renders, In his neck always lodgeth ſtrength; that is, he is always ſtrong, very ſtrong-neckt; his neck is ſo ſtiff and ſtrong, that ſtrength it ſelf may ſeem to have taken up its reſidence there: That's the Elegancy of the Hebrew. So then, theſe words ſhew the great ſtrength of Leviathan. A ſtiff or thick neck, ſignifies both ſtrength of body, and ſtoutneſs of ſpirit. Naturaliſts ſay, thoſe Creatures are very ſtrong, that are thick neckt, as Bulls, &c. and they are weak that have thin ſlender necks. The Scripture intimates the ſtiffneſs and unyieldingneſs of mans will to the Commands of God, by the ſtiffneſs of his neck (Pſalm 75. 5.) Liſt not up your horn on high, ſpeak not with a ſtiff neck; that is, with a neck that will not bow to the Lords Yoak, nor obey his Commands. Humble ones bow their heads to worſhip God, and yield their necks to his will. For though to bow down the head like a Bull-ruſh for a day, be not the Faſt which God hath choſen (Iſa. 58. 5.) for that is but an outſide repentance, and they who do ſo, may ſtill remain ſtiff-ſpirited and pertinacious in their ſins; yet the bowing of the head hath in it the appearance of a bowed or humbled heart, and a ſtiff neck is the badge of a proud impenitent one. To ſpeak with a ſtiff neck, is to ſpeak arrogantly. Hannah in her Song (1 Sam. 2. 3.) uſeth this language to the ſtiff ones of the world, Talk no more ſo exceeding proudly; let not arrogancy come out of your mouth: we put in the Margin, Let not hardneſs come out of your mouth; that is, let it not appear at your mouths, that your hearts are hard, that your ſpirits are high and ſtiff; ſpeak no more as if you were Leviathans, as if you could not bow your necks. 'Tis good to have a neck ſtrong to bear, but there is nothing worſe than a ſtrong neck that will not bow; yet the ſtrength of Leviathans neck ſeems rather to imply his courage, than his pertinacy, as it followeth, In his neck remaineth ſtrength, Qui collum habent groſſum fortes ſunt, imbecilles autem qui illud habent gracile. Ariſtot. in Phyſiognomicis.

And ſorrow is turned into joy before him.] There are three other readings of theſe words, which I ſhall name, and come to our own:

Firſt, Some thus, In his neck remaineth ſtrength, and before him danceth fear. Several of the Learned inſiſt much upon this Tranſlation, and their meaning is this; all that come near Leviathan, or within ſight of him, are afraid; all the Fiſh in the Sea, and all the Mariners upon the Sea that ſee him, dance or haſt away for fear; as if fear cauſed by him, triumphing over them, danced before him. He makes ſuch a combuſtion by ſtirring the waters, and rolling in them, that he frights every living thing he meets with, none dare ſtand him.

Ante eum exilit mæror. Jun. i. e. mærore afficit omnes obvios; ac ſi de illis triumphans exultaret mæror effectus ab ea humanitus dictum. Jun.

Secondly, Mr. Broughton renders it thus, Before him danceth carefulneſs, that is, (as himſelf gloſſeth) he takes or hath no care, meeting with any Fiſh to feed upon, that his taking thought is a gladneſs. He is ſo ſtrong, that he knows he can Maſter all the Fiſh that comes near him, and can have prey enough for the taking, to ſatisfie his vaſt Stomach, and fill his Belly; therefore he takes no care for to morrow, before him danceth carefulneſs. Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples, take no thought for the morrow: It were well if ſuch carefulneſs danced before us, as Leviathans cares dance before him. We ſay of ſome men, they ſing care away; and all carking, heart-cutting, and dividing cares, ſhould even dance away before all men. The Apoſtles counſel is (1 Cor. 7. 32.) I would have you without carefulneſs, as much as to ſay, let carefulneſs dance before you, or put it from you; uſe the means, and be not ſolicitous about ſucceſſes or iſſues. The more we live by Faith, the leſs we live in care, or the more our cares die; and they whoſe hearts are full of Faith, cannot but have their heads emptied of cares. Some ſay, we have a great Family, many Bellies to fill, and Backs to cloath, how can we be without carefulneſs? Conſider one Leviathan needs more food than many Families, yet he takes no care, God provides for him though he know it not, and will he not provide for thoſe that know him? therefore let carefulneſs dance before you: That's a good reading for our uſe and comfort.

Thirdly, Others tranſlate thus, Before him paſſeth penury. The meaning of that reading is; whereſoever Leviathan comes, he leaves nothing but penury behind him, he devours all before him, and all little enough, ſcarce enough for him, all the Fiſh he meets withal in the Sea, he eats them up: the Sea hardly affords enough to fill his huge Belly, and ſatisfie his hungry appetite. As 'tis ſaid of Behemoth, he thinks he can draw up Jordan, that is, all the waters of Jordan; ſo Leviathan thinks he can draw up the Sea, that is, all the Fiſh in the Sea; ſo that how much ſoever he meets with, he looks upon it as penury, at moſt, as but enough for him. So that this Tranſlation, Before him paſſeth penury, may have or bear theſe two interpretations: Either, Firſt, That he makes all penury where he comes; as its ſaid of the Turkiſh Wars, Where the Grand Signiors Horſe treads, the graſs will not grow, he treads down, and ſpoils all; or, as 'tis ſaid in Scripture of thoſe Enemies, The Land was before them like the Garden of Eden, and behind them as a deſolate Wilderneſs. Or, Secondly, That he thinks all to be but penury and ſcarcity (how plentiful ſoever it is) that is before him. That which may ſuffice many, is ſcarce a morſel, or a mouthful for him; as if all the Fiſh in the Sea could not ſerve him for a Breakfaſt. As 'tis ſaid of Alexander the Great, when he had conquered the known World, he was as hungry and ſharp ſet as ever, he looked upon all as penury, and wiſhed there were another World for him to conquer. Thus plenty is penury to Leviathan, he is an unſatiable Gulf: That's a third reading; our own ſaith,

Faciem ejus præcedit egeſtas. Vulg.

Sorrow is turned into joy before him.] The meaning, I conceive, is this, Leviathan is ſo ſtrong and powerful, ſuch ſtrength remaineth in his neck, that nothing can daunt him, or bring down his ſpirit; nothing can trouble him, much leſs terrifie him, he fears nothing, he fears none; and if any object of ſorrow preſent it ſelf to him, 'tis preſently his joy. That which hath greateſt matter of ſorrow in it, is to him matter of ſport, or he makes a ſport of it, he even rejoyceth in the midſt of thoſe things that make others ſad; he either makes nothing of them, or no ſuch thing of them as they appear to others: Sorrow is turned into joy before him. It is ſaid of that Land-Leviathan, Alexander the Great before-mentioned, that he even leaped for joy when he was ingaged in great dangers, and hazardous attempts; then he would ſay exultingly, Now I ſee danger ſuitable to the greatneſs of my ſpirit. In ſuch a ſenſe it may be ſaid here of Leviathan, Sorrow is turned into joy before him. But whence was this? ſurely from his ſtrength, and the confidence he had in it.

תדוץ Exultavit Mont. vertetur in lætitiam. Pagn. Quicquid ſolicitudinem aliis parit excitat, & exhilarat ipſius animum. Bez.

Jam video animo meo par periculum.

Hence note; They who have great ſtrength, think themſelves above ſorrow and danger.

Leviathan is ſo ſtrong, that ſorrow is turned into joy before him; how full of joy, or how joyful then is he! as Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 6.23.) If the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs? ſo if our ſorrow be turned into joy to us, how great is our ioy? Some good men have found it ſo according to their Faith, and moſt ſtrong men hope it ſhall be ſo to them, according to their preſumption. A ſtrong man rejoyceth to run a Race, whereas a weak man is afraid of it; going is grievous to him, much more running. Whatſoever we have ſtrength to do, if we have hearts alſo to do it, we rejoyce to do it; yea, we are ſo apt to rejoyce in our carnal ſtrength of any kind, that the Lord by his Prophet (Jer. 9.23.) forbids it in every kind of ſtrength, in ſtrength of underſtanding, Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdom; he forbids it alſo in ſtrength of eſtate, Let not the rich man glory in his riches; and laſtly, he forbids it in this particular ſtrength of body, Let not the mighty man glory in his might. And there is great reaſon we ſhould take heed of being found Leviathans in this, ſeeing none have been more oppreſſed and weakned with ſorrow than they, who upon confidence in Self-ſtrength have thought themſelves above it, or that it ſhould certainly be turned into joy before them.

Further, It will not be unuſeful to conſider, that as here it is ſaid, Leviathans ſorrow is turned into joy before him; ſo it is promiſed to, and the priviledge of all true Believers, to have their ſorrows, or that their ſorrows ſhall be turned into joy before them (John 16.20.) Verily, I ſay unto you (ſaid Chriſt himſelf) that ye ſhall weep, and lament, and the world ſhall rejoyce (here's the caſe of Chriſts Diſciples in this world, they ſhall weep and lament, that is, they ſhall have cauſe to weep, and many times ſhall actually weep and lament) but your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy. As ye ſhall rejoyce in ſpirit under thoſe diſpenſations which have the greateſt occaſion and matter of ſorrow in them; or as Eliphaz ſaid (Job 5.22.) At deſtruction and famine ye ſhall laugh, ye ſhall laugh at deſtruction it ſelf; ſo at laſt all the very matter of your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy. The moſt ſorrowful things ſhall not now be able to ſwallow you up with ſorrow, and at laſt you ſhall not know by any then preſent experience any ſorrowful thing. All your tears ſhall be, not only wiped off from, but out of your eyes; Chriſt will then renew that Miracle, in a Metaphorical ſenſe, which he once wrought in a Natural, of which we read (John 2.) He will turn water into wine; the waters of ſorrow and tribulation, into the wine of joy and conſolation. Which bleſſed priviledge is alſo clearly propheſied (Iſa. 65.13, 14.)

Laſtly, If by reaſon of Leviathans ſtrength, his ſorrow is turned into joy, ſurely the faithful, who have the Lord for their ſtrength, may turn their ſorrow into joy, into ſuch joys, as none ſhall take from them, or turn back, or again into ſorrows.

Thus far concerning the ſtrength of Leviathans neck, and the effect of it, his joyful or merry life. The next words ſhew him ſtrong all over, or in all the parts of his body.

Verſ. 23. The flakes of his fleſh are joyned together, they are firm in themſelves, they cannot be moved.

This compactneſs of Leviathans fleſh argues an univerſal ſtrength. His fleſh is ſo compact, as if it were a molten thing, or (as the word rendred firm in the latter part of the verſe ſignifies) like braſs, or Bell-metal moulten in a Furnace, and caſt into a Body. Such is the force of the Hebrew.

The flakes of his fleſh are joyned.] Though Leviathan be a Fiſh, an Inhabitant of the waters, yet the Scripture calls the bulk of his body fleſh. So (Levit. 11.10, 11.) All that have not fins, nor ſcales in the Seas, and in the Rivers, of all that move in the waters, they ſhall be even an abomination unto you, ye ſhall not eat of their fleſh. In Scripture ſenſe Fiſh is fleſh, the Apoſtle uſeth the ſame language (1 Cor. 15.39.) All fleſh is not the ſame fleſh (that is, it is not of the ſame kind) but there is one kind of fleſh of men, and another fleſh of beaſts, another of fiſhes. The Fiſh of the Sea have fleſh, as well as the beaſts of the Earth: And that which Job denied of his fleſh (Chap. 6.12.) we may affirm of Leviathans fleſh, His ſtrength is as the ſtrength of ſtones, and his fleſh as of braſs. As the ſcales of Leviathan without, ſo now his whole fleſh within, is ſpoken of, as if it were made of ſolid braſs. The very refuſe, the vileſt parts of his fleſh (as the word which we tranſlate flakes is rendred, Amos 8.6.) are firm and ſtrong, being joyned or glued faſt together, as the Septuagint expreſs the ſignificancy of the word, by us rendred joyned. And as it followeth,

They are firm in themſelves, they cannot be moved.

That is, one part of his fleſh cannot be taken from the other, or he cannot be moved; that is, Leviathan is ſo ſtrong, that nothing can ſtir him, or cauſe him to give ground, unleſs himſelf pleaſeth. And as his fleſh covering his bones is thus firm, ſo is his heart, covered and defended by both.

Verſ. 24. His heart is as firm as a ſtone, yea, as hard as a piece of the nether Mill-ſtone.

The heart is the principal internal part of any Creature; and the fleſh of the heart in every Creature, is harder than the fleſh of any other part of his body; the heart is a very compact and hard piece of fleſh. And the Lord would have us know, that the heart of Leviathan is ſo hard, that the heart of any other Creature, in compariſon of his, may be called ſoft and tender. His heart

Cor in omnibus animantibus ſpiſſum, nervoſum, & benè compactum eſt. Ariſt. l. 3. *de part. c.*4.

Is as firm as a ſtone.] That is, 'tis extraordinary hard; which is further intended by the laſt words of this verſe;

Yea, as hard as a piece of the nether Mill-ſtone.

Mills have two ſtones, an upper, which in Hebrew is expreſſed by a word, which ſignifies to ride, becauſe it ſeems to ride (moving or turning round) upon the nether ſtone, which becauſe it bears the weight of the work in grinding, is the harder of the two, though both are very hard; as if it had been ſaid, if any ſtone be harder than another, that's moſt like the heart of Leviathan.

Superior mola רכב dicebatur ab inequitando.

Now though this may have reſpect to the litteral or proper hardneſs of the fleſh of Leviathans heart, yet we are not to ſtay in that ſenſe; for there is a moral or metaphorical hardneſs, as well as a natural or proper hardneſs. The heart of one man is ſaid to be hard, and the heart of another ſoft and tender, not becauſe the natural fleſh of one mans heart is hard, and anothers ſoft, but becauſe of a moral hardneſs or tenderneſs in the heart of the one or other.

There is no difference between them, in the body of a good and bad man, as to tenderneſs and hardneſs; but the ſoul-heart (if I may ſo ſpeak) of the one, and of the other, differ exceedingly as to hardneſs and tenderneſs. The heart of every good man (as to the ſpiritual conſtitution of it) is ſoft and tender; but the heart of every evil man is hard and ſtony. Again, a fearful man is ſaid to have a ſoft heart, every little danger pierceth it, or makes an impreſſion upon it; but a man of courage and boldneſs is ſaid to have a hard heart, or a heart of braſs, nothing can daunt him: In this ſenſe Leviathan hath a hard or firm heart, a heart of braſs. The hardneſs of Leviathans heart, notes his courage, boldneſs, and ſtoutneſs; he is not timerous, like many other Creatures; his heart is as uncapable of fear as a ſtone, and as impenetrable by any paſſion, as the nether Mill-ſtone. So that to ſay his heart is as hard as a ſtone, is all one as to ſay, He is fearleſs, or he is couragious. So then,

Fortis & intrepida eſt. Jun. Eſt forti & infracto corde, ſeu animo nihil timet. Merc.

There is a threefold moral hardneſs of heart ſpoken of in Scripture.

First, Impenitency for ſin, is often called hardneſs of heart. They who go on knowingly to ſin againſt God, are bold daring men, they have hard hearts indeed: Such hearts have all men by nature; and therefore God makes that promiſe to ſinners, I will take away the heart of ſtone, and give a heart of fleſh (Ezek. 36. 26.)

Crudeles & inclementes aut è ſaxo geniti, aut cor habere ſaxeum dicuntur.

Secondly, Unmercifulneſs or cruelty towards men, is called hardneſs of heart. We commonly ſay of ſuch a man, he is a hard-hearted man; that is, he is a cruel and unmerciful man.

Thirdly, Couragiouſneſs and ſtoutneſs in appearance of danger, may be called hardneſs of heart. A man of great courage hath a heart hardned againſt all fears and dangers.

Leviathan hath a hard heart, in theſe two latter ſenſes; he is cruel and unmerciful, he ſpares none, he ſwallows down all without diſtinction, a Jonah and all, if he meet with him. The Whale hath no mercy, and therefore may be ſaid to have a hard heart.

Cor durum ſignum audaciæ & fortitudinis. Plin. l. 11. c. 37.

Again, Leviathan is full of courage, he fears no colours (as we ſay) therefore he may well be ſaid to have a hard heart. And thoſe Creatures which have the hardeſt hearts in a Phyſical ſenſe, are obſerved by Naturaliſts to be moſt daring and couragious.

Now, as Leviathan is thus fearleſs at the appearance of the greateſt dangers, ſo when he appears, all are filled with fear. As he is altogether dreadleſs, according to the interpretation given of this verſe, ſo he is altogether dreadful, according to the expreſs tenour of the next.

Verſ. 25. When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid; by reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves.

We have had in the ſeven verſes laſt opened, the deſcription of Leviathan in many things, which cannot but render him an object of fear and terrour; ſurely then, when he ſhews himſelf, all will be in a fright, even the Mighty, who ſeem beſt fenced againſt fear, as the Text ſpeaks, When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid.

When he raiſeth up himſelf.] Whither? not out of the water, but in the water, or to the ſurface of the water; ſometimes the Whale ſwims upon the top of the water. Now, when he raiſeth up himſelf, or (as Mr. Broughton tranſlates) at his ſtatelineſs, or (as another, both putting the word into a Noun, which we put into a Verb) At his Excellency

The mighty are afraid; by reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves.

In theſe words (as was ſhewed before) we have a double effect of Leviathans raiſing himſelf in ſight, or to the view of others.

The firſt effect is, The mighty are afraid.

The ſecond is this, By reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves.

The mighty are afraid.] The Lord doth not ſay, When he raiſeth up himſelf, the weak, and (as we ſay) Hen-hearted Cowards, but the mighty are afraid, the mighty of all ſorts; not only mighty Fiſhes, but mighty men; the ſtouteſt Seamen and Marriners, yea, Captains and Warriours at Sea are afraid; and not only are they afraid when he raiſeth up himſelf (like a moving Mountain) but amazed with fear, and even ſtruck dead with aſtoniſhment. The Hebrew word rendred mighty, may be carried beyond mighty men, even to Angels; and ſo the vulgar Latine reads it, When he lifts up himſelf, the Angels will be afraid. The word is applied to the Angels all the Scripture over; it properly ſignifies ſtrong or mighty ones. Angels are ſtrong and mighty, they excel all other Creatures in ſtrength (Pſa. 103.20.) If we take that tranſlation, The Angels will be afraid, it is only to ſhew, that Leviathan is ſo terrible, that not only the Fiſh in the Sea, and men on Earth, but (if ſuch a thing could be) the Angels of Heaven would be afraid of him. As Chriſt when he would ſet forth the efficacy of Seduction, which ſhall be in the latter days, ſaith, Falſe Prophets ſhall come, and deceive, if it were poſſible, the very Elect (*Mat.*24.24.) So this Leviathan would make the Angels afraid, if it were poſſible. As Ships in a Storm at Sea, are ſaid to mount up to the Heavens (*Pſal.*107.26.) though they always keep upon the billows of the water; ſo by a like Hyperbole, we may ſay, when Leviathan raiſeth up himſelf, the Angels of Heaven are afraid. But as the word often ſignifies an Angel, ſo it is commonly applied to men of might, ſtrength, and courage. We tranſlate indefinitely, the mighty, without determining it upon one or other ſort of mighty ones; and ſo we may underſtand it of any among the viſible Creatures that are mighty. When he raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid.

אלים Fortes, proprie pii, i.e. Angeli hoc nomine dicti quod robore polleant maxime præ cæteris creaturis; hoc nomen etiam ad homines transfertur, robore & potentia valentes. Timebunt Angeli. Vulg.

Hence note, Firſt, Great dangers may put the ſtouteſt into fear.

Natural fear is a paſſion or perturbation of the mind, raiſed by the appearance, or our apprehenſion of ſome eminent or imminent evil ready to take hold of us, or fall upon us. And as ſome are of ſo fearful a nature, or are made ſo fearful by a ſecret judgment of God upon them, that they are afraid where no fear is (Pſal. 53. 5.) and (being purſued with their own guilt) flee when no man purſueth (*Prov.*28.1.) or (as another Scripture ſpeaks) At the ſound of a ſhaken leaf; ſo it is natural to all men to fear, in caſe of real and apparent danger, eſpecially if the danger be like a Leviathan, very great, or if a Leviathan raiſe himſelf againſt them. And therefore Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, being in our Nature, and cloathed with fleſh, began not only to be afraid, but amazed (Mark 14. 33.) a little before his Paſſion, when he ſaw that greateſt Leviathan, the Devil, together with many great Leviathans, raiſing themſelves to ſwallow him up.

And if when a Leviathan raiſeth up himſelf, the mighty are afraid, how ſhall the mighty be afraid, when God raiſeth up himſelf! that's the deſign of God in this paſſage. The holy Prophet gave this caution to all men (*Zach.*2.13.) Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord; for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation. As if it had been ſaid, the Lord now ſhews himſelf: he was before as one aſleep, or laid down upon his bed, but now the Lord is raiſed up. What then? Be ſilent, O all fleſh. The mightieſt have reaſon then to be ſilent: How ſilent? There's a twofold ſilence; Firſt, from ſpeaking; Secondly, from boaſting. That charge in the Prophet is not to be underſtood of a ſilence from ſpeaking, but from boaſting; as if it had been ſaid, Be in fear and reverence, for the Lord is raiſed up out of his holy habitation. Another Prophet tells us, that at the Lords appearances the mighty ſhall tremble, and be afraid (Iſa. 2. 19.) having ſaid a little before, The loftineſs of man ſhall be bowed down, and the haughtineſs of man ſhall be made low, He adds, They ſhall go into the holes of the Rocks, and into the caves of the Earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majeſty, when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the Earth. When the Lord ariſeth to ſhake this world by his Judgments, he will make the mighty tremble, and run into the holes of the Rocks, to hide themſelves from his dreadful preſence. If a Creature, a Leviathan, cauſeth the mighty to fear when he ariſeth, how much more may the mightieſt of the world fear, when God ariſeth! and therefore that prayer of David (Pſal. 68. 1.) Let God ariſe, let his Enemies be ſcattered; let them that hate him, flee before him, may well be reſolved into this conditional Propoſition; If God ariſeth, his Enemies ſhall be ſcattered, and all that hate him ſhall flee before him.

This may teach the mean and poor of the Earth to fear him, who can make the mightieſt afraid. When God is angry, the mighty cannot, then much leſs can mean underlings ſtand before him. When Leviathan raiſeth himſelf, the mighty are afraid,

And by reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves.

Confractiones vocat, quando Leviathan elevando ſe fluctus excitat, qui propterea משברים appellantur, quod ſe invicem frangant.

Mr. Broughton ſaith, by reaſon of ſhiverings. But what are theſe ſhiverings or breakings? Leviathan breaks the waves and waters. The waves of the Sea are expreſſed in the Hebrew tongue by a word which ſignifieth breakings, becauſe they break themſelves one againſt another; as alſo, poſſibly, becauſe Ships are broken by the waves. And when 'tis here ſaid, By reaſon of breakings they purifie themſelves; the meaning may be this, by reaſon of the waves and troubled waters, which Leviathan makes when he beſtirs or raiſeth up himſelf, they purifie themſelves. Nor doth Leviathan break the waves and waters only, but whatever comes near him he breaks and ſhivers to pieces; if a Ship be in his way, he breaks it, as ſome have been taught, to their coſt, by ſad experience. By reaſon of breakings

They purifie themſelves.] The mighty are afraid when he raiſeth himſelf up; and ſeeing him make ſuch work, they purifie themſelves. What's that? There are various underſtandings and Expoſitions of this clauſe.

Aliqui verbum (purgant) exponunt, aberrant; i. e. Ita percelluntur metu ut animis toti concidunt, nec ſciunt quid agant. Merl Peccant, i. e. errore ſe obſtringunt, ut neſciant, quid faciant. Nam חטא ut, Græcè Ἁμαρτάνειν dicitur, qui aberrat à ſcopo. Druſ.

Firſt, The word rendred to purifie, properly ſignifies to err, or to wander out of the way; and it notes, as outward erring or wandring, that of the body, when we know not whither to go, ſo inward wandring, that of the mind, when we know not what to do. The mind or underſtanding wanders often, and roves up and down, we know not whither. In this ſenſe, ſeveral underſtand the words; By reaſon of breakings they wander, they are ſtruck with ſuch a fear and amazement, that they run about like men diſtracted, and out of their wits; or, they (ſuppoſe it of Mariners) know not how to guide the Ship, nor how to handle their Sails and Tacklings. Some chiefly inſiſt upon this interpretation, By reaſon of breakings they wander, or know not what to do next to help or ſave themſelves from periſhing. A man in ſtreights, uſually ſaith, I know not what to do. They who are in much fear of ſuffering in any kind, ſeldom know what to do in any way for their own ſafety, and often take the unſafeſt way, running themſelves further into danger, while they endeavour to eſcape it. This is a proper and profitable Expoſition; and we may note this from it.

Great fears cauſe great diſtractions.

Every worldly fear hath ſomewhat of diſtraction in it, and in proportion to the fear is the diſtraction; therefore great fear muſt needs cauſe great diſtraction. When men in a ſtorm mount up to Heaven, and go down again to the depths, 'tis ſaid (Pſal. 107. 26, 27.) their ſoul is melted becauſe of trouble, they reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end; their wit cannot go a ſtep further with them, nor their reaſon conduct them any longer. We ſay in the Margin, All their wiſdom is ſwallowed up. He that fears Leviathan will ſwallow him up, may ſoon find his wiſdom ſwallowed up. Wiſe and mighty men may be mightily puzled in great dangers, and utterly diſabled to make uſe, either of their wiſdom, or of their might. Good Jehoſhaphat (2 Chron. 20. 12.) when a great Enemy was invading him, cryed out, O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might againſt them, neither do we know what to do; we are bereft of counſel. Great dangers even unhinge our reaſon, and put it out of place. The Diſciples of Chriſt in a Storm (Mat. 8. 25.) were not only like men at their wits end, but almoſt at their Faiths end too, crying out, Lord, ſave us, we periſh; if thou help us not, we are all undone: And he ſaid, why are ye fearful? O ye of little faith. There is nothing but Faith can keep down the prevailings of fear, in great or prevailing dangers and breakings; and when once we are at our Faiths end in a time of extremity, we ſhall ſoon be at our wits end alſo, yea, even quite out of our wits. A faithleſs man is no match for little fears, and he that hath but a little Faith, or is a man of little Faith, may ſoon be overmatcht with great ones. As perfect love, either the actings of our perfect love to God, or the evidence and apprehenſions of the perfect love of God to us, caſteth out fear (1 Joh. 4. 18.) that is, all that fear which hath torment in it; ſo alſo doth perfect Faith in God, that is, a ſtrong, a well-foundation'd, and a well and high-built Faith. 'Tis either for want of Faith, or for ſome want in Faith, that mighty men by reaſon of breakings are not only afraid, but wander, as uncertain of their way. That's the firſt reading.

Secondly, We ſay, They purifie themſelves: What's that? there are two interpretations of this tranſlation.

Quando mare fluctibus intumeſcit, nauſea oboritur, & qui ſunt in navi fere vomunt, ſtomachum purgantes. Druſ. Alvum ſolvit. Bez. Rab. Levi.

Firſt, Some interpret it of a bodily diſtemper, coming upon the mighty by reaſon of their fear. In Storms at Sea Paſſengers purge their Stomachs, uſually by Vomiting, and ſometimes by Stool. Thus (I ſay) ſome expound this Text, that through extremity of fear, they are ſurprized with a ſudden looſneſs. The Prophet ſpeaking of a dreadful day, ſaith (Ezek. 7. 17.) All knees ſhall be feeble, we put in the Margin, All knees ſhall go into the water; the meaning is (as all Interpreters give it) they ſhall not be able to hold their water. And as ſome, upon a ſudden aſſault of fear, cannot hold their water, ſo neither can others their ordure. The reaſon of it is plain in Nature, fear making a great diſſipation of ſpirits, weakens the retentive faculty. Some look upon this as a ſenſe too low and mean for the intendment of this place, though in it ſelf a truth: And therefore 'tis enough to mention it; nor ought it to be left unmentioned, ſeeing it may humble us to conſider unto what pittiful exigents mighty ones may be brought, when ſurprized with dangers. But;

Vox יתחטאו in Piel & Hiphtael expiationem à peccato importat. Unde vertitur expiabunt ſe, ſeu pænitentiam agent, & remiſſionem à Deo petent, præſenti mortis diſcrimine territi. Sculſ.

Secondly, I conceive (and upon that I ſhall inſiſt) theſe words, They purifie themſelves, are rather to be taken Morally; that is, mighty men, when they ſee themſelves in ſuch danger, mighty Leviathan raiſing himſelf, breaking all before him, what do they? they purifie themſelves, that is, they betake themſelves to prayer and repentance; and then they will purifie themſelves in all haſt, by confeſſing and vowing to put away their ſins; then they will (in all haſt) make their peace with God; this is a good interpretation. And the word which we tranſlate here to purifie, is applied to this ſpiritual purifying, by confeſſing of ſin, and turning to God, and promiſes of amendment (Pſal. 51. 7.) Purge (or purifie) me with Hyſop, and I ſhall be clean; only there 'tis Gods act, here mans. But as God doth purge us by pardon, ſo we may be ſaid to purge our ſelves by repentance, and earneſt ſuing to God for pardon. And how uſual is it, even with bad men, when they are in great danger, when they ſee nothing but death before them, then to fall a praying and repenting, then to confeſs their ſins, and promiſe amendment, or to become new men. Thus by reaſon of breakings, when all is ready to be broken, loſt, and ſpoiled, they purifie themſelves.

Hence obſerve; In great dangers, which threaten preſent death, or undoing at leaſt, even common men will confeſs their ſins, and make great ſhows or ſemblances of repentance.

When the mighty are afraid, when they are in trouble and miſery, then they cry to God for mercy, and cry out upon their ſins, as the procuring cauſe of their miſeries and troubles. How good, how godly will they be for a fit (and it may work further) in a day of evil! It is ſaid of the Marriners in a Storm (Pſal. 107. 28.) Then they cry unto the Lord in their diſtreſſes. Even ſuch Marriners as ſeldom think of God, nor pray to him in a Calm, being in a Storm fall a praying, they purifie themſelves: Now they are for repentance, now they will caſt their ſins over-board, ſeeing themſelves almoſt ſwallowed up by the raging Sea. Thus (Jon. 1. 4, 5.) When the Lord ſent out a great Wind into the Sea, and there was a mighty Tempeſt in the Sea, ſo that the Ship was like to be broken: Then the Marriners were afraid; that was the firſt effect which the Tempeſt wrought in them: And what was the next? that was a fit of Devotion; They cryed every man to his God. Now they purified themſelves by repentance and prayer. Were not theſe Marriners grown very good, when beſet with evil? Thus many pray, repent, make lamentations over their ſins, take up reſolutions againſt their ſins in a Storm; then, or thus, even carnal, ignorant, common men will purifie themſelves in times of great danger. We ſay well, true repentance is never too late, but late repentance is ſeldom true. We may ſay alſo, Repentance in a Storm is good, but repentance in a Storm is not always good; real dangers may produce but falſe, and feigned, and forced repentance. And they who repent only when they are in, or becauſe they are in a Storm, were never good as yet, nor will they continue in that goodneſs which then they make ſhew of. As a godly man purifies himſelf when he ſees a Storm, ſo he purifies himſelf in a Calm too, or when he is in greateſt ſafety. And if we do not purifie our ſelves in a Calm, as well as in a Storm, our repentance is but the repentance of Heathen Marriners. Be in a Calm, what you are in a Storm; be when you ſee Lambs, what you were when you ſee or ſaw Leviathans.

Secondly, obſerve; It is a duty to repent when we ſee great dangers, or (as the Text ſpeaks) great breakings.

To be ſure we ought to repent in a time of trouble. We are to repent at all times, but then moſt. Be careful you leave not that work undone at any time, but do it very carefully at ſuch a time. It is ſaid of thoſe that were ſcorched with great heat (Revel. 16. 9.) they blaſphemed the Name of God, which hath power over thoſe Plagues, and they repented not to give him glory. And of others under the fifth Vial (verſ. 11.) They blaſphemed the God of Heaven, becauſe of their Plagues, and of their ſores, and repented not of their deeds. It was the character of that bad King Ahaz, that in the time of his diſtreſs he ſinned yet more. What! ſin in a Storm! ſin when God is ſcorching, plaguing, and diſtreſſing us! This is not only greateſt impenitency, but higheſt impudency, or moſt ſenſleſs ſtupidity. Such are like him, of whom Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 23. 33, 34.) They are as he that lieth down in the midſt of the Sea, or as he that lieth (ſleeping 'tis meant) upon the top of a Maſt, whereby any ſtrong blaſt of wind, or great ſway, and yawing of the Ship, he may be tumbled into the deep.

There are two things we ſhould do, when we ſee breakings, or great dangers, ready to break us.

Firſt, We ſhould hold faſt all the good we have, if we have any. When we are like to loſe all outward good things, and that which is better than any or all of them, our lives, we have reaſon to hold faſt all our ſpiritual and inward good things, the truths of God, our faith in God, our love to God, and all his ways.

Secondly, If as yet we have not really taken hold of God, and good things, 'tis high time for us to do it when we can no longer hold, but muſt let go all our loved good things of this life, and even our beloved life.

Thirdly, We ſhould in a day of evil, let go all that is evil; that is, purifie our ſelves, our conſciences, our lives, our hearts, our hands, form all our ſins from all that is ſinful. Then, if ever, let us be found in the practice of that Apoſtolical counſel (Jam. 4. 8.) Cleanſe your hands ye ſinners, and purifie your hearts ye double-minded. They ſurely are minded or reſolved to be filthy ſtill, and never to purifie either heart or hand, who do not ſet their minds to purifie themſelves from evil in an evil day. When the Lord breaks us by any Judgment or Viſitation, then 'tis high time for us to break off our ſins by righteouſneſs, as Daniel adviſed Nebuchadnezzar (Chap. 4. 27.)

VERS. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34.

The ſword of him that layeth at him cannot hold: the ſpear, the dart, nor the habergeon.
He eſteemeth iron as ſtraw, and braſs as rotten wood.
The arrow cannot make him flee: ſling-ſtones are turned with him into ſtubble.
Darts are counted as ſtubble: he laugheth at the ſhaking of a ſpear.
Sharp ſtones are under him: he ſpreadeth ſharp-pointed things upon the mire.
He maketh the deep to boil like a pot: he maketh the Sea like a pot of oyntment.
He maketh a path to ſhine after him; one would think the deep to be hoary.
Upon the Earth there is not his like: who is made without fear.
He beholdeth all high things: he is a King over all the children of pride.

IN the former Context, we have had an accurate delineation of the ſeveral parts of this mighty Creature Leviathan, together with their wonderful operations and effects, even to the terrifying of mighty men, and the putting them upon ſpeedy preparations for death, at his appearance.

In this the Lord gives proof.

Firſt, Of the impenetrableneſs, or impregnableneſs of the ſcales, skin, and fleſh of this Leviathan.

Secondly, Of the greatneſs of his courage, ſtomach, and ſpirit, in the midſt of greateſt dangers and oppoſitions; both which are ſhewed in the 26, 27, 28, and 29 Verſes of this Context; which are all of a ſenſe, and therefore I ſhall very briefly paſs through them.

Verſ. 26. The ſword of him that layeth at him cannot hold.

We have in the compaſs of theſe four Verſes, as it were a whole Magazine of Arms, of War-like Inſtruments and Engines. Arms are of two ſorts.

Firſt, Offenſive.

Secondly, Defenſive.

Offenſive Arms are likewiſe of two ſorts.

Firſt, Such as we ſtrike with, or make uſe of at hand; of which ſort we reckon the ſword and the ſpear.

Secondly, Such as are uſed at a diſtance; of which ſort are Arrows, and Darts, and Sling-ſtones: All theſe offenſive weapons are here expreſly mentioned. And likewiſe we have here defenſive Arms, with which we cover and ſhelter the body, in a time of battle or danger, from taking hurt; of which ſort the Helmet is a piece of Armour for the head, and the Habergeon or Breaſt-plate for the forepart of the body. So that here (I ſay) we have all ſorts of Arms. And as we have all ſorts of Arms brought together, ſo we have the unprofitableneſs or unſerviceableneſs of them all, or their utter inſufficiency to hurt Leviathan, or to ſave any man harmleſs, or from being hurt by him, as will appear, while I run over and touch upon theſe words.

The ſword of him that layeth at him cannot hold.

The Sword is an offenſive weapon, with which we aſſault our Adverſary at hand. Now though a man doth lay at Leviathan with a Sword, that is, uſeth his utmoſt skill and ſtrength to make the Sword enter, yet it cannot hold; or, as the Hebrew is, will not ſtand or abide; It will either be broken or dulled, and the edge of it turned and abated, or it will rebound without leaving any impreſſion. Maſter Broughton renders, The Sword of him that layeth at him will not faſten. As if God had ſaid, if any be ſo bold as to come near, with a Sword in his hand, to ſtrike Leviathan, it is to no purpoſe, for ſuch is the ſtrength of his natural armour, ſuch the hardneſs of his ſcales and skin, he is ſo protected, fenced, and fortified with theſe, that the Sword can do him no more hurt than a thruſt or ſtroak with a Bull-ruſh. The Sword cannot enter.

Reſilit duritie tergoris repulſus gladius. Bez.

No, nor the ſpear.] That's another offenſive hand-weapon, which we uſe at hand.

No, nor the dart.] That's another offenſive weapon, which we uſe at a diſtance. Some put theſe two, the Spear and the Dart, into one, conceiving that by theſe two we are to underſtand not a Spear and a Dart diſtinctly, but a darting-ſpear, or the ſpear that goeth forth: For there are two ſorts of Spears. There are ſome Spears which are held faſt in the hand of him that aſſaults: There are another ſort of Spears, called Javelins, which are caſt out of the hand. Thus ſome (I ſay) conceive that we are apt to put theſe two words into one; Nor can the darting-ſpear, or Javelin (which is caſt out of a mans hand againſt an Enemy with greateſt force) enter to wound him.

חנית מסע Lance profectionis, i. e. quam homo proficiſci facit de manu ſua. Jaculum à jaciendo. Bold. Haſtati ſpargunt haſtas, fit ferreus imber. Ennius.

Nor the Habergeon.] As if he had ſaid, not only cannot theſe offenſive weapons, Spear, and Dart, or the Darting-ſpear hurt Leviathan; but thoſe Arms which a man puts on to ſave himſelf from hurt, cannot protect him: Leviathan will be too hard for him, though he weareth a Coat of Male, an Habergeon, though he be cloathed all over with Iron, Back and Breaſt, Cap-a-Pe, yet Leviathan can eaſily cruſh him, he can rend his Corſlet, as if it were but a rotten rag, and tear it off as eaſily as a wiſp of ſtraw; for, as it followeth, Verſ. 27. He eſteemeth iron as ſtraw, and braſs as rotten wood.

That is, he makes no more of iron and braſs, than we do of a ſtraw, or of a piece of rotten wood which crumbles between our fingers, and is broken with the leaſt ſtrain. You may as ſoon wound him with a ſtraw, as with a ſword, and pierce his Buckler-ſcales, by throwing a rotten ſtick at him, as well as by caſting a Dart or Javelin at him; he ſlights all your Artillery, as if he had reaſon to do it, and fully underſtood that his ſkin and ſcales were an Armour of Proof againſt all aſſaults.

Verſ. 28. The Arrow cannot make him flee.

Arrows are notable weapons uſed at a diſtance, which being ſhot from a ſtrong Bow, and drawn home by a ſtrong arm, wound deeply and deadly; yet Leviathan regards not whole ſhowers of Arrows poured upon him. The Hebrew Elegancy gives it thus, The Sons of the Bow cannot make him flee. Mr. Broughtons tranſlation holds the Metaphor untranſlated, The Bows child drives him not away. Arrows are ſometimes called the Sons of the Bow, and ſometimes they are called the Sons of the Quiver (Lament. 3. 13.) becauſe Arrows are firſt taken out of a Quiver, where they are kept, and ſo are, as it were, Children of the Quiver; and then Arrows are put upon the ſtring of the Bow, and being ſhot out of it, may be called alſo Sons of the Bow. Arrows come out of the Quiver and the Bow, as Children from Parents. And as in this Scripture, Arrows are called Children, ſo in another, Children are compared to Arrows (Pſal. 127. 4.) As Arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, ſo are children of the youth; happy is the man that hath his Quiver full of them, that is, who hath many children. Here (by the way) give me leave to mind the Reader, that 'tis uſual in Scripture to call any thing that comes out of, or proceeds from another, its Son or Child. Thus Corn is called the Son of the Floor (Iſa. 21. 10.) O my threſhing, and the corn of my floor; the Hebrew is, O my threſhing, and the ſon of my floor. Corn is called the ſon of the floor, becauſe it comes from the floor, where it is threſhed and delivered by the force of the Flail, out of the husk or chaff in which it was bred, and lay as a Child in his Mothers Womb. Thus alſo ſparks which come from the coal, are called ſons of the coal (Job 5. 7.) According to this frequent Hebraiſm, Arrows are here called the Sons of the Bow. The Arrow cannot make him flee. Though Arrows fly at Leviathan, he ſcorns to flee from Arrows, he will ſtir no more when you ſhoot a feathered Arrow at him, than if you ſhot only a feather at him. And as he contemns Arrows, ſo

Sling-ſtones are turned with him into ſtubble.

Bows and Slings were of great uſe in War, before the invention of Guns. Thoſe Benjamites were famous, who as the Holy Hiſtory reports them, could ſling ſtones at a hairs breadth, and not miſs (Judg. 20. 16.) David went out againſt Goliah the Gyant, weaponed only with a Sling, and five ſtones. Slings are no contemptible weapons, ſeeing with a Sling-ſtone David overthrew Goliah the Philiſtine, who made the whole Hoſt of Iſrael tremble. Yet Sling-ſtones, with this Sea-goliah Leviathan, are turned into ſtubble, that is, he even blows them away like ſtubble, nor cares he at all for their blows. When the Pſalmiſt would ſhew how eaſily the Lord could ſubdue the Enemies of Iſrael, he prayeth againſt them in this manner (Pſal. 83. 13.) Make them, O my God, as a wheel, and as the ſtubble before the wind, that is, render them weak, and altogether unable to do miſchief. The Prophet deſcribes the eaſie overthrow of the wicked Enemy, by this Metaphor (Iſa. 40. 24.) The whirlwind ſhall take them away as ſtubble. And when the Prophet would ſhew how mighty the Lord aſſiſted Abraham againſt his Enemies, he ſaith (Iſa. 42. 2.) He gave them as the duſt to his ſword, and as driven ſtubble to his bow. Now as in all theſe Scriptures it appears from this ſimilitude, how unable the ſtrongeſt are to ſtand before the Lord, ſo when the Lord would ſhew how impregnable this Leviathan is, he ſaith, Sling-ſtones are no more to him than ſtubble; yea, and he doubles it.

Verſ. 29. Darts are counted as ſtubble.

We had darts in the 26th verſe, yet the original words differ; and 'tis very probable, that as the words differ, ſo the weapons intended by them differed alſo, though now unknown to us, and ſo we want names for them, or know not how to name them with a difference. Some interpret the word in diſtinction from the former, not for darts caſt out of a mans hand, but for ſtones darted out of Engines. The Ancients uſed Engines, which caſt ponderous ſtones, with mighty violence, againſt Walls and Towers, to batter them down, as we do now with Ordnance or great Guns. Some have queried, whether great Guns were not uſed in that time. The word may bear it: But plainly it may ſignifie an Engine out of which ſtones were ſlung. Theſe Leviathan counts as ſtubble, yea, Tanquam ſtipula habentur ab ipſo machinæ bellicæ. Bez.

He laugheth at the ſhaking of the Spear.

Cetus non timet comminationem. Aquin.

To ſhake a Spear, is as it were, to threaten one with a Spear; and ſo to brandiſh a Sword againſt an Enemy, is to defie him, or to bid him do his worſt, or it tells him that you will do your beſt to overcome and conquer him. Leviathan ſcorns when any threaten him with their weapons in hand. If you ſhake your Spear at him, he laughs at it; that is, he ſlights it, he regards it not: 'Tis the ſame word which is uſed (Job 39. 22.) concerning the Horſe, at fear he mocketh or laugheth; that is, he laughs at thoſe things which give occaſion, yea juſt cauſe of fear, and are indeed ſuch as are moſt afraid of. So doth Leviathan, He laughs at the ſhaking of the ſpear. Eliphaz ſaith of a godly man (Job 5. 22.) at deſtruction and famine he ſhall laugh. The godly man is ſo fortified with a promiſe and aſſurance of protection and proviſion by God, that neither Sword nor Famine can daunt his ſpirit; yea, he, as it were, laughs at them, as Leviathan at the ſhaking of a Spear.

Thus I have paſſed, or poſted rather, through theſe four Verſes, the general ſenſe of them all being the ſame, and that to ſhew that Leviathan is ſo armed by Nature, that no artificial arms can hurt him.

This part alſo of Leviathans deſcription, is taken by Bochartus as a further proof, that the Leviathan here ſpoken of, is the Crocodile, whoſe ſcales are not penetrable by the force of any weapon; whereas (ſaith he) the ſkin of the Whale gives paſſage to the forcible ſtroak or thruſt of any ſharp-edged or ſharp-pointed Inſtrument.

For anſwer to this, I have no more to ſay than what hath been ſaid at the 15th, 16th, and 17th verſes of this Chapter, concerning the ſcales of Leviathan, to which I refer the Reader; and ſhall paſs on, when I have given three or four hints, by way of improvement from the whole.

Firſt, If the Lord hath made a Creature that no weapon can hurt, then ſurely the Lord himſelf is exalted above all hurt from the Creature; as it is ſaid in another place of this Book (Chap. 35. 6.) If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him? that is, thou canſt not hurt God with thy ſin. Though men by ſin lay at him, as with Sword and Spear, though they throw their Sling-ſtones of Blaſphemy at him, they cannot hurt him. Gamaliel (Acts 5. 39.) gives warning againſt this; take heed what ye do, refrain from theſe men, leſt haply ye be found even to fight againſt God. They fight againſt God, who ſet themſelves to do miſchief; but what miſchief ſoever they do to men, or among men, they can do none to God, their weapons reach him not. As Solomon tells us (Prov. 21. 30.) There is no wiſdom nor counſel againſt the Lord; ſo there is no weapon againſt the Lord: Sword, and Spear, and Dart, whether material or metaphorical, are but ſtubble before him. And as the Lord himſelf is beyond the reach of weapons, and the rage of man, ſo are they who are under the Lords protection; therefore it is ſaid of the Church (Iſa. 54. 17.) No weapon formed againſt thee ſhall proſper; that is, it ſhall not have the intended effect of the Smith that made it (as that Scripture ſpeaks) nor of the hand that wields it. The ſword of him that layeth at the Church of God ſhall not hold; the Spear, the Dart, nor the Habergeon. As none are ſo much aſſaulted as the Church, ſo none are ſo well armed and defended.

Secondly, As no offenſive weapon can hurt the Lord, ſo no defenſive weapon can ſhelter us from hurt, if under the wrath of the Lord. Though we have got an Habergeon, though we have Scales or Bucklers like Leviathan, yet the Lord hath a Sword, a Spear, a Dart, that can ſtrike through them; that is, through all the defences of the moſt hardned ſinners in the world. There is no ſhelter to be found, nor defence to be made againſt the weapons of Divine Wrath, but only in and by Jeſus Chriſt. God is a Shield and Buckler, a Helmet and an Habergeon for Believers, againſt all offenſive weapons of men or devils; but where ſhall Unbelievers find a Shield or a Buckler to ſecure themſelves againſt the offenſive weapons of God.

Again, Some in allegorizing this Scripture ſay, that Leviathan is an Emblem of the Devil. Now, though it be a truth, that no outward weapon, no Sword nor Dart can terrifie or hurt the Devil, yet the Lord hath furniſhed us with weapons that can pierce the Devil, that Leviathan, and defend us from his power (Eph. 6. 14, 15, 16.) The Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, will wound that old Leviathan; the Breaſt-plate of Righteouſneſs, the Helmet of Salvation, the Shield of Faith, will preſerve us from woundings in the midſt of all his fiery darts. How ſoon would the Devil, that cunning, and curſed, and cruel Darter and Archer, wound our ſouls to death with his fiery Darts and poyſonous Arrows, if the Lord had not given us a Shield, a Breaſt-plate, and an Helmet, more impenetrable than the ſcales of Leviathan!

Laſtly, This deſcription of Leviathan, carrieth in it a fit reſemblance of a hardned ſinner, of a ſinner reſolved upon his evil ways. Some ſinners come at laſt to ſuch a hardneſs, that they are like Leviathan, nothing will pierce them; the Sword of the Spirit doth not enter them. Though you lay at them with all your might in the Miniſtry of the Word, though you caſt darts, and ſhoot arrows of terrible threatnings againſt them, they eſteem them but ſtraw and ſtubble; ſin hath ſo hardned them, that they (as we may expreſs it) are Sermon-proof, Threatning-proof, yea, Judgment-proof too, as to amendment by them, though they are broken and periſh under them. Let God ſay what he will in his Word, or do what he will in his works, they regard it not; they laugh at the ſhaking of theſe Spears. As a man that hath armour of proof cares not for ſword or ſpears, fears not an arrow nor a bullet; ſo 'tis in a ſpiritual ſenſe with reſolved ſinners; God having as a juſt Judgment for former ſins, given them a Shield upon their hearts (as the word ſignifieth, Lam. 3.65.) which we render ſorrow of heart, and put in the Margin obſtinacy, that is, hardneſs of heart, they then account reproofs, threats, admonitions, the moſt terrible words in all the Armoury of God, no more than a ſtraw or rotten wood. Woe to theſe Leviathans, to thoſe who harden their hearts againſt the Word of God, Who hath hardned himſelf againſt the Word of the Lord, and proſpered? And let all ſuch know, that (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Cor. 10.4.) The weapons of our warfare are not carnal (that is, weak, dull, edgleſs, pointleſs tools) but mighty through God, &c. And that though now they prevail not to Converſion, yet they will prevail to Condemnation; and that while they go on to ſin, they are but going (as Solomon ſpeaks of the young Wanton, Prov. 7.22.) As an Oxe goeth to the ſlaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks, till a dart ſtrike through his liver. God will have a dart at laſt which ſhall enter, a dart which thoſe Leviathans ſhall not count ſtubble, nor find to be ſo.

The Lord proceeds to deſcribe Leviathan, and, as we may conceive, to give a further demonſtration of the hardneſs of his ſcales and skin.

Verſ. 30. Sharp ſtones are under him, he ſpreadeth ſharp-pointed things upon the mire.

Mr. Broughton reads it, His underneath-places be as ſharp-ſheards. The word rendred Sharp ſtones, properly ſignifies the ſharp pieces of a Pot-ſheard; that is, ſtones, or other hard things, as ſharp and pricking as the pieces of a broken Pot-ſheard. We may expound this verſe two ways.

Firſt, As being a proof of the hardneſs and firmneſs of Leviathans skin and fleſh; ſo hard they are, that he can lye down and reſt himſelf upon hard and ſharp ſtones, even upon the ſharp tops of Rocks in the Sea, as we lye down upon our beds. Sharp ſtones are under him, but he feels them not; which may be the meaning alſo of the next words.

He ſpreadeth ſharp-pointed things upon the mire.

That is, Leviathan like ſome hardy man, or iron-ſides, ſcorns to lye ſoft on the ouze or mire, but laying, as it were, ſharp ſtones upon it, ſhews what he can endure without hurt. And ſo I conceive theſe words, He ſpreadeth ſharp-pointed things upon the mire, may be thus underſtood and read, He ſpreadeth himſelf upon ſharp-pointed things, as if it were upon the mire.

Secondly, We may expound this verſe as to the falling off of darts caſt, and ſtones flung at him, or as to the breaking of ſwords and ſpears upon his ſcales, when aſſaulted with them. As if it had been ſaid, If you caſt darts, or fling ſtones at him, they do not enter, but drop down under him; or, if you will aſſail him with a ſword and ſpear, the ſword breaks, the ſpears point is ſnapt off, and falls under his body. Thus he ſpreadeth ſharp-pointed things upon the mire, or ſpreadeth the mire all over with ſharp-pointed things. As after a well-fought battle at Land, we may ſee the field ſpread over with pieces of ſwords and ſpears, and other broken weapons; ſo is the bottom of the Sea (could you ſee to the bottom of it) after a skirmiſh, or day of battle with Leviathan. This is a probable ſenſe, but I rather take the former, as ſhewing the hardneſs of his skin and ſcales, by his inſenſibleneſs of any ſharp or hard thing that he reſts himſelf upon.

All that I ſhall add is this: It were well for us, if in this caſe we could be like Leviathan, if we could harden our ſelves, or inure our ſelves to hardſhips, to lye with ſharp ſtones under us. Surely our fleſh is much too tender and ſoft, and our skin too delicate for the endurance of a lodging upon hard ſtones, and ſharp-pointed things. The Apoſtle gives a ſuitable word of advice to Timothy (2 Tim. 2.6.) Do thou endure hardſhip, as a good Souldier of Jeſus Chriſt. We ſhould labour to endure hardſhip, and to fare hard, and to lye hard. Edmond, a Saxon King in this Land, was called Iron-ſides. I fear there are few Iron-ſides among us; ſuch, I mean, as are fit and ready to endure hardſhip, to ſuffer hard things at Chriſts call, and for his Name ſake: We ſhould be content, as the Church once was (Pſal. 68. 30.) to lye among the Pots, yea, as Leviathan, upon the Potſheards, in that behalf. The old Martyrs were patient, while they lodged in a Coal-houſe, and ruſſeled among the ſtraw. Though the Lord doth not exerciſe us with ſuch hardſhips, yet 'tis the duty of every Chriſtian to get his heart into readineſs and willingneſs to endure them. Though all the Followers of Chriſt are not honoured with ſufferings for him, yet they who have not, at leaſt who pray not that they may have a ſpirit of ſuffering, are not worthy to follow him, nor to be called his Diſciples (Mat. 10. 38. Mat. 16. 24. Luke 14. 26.)

Verſ. 31. He maketh the deep to boil like a pot, he maketh the Sea like a pot of oyntment.

As Leviathan troubles Seamen, ſo he troubles the Sea; he macerates and vexeth the waters, he diſtutbs the whole Ocean where he is, or whereſoever he comes. This is illuſtrated by a double ſimilitude; Firſt, of a boiling pot, He maketh the deep like a boiling pot. Secondly, He maketh the Sea like a pot of oyntment; or, as Mr. Broughton renders it, He ſets the Sea as a Spicers Kettle; that is, all in a fume and foam. Spices mingled in a Kettle to make oyntment, boil vehemently upon the fire; any liquor boiling is moved, and the more it boils, the more it moves. Thus Leviathan bluſtring in the deep, canſeth it to look like a boiling pot, or like a pot of oyntment. This ſhews the force of Leviathan; he makes ſuch a buſſel, that he, as it were, raiſeth a Storm in the Sea; a fiercely boiling pot over the fire, much reſembles the Sea when the waves foam, and the waters are inraged by the winds. The mighty power of God is ſet forth in Scripture, calming the Sea when 'tis ſtormy, and raiſing ſtorms when it is calm, as might be ſhewed in many Scriptures. Leviathan can trouble the Sea, when God hath made it quiet; but he cannot quiet nor calm it, when God hath made it ſtormy. Leviathan is of a turbulent nature, and he deals only in ſtorms; his reſtleſs ſpirit will not let the Sea reſt, he makes it boil like a Pot, &c.

Totum Oceanum turbat: Jun.

That which is ſaid of Leviathan in his turmoiling the Sea, may well repreſent the ſpirit of wicked men, who in this are like Leviathan; they (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 57. 20.) are like the troubled Sea, when it cannot reſt; and as themſelves are like the troubled Sea, having continual tumultuations in their own breaſts, ſo they often make others like a troubled Sea.

I ſhall not here omit what the Learned Bochartus takes notice of in this verſe, both for and againſt his Aſſertion, That Leviathan is the Crocodile.

Firſt, Though it cannot be denied, that the Whale makes a greater ſtir in the Sea, and troubles the waters more than the Crocodile (the Whale being much the greater of the two) yet he conceives the latter part of the verſe (where 'tis ſaid, He makes the Sea like a pot of oyntment) very peculiar to the Crocodile. For (ſaith he) many Writers commend the fragrancy or ſweet ſmell which the Crocodile ſends forth, much like that of Musk, or the Arabian Spices, inſomuch that ſome think Ambergreeſe is taken from that Animal. And hence he concludes, it may well be ſaid, that he (where he comes) makes the Sea like a pot of oyntment, which gives a fragrant ſmell, then eſpecially when ſtirred, as Leviathan is here ſaid to ſtir. This is indeed a rare Obſervation, and ſuch as Bochartus might well ſay, he could not enough admire, that the Ancients ſhould give him no hint at all of his teſtimonies for it, being from Authors of ſomewhat a late date, which the Reader may peruſe for his fuller information, if he pleaſe. I would not raiſe any ſuſpition about the truth of the thing, which Bochartus ſaith cannot but be true, it being aſſerted by the unanimous Vote of people of all Nations, Indians, Arabians, Egyptians, Aſſyrians, and Americans.

All that I ſhall ſay to it is only this, That the Text in Job having this ſcope to deſcribe the turbulency of Leviathan in the Sea, ſeems not to reſpect the ſavour or ſmell of the pot of oyntment, but only the troubled motion or ebullition of it, when 'tis boiling over the fire. And in that reſpect, the Whale maketh the Sea like a pot of boiling oyntment, as much as, yea more than the Crocodile.

The ſecond thing which Bochartus takes notice of in this verſe, is an objection which may be raiſed from it againſt his opinion. The Lord ſpeaks of Leviathan, as being in the Sea, and (which is a word of the ſame ſignificancy) in the deep. Now the Crocodile is not a Sea-animal, but a River-animal; therefore Leviathan is not a Crocodile. To this he anſwers:

Firſt, That the River Nilus is called the Egyptian Sea (Iſa. 11. 15.) and quotes a Jewiſh Doctor, who expounds it ſo. To this I may reply, that other learned men (and among them the late Annotators upon our Engliſh Bible) deny that Expoſition, and are very confident, that by the Egyptian Sea, is meant (not Nilus, but) the Red Sea, which out of the main Ocean ſhoots into the Land, in form and faſhion of a Tongue.

Secondly, He anſwers, that not only the River Nilus, and the Lakes adjoyning to it, which abound with Crocodiles, but ſeveral other great Lakes, both in holy Writ, and by many Writers, are called Seas; and therefore he concludes, the argument will not hold, that by the name Leviathan the Crocodile cannot be ſignified, becauſe the Sea is here aſſigned as the ſeat or habitation of Leviathan.

I grant this is not a concluding argument againſt the Crocodile, yet from theſe words we may gather a probable argument for the Whale; for as the word Sea is taken ſometimes in a large ſenſe, for great Rivers and Lakes where Crocodiles are, ſo in ſtrict and proper ſenſe, it always ſignifies the Ocean, where Crocodiles are not. And the Scripture tells us, that the proper place appointed by God for the moſt proper Leviathans ſeat, is not the Sea, in a large and improper ſenſe, but in that which is moſt ſtrict and proper, even that which is called the great and wide Sea (Pſal. 104. 24, 25.) as was ſhewed before. And that we have reaſon to believe, that God ſpake to Job of and about the moſt proper and eminent of all thoſe Animals, which by Scripture allowance may be called Leviathan, was there alſo ſhewed. And if ſo, then we muſt neceſſarily underſtand the great and wide Sea, by that Deep in the Text, which Leviathan maketh to boil like a pot, and by that Sea alſo, which he (by his boyſterous motion) makes like a pot of oyntment.

Thus the Lord in this verſe, hath told us what work Leviathan makes when he is below in the deep, and raiſing himſelf towards the ſurface of the Sea; in the next he tells us, what he doth when he ſwims aloft.

Verſ. 32. He maketh a path to ſhine after him, &c.

That is, he ſwims with ſuch force and violence near the ſurface of the water, that you may ſee a plain path behind him; he makes a great foam or froth upon the waters, which ſhines like a beaten way. 'Tis good in one ſenſe, to make a path ſhine after us; that is, by the holineſs and righteouſneſs of our lives. The path of the righteous ſhines as the morning light (Prov. 4. 18.) A righteous man walketh not in dark, black, defiled, filthy paths; his are paths of light, and ſuch as lead to that bleſſed Inheritance among the Saints in light. But the path of an unrighteous man ſhines only like Leviathans path, with an ugly foam or froth, or at beſt, 'tis but like the ſhining of a pinching froſt, or of an aged head, which is not whiteneſs, but hoarineſs, and ſo 'tis ſtill like Leviathans path; as it followeth in the latter part of the verſe.

One would think the deep to be hoary.] The word ſignifies the hoarineſs of the head of an old man. When we grow old our hair changeth colour, and the head is hoary. Leviathan makes ſuch a foamy path, that one would think the Sea grey-headed, or that a hoary froſt covered the Sea. That Metaphor was often uſed by the old Poets.

Æſtimabit abyſſum quaſi ſeneſcentem. Vulg. Uſitatum eſt ut canum & incaneſcere mare dicatur. Hæc inter tumidi late maris ibat imago. Aurea, ſed fluctu ſpumabant cærula cano. Virg. l. 8. Æneid. deſcribens navale bellum Auguſti atq; Antonii. Totaq; remigio ſumis incanuit unda. Catul.

All I ſhall ſay from this verſe is, to take notice of the good Providence of God, that this hurtful and dangerous Creature Leviathan gives ſuch warning where he is. While he lies below in the Sea he can do no hurt, and as often as he raiſeth himſelf up, he makes a path to ſhine, he ſhakes the Sea hoary, by which we may the more eaſily diſcover and avoid him; whereas otherwiſe, he might do miſchief unawares, or eaſily ſurprize the unwary Paſſenger. 'Tis mercy, when they who, like Leviathan, are able to do much hurt, make ſuch a path ſhine after them, as gives any an opportunity to eſcape them, and keep out of danger. Thus we have, as it were, the Picture of Leviathan drawn by the hand of God himſelf: And from all it appears, that he is a very Non-ſuch, or that his fellow is not to be found, he hath no Equal in the viſible world, ſuch another is no where to be had.

Thus the Lord concludes.

Verſ. 33, 34. Upon the Earth is not his like, who is made without fear: he beholdeth all high things; he is a King over all the children of pride.

Theſe two verſes contain the cloſe of all; they are, as it were, the Epilogue, the Epiphonema, or cloſing words, with which the Lord ſhuts up his whole diſcourſe about this Creature. As if he had ſaid, Why ſhould I wade further in a deſcription of him by particulars? I will ſay all, I will wind up all in a word; he is ſuch a one, as in the Earth there is not his like. Or as if the Lord had ſaid to Job, I told thee before of Behemoth, that he is the chief of my ways; yet he comes far ſhort of Leviathan, for upon Earth there is not his like. Leviathan is not only the chief in his own dominion, among the Fiſhes of the Sea, but alſo among the Beaſts of the Earth, the ſtrongeſt and ſtouteſt of which are not to be compared with him.

Before I proceed with the opening of theſe two Verſes, according to our Tranſlation, which generally holds out Leviathan to be the Whale; and before I touch ſome other Tranſlations which bear the ſame interpretation, I ſhall propoſe the Tranſlation and interpretation given by the Learned Bochartus, which accommodates theſe two concluding Verſes fully to the Crocodile. His Tranſlation runs thus, and ſo doth his Interpretation, as followeth,

There is not his like upon the duſt, ſo made, that he ſhould not be bruiſed (or broken) He tranſlates the Hebrew (עפר על) not as we, upon the Earth, but, upon the duſt; thereby implying that a creeping thing is here intended by Leviathan: For (ſaith he) the feet of the Crocodile are ſo ſhort, that he rather creepeth than goeth; and therefore he may well be reckoned among creeping things: And hence Serpents (being creeping things) are called Serpents of the duſt (Deut. 32. 24.) Now though the Crocodile be a creeping thing, yet he differs from ordinary creeping things and Serpents; for they may eaſily be trodden upon and bruiſed, as the Lord ſaid to Adam concerning the Serpent (the Devil) it (that is, Chriſt the Seed of the Woman) ſhall bruiſe thy head (Gen. 3. 15.) But the Crocodile is made that he ſhould not be bruiſed; that is, he is ſo made, by reaſon of his implanted ſtrength, and the hardneſs of his ſcales, that he cannot be bruiſed nor cruſht. Others (ſaith he) render the latter part of the Verſe, Made that he ſhould not fear, or to be without fear. But I had rather keep the primary and proper ſignification of the word or Verb (חתת) becauſe it is not altogether true of the Crocodile,

Non eſt ei ſimile ſuper pulverem, ita factum, ut non atteratur.

לבלתי חת ut non timeret, velut eſſet ſine timore.

Crocodile, that he is without fear ; ſome Authors writing of him, that he flies from thoſe that aſſault him boldly, and is very bold upon thoſe that are afraid of him, and fly from him. But even the ſame thing (ſaith he) may be ſaid of Whales, who ('tis known) haſten away upon the hearing of any noiſe, or craſhing ſound. Thus upon the 24th verſe.

Etiam quicquid altum eſt deſpicit: Rex eſt ſupra omnes filios Elationis.

His tranſlation of the 25th is near ours in the words of it. Moreover he deſpiſeth whatſoever is high, he is a King over all the Sons of Elation or Height. Beſides(ſaith he)that the Crocodile hath many things, upon the account of which he is to be preferred before other creeping Creatures ; he alſo deſpiſeth whatſoever is high, even the Sons of Highneſs ; that is, thoſe Animals who have higher, or taller bodies, and longer legs than he, by the help of which they are raiſed up on high, even over theſe he Kings it, being confident he hath greater ſtrength than they : For how high ſoever they lift up themſelves, yet he can eaſily bring down the greateſt of them flat to the ground, with one ſtroak of his Tail, and then kill them, and tear them to pieces. And that the Crocodile doth thus conquer, and King it over the ſtouteſt and proudeſt beaſts, the Learned Author gives many proofs, from the Authority both of Ancient and late Writers. So then (as he concludes) thoſe Animals which are higher and taller in ſtature than the Crocodile, are thoſe Sons of Elation or pride (as Job 28. 8.) and ſo ſtand oppoſed to Reptiles or Animals creeping on the duſt, ſpoken of in the former verſe. Thus far the Learned Bochartus gives us his tranſlation and underſtanding of theſe two verſes, compleating the deſcription of Leviathan.

בני שחת Filii Elationis.

I ſhall now conſider our own tranſlation.

Upon the Earth is not his like.] But in what is it that Leviathan exceeds all Creatures on Earth? ſo that he hath not his like, or there is no compariſon to him, as ſome render the words.

I anſwer, In theſe two things, both which appear by what hath been ſaid before, and one of them is expreſt in that which follows.

First, There is none like him for greatneſs.

Secondly, There is none like him for his fearleſneſs or ſtoutneſs ; and therefore it is ſaid, He is made without fear : As if the Lord had ſaid, There is no Creature upon Earth ſo ſtout, but may be made afraid, the very Lyon may be ſcared. Naturaliſts ſpeak of ſome ways whereby the Lyon is made afraid, but nothing can make Leviathan afraid, he is made (as one tranſlation hath it) that he ſhould fear nothing, or no man, neither one nor other. And as he feareth none, ſo all are or have reaſon to fear him ; but when the moſt dreadful things appear, there is not the leaſt appearance of dread in him. Is not Leviathan full of courage, ſeeing he is altogether fearleſs? Where there is no fear, there is nothing but courage, or courage at the height. It hath been noted in Hiſtory, concerning ſeveral great men of the world, that notwithſtanding all their greatneſs, they have been very full of fear ; they eſpecially who have been either unrighteous or cruel in the exerciſe of their power : But Leviathan, though he be great and cruel too, yet he hath no fear. Fear (as was ſaid before) is that trouble of mind which ſeizeth upon us at the apprehenſion of ſome impending, or near-hand danger. Leviathan is not ſaid to be without fear, as they who are not apprehenſive of danger, but as they, who though they ſee and apprehend great danger near them, yet fear it not. Upon the Earth is not his like, who is made without fear. From the former part of the verſe, Melius ſuprema inter animantia vis ac fortitudo deſcribi non potuit, quam tot aliis prius dictis, addendo impavidum cor. Bold. Qui factus eſt, ut nullum timeret. Hieron.

> Obſerve, First ; It is of God that the Creatures are diſpoſed into ſeveral ranks and degrees, that one exceeds and excels another.

In ſome things there is a likeneſs among all Creatures, and there may be ſomething wherein one exceeds them all, and hath none like him ; that it is ſo, is of God. Some men are ſo bad, that they have not their like ; it was ſaid of Ahab, there was none like him. There are alſo men ſo good, that there are none like them, as the Lord ſaid to Satan of Job (Chap. 1. 8.) Haſt thou not conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him in the Earth. There God ſpake of Job with reſpect to his holineſs and righteouſneſs, as here of Leviathan, with reſpect to his greatneſs and fearleſneſs ; Upon the Earth there is not his like. Now as it is of the Devil, that any are beyond all others in wickedneſs ; ſo it is of the Lord, that any exceed others in goodneſs, in holineſs, in patience, in righteouſneſs, in faith, in faithfulneſs, in fruitfulneſs ; this is by ſpecial diſpenſation from the Lord. It is alſo of the Lord, that any among the Irrational Creatures exceed their fellows, as was further ſhewed concerning Behemoth, from thoſe words in the fortieth Chapter ; He is the chief of the ways of God ; and as here it is ſaid of Leviathan, There is none like him, who is made without fear.

> Hence note, Secondly ; It is of God that one Creature is leſs fearful than another.

As the outward compoſure of the Creature is of God ; ſo alſo is the inward diſpoſition. Some Creatures are (as I may ſay) nothing but fear ; ſuch is the Hare ; whence we ſpeak proverbially, As fearful as a Hare. The Hart is a goodly Creature, yet a little Dog will make a hundred of them run. But there are other Creatures that may be ſaid to have no fear at all ; Solomon gives that character of a Lyon (Prov. 30. 30.) There are three things which go well, yea four, that are comely in going, a Lyon which is ſtrongeſt among beaſts, and turneth not away from any, that is, fears not any. And as among irrational Creatures, one is more fearleſs than another ; ſo it is among men, one is of a fearful ſpirit, and another of a couragious ſpirit. This alſo is of God ; yet there are ſpecial and particular reaſons, why ſome men are fuller of fear than others.

Again, when the Lord would expreſs the perfection of this Creature, he ſaith, He is made without fear.

> Hence note, Thirdly ; The leſs fear, the more perfection, unleſs it be of that fear which is our perfection, the fear of God ; then indeed the more fear, the more perfection.

We may diſtinguiſh of fear : There is godly fear, and natural fear. The leſs natural fear, the more perfection ; but the more godly fear, the more perfection ; the more we fear God, the more perfect we are ; but the leſs of natural fear, or fear of the Creature we have, the more perfect we are. The perfection of the godly is often expreſt by being above, or by being delivered from fear (Pſal. 91. 5.) Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terrour by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day. The Lord ſaith to many, fear not, but there are but few of whom he ſaith, and for whom he undertakes, that they ſhall not fear, eſpecially in a time of ſuch great fear, as is ſpoken of in that ninety firſt Pſalm, a time of Plague, and that in the heat, when the ſlain of the Lord are many, and men fall by thouſands on the one hand, and on the other. Truſt in God is the ſpecial qualification of the perſon, who ſtands under the protection of that promiſe in the Pſalm laſt mentioned. And the ſame promiſe is made to a man fearing God (Pſal. 112. 7.) No evil tidings ſhall make him afraid. David profeſſed this gracious fearleſneſs (Pſal. 46. 2.) Although the Earth be removed, and the Hills be carried into the midſt of the Sea, yet will not I fear. And again (Pſal. 23. 4.) Though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no evil. 'Tis the perfection of a man not to fear outward dangers ; therefore Chriſt rebuked his Diſciples (Mat. 8. 28.) Wherefore did ye fear, O ye of little faith? Their faith was very little, elſe their fear would not have been ſo great. Now as it is thus in man ; the leſs of natural fear, the greater is his perfection : ſo alſo among other Creatures, it is a note of their perfection, to be made without fear ; for it ſhews the greatneſs of their courage, as alſo of their ſtrength. And this is abſolutely the perfection of God, whoſe infinite inſuperable power and ſtrength, is anſwered with a moſt conſtant ſerenity and immutability of mind, who as he wants nothing, ſo he fears nothing. Thus our Tranſlation carrieth the verſe : I ſhall touch upon a ſecond, before I part with it.

His dominion is not over the duſt ; he is made without fear.] The reaſon of this variety of Tranſlation is, becauſe the word which we render [like] ſignifies power or dominion ; and the reaſon why the ſame word ſignifies to have power, as alſo to compare, or be like, is, becauſe thoſe things which are great above others, uſe to be the matter of compariſon : And hence it is, that as we and others render, upon Earth none is like him, or to be compared to him ; ſo others, taking the word ſtrictly and properly, ſay, his Dominion or Magiſtracy is not upon the Earth.

Non eſt in pulvere poteſtas ejus. Verbum השל ſignificat dominatum & poteſtatem, & quia quæ dominatum habent ſuper reliqua ſolent eſſe materia comparationum & ſimilitudinum, ideo ſignificat comparare, vel aſſimilare.

The Text thus read, ſhews the Lords great goodneſs to men upon the Earth; that having made ſuch a huge, vaſt, dreadful Creature, he hath not given him any power or dominion upon the Land, but by his Providence hath ſhut him up in the Sea, where he can do leſs hurt: for if Leviathan, or a Creature of his bigneſs and power, ſhould live upon the Land, there were no living by him, either for man or beaſt. As it is an argument of Gods care of, and benignity to mankind, that thoſe Land-creatures, Lyons, Tygers, &c. which deſtroy and prey upon others, are ſo ordered, that in the day-time they retire to their Dens, (Pſal. 104.22.) and when the night comes, then they go abroad: God ſhuts them up in the day-time, when they might do moſt hurt, or hinder man from doing good, that is, the duties of his Calling abroad in the open fields. (ver. 23.) 'Tis alſo a great part of the Wiſdom and good Providence of God, to ſhut up the Leviathan within the bounds of the Sea; his power, his dominion is not over the duſt, or upon the land. The Author of this Tranſlation gloſſeth it thus: How ſmall a matter were it, ſaith he, to ſay, Leviathan hath not his like upon Earth; for another thing is here intended or handled. Here Divine Providence is hinted to us, which gives Laws and limits to Earth and Sea, and to all things contained in them: He hath not formed, nor fitted the body of Leviathan with members of uſe upon the Earth; therefore the Sea is his dominion, not the Land. This is a truth, and a uſeful conſideration.

Yet, I conceive, the Lord doth here rather heighten the power of Leviathan, by ſaying, He hath not his like on Earth. For it being taken for granted that he hath not his like in the Sea, nothing could be ſaid more to ſet forth his greatneſs than this, that he hath not his like at Land. And ſome of the Hebrew Doctors ſay, the Lord ſpake thus, becauſe beaſts on the Land are ſtronger than Fiſh in the Sea; and they give a reaſon for it, upon a Philoſophical ground, becauſe much moiſture weakens: Therefore the wonderful, even preternatural ſtrength of Leviathan appears in this; that he being a Water Animal, ſhould yet be both bigger and ſtronger than any beaſt of the Earth. Upon the Earth there is not his like, who is made without fear. Which, as it is here aſſerted, ſo it is demonſtrated in the following words.

Verſ. 34. He beholdeth all high things: he is King over all the Children of pride.

There is a threefold interpretation of thoſe words, in the former part of this verſe, He beholdeth all high things. Underſtanding by the Relative [He] Leviathan for there is another reading which I ſhall touch upon in the cloſe.

Firſt, Theſe words may be expounded as an argument of the mighty courage of Leviathan. He (as it was ſaid before) is made without fear, for he beholdeth all high things; that is, let things or perſons be never ſo high, never ſo great, never ſo formidable, he beholdeth them boldly; he doth not wink and look, but with open face beholds the moſt high and terrible things, for (as it is ſaid before) he is made without fear.

Omne ſublime videt; eſt velut declaratio præcedentium. Factus eſt ut nullum timeret. Bold.

Secondly, He beholdeth all high things; that is, he beholdeth them with diſdain, as if this were a ſignification of the matchleſs pride of Leviathan: He looks upon high things, how high ſoever they are, are his underlings, or as if they were not good enough for him, to beſtow a look, or a caſt of his eye upon. He is (as one gives his character) pride throughout, or nothing elſe but a piece of pride, extreamly proud. Thus to behold is to contemn, and in that ſenſe we find it uſed in many Scriptures; ſo ſome expound that (Cant. 1.6.) Look not upon me, becauſe I am black, becauſe the Sun hath looked upon me, that is, do not contemn me (ſaith the Church) becauſe of my blackneſs by perſecution. So (Job 37.24.) He (that is, God) reſpecteth not any that are wiſe of heart: The Lord looks upon the wiſeſt men of the world, as unworthy of a look; he looks upon them as infinitely below him; and if any are proud of their wiſdom, he looks upon them with diſdain, he beholds them, and deſpiſeth them and their wiſdom. It is ſaid of Goliah (1 Sam. 18.42.) when David came to him, he beheld him, and diſdained him, that is, he beheld him with diſdain: When the Gyant looked about, and ſaw David a Youth, he diſdained him as no match for him. Leviathan is ſuch a Goliah, He beholdeth all high things, be they never ſo high, with a kind of diſdain.

Videre pro contemnere. Totus ſuperbia eſt. Nicetas.

Hence note; They who are great in any kind, are very apt to deſpiſe others, or to look upon them with diſdain, as if they were nothing to them.

Looks of diſdain, deſpiſing looks, are very common in the world. With what a diſdainful eye did the Phariſee behold the Publican (Luk. 18.9, 11.) I am not as other men are, Extortioners, Unjuſt, Adulterers, or even as this Publican, this pittiful fellow. Pride it ſelf is always accompanied with contempt of others, and cauſeth it. The Title of that Parable in the 16th of Luke is, He ſpake this Parable to certain that truſted in themſelves, that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others. 'Tis the ſpirit of a Leviathan, he beholds all high things, how much more low things, with diſdain. Yet,

Thirdly, Some expound theſe words as an argument, not of the pride, but of Leviathans ſpirit, who as he is the higheſt of Elementary Animals, ſo he beholds all high things, he will not meddle with inferiour matters, he will not look at mean things, they are below him. Great men are for great matters. The Heathens ſaid of their Jupiter, He had no leiſure to attend upon, or have to do with ſmall affairs. Small matters will not go down with Leviathan, he is always looking at great. Such is the ſpirit of worldly men; they, like Leviathan, behold all high things, not the high things of Heaven, but the high things of Earth; they are not Heavenly-minded, but high-minded. A godly man is Heavenly-minded, a carnal man is high-minded. David profeſſed (Pſal. 131.1.) Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty, neither do I exerciſe my ſelf in great matters, in things too high for me. What was too high for a King? for a David? yet King David ſaid, his heart was not haughty, nor his eyes lofty, looking at high things; he looked at thoſe things which concerned his duty, to ſerve God, and his generation, by the will of God, or as God would have him (Acts 13.36.) he was Heavenly-minded, and not high-minded. Solomon ſpeaks of a Generation (Prov. 30.13.) O how lofty are their eyes, and their eye-lids are lifted up. What Generation was this? It was the Generation of proud, vain men: O how lofty are their eyes! who can tell how lofty they are! no mean thing will content them. They have ſuch a hunger after high things, that nothing low is food for them. A godly man is not ſatisfied with matters which are truly low and ſmall (to him the greateſt things in the world are ſo) yet the lower, the leſſer, the leaſt things of this world will ſerve his turn, as to contentation with them. Leviathan beholdeth all high things, and therefore as it followeth,

Nihil meditatur, non magnum eſt periphraſis animi res magnas conſectantis, ſc. reſpicere ad id quod ſublime eſt, & nunquam in re humili ſenſum, aut intentionem defigere. Sanct.

Non vacat exiguis rebus adeſſe Jovi.

Habet hoc magnanimus, ut mediocribus contentus, maxima negligat. Sen.

Superbus vero puſillum animum habet, ergo nunquam mediocribus contentus eſt ſed inhiat ad majora.

He is a King over all the children of pride.] That is, he is the chief of all proud ones.

Mr. Broughton renders it thus, He is a King over all wild Kind. And a Modern Interpreter abroad, rendring the Hebrew word by a Latine Feminine, ſaith, She is a Queen over all the wild Kind, or over all ſavage beaſts. Thus ſeveral render it, according to the ſtrict words of the Hebrew, He is a King over all wild beaſts. The Septuagint tranſlate, He is a King over all that are in, or that inhabit the waters; others, that move upon the Earth, as the learned Reader may ſee in the Margin. Now, becauſe thoſe wild ones, of one kind or another, are proud, and prouder than tame beaſts; therefore we render, He is a King over all the children of pride: That's an Hebraiſm, children of pride, for proud children, or for thoſe that are extreamly proud. They who excel in any thing, are elegantly called the children of it, as if they were begotten by it, or born of it; they bear the likeneſs of it, as children do of a Parent. Some perſons (as Leviathan here) are ſo like pride, that they may well be called children of pride, as if pride it ſelf had begotten them, and were their Father, or the Mother that brought them them forth, and nurſed them, or brought them up.

Eſtq; regina ſuper omnes feras. Jun.

Ipſeq; regem agit in feroces univerſos. Tygur.

Inter omnia ſuperba primas tenet & eſt facile princeps. Merc.

Filios ſuperbiæ; i.e. ſuperbos, juxta idioma Hebræorum.

Filius rei alicujus nuncupatur phraſi Hebraico, qui re aliqua inſigniter excellit.

But why is Leviathan called a King over all the children of pride?

I conceive the chief reaſon to be that which I ſhall give in this Obſervation, becauſe

Leviathan hath more to be proud of, than the proudeſt of the world.

They that have moſt to be proud of in nature, have not ſo much to be proud of as Leviathan. What had any natural man (as to the body) to be proud of in compariſon of him? Is he proud of his ſtrength? 'tis weakneſs to the ſtrength of Leviathan. Is he proud of his comelineſs, or the exact compoſure of his body? Leviathan excels him in that. In many particulars Leviathan hath that in him, which may occaſion pride, or him to be proud beyond thouſands. And we may conceive, that the reaſon why the Lord brings this in the cloſe, is to humble Job, who had carried it too proudly, and ſtoutly towards God. And therefore Job was ſpecially to beware of this, leſt the Devil, who deſired to tempt him, ſhould prevail upon him, by ſuggeſting proud and high thoughts of himſelf, and ſo make him a ſubject of his own Kingdom; for he is that myſtical Leviathan, who Kings it to purpoſe over the Children of pride. As if the Lord had ſaid to Job, Lay down all thoughts and words which have any ſavour or tincture of pride. Wilt thou be proud of this, or that, or any thing? know that in his kind, I have given more to Leviathan to be proud of, than to thee: And conſider under whom thou art to reckon thy ſelf, if thou art lifted up in pride, even under Leviathan, for he is a King over all the children of pride. And though Leviathan be exceeding proud and haughty, yet I can quickly bring him down; ſurely, then I can bring thee down, yet more than hitherto I have done. Therefore, O Job, do not contend any more with me, be not unquiet under my hand, who am indeed thy King.

In ſuperbis narrationem terminat, ut oſtendat hoc præcipue Job fuiſſe timendum, ne Diabolus qui eum expetierat adtentandum præcipue eum ad ſuperbiam inducere conaretur. Aquin.

This leads me to another reading of the Verſe, which makes the Antecedent to He, not Leviathan, nor the Devil; but God himſelf.

He that beholdeth all high things, is a King over all the Children of pride; that is, God who beholdeth all high things, and is higher than the higheſt (Eccleſ. 5. 8.) he is above the proudeſt men. So then theſe words, He beholdeth all high things, having the Relative That ſupplied, are a circumlocution of God. God indeed beholds all high things, and high perſons: Let men be never ſo high, God beholds them. And as he beholdeth all things, ſo he is higher than the higheſt things, he is a King over all the children of pride, who are the higheſt among men, or high above all men in their own conceit. The Lord, as a King, can rule and over-rule the proud, he can bring down their high looks; the Lord ſaid to Job (which may give ſome light to this interpretation) when he would ſtir him up, to conſider himſelf what he was able to do, and to do his beſt (Chap. 40. 12.) Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low. Canſt thou do it? Canſt thou look on every one that is proud, and bring him low? Thou canſt not, but I can. God beholdeth all high things, he hath them all before him, and is a King over them; he can make the proudeſt, and ſtouteſt, and greateſt that are in the world ſtoop to him. That great Monarch Nebuchadnezzar, who lorded it over the greateſt in the world in his days, was at laſt brought to confeſs, that the Lord was a King over all the Children of Pride (Dan. 4. 37.) Now I Nebuchadnezzar praiſe, and extol, and honour the King of Heaven, all whoſe works are truth, and his ways are judgment, and thoſe that walk in pride he is able to abaſe. In this ſenſe God is a King over all the Children of Pride.

Lapſi videntur qui hoc de Leviathan, vel etiam de Satana interpretati ſunt. Coc. Tenebras offudit interpretibus, omiſſio relativi, &c. Coc.

Now though the words, according to the ſenſe given of this laſt reading, may ſafely be applied to God; yet as moſt among late Interpreters underſtand them litterally of Leviathan, ſo many of the Ancients, who have written upon this Book, turn this whole deſcription of Leviathan into an Allegory of the Devil (as was toucht before) and to make it out, they have run into many needleſs ſpeculations. But I conceive, though it be true, that many things ſpoken of Leviathan are applicable to the Devil, as alſo to Tyrants, to Antichriſt, and all wicked men; and ſome, who are very ſparing in urging the Allegory, yet grant we may, when we read what is ſaid of Leviathan, reflect upon the Devil, and conſider what a mighty power he hath to do miſchief, if the goodneſs and power of God did not reſtrain him: Yet 'tis ſafeſt to keep to the plain ſenſe, and not to buſie our ſelves much in transforming the holy Scriptures into Allegories, in which ſome have been over-bold; nor ſhould any venture to draw Allegories, but out of a natural meaning, as the Apoſtle Paul did in the fourth Chapter of his Epiſtle to the Galathians.

I ſhall only add, that as from the nature of this Leviathan (ſuppoſed to be the Whale) we may receive many inſtructions; ſo the Lord doth ſometimes Preach or Propheſie to whole Nations by him, that is, he gives warning by him to Nations, of ſome great things which ſhall come to paſs among them. 'Tis the obſervation of an Interpreter upon this place. God (ſaith he) propheſies to People and Nations by the Whale, or Leviathan. And as other places (he was a German) ſo we have had warnings by him; For (ſaith he) in the year 1620. there was a Whale caſt up, upon the ſhore of a great river far within the Land, twenty and five Ells long and a half, immediately before the great wars, changes, and troubles which befel Germany. Hence he infers, when theſe mighty Fiſhes come into places which are out of their way and road, or when God caſts them upon unwonted ſhores. it foreſhews ſome unwonted thing, or that God will bring gueſts among them, that they never thought of.

Deus cetos quaſi pænitentiæ præcones facit, dum inſolitis locis apparentes bella, & alias clades nuncient; ut homines pænitentiam agant. Scult:

Thus I have done with this long and large deſcription which the Lord makes of Leviathan; there remains only one Chapter more, which gives us the full effect and iſſue of all the dealings of God with Job, and of his ſpeakings to Job, about Behemoth and Leviathan. All was to humble him, and we ſhall ſee him deeply humbled, and eminently reſtored, in the next Chapter.

CHAP. XLII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

Then Job anſwered the Lord and ſaid;
I know that thou canſt do every thing, and that no thought can be with-holden from thee.
Who is he that hideth counſel without knowledg? therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.
Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.
I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye ſeeth thee:
Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.

THis Chapter is the concluſion of the whole Hiſtory and Book of Job; it conſiſteth of three general parts.

Firſt, Of Jobs deep and ſincere humiliation before the Lord, in theſe ſix verſes.

Secondly, Of the reconciliation of Jobs three Friends to the Lord, or of their attonement and peace made with the Lord (verſ. 7, 8, 9.)

Thirdly, Of Jobs reſtitution, by the wonderful goodneſs, and powerful hand of the Lord, to as good, yea, to a better eſtate than he had before; from the tenth verſe incluſively, to the end of the Chapter.

The words under hand, contain the firſt part of the Chapter, and I call them Jobs humiliation before the Lord; and in that we may conſider theſe two general parts.

Firſt, Jobs Teſtimony concerning God.

Secondly, His Charge brought againſt himſelf.

His Teſtimony concerning God we have in the ſecond verſe, and that is twofold, or he commends and exalts God in two of his moſt glorious Attributes.

Firſt, About his Omnipotency, I know that thou canſt do every thing.

Secondly, About his Omniſciency (as moſt expound the words) And that no thought can be with-holden from thee.

Jobs Charge or Accuſation which he brought againſt himſelf, hath theſe four things in it:

Firſt, The confeſſion of his own ignorance and raſhneſs in the third verſe, Who is he that hideth counſel without knowledge? I have ſpoken (ſaith he) things which I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. Thus he chargeth himſelf with raſhneſs and ignorance.

Secondly, The ſubmiſſion of himſelf to the better inſtruction and teaching of God, or to what God ſhould be pleaſed yet further to reveal unto him at the fourth verſe, Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak, I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me. He begs yet a word more with God, and he begs a word more from God, or that God would ſpeak a word more to him.

Thirdly, A thankful acknowledgment, that he had already received much more light from God, than formerly he had attained to, at the fifth verſe, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear (I had a knowledge of thee, O God, before) but now (ſaith he) mine eye ſeeth thee; now I have more knowledge, and clearer light concerning thee, than ever I had before.

Fourthly, The iſſue or effect of all this, and that is his repentance, Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes. Thus we have both the general parts of the whole Chapter, and the more particular reſolution of this firſt part, which I call Jobs humiliation. And in this manner he humbled himſelf before the Lord (as followeth.)

Verſ. 1. Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid.

Theſe are the words of the Divine Hiſtorian, connecting this Chapter with the former. And all that I ſhall ſay upon this firſt verſe, ſhall be but to anſwer this queſtion.

How came it to paſs that Job anſwered the Lord again, ſeeing he had profeſſed before (Chap. 40. 5.) that he would anſwer no more? Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea twice, but I will proceed no further. There Job ſeemed to take up a reſolution to anſwer no more; how is it then, that here this Chapter beginneth with, Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid?

I ſhall give a threefold anſwer to this doubt.

Firſt, Thus; we may conceive, Job in the former promiſe, that he would anſwer no more, meant it of ſuch a kind of anſwer as he had given the Lord, and his Friends before; he would anſwer no more in that way, or after that ſort; and ſo it was not an abſolute reſolve not to anſwer, but not to anſwer as he had done: As if he had ſaid, I will anſwer no more juſtifying my ſelf, no, nor ſo much as excuſing my ſelf, or taking off the weight of any charge the Lord hath brought againſt me: There being ſuch a change in his anſwer, he may very well be ſaid to anſwer no more; for he anſwered no more, as once he did. The beſt and ſafeſt way of juſtifying and excuſing our ſelves, is to lay our ſelves at the foot of God: A confeſſion of, or a charging our ſelves with our ſins, is the beſt way of acquitting our ſelves before God from our ſins; I mean, 'tis the beſt that we can do to juſtifie or acquit our ſelves.

Secondly, We may anſwer thus: 'Tis true, Job ſaid he would anſwer no more; but it is as true, that the Lord commanded him to anſwer again (Chap. 40. 1.) For when Job had ſaid there at the fifth verſe, Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer, yea twice, but I will proceed no further: The Lord ſaith at the ſeventh verſe, Gird up thy loyns like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me. God called him forth, and bad him ſpeak, I have ſomewhat to ſay to thee, and do thou anſwer me; ſo that the Lord took off Job, or releaſed him from that bond, that he had put upon himſelf: Thou haſt ſaid, thou wilt anſwer no more, but I will have thee anſwer yet more. Now though we take up a reſolve to do, or not to do ſuch a thing, yet a word from God muſt over-rule us. As a word from God muſt over-rule us, not to do what we have reſolved to do; ſo a word from God muſt over-rule us, to do that which we have reſolved not to do.

Thirdly, The Lord had not only given Job a Command to anſwer, but inclined, and moved his heart to anſwer. The reaſon why Job reſolved not to anſwer, was the lowneſs of his own ſpirit, and the terrour of the Lord that was upon him. The Majeſty and dread of the Lord put him upon a reſolve for ſilence; but now ſome favour appearing, and the Lord giving him hopes of a gracious acceptance, he was incouraged to ſpeak, and had a freedom of ſpeech reſtored to him, and accordingly he anſwered the Lord. Thus we may ſalve Jobs Credit from lightneſs, much more from a lye; though after he had ſaid, he would anſwer no more, we find him anſwering again, Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid.

The Lord having ſet forth his own Infinite Power and Wiſdom, in that long and accurate ſpeech which he made out of the whirlwind, concerning his works of Creation and Providence; eſpecially by his diſcourſe about that unparallell'd pair, Behemoth and Leviathan, the greateſt of living Creatures upon the Land, and in the Sea: I ſay, the Lord having by this diſcourſe humbled Job, he ſaw, and was convinced there was no diſputing with God, nor inquiring into, much leſs complaining of, or murmuring at his ſecret counſels and judgments; he now ſaw, it was not for him to call God to an account about any of his dealings and proceedings, as ſometimes he had done, but rather to adore them: and therefore he ſubmits, and anſwers only with exalting God, and abaſing himſelf. He begins with the exaltation of God, Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid.

Verſ. 2. I know that thou canſt do every thing.

That's his firſt word; and it teacheth us, That, when we begin to have high and great thoughts of God, we cannot but have low and mean thoughts of our ſelves. Our own humiliation begins at the exaltation of God; and our ſelf-emptineſs and weakneſs, at the ſight of his Fulneſs and Almightineſs. Thus Job began his humiliation, I know that thou canſt do every thing.

This verſe exalts God both in his Omnipotency, and in his Omniſciency. 'Tis a ſhort, yet a full confeſſion of his Faith in this matter; and though it were ſhort, yet it pleaſed God much and fully, becauſe Job uttered it in much Faith. A few words pleaſe God, where he ſeeth much Faith.

Non exiget à nobis Deus multa verba, ſed multam fidem.

Firſt, He confeſſeth Gods Omnipotency, I know that thou canſt do every thing.

I know.] The word notes a certain knowledge, ſuch a knowledge as leaveth no place for doubting, nor for an uncertain opinionating. I know, is as much as, I am aſſured: As Jacob ſaid to Joſeph, when he told him Manaſſeh was his firſt-born (*Gen.*48.19.) I know it, my Son, I know it, &c. As if he had ſaid, I do not lay my right hand upon the Younger by miſtake, but choice; I know very well which is the firſt-born, and I know what I do, in laying my right hand upon the Younger. Thus ſaith Job here, I know that thou canſt do every thing. This great truth is fixed and fully ſetled upon my heart; and I urge my ſelf with all my might now, to give thee the glory of it, though ſometimes under my grievous pains and undue paſſions, I have obſcured it, and ſpoken as if I doubted, or were not well aſſured of it. I know,

That thou canſt do every thing.] The word rendred canſt do, notes two things; Firſt, Might; Secondly, Right, to do all things. For indeed, we can do no more than we have a right to do.

יכל Potuit, poteſtatem habuit, potentior fuit, ſuperavit, prævaluit. Id tantum poſſumus, quod jure poſſumus.

Again, It ſignifies not only a power of doing, but a prevailing power of doing, or a conquering power, a power that overcomes all difficulties, and removes all obſtacles or obſtructions; ſuch a power is intended in this word. We have it in a proper name (*Prov.*30 1.) The words of Agur, the ſon of Jakeh, even the Propheſie. The man ſpake unto Ithiel, even unto Ithiel and Ucal: Under both theſe names, Ithiel and Ucal, ſome conceive Chriſt is to be underſtood: he is Ithiel, which ſignifies (as Emanuel) God with us; and he is Ucal, that is, powerful and Almighty. When the Prophet Jeremiah would ſhew how ſtrongly that people were bent to ſin, he ſpeaks to them all as one man (Jer. 3. 5.) Behold, thou haſt ſpoken, and done evil, as thou couldſt; that is, thou haſt put forth thy utmoſt Can, thou haſt done as much evil as thou canſt. As here, Job ſaith of the Lord, Thou canſt do all things. So ſaid the Prophet of the people, Thou haſt ſpoken, and done evil, as thou couldſt. A godly man ſins, but he doth not ſin as he can, he doth not lay his utmoſt ſtrength, nor ſet his ſhoulders to it; but an evil man doth evil as he can, he ſerves his luſt as he ſhould ſerve God, with all his might. I urge that place only to note the force of the word, I know that thou canſt do

Every thing.] That is, every thing which is fit for, and becoming thy Majeſty to do, every thing which is good, every thing which is juſt, every thing which doth not reflect diſhonour upon thy name, every thing that is not a contradiction to thy ſelf. Thus, take things of what kind you will, God can do them; and take things in what degree you will, God can do them: he can do, not only little things, but great things, yea, the greateſt things. Great and little make no matter of difference with God. As if Job had ſaid, O Lord, I know and acknowledge there is nothing too hard for thee, yea, nothing is hard to thee; and that as thy counſels and decrees are altogether wiſe and juſt, ſo thou haſt power enough to execute and bring them about. Thou canſt do

Every thing.] There is no bound to the power of God, except his own will. God will not do every thing that he can, but he can do every thing that he willeth: nothing can ſtop the power of God in doing, where his will is to do. Thou canſt do every thing.

Or we may take it thus, God can do every thing; that is, every thing that he hath ſaid he will do, every thing that he hath engaged himſelf to do by promiſe, or by propheſie; he hath power to do what he hath ſaid or fore-ſhewed ſhall be done. Thus Job gives glory to God, and begins as David (Pſal. 59. 16, 17.) to ſing of the power of the Lord, as well as of his mercy. I will ſing of thy power; unto thee, O my ſtrength, will I ſing. Here Job ſings of the power of God, I know that thou canſt do every thing. The words have no difficulty in them; only when Job ſaith here, I know that thou canſt do every thing, it may be queſtioned.

Did not Job know this before? yea, had not Job ſaid as much as this before? that God could do every thing. In ſeveral paſſages of the ninth and twelfth Chapters, he ſaid as much as this, and more cannot be ſaid of God. We have ſaid every thing of God, when once we have ſaid, he can do every thing. There Job cries up the power of God, together with his wiſdom (verſ. 4. &c.) He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength; who hath hardned himſelf againſt him and proſpered? If any ask, what can God do? Job anſwers, He can move the mountains, and overturn them in his anger, he ſhaketh the earth out of its place, he commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not, and ſealeth up the Stars, he alone ſpreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the Sea. All theſe are ſpeakings forth of the Almightineſs of God; and he that can do theſe things, ſurely can do all things. Now ſeeing Job was there ſo much upon this point before, how is it that here he ſaith, I know that thou canſt do every thing? as if this were ſome new matter which he was not acquainted with before, or had never uttered.

I anſwer, it is true, Job knew this before, but he did not know it before as he knew it now: Though he knew the Lords power before, and ſpake of it, yet the trouble of his ſpirit, and the anguiſh of his ſoul under his ſufferings, did very much darken him as to this knowledge; and therefore when Job ſaith, I know that thou canſt do every thing, this knowing is not to be underſtood as oppoſed to ignorance only, as if Job knew this now, and did not know it at all before; but knowing here is oppoſed to a leſſer degree of knowledge, or knowing here imports a higher and greater degree of knowledge than ever he had before concerning the power of God. Job ſpake ſometimes before, as if he knew little of this great truth, and he much detracted from the abſolute power of God over all creatures by his complainings, eſpecially that he and other innocent ones were afflicted; as alſo, by his earneſt deſire of knowing why he was afflicted, being innocent, thereby intimating, that he was not ſo well ſatisfied in the dealing of God with him, nor had wholly reſigned up himſelf to the ſoveraign power and will of God, to be diſpoſed of at his pleaſure; ſo that in this ſhort confeſſion Job ſeems to ſpeak more largely, thus; Now at length, O Lord, I know more fully than ever, that thou haſt a moſt juſt right and power to command and diſpoſe of all things, and that thou both doſt and mayſt effect whatſoever pleaſeth thee; nor ought any to murmur at, much leſs reſiſt thy counſels or dealings, ſeeing every thing is, and cannot but be juſt and righteous which thou doſt. We conclude then, Job knew this truth before, but not as he knew it now.

Hence Note, Firſt; Knowledge is a growing thing.

And it were well if we were all found growing in knowledge. That's the Apoſtle Peters charge (2 Epiſt. 3. 18.) Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. He puts both together. There is a growth in knowledge as well as in grace; and in proportion to our ſpiritual growth in knowledge, is our growth in grace: for, though many grow much in notional and ſpeculative knowledge, who grow little in grace; yet they cannot but grow much in grace, who grow much in ſpiritual and experimental knowledge. As a godly man groweth in knowledge, ſo in grace too. Knowledge is a growing thing. The riſing and increaſing waters of the Sanctuary were a type of the increaſings of knowledge; thoſe waters were firſt to the ancles, and then to the knees, and then to the loyns, and then to the neck. And as knowledge increaſeth, with reſpect to the ſeveral times and ſtates of the Church (for ſo that place (Ezek. 47. 3, 4, 5.) is to be underſtood) ſo it is a truth, that there is an increaſe of knowledge, with reſpect to the ſtate of every particular believer; his knowledge is firſt to the ancles, and then to the knees, and then to the loyns, and then to the neck. As ſome points to be known are ſo eaſie or ſhallow, that (according to that clear and common ſimilitude) a Lamb may wade through them; others ſo difficult and deep, that an Elephant may ſwim in them: ſo the degree of knowledge in the ſame perſon, which at one time was very ſmall and ſhallow, at another may be ſwelled into a great deep, and he called a man of deep knowledge. We have a general promiſe of ſuch an increaſe (Iſa. 11. 9.) The earth ſhall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the Sea; that is, there ſhall be a wonderful increaſe of knowledge. That's alſo the import of Daniels Propheſie (Chap. 12. 4.) Many ſhall run to and fro, and knowledge ſhall be increaſed. Particular perſons ſhall improve in knowledge, and ſo ſhall the whole Church. So then, this increaſe of knowledge is of two ſorts, Firſt, it is a knowledge of more things; and, Secondly, of every thing more.

We ſhould labour to know more truths; we muſt thus add to our knowledge. For, though it be true, that every believer hath received the anointing, whereby he knoweth all things that are of abſolute neceſſity (1 John 2. 20.) yet he may come to the knowledge of more things which are exceeding uſeful and helpful to him.

Secondly, We ſhould labour to know every thing more, as in the Text. Job knew before that God was omnipotent, and could do all things; but now he knew it more, and ſo much more, that the knowledge which he had before might be called ignorance, compared with the knowledge which he had now received. Then we increaſe our knowledge fully, when we get the knowledge of more things, and of every thing more.

Again, we ſhould labour to increaſe, as in ſpeculative, ſo in experimental knowledge. Speculative knowledge alone, goes no further than the notion of what we know; experimental knowledge finds and feels the power of what we know, it ſubjects us, or makes us ſubject to what we know; the motions of the Will follow the light and dictate of the Underſtanding. This is the beſt knowledge: Knowledge which is felt and acted, is better than that which is heard and declared. What the Apoſtle John ſaid of himſelf, and his fellow Apoſtles, who were perſonally preſent with Chriſt while here on earth, with reſpect to their ſenſitive knowledge of him, is moſt true of the ſpiritual and experimental knowledge which believers have of Chriſt now in heaven, and they abſent from him (1 John 1. 1.) That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life, that declare we unto you; we declare that unto you which we have ſeen and felt. 'Tis a bleſſed thing, when we can ſay, that the things which we declare to others, we have felt them, and even handled them our ſelves. Many (as our uſual expreſſion is) handle Texts, and handle truths learnedly and excellently in a diſcourſe, who never handled, no nor ſo much as toucht them by any experience of their ſweetneſs or efficacy, either in their hearts or lives.

Further, conſider in what way Job came to this proficiency in knowledge; he had been a great while in the School of affliction, before he ſaid, I know, and I know to purpoſe, that thou canſt do every thing.

Hence Note; Afflictions and ſufferings are a ſpecial means to increaſe our knowledge, and wiſe us in the things of God.

The godly never increaſe more in knowledge, than under the Croſs, under afflictions of one kind or another. David ſaith (Pſal. 119. 71.) It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy ſtatutes. Did not David know the Statutes of God before? doubtleſs he did, he was all-along trained up in the ſtatutes of God; but when God took him into the School of affliction, then he learnt the Statutes of God much better. Let us conſider what profiting we find at any time under affliction, as to the knowledge of God, and of our ſelves; if we do not better our knowledge by one croſs, we may expect to meet with another, and another, till matters mend with us. Solomon ſaith, (Prov. 27. 22.) Thou thou ſhould bray a fool in a morter, among wheat, with a peſtle, yet will not his fooliſhneſs depart from him; that is, an obſtinate ſinner (he is the fool there ſpoken of) though extreamly afflicted, is not bettered: but a godly man profits by his affliction, both as to the departure and riddance of his folly, as alſo to his growth in ſpiritual experimental knowledge.

Once more (which will give us a third note) Job was not only in affliction, but God taught him in his affliction; Job had not only a rod upon his back, but a tutor by his ſide. His three friends had been long with him, and ſpoken much to him, but he learnt little by them. When Elihu had been ſpeaking to him, he yielded ſomewhat to him, though not fully; but when once God undertook to tutor and inſtruct him, Job learned amain, and profited greatly in knowledge.

Hence Note; Then we profit indeed under affliction, when God teacheth us in our afflictions.

If we have nothing but the rod, we profit not by the rod; yea, if we have nothing but the Word, we ſhall never profit by the Word. It is the Spirit given with the Word, and the Spirit given with the rod, by which we profit under both, or either. (Pſal. 94. 12.) Bleſſed is the man (ſaith David) whom thou chaſtneſt, and teacheſt out of thy Law. Chaſtning and divine teaching muſt go together, elſe there will be no profiting by chaſtning. God was Jobs teacher as well as his chaſtner; Job received many leſſons from God, he taught him quite through the 38. and 39. Chapters, and he taught him quite through two Chapters more, before he ſaid, I know that thou canſt do every thing. Thus far of Jobs knowledge. Let us a little conſider the firſt object of it here expreſſed, the omnipotence of God, I know that thou canſt do every thing.

Hence obſerve; Firſt, God is good at any work.

That is, at any work that is good; he can do every ſuch thing, nothing comes amiſs to him. Among men, one man can do this thing, and another can ~~do that thing~~, and a third can do more than either; but where you will find a man that can do every thing? One man is for counſel, another for action; one man can build a houſe, and another can till the ground; ſeveral men have their ſeveral arts and myſteries, and it is well if one man can do any one thing well: But God is for all. We have a ſaying (and tis a great truth) He that will be doing of every thing, is no great doer in any thing; that is, he never excels in any. But as the Lord can do every thing, ſo he is exact and perfect in every thing that he doth. The beſt creature is only a particular good, but God is an univerſal good; there is every good in God: all the good that is ſcattered in the creature, is eminently in him. Now as God is an univerſal good, ſo he is an univerſal Agent; he is in working, as he is in Being; He can do every thing for us, as well as be every thing to us. We need not fear if we bring this or that thing to God, that he hath no skill in it, as it is with men; if you bring this thing to a man, he is excellent at it; but bring another thing, and he knoweth not how to turn his hand to it: but whatſoever we have to do, if it be according to the will of God, he hath power and wiſdom enough to do it. The Lord had power enough to give a being to all creatures; and hath he not power enough to do all things in and about the creature? cannot he preſerve in all dangers, and provide in all wants? cannot he furniſh with all gifts, and give ſucceſs? cannot he overthrow the high, and exalt the low? cannot he reſtrain the wrathful, and ſubdue the obſtinate? cannot he weaken the ſtrong, and ſtrengthen the weak? cannot he make fools wiſe, and wiſe men fooliſh? ſurely he can do all theſe things, for he can do every thing.

Aliquis in omnibus, nullus in ſingulis.

Secondly, from theſe words take that grand aſſertion.

God is omnipotent, his power is infinite.

This is a principle, one of the great principles of Religion, an Article of Faith; yet I ſhall not enlarge upon it, having met with it in other places of this book. Only conſider here, how Job infers this principle; he infers it from the diſcourſe which the Lord was pleaſed to have with him, in the four former Chapters, wherein the Lord told him of many things that he had done; I have done this and that in the heavens above, and in the earth below, I have made Behemoth and Leviathan: God had told him of his doings; whence Job inferred, I know thou canſt do every thing. He doth not make this concluſion by way of induction (there is ſuch a way of argumentation in Logick) but by deduction. God hath done this and that, and the other, therefore he can do all things; if he can do this, what cannot he do? if he can make and ſubdue Behemoth, what cannot he do? and if he can make and maſter Leviathan, what cannot he do? Chriſt (Luke 5. 20.) argueth his omnipotency or Godhead in the ſame manner; for having healed a poor man, and ſaid unto him, Man, thy ſins are forgiven thee, the Phariſees were very much offended with that word, ſaying, Who is this that ſpeaketh blaſphemy? who can forgive ſins but God alone? Chriſt knowing their thoughts, ſaid, What reaſon ye in your hearts? whether is it eaſier to ſay, thy ſins are forgiven thee, or to ſay, riſe up and walk? I have healed the man; doth not that argue a divine power? why may not I then ſay, Thy ſins are forgiven thee? He that can by his own might do one mighty or miraculous thing, can do all things. Such is the power of God, that, as I ſaid before, he hath no limit to it, but his own will.

Ex mirabilibus recenſitis ſcivit Job atque collegit Deum omnia poſſe; non quaſi per inductionem, ſed per deductionem plurium ex uno principio. Janſon.

And ſeeing the will of God is the limit of his power, let us take heed of deſiring him who can do every thing, to do any thing for us, which is not according to his will. Let us bound our deſires; let us take heed of ſaying, this is our deſire, and God can do every thing, therefore this which we deſire. Conſider, is your deſire according to the will of God. We cannot urge God with his Omnipotency, to do any thing that is our deſire, if we are not firſt clear in it, that our deſire is agreeable to his will: Unleſs we have a rule for our deſire, or we deſire by rule, we can have no well-grounded confidence, that God will do that for us, which we deſire. God is almighty, not to do what we will or forge in our brain, but to do what himſelf willeth. Papiſts ſay, the bread is turned into the very body of Chriſt; but ſay we, we ſee, and feel, and taſt but bread: They preſently fly to this, God is able to do all things, or he can do every thing; this is, to abuſe the omnipotence of God: Hath the Scripture declared any ſuch thing? yea, hath not the Scripture declared the quite contrary, that Sacraments are but ſigns of things, not the things themſelves. This is my body, ſaid Chriſt; but he ſaid not, my body is this. Chriſt willed that his body ſhould be repreſented by bread; he willed not that bread ſhould be changed into his body. The power of God muſt not be urged beyond his will. We have no revelation of the will of God, that he will tranſubſtantiate the bread at the holy ſupper into the body of Chriſt; but he hath given it as a ſacred ſymbole of Chriſts crucified and broken body, upon which we are to feed by faith.

That God can do whatſoever he willeth, hath a two-fold uſe.

First,

Noſtra difficultates Deo perfaciles ſunt.

Firſt, Of comfort, to all true believers who ſtand in the grace of the Covenant. That nothing is to hard for God, is a marvelous Conſolation to us in all our hardſhips. When God promiſed Abraham a Son in his old age (Gen. 18.) what a hard task was here for God? Sarah could could not believe it, ſhe laughed; but what ſaith the Lord? Is any thing too hard for me? he preſently urgeth his own power, where he had declared his will. Whatſoever God hath declared to be his will, either as to particular perſons, or the whole Church; it matters not how hard it is, if we have but his will for it. As Chriſt will at laſt Change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working, whereby he is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelf (Phil. 3.21.) ſo according to that working, he is able to change and ſubdue all things to and according to his own will. When the Jews were to be carried into captivity to Babylon, the Lord commanded Jeremy to make purchaſe of a field in Anathoth (Jer. 32.7, 8, 9.) Now Jeremy might object; behold, the Chaldæans are come to the City to take it; and ſhall I go and buy land? Is this a time to make purchaſes? is this a time to buy land, when the City is ready to be taken, and the whole land like to be loſt? yes, ſaith God, Buy the field for money, ſeal the evidences, and take witneſſes; for thus ſaith the God of Iſrael (verſ. 15.) houſes, and fields, and vineyards ſhall be poſſeſſed again in this land. Am not I able to bring you back again? And therefore after Jeremy had confeſſed in prayer to the Lord (verſ. 17.) Nothing is too hard for thee (The Hebrew is, hidden from thee, or wonderful to thee; becauſe hard things are hidden from us, ſtrange and wonderful to us. The Prophet, I ſay, having ſaid this to the Lord in prayer) the Lord ſaid to him (verſ. 27.) Is any thing too hard for me? And to the ſame point, the Lord ſpake again (Zech. 8.6.) Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, if it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people (namely, that Jeruſalem ſhould be reſtored) ſhould it alſo be marvellous in mine eyes, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, to perform what was ſaid (verſ. 4.) There ſhall yet old men, and old women dwell in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and every man with his ſtaff in his hand for very age, and the ſtreets of the City ſhall be full of boys and girls, playing in the ſtreets thereof. Who could believe this? but it was the will of God it ſhould be ſo: And therefore he ſaid, If it be marvellous in your eyes ſhould it be ſo in mine eyes? You think this can never be brought about. But muſt it needs be marvellous in my eyes, becauſe it is ſo in yours? or (as the margin hath it) muſt it needs be hard or difficult to me, becauſe 'tis ſo to you? The ſame word which ſignifies marvellous, ſignifies difficult, becauſe that which is difficult and hard we marvel at: But ſaith the Lord, becauſe this thing is marvellous in your eyes, muſt it be ſo in mine, who can do every thing? And we may conceive, that when Job ſpake thus, he began to have ſome hope of his reſtauration. He had loſt all, children, and health, and ſtrength, and eſtate, all was gone, and he many times gave up all for gone, and ſpake deſpairingly, as to a reſtitution; but now God having ſpoken of what he had done, Jobs faith and hope revived in theſe words, I know that thou canſt do every thing; and among other things thou canſt reſtore all to me again, thou canſt give me as much health and ſtrength of body, as many children, as full an eſtate, as ever I had.

Secondly, This truth is matter of great terrour to the wicked. As God can ſtrengthen the weak, ſo he can weaken the ſtrong; and as, he can raiſe up the godly, ſo he can eaſily pull down the ungodly; as he can fill up the vallies, ſo he can level the mountains. Thus the Lord ſpake (Ezek. 17. 24.) All the trees of the field ſhall know, that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dryed up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flouriſh; I the Lord have ſpoken, and have done it. It muſt needs be terrible to the wicked, that God can do what he will, ſeeing his will is to deſtroy them, except they repent and turn to him; he hath power enough to do it, and his will is to do it; what then can hinder his doing it, but their repentance for what they have done. There are no ſons of Zerviah too hard for him, who can do every thing.

Again, from the ſecond notion of theſe words, Thou canſt do every thing, that is, thou haſt right as well as might to do every thing,

> Obſerve, The Lord may do, he hath an unqueſtionable right to do whatſoever he is pleaſed to do.

God gives a law to all others for their actions, but he is the law to himſelf. He can do every thing of right he willeth, as well as he hath might to do what he will.

Then let none complain, that God hath done them wrong, for every thing is right which God doth. Job had failed in this, by ſpeeches reflecting upon the juſtice of God in his dealings with him; and therefore we may conceive, that in this confeſſion, I know thou canſt do every thing, he chiefly aimed at this, to give God the glory of his juſtice: As if he had ſaid, Though thou, O Lord, layeſt thy hand heavy upon an innocent perſon, and ſtrippeſt him of all that he hath; though thou, O Lord, makeſt a wicked man to flouriſh in this world, and filleſt him with outward felicity; yet all ought to reſt in thy will, for this thou canſt do of right, being abſolute Lord over all. I (ſaid Job) know that thou canſt do every thing.

And that no thought can be with-holden from thee.

Mr. Broughton renders, that no wiſdom was with-holden from thee; which he thus gloſſeth: Thou haſt made all things in perfect wiſdom, to ſhew thy eternal power and God-head. The ſame word ſignifies both wiſdom and thoughts, and well it may; for unleſs we have wiſe thoughts in our ſelves, we can never ſhew wiſdom, either in our words or actions towards others. There is a difference amongſt Interpreters, whoſe thoughts we are here to underſtand, when Job ſaith, No thought can be with-holden from thee.

בצר breviavit, abrupit, decerpſit, propriè uvas & fructus vindemiavit. Hinc Bozra metropolis Idumeæ, cum vinetis, & vini proventu fuit celebris nomen ſortita eſt, Iſa. 63.1. Nihil cogitas, quod non poſſis ſi velis efficere, quid enim te prohibebit, aut impediet? Druſ. Nec avertere poſſe à cogitatione, ſc. perficienda. Jun. Et quod non vindemiabitur à te cogitatæ atq; propoſitæ effectionem. Piſc.

Firſt, Many very worthy and learned men, are of opinion, that by thought, we are to underſtand the thought of God, Gods own thought; & ſo theſe words are but the carrying on of the ſame thing, or a further explication of what was ſaid before, I know that thou canſt do every thing; that is, whatſoever is in thy thought or in thy heart to do, no power in the world can with-hold thee from doing it; no thought, that is, not any one of thy thoughts, can be with-holden from thee, that is, from thy fulfilling it, or bringing it to paſs: what thou haſt in thy mind, thou wilt perform with thy hand: If thou haſt but a thought to do ſuch a thing, thou canſt not be hindred of thy thought, it ſhall be done.

The words hold out a very glorious truth concerning God, if we take thought in this ſenſe; and as it is a great truth in it ſelf, ſo it is a very uſeful one to us.

> The Obſervation is this; Whatſoever God hath a thought to do, he will do it, he cannot be hindred in the effect of a thought.

As none of Gods thoughts are vain, ſo none of them are in vain or ineffectual, they all reach their end (Iſa. 43:13.) I will work, and who ſhall lett it? God will work if he hath but a thought to work; and if all the Powers in the world ſet themſelves againſt him, they ſhall not be able to diſappoint any one of his thoughts (Prov. 19. 21.) There are many devices in a mans heart, yet the counſel of the Lord ſhall ſtand; that is, there are many thoughts in mans heart oppoſite to the counſel and thought of God. Men think this and that, they make up many things in their thoughts, yet can make nothing of them, becauſe againſt the thoughts of God; for all the devices that are in mans heart, cannot hinder the effect of Gods counſel, his counſel ſhall ſtand faſt and firm, without any bowing, without any bending, while their devices fall and are utterly broken. The concluſion of wiſe Solomon is (Prov. 21. 30.) There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord. Let men take or give counſel as long as they will againſt the Lord, they cannot avoid the effect of his counſels. We have both theſe, the ſtanding of the Lords counſel, and the overthrowing of all counſels that are againſt him, in that one Scripture (Pſa. 33. 10, 11.) The Lord bringeth the counſel of the heathen to nought, he maketh the devices of the people of none effect: The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. God never loſt a thought: all come to paſs. This ſheweth the mighty efficacy of the counſel of God; this is more than can be ſaid of any man or men in the world; the wiſeſt and greateſt, have had many thoughts with-holden from them. They have thought to do this and that, but could not effect it, nor bring it about (Pſal. 146. 4.) Their thoughts periſh; they have a great many plots in their heads, but they prove not; they often live to ſee their own thoughts die. Their thoughts periſh, not only when they die, but they live to ſee them periſh and die. The Prophet (Iſa. 44. 25.) ſheweth how the Lord fruſtrates the counſels of men, and turneth them backward; he ſhews alſo, that without him they cannot go forward (Lamen. 3. 37.) Who is he that ſaith and it cometh to paſs, when the Lord commanded it not?

But ſome may object, the Lord ſpeaketh of the builders of Babel, as Job here ſpeaketh of him (Gen. 11. 6.) Behold the people is one, and they have all one language, and this they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined to do; as if he had ſaid, there will be no with-holding of them from their thoughts.

'Tis very true, amongſt men there was nothing to ſtop them; they being all as one man, and of one mind, would have accompliſhed any thing that they did imagine: but though there was nothing upon earth, nothing among men, that could reſtrain them, yet God could do it, and he did it, he confounded their language, and one brought morter, when he ſhould have brought brick; and another brought ſtones, when he ſhould have brought timber; they thought to build a tower that ſhould reach as high as heaven, they would be drowned no more; but they and their thoughts were ſoon ſcattered and blown away.

This point hath in it alſo abundance of comfort (as the former) for take thought for the thought of God, and it runs parallel with what I ſpake before, of the work of God; he can do every thing, every thing that is in his thought to do; we may take freſh comfort from it. Can no thought be with holden from God? what a comfort is this to all that he hath good thoughts of, or thoughts for good. The heart of God is full of good thoughts to his people, though he many times ſpeaks hard words to them, and doth hard things againſt them, yet he hath good thoughts concerning them (Pſa. 40 5.) Many, O Lord, my God, are thy wonderful works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which thou haſt to us-ward: Thoughts to us-ward are thoughts for us, that is, thoughts of good intended us. Now hath the Lord many good thoughts for us, and none of theſe ſhall be with-holden; is not this comfort? When the Church of the Jews was in Babylon, the Lord dealt very hardly with them, though not ſo hardly as they deſerved. But what were his thoughts (Jer. 29. 11.) I know the thoughts that I think towards you (you do not know the thoughts that I have towards you, but I do: what are they?) thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end, that is, the end which you expect and wait for. What a mercy is this, that no thought of God can be with-holden, when as he hath ſo many thoughts of mercy and good things to his people!

Again, I might ſhew how dreadful this is to wicked men, for the Lord hath nothing but thoughts of revenge and evil towards them: But 'tis enough to hint it.

Before I paſs from this interpretation, ſome may object. If all the thoughts of God ſhall be brought to paſs, and none can with-hold them, if God will do what he hath a purpoſe to do; then what need we trouble our ſelves ſo much in prayer? For if God hath any thoughts of good to us, it ſhall be done; but if not, we cannot bring it to paſs by prayer: And ſo ſome urge, what need we repent and humble our ſelves, the thoughts of God ſhall be fulfilled. To this, I ſay, in general, take heed of ſuch reaſonings; for as they are very abſurd and reaſonleſs, ſo they are very dangerous, and leave us remedileſs. More particularly,

I anſwer, thus; Though God hath thoughts and purpoſes of good to his people, yet whatſoever good he will do for his people, he will be ſought unto to do it for them; and therefore prayer, repentance, and humiliation, are needful to bring forth thoughts of good from God to us. And though no man can hinder the bringing to paſs of any of his thoughts, yet we may help their birth and bringing forth. So much of the firſt interpretation of theſe words.

And that no thought can be with-holden from thee.

Nulla te latet cogitatio. Vulg.

Secondly, no thought, that is, no thought of man can be with-holden from thee; thou knoweſt the thoughts of every one, what they are, of what kind they are. The Latine tranſlation is expreſs, There is no thought ſecret to thee.

Some read the whole verſe thus. Thou knoweſt that thou canſt do every thing, and no thought is hidden to thee. As if Job had ſaid, O Lord, as none know what thy power is better than thy ſelf, or as none know like thy ſelf what thou canſt do, even that thou canſt do all things: ſo none know better than thy ſelf, not I my ſelf, what my thought, or opinion, or faith rather is, concerning thy power and ſelf-ſufficiency to do all things. Which manner of ſpeech importeth the deep ſubmiſſion of himſelf unto God, or a kind of demiſſion, or letting of himſelf down into God, while he ſaith nothing expreſly of himſelf, or what his thoughts were of Gods power; but refers all to God, as knowing him and his mind fully, and ſubjects himſelf wholly to his teſtimony. So that he ſeems to call God to witneſs, or appeals to God as a witneſs of the ſincerity of his heart, in the acknowledgement which he made of his All-ſufficiency, as the Apoſtle Peter, of his love to Chriſt, when ſo often preſſed him, even a third time, with that ſearching queſtion, Simon, ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? Lord, thou knoweſt all things, thou knoweſt that I love thee (John 21. 17.) Peter would not be confident, that he loved Chriſt more than thoſe; but referred himſelf, in that matter, to the judgment of Chriſt, who knew all things, and himſelf, both as to the truth and degree of his affections to him perfectly. Thus ſaid Job, thou knoweſt (and I acknowledge) that no thought can be with-holden from thee; therefore not mine.

Hence Note, Our very thoughts are plain to God; neither is there any way of concealing our thoughts from him.

We cannot put our thoughts into a ſecret place where God cannot ſee them; we cannot with-hold them from God, as we eaſily may from man, if we can but hold our tongues, and not let our thoughts drop out of our mouths in words. (Pſal. 139. 2.) The Lord knoweth our thoughts afar off. He knew what thoughts there were in the hearts of the Jews (Jer. 4. 14.) O Jeruſalem, waſh thine heart from wickedneſs, that thou mayeſt be ſaved: how long ſhall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee! Theſe vain thoughts, were thoughts about their continuance in that peaceable condition, that the enemy ſhould never come to moleſt them, or they ſhould never come into the hand of the enemy; as others afterwards had vain thoughts, that they ſhould be ſpeedily delivered out of their hands. Firſt, They had vain thoughts, that they ſhould never go into captivity. And Secondly, They had as vain thoughts, that they ſhould be preſently delivered out of captivity: Theſe are your vain thoughts, and theſe I know, ſaith God. Our thoughts are as open to God, as our works; all our thoughts, good and bad, are alike known to God: He knoweth our good thoughts, and the thoughts which we have to do good. If we have a thought of good to any man, the Lord knoweth it; and if we have a thought for evil to any man, the Lord knoweth it. The Lord knoweth not only what thoughts are evil in their own nature, but what are detrimentally evil unto others. Thus ſpake diſtreſſed Jeremy in the perſon of the whole Jewiſh Church (Lament. 3. 60, 61, 62.) Thou haſt ſeen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations againſt me. Thou haſt heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations againſt me, and their devices againſt me all the day long. The Lord knoweth all the good thoughts that others have for us, and all the evil thoughts which they have againſt us: Now,

If no thought of ours can be with-holden from God, then keep guard, and watch over your thoughts; hold your thoughts in good order, for you cannot with-hold your diſorderly thoughts from God; bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Chriſt (2 Cor. 10. 5.)

Secondly, If the Lord knoweth all our thoughts? then certainly all good thoughts ſhall be rewarded, as well as good words, yea, even as well as good deeds. As the Lord will not loſe a good thought (which was ſhewed in the former point) ſo we ſhall not loſe a good thought; God will reward them fully, for he knoweth them fully. There was a good thought in Davids heart, to build the Lord a Temple, and the Lord ſaid (as Solomon his Son reports it, 1 Kings 8. 18.) Whereas it was in thy heart to build a houſe to my name, thou didſt well that it was in thine heart, I take it as well, as if thou hadſt done it. God takes notice of our thoughts. And therefore this is comfort when we can do but little, yet God knows what we would do, what work our thoughts are at; and our thoughts are our beſt and choiceſt works, they are the firſt-born of the ſoul. Wicked men may do works, and ſpeak words, good for the matter, but they cannot properly think good thoughts.

Thirdly, if the Lord knoweth our thoughts, then evil thoughts ſhall not go unpuniſhed. When the Lord brought the deluge upon the old world, we find him ſpeaking thus (Gen. 6. 5.) God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. God ſpake not of their works, but of the imagination of their hearts, their thoughts. The Apoſtle counſelled Simon Magus to repent of his wickedneſs, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of his heart might be forgiven him (Acts 8. 22.) There lieth the danger; take heed of evil thoughts: we are in as much danger by them, as by the worſt evil actions. Take heed, Firſt, of proud thoughts; though pride bloſſom not, that is, though it appear not openly, nor hang out its flag in words and works, yet take heed of it. Secondly, take heed of wanton and adulterous thoughts, though you act not wantonly, nor commit adultery. Thirdly, take heed of covetous thoughts, though you proceed not to covetous practices. Fourthly, of envious thoughts, or of being troubled at the good of your neighbours, though you hinder not his good. Fifthly, take heed of revengeful thoughts, or of deviſing evil againſt your neighbour, though you hurt him not, nor bring evil upon him. Sixthly, take heed of hard thoughts of God, whatſoever his dealings be with you. Though you murmur not, though you ſpeak not hard words of his dealing with you, yet if you think hardly of him, and queſtion his juſtice or goodneſs in your hearts, he takes notice of it. Seventhly, take heed of diſcontentful thoughts with your own condition, though ſad and bitter. This was Jobs ſin, and it is conceived that he ſpake thus, as acknowledging that he lay open before God, as knowing all his thoughts of diſcontent. Eighthly, above all, take heed of blaſphemous thoughts of God, which the devil hoped to bring Job to. Take heed of theſe and of every evil thought, though not acted, knowing alſo, that every evil act hath its evil thought belonging to it, and that no thought can be with-holden from God.

Recognoſcit ſe interius fuiſſe aliqua cogitatione ſuperba pulſatum, quod Deum non latuiſſe cognoſcit. Aquin. Latini exiſtimant loqui Jobum de ſuis tumultuantibus cogitationibus, ſive ſuperbiæ de ſua ſanctitate, ſive iniquæ expoſtulationis cum divina providentia. Accuſat cogitationes ſuas. Philip.

Thus much for the firſt part of Jobs humiliation, his exalting of God in his omnipotency, and in his omniſciency; he is omnipotent, he can do every thing, nor can any of his thoughts be with-holden from him, by any power of man; he is omniſcient, no man can with-hold or hide his own thoughts from God.

Job having made that great acknowledgment of the power and knowledge of God, I know thou canſt do every thing, neither can any thought be with-holden from thee, comes to the confeſſion of his own weakneſs and ignorance.

Verſe 3. Who is he that hideth counſel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not.

Who is he?] That is, what manner of man is he? or what is he for a man? what man hath he been?

That hideth counſel.] We had theſe words at the ſecond verſe of the 38. Chapter, where the Lord ſaid chidingly to Job, who is this that darkneth counſel by words without knowledge? Here Job ſaith humbly to God, Who is this that hideth counſel? There is ſome change in the words; little, if any, in the ſenſe. There the Lord ſaid, Who is he that darkeneth? Here Job ſaith, Who is he that hideth? &c. both may be taken as intending the ſame thing, darkning and hiding being of a like ſignification, and things in the dark can no more be ſeen, than things hidden. Yet ſome Jewiſh Writers conceive, that Job here doth ſomewhat abate what the Lord ſpake, or did extenuate the matter, as to his own faultineſs and miſcarriage; As if he indeed granted, that he had hid or concealed the counſel of God, but would be excuſed in this, that he had darkned it. This is a nice difference, and I doubt not but the ſpirit of Job was ſo low and graciouſly humbled, that he ſpake with the moſt and higheſt, to humble himſelf, when he ſaid, Who is he that hideth counſel? But how had Job hid the counſel of God?

I anſwer, Firſt; He had hid the counſel of God by not declaring it ſo much or ſo fully as he ought. David propheſying of Chriſt, ſaith (Pſal. 40. 10.) I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation. What is meant by not hiding, in the former part of the verſe, is expreſſed by declaring, in the latter part of it; and when he ſaith, I have declared, his meaning is, I have amply and clearly made known thy faithfulneſs. So that, becauſe Job had not ſo clearly as he ſhould declared the righteouſneſs, or the righteous counſels of God concerning him, and his dealings with him, he may be ſaid to have hid the counſel of God. While we do not magnifie God, we leſſen him; while we do not declare, to the utmoſt, his power, we hide it; and therefore Job thus chargeth himſelf, Who is he that hideth?

Or we may take it thus, more diſtinctly; Job hid the counſel of God,

Firſt, by being ſo much in ſetting forth his own innocency. How much he inſiſted upon that argument, hath been ſhewed before from other places of this book. While we ſet forth our ſelves, we obſcure God. Job ſhould have been leſs in his own commendation, and more in the praiſes of God.

Secondly, Job may be ſaid to have hid the counſel of God, becauſe he was ſo much in amplifying and aggravating his own ſufferings, not well conſidering the counſel of God in laying thoſe ſufferings upon him: Had he duly weighed the counſel of God in afflicting him, he would have proceeded as he began (Chap. 1. 21.) to bleſs God, both in and for his affliction.

Thirdly, He may be ſaid to have hid the counſel of God, becauſe he expoſtulated with God, as ſevere towards him in his afflictions; as if Gods counſel had been only to put him to pain. Such complainings of the living man, Jeremiah checkt, while he ſaid of God (Lam. 3. 33.) He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. As it is not in the heart or counſel of God to afflict men with his heart (as the words there import) ſo not to break their hearts (unleſs with godly ſorrow for their ſin) by affliction. Therefore Job ſpeaking ſo much of Gods ſeverity, hid the counſel of God, which was only to try his graces and his goodneſs, and graciouſly to do him good in the latter end. Who is this that hideth counſel.

Without knowledge? Or for want of knowledge.

But, was Job an ignorant man? was he without knowledge? No, but he had not a right knowledge of the counſel of God concerning himſelf; which though it was ſome excuſe to him, yet it did not altogether excuſe, nor acquit him from the fault. Who is he that hideth counſel without knowledge? I ſhall not ſtay upon obſervations from this verſe, becauſe I did it at the ſecond verſe of the 38. Chapter. I ſhall only conſider that difference among Interpreters about this word counſel, to whom it doth refer.

Firſt, Some refer it to Job, and conceive that he chargeth himſelf with this error, that he had hid his own counſel from God, or that he thought his counſel was hidden from him. The Septuagint render it plainly to this ſenſe, Who is he that hideth counſel from thee? No man can hide the counſels, nor the moſt ſecret intendments of his ſoul from God; all things, even the thoughts of the heart, are naked and manifeſt before his eyes, with whom we have to do. 'Tis beſt for us to reveal our ſelves to him, from whom we cannot with all our skill and cunning conceal our ſelves, as was further ſhewed from the latter interpretation of thoſe words in the former verſe, No thought can be with-holden from thee.

Quis eſt enim qui celat à te conſilium? Sept.

But we may fully diſcharge Job of this, for he often profeſſed that his moſt ſecret ways were known to God, yea, that the way of his and every mans heart, was known to God (Chap. 10. 19.) If I ſin, then thou markeſt me. Read alſo Chap. 16. 19. Chap. 31. verſ. 1. And if we look back to the fifth verſe of the firſt Chapter, there 'tis reported of Job, that he offered ſacrifice for his children after their feaſtings; for (ſaith he) it may be that my ſons have ſinned, and curſed God in their hearts. He knew, if it were but a ſin in their hearts, God took notice of it; and therefore doubtleſs he had the ſame apprehenſion of his own heart-ſins.

Secondly, others who take it for Jobs own counſel, give this ſenſe; Who is he that hideth counſel without knowledge? As if he had ſaid, I am the man that have hid my counſel, or my own meaning for want of due knowledge how to expreſs it.

Many hide the truth of their own apprehenſions and opinions, in the darkneſs or confuſedneſs of their expreſſions. Some have a clear notion of things in their head, yet cannot bring it out, and ſo hide counſel for want of knowledge to make it known. This interpretation carrieth a fair ſenſe for Jobs excuſe, acquitting him of any wilful or purpoſed ſpeaking amiſs: he had better things in his mind than he ſometimes uttered, or he wanted skill rightly to utter his own mind, and ſo darkned counſel without, or for want of knowledge.

But I rather adhere to thoſe, who take counſel here, for the counſel or purpoſe of God in afflicting Job ſo grievouſly, and leaving him entangled in the bryars of thoſe troubleſom and intricate diſputes with his friends, who came to comfort him.

Thus Job ſpeaking in the third perſon, intends himſelf which manner of ſpeaking is frequent in Scripture, Who is he? &c. that is, I am he that have hid counſel without knowledge. For doubtleſs Job did well attend thoſe words of God in the 38. Chap. (ver. 2.) Who is this that darkneth counſel by words without knowledge? And being ſtruck with them, confeſſeth here, that God had met with him in thoſe words. And hence ſome read theſe words of Job with an additional preface, as if they were a repetition of Gods words, Thou haſt ſaid, who is he that hideth counſel without knowledge? That is, thou haſt ſaid, that ſome body hideth counſel without knowledge, and I acknowledge 'tis I, I am he; and ſo he falls down convinced before the Lord, as David before Nathan, telling him in the name of the Lord, Thou art the man. I confeſs it, ſaid David, I am the man, I have ſinned; ſo ſaith Job, I am the man, I have hid counſel by words without knowledge.

Ego ſum, qui celavi, i. e. tacui, non decantavi, non celebravi conſilium tuum. Joan. Paraph. Qui de Deo ejuſque providentia imperitè loquitur, is ejus conſilium abſcondere dicitur abſq; ſcientia; quippe inde gloria Dei apud homines obſcuratur. Druſ.

Some underſtand this his hiding, to be only his forbearing to utter and celebrate the praiſe of God in his counſel, or the purpoſe of Gods providence towards him. But I conceive the fault which he confeſſeth here, is not a bare reticency, or his not ſpeaking of the counſel of God, but his not ſpeaking rightly, or becomingly of his counſel; which agrees fully with what followeth, where Job ſpeaks in the firſt perſon, or in his own perſon, and takes the charge home to, and upon himſelf.

Therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not, &c.

Mr. Broughton renders, Therefore have I talked that I have not underſtood.

The Hebrew word rendred underſtood, imports a diſtinct knowledge of things (Prov. 14. 8.) The wiſdom of the prudent, is to underſtand his way; that is, to know what to do, and how or in what manner to do every duty in all the changes of his life. Thus the Angel Gabriel was commanded concerning Daniel (Dan. 8. 16.) Make this man to underſtand the viſion; that is, whom it concerns, when and in what manner it ſhall take effect, and be fulfilled. Such an underſtanding as this Job had not of the things which he had uttered; and therefore confeſſeth, I have uttered that I underſtood not, I have ſpoken (as we ſay) I knew not what; which may refer to ſuch like paſſages as are in the former part of this Book (Job 19. 7, 8.) Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard; I cry aloud, but there is no judgment: He hath fenced up my way, that I cannot paſs, and he hath ſet darkneſs in my paths. Job did not well underſtand himſelf when he ſpake thus; and there are ſeveral other ſuch extravagant ſpeeches of his, up and down this Book. And doubtleſs he did not barely confeſs that he had erred in ſpeaking, nor did he only acknowledge that he had not uſed ſuch reverence as became him, in ſpeaking to God, but that he had ſpoken ſuch things as were ſcandalous, and gave juſt matter of offence, and at which ſeveral of his friends did actually take offence. At beſt he might well acknowledge he had raſhly uttered things that he did not fully underſtand.

Non intelligebam quæ dixi quum de tuis judiciis quererer & te dicerem ex æquo bonos & malos affligere. Merc.

Thus Job, who thought he had ſpoken wiſely enough, while man ſpake to him, and he ſpake to men, now hearing God ſpeak, and he ſpeaking to God, doth more wiſely confeſs that himſelf was not wiſe, and that his light was but darkneſs concerning the works of God, much more concerning his counſel in thoſe works. As if he had ſaid, I have ſpoken many things of God, and of his excellencies in this diſpute with my friends; yet I have hidden, or not hid, but ſlipt that which I ſhould have moſt inſiſted upon and ſtudied to make manifeſt, even the ſoveraignty of God over me, and all that I am or have; as alſo, the counſel, aim and intention of God in laying his hand ſo ſorely upon me: but now being better informed about the reaſon of Gods dealings with me, I confeſs I have uttered that I underſtood not,

Things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

Job was a man of great underſtanding; yet there were things too wonderful for him. What were they? The counſel of God, the nature of God: theſe are paſt finding out. There are wonders in God which man cannot apprehend, much leſs comprehend. Job ſpake of things far above his reach, even of wonderful things; and therefore no wonder if he ſpake unduly of them. I (ſaith he) have uttered things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. Job here confeſſeth, that he wanted knowledge; and we know (though he were a mirror of patience) that many impatient ſpeeches paſſed from him. Now, here we have the root of all that impatience which this good man ſhewed in his afflictions; he had not a clear knowledge about the counſel or meaning of God in afflicting him.

Hence Note; Impatience flows from ignorance.

Did we underſtand theſe two things; Firſt, our own ſinfulneſs; Secondly, the ſoveraignty of God; we ſhould never be impatient. Did we underſtand our own ſinfulneſs, that we have deſerved greater evils than any the Lord hath laid upon us; and did we underſtand the Lords ſoveraignty, that he may lay upon us what ſufferings he pleaſeth, though we had not ſinned (for we are wholly his, and he may do with his own what he will) did we (I ſay) underſtand and meditate upon theſe two things, it would quiet our minds in the greateſt ſtorms of adverſity, and be a preſervative againſt all impatience. But if with theſe two, we conſider a third thing; that the end which the Lord hath in bringing ſufferings upon his people, is to do them good, how unreaſonable a thing will impatience appear? ſhall we be impatient at our profit! If we are well inſtructed in this great truth, that all things work together for good to them that love God, and are the called according to his purpoſe (Rom. 8. 28.) Where is there any room for impatience, in thoſe who are effectually called, and truly love God! Impatience floweth from ignorance.

Again, in that Job confeſſeth himſelf to be the man that hid the counſels of God, when he had only been ſpeaking unadviſedly of them,

Note, He that ſpeaketh improperly and unskilfully of the counſel or things of God, hideth them.

When in diſcourſes about divine truths, we do not advance the honour of God, we, as it were, caſt a vail upon it. Not to do what we ought, is to do what we ought not; our omiſſions of good, may be cenſured as commiſſions of evil. We ſhould diſplay and magnifie the wiſdom of God in all his dealings with us, and diſpenſations towards us, elſe we do unwiſely.

Thirdly, Job chargeth it upon himſelf as a fault, that he uttered what he knew not.

Hence Note; Our words and our underſtandings ſhould go both together.

Let us take heed of venting with our tongues, what we have not in ſome good degree reached with our underſtandings. The underſtanding ſhould give light to the tongue; nor need we any other light to ſpeak by, but that of the underſtanding. True light cannot ſhine out of our mouths, if there be much darkneſs in our minds. How ſhall we utter knowledge, if we have it not? (Pſal. 147. 7.) God is the King in all the earth: ſing ye praiſes with underſtanding. In ſinging praiſes, as there is an exerciſe of our affections, ſo there ſhould be of our underſtanding alſo. The Apoſtle puts it twice in thoſe duties of prayer and praiſe (1 Cor. 14. 15.) I will pray with the Spirit, and will pray with underſtanding alſo; I will ſing with the Spirit, and I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo. A word ſhould not go out of our mouths, but ſuch as the underſtanding dictates and directs: better not to ſpeak, than ſpeak what we know not. If we underſtand not what we ſpeak, we ſeldom edifie others, never our ſelves. As the tongues of ſome utter things above their experiences and affections, ſo do the tongues of others utter words beyond their judgments.

Fourthly, When Job ſpake, he thought he had ſpoken very well, yet now he is convinced of his weakneſs and miſtakes in what he ſpake.

> Hence Note, Good meaning men may ſometimes arrogate, and pretend to more knowledge, than cometh to their ſhare.

They may think they know the truth in a better manner and meaſure than indeed they do: Our opinion of our ſelves is often greater than our knowledge of other matters; and we may ſoon imagine we know that, which indeed we know not. The Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 8. 2.) If any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. He that really knoweth any thing, as he ought, cannot but have thoughts that he knoweth it; but he that thinketh, that is, is much, or proudly thinking that he knoweth any thing doth only think ſo, for he knoweth nothing as he ought, that is, really, groundedly, and effectually.

> Fifthly, Obſerve; God will bring his ſervants at laſt to ſee how ſhort they are of that knowledge, which they ſometimes preſume to have.

Job thought he had more knowledge than he indeed had, and God made him ſee it. 'Tis a work of great goodneſs in God, to ſhew us how defective we are both in knowledge and goodneſs. We are full of ſelf, till God convinceth us of our ſelf-emptineſs; we are full of ſelf-wiſdom, and ſelf-ſtrength, and ſelf-righteouſneſs, till the Lord convinceth us, that our wiſdom is folly, our ſtrength weakneſs, our righteouſneſs an unclean thing, and ſheweth us, yea cauſeth us to receive and take Chriſt for our righteouſneſs, ſtrength, and wiſdom. God did not leave Job till he had brought him out of, and off from himſelf, as to whatſoever he had too high an opinion of, or any confidence in himſelf.

Again, Job was upon his humiliation before God; he had not any groſs ſin to charge himſelf with (for he ſtood ſtill upon his integrity, as he had done before; nor was Job miſtaken in that point, he had not lived in any groſs ſin) That which he charged himſelf with, was want of knowledge, and his error, in managing his cauſe towards God ariſing from it.

> Hence Note, Sixthly, Our ignorance and errors, are to be confeſſed and bewailed before the Lord, and we to be deeply humbled for them.

What though we have not any open wickedneſs to charge our ſelves with? what though the world cannot charge us, nor we our ſelves, with any foul and black-faced enormities; yet have we not errors, have we not ignorances, have we not weakneſſes to confeſs? Jobs eye had none of thoſe beams in it; but he began to ſee the moats in his eye, and repented of his ſhortneſs in knowledge, and of his raſhneſs in language. Though great ſins call loudeſt for repentance, yet the leaſt ſin, even a ſin of ignorance, calleth us to repentance alſo; and wo to thoſe who knowingly neglect, or ſtop their ears againſt that call. When David was only ſtagger'd at the providence of God giving proſperity to the wicked, and ſo ſpake unadviſedly with his lips (as Job in a parallel caſe did) Pſal. 73. 13, 14. Verily, I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency: For all the day long have I been plagued and chaſtned every morning. Yet as ſoon as he recovered out of this temptation, how deeply did he charge himſelf (ver. 22.) So fooliſh was I, and ignorant; I was a beaſt before thee. Why did he then call himſelf a fool, a beaſt? was it for adultery and murder, which were once his ſins? no, but for ignorance and raſhneſs. David called himſelf a beaſt, in judging of the dealings of God by ſenſe, not for living in any beaſtly ſenſuality. Let us remember, and not lightly paſs it over, that though we have not (which rarely we have not) groſs ſins to confeſs, yet we have ignorances and errors too too many. The ſame David ſaid and prayed (Pſal. 19. 12.) Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults, that is, from thoſe faults and errors which I do not underſtand; yea, cleanſe me from this fault, that I have not a better underſtanding. As he there prayed to be kept from the dominion (and ſo from the guilt) of preſumptuous ſins, that is, of ſins committed againſt the light of knowledge, ſo to be cleanſed from the guilt of his ſecret ſins, that is, of ſins committed without his knowledge. Thus a godly man acknowledgeth his weakneſſes, and lies low before God, in ſenſe of them, when he hath not great and groſs ſins to be humbled for.

Seventhly, As Job was now diſcovering his former ignorance; ſo, upon an increaſe of knowledge, he was growing up into a clearer light about the things of God, than he had manifeſted in his former diſcourſes.

> Hence Note, It is a good degree of knowledge and underſtanding, to be convinced that we know and underſtand little.

As to be conſcious of our weakneſs, is a great part of our ſtrength; ſo, to be ſenſible of our ignorance is a good degree of knowledge. Agur ſaid of himſelf (Prov. 30. 2.) Surely I am more brutiſh than any man, and have not the underſtanding of a man; I neither learned wiſdom, nor have the knowledge of the holy. This good man was none of the ignorant ones, he had knowledge in a large meaſure, and was growing into a further light, while he thus bewailed his own darkneſs. Davids knowledge was then cleareſt, when he made that confeſſion, So ignorant was I.

Eighthly, When was it that Job ſaw he knew little? It was when God was come nearer to him, when God had been dealing with him, and ſpeaking to him.

> Hence Note, No man knoweth what a nothing he is in knowledge, and grace, and goodneſs, till the Lord is pleaſed to reveal himſelf to him.

It is upon ſome eminent diſcovery of God to us, that we ſee we have little grace, righteouſneſs, or knowledge. While we compare our ſelves with our ſelves, or compare our ſelves with others below our ſelves, we have high thoughts of our ſelves; but when we compare our ſelves with God, who is infinitely above us, we are little, we are nothing, we are little or nothing in our own eyes; when God appears in his fulneſs to us, we appear empty to our ſelves.

Laſtly, From thoſe words, Things too wonderful for me which I knew not. Theſe wonderful things being the dealings of God with him, according to the counſel of God concerning him,

> Note, Ninthly, The dealings of God with men are wonderful.

Not only the decrees of God from eternity, but the works of God in time, are full of wonder; nor can his works in time be otherwiſe, ſeeing they bear the expreſs image, and are the iſſue of thoſe eternal decrees. Jeſus Chriſt is called wonderful counſeller (Iſa. 9. 6.) and he is wonderful in his counſels: As the works of God in us, ſo his works towards us are called wonderful. (Pſal. 40. 5.) Many, O Lord, my God, are thy wonderful works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward. The works of God (as of man too) are the birth of his thoughts and the thoughts of God about the birth of man, have many wonders in them. David ſaid (Pſal. 139. 6.) Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, it is high, I cannot attain unto it. What knowledge was it that he could not attain unto? The context tells us, it was the knowledge of Gods knowledge, concerning the formation of his body, before he was born (verſ. 14, 15, 16.) I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made, &c. Again, the Prophet having deſcribed the various courſes and methods which God uſeth in humbling ſinners, by afflictions and tribulations, which are ſhadowed under thoſe Metaphors and Allegorical expreſſions of Plowing and Harrowing, and the different ways of Threſhing out the Corn, by the ſtaff, or the rod, or the wheel. The Spirit of God doth not there intend the husband-mans work alone, in which yet there is much of God, and his teachings: The Prophet (I ſay) having done this, concludes (Iſa. 28. 29.) This alſo cometh forth from the Lord of Hoſts, who is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working. And as there are wonders in the works of God, which are the fulfilling of his ſecret and hidden counſel; ſo there are wonders in the Word of God, which is his revealed and open counſel (Pſal. 119. 18.)

Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy Law. The Law is wonderful; but the Goſpel is, as it were, a continued wonder, and we ſhall be for ever wondring at, and admiring the grace and goodneſs of God diſcovered therein, when we come to heaven; and now, as we ſee further into the myſtery of Chriſt, we do it too (1 Cor. 2. 7.) We ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world. Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. They are wonderful things, which man, by all his natural wiſdom, cannot attain unto. Philoſophers who pry into all the ſecrets of nature, cannot underſtand theſe ſupernatural ſecrets, how long ſoever they ſtand prying upon them: And though Job had been long conſidering of, and ſpeaking about thoſe things of God, which the eye often ſees, and the ear hath often heard, yea, which he himſelf (to his grief) had felt; yet he ſaw reaſon enough at laſt to ſay, that even thoſe things in the whole compaſs of them, exceeded his reaſon; I (ſaid he) have uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me which I knew not.

Job having thus acknowledged his want of knowledge, and the weakneſs of his underſtanding in the myſteries of providence, applieth himſelf to God for inſtruction in the next verſe.

Verſe 4. Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

This is Jobs humble petition; and it conſiſteth of two parts.

Firſt, That God would not reject, but give ear to a poor creature, burdened with the ſenſe of his infirmities, in his addreſſes to him; Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak, or as Mr. Broughton renders, Oh, hear me, when I do ſpeak.

Secondly, That God would admit him under his tuition, and inſtruct him, while he waited for advice and counſel: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me; Lord, teach thou me. Job ſpeaketh ſubmiſſively as became a learner; he is not now what he was, he comes to God in another manner, than he had done before;

Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak.] As if he had ſaid; I have formerly deſired to plead my cauſe with thee (Chap. 13. 22.) and thou haſt juſtly checkt, and chid me for it (Chap. 38. 3. Chap. 40. 2.) as if I preſumed I could teach thee; but now I ſee my error, I ſubmit, and earneſtly deſire to be taught by thee. I have ſpoken heretofore otherwiſe than I ought, and otherwiſe than I purpoſe to ſpeak hereafter: I ſpake before in a challenging ſtrain (Chap. 13. 22.) Then call thou, and I will anſwer: or let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me. There Job ſeemed to challenge God, to be either opponent or reſpondent, and he would argue, or diſpute it out with him. But here, though his words are near the ſame in ſound, yet his ſence is far different; Hear, I beſeech thee, and I will ſpeak:

Me interrogantem doce benigne, qui me tuæ diſciplinæ plane ſubmitto. Merc.

I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.] There is a two-fold demanding; Firſt, as a Diſputant; Secondly, as a Supplicant. Job would now demand as a Supplicant unto God, not as a Diſputant with God. We may be ſaid to demand or require of God, when we conſult his word, not humane reaſon. If an innocent perſon (as Job) be afflicted; where ſhall he enquire the reaſon of it? if he only reſpect his affliction, and compare that with his own innocency, he will quickly murmure at, and complain of the dealings of God with him: But if he look to the Word of God, which tells him that God is a Soveraign Lord, and that God hath promiſed, not only to be with his in trouble, but that their troubles ſhall work their comforts; he will not only be patient under, but glory in his tribulations.

שאלך interrogabo te. ſc. petendo, orando, pulſando. Aquin.

The Hebrew word which we tranſlate, demand, may well be rendred petition or crave: The common ſenſe of the word demand ſeems too high for Jobs ſpirit and condition. Mr. Broughton renders, I will make petition unto thee, or an humble ſuit unto thee; as if he had ſaid, I will pray for, and beg this favour of thee, that thou wouldſt teach and inform me better.

Qui rogat, neſcit.

It is not an authoritative demand, which is a kind of command, but a ſubmiſſive demand; this demanding is the asking of a queſtion, not the requiring of a right. He that asks a queſtion, implyeth that he ſtands in need of information, and that he is deſirous to learn; And to put queſtions to a wiſe man is half wiſdom. I will demand, or put queſtions unto thee:

Interrogare ſapientem dimidia ſapientia eſt. Apotheg. Arab.

Declare thou unto me.] The Hebrew is, make me to know, make me a knowing man. As if Job had ſaid; Lord, if thou wilt teach me, I ſhall ſoon get knowledge and underſtanding; and therefore I reſign my ſelf wholly to thy teachings. The true ſubmiſſion of mans will to Gods will, is to hearken to the counſel or wiſdom of God, and not to ſit down in our own.

But as it was queſtioned at the firſt verſe, how Job could anſwer, ſeeing he had ſaid I will anſwer no more; ſo here it may be queſtioned, why the Lord ſpake no more to Job, ſeeing here he deſired to receive further inſtruction from him?

I anſwer, Firſt, Job made this ſuit to God, upon this condition, that God would pleaſe to inform him, if he ſaw need, or ſhould think fit to do it. Secondly, Job ſpake this doctrinally to ſhew what he and others ought to deſire and ſubmit to, even the teachings of God. Thirdly, I anſwer, that the Lord ſeeing his ſubmiſſion, ſaw there was no need of ſpeaking any further to him, but broke up the whole diſputation, determining for Job, and giving him the day againſt his three friends, as will appear further in the ſequel of the Chapter.

From this verſe, Obſerve; Firſt, The ſenſe of our wants puts us upon prayer.

When Job was ſenſible that he wanted underſtanding and knowledge, he came to God for it. Give me to underſtand, cauſe me to know. True and fervent prayer floweth from a ſenſe of our wants. If we ſee not our ſelves in need, why ſhould we pray? And when really we ſhall have no need as in heaven there will be no need of prayer; all will be praiſe, and all ſhall be in everlaſting praiſes.

Secondly, The perſon to whom Job maketh his application for teaching, being God himſelf,

Note, We know nothing of God, nor of our ſelves aright, till God teacheth us, till he declareth and maketh it known to us.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, &c. (Jam. 1. 17.) As no man can either make or redeem himſelf, ſo no man can teach or inſtruct himſelf. What we know of God, we know of God, we know, from God? 'Tis in his light that we ſee light. The light may ſhine round about us, and we ſee it not; unleſs God enlighten us, as well as ſend us the light, we are never the better. As in Converſion, the Lord firſt opens the eyes, and then turns from darkneſs to light (Acts 26. 18.) So under every diſpenſation, we are in the dark, till God open our eyes, and give us (by his own immediate or mediate teachings) light about it.

Thirdly, Note; If we deſire God ſhould each us, or if we would be taught of God, we muſt ask it of him.

We find the godly often putting up this requeſt to God. David was much in this petition (Pſal. 119. 33, 34.) Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy ſtatutes, and I ſhall keep it unto the end: Give me underſtanding, and I ſhall keep thy law. He did not only deſire God that he would teach him, but give him a faculty, to receive his teachings (verſ. 35.) Make me to go in the path of thy commandment. See how the Pſalmiſt joyneth theſe petitions together. Firſt, Teach me the way of thy ſtatutes. Secondly, Give me underſtanding; as if he had ſaid, elſe thy teachings will do no good. Thirdly, Make me to go in the path of thy commandment; as if he had ſaid, though I underſtand thy ſtatutes, yet, unleſs thou help me, I ſhall not be able to walk in them, no, nor to take one right ſtep in them; therefore, Make me to go in the path of thy commandment. Again (Pſal. 143. 10.) Teach me to do thy will, for thou art my God; thy ſpirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightneſs. As the Lord teacheth us our way, and hath promiſed to teach us always, in all things needful for us to know and do; ſo he hath taught us by the written practice of many, as well as by his written precept, that we muſt pray for his teaching.

Fourthly, Job was humbling himſelf, and now he begs of God, that he would teach him.

Hence Note, Humble ſouls deſire and give up themſelves wholly to be taught by God.

They hang upon his mouth for inſtruction, and renounce their own wiſdom. Eliphaz gave Job that advice. (Chap. 22. 22.) Acquaint thy ſelf now with him, and be at peace, and good ſhall come unto thee: Receive, I pray thee, that law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thy heart.

Fifthly, In that Job prays for teaching in this form, according to the Hebrew, make me to know,

Obſerve, The teachings of God are effectual, they make us know.

Men may teach others knowledge, but they cannot make them know. God can make a very dullard quick of underſtanding. Men may inſtruct the underſtanding, but they cannot give underſtanding; God doth both. The teachings of God are effectual to all purpoſes. Firſt, to enlighten the ignorant. Secondly, to convince gain-ſayers. Thirdly, to convert ſinners. Fourthly, to comfort thoſe that are ſorrowful. Fifthly, to reſolve ſuch as are doubtful. Sixthly, to encourage the fearful. And, Seventhly, to raiſe up and recover thoſe that are fallen. Thus Job is become a petitioner to the Lord for inſtruction, having confeſſed his own ignorance and weakneſs. And that he had formerly profited under the teachings of God, and was now in a further way of profiting, is evident by that which followeth.

Verſ. 5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee.

Job had no ſooner asked for teaching, but God taught him, though not formally and explicitely as he deſired, yet really and effectually, as he needed. For, this verſe ſeems to be a real anſwer to the petition he made in the former verſe; and in it Job aſſerts two things.

Firſt, That he had heard of God by the hearing of the ear.

Secondly, That now his eye did ſee him.

There are two opinions about the general ſenſe of this verſe, and I ſhall conclude in a third.

Firſt, Some conceive theſe diſcoveries of God to Job, were only, inward to his ſoul; ſo that when he ſaith, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee, we are not to underſtand him, as if he had had any viſible appearance of God, but that theſe words may be taken,

Firſt, as a compariſon between a ſlight hearing, when the mind is not intent upon what the ear heareth; and a ſerious hearing, which brings the mindful into the ear. As if Job had formerly been a careleſs hearer, but now an attentive one; and ſo the knowledge which Job had of God formerly, was little compared with his preſent knowledge. He had a knowledge of God by hearing only before, but his mind was not intent upon it; he heard only with the hearing of his ear, but his eye did not ſee; that is, he had not a clear ſight or knowledge, which is an intellectual ſight of the things which he heard. But doubtleſs, Job was no ſlight hearer of the word in former times; he did not hear the word in the days of his proſperity, as if he had only (as we ſay) given it the hearing: for, had he not ſeriouſly hearkened to the voice of God in thoſe days, he had never obtained ſuch a teſtimony as God gave of him, towards the end of thoſe days; yea, this very phraſe, I have heard of thee, by the hearing of the ear, implieth ſerious and attentive hearing.

Secondly, Others who deny any viſible manifeſtation of God to Job, grant that the firſt part of the verſe, notes ſerious hearing and receiving of the word, the latter more; ſo that here, ſay they, is a compariſon between the leſſer light or knowledge which Job had of the will of God before, and that fuller light which he got upon this diſcourſe which the Lord had with him; the former being but as of a matter heard, this as of things ſeen. The Scripture ſometimes calls clear knowledge ſight: So that, look how much that which we ſee with our bodily eyes, is clearer to us than that whereof we have only hear the report; by ſo much the knowledge which Job had now of the things of God, eſpecially about the whole myſtery of Gods dealing with him, was clearerand fuller than what he had before, even as if he now ſaw what before he only heard. As we ſay, One eye-witneſs, is better than ten ear-witneſſes; ſo one eyeing of the word of God (the eye of the mind fully and diſtinctly taking in what is heard) is better than ten hearings of it; that is, when little or nothing is taken in at the ear, but a ſound of words: For then only we may be ſaid to know divine things, by the ſeeing of the eye, when we know them not only from without by the report of others, but from experience within our ſelves. The Apoſtle ſaith of thoſe, who took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods for the truths ſake, They knew in themſelves, that they had in heaven a better and a more enduring ſubſtance (Heb. 10. 34.) that is, they had even got a ſight of that heavenly enduring ſubſtance. Hence in Scripture, viſion is applied to ſpiritual things heard; and we are ſaid to ſee the Word of God (Jer. 2. 31.) O generation, ſee ye the Word of the Lord; have I been a wilderneſs? &c. As if the Lord had ſaid, Ye have heard it before, but now ſee it. Seeing notes the higheſt knowledge; then we ſee what we hear, when we fully underſtand what we have heard. Thus they expound this Text, who judge there was no outward viſion at all, but that Jobs ſeeing was only ſpiritual and intellectual.

Secondly, Others affirm, that Job had an outward apparition, and that the eye of his ſenſe was affected. And concerning this,

Firſt, Some are ſo much of this opinion, that they ſay Chriſt appeared in humane ſhape to Job, as he did to many of the holy Patriarks and Prophets of old; which apparitions are, by the Ancients called preludes to his incarnation, And ſome Jewiſh Writers tell us, that Job upon this ſight of God, had a ſpirit of propheſie given him; but they need not inſiſt upon that, for ſeveral have had apparitions, who were no Prophets,

Secondly, others ſay, the appearance of God to Job was only in or by a cloud, with the whirlwind. But that he had a viſion or ſight of God one way or other, is aſſerted, as by many of the Jewiſh Writers, ſo by moſt of the Chriſtian Ancients.

And doubtleſs, when the Lord ſpake to him out of the whirlwind, he had a viſion, or an extraordinary manifeſtation of God, even to his eye: Not that God in himſelf can be ſeen, No man hath ſeen God at any time (1 John 4. 12.) It is reported by the Jewiſh Writers, that the Prophet Iſaiah was ſawn aſunder by his own Nation, for ſaying, that he had ſeen the Lord (Iſa. 6. 1.) I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a throne, high and lifted up. This they counted blaſphemy, and put him to death for it, ſay ſome: yet others ſay, he was put to death for his plainneſs in reproving the Princes and people of Iſrael, in thoſe words (Iſa. 1. 10.) Hear the word of the Lord ye Rulers of Sodom, give ear to the Law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah. But of that by the way, I ſay, God in himſelf cannot be ſeen; he is ſeen only by thoſe viſible demonſtrations of his preſence, which he is pleaſed to make of himſelf, as here he ſpake to Job out of the whirlwind.

I conceive we may take in both; ſo that when Job ſpeaketh of his hearing by the ear, he intends that teaching which he had in former times by the Miniſtry of his Anceſtors: And that when he ſaith, But now mine eye ſeeth thee, he intends that teaching which he had from the preſent appearance of God to him for his inſtruction and humiliation; I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee. As if he had ſaid, Lord, heretofore I heard of thee, for I was religiouſly brought up; I had Parents and Anceſtors, who declared to me who the Lord was; and I heard many things of thee, which took impreſſion upon my heart heretofore: but I never had ſuch an impreſſion as in this tempeſt, I never heard God ſpeaking thus immediately to me; nor did he ever give me any ſuch viſible demonſtration of his preſence, as he hath vouchſafed me at this time, ſpeaking out of the whirlwind. And from all we may conclude, that as Job had a powerful illumination of the Spirit, ſo an outward apparition of the Glory and Majeſty of God, or of Gods glorious Majeſty to convince and humble him. So that, though Job had a ſaving knowledge of God formerly, yet this diſcourſe of God with him, and diſcovery of God to him, had made him a better Scholar than all his earthly teachers. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear,

But now mine eye ſeeth thee.] That is, now I have as clear a ſight or knowledge of thy mind and will, of thy juſtice and goodneſs, of thy power and ſoveraignty, as if I had ſeen thee with mine eyes, and had ſeen or looked into thy heart. Or thus: Not only haſt thou graciouſly inſtructed me, by ſpeaking of ſo much to me, but thou haſt manifeſted thy ſelf preſent with me, by an aſpectable ſign, Mine eye hath ſeen thee; that is, thou haſt given me to ſee that which aſſures me thou art neer unto me, namely, the Cloud, out of which thou haſt been pleaſed to ſpeak and make known thy mind to me, who am but duſt and aſhes.

The Lord may be ſeen theſe four ways:

Firſt, In his Word. Secondly, In his works. Thirdly, In outward apparitions. Fourthly, And above all, God is ſeen in his Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whom the Apoſtle calls (Heb. 1. 3.) The brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and in whoſe face the light of the knowledge of God ſhineth (2 Cor. 4. 6.) And hence Chriſt ſaith (John 14. 9.) He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the father. The inviſible father is ſeen in his Son, who was made viſible in our fleſh, John 1. 18. Thus God may be ſeen. But in his nature God is altogether inviſible, he cannot be ſeen. Moſes ſaw him that is inviſible (Heb. 11. 27.) that is, he ſaw him by an eye of faith, who is inviſible to the eye of ſenſe. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee.

Hence Note; Firſt, It is a great mercy, and much to be acknowledged, that we have the word of God ſounding in our ears.

Faith cometh by hearing (Rom. 10. 17.) The Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 55. 3.) Hear, and your ſoul ſhall live. Now if faith and life come by hearing; to have the word of God, ſounding in our ears, muſt needs be a great mercy. Though to have the word only ſounding in our ear, will do no man good, yet 'tis good to hear that joyful ſound. Though that ſad Propheſie mentioned by Chriſt (Mat. 13. 14.) be fulfilled in many, By hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand, and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and ſhall not perceive; Yet he ſaid to his faithful followers (verſ. 16.) Bleſſed are your eyes, for they ſee, and your ears, for they hear. They receive a bleſſing by hearing, whoſe ears are bleſſed when they hear. O how many ſouls are bleſſing God, that ever they heard of himſelf and his Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by the hearing of the ear. To have an ear to hear, is a common bleſſing; but to have an hearing ear, or to hear by the hearing of the ear, is a ſpecial bleſſing.

Obſerve; Secondly, We ſhould hear the Word very diligently.

That phraſe, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear (as the Hebrew Writers note) ſignifieth a very attentive hearing. Every hearing is not an hearing with the ear, nor every ſeeing like that we intend, when a man ſaith, I ſaw it with my eyes. One may ſee and not ſee, hear and not hear. The Word of God is to be heard with a hearing. Such doublings in Scripture have a great emphaſis in them. As when the Lord ſaith, They are curſed with a curſe, it notes a great and a certain curſe is coming; ſo to hear by the hearing of the ear, implyeth fruitful hearing, and a laying up of that in the mind which hath been heard (Pſal. 44. 1.) We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didſt in their days, in the times of old. They who thus hear with their ears, treaſure up in their hearts, and do with their hands what they have heard. The Lord charged Ezekiel (Chap. 44. 5.) Son of man, mark well and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, all that I ſay unto thee; that is, mind diligently what I ſhew and ſay unto thee. The Lord called for the exerciſe of both ſenſes, in attending to what he ſpake to the Prophet: He did not only ſay, Hear with thine ears, but ſee with thine eyes; that is, hear as if thou didſt even ſee that which thou heareſt. For though poſſibly the Lord preſented ſomewhat to the eye of the Prophet, as well as he ſpake to his ear, yet the former notion may well be taken in, yea, and intended in that command. Many hear as if they had no ears, and ſee as if they had no eyes. One of the Ancients taking notice of that, ſaith, Such kind of hearers are like Malchus in the Goſpel, who had his ear cut off. From thoſe words, But now mine eye ſeeth thee, taken diſtinctly,

Obſerve; Thirdly, God revealeth himſelf more clearly and fully at one time, than at another.

Seeing is ſomewhat more than hearing, though it be attentive hearing. As the full and clear manifeſtation which we ſhall have of God in the next life, is expreſſed by ſeeing, and called viſion; ſo the fulleſt and cleareſt apprehenſion which we have of God, and the things of God in this life, is a degree of ſeeing both of him and them, 'tis the ſight of ſaith, and may alſo be called viſion. A true and ſtrong believer taſts, and feels, and ſees the truths of the Goſpel which he hath heard; his faith (which is the eye of his ſoul) is the evidence of thoſe things to him which are not ſeen, nor can be ſeen by an eye of ſenſe: He by the help of the Holy Ghoſt looks ſtedfaſtly into heaven, and (with this eye) ſeeth the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding at the right hand of God (in his meaſute) as bleſſed Stephen did (Acts 7. 55.) This ſight of God and ſpirituals, hath three things in it beyond that ordinary, though real knowledge, which comes in by the hearing of the ear. Firſt, a ſurpaſſing clearneſs. Secondly, and undoubted certainty. Thirdly, a raviſhing ſweetneſs, and the overflowings of conſolation.

Fourthly, Note; According to the meaſure of Gods revealing himſelf to us, ſuch is the meaſure of our profiting in the knowledge of God.

The word is ſpoken to all, in the publick Miniſtry of it, it is ſcattered upon all; but they only learn to know God and themſelves truly, to whom God doth inwardly reveal it, and whoſe hearts he toucheth and openeth by his Spirit. Every man (ſaith Chriſt, John 6. 45.) That hath heard and learned of the father, cometh unto me; that is, All that are taught of God, believe on me. And the more any learn of the father, the more they come to, and abide the more cloſely with the Son. Job underſtood more of God, and the mind of God more, in all thoſe queſtions he put to him, concerning the heavens, the earth, the Sea, concerning the beaſts of the earth, and the fowls of the Air, concerning Behemoth and Leviathan, than ever he did before. The more immediate and extraordinary revelations of God, are always accompanied with notable effects: And though few profit in knowledge, according to the meaſure of the mediate and ordinary Revelation, yet probably the more revelation we have of that kind, the more we profit.

Fifthly, Job had theſe great diſcoveries after God had kept him long in affliction.

Hence Note, God doth uſually reveal himſelf moſt to his people after great ſufferings.

Hence ſome are of opinion, that in theſe words Job pointed at his two ſtates. Firſt, that of his proſperity; then he heard of God only by the hearing of the ear. Secondly, Of his adverſity; then his eye ſaw him, that is, he greatly profited in the knowledge of him. There are two things which God uſually beſtows upon his people in the day of, or ſoon after their affliction; Firſt, more cordials and conſolations: He gives that ſtrong drink to thoſe that are ready to periſh, that wine unto thoſe that be of heavy hearts, He bids them drink and forget their poverty, and remember their miſery no more; as Solomons metaphors may well import (Prov. 31. 6, 7.) Secondly, as the Lord gives more conſolation in ſuch a day, ſo more illumination; the head is bettered by it as well as the heart. Many have got much inward light or knowledge, both of God and of themſelves, of their mercies and of their duties, by being, or after they have been brought into much outward darkneſs. Davids experience taught him this, elſe he had never ſaid (Pſa. 119. 71.) It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy ſtatutes. He had never learned, either to know the Statutes of God better, or to keep them better by his affliction, if God had not been with him, and revealed himſelf further to him in the day of his affliction.

Laſtly, Note; When God manifeſts himſelf much to any man, great impreſſions are left upon him.

As will appear further in opening the next verſe.

Verſ. 6. Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.

This Verſe concludes that part of the Chapter, which I call Jobs humiliation. He made confeſſion before of his own ignorance, uttering things that he underſtood not, things too wonderful for him, which he knew not; he confeſſed alſo the great goodneſs of God to him, in that he had both heard of him by the hearing of the ear, and alſo that his eye had ſeen him: from all which he inferr'd this reſolve of deepeſt ſelf-abaſement before God.

Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.

This word (wherefore) is diligently to be attended, for 'tis the hinge upon which the whole matter turneth. This wherefore, may have a double reference.

Firſt, To the ſight which he had gained of his own folly, weakneſs and vileneſs, of which having made confeſſion in the former words, he adds wherefore; that is, for as much as I am thus convinced of mine own ſinfulneſs, I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes.

Secondly, This wherefore, may have reference to thoſe higher, clearer and fuller manifeſtations of God to him. He had heard of God by the hearing of the ear, there was much in that; but now his eye had ſeen him, he had a light or a diſcovery of the excellency and Majeſty of God, as much ſurpaſſing and exceeding what formerly he had, as eye-ſight doth the hearing of the ear: Wherefore, the light being come thus fully in upon him, concerning the glory, ſoveraignty, goodneſs, faithfulneſs, and all ſufficiency of God, he crieth out,

I abhor my ſelf, &c.] The Hebrew word ſignifieth the greateſt diſguſt againſt himſelf, a kind of reprobating himſelf, or (as we ſpeak) a turning of his ſtomach, at the thought and remembrance of what he had ſaid and was. Some render, wherefore, I reprehend or reprove my ſelf: but to abhor our ſelves is more than to reprehend or reprove our ſelves. Others, I reject, I deſpiſe, I ſlight my ſelf, I turn away from my ſelf. All theſe renderings ſhew to how little or low an account Job was now come in his own ſight: Our reading, I abhor, takes in all the reſt and more. The Lord uſeth this word negatively concerning his people (Levit. 26. 11.) I will ſet my tabernacle amongſt you, and my ſoul ſhall not abhor you; the meaning is, my ſoul ſhall greatly delight in you: And at the 15. Verſe of the ſame chapter, affirmatively of them, If you ſhall deſpiſe my ſtatutes, or if your ſoul abhor my judgments, then, &c. deſpiſing is leſs than abhorring. To abhor the judgements of God, is to caſt them not only out of our affections, but out of our judgment too, and to judge them unworthy or unfit to be owned and obeyed. Again, at the 30. Verſe of the ſame Chapter, I will deſtroy your high places, and cut down your images, and caſt your carcaſſes upon the carcaſſes of your idols, and my ſoul ſhall abhor you; that is, I will manifeſt the utmoſt and higheſt of my diſpleaſure againſt you. Once more in the ſame Chapter, When they be in the land of their enemies, I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them. To abhor is to caſt away, and to look upon a perſon or a people as caſt-aways. Read alſo (Deut. 7. 26. Deut. 23. 7. Pſal. 5. 6. Pſal. 129. 163. Prov. 24. 24. Jer. 14. 21. Amos 5. 10. chap. 6. 8. Zech. 11. 8.) from all which texts we may collect the weight and great ſignificancy of this word. To abhor things or perſons, imports the deepeſt diſplicency or diſlike towards either. I (ſaith Job) abhor מאס ſignificat nauſeare, vel reprobare cum faſtidio abjicere, abominari.

My ſelf.] The word (my ſelf) is here ſupplyed by our Tranſlators. The Hebrew is only this, wherefore I abhor, leaving us to ſuppoſe what he did abhor: Our Tranſlators make the ſupplement thus, I abhor my ſelf, that is, whatſoever may be called my ſelf, ſelf-wiſdom, ſelf-righteouſneſs, ſelf-ſtrength, ſelf-ends, and I would ſee the end of ſinful-ſelf. Another tranſlation ſaith, I abhor thoſe former things, that is, whatſoever I formerly thought or ſpake amiſs. I do not only diſlike them, I do not only retract and recant them, but I abhor them. And if you would know what thoſe former things were, which here he renounceth and abhorreth, you may take it in theſe ſeven words.

Illa priora. q. d. non tantum illa prius à me cogitata & dicta retracto, ſed etiam deteſtor. Bez.

First, I abhor, that ever I curſed the day of my birth.

Secondly, I abhor, that I wiſhed ſo often for death, that I wooed the grave, and ſo haſtily called for my return to the duſt in the day of my affliction.

Thirdly, I abhor, that ever I deſpaired of my reſtauration, or that I gave up my ſelf as a man utterly loſt for this world.

Fourthly, I abhor, that I uſed ſo many complaints of the ſeverity of the Lords dealings with me.

Fifthly, I abhor, that I was ſo bold, as to deſire to plead with God.

Sixthly, I abhor, that I was ſo much in ſetting out my own righteouſneſs and innocency.

Seventhly, I abhor, that ever I ſpake any word, which ſhould in the leaſt darken or reflect upon the goodneſs, mercy, faithfulneſs, righteouſneſs, and ſoveraignty of God in his diſpenſations towards me. Theſe are the things which had unwarily paſſed him in the heat of diſputation with his friends, and theſe he now abhorreth. Take it either way, I abhor my ſelf, or theſe things, it comes all to one; for the truth is, he did abhor himſelf for thoſe things, which he had ſpoken with ſo much imprudence and impatience, while he was under the hand of God. I abhor my ſelf (neither is that all)

And repent.] Job was not only affected to abhorrence, but to repentance. The word tranſlated repent, ſignifies two contrary things in Scripture.

נחם in Niphal. ſignificat conſolari, in Piel. pœnitere. Druſ.

Firſt, To grieve, which is proper to repentance, ſorrow and repentance ought to go together.

Secondly, To comfort or to take comfort; thus it is rendred (Gen 24. 67) Iſaac was comforted concerning the death of his mother (2 Sam. 13. 39.) David was comforted concerning Amnon. (Pſal. 77. 2.) In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, my ſore ran in the night and ceaſed not; my ſoul refuſed to be comforted. It may ſeem ſtrange, that the ſame word which ſignifies ſorrow and repentance, ſhould ſignifie alſo comfort and to be comforted: but ſorrow and comfort meet in true repentance; godly ſorrow doth not hinder, much leſs quite exclude, and ſhut out joy in God. Repentance is uſhered in by godly ſorrow, and grief of heart for ſin, and it concludes with comfort and joy of heart in God who pardoneth ſinners; and therefore the ſame word which ſignifies to repent, may well ſignifie both to grieve and to take comfort. Repentance is a change from a bad ſtate to a good, and a turning from the worſt of evils, ſin, to the chiefeſt good, God himſelf; and therefore muſt needs be followed, if not accompanied with much ſweetneſs and comfort. A Greek tranſlator renders it expreſly ſo in this place, Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and take comfort in duſt and aſhes; and doubtleſs, while Job was repenting in floods of ſorrow, his comforts came flowing in. There is a laughter, in the midſt of which the heart is ſorrowful, and the end of that mirth is heavineſs (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 14. 13.) and there is a ſorrow (that's a bleſſed ſorrow) in the midſt of which the heart laughs, and the end of which heavineſs is mirth.

ϗ παρεκλήθην ἐπὶ χοὶ ϗ σποδῷ. Et conſolationem accepi in pulvere & cinere.

To repent (in the general nature of it) is to change both the mind and way, and ſo take up new principles and new practices. A man that truly repenteth, is not the ſame man he was before he repented; he can ſay, I am not I. And as in true repentance there is a change from a bad to a good mind, and from a perverſe, to a right and righteous way; ſo in repentance, there is a change from a troubled to a quiet mind, and from a painful to a pleaſant and delightful way. So then, there is a two-fold change in repentance; Firſt, A change of the mind from ſin. Secondly, A change in the mind from ſorrow. Many are the griefs and gripes, the troubles and perplexities, with which the conſcience of an awakened ſinner is followed, till he hath unburdened himſelf by confeſſion and repentance; when once he hath truly done ſo, how great is his peace! and how ſweet are his conſolations! And therefore, when the Apoſtle ſaith (2 Cor. 7. 10.) Godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation, not to be repented of; his meaning is, the repentance which it works is matter of great rejoycing, or fills the ſoul of an humbled believing ſinner with great joy.

I abhor my ſelf (ſaith Job) and repent. But how did Job repent? his was no ordinary repentance, therefore, he adds, I repent,

In duſt and aſhes.] That is, either:

Firſt, Throwing my ſelf upon the ground, (Jer. 6. 26. Jer. 25. 34. 2 Sam. 12. 16.) or,

Secondly, Sitting upon the ground in the duſt, as (Job 2. 8. Iſa. 58. 5. Jonah 3. 6.) or,

Thirdly, Caſting duſt upon my head (Job 2. 12.) Duſt caſt upon the head was the emblem of an afflicted heart. And to ſit in the duſt, or to caſt duſt upon the head was anciently the ceremonial part of repentance. Job doth not leave that out, I repent (ſaith he) in duſt and aſhes; and ſo ſome expreſs it, I repent with outward wonted ceremonies. But, I conceive, we need not take it ſtrictly; to repent in duſt and aſhes, being only a proverbial ſpeech, implying very great, ſolemn, and ſerious repentance.

Solitis ceremoniis pœnitentiam ago.

There is another rendring of this latter part of the verſe, thus, I repent, as looking upon, or accounting my ſelf duſt and aſhes; 'tis an argument of much humility and humiliation to do ſo. Abraham gave himſelf no higher a title before the Lord (Gen. 18. 27.) I have begun to ſpeak, who am but duſt and aſhes. If we take it thus, I abhor my ſelf, and repent, looking upon my ſelf but as duſt and aſhes, it is a good ſence alſo, and reacheth the purpoſe which Job was upon, or which was upon Jobs ſpirit in that day and duty of repentance. There is no difficulty in the words, they yield many uſeful obſervations: Wherefore I abhor my ſelf.

Firſt, As the word wherefore refers to that ſignal diſcovery which Job had of God, who did not only manifeſt himſelf to him by the hearing of the ear, but by the ſeeing of the eye, that is more fully than before;

> Obſerve, The clearer manifeſtations we have of God, the greater and deeper are our humiliations.

Job ſaw more of the power, more of the ſoveraignty, more of the holineſs of God in himſelf, and more of his goodneſs to him, than he had done before; and therefore he abhorr'd himſelf. That place is parallel to this (Iſa. 6.) where, as ſoon as the Lord had declared himſelf in his holineſs and glory, the Prophet cryed out (verſ. 5.) Wo is me, for I am undone, becauſe I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midſt of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have ſeen the King, the Lord of hoſts; that is, my bodily eyes have ſeen the ſigns of his preſence, and the eye of my ſoul is ſo over-preſt, with the preſent weight of his glory, that I cannot (in this frail condition) bear it, but muſt ſink under it; Wo is me, I am undone. As the wicked ſhall at laſt cry, wo and alaſs, at the angry preſence of God, and ſhall indeed be undone for ever: So a godly man may now cry, Wo is me, at any unuſual appearance of the holineſs and glory of God, and cry out, I am undone. I know not how how to bear it. Iſaiah was not only a Prophet, and a true Prophet, but a very holy Prophet, an Evangelical Prophet, one that ſpake glorious things of Chriſt to come, yet he had never ſeen ſo much of God before, nor was he ever ſo deeply humbled before, he never cried out before, I am undone; which word implieth the greateſt ſence of his own nothingneſs, vileneſs, and wretchedneſs. The true reaſon why men carry it ſo high at any time with God, is, becauſe their notions and apprehenſions of God, fall ſo infinitely below him. Did we know God more, how ſhould we fear before, and ſtand as men aſtoniſhed at the preſence of his majeſty! It is our darkneſs about God which emboldens us beyond our bounds, or the line of creatures. The Prophet Habakkuk ſaith of himſelf (chap. 3. 16.) When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenneſs entred into my bones, and I trembled in my ſelf, that I might reſt in the day of trouble. When I heard, that is, when God revealed himſelf to me by that ſpeech at the ſecond verſe of the Chapter, O Lord, I have heard thy ſpeech, and was afraid; then ſaid he (at the 16. verſe) When I heard, my belly trembled. The reaſon why carnal men and hypocrites carry it ſo ſtoutly before God, is, becauſe they know not God aright; they may boaſt of their knowledge; but as the Apoſtle ſaith (1 Cor. 8. 2.) He that thinketh he knoweth any thing knoweth nothing as he ought. The Scripture tells us, what that knowledge is which a carnal man hath of God: He knows God in his own light, not in the light of God; or he judgeth what God is, by what himſelf is (Pſal. 50. 21.) Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thy ſelf. Not that he thought God was a man; he had not ſuch groſs thoughts of God: but he thought God, as to his holineſs, was ſuch a one as himſelf, who was indeed, notwithſtanding his pretenſions to holineſs, a very unholy, a meer carnal man. When the Lord ſaid to him, Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thy ſelf; it is, as if he had ſaid, Thou meaſuredſt me by thy ſelf, and becauſe ſuch things pleaſed thee, thou wouldſt needs conclude that they pleaſed me too. Had men a clear knowledge of God, as he hath revealed himſelf, they would ſoon be convinced, that God is not only not altogether, but not at all ſuch a one as themſelves. We never ſee how imperfect we are, till we ſee our ſelves in the light of Gods perfection: and when we duely ſee our ſelves in that glaſs, we great abhor our ſelves; for we cannot but ſee much deformity in our ſelves, when we behold the beauty and glory of God. And, as when we behold that beauty we ſhall abhor our ſelves for our deformity and defilements; ſo we ſhall be daily mending and cleanſing our ſelves from them, according to that matchleſs beauty which we behold in him. As we have departed from God by our unlikeneſs, ſo we ſhall get nearer to him by getting more of his image and likeneſs.

Qui Deum vidit fieri non poteſt quin ſeſe accuſet contemnat & deſpiciat; non enim certius noveris tuam impuritatem quam ſi divina puritas oppoſita fuerit. Brent.

Secondly, This wherefore in the Text refers to the ſight that Job had of himſelf, as well as of God. When Job ſaw more of himſelf, or himſelf more, then he ſaid, I abhor my ſelf.

Nuſquam ſe melius deprendit modus humanæ imperfectionis, quam in lumine vultus Dei; in ſpeculo divinæ viſionis, ubi in die qui eſt plus & plus videns, quid ſibi deeſt, emendat in dies ſimilitudine quicquid deliquit diſſimilitudine. Similitudine appropinquans ei, à quo longe factus eſt diſſimilitudine. Aug. l. 11. Confeſs. c. 9.

> Hence, Obſerve; The more we ſee and know our ſelves, the more we ſhall be abaſed, and lie low in our ſelves, and abhor our ſelves.

The reaſon why we are ſo proud of our ſelves, is, becauſe we are ſo ignorant of our ſelves. Did we know our own ignorance and miſ-underſtandings, as Job now at laſt did, we ſhould ſtrike ſail and come lower; much more, did we know all thoſe abominations that are in our hearts, did we know what pride, and covetouſneſs, and earthly-mindedneſs lie there, what inordinate creature-love, what paſſions lie there, what envy lieth there; did we underſtand how deceitful and falſe our hearts are, both towards God, our ſelves, and towards one another, we ſhould abhor our ſelves exceedingly. There are two things which we ſhould ſtudy, that we may walk humbly. Firſt, To know God: Secondly, To know our ſelves. A Heathen ſaid that word (know thy ſelf) came down from heaven; and did we once know our ſelves aright, what frail, and blind, and ſinful creatures we are, how humble and heavenly ſhould we be! rightly to know that we are creatures would cauſe us to live more like new creatures. David ſeeing ſome men do things ſo unlike men (Pſal. 9. 20.) prayed thus, Put them in fear, O Lord, that the Nations may know themſelves to be but men. There are ſuch in the world as know not themſelves to be but men; they behave themſelves as if they were gods, and not men, as if they were all-ſufficient, or as if all their ſufficiency proceeded of themſelves, and they the founders of their own greatneſs and power. The Aſſyrian ſaid in plain terms, I will be like unto the moſt high, (Iſa. 14. 14.) I do not reckon my ſelf amongſt mortals. There are many, who never attained that Aſſyrian Princes height, who yet have much of his ſpirit, and ſpeak as if they knew themſelves to be more then men, at leaſt, as if they knew not themſelves to be but men, nor conſidered themſelves as frail, dying, and accountable creatures. Did we remember that we are but creatures, that we are the work of Gods hand, this would keep us low and humble; but did we know what ſinful polluted creatures we are, we ſhould ſoon come, not only to a lower eſtimate, but an utter abhorrence of our ſelves. We overthink our ſelves, becauſe we do not know our ſelves; we overrate our ſelves, becauſe we do not underſtand our ſelves. Even Job was too high in his own thoughts, in his own books, till he came to know and underſtand, that he had uttered things that he knew not, that he underſtood not. Wherefore,

I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes,

> Obſerve, Thirdly; True repentance is joyned with ſelf-abhorrence, and with an abhorrence of all that we do, of all that we are.

True repentance is joyned with an abhorrence,

Firſt, Of ſinful ſelf, or of our ſelves for ſin. The Prophet ſpeaking of their repentance, who had gone a whoring from God, ſaith (Ezek. 6. 9.) They ſhall loath themſelves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. And when the Lord had promiſed to bring the children of Iſrael to their own land, he tells them what work they ſhall be at there (Ezek. 20. 43.) There ſhall you remember your ways and doings, wherein you have been defiled, and ye ſhall loath your ſelves in your own ſight, for all the evils that ye have committed. Once more in that Prophet, (chap. 36. 31.) Then ſhall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and ſhall loath your ſelves in your own ſight for your iniquities, and for your abominations. In all theſe Scriptures we have loathing of ſelf for ſin and evil done. And as there is a loathing of ſinful ſelf in true repentance, ſo

Secondly, Of righteous ſelf, or a loathing of our ſelves in the good, in the beſt, that we have done. We may ſoon ſee that in the beſt of our duties, which will ſtir up this ſelf-this ſelf-abhorrence, or which gives us cauſe enough to abhor our ſelves. So Job did as to all the glitter of his moral vertues, of which he ſpake ſo much before in ſeveral places, eſpecially in the 31. chapter. He that truly repents doth not only abhor his ſin, ſo as never to commit it again; but he abhorreth his righteouſneſs, ſo as never to truſt in at all. Thus the Apoſtle ſpake (Phil. 3.7, 8.) I count all things but loſs for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt. What did he account loſs? not only the evil that he had done, but all the good he had done; he accounted that but dung, that he might be found in Chriſt, not having his own righteouſneſs, which is of the law. Self-righteouſneſs is gold, and to be embraced in converſation; but 'tis dung, and to be abhorred in juſtification. Job abhorred his own righteouſneſs from the beginning of this diſpute in that point, though he ſpake ſo much of it (chap. 9. 31.) If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow water, and make my hands never ſo clean, yet ſhalt thou plung me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me, or (as in the Margin) my own cloaths ſhall make me to be abhorred. What means he by his cloaths? Surely, not the cloaths that were upon his body, but his moral cloathing, his own works of righteouſneſs, according to the law. Theſe cloaths (ſaith he) will make me to be abhorred; I ſee, I cannot be accepted in them, nor juſtified by them. Job was clear in that before; but now he doth not only abhor his own righteouſneſs, as to truſting in it, but to talking ſo much of it, or ſo much as to talk of it. Chriſt ſaith, Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth; that is, take not much notice of thy own good deeds. As a repenting perſon will not touch at all with his former evil deeds, ſo he will not talk, nor take much notice of his own good deeds. The beſt of ſelf is little to himſelf.

Before I paſs this point, it may be enquired, Firſt, what this ſelf-abhorrence, which accompanies true repentance, works in thoſe that have it, with reſpect to ſin, or ſinful ſelf.

I anſwer, It works theſe five things.

Firſt, A diſlike of ſinful ſelf; he grows into a diſtaſt with ſin, it reliſheth not his renewed palate, and ſo will not (like unſavoury meat) go down with him.

Secondly, A hatred of ſinful ſelf. 'Tis but an eaſie ſtep from diſtaſt and diſlike to hatred. That ſoon falls under our diſpleaſure which pleaſeth us not. No ſooner did Amnon diſlike his ſiſter Tamar, whom he inordinately liked a little before, but the Text ſaith (2 Sam. 13. 15.) He hated her exceedingly, ſo that the hatred wherewith he hated her, was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her.

Thirdly, An indignation againſt ſinful ſelf. The ſpirit of a true penitent riſeth againſt ſin, as againſt an open enemy, or a falſe friend (2 Cor. 7. 11.)

Fourthly, An utter averſation, or alienation from ſinful ſelf. As they who live in ſin are averſe and alienated from the life of God, that is, from holineſs; ſo they who repent of ſin, are alienated and turned away from the ſins of their former life.

Fifthly and laſtly, An oppoſition againſt ſin. There is not barely a turning away from it, but a war againſt it, a deſire to deſtroy and mortifie it, to do it (as I may ſay) the greateſt miſchief we can. Thus diſlike is followed with hatred, and hatred with indignation, and indignation with averſation, and averſation with oppoſition, wrought and riſing up in a penitent ſoul againſt ſin.

But, Secondly, it may be asked, why doth a repenting ſoul abhor ſinful ſelf?

I anſwer, He doth it upon theſe four conſiderations.

Firſt, Becauſe it appears to him as a filthy thing (Ezek. 16. 5. Pſal. 38. 7. Prov. 12. 22.) All which Scriptures ſhew, that as ſin is a filthy thing in it ſelf, ſo it appeareth ſuch to a repenting ſoul. They that love their ſins, look upon them as fine things, or as their beauty: but to a repenting ſoul, nothing appeareth more dirty and filthy; and who abhors not that which is ſo to him?

Secondly, A repenting ſoul looketh upon ſin as a hurtful thing to him. We naturally turn from, and abhor that which is ſo. We abhor the poyſon of a Toad, and the ſting of a Serpent: To taſte the one, or to be bitten by the other, is no more deadly to the body, than ſin is to the ſoul.

Thirdly, A repenting ſoul is ſick, very ſick of his ſins; they have burdened his conſcience, as unwholſom food doth the ſtomach. Now, if a man abhors that which hath made him ſtomack ſick, much more will he abhor that which hath indeed, and not ſo much from the quantity as from the quality and nature of it, made him conſcience-ſick.

Fourthly, A repenting perſon hath vomited or caſt up his ſins by an humble confeſſion of them always to God, and in ſome caſes to men (Repentance is the ſouls vomit.) Now, as any man loaths his own vomit; ſo a man truly repenting, loaths the ſin which he hath thus vomited. Upon all theſe accounts a repenting ſoul loaths ſinful ſelf, or ſin in himſelf.

Thirdly, But why doth a repenting ſoul abhor righteous ſelf? I anſwer, Firſt, Becauſe he is convinced, that ſelf-righteouſneſs is a weak imperfect thing, even in ſanctification; and therefore he is ſo far from boaſting of it, or truſting in it, that he hath a kind of abhorrence of it.

Secondly, He ſeeth, that as to juſtification it is a filthy abominable thing (Iſa. 64. 6.) All our righteouſneſs are as filthy rags. And as he abhors it, becauſe 'tis unfit and incompetent in it ſelf for that uſe, ſo becauſe 'tis utterly inconſiſtent with the tenour of the Goſpel, wherein God hath removed all mans righteouſneſs, how pure ſoever it may be, from that uſe, and directed us to look only to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for that uſe, which the Apoſtle calls the righteouſneſs of God (Rom. 10. 3.) and that in a twofold reſpect. Firſt, becauſe 'tis that which the wiſdom of God the Father hath provided for us, and, Secondly, which the worthineſs of God the Son hath wrought out and procured for us.

Take two or three Inferences from the general Obſervation thus far proſecuted,

That true repentance is joyned with ſelf abhorrence.

Firſt, Then ſelf-admirers are no repenters. They are at the furtheſt remove from abhorring themſelves, who admire themſelves.

Secondly, Self juſtifiers, are no true repenters. Chriſt told the Phariſees (Luke 16. 15.) Ye are they which juſtifie your ſelves. They are far from abhorring themſelves, who juſtifie themſelves; ſuch ſurely are highly pleaſed with themſelves, and have much confidence in themſelves, therefore very far from ſelf-abhorrence.

Thirdly, What ſhall I ſay of their repentance, who inſtead of abhorring themſelves, abhor others? (Luke 18. 9.) Chriſt ſpake a Parable unto certain which truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others, and preſently inſtanced in the Phariſee, who deſpiſed the poor Publican, and called him in contempt, This Publican; he would (as we ſay) hardly touch him with a pair of tongs. They that deſpiſe others, are uſually, if not always, much pleaſed with themſelves.

Fourthly, If theſe ſelf-boaſters, and ſelf-admirers, &c. are not repenters, then do they repent who are ſo far from abhorring ſinful ſelf, and righteous ſelf, that they take pleaſure in ſin and unrighteouſneſs, whether their own or others? The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſuch (Rom. 1. 32.) Who knowing the judgement of God, that they which commit ſuch thngs, are worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them. That's a dreadful word (2 Theſ. 2. 12.) That they all might be damned, who believe not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs. O how far are they from abhorring their own righteouſneſs, who take pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs! How are they puffed up with that which hath but a ſhew of righteouſneſs, who pleaſe themſelves with that which is really unrighteous!

Fifthly, If true repentance be accompanied with ſelf-abhorrence, then do they repent, who return to thoſe ſins which they ſay they have repented of? do you think the dog loaths his vomit, when you ſee him go back and lick it up again? (2 Pet. 2. 22.) When once the Jews loathed or abhorred Manna, they had no mind to eat of it, though it was Angels food. When Job loathed his life, he ſaid, he would live no longer (Chap. 7. 16.) I loath it, I would not live always; that is, not at all, not an hour longer in this world. He that is weary of his life, thinks, to live but a day, or a little longer, is to live always, or that his life will never end. Thus, if a man doth truly loath and abhor his ſin, he will not return to it again, though it hath been as ſweet to him as Manna, yea, as life it ſelf. I do not ſay, that he who loaths and abhors his ſin, can never relapſe into the ſame ſin, or be overtaken with it again; but this I ſay, he that truly repents, never delights in ſin again, he never goeth back to it, and licketh it up as a dog his vomit. A good man may fall into the ſame ſin, but he never returneth to the ſame ſin; he may be overtaken with the ſame ſin, but he never taketh up the ſame ſin again. That's the Apoſtles word (Gal. 6. 1.) If any of you be overtaken with a fault, &c. A good man may be overtaken with the ſame fault, but he never taketh up that fault, nor runs a courſe in that ſin again.

I ſhall only add theſe two words, for the working of our ſouls to his ſelf-abhorrence.

Firſt, The more we abhor our ſelves, the more God delighteth in us; the more we are diſpleaſed with our ſins, the more is he pleaſed with our perſons, the worſe, the viler we are in our own eyes, the better we are, and the more beautiful in the eye of God.

Secondly, Unleſs we abhor our ſelves, God will abhor us. I may ſay, unleſs we ſo repent as to abhor our ſelves, God will abhor our very repentance. There is no true repentance, without ſome degree of ſelf-abhorrence; yea, of ſelf-condemnation. Let us not take up this word repentance too eaſily, that is, when we know not what this word ſelf-abhorrence meaneth. We defile this holy, this precious thing called repentance, when our hearts are not fully taken off from that or thoſe ſins, of which we ſay we repent. All ſuch would have that go for repentance towards God, which indeed is but a mocking of God, and can never be joyned (from which true repentance cannot be ſeparated) with faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (Acts 20. 21.) I abhor my ſelf, (ſaid Job)

And repent in duſt and aſhes.] I ſhall here give ſomewhat about the nature of repentance in general, and then gather up thoſe particular Obſervations which ariſe from theſe words about it.

> Repentance is a grace of the Goſpel wrought in the heart of a ſinner by the Word and Spirit, turning the whole man from all ſin, to God, in the ſincere and univerſal obedience of his holy will.

In this deſcription of repentance, we have four things conſiderable.

Firſt, The nature of it, or what it is, A grace of the Goſpel.

Secondly, The ſeat of it, or where it is wrought, The heart of a ſinner.

Thirdly, The means by which it is wrought, and that twofold. Firſt, Inſtrumental, The word. Secondly, Principal, The ſpirit.

Fourthly, The iſſue or effect of it, Converſion or turning; wherein two things are to be taken notice of. Firſt, the term from which the turn is made, Sin, and all ſin. Secondly, the term to which the turn is made, God; thus explained, In the ſincere or univerſal obedience of his holy will, or in the practice of every known duty.

Firſt (I ſay) Repentance is a grace of the Goſpel. Some poſſibly may ſay, Job was before the Goſpel. I anſwer, no; The Goſpel was publiſhed long before Job was born, even as ſoon as God promiſed the ſeed of the woman (Chriſt Jeſus) ſhould bruiſe the Serpents head (Gen. 3. 15.)

The whole body of Goſpel duty moves upon theſe two feet, Faith and Repentance. Some have queſtioned, which of theſe two graces hath the precedency, or takes the firſt ſtep in the motion of the ſoul heaven-ward? All that I ſhall ſay in anſwer to it, is, Firſt, that where theſe two graces are mentioned together in Scripture, uſually repentance is named firſt, becauſe it appears firſt, and is moſt viſible to us in its actings; yet Faith is to be underſtood firſt, becauſe without that no man can come to Chriſt as a true penitent, for pardon of ſin and reconciliation unto God. Secondly, in thoſe Scriptures, where true ſaving repentance is ſpoken of alone, it ſuppoſeth faith alſo; and where true ſaving faith only is ſpoken of, it neceſſarily implyeth true repentance.

This repentance is ſo much a grace of the Goſpel, that the firſt Sermon that ever was preacht at the approach of Chriſt, or at the opening of the Goſpel in the new Teſtament, was, Repent, ye, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand (Mat. 3. 2.) And the end or deſign of the firſt Sacrament or ſeal of the Goſpel-covenant, is expreſſed to be repentance (Mat. 3. 11.) I baptize you with water unto repentance; yea, the firſt word of the firſt Sermon (upon record) which Chriſt himſelf preached in perſon, was, Repent (Mat. 4. 17.) From that time Jeſus began to preach, and to ſay, repent. This alſo was the ſubſtance of the Apoſtles Sermons, when firſt ſent forth by Chriſt to preach the Goſpel (Mark 6. 12.) They went out and preached, that men ſhould repent. The firſt word of counſel which the Apoſtle Peter gave to the Jews, crying out, men and brethren, what ſhall we do, was, Repent (Acts 2. 38.) And the Apoſtle Paul ſaith, that the whole of his work in preaching the Goſpel, was his teſtifying both to Jews and Gentiles, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (Acts 20. 21.) 'Tis through the Goſpel only, that repentance is poſſible. And this appears two ways.

Firſt, Becauſe we have not a liberty to repent, or we are not admitted to repent, but by the Goſpel. We find no place for repentance in the Law ſtrictly taken, or as oppoſed to the Goſpel. The Law ſpeaks thus (Gal. 3. 10.) Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, that are written in the book of the Law, to do them. Where we ſee, Firſt, The Law requires perſonal obedience; every one muſt do for himſelf. Secondly, The Law requires perpetual obedience, every one that continueth not doing. Thirdly, The Law requires univerſal obedience, every one that continueth not in all things. If any one continue not at all times in all things (ſaith the Law) or if he had failed but once in any one thing, he is gone for ever, he is curſed. The Law doth not ſay, if a man continue not to do all, let him repent; that admits no ſecond thought, but claps the curſe preſently upon the offender. If Adam as ſoon as he had eaten of the forbidden tree, had bewailed his ſin, and ſaid, I repent, no favour could have been ſhewed him, while under the Law.

Secondly, Under the Law there is no ability given for repentance. All the promiſes of a broken heart, and of godly ſorrow, are appendants of the Goſpel. The ſpiritual curſe which falls upon the ſoul ſinning under the Law, is impenitency for ſin. Death in ſin, is the puniſhment of ſin; and therefore when Adam had ſinned, he never gave the leaſt intimation of, nor ſhewed the leaſt inclination to repentance; all he did, was to hide himſelf from God among the trees of the garden, and to hide his ſin from God (as well as he could) by vain excuſes; he had not a heart to mourn for his ſin, nor a tongue to confeſs it, till the Promiſe came, and the Goſpel was publiſhed, and then (though his repentance be not mentioned, yet) doubtleſs he repented. And hence the Apoſtle concludes Apoſtates from the profeſſion which they once made of Chriſt, under an utter impoſſibility of repentance (Heb. 6. 4, 5, 6.) And the reaſon why the fallen Angels never repented, was becauſe they had no Mediator, nor did Jeſus Chriſt take their nature on him (Heb. 2. 16.) Thus far of the firſt thing in the deſcription of repentance, the general nature of it; 'tis a grace of the Goſpel.

Secondly, Conſider the ſeat or ſubject of it, where 'tis wrought, the heart of a ſinner. Repentance is heart-work, or it is a work upon the heart: There repentance began in thoſe converts (Act. 2. 37.) whom the Apoſtle Peter adviſed to a thorough-work of repentance (verſ. 38.) The Promiſe of repentance runs in this tenour, I will take away (ſaith the Lord, Ezek. 36. 26.) the heart of ſtone out of your fleſh, and give you an heart of fleſh. When David ſaid (Pſal. 51. 17.) A broken and contrite heart (he meant only a repenting heart) O God thou wilt not deſpiſe. As faith is wrought in the heart, and with the heart man believeth (Rom. 10. 10.) ſo repentance is wrought in the heart, and with the heart man repenteth. Neither a weeping eye, nor a confeſſing tongue, nor (in caſe of wrong done to man) a reſtoring hand, will be taken for repentance, without a broken heart.

Thirdly, Conſider the means by which ſaving repentance, or repentance to ſalvation, is wrought. Firſt, the Word: Secondly, The Spirit. The Word of God is the uſual, the ordinary inſtrument in the hand, that is, in the power of the Spirit of God, working repentance in the heart of man. The word of a Philoſopher, with all his reaſonings; the word of an Orator, with all his flouriſhings, cannot do it: only the word of God ſpoken in plainneſs and ſimplicity, hath ſtrength and efficacy to do it. The Word is compared to a fire, which melts the hardeſt heart; 'tis alſo in the ſame place (Jer. 23.29.) compared to a hammer, which breaketh the rock in pieces. The Word paſſing through the ear, pierceth the heart (Acts 2. 27.) Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart. And when, even the devils Devotioniſts, they that uſed curious arts, burnt their books (Acts 19. 19.) it is ſaid (verſ. 20.) ſo mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed. The word of God cloathed with the Spirit, hath (as to this matter) a fourfold operation. Firſt, to awaken a drowſie ſoul (Eph. 5. 14.) Secondly, to enlighten a dark ſoul (Acts 26. 18.) Thirdly, to convince a gain-ſaying ſoul. Fourthly, to convert a wandring ſoul (Acts 26. 18. 1 Theſ. 1.9.) Till the ſoul is awakened, it cannot be enlightned; till it is enlightned, it cannot be convinced; till it is convinced, it cannot be converted; and until it is all this, it hath not truly repented. For,

Fourthly, (as was ſaid in the deſcription firſt laid down) the effect of true repentance, is the turning of the whole man from all ſin to God. All the members of the body, the hand, the foot, the eyes, the ears, the tongue, are turned; all the faculties of the ſoul, the underſtanding, will, affections are turned from all ſin: Firſt, of what kind ſoever, whether of omiſſion or commiſſion againſt God, neighbour, ſelf. Secondly, of what degree ſoever; little, as well as great; appearances of evil, as well as apparent evils.

Further, as in repentance there is a turning from ſin, ſo unto God, in the ſincere obedience of his whole will. We read in Scripture, Firſt, of Gods returning to us; Secondly, of our returning to God: both are acts of repentance. When God returns to us, he repents of the evil of trouble brought, or threatoed to be brought upon us; and when we return to God, that's a fruit of our repentance, for the evil of ſin committed againſt him. Unleſs our repentance bring us nearer to God, we (as we ſay) are never the near for our repentance; that is, our repentance is not good, nor ſhall we have any good by it. The Prophet found Iſraels repentance defective in this (Hoſ. 7. 16.) They return but not to the moſt high. Some in repenting, return only to ſelf; that is, their own peace, intereſt and advantage, is all that moves them to it, or is deſigned and aimed at by them in it; they mind not the glory of God, nor his reparation in honour, which hath been by their ſin greatly impaired. The Lord was down-right with Iſrael in this (Jer. 4. 1.) If thou wilt return, O Iſrael, ſaith the Lord, return unto me; intimating, that Iſrael uſed to make ſome kind of repenting turns, but ſhort of God; they minded not God ſincerely in them, but the removal of ſome rod or trouble that was come, or which they feared was coming upon them. They return to God in repenting, who repent with a holy reſolve upon their hearts to obey God, and with a longing deſire to enjoy God all the days of their life.

Thus upon the occaſion of Jobs ſaying, I repent, I have briefly opened the duty of repentance, of ſuch a repentance as without all peradventure Job was then exerciſed in: His was the grace of repentance, his repentance was wrought in his heart, chiefly by the immediate word and ſpeakings of God to him; He turned fully in it from all his paſſions and expoſtulations with God (which were at that time his ſpecial ſin) to a meek, quiet ſubmiſſion to the will of God, and a reſting in his diſpenſations. All this was wrapped up in this ſhort word, I repent.

Further, conſider, when Job ſaid, I repent in duſt and aſhes; he was not then to begin his repentance, he had repented long before; yet then he began a new work of repentance, or then he renewed his repentance.

Hence Note; Firſt, New ſinnings call for new repentings.

As the new leakings of a ſhip calls for new pumpings and repairs; ſo I ſay, new ſins call for new repentings. There is a firſt repentance, and there is a ſecond repentance: Firſt Repentance is our coming out of a ſtate of ſin, of which Chriſt ſpake (Mat. 11. 20, 21.) Then began he to upbraid the Cities, wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not: Wo unto you Chorazin, and wo unto you Bethſaida; for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes; that is, they had come out of their ſins. Thoſe converts in the Acts of the Apoſtles (chap. 2. 38.) repented, that is, they came out of a ſinful ſtate. Now, as there is a repentance, which I call our coming out of a ſtate of ſin; ſo there is a repentance, which is a coming off from this and that act of ſin; and this is the repentance which Job was upon.

Again, this repentance as to acts of ſin, is two-fold. Firſt, Our ordinary and every days repentance. Secondly, Our extraordinary repentance. When we have fallen greatly, when we have ſinned extraordinarily, or when the Lord brings any extraordinary judgment upon us, then the Lord expects extraordinary repentance: ſuch was Davids repentance in the 51. Pſalm, and ſuch was Jobs repentance here; as it was in general for ſin, ſo for ſome extraordinary ſinful failings.

Secondly, Conſider what was Jobs ſin? Job was no vile perſon, he had committed no groſs acts of wickedneſs. If you would know what Jobs ſin was, it was impatience under Gods dealings with him, and his diſtruſtfulneſs as to Gods delivering of him; yet even his were great ſins.

Hence Note; Not only groſs ſins, murder, adultery, and the oppreſſion of our neighbours are great ſins; but impatiency under the hand of God, and unwary ſpeeches concerning the dealings of God with us, are great ſins.

Every great ſin is not a groſs ſin. Drunkenneſs, and ſwearing, and adultery, and murder, are groſs ſins; but impatience under affliction and unbelief, not reſting upon God in an evil day, theſe are great ſins, though not groſs ſins. Remember, not only are groſs ſins great ſins; but many ſins, which appear not to the eye, nor to the ear, may yet be great ſins, eſpecially, as to the perſon that committeth them.

Thirdly, Note; Not groſs ſins only, but ſlips of the tongue, and impatiency under Gods hand are to be repented of.

Job not only acknowledged theſe to be ſins, but repented of theſe; nor had he any other matter to repent of. When we are under ſome great ſickneſs, or any other affliction, as we are to repent of former ſins, ſo let us repent of our ſickneſs and affliction-ſins, that is, of impatience, or any unwary ſpeeches in our affliction. Theſe Job repented of.

Again; how did Job repent? It was in duſt and aſhes.

Hence Obſerve, Fourthly; Open ſins muſt have open repentance.

That's intended by repenting in duſt and aſhes. We are not bound to repent openly of all our ſins; but in theſe two caſes we are. Firſt, When we have done any thing that hath openly diſhonoured God. Secondly, When we have ſcandalized or offended others. In theſe caſes we muſt repent openly, ſo far, that they who are concerned may have a teſtimony of our repentance. When Job repented in duſt and aſhes, he (like thoſe ſervants of Benhadad, who came with ropes about their necks) teſtified that he had deſerved to be thrown into the duſt, or to be burnt to aſhes. We can neither edifie nor ſatisfie ſuch as are grieved by our ſins, unleſs our repentance be viſible, and we appear repenting. As the light (of our zeal) muſt ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee our good works; ſo the light of our repentance muſt ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee us humbled for, and turning from our evil works, and glorifie our father which is in heaven.

Fiſthly, Note; We may teſtifie our repentance by outward ſigns.

Here was not only the reallity of repentance, but the ceremony of it. There are many outward ſigns of repentance ſpoken of in Scripture: Such are, Firſt, Smiting upon the thigh; thus Ephraim is deſcribed repenting (Jerem. 31. 19.) Secondly, Smiting upon the breaſt; ſo the Publican is deſcribed repenting (Luke 18. 13.) He ſmote upon his breaſt, and ſaid, God be merciful to me a ſinner. Thirdly, Laying aſide our ornaments; thus the Lord commanded the Iſraelites (Exod. 33. 5.) Put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know to do unto thee; as if God had ſaid humble thy ſelf openly and repent. Fourthly, The putting on of ſack-cloth; this the Jews were called to do (Iſa. 22. 12.) Fifthly, Holding down the head. The Jews (Iſa. 58. 5.) were not reproved for doing that, but becauſe they did it like a bull-ruſh, only when a ſtorm was upon them: Sixthly, Renting the garment, and walking ſoftly. So did Ahab (1 Kings 21. 27.) Seventhly, as in the Text Job ſaith he did, ſitting in duſt and aſhes. I do not ſay theſe, or the like, are abſolutely neceſſary to repentance, but they are lawful, and have their uſe. When the Prophet (Joel 2. 13.) ſaid, Rent your hearts, not your garments; that is, rent your hearts, rather than your garments; it was not a prohibition, but a direction: or if rent your garments, be ſure you rent your hearts alſo, elſe all your outward modes of repentance are in vain and inſignificant. Some popiſh Writers make the eſſence of repentance to conſiſt in theſe or ſuch like outward ſigns; but though we deny that, yet we grant that theſe may be ſigns of true repentance: For as to bow the knee is not to pray, although he that prayeth uſually boweth the knees, as a ſign of an humble heart in prayer; ſo to ſit in the duſt and weep, is not to repent, although the truly penitent uſually do ſo. The eſſence of repentance conſiſts in a broken heart for ſin, and in breaking off the courſe and cuſtom of ſin, turning to God fully.

Bellarminus l. 1. de pœnitentia. c.7. SS. percurramus.

Further, this outward ceremony of ſitting in duſt and aſhes, intimates the greatneſs of Jobs repentance, or that he repented greatly under a deep ſenſe of, and with bitter mournings for his former miſcarriages in the time of his affliction.

Hence Note, Sixthly; A ſoul truly humbled maketh a very ſerious work of repentance.

It is a common thing to ſay, I repent; but few know what it is to repent in duſt and aſhes. They who repent indeed, judge, arraign and condemn themſelves as at Gods tribunal, they put their mouths in the very duſt. Repentance is heart work, and deep work: they who are brought in a ſpiritual ſenſe to duſt and aſhes, find it ſo. Though ſome ſinners corrupt themſelves and their ways, more deeply than others, yet all ſin is of a deep die, and corrupts deeply, and therefore calls for deep, for heart-deep mournings and repentings in duſt and aſhes.

Pœnitent me ex animo, & ſtudioſiſſimè, quod illis externis ſymbolis ſignificabatur. Jun.

Note, Seventhly; God will not give over dealing with his ſinning ſervants, till he hath brought them to true contrition for their ſins.

How long was Job dealt with by his friends, and by Elihu, and by God himſelf, before his heart was wrought into this frame and temper, to repent in duſt and aſhes? It was long before he underſtood that God might break an innocent perſon to pieces, and give no account why. God did give over afflicting Job, till he came to that acknowledgment. Job ſaid (Chap. 40. 4.) I am vile; and it might be thought, that had been repentance ſufficient: But though Job was then brought low, yet he was not brought low enough; he cryed, I am vile, but till God ſpake to him of Behemoth and Leviathan he repented not in duſt and aſhes. Ephraim ſaid (Jer. 31. 18, 19.) Thou haſt chaſtiſed me, and I was chaſtiſed, as a bullock unaccuſtomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned; thou art the Lord my God. Surely, after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote upon my thigh, I was aſhamed, yea, even confounded, becauſe I did bear the reproach of my youth. The Lord never left ſmiting Ephraim, till he made him ſmite upon his thigh. If we do not come home in the work of repentance, by words, God will fetch us home with his rods.

In the eighth place; If we conſider this repentance of Job, with what followeth preſently upon it, his reſtauration.

Obſerve; We are deeply humbled and brought low, we are near our exaltation.

When Job lay in duſt and aſhes, God was about to ſet him upon a mountain, a mountain of proſperity, and that a higher one than ever he was upon before (Pſal. 126. 5, 6.) They that ſow in tears, ſhall reap in joy; they that go forth weeping, bearing precious ſeed, ſhall doubtleſs come again with rejoycing, bringing their ſheaves with them. Therefore take the Apoſtle counſel (1 Pet. 5. 6.) Humble your ſelves under the mighty hand of God (and what then?) he will exalt you in due time. The due time of our lifting up is at hand, when we are laid low and ſincerely humbled under the hand of God. Jobs humiliation and reſtauration did almoſt ſynchronize, or come near in time together.

Ninthly, Note; True repentance endeth in true joy.

The word which ſignifies to be grieved, ſignifieth alſo to rejoyce; and Job found it ſo, he was comforted as ſoon as fully humbled. Repentance iſſueth in joy three ways,

Firſt, There is joy in heaven when a ſinner repenteth (Luke 15. 7.) As he that found his loſt ſheep brought it home, and rejoyced in it more than over the ninety and nine that did not go aſtray: So (ſaith Chriſt) there is joy in heaven over one ſinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine juſt perſons that need no repentance. True ſorrow on earth maketh joy in heaven.

Secondly, There is joy in the Church; The godly on earth rejoyce at the known repentance of a ſinner. When the prodigal ſon came home, his father ſaid to his diſcontented brother, It was meet that we ſhould make merry and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again, he was loſt, and is found. The Apoſtle greatly rejoyced at the repentance of the Corinthians (2 Cor. 7. 9.) Now I rejoyce, not that ye were made ſorry, but that you ſorrowed to repentance. Their ſorrow occaſion'd his joy, yet not that, but their repentance was the cauſe of it. There is no better joy on earth, than that which ariſeth out of the duſt of repenting ſorrows. As the Apoſtle John had no greater joy than to hear that his (ſpiritual) children walked in the truth (Epheſ. 3. 4.) So, what greater joy can we have, than to ſee any who had gone aſtray from, returning to the truth?

Thirdly, Repentance iſſueth in joy chiefly to the ſoul repenting. If other mens repentance cauſeth our joy, our own will cauſe it much more (2 Cor. 7. 10.) Godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation, not to be repented of. The Apoſtles meaning is more than he ſpeaks; repentance not to be repented of, is repentance to be rejoyced and gloried in. We cannot take comfort in our ſins, but we may take much comfort in repenting for our ſins, as that repentance is joyned with faith in Chriſt, who hath given us power to repent, and who is for himſelf to be rejoyced in.

Laſtly, Take this general note from the whole matter;

The ſpeakings of God to man, whether mediate or immediate, are mighty and effectual.

The ſpeaking of man to man barely can do nothing, but the ſpeaking of man to man in the power of God will do much; how much more if God himſelf ſpeak! God ſpake to Job, and theſe mighty effects followed.

Firſt, Self-abhorrence.

Secondly, Deep repentance.

Thirdly, Full ſubmiſſion to the will of God.

Fourthly, A readineſs to teſtifie, by all due means, how vile, how miſerable he was; yet cleaving faſt to, and depending fully upon God, by faith in the promiſe, for mercy, peace, and pardon.

Fifthly, A change both of mind and manners, both in thought, word and way. Job thought no more as he had done, he ſpake no more as he had done, he acted no more as he had done in that condition, he was another manner of man than before; a good man he was before, but now a better; he came out of the fire of that affliction, and off from the heat of that long diſputation, as gold well refined.

So much of this verſe, which concludes the firſt part of the chapter, Jobs humiliation: the ſecond followeth, his friends reconciliation both to God and himſelf.

The Reader may here pleaſe to take notice, that from the beginning of the third chapter to this place, the writing is in verſe; the latter part of the chapter and book is proſe.

VERS. 7, 8, 9.

And it was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job, the Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite, my wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends; for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

Therefore take unto you now ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams, and go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering, and my ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, for him will I accept; leſt I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing which is right, like my ſervant Job.

So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the Lord commanded them: the Lord alſo accepted Job.

THeſe three verſes contain the ſecond part of the Chapter, in which the Lord,

Firſt, Reproves Jobs three friends (ver. 7.)

Secondly, Directs them what to do for the making up of the breach, or for their reconciliation (ver. 8.)

Thirdly, Accepts them, that is, Job, praying for them, the breach was healed, and they reconciled (ver. 9.)

So then, here God appeareth as a Judge of the cauſe, and as a moderator of the controverſie between Job and his friends; and he appeared as a gracious judge, ready to be reconciled to thoſe whom he had blamed, and reproved for their folly and miſapprehenſions of him, in his afflicting providences towards Job.

Verſ. 7. And it was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job, the Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite, my wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends; for ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

In this verſe we have the divine Judgment given in Jobs caſe, and in it there are four things conſiderable.

Firſt, The time or ſeaſon of it, thus expreſt; And it was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job.

Secondly, The manner of it; The Lord ſaid, he declared his mind.

Thirdly, The ſpecial perſon with whom the Lord dealt, and whom he choſe out to declare his mind reſpectively to the other two; Eliphaz the Temanite.

Fourthly, The decree or judgment it ſelf, in which we may conſider two things.

Firſt, The matter of it; My wrath (ſaith the Lord) is kindled againſt thee, and thy two friends; I am not pleaſed with any of you, yea, I am highly diſpleaſed, My wrath is kindled.

Secondly, The ground of it, plainly expreſt in theſe words; For ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath. As if the Lord had ſaid, if you would know the reaſon why I am ſo angry, 'tis this; Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

Thus we have the ſtate of theſe three verſes, and the parts of this ſeventh, wherein God appeareth as a determiner of this long diſputed controverſie, between Job and his three friends.

And it was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job.

Here is the time when the Lord gave this judgment, that's the firſt thing to be conſidered in this verſe; and it may be queſtioned, whether the Lord gave this Judgment immediately after he had concluded his ſpeech with Job, and Job had made his confeſſion to the Lord? or whether there were ſome ſpace of time between? The word after may be either preſently after, or a good while after; here is no expreſs limitation of the time, it being only ſaid, After the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job.

Some conceive it was a good while after God had done with Job, that he took his friends to task, and they ground it upon thoſe words, in the 8. verſe, Take unto you ſeven Bullocks, and ſeven Rams, and go to my ſervant Job: And it is ſaid in the 9. verſe, That they went and did according to what the Lord had commanded. Hence they collect, that Jobs friends were either returned quite home, or far upon their way, when the Lord ſpake this.

But this reaſon hath no force in it, to prove that Jobs friends were abſent; and therefore I rather conclude, that God ſpake to, and gave this judgment of Jobs friends (as it were) upon the place, as ſoon as he had done with Job; for 'tis more than probable, that Jobs friends ſtayed to hear both Elihu's ſpeech, and the diſcourſe which the Lord made to Job out of the whirlwind; and that as ſoon as he had done, and Job ſubmitted, he preſently paſſed this ſentence for the comfort of Job, and for the conviction of his friends.

So then as ſoon as the Lord had ſpoken theſe words, and finiſhed his buſineſs with Job, when he had humbled Job, when Job had repented and confeſſed his fault, in uttering things that he underſtood not, God proceeded preſently to deal with Jobs three friends. There are three things which give evidence to this.

Firſt, The Lord would not let them continue long in their hard opinion of Job.

Secondly, If they had continued any long time unreproved, they might poſſiby have gloried as if they had got the victory, and had the better of Job.

Thirdly, They might have raiſed ſome undue report of Job, and have blamed him among others where they came, as they had done to his face; therefore, the Lord to prevent their continuing in any hard opinion of Job, or that they had got the better of Job, or to ſtop their mouths from giving forth any hard words of Job, preſently called them to an account, gave them to underſtand, that they had ſpoken amiſs, and he, as it were, with the ſame breath comforted Job, and convicted his three friends.

Hence Note, Firſt; God doth every thing in its proper ſeaſon.

That which is ſeaſonably done, is doubly done. Words in ſeaſon, are like apples of gold, in pictures of ſilver; and therefore the Lord, who knows all ſeaſons, will do and ſpeak in ſeaſon, and take the fitteſt ſeaſon for every work and word; for every thing he either doth or ſaith. This ſhould teach us to mind the due timing, both of our actions and ſpeeches, eſpecially of our reproofs; we ſhould not let thoſe who have committed a fault, go too long unreproved, leſt they think themſelves faultleſs, and that we approve them, or at leaſt that their fault is ſmall, and almoſt faultleſs. We muſt not ſuffer ſin upon our brother (Lev. 19. 17.) But it may be ſaid, how ſhall we hinder it? That Text tells us how, Thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke him. Though a man that is rebuked may keep his ſin upon him, and continue in it, notwithſtanding our ſevereſt and diſcreeteſt rebukes; yet he that rebukes a ſinning brother, doth not ſuffer ſin upon him, but hath done his duty, and uſed the means appointed by God for the removing of it. And as we ſhould not let the Sun go down upon our wrath againſt other men, nor give place to the devil in our ſelves (Eph. 4. 26, 27.) ſo we ſhould not ſuffer the Sun to go down upon the ſin of other men, nor give place to the devil in them, by our forbearance to rebuke them for their ſin. Thus the Lord dealt with Jobs three friends; he ſpeedily reproved them for their error, in not ſpeaking of him the thing that was right.

Further conſider, The Lord begins with Job, and then proceeds to deal with his friends; Job had the firſt reproof; his friends the ſecond.

Hence Note The Lord reproves them firſt, whom he reſpects moſt who are deareſt to him.

We cannot ſhew our ſelves more friendly to any man, than by an early reproof of his error, or as the word is (Lev. 19. 17.) by not ſuffering ſin upon him. 'Tis a mercy (when we reprove not our ſelves) to meet with a reproof (though late) from others; but to be ſoon reproved, is much mercy. Every good, the ſooner it comes to us, the better it is. To be helpt out of ſin-evil, is a great good; and therefore, when we are in a fault with others, 'tis a priviledge to be reproved before others, and with all poſſible ſpeed to be brought unto repentance. The Apoſtle Peter ſaith (1 Pet. 4. 17.) Judgment begins at the houſe of God. The Lord judgeth his own houſe, before he judgeth the world: and it is in mercy to his own houſe, that he doth ſo; for when God judgeth thoſe of his houſe, he chaſtneth them, that they ſhould not be condemned with the world (1 Cor. 10. 32.) And as God uſually begins to judge his own houſe before he judgeth the world, ſo the nearer and dearer any of his houſe are to him, the ſooner he begins with them; as here, Jobs three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, were of Gods houſe, but Job was more eminent than any of them, and therefore God reproved him, before he reproved them. It was ſo, that after the Lord had ſpoken theſe words unto Job,

The Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite, my wrath is kindled againſt thee, &c.

The Lord ſaid.] Theſe words contain the ſecond thing to be conſidered in this verſe, to wit, the manner of proceeding, He ſaid; that is, he openly declared it, he did not whiſper it in the ear of Eliphaz, he did not ſpeak it to him inwardly by his Spirit (there are inward reproofs, conſcience-checks) he did not ſpeak to him in his ſleep; or in a dream (that opinion of one upon this place, that God reproved Eliphaz in a dream, is but a dream) but openly, that all might hear, and ſo the innocency of Job, and the fault of his friends, might be manifeſt to all. Some are of opinion, that the Lord ſaid this to Eliphaz out of the whirlwind, as he ſpake to Job. And though I do not aſſert that, yet it cannot be denyed, but that as ſuch a manner of ſpeaking did beſt ſuit the Majeſty of God, ſo the matter ſpoken, which was a ſore reproof, in which the Lord manifeſted much diſpleaſure. The Lord ſaid, openly and angerly

To Eliphaz the Temanite,] He ſpake not to Bildad, nor to Zophar, but to Eliphaz the Temanite. But why did the Lord direct his ſpeech to him perſonally, and by name, while the buſineſs concerned them all? I might anſwer as ſome do, becauſe what any one of them ſaid to Job, was as if ſaid by them all: And though their opinions differed, yet their perſons did not, all three agreeing in this (though upon ſeveral grounds) to oppoſe Job. And therefore the Lord in ſpeaking to one, ſpake to them all.

But I ſhall give three other Reaſons for it, and from each a Note.

Firſt, Eliphaz was the elder man, the graver perſon, as all agree, and therefore God reproved him perſonally.

> Note this from it; The elder and greater any are, the greater is their offence, when they offend, though others offend with them.

When many are in a fau't, the chief or heads of them are moſt faulty, and deſerve chiefly to hear of it. When Iſrael had committed that great ſin in Baal-peor (Numb. 25. 4.) The Lord ſaid, Hang up the heads of the people before me, that is, the chiefeſt of the people. So, in proportion, when the Lord came to deal with theſe three, he fell upon Eliphaz firſt, as the more eminent or firſt of the three.

Secondly, As Eliphaz was the elder or firſt of the three, ſo he began firſt with Job; he was not only the firſt and chief in perſon, but he was the firſt and chief ſpeaker.

> Hence Note; They who are firſt in a fault, ſhall be firſt in reproof.

It is dangerous to follow, or be a ſecond in a bad matter, but more, to begin and be leader.

Thirdly, Eliphaz was more ſharp with, and violent againſt Job, than the other two, and therefore the Lord began with him.

> Hence Note; The deeper any are in a fault, of any kind, and the more of the heart appeareth in it, the worſe it is, the more blame-worthy are they, and they ſhall be more blamed for it.

All the three friends of Job did much miſtake him, but the ſpirit of Eliphaz was hotteſt, therefore the Lord culled him out firſt. The Lord ſaid to Eliphaz the Temanite.

What ſaid the Lord?

My wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends.

My wrath is kindled.] Theſe words are uſed by Elihu (Chap. 32. 2, 3.) Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu, the ſon of Barachel the Buzite; againſt Job was his wrath kindled, and againſt his three friends was his wrath kindled. Here the Lord taketh up the ſame words concerning Eliphaz, My wrath is kindled againſt thee and thy two friends. Elihu's wrath was kindled, not only againſt Jobs friends, but againſt Job himſelf; but the Lords wrath was kindled only againſt Jobs three friends, not againſt Job. He indeed diſpleaſed God, and was ſharply reproved by him; but the wrath of God was not kindled againſt him. 'Tis uſeful to conſider the difference between Gods judgment and mans, both as to things and perſons. Elihu thought Job was as faulty as his friends, and therefore his wrath was kindled, as againſt his three friends, ſo againſt him too; but the Lord thought otherwiſe, and therefore ſaid to Eliphaz, My wrath is kindled againſt thee and thy two friends; he ſaid not ſo to Job.

Again, conſider the Lord ſpake much with Job, but he ſpake little with his friends, he did not vouchſafe them any long diſcourſe; and the words he ſpake to them, were very hot words; he in few words (as angry men uſe to do) told them their own.

Once more conſider, the difference of the Lords dealing with him and them. The Lord fetcht a great compaſs to reprove Job, as Nathan the Prophet did to reprove King David; but he told his friends at firſt word, My wrath is kindled againſt you. Though they were good men, yet not ſo dear to God as Job, and therefore he dealt in a more fatherly and favourable way with Job, than with them; they had only hot words, My wrath is kindled againſt you, &c. I am more than angry. As the coals of ſpiritual love (ſpoken of, Cant. 8. 6.) ſo the coals of divine wrath are coals of fire, which hath a moſt vehement flame. There are ſeven words in the Hebrew language which ſignifie anger, and this notes the moſt vehement of them all.

חרה Exarſit incenſus, inflammatus eſt. Inter ſeptem voculas Hebræorum, quæ iram ſignificant, hæc omnium eſt graviſſima. Scult.

My wrath is kindled.] The Latine words Ira and Iraſco, ſeem to be derived from it. The word is ſometimes applied to grief (there is a kind of fire in grief.) Thus 'tis ſaid (1 Sam. 15. 11.) It grieved Samuel, and he cryed unto the Lord all night. Samuel was vehemently grieved, becauſe of the ill performance of Saul in his expedition againſt the Amalekites. 'Tis alſo tranſlated to fret (Pſal. 37. 8, 9.) Fret not thy ſelf in any wiſe to do evil; fretting hath its burning.

My wrath (ſaith the Lord) is kindled.] There is a wrath of God, which is not kindled, as I may ſay, it is not blown up, 'tis covered in the aſhes of his patience and forbearance; but here, ſaith God, My wrath is kindled. This is ſpoken by God after the manner of men. God feels no change by wrath or anger, no impreſſion is made on him by any paſſion: Wrath in God, notes only his change of diſpenſations towards man, not any in himſelf. When he acts like a man whoſe wrath is greatly kindled, then 'tis ſaid, his wrath is kindled; as when he acteth like a man that ſheweth much love, it may be ſaid, his love is kindled.

Further, when God ſaith, My wrath is kindled, it implieth there is ſome great provocation given by him man, as in the preſent caſe Eliphaz and his two friends had done. The Lord threatned a ſinful Land with brimſtone, and ſalt, and burning, like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah; and, this being executed, all Nations ſhall ſay, wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this Land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger? Then men ſhall ſay, becauſe they have forſaken the Covenant of the Lord God of their Fathers, &c. (Deut. 29. 23, 24, 25.) The wrath of God is never kindled till blown, and that which bloweth it up is mans ſin; nor doth the ordinary ſins of man kindle the wrath of God, for then it muſt be always kindled, even againſt the beſt of men. Doubtleſs, when the Lord ſaid in the Text to Eliphaz, My wrath is kindled againſt thee and thy two friends, there was ſomewhat extraordinary in their ſin, which kindled it; and therefore the Lord directed them an extraordinary way (as to circumſtances) for the quenching of it, and the making of their peace.

But here it may be queſtioned, why did the Lord ſay his wrath was kindled only againſt Eliphaz and his two friends? had he nothing to ſay againſt Elihu? he had ſpoken as harſhly to Job as any of them, yet Elihu at was not all reproved, much leſs was the wrath of God kindled againſt him.

I anſwer, 'Tis true, Elihu ſpake very hard words of Job; yet we may ſay four things of Elihu, which might exempt him from this blame which fell upon thoſe three.

Firſt, He did not ſpeak with, nor diſcover a bitter ſpirit, as they did.

Secondly, Elihu objected not againſt Job his former life, nor charged him as having done wickedly towards man, or hypocritically towards God; he only condemned him for preſent miſcarriages under his trouble, for impatience and unquietneſs of ſpirit under the croſs.

Thirdly, That which Elihu chiefly objected againſt Job was, the juſtifying of himſelf rather than God (as he ſpeaks at the beginning of the 32. Chapter) not the maintaining of his own innocency, nor the juſtifying of himſelf before men. Indeed Job failed while he inſiſted ſo much upon that point, that he ſeemed more careful to clear himſelf, than to juſtifie God.

Fourthly, When Elihu ſpake hardly, it was more out of a true zeal to defend the juſtice of God in afflicting him, than to tax him with injuſtice. Now becauſe Elihu did not carry it with a bitter ſpirit, and hit the mark much better than his friends (though in ſome things he alſo ſhot wide and miſunderſtood Job) therefore the blame fell only upon Jobs three friends, and not upon Elihu; The Lord ſaid to Eliphaz, my wrath is kindled againſt thee, and againſt thy two friends; but his wrath went no further.

Hence Note; Firſt, The Lord knows how to declare wrath as well as love, diſpleaſure as well as favour.

He hath a ſtore of wrath as well as of love, and that is kindled when he is highly diſpleaſed.

Secondly, Note; Sin cauſeth kindlings or diſcoveries of divine wrath.

Had it not been for ſin, the Lord had never declared any wrath in the world, nothing had gone out from him but kindneſs and love, favours and mercies. Wrath is revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs, and againſt unrighteouſneſs only (Rom. 1. 18.) Unrighteouſneſs kindleth wrath, ſin is the kindle-coal. When we ſee wrath or diſpleaſure going out, we may conclude ſin is gone out. Moſes ſaid to Aaron (Numb. 16. 46.) Take a Cenſer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incenſe, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them, for there is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun. Now as in this latter part of the chapter, Moſes ſhews that wrath was gone out againſt that people from the Lord; ſo in the former part of it he ſhews, that ſin, and that a great ſin, was gone out from that people againſt the Lord.

Thirdly, Note; The Lord ſometimes declareth wrath, even againſt thoſe whom he loveth.

Wrath may fall upon good men; ſuch were theſe friends of Job. All the Elect, whilſt they remain unconverted or uncalled, are called Children of wrath (Epheſ. 2. 3.) Though they are in the everlaſting love of God, yet they are children of wrath, as to their preſent condition, whilſt in a ſtate of nature and unreconciled to God. Now, as the children of God, are children of wrath, before their converſion; ſo, when any great ſin is committed after converſion, they are in ſome ſenſe under wrath; and the Lord declareth wrath againſt them, till the breach be healed, and their peace ſued out. It is dangerous continuing for a moment in any ſin unrepented of, or we not going unto God by Jeſus Chriſt for pardon. When once the wrath of God is kindled, how far it may burn, who knoweth? There is no ſafety under guilt; Therefore kiſs the ſon leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little: bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him (Pſal. 2. 12.) My wrath is kindled againſt thee, and thy two friends. Why?

Becauſe ye have not ſpoken that which is right of me.

Hence Note, Fourthly; When the Lord is angry he will ſhew cauſe of his anger.

God is not angry (as men often are) without cauſe. When Jonah was angry, the Lord ſaid unto him, Doſt thou well to be angry? Yea, ſaith he, that I do, I have reaſon enough (thought he) to be angry, though there was no true reaſon at all for it. But when the Lord is angry, he always hath reaſon enough, and he ſometimes giveth his reaſon. That the Lord doth us good, is from free grace: there is no reaſon in us, why he doth us good; as he told the people of Iſrael, I did this, and that for you, not becauſe ye were more than others (either in weight or number) but becauſe I loved you: but when the Lord afflicts his people, he tells them the reaſon, 'tis for your ſins, or to purge you from your ſins; and ſometimes pointeth them to the ſpecial ſins, for which he puniſheth them, and from which he would have them purged. As here he did Eliphaz and his two friends.

Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

The Lord doth not charge them with any evil actings, but with undue ſpeakings; Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right.

Hence Note; Failings in ſpeech, or in what we ſay, may kindle wrath, as well as failings in what we do.

Further, The Lord doth not charge them with ſpeaking foul and filthy things, they had not only ſpoken the thing that was not right. A little failing in ſpeech, or in what we ſay concerning God and his ways, may kindle wrath.

Ye have not ſpoken of me, that is, concerning me, or concerning my proceedings with Job, the thing that is right.

אֵלַי ad me, coram me Pagn.

The Hebrew is, To me, ye have not ſpoken to me the thing that is right. God was not only the ſubject of whom they ſpake, but the object to whom they ſpake; this whole diſputation being tranſacted as in the preſence of God, and both Job and his friends appealing to him, as the Judge and Moderator of it. Hence the Septuagint render, ye have not ſpoken before me the thing that is right: As if God had ſaid, all that ye have ſpoken hath been in my preſence, I being witneſs, yea, I being Judge; yet ye ſpake not right. Did we remember that whatſoever we ſpeak, as well as whatſoever we do, is before God, and muſt come under his judgment, we would be more careful both to do and to ſpeak (which theſe men did not) the thing that is right. Ye have not ſpoken of me

The thing that is right.] The Hebrew is but one word, and it may be taken two ways. Firſt, For rightneſs in matter. Secondly, In manner. Our tranſlation refers to the matter; ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right. Yet they failed (as the word implyeth) in their manner of ſpeaking alſo; they handled Gods cauſe unhandſomely, they ſpake not as they ought, as well as what they ought not, to a poor afflicted creature; they ſpake not with that tenderneſs, pity, and compaſſionateneſs as became them, to a man in that pitiful caſe.

נְכוֹנָה complectitur & veritatem & convenientiam cum officio & decoro. Significat igitur & falſa dixiſſe de Dei judicio & Jobo, & non eo animo dixiſſe ſive vera, ſive falſa eſſent, quo decebat. Coc. Cauſam meam iniquè egiſtis. Jun

But though the Lord might ſay in both theſe ſenſes, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, yet he ſaid not (as the Septuagint over-raſhly render) Ye have not ſpoken of me any thing that is right; nor doth the Lord charge them abſolutely, as not ſpeaking right of him, but with a modification, or comparatively, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right,

As my ſervant Job hath.] As if he had ſaid, Job hath been condemned by you, and yet Job hath ſpoken better than you, righter than you; though he hath had his failings in ſpeaking, yet ye have failed more than he.

But it may be queſtioned, what was it that they did not ſpeak right, and what was it that Job ſpake righter than they?

I anſwer, They had not ſpoken ſo right as he,

Firſt, About the doctrine of Gods providence, by which he governs all things, and diſtributes good and evil, that is, proſperity and adverſity, to the ſons of men.

Secondly, They had not ſpoken ſo right as he, taking up the ſigns or tokens of the love and hatred of God from his outward diſpenſations.

Thirdly, They cenſured Job as a ſinful-doer in former times, and that now his ſin had found him out, becauſe at that time he was ſo great a ſufferer. Theſe things were not right.

Or thus, Jobs friends did not ſpeak right.

Firſt, In judging that God was angry with him, becauſe he afflicted him.

Secondly, Nor did they ſpeak right in judging Job wicked, becauſe afflicted; they ſpake many right things about the juſtice and power of God, but they did not hit Jobs caſe right: They thought and concluded, that if Job had not been a great ſinner, God would not have afflicted him at all, at leaſt, not ſo greatly: They ſuppoſed God could not juſtly afflict Job as he had done, had Job been a juſt man. This was not right; they did not well conſider, Firſt, That God may afflict a juſt man out of Soveraignty. Secondly, They did not well conſider, that God hath other ends and reaſons in afflicting than for iniquity; and therefore they knew not how to juſtifie the proceedings of God, but by condemning Job, which there was no neceſſity to do. So then, their great errour and miſtake was in reſolving this queſtion affirmatively, Whether he that is greatly afflicted, be a great ſinner? or whether the ſevere judgments of God light only upon ungodly men? Their affirmation of this, was enough to make Job deſpair, and did provoke him to utter ſeveral very paſſionate and unfitting ſpeeches.

For though Job ſpake many things right, yet not all right. God judged him according to the tendency and ſcope of his ſpirit and ſpeech, not according to the accidents and ſudden extravagancies of either. Job ſpake right, Firſt, In affirming conſtantly, that God did not afflict him for his ſin.

Secondly, That his afflictions were no ſigns of Gods diſpleaſure againſt him, nor of his wickedneſs againſt God. Yet Job did not ſpeak all nor always right: He failed, Firſt, When he ſpake impatiently of his own ſufferings.

Secondly, When he ſpake ſo boldly to God, asking (as it were) an account of his doings and dealings with him.

Thirdly, He ſpake not right (though that was right which he ſpake) when he ſpake ſo much of his own righteouſneſs, thereby (though not purpoſely, yet) according to the apprehenſion of others, reflecting upon the righteouſneſs of God. In theſe things and more (which have been noted in opening this book) Job ſpake not right of God, yet righter than Eliphaz and his two friends and therefore the Lord told them, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

Further to anſwer the queſtion, and to clear the whole matter, we muſt take notice.

Firſt, In what Job and his three friends agreed.

Secondly, In what they diſagreed.

They all agreed, firſt, in This, that all the afflictions which befal man in this life, fall within the ſight and certain knowledge of God.

Secondly, they all agree, That God is the author and efficient cauſe, the orderer and diſpoſer of all the afflictions that befal man.

Thirdly, they all agree, That God neither doth nor can do wrong to any man, whatſoever affliction he layeth upon him, or how long ſoever he continueth it upon him. Thus far they all ſpake right things, and agreed in what they ſpake.

But Jobs friends held other opinions, wherein he totally diſſented from them.

Firſt, That whoſoever is good, and doth good, ſhall receive a preſent good reward.

Secondly, That whoſoever is evil, and doth evil, ſhall receive preſent puniſhment. So that, if any wicked man proſper, it is but for a while, ſudden miſchief will overtake him: And if any godly man be afflicted, it is but for a while, his affliction will ſoon end, and he return to a flouriſhing condition in this life. From theſe premiſes they concluded, that whoſoever is afflicted, and continueth long under affliction, certainly that man is wicked, and thereupon they judged Job to be ſuch a one.

But Job held this right poſition againſt them all, That the providence of God diſpenſeth outward good and evil ſo indifferently to good and bad men, that no unerring judgment can poſſibly be made of any mans ſpiritual ſtate, by his outſide or temporal ſtate: This Job ſtuck cloſe to, as was ſhewed more fully in the Preface to the Second Part.

I conclude then, That neither did Eliphaz and his two friends, fail ſo much in ſpeaking, as to ſpeak nothing right of God (yea, there was ſomewhat right in every thing they ſpake of God) neither did Job ſpeak ſo right, as to ſpeak nothing amiſs of God. Now God, who knew exactly who ſpake righteſt, determined the matter for Job: Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

Yet before I paſs from theſe words, it may be queſtioned, and ſome make it a great queſtion, Whether we are to underſtand this ſentence and determination of God (preferring what Job had ſpoken of him, before what Eliphaz and his two friends had ſpoken of him) in reference to all that Job had ſpoken of him, in way of aſſertion throughout the whole diſpute, when his ſoul was heated and grieved; or, of what he ſpake towards the latter end, in a cooler temper, when his ſoul was humbled?

The Jewiſh Doctors (who for the moſt part are very ſevere againſt, and cenſorious of Job) expound this ſentence of God, as if it reſpected only what Job ſpake at the beginning of the 40. chapter (ver. 3, 4, 5.) Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea, twice, but I will proceed no further. And what we ſpake at the 42. chapter (ver. 1, 2.) Then Job anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, I know that thou canſt do every thing, and that no thought can be with-holden from thee, &c. Concluding (ver. 6.) Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes. In theſe places, ſay they, Job ſpake righter than his friends, but not ſo in the whole body of his diſcourſe. Some others poſſibly have concurred (though I have ſeen but one, and him only in Manuſcript) with the Rabbins, in this cenſure; affirming, that Jobs opinion was the worſt of all the four, yea, that it was little leſs than blaſphemy, taking men off from, at leaſt, diſcouraging them in ways of godlineſs, while he affirmed peremptorily (chap. 9. 22, 23.) He (that is, God) deſtroyeth the perfect, and the wicked: if the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he laugheth at the tryal of the innocent. This aſſertion of his concerning God (and of this, his whole diſcourſe with his three friends ſavoured) was not (ſay they) ſo right as theirs: and therefore they reſtrain theſe words of God, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job, to what Job ſpake in the chapters mentioned, when he was upon his repentance; but will not allow them to reach to, or be meant of what he ſpake of God in the courſe of his former diſpute with his friends.

But I ſhall cloſe and joyn with thoſe, who refer the words of this final judgment which God gave upon this matter, to what Job ſpake of God from firſt to laſt; and that they are not to be limited to what Job ſpake after God had humbled him, by ſpeaking to him out of the whirlwind.

I grant (as hath been ſaid) Job ſpake unduely more than once, in the days of his anguiſh and ſore affliction; for which Elihu reproved him ſharply (chap. 34. ver. 35, 36, 37. chap. 35, 16.) And ſo did God himſelf (chap. 38. 2. chap. 40. 1, 2, 8.) Nor did Job in the iſſue ſpare, much leſs flatter himſelf, as if he had ſpoken nothing amiſs, but humbly confeſſed his error and ignorance in ſpeaking (chap. 40. 4, 5. chap. 42. 3, and 6.) Wherefore I abhor my ſelf, and repent, &c. even, becauſe in the extremity of my pains, I ſpake ſo unadviſedly with my lips.

I grant alſo, that Job ſpake much more rightly, or righteſt of God, after God had humbled him and brought down his ſpirit by that dreadful diſpenſation out of the whirlwind.

Yet, I ſay, Job ſpake more rightly of God during his affliction, than Eliphaz and his two friends had done; which, as it may appear by that brief account or ſurvey of their opinions a little before given, ſo I ſhall add ſomewhat more towards the making of it yet more apparent.

For, Firſt, That aſſertion laid down (chap. 9. 22, 23.) He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked, &c. which hath raiſed ſo much duſt, and is judged by ſome as a quench-coal to all piety and religion; and which occaſion'd the Jewiſh Writers to ſay, that Job ſought to turn the charger the bottom upward; that his mouth was full of gravel, that he began his ſpeech with curſing, and continued it with blaſpheming: That aſſertion, I ſay, is no more than Solomon hath given us (Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2.) All things come alike to all; and there is one event to the righteous and the wicked. Now Job ſpake this in his firſt anſwer to Bildad, which was almoſt at the beginning of the diſpute.

Secondly, Job ſpake altogether right of God, and of his providence towards himſelf and others all along, while he conſtantly maintained, Firſt, That he was not afflicted for any wickedneſs committed by him, in the former paſſages of his life. Secondly, That outward good is not always the portion of the good, nor outward evil the portion of evil men always in this life. Thirdly, That God is not unrighteous, though he exerciſe the righteous with grievous troubles all their days, and heap worldly bleſſings upon the wicked all the days of this life. Fourthly, That we are not to take meaſure of, nor eſtimate the goodneſs or badneſs of any mans perſon, by the good or bad days which paſs over his head in this life. Fifthly, That no mans happineſs or unhappineſs, is to be judged by what befals him in this life. Job ſpake right, and righter of God than Eliphaz and his two friends, in all theſe particulars. And whereas he ſometimes acted impatiently, and ſpake uncomely, blotting a good cauſe with paſſionate and haſty words, ſuch as ignorant and evil men might make an ill uſe of, and draw to the patronage of their prophanity; theſe proceeded not out of the abundance of his heart, but from the abundance of his pains under the heavy hand of God. And when he ſeemed to tax the judgment of God, it was not any affirmation that God was unjuſt or unequal in it; but an expoſtulation with him about it, or, as ſome expreſs it, a confeſſion of his own ignorance, and an earneſt deſire of clearer light and better information concerning the way of it.

But if we conſider the ſum of what Eliphaz and his two friends ſpake of God; we ſhall find Eliphaz in this great miſtake, affirming, that all the ſufferings and afflictions which befal man in this world, are laid upon him by God as a puniſhment for ſin. And all three joyned in two other miſtakes. Firſt, That all wicked men, ſooner or latter, are viſibly puniſhed for their ſin in this life. Secondly, That though a good man may poſſibly ſuffer grievous afflictions in this life, yet God always delivers him out of them, before he departs this life. Hence it muſt needs follow, that if a man for long continuance of time, eſpecially, if all his life long he continue in great calamity, that man muſt be judged wicked, though no apparent wickedneſs can be charged upon him, nor proved againſt him. Upon theſe unſound principles, they were all confident to infer againſt Job, that he was an hypocrite, and that all thoſe troubles which befel him, were inflicted by the righteous hand of God as a puniſhment for his ſin.

Now if this be the ſum of what they ſpake, we have reaſon enough to anſwer the queſtion propoſed, That the Lords deciſive ſentence between Job and his friends, reſpecteth what Job ſpake of or to God, throughout the book, and is not to be underſtood only of what he ſpake towards the cloſe of it; Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right,

As my ſervant Job hath.] There are two parts of a Judges office. Firſt, To condemn the guilty. Secondly, To acquit the innocent. God the great Judge doth both here; the firſt, in the former words; the ſecond, in theſe; Yea, the Lord doth not only acquit, but own Job in the cloſe of all, as his ſervant. The Lord ſaid to Satan in the firſt chapter, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job; and here he concludes (after Satan had done his worſt to make Job quit the ſervice of God) in the ſame ſtile, my ſervant Job; as if the Lord had ſaid, Job ſhall wear my livery ſtill, he is my ſervant ſtill.

Several uſeful obſervations iſſue from this latter part of the verſe, which I ſhall briefly hint.

Firſt, Who were theſe that had not ſpoken aright? they were wiſe, grave, and learned men, yea, they were godly men too.

Hence Note, Wiſe, learned, and good men may err.

They may err in judgment, and in ſpeech. Jobs friends ſpake many truths, but did not apply them truly to Jobs caſe. The beſt men may not only miſs, but miſtake their mark. They who are in the light, yea, who are light in the Lord, have yet ſome darkneſs in them, and may both do and ſpeak from that darkneſs (ſuch was the caſe of theſe men in the Text.) David may be underſtood of good men, in a degree, as well as of bad men, when he ſaid (Pſal. 62. 9.) Men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: they are ſo, both actively and paſſively; they may be deceived, and they may deceive. As when the Lord of old hearkned and heard, they (that is, all wicked men) ſpake not aright, no man repented of his wickedneſs, ſaying, what have I done? (Jer. 8. 6.) So when the Lord hearkens and hears at this day, they, that is, all good men, ſpeak not aright in all things, neither of him, nor of what he hath done.

Secondly, Conſider who it was that God vindicated in this matter? It was his ſervant Job.

Hence Note; God will ſooner or later, one time or other, vindicate the credit of his faithful ſervants.

He will (as we ſpeak proverbially) ſet the ſaddle upon the right horſe; and make it appear before men and angels, who have done and ſpoken right, yea, who righteſt. Let patience under ſufferance have its perfect work, for God will give a perfect judgment of every mans word and work (Pſal. 37. 6.)

Thirdly, Note; The Lords knowledge is infinite and unerring.

He knoweth who hath the better, who is in the right. He could tell Eliphaz and his two friends, that though they had ſpoken ſome things right, yet not all, not ſo right as Job. The Lord (as we ſay) can cleave a hair in any controverſie, and tell every one where he is out, whether in opinion or practice. God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all (1 John 1. 5.) Our light is but little, and 'tis mingled with much darkneſs; our light is dark, and will be ſo, till we come to that inheritance among the Saints in light. But Gods light is all light, altogether light, both concerning things and perſons.

Fourthly, What Eliphaz and his two friends ſpake, that was not right, concerned Job immediately; they ſpake very glorious things of God out of his caſe: yet the Lord ſaith not, Ye have not ſpoken of Job the thing that is right, but, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right.

Hence Note; God takes himſelf concerned in what is ſpoken amiſs, of or concerning his ſervants.

Jobs friends looked upon themſelves as ſtrong witneſſes, yea, as great Advocates for God; and doubtleſs, they intended no leſs than a plea for God, in what they ſpake to and againſt Job: yet becauſe they in many things grieved, and in ſome things wronged his ſervant Job, therefore ſaith God, ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that his right. The Lord will ſay, in the great day, to the wicked, about their neglects of duty to his faithful ones, In as-much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me. (Mat. 25. 45.) In as-much as ye have not fed and cloathed theſe, ye have not fed nor cloathed me. Now, as the Lord taketh all the neglects of good to his people, to himſelf; ſo the Lord taketh all that evil which any ſpeak of his people, to himſelf: He (ſaith God) that ſpeaketh amiſs of mine, ſpeaketh amiſs of me. The Lord accounteth himſelf intereſted in all that good or evil, which is done and ſpoken to his people; and he is very angry when any thing is miſ-ſpoken of, or miſapplied to them, though with reſpect to himſelf, or as a ſervice unto himſelf.

Fifthly, Conſider, Jobs friends ſpake many excellent truths; yet ſaith the Lord, ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath.

Hence Note; The Lord is greatly diſpleaſed, when truth, or that which is right in it ſelf, is wrong applied.

Jobs friends were moſtly right in their Doctrine, but often out in their Uſes; all their open aſſertions had ſome truth in them, but ſo had not all their ſecret Inferences. God will not bear it, to have truths put to any ill uſe, eſpecially this, to grieve and diſcourage any of his ſuffering ſervants. To ſpeak of the holineſs, juſtice and righteouſneſs of God, ſo as to terrifie an afflicted ſoul, is to make a bad improvement of the beſt things: 'Tis a fly in the box of ointment. Dead flies (ſaith Solomon, Eccleſ. 10. 1.) cauſe the ointment of the Apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour; ſo doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wiſdom and honour. Jobs friends were in reputation for wiſdom and honour; yet this little folly ſent forth an ill ſavour in the Lords noſtrils, and cauſed him to ſay, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that right.

Sixthly, Jobs friends certainly meant well, and had a zeal for God; yet God was angry, and ſaid, they had not ſpoken right.

Hence Note; Our good intentions, yea, zeal for God, will not bear us out when we do or ſpeak amiſs.

Theſe men had a zeal for God, elſe Job had not ſaid as once he did, Will ye lye for God? Though they did not knowingly ſpeak a lye, yet a lye was in what they ſpake; and therefore their ſpeaking for God would not bear them out.

Seventhly, The Lord ſaid to Jobs friends, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, as my ſervant Job hath. Though Job ſpake ſome things amiſs, yet the Lord did not charge him with them, as he did his friends.

Hence Note; The Lord over-looketh many failings, and will not upbraid his ſervants with them.

Job had his failings; but the Lord took no notice of them, but made a determination in his caſe, as if he had ſpoken right in all things. The Lord will not flatter his ſervants when they fail, yet he is very favourable to them, even when they fail; he told Job plainly enough, that he had darkned counſel by words without knowledge, while he asked him, who did it? (Chap. 38. 2.) He intimated alſo, that Job contended with him, and reproved him, that he had (conſequentially) attempted to diſanul his Judgment, and condemn him when he asked him whether he would do it? (Chap. 30. 3, 8.) yet here when the Lord came to make up the matter between Job and his friends, he ſpake as if he had forgot both his own cenſures of him, and the occaſion of them. Holy David acknowledged (Pſal. 130. 3.) If thou Lord ſhouldſt mark iniquities, O Lord, who ſhall ſtand! The Lord doth not mark iniquity where he ſeeth much integrity; the Lord doth not mark every arrow that flies beſide the mark, when he ſeeth the mark was honeſtly aimed at. We ſay, he may be a good Archer that doth not hit the white, if he come but ſomewhat near it; he indeed is a bungler that miſſeth the Butt. Job aimed at, and came near the mark, though he did not always hit it. The Lord will give a good teſtimony of us, if we aim right at, though we ſometimes miſs the mark. It is ſaid of Zachariah and Elizabeth (Luke 1. 6.) They were both righteous. There's not a word ſpoken of their failings, though doubtleſs they had their failings, both as to the Ordinances and Commandments of God.

Eightly, The Lords wrath being kindled againſt Jobs friends, we might expect he would thunder upon them; yet he only ſaith, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right.

Hence Obſerve, The Lord dealeth mildly with ſinners.

He did not give wrathful words, though his wrath was kindled; he did not call Eliphaz and his friends Hereticks, nor tell them they had belyed him, and ſlandered his proceedings; he did not aggravate their fault by grievous words, he did not upbraid them particularly: but without bitterneſs or hard reflections, comprehended all their faults in one general ſoft word, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right. This ſhould be our pattern in dealing with an offending brother: whereas many, if a brother do but differ from them a little, if he do not ſay as they ſay, and concur with them fully in opinion, are ready to cenſure him hardly, and give him reproachful language. The Apoſtles rule is (Gal. 6. 1.) Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye that are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch a one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, conſidering thy ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted. God who is above all temptation, meekly reſtored theſe faulty men; yea, though his wrath was kindled againſt them, yet his ſpeech was mild and cool, only ſaying (and what leſs could he ſay, if he ſaid any thing) Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right.

As my ſervant Job.] Why doth the Lord call Job his ſervant? Surely at once to put an honour upon him, and to comfort him. Eliphaz and his two friends were Gods ſervants; yet becauſe of their miſcarriage in that ſervice, God did not own them at that time as ſuch. God was wont to call David his ſervant at every turn; yet when he had numbred the people, Nathan was ſent to him with a hard meſſage, and is bid, Go, and ſay unto David, not, my ſervant David (2 Sam. 24. 12.)

Hence Note, Ninthly; God honours man much, by owning him as his ſervant.

To ſerve the Lord, is as much our priviledge as our duty; and when the Lord calleth us to his ſervice, he rather puts a favour upon us, than a burden. The Lord is the higheſt maſter, and they are highly honoured who are his ſervants. It is an honour to ſerve Kings and Princes: what is it then to ſerve the King of Kings, the Prince of the Kings of the earth! as Jeſus Chriſt is called (Rev. 1. 5.) 'Tis alſo profitable as well as honourable, to ſerve the Lord; for he is the beſt maſter, his work is the beſt work, and his wages is the beſt wages. And not only ſo, but 'tis eaſie to be the Lords ſervant; for as he expects we ſhould do his work, ſo we may expect help and ſtrength, hearts and hands from him to do it. If the Lord doth but own us for his ſervants, we ſhall not faint at his work, whether it be doing or ſuffering work. God upheld his ſervant Job in, and carryed him through all thoſe tryals and troubles, which would have ſunk him a thouſand times, had not he ſtood by him and aſſiſted him. The Lord is a maſter in Covenant with his ſervants, and that a Covenant of grace, in which every command hath a promiſe annexed to it; and that not only a promiſe of reward, when we have done it, but of ſtrength to do it: and if ſo, then we may conclude it eaſie as well as honourable and profitable, to ſerve the Lord. Therefore

Let us labour to approve our ſelves the Lords ſervants. And if any ask, who is the Lords ſervant? I anſwer, Firſt, He is the Lords ſervant that doth the Lords work; His ſervants we are, whom we obey; he is our maſter whoſe work we do. It is good for us to conſider whoſe work we are about. Jeſus Chriſt was the fathers ſervant in that great undertaking, the redemption of loſt man. Now, all his work on earth was his fathers work (John 9. 4.) I (ſaid he) muſt work the work of him that ſent me. Unleſs we are in the Lords work, and doing the Lords will, we cannot be reckoned among his ſervants.

Secondly, If you are the Lords ſervants, then as you do the Lords work, ſo you are ready to do all his work. He is not a ſervant that doth what he pleaſeth. Some ſay, they will do the Lords work, but they pick and chuſe, they do this, and leave the other undone: He is the Lords ſervant, that goeth through all the Lords work. If we do eaſie work, and refuſe hard work; if we refuſe that work which diſpleaſeth the world, and chuſe only that which is pleaſing to the world, we ſerve not the Lord, but the world and our ſelves. Here is the tryal, when we do what God willeth, whether the world will it, and like it, yea, or no. The Lord ſaid of David, He is my ſervant (and what will he do?) he will do all my will; that is, he will not ſtick at any of my work.

Thirdly, If ye are the Lords ſervants, as ye will do all his work, ſo no work but his; you will not do the work of the fleſh, you will not do any work for man, in oppoſition to the work of God. In ſubordination to the will of God, we ſhould readily do the work of man. In ſerving men thus, we are alſo the ſervants of God. But he that is the Lords ſervant, will not do any work for man which contradicteth or croſſeth the ſervice of God. Chriſt ſaith expreſly, No man ſerveth two Maſters; ye cannot ſerve God Mammon (Mat. 6. 24.) We may ſerve many Maſters, if they command the ſame thing, or things ſubordinate; but we cannot ſerve two Maſters if their commands interfere and claſh one with the other, as the work of God and Mammon doth. And thus the Apoſtles caution is to be underſtood (1 Cor. 7. 23.) Ye are bought with a price: be not ye the ſervants of men.

Fourthly, If ye are the Lords ſervants, as ye do the Lords work, and all his work, and only his work, ſo ye will do his work willingly. All the Lords ſervants are free men, his ſervants are ſons; they do not ſerve as ſlaves, but as children; and God dealeth with them as a Father, more than as a Maſter. Conſider, have ye a free ſpirit for the ſervice of God? His ſervants find themſelves indeed conſtrained to ſerve him, but they do not ſerve him by conſtraint; they are conſtrained by love, not by baſe fear to ſerve him.

Fifthly, If ye are the Lords ſervants, ye do his work for his ſake; the will of the Lord is as much the reaſon why ye do his work, as the rule by which ye do it. Should we do never ſo much of that which is materially the Lords work, unleſs we do it becauſe it is his work, we are not his ſervants in doing it. He that doth the Lords work for ſelf-ends only or chiefly, is not the Lords ſervant, but his own.

Sixthly, If ye are the Lords ſervants, ye have reſolved to be his ſervants for ever; your ears are bored at his poſt, and ye have ſaid (as the ſervant under the Law that loved his Maſter, Exod. 21. 5, 6.) Ye will not go out free. It was ſo with Job; he was the Lords ſervant before his trouble, and he was ſo at the end of his troubles. The Lord doth not take ſervants for months and for years; we muſt be his everlaſting ſervants, always his ſervants, if his ſervants at all. And this ſhould rejoyce our ſouls, that we are and ſhall be for ever in the Lords work. To ſerve the Lord, is better than to rule the world. God is ſo good a Maſter, that we ſhall never have any, the leaſt, occaſion to deſire a change; and he is ſo ſure a Maſter, that we need not fear it.

Laſtly, Though the Lord ſaid, his wrath was kindled againſt Eliphaz and his two friends, yet in the very next words he is directing them how to make their peace, and return, or be received again into his favour.

Hence Note; God often manifeſts more diſpleaſure, than ever he intends to act.

Yea, when ever he manifeſts diſpleaſure againſt his children, it is that he might not act it. Even Heatheniſh Nineveh was threatned with deſtruction, that repenting it might not be deſtroyed. Sinners of all ſorts are threatned with death and damnation, that believing, they may be ſaved and live. What could Eliphaz and his two friends expect, when the Lord ſaid, My wrath is kindled, but that his wrath ſhould have ſwallowed them up, and conſumed them in a moment? Solomon ſaith (Prov. 16. 14.) The wrath of a King is as meſſengers of death, and like the roaring of a Lion (Prov. 19. 12.) much more is the wrath of God like the roaring of a Lion, and as the meſſengers of death. But, though the Lord told Jobs friends of wrath, and of kindled wrath, yet he only, Firſt, reproved them mildly; and, Secondly, inſtead of blowing up that fire, ſhewed or directed them how to quench it, and get into the Sun-ſhine of his favour; as will appear further in the next verſe.

Verſ. 8. Therefore take unto you now ſeven Bullocks, and ſeven Rams, and go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering, and my ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, for him will I accept, leſt I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, like my ſervant Job.

This verſe holds out the counſel or direction which the Lord gave Eliphaz and his two friends for the making of their peace, and the reconciling of themſelves to his Majeſty, whoſe wrath was kindled againſt them. And here the Lord directs them to a twofold means of their reconciliation.

Firſt, The offering up of a ſacrifice, in which we may conſider two things.

Firſt, The matter of the ſacrifice, or what was to be ſacrificed, Bullocks and Rams.

Secondly, The quantity or number of the ſacrifice, ſeven and ſeven, ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams; ſuch was the matter, ſuch the quantity of the ſacrifice which they were commanded to offer.

Secondly, The Lord directs Eliphaz and his two friends to apply themſelves unto Job, and deſire his interceſſion for them; Go to my ſervant Job, and my ſervant Job ſhall pray for you. To this direction the Lord ſubjoyns two things.

Firſt, An incouragement by a gracious promiſe in theſe words; For him will I accept.

Secondly, A threat, in caſe they ſhould neglect or refuſe to go and perform this duty, laid down in the cloſe of the verſe; Leſt I deal with you according to your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing which is right, like my ſervant Job.

Theſe are the particulars conſiderable in this 8. verſe

Therefore take unto you ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams.

The Lord ſpake this to Eliphaz and his two friends. The word of illation, Therefore, at the beginning of the verſe, refers to the word For, at the latter end of the former verſe. As if the Lord had ſaid unto them, Becauſe ye have ſinned againſt me, and provoked me to anger, ſo that my wrath is kindled by your not ſpeaking of me the thing that is right; therefore I adviſe you (and be ye ſure at your peril, to follow my advice; I adviſe you) for the making up of this breach, and the recovery of my favour, to take unto you ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams.

Take unto you.] Some conceive that theſe words, Unto you, are redundant, yet doubtleſs they carry a clear ſenſe, as they ſtand in the Text, Take unto you; that is, for your uſe and behoof in this great ſervice, Take unto you

Seven Bullocks and ſeven Rams.] This was a great ſacrifice, and it was ſo under a twofold conſideration.

Firſt, As to the matter of the ſacrifice, bullocks and rams were great cattle, there were ſacrifices of leſſer matters. We read in the law of Moſes, of a pair of turtle doves, and two young pigeons for a ſacrifice; theſe, the poorer ſort under the law, did offer with acceptation, whereas rich and great men (and ſuch were theſe Eliphaz and his two friends in their time) were commanded to bring great and richer ſacrifices. The rich (as Solomon exhorts, Prov. 3. 9.) were to honour the Lord with their ſubſtance, and with the firſt fruits of their increaſe. Theſe rich men were to bring bullocks and rams, a great ſacrifice in the matter of it.

Secondly, It was a great ſacrifice, if we conſider the number, ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams. One bullock was a ſacrifice, and one ram was a ſacrifice, but here God commanded ſeven of each. Seven is a number of perfection, and of plenitude, ſeven is a great number, and ſeven is a perfect number; it is often uſed myſtically or enigmatically, to note perfection. The Lord made all things in ſix days, and reſted the ſeventh; ſeven days made up a compleat week, and ſeven years are a week of years. We read of A candleſtick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his ſeven lamps therein, and ſeven pipes to the ſeven lamps which were on the top thereof (Zech. 4. 2.) We read alſo of the ſeven ſpirits (Rev. 1. 4.) and of ſeven golden candleſticks (Rev. 1. 12.) Theſe were myſterious ſevens, and there are many more mentioned in Scripture, which to inſiſt upon, would make too great a digreſſion from the purpoſe of the Text under hand, where we have ſeven bullocks and ſeven rams, which make up and imply a great and perfect ſacrifice; as the law of Moſes alſo directed in ſome caſes (Levit. 23. 18.) And ye ſhall offer with the bread ſeven lambs without blemiſh. So (1 Chron. 15. 26.) When the Lord helped the Levites that bare the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, they offered ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams. Again (2 Chron. 29. 21.) They brought ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams, and ſeven lambs, and ſeven he-goats for a ſin-offering, for the kingdom and for the ſanctuary, and for Judah. Balaam incited and hired to curſe Iſrael ſaid unto Balak (Num. 21. 1.) Build me here ſeven altars, and prepare me here ſeven oxen, and ſeven rams. He would needs imitate them whom he deſired to ruin, and offer a full ſacrifice that he might curſe them fully. The greateſt ſacrifice for number that we read of, was at the dedication of the Temple, where the offering of the King was two and twenty thouſand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thouſand ſheep (1 Kings 8. 63.) We read alſo of great ſacrifices (1 Chron. 29. 21. 2 Chron. 17. 11. & Chap. 30. 24.) There were greater ſacrifices than ſeven, yet ſeven was a great ſacrifice. Some Interpreters conceive, that every one of the three was to offer ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams; that had been a very great ſacrifice, but in that the Text is ſilent. The law of Moſes appointed (Levit. 4. 3.) that if a Prieſt committed a ſin of ignorance, he ſhould bring a young bullock without blemiſh unto the Lord for a ſin-offering. The law required no more for a ſin of ignorance in a Prieſt; and if the whole congregation were guilty of a ſin of ignorance, their offering was no more (ver. 13, 14.) and if a Ruler had committed a ſin of ignorance, the law required only a kid of the goats, a male without blemiſh (ver. 23.) and if any one of the common people committed a ſin of ignorance they were to bring a kid of the goats, a female (ver. 28.) So that whereas the law required but one bullock for the ſin of ignorance in a Prieſt, and but one bullock for the whole congregation; and for a Ruler, but a kid of the goats, a male; and for any common perſon, but a kid of the goats, a female: Here Jobs friends were commanded by the Lord to offer up ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams for the expiation of their ſin, which doubtleſs was only a ſin of ignorance. This plainly ſignified, that the Lord was highly diſpleaſed with them for heir harſh judgment, and uncharitable cenſures of his ſervant Job; and to let them know, that their doing ſo, could not be excuſed by their good intentions, and zeal for God.

Jubentur ſeptem tauros, &c. immolare, quia perfectiſſimum eſt ſacrificium Chriſti, and expiatione omnia peccata delens. Perfectus enim numerus ſeptenarius eſt. Brent. Septem eſt numerus plenitudinis & perfectionis, id quod abſolutam expiationem & remiſſionem culpæ eorum deſignabat. Etſi interim in omnibus ſacrificiis veteribus, ad unicum Chriſti ſacrificium cujus illa erant imago & umbra, reſpiciebatur. Merc.

Thus we ſee, what the ſacrifice was, both for kind and number.

The next words tell us, what they muſt do with their ſacrifice.

Go to my ſervant Job (ſaith God)

Why to Job? ſeveral reaſons may be given, why they ſhould go to Job; I ſhall name five or ſix.

Firſt, Becauſe they had wronged Job, and therefore they muſt be reconciled to him.

Secondly, Becauſe God would have them underſtand, that himſelf, notwithſtanding their ill opinion of Job, approved him as a good man, yea, as a man far exceeding them in godlineſs, though they had judged him an hypocrite, crite, or an ungodly man. Thus the Lord ſent them to Job, that they might eat their words, and receive a full conviction of their error.

Thirdly, God would have them go to his ſervant Job, to make them ſenſible, that the favour he intended them, was very much for Jobs ſake, and that they muſt, in part, be beholden to Job for it.

Fourthly, The Lord ſent them to Job, that he might give a high evidence of his grace, eſpecially, of his charity in forgetting injuries, and requiting good for evil. His friends had reproached him ten times, and grieved his ſpirit very much, yet he muſt ſhew how ready he was to forgive them, and pray that they might be forgiven.

Fifthly, God would have them to go to Job, that they might know that Job was reconciled to them as well as himſelf.

Sixthly, God would have them go to Job that this might humble them, or that they might ſhew their humility and ſubmiſſion. It was a great piece of ſelf-denial, for them to go to Job, after ſuch a conteſt; and intreat him to ſpeak for them, of whom they had ſpoken ſo hardly, and with whom they had long contended ſo bitterly. Thus the Lord tried both Job and them; the Lord tried Jobs charity, and their humility. We are hardly brought to confeſs that we have wronged others, or have been out and miſtaken our ſelves. 'Tis no eaſie matter for a man to acknowledge himſelf overcome; 'tis extream hard to become a ſuppliant to one, whom we lately deſpiſed and trampled upon. All this is hard meat, and not eaſily digeſted; yet Eliphaz and his two friends muſt digeſt all this, before they could acceptably obey the Lords command, in going to his ſervant Job.

Nor was it an eaſie matter, for Job to forget ſo many affronts and unkindneſſes, as he had received from his friends. 'Tis hard for a man that hath been wronged and reproached, yea, condemned to paſs all by, and not only embrace his oppoſers and reproachers, but pray and ſolicite for them. Thus the Lord, in ſending them to Job, took tryal both of Job and them. The Lord commanding them to ſupplicate him, whom they had offended, and expecting that he ſhould make ſuit and ſupplication for them who had offended him; put both their graces to it, and in a moſt ſweet and gracious way, at once healed the breach, which had been between Job and them, as alſo that between them and himſelf. Who ever took up a difference more ſweetly, or reunited diſſenting brethren thus wiſely? Go to my ſervant Job,

And offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering.

That is, thoſe ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams.

Here (as was ſaid before) was the ſacrifice; but who was the Prieſt? The Text ſaith, Offer up for your ſelves, which may intimate that, that as they were to offer a ſacrifice for themſelves, ſo that they themſelves offered it. But as Interpreters generally, ſo I conceive Job was the Prieſt, who offered it in their behalf. We read (chap. 1. 5.) that Job offered ſacrifices for his children, and there it was ſhewed that he was the Prieſt. Every ſacrifice muſt be offered by a Prieſt; the people brought the ſacrifice unto him to offer for them. No ſacrifice is acceptable without a Prieſt: Therefore Jeſus Chriſt, who was our ſacrifice, was a Prieſt alſo, none could offer him but himſelf, he was both ſacrifice, and Prieſt, and Altar. So then, whereas the Text ſaith, they were to offer a burnt-offering for themſelves, the meaning is, they were to bring it unto Job, and he to offer it for them. The Prieſt offered, and Iſrael offered; that is, Iſrael offered by the Prieſt; they brought the matter of the ſacrifice to the Prieſt, and the Prieſt ſlew and preſented the ſacrifice to the Lord. It is one thing to offer, another thing to ſlay the ſacrifice. They offered a ſacrifice who brought it, or at their coſt cauſed it to be brought to the holy place; and this any of the people might do. They offer it upon the Altar to the Lord, who were eſpecially appointed thereunto: Theſe were the Prieſts only. Before the Ceremonial law, as given by God to Moſes, the Prieſt-hood lay in the eldeſt or father of the family, upon which account Job was a Prieſt; whereas afterwards, the Prieſt-hood was ſettled in the family of Aaron, and it was forbidden to any, but one of his line, to offer ſacrifice.

So that, when the Lord ſaid to Eliphaz and his two friends, Go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering, he directed them to Job, as having the honour of Prieſt hood in him, and ſo the power of doing it for them, or in their behalf.

Offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering.

That is, a ſacrifice wholly conſumed by fire. The Hebrew is very elegant, make an aſcenſion to aſcend. The whole burnt-offering was the moſt perfect offering; and therefore the Hebrews expreſs it by a word that ſignifieth the perfect conſumption of it in the fire, and ſo the aſcenſion of it to heaven in ſmoke and vapour, as a ſweet odour in the noſtrils of the Lord, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Epheſ. 5. 1.) and as David (Pſal. 141. 2.) A part of many ſacrifices was ſaved to feaſt upon afterwards, as the harlot ſpake (Prov. 7. 14.) I have peace-offerings with me; this day have I payed my vows: but the burnt-offering was wholly conſumed, and ſent up unto the Lord. Go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering.

Non eſt hic curioſe captanda diſtinctio holocauſti ab aliis victimis cum hæc ante legem contigerint. Quaſi latinè diceres, holocauſtabitis holcauſtum, i.e. in ſolidum offeretis, & ut in auras totum abeat efficietis. Merc.

Hence Note; Firſt, The Lord is very ready to forgive, and to be at peace with thoſe that have offended him.

Though the fire of his wrath be kindled (as it is ſaid in the former verſe) yet he is willing to have it quenched. The Prophet Micah (chap. 7. 18.) makes this report of God, He retaineth not his anger for ever, that is, he retaineth it but a little while, he is ſpeedily pacified, and forgives; and ſometimes (as here) he forgives, without any higher ſignification of his anger than a bare rebuke. The Lord did not lay the leaſt mulct, the leaſt chaſtning or affliction upon Eliphaz and his two friends, though his wrath was kindled againſt them. I grant, it is not ſo always; ſome ſmart ſorely, and pay dearly for their errors. When the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Aaron and Miriam (Num. 12. 9.) for ſpeaking againſt Moſes (as thoſe three had againſt Job) he was then not ſo eaſily pacified; for, firſt, it is ſaid in the cloſe of the 9. verſe, he departed, and (ver. 10.) the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; here was much diſpleaſure, yet not all, for it followeth, and behold Miriam became leprous, white as ſnow. In this caſe God was angry with two that had ſpoken againſt a ſervant of his; and they felt more than a bare rebuke, here was a blow given, and that a ſore one. The Lord deals gently with ſome ſinners, that none may deſpair; and ſeverely with others, though his ſervants, that none may preſume.

Only let us remember, that when the Lord at any time doth chaſten and rebuke his ſervants for ſin with great ſeverity, he doth not drive them away, nor diſcourage them, but would have them look to him for pardon and healing. When he judgeth them (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (1 Cor. 11. 32.) he doth not condemn them; or if we call it a condemnation, yet he doth not condemn them with the world, nor as he condemns the world. God condemns the unbelieving world to deſtruction, but he condemns his ſervants only for their humiliation. The goodneſs of God appears much in theſe two things.

Firſt, In his ſlowneſs to anger, his mercy doth even clog his juſtice, and gives it leaden feet, it comes ſlowly.

Secondly, In his readineſs to ſhew mercy. The Scripture ſaith he is ſlow to wrath, and ready to forgive; his goodneſs doth even add wings to his mercy, cauſing it to fly ſwiftly, to the relief of ſenſible and humbled ſinners; or (as one of the Ancients expreſſeth) he ſharpneth the ſword of his juſtice with the oyl of his mercy; and ſo it becomes a healing, as well as a wounding, ſword.

Secondly, In that the Lord himſelf gave this direction, Take unto you ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams, &c.

Obſerve: God, againſt whom we ſin, ſheweth us the way to get peace, and the pardon of our ſins.

When man ſinned at firſt, or when the firſt man fell into ſin, there he had lain for ever, if the Lord had not ſhewed him a way out: Had it been left to man to deviſe a way to recover himſelf when he was fallen, his fall had been irrecoverable, he had never found how to get at once his ſin pardoned, and the juſtice of God ſatisfied. This was the Lords own invention (and it was the moſt noble and excellent one, that ever was in the world) he ſhewed fallen man at firſt how to get up; and here he gave direction to theſe fallen men, what to do that they might: The Lord who was their Judg, was alſo their Counſellor.

Thirdly, Conſider the particular way of their peace-making, it was by ſacrifice, Take unto you ſeven Bullocks, and ſeven Rams, &c.

Hence Note, Sacrifices for ſin were appointed and commanded by God, not deviſed by man.

Sacrifices have been from the beginning. Cain and Abel brought their offerings unto the Lord (*Gen.*4.3,4.) Noah alſo, builded an altar unto the Lord, and offered burnt-offerings in the altar (Gen.8.20.) Abraham offered the Ram for a burnt-offering (*Gen.*22,13.) Now though the Law for Sacrifices was not formally given in thoſe times, yet it was really given. All thoſe elder Sacrifices were of the Lords appointment, and by his direction, as well as thoſe in and after the days of Moſes. There is no expiating of ſin againſt God, by the inventions of man. Heathens offered Sacrifices to their Idol-gods, imitating the worſhip of the true God (The Devil is Gods ape.) Typical Sacrifices were of God, for the taking away of the ſin of man: And ſo was the true Sacrifice, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; when he (that is, Chriſt) ſaid, ſacrifice and offering, and burnt-offering, and offering for ſin, thou wouldſt not (that is, thou wouldſt not have thoſe legal Sacrifices, nor didſt ever intend to have them, as ſatisfactions to thy offended juſtice, ultimately to reſt in them) then ſaid he (that is, Chriſt) Lo, I come to do thy will, O God (Heb.10.8,9.) It was the will of God, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be the expiatory Sacrifice for the Sin of man; by the which will (*verſ.*10.) We are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all. The Sacrifice of Chriſt himſelf had not ſaved us, if it had not been of Gods appointment; nor could any Sacrifice have ſo much as ſhadowed the way or means of our ſalvation, if God had not appointed it.

Fourthly, Conſider the purpoſe for which the Lord commanded Eliphaz, &c. to offer their Sacrifice, it was to make an atonement for their ſin.

Hence Obſerve, Sin muſt have a Sacrifice.

There was never any way in the World, from firſt to laſt, to help a ſinner but by a Sacrifice; and who was the Sacrifice? Surely Jeſus Chriſt was the Sacrifice; it was not the blood of Bulls and Goats, of Bullocks and Rams, that could take away ſin, as the Apoſtle argueth at large in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, theſe could never take away ſin, theſe only pointed at Jeſus Chriſt, who alone did it, by bearing our ſins, and by being made a Sacrifice for them. To typifie or ſhew this, we read in the Law of Moſes, that the ſin of the offender was laid upon the Sacrifice; and a Sacrifice for ſin, was called ſin by the Prophet, long before Chriſt came (*Dan.*9.24.) He ſhall make an end of ſin, that is, when Chriſt ſhall come in the fleſh, he ſhall make an end of all Sacrifices for ſin; and ſo the Apoſtle called it after Chriſt was come, and had ſuffered in the fleſh (2*Cor.*5.21.) He made him to be ſin, (that is, a Sacrifice for ſin) for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. The Sacrifice was called ſin, becauſe the ſin of the perſon who brought it, and in whoſe behalf it was offered, was laid upon the Sacrifice; there was as it were a tranſlation of the ſin, from the perſon to the Sacrifice. In which ſence Luther is to be underſtood, when he ſaid, Jeſus Chriſt was the greateſt ſinner in the World; not that he had any ſin in his nature, or any ſin in his life, but becauſe he had the ſins of all that are or ſhall be ſaved, laid upon him; as the Prophet ſpake (Iſa. 53.6.) The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all; or (as our Margin hath it) He hath made the iniquity of us all to meet on him. And as there is no atonement for ſin, but by a Sacrifice. So the Lord ordained the offering up of a whole burnt-offering for the taking away of ſin, that ſinners might ſee what they had deſerved, even to die; and not only ſo, but to be wholly burnt and conſumed in the fire of his wrath. Impenitent ſinners ſhall be conſumed in fire, that ſhall never be extinguiſhed, nor ever entinguiſh them; they ſhall abide in an ever-living death, or in an ever-dying life. They who reſt not upon the Sacrifice of Chriſt, once offered, muſt be a Sacrifice themſelves, always offered to the Juſtice and Wrath of God.

Here it may be queſtioned, why the Lord commanded them to offer ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams? What could the blood of ſeven do more than the blood of one?

I anſwer, Firſt; This being a great Sacrifice, poſſibly the Lord commanded it, thereby to intimate the greatneſs of their ſin. Two things chiefly ſhew the greatneſs of a ſin. Firſt, the greatneſs of the puniſhment laid upon the ſinner. Secondly, the greatneſs of the means uſed for the healing of that breach which ſin hath made.

I anſwer, Secondly, The number ſeven being a Symbol of perfection (as was ſaid before) figured the perfect Sacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt, who by one offering, hath for ever perfected them that are ſanctified (Heb.10.14.) A perfect number of Sacrifices was fitteſt to ſhadow the infinite perfection of that one Sacrifice, which makes, and which only makes all the comers thereunto perfect. For though a perſon under the Law having offered his Sacrifice, was no more reckoned guilty of that ſin by men; yet his Conſcience did ſtill accuſe him of, and charge him with ſin, and therefore Sacrifices were renewed (*Heb.*10.1,2.) nor could the accuſings of Conſcience be quieted, but by looking to Chriſt by faith, whom the Sacrifice ſhadowed, and the Sacrificer was to point at.

Fifthly, In that the Lord ſent Eliphaz and his two friends unto Job with their Sacrifice,

Obſerve, We muſt reconcile our ſelves to thoſe we have wronged, before we can look to be reconciled unto God, againſt whom we have ſinned, or to be accepted of him in any ſervice.

The counſel of Chriſt directs to this (*Matth.*5.23,24.) If thou bringeſt thy gift unto the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, leave there thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way; firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. This general command of Chriſt, is the ſame in effect, with what the Lord here long before gave particularly and perſonally to Eliphaz and his two friends; they muſt firſt go and be reconciled to Job, and then offer their Sacrifice. This the Apoſtle alſo gave in charge (1*Tim.*2.8.) I will therefore, that men pray every where, holding up holy hands; but how? without wrath and doubting. There are two things required, if we look to be accepted of God in any ſervice. Firſt, Faith. Secondly, Love or charity. There muſt be faith, elſe we cannot lift up holy hands without doubting: There muſt be love, elſe we cannot lift up holy hands without wrath. They who are ſuing for, and expecting favour and mercy from God, have need to diſcharge themſelves of all wrath and revenge towards man. With what face can any expect favour from God, who will not acknowledg wherein they have wronged man?

Sixthly, Obſerve, God is very tender of the credit of his faithful ſervants; he will not be reconciled, unleſs they are righted.

Job had been wronged, no man more, by the cenſures of his friends; and God was ſo tender of his honour and reputation, that his friends muſt make him reparation, before God will accept their Sacrifice. One reaſon why God is ſo tender of the credit of his ſervants, is, becauſe they are tender of his, and will undergo any wrong, rather than his Name ſhall be blaſphemed or wronged. As God will himſelf honour them, who honour him (1*Sam.*2.30.) ſo he will one time or other, ſome way or other, retrench and caſt back upon men, all that diſhonor which they have received from men, or cauſe them to take it off, and wipe them clean whom they have undeſervedly aſperſed.

Seventhly. Obſerve, God will humble proud and high ſpirits, and make them ſubmit to thoſe whom they have wronged.

There is a twofold ſubmiſſion, which is the duty of a Chriſtian. Firſt, to God (James 4.7.) Secondly, to man; and this is twofold.

Firſt, To thoſe that are over us, and above us, in power (*Rom.*13.1. *Tit.*3.1.) And thus not only are Subjects to ſubmit to Magiſtrates; but all of a lower degree, are to ſubmit to their ſuperiours, Servants to their Maſters, Wives to their Husbands, Children to their Parents.

Secondly, There is a ſubmiſſion to thoſe that are wronged by us; and though they be our inferiours, yet (in this ſenſe) we are to ſubmit to them, that is, acknowledg that we have wronged them. The Apoſtle James intimates ſuch a ſubmiſſion (*Chap.*5.16.) and the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks it plainly (*Eph.*5. 21.) Submitting your ſelves to one another in the fear of God. Here is a mutual ſubmiſſion, a ſubmiſſion in caſe of wrong (and doubtleſs that rule of Scripture is extendible to other caſes) not only of equals one to another, but of ſuperiours to inferiours. Our ſpirits like not this, we hardly ſubmit to thoſe that we have wronged; but there's no remedy, we muſt. Some ſay they will ſubmit to God, but they cannot ſubmit to man, they cannot ſtoop to that. Let ſuch remember, that without this ſubmiſſion, even to an inferiour whom we have knowingly wronged, or are made to know (which was the caſe here) that we have wronged, we cannot hopefully apply to God for peace and reconciliation.

Eighthly, Obſerve, They that are wronged by others, muſt forgive them their wrongs,

God ſent Eliphaz and his two friends to Job, not only that they ſhould acknowledg they had wronged him, but that Job might freely and fully teſtifie (ſo far as concerned him) his forgiveneſs of that wrong. As it is the duty of them that have wronged others to ſubmit to them in the acknowledgment of it, ſo they that are wronged, ought to forgive and receive them in that ſubmiſſion. We muſt forgive, as we look to be forgiven (*Mat.*6.12.) We cannot pray believingly, that God would forgive us the guilt of our iniquity committed againſt himſelf or others, unleſs we forgive others the injury which they have done us.

Ninthly, Obſerve, Good men are ready to give and take ſatisfaction in point of wrong.

Job's friends had done him wrong; and as they (good men) were ready to give ſatisfaction, ſo Job (good man) was as ready to take it. Many wrong others, but will give no ſatisfaction; many are wronged by others, and will take no ſatisfaction; nothing will quiet or appeaſe them. Job's friends and himſelf were highly to be commended, that they were willing to give, and he to take ſatisfaction. The Apoſtle urgeth this (*Eph.*4.26,27.) Be angry and ſin not, let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. They give up their hearts as lodging-chambers to the Devil, who let the Sun go down upon their wrath; therefore it followeth (*verſ.*31.32.) Let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil ſpeaking, be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt ſake hath forgiven you. They that know what it is to be forgiven by God, they that know what need they have continually of Gods forgiving grace and mercy, will be as ready to accept ſatisfaction, as any can be to give it. This was eminent in Job, as will appear further in opening the next words in this verſe, Go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt-offering,

And my ſervant Job ſhall pray for you.

How eminent Job was in prayer, and how available his prayers or interceſſions were for others, may be collected from that in the Prophet (*Ezek.*14. 14.) where he is joined with Noah and Daniel. Job being here called to pray for his friends, was put upon another piece of the Prieſtly Office. There were two parts of the Prieſtly Office, and Job is adorned with them both. Firſt, the Prieſt was to offer Sacrifice. Secondly, to pray for the people. Jeſus Chriſt filled up both theſe parts of the Prieſtly Office for us. Firſt, he offered himſelf a Sacrifice for us. Secondly, he interceded, yea, he ever liveth to make interceſſion for us (*Heb.*7.25.) Job, as in offering up a Sacrifice, ſo in praying for his faulty friends, was a type of Chriſt; My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you. But for what ſhould he pray in their behalf? Surely, that their ſin might be forgiven, and they find favour with God.

Verbum pertinet ad rem forenſem & judicialem; ſignificat orare vel deprecari more ejus qui ad judicem appellat, & illum ſupplex adit & precabundus. Coc.

The word here rendred to Pray for, is elegant and ſignificant, implying a forinſecal act, when an advocate in Court moves the Judg in behalf of an offender; ſo that when the Lord ſaith, My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, his meaning is, he ſhall deprecate the wrath and vengeance that your ſin hath deſerved, and intreat my favour for you, and ſeek your peace with me. My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a duty to pray for thoſe that have wronged us.

Not only is it a duty to forgive them, and be reconciled to them; but to pray for them, and heartily wiſh their good. The Apoſtle James having ſaid (*Chap.*5.16.) Confeſs your faults one to another; preſently adds, Pray for one another: Yea, Chriſt commands us to pray for the good, not only of thoſe that confeſs they have wronged us, and deſire reconciliation to us, but to pray for our enemies, that is, ſuch as ſtill hate us, and continue to contrive all the miſchief they can againſt us. It is a duty, not only to pray for them that acknowledg their fault, but for them alſo who go on in their fault againſt us; enemies do ſo. Bleſs them that curſe you, do good to them that hate you, pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you and perſecute you. Theſe are Chriſts, not only counſels, but commands (*Matth.*5. 44.) Even for them we ſhould pray, that God would pardon their ſin, turn their hearts, and give them repentance, which is the beſt we can pray for them.

Again, the Lord ſaith, My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you.

Hence Obſerve, Secondly, God undertakes and gives his word for a good man, that he will do his duty.

God having ſpoken to Job about this matter, undertook for his performance; My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, I will put it into his heart to do it. The Lord may very well be bound for a good man, that he ſhall do his duty, becauſe, as he hath promiſed, ſo he will help him to do his duty. Thus the Lord engaged for Abraham (*Gen.*18.19.) Shall I hide from Abraham the thing that I am doing? I know Abraham (I am well enough acquainted with Abraham) that he will command his Children and his Houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord. I know him, I will be ſurety for him. The Lord ſpeaks with confidence concerning his people, that they will do this and that, they will humble themſelves before him, and that they will forgive and pray for their enemies; he knows they will do all theſe things, becauſe he knows he hath given them power and a heart to do them. The Apoſtle was confident of the obedience of the Church of Galatia (Gal. 5.10.) I have (ſaith he) confidence in you, through the Lord, that you will be none otherwiſe minded. When the Apoſtle undertook that they ſhould do their duty, he did it reſpectively to a divine aſſiſtance and preſence with them; I have confidence in you (not in your ſelves, but) through the Lord, &c. but God undertakes abſolutely, My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you.

Thirdly, Note, The prayers and interceſſions of the righteous, prevail much with God.

The Lord having aſſured them that his ſervant Job ſhould pray for them, tells them in the next words, Him will I accept; which intimates, that his prayers ſhould have a great power with God for them (James 5.16.) The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much; and it doth ſo in a twofold reſpect.

Firſt, For himſelf. A godly man gets much good of God in his own caſe, by prayer.

Secondly, It prevails very much with God, in reſpect of others. 'Tis a great honour with which the Lord crowns the prayers of his faithful ſervants, that they prevail, not only for themſelves, but for others. Thus the Lord ſpoke to Abimelech (*Gen.*20.7.) Now therefore reſtore this man (meaning Abraham) his wife, for he is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee. And his prayer was anſwered. When the Lord had ſmitten Miriam with the Leproſie, Moſes cryed unto the Lord, ſaying, heal her now, O God, I beſeech thee; and ſhe was healed (Numb. 12. 13.) Thus Samuels prayer prevailed (1*Sam.*7.9.) And Samuel took a ſucking Lamb, and offered it up for a burnt-offering, and Samuel cryed unto the Lord for Iſrael (not for himſelf, but for Iſrael) and the Lord heard him. And in the twelfth Chapter of the ſame Book (verſ. 19.) the people begged prayers of Samuel; And all the people ſaid unto Samuel, pray for thy ſervants unto the Lord thy God, that we die not. And at verſ. 23. Samuel ſaid, As for me, God forbid that I ſhould ſin againſt the Lord, in ceaſing to pray for you, but I will teach you the good and the right way; and he prayed for them, and the Lord ſpared the people at that time. Not to pray for others, proceeds from uncharitableneſs: Not to deſire the prayers of others, proceeds either from ignorance, not knowing of what value the prayers of others, who are godly, are; or from pride, that we will not be beholden to others for their prayers. It is a great mercy to have the prayers of good men going for us.

Fourthly, Note, The prayers of others may prevail with God, when our own cannot.

Eliphaz and his two friends were good men, yet the Lord did not give anſwer to them, but to the prayers of Job. The prayers of others may be anſwered, when ours are not, in a double reſpect.

Firſt, Others may be in a better praying frame than our ſelves. Every one that is in a praying ſtate, is not always in a praying frame, eſpecially not in ſuch a praying frame as another may be in; another may be in a better praying frame, and ſo may prevail more for us, than we for our ſelves.

Secondly, Some other perſons may be more accepted with God, than we; ſome are, as it were, favourites with God. God ſhews favour to all his ſervants, but all his ſervants are not his favourites: Moſes was a favourite, Abraham was a favourite, God called him his friend; and Job was a favourite. The Lord ſhews favour to many, who yet are not his favourites. Kings and Princes ſhew favour to all their faithful ſubjects, yet but one (poſſibly) is a favourite. The Lords chief favourite, is his Son Jeſus Chriſt, he hath his ear continually: I knew, ſaid Chriſt (John 11.42.) that thou heareſt me always. Now, as Chriſt is a favourite above all men; ſo among good men, ſome have favour with God above others. A King will hear a favourite, when he will not a common perſon. Our Annotators upon this very place, tell us out of Mr. Fox, that when Sir John Goſtwich had falſely accuſed Arch-Biſhop Cranmer to King Henry the VIII, he would not hear him, nor be reconciled to him, till Cranmer himſelf, whom he had wronged, came and ſpake for him. Thus the Lord will not be reconciled to ſome, till the wronged party intercedes for them. Yet we muſt remember, that the power or effect of all our prayers, depends upon Jeſus Chriſt alone; by him it is, that any have acceſs to the father, and he is the way to the holieſt, the beloved, in whom God is well pleaſed, whom he heareth always, and through whom God heareth his beſt beloved favourites on Earth.

Fifthly, Obſerve, It is a great mercy to have the prayers of a good man going for us.

The Lord told not Eliphaz and his two friends, of any thing elſe that Job ſhould do for them, he only ſaith, Job my ſervant ſhall pray for you. If the Lord doth but ſtir up the heart of a Job, of a Moſes, of a Jacob, a Wreſtler in prayer, to pray for us, who knows what mercy we may receive by it! And therefore, when the Lord forbids his favourites to pray for a people, as ſometimes he doth, it is a ſign that ſuch are in a very ſad condition, yea, that their caſe is deſperate. Jeremiah was a mighty man with the Lord in prayer, and the Lord ſaid to him (Jer. 14.11.) Pray not to me for this people for good. Jeremiah was forward to pray for them, but the Lord ſtopt him, Pray no more; not that the Lord diſliked his prayer; but, becauſe he was reſolved not to forgive them, though he prayed for them, therefore he ſaid, pray not. The Lord would not let ſuch precious waters run waſt, as the prayers of Jeremiah were. They are in a remedileſs, ill condition, of whom the Lord ſaith, pray not for them. Of ſuch the Apoſtle ſpake (1 John 5.16.) If any man ſee his brother ſin a ſin not unto death, he ſhall ask and God ſhall give him life. There is a ſin unto death, I ſay not that he ſhall pray for it. The pardon of a ſin unto death is not to be prayed for. Every ſin deſerves death, but every ſin is not unto death: They who ſin ſo, are paſt prayer; and in how woful a plight are they, whoſe ſins are paſt prayers! They who have been much in prayer themſelves, and afterwards fall off from, or walk contrary unto their prayers, come at laſt to this miſerable iſſue, that either they give over praying for themſelves, or others are ſtopt from praying for them. And though an outward bar be not laid upon their friends prayer, as in Iſraels caſe, yet there may be a bar upon the ſpirit of ſuch as uſed to pray for them. It is a bad ſign, when the Lord ſhuts up the heart from praying for any one; and it is a ſign of mercy, when the Lord inlargeth the heart of any that are godly to pray for others.

Sixthly, Obſerve, Prayer for another doth not profit him, unleſs he be faithful himſelf.

I ground it upon the Text, Job ſhall pray for you; but you muſt carry a ſacrifice, which implied their faith; and they muſt carry a ſacrifice to Job, and that implied their repentance; and both implied that they prayed for themſelves alſo. It is in vain to offer a ſacrifice without faith and repentance (being in this frame) My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you. The paayer of faith prevails not for thoſe that go on in their unbelief and impenitency. Job prayed for his friends; and they repenting and believing, he prevailed for them. The reaſon why the Prophet Jeremiah, in the place before mentioned, as alſo (Chap. 7.16.) was commanded not to pray for that people, was, becauſe they were a hardned people in their ſins, and therefore his prayers could do them no good. Yea, the Lord told him (Chap. 15. 2.) that though not only he, but other great favourites joined in prayer for them, it ſhould do them no good. Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, my mind could not be towards this people. The reaſon why thoſe eminent favourites, and mighty men in prayer, could do no good, was (as was ſaid before) becauſe they were unbelieving, and hardned in their ſins, as appears upon the place. The Prophet Ezekiel ſpeaks the ſame thing (Chap. 14.14.) Though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job (this Job that we have put in the Text) were in it, they ſhould deliver but their own Souls by their righteouſneſs, ſaith the Lord. Job's prayers obtained good for his friends, but the Children of Iſrael were in ſuch a condition, that though Noah, Daniel, and Job were praying for them, they ſhould get no good by it; their ſins were ſo high, and their hearts ſo hard, that the prayers of the holieſt men in the World could not prevail with God for mercy.

Conjunctis precibus nihil impetratu impoſſibile eſt. Conjunctæ autem preces eſſe non poſſunt ubi eſt offenſio. Coc. vid.

It cannot be denied, but the prayers of a godly man may profit a wicked man, an unbeliever, an impenitent perſon, for his converſion to the faith, and the bringing of him to repentance; but they profit not any man, who as he hath not faith, ſo continues in his unbelief.

Yet, I grant, that the prayers of a believer may profit ſuch an unbeliever, as to the avoiding of ſome temporal evil, or as to the obtaining of ſome temporal good; as is clear in Abraham's prayer for Abimelech (Gen. 20.7.) But how much ſoever a godly man prayeth for the pardon of a wicked mans ſin, or the ſalvation of his Soul, he ſhall never be pardoned or ſaved, unleſs himſelf repent and believe. They who never pray in faith for themſelves, ſhall not get favour with God, by any prayer of faith made by others for them.

Now as from this, and ſuch like Scriptures, it appears, that the prayers of godly men, for good men here on Earth, are very pleaſing unto the Lord, and receive great anſwers: So they do abſurdly, who, from this Scripture infer, that the Saints departed pray for us, as if they knew or underſtood our condition; and they do more abſurdly, who live here on Earth, pray to the Saints in Heaven to pray for them. The Scripture ſpeaks nothing of prayers to departed Saints, nor of departed Saints praying for us; the Scripture ſpeaks only of the living on Earth, praying for thoſe that live on Earth. Job was alive in the Body, and ſo were thoſe three men, to whom the Lord ſaid, My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you.

The Lord having aſſured Eliphaz and his two friends, that Job would pray for them, giveth them incouragement to go and deſire his prayers, by a gracious promiſe.

For (ſaith he) him will I accept; and threatneth them in caſe they ſhould forbear, in the next words, Leſt I deal with you according to your folly, in that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, like my ſervant Job.

Firſt, Of the gracious promiſe, him will I accept. The Hebrew ſaith, his face will I lift up. Acceptation with God is the lifting up of the face of man; then man lifteth up his face with boldneſs when he is accepted with God. When God refuſed to accept Cain and his offering, his countenance fell, or was caſt down (Gen. 4.5.) Unleſs the Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon us, as David prayed (Pſal. 4.6.) we cannot with any comfort, much leſs with true confidence, lift up our face or countenance unto God. That's the ſignificancy of the word.

Him will I accept.] God is no accepter of perſons, as the word is often uſed in Scripture (*Deut.*10.17.) The Lord is a great God, mighty and terrible, which regardeth not perſons. It is the ſame phraſe in the Hebrew, with this in the Text, he lifteth not up faces, that is, the Lord doth not accept perſons upon any outward reſpect.

Firſt, The Lord doth not accept perſons for their perſonableneſs, as I may ſay; the Lord doth not delight in any mans legs, his delight is in them that fear him (Pſal.147.10,11.) he doth not accept men for their goodly ſtature, as he told Samuel, when he would needs have poured the oil upon the firſt-born of the Sons of Jeſſe (1*Sam.*16.7.) Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature, becauſe I have refuſed him: For the Lord ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. 'Tis the beauty of holineſs and integrity in the heart, not the beauty of fairneſs upon the face, with which God is taken; 'tis a lowly mind, not a high ſtature, which God accepts.

Secondly, The Lord is no accepter of perſons, as to the Nation or Country where they were born or live. Thus the Apoſtle Peter ſpake (Acts 10.35.) I perceive, that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but in every Nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. God doth not prefer Jews before Gentiles, Barbarians or Scythians: That a man had his birth in this or that Nation, neither helps nor hinders acceptation with God.

Thirdly, The Lord accepteth no mans [illegible] for his riches (Prov. 11. 4.) Riches profit not in the [illegible]ay of wrath. No mans perſon is acceptable to God for his purſe, or his penny, no not at all,

Fourthly, The Lord accepteth no mans perſon for his worldly greatneſs, honour and dignity; He poureth contempt upon Princes (Pſal.107.40.) The day of the Lord is againſt the Hills and Mountains (Iſa.2.14.) The great God regardeth not any man meerly for greatneſs; the Lord accepts no mans perſon upon theſe or any ſuch like accounts: He only accepts the perſons of thoſe that fear him, and do his will.

Suſcipit faciem Deus quando precantem exaudit.

The Lords acceptance of any perſon, in the ſenſe of this promiſe concerning Job, is, Firſt, To ſhew favour and maniſeſt affection to him. Secondly, To honour and highly eſteem him. Thirdly, (Which is here ſpecially intended) to anſwer his prayers, and grant his requeſts, not only for himſelf, but for others. When a perſon is once accepted, his prayers ſhall not be denied, nor ſuffer a repulſe. The Lord accepteth perſons, as a King the perſons of thoſe loyal Subiects, who come to intreat his favour and pardon for thoſe that have offended him, and rebelled againſt him; he grants their ſuit, and treats them fairly. In this ſenſe the Lord maketh promiſe to Eliphaz and his two friends, that he will accept Job.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, It is a very high favour and priviledg to be accepted of God.

Him will I accept, ſaith the Lord, of Job. This was a favour beyond all the favours, that follow after in the cloſe of the book, about the doubling of his eſtate. If Jacob (Gen.32.20.) was ſo taken with a hope of acceptance by his brother Eſau; Peradventure he will accept me; If when he was accepted by Eſau, he ſaid (*Chap.*33.10.) I have ſeen thy face, as though I had ſeen the face of God, and thou waſt pleaſed with me: Then, how much more ſhould we rejoyce in this aſſurance, that God hath accepted of us, and that he is pleaſed with us! If the Apoſtle (Rom. 15. 3.) prayed ſo earneſtly, and deſired others to ſtrive with him in prayer to God, that his ſervice, which he had for Jeruſalem, might be accepted of the Saints; then how much more ſhould we pray, that our ſervices may be accepted of God, and rejoyce when they are accepted! The Apoſtle made it his chief work, to get acceptation with God (2*Cor.*5.9.) Wherefore we labour, that whether preſent or abſent (that is, whether living or dying) we may be accepted with him; we are ambitious of divine acceptation. The word which we tranſlate labour, noteth a labouring after honour, which ambitious men labour much after, implying that to be accepted with the Lord is a very high honour, indeed the higheſt honour.

There is a two-fold acceptation. Firſt, Of our perſons. Secondly, Of our ſervices. The former is the ground of the latter, and Jeſus Chriſt is the foundation of both (*Eph.*1. 6.) He through glorious grace hath made us accepted in the beloved. Jeſus Chriſt is ſo dearly beloved of the father, that he is called, The Beloved, as if only beloved. The acceptation of our ſervices is often promiſed in Scripture, as a high favour (Exod. 28. 38. Ezek. 20. 40, 41. *Iſa.*56. 7.) This Moſes prayed for in the behalf of the Tribe of Levi, which Tribe was appointed to offer ſacrifice, and to pray for the people, (*Deut.*33.11.) Bleſs Lord his ſubſtance, and accept the work of his hands. What was the work of Levies hands? It was to offer ſacrifice, to which prayer and interceſſion was joined. That Levi, who had the Prieſthood fixed in the family of Aaron, ſhould be accepted in the work of his hands, was a bleſſing not only to himſelf, but to many more. This David prayed earneſtly for (*Pſal.*19. 14.) Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy ſight, O Lord, my ſtrength, and my redeemer. He put up a like prayer (Pſal. 119. 108.) Accept, I beſeech thee, the free-will-offerings of my mouth, O Lord. This was the prayer of Araunah for David (2*Sam.* 24.23.) The Lord thy God accept thee. So great a priviledg it is, for our perſons and ſervices, to be accepted with the Lord; that when once we have it, we may reioyce all our days (Eccleſ. 9. 7.) Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works. Solomon doth not mean it of a ſenſitive joy only, much leſs of any ſenſual joy, but of a gracious and ſpiritual joy. In this joy we may eat and drink, when our work is accepted; and our work is never accepted, till our perſons are.

Now, if it be ſo great a priviledge to be accepted with the Lord, how great a miſery is it not to be accepted? This inference floweth naturally from that great truth. And how great a miſery it is, not to be accepted of God, ſeveral Scriptures hold out. The Prophet (Amos 5.22.) declareth no other judgment upon that people but this, The Lord accepteth them not. And the ſame declaration is made by ſeveral other Prophets (Jerem. 14. 10, 12. Hoſ. 8. 13. Mal. 1. 8, 10.) Acceptance is our greateſt mercy, and non-acceptance our greateſt miſery; and that's the reaſon why the underſtanding and faithful ſervants of God are ſo ſtrict, or (as the World accounts it) preciſe and ſcrupulous, that they will not turn aſide, no not in thoſe things which are called ſmall matters, and of which many think God will take no notice. They deſire to be accepted of God in every thing, and becauſe they know (in ſome meaſure) what is acceptable to him, therefore they would do nothing, no, not the leaſt thing, which is unacceptable to him (Prov. 10. 32.) The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable. The lips are organs or inſtruments of ſpeech, not of knowledg; the underſtanding knoweth, the lips only ſpeak: Yet here Solomon aſcribes the work of the underſtanding to the lips; and this he doth, becauſe there is or ſhould be a great cognation, between the underſtanding and the lips; we ſhould ſpeak nothing but what we underſtand, we ſhould ſpeak only what we know, and according to our knowledg. The lips of the righteous have ſuch an intercourſe with their underſtanding, that their very lips may be ſaid to know what is acceptable, and therefore they ſpeak what is acceptable. It is ſaid of David, that he guided the people with the skilfulneſs (ſaith our) with the diſcretion (ſaith another tranſlation) with the underſtanding of his hands, ſaith the Original (*Pſal.*78.72.) The hand hath no more underſtanding, skill, or diſcretion ſeated in it, than the lips; yet becauſe David conſulted with his underſtanding, in what he did with his hand, it is ſaid, He guided them by the skilfulneſs, or diſcretion, or underſtanding of his hand. Thus the lips of the righteous underſtand and know what is acceptable; and they know that unleſs they have an aim to honour God in ſmall matters, yea, in all matters, they greatly diſhonour him, and ſo cannot be accepted with him at all. The excellency of a gracious heart, appears greatly when he maketh conſcience of doing the leaſt thing which he knows, yea, only fears will be unacceptable to God, or wherein he may run the hazard of this priviledg, his acceptation with him.

There are three things, which ſhew why it is ſo great a priviledg to be accepted with God, and why his ſervants are ſo careful not to do any thing that is unacceptable unto him.

Firſt, Becauſe, Once accepted with God and always accepted.

accepted. For though poſſibly a perſon accepted may have ſome frowns from God upon his uneven walkings, or ſinful actings; yet his ſtate of acceptation, continues firm in the main. The Lord doth not utterly caſt off his favourites, no, nor any whom he taketh into his favour, or a nearneſs with himſelf.

Secondly, If we are once accepted with God, he can make us accepted with men; and that, not only with good men (Rom. 14.18.) but, even with bad men. God can give us favour in the eyes of thoſe men, who have not an eye to ſee, that we are in his favour. Daniel, who was ſo careful to keep up his acceptation with God, That he purpoſed in his heart, not to defile himſelf with the portion of the Kings meat (Dan. 1.8,9.) Of him it is ſaid (*verſ.*6.) God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love, with the Prince of the Eunuchs. He, a conſcientious Jew, had great acceptation with him, who was an Idolatrous Heathen.

Thirdly, If once accepted of the Lord, we need not be much troubled, though we are reprobate to the World, though the World reject and caſt us off, yea, caſt us out. The Lords acceptation of us, will bear or may bear up our ſpirits, in the midſt of the Worlds reproaches, repulſes, and rejections.

Again, When the Lord ſaith, Him will I accept.

Obſerve, The Lord accepts ſome godly men more than others.

Job's three friends were godly men, queſtionleſs they were, yet they had not that acceptation with God which Job had. All that are godly have acceptation with God, but they have not all a like acceptation (Acts 10.35.) In every Nation, they that fear him and work righteouſneſs, are accepted with him: Which we muſt not take meerly for a moral or legal righteouſneſs, but as in conjunction with an Evangelical righteouſneſs. Now let them be who they will, that fear God and work righteouſneſs, they are accepted: But all are not equally accepted; him will I accept, ſaith the Lord concerning Job, with an Emphaſis; why was it ſo? Becauſe Job was one of the moſt eminent perſons for godlineſs, yea, the moſt eminent, at that time, upon the face of the whole Earth, as was ſhewed at the ſecond verſe of the firſt Chapter. Noah was a man highly accepted of the Lord above others, and he was righteous above others (*Gen.*7.1.) Thee (ſaith God) have I ſeen righteous before me in this Generation. Poſſibly there might be others righteous, but there was no man ſo righteous as Noah, and none ſo accepted as he.

And if it be enquired, who amongſt good men are moſt accepted, or accepted beyond other good men? I anſwer,

Firſt, They among good men are moſt accepted, who live moſt by faith. As without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, in any degree (*Heb.*11.6.) ſo they that live moſt by faith, pleaſe God moſt, or in the higheſt degree, and are moſt accepted by him. Abraham, who lived ſo much by faith, that he was called the father of the faithful, was ſo much accepted of God, that he is called The friend of God (Jam. 2.23.)

Secondly, Among godly men, they who are moſt upright in their walkings, who walk with a ſingle eye, and with a right foot, are moſt acceptable; ſuch a man was Job. The character given him (Chap. 1.1.) was, A man perfect and upright.

Thirdly, They that walk moſt humbly, are moſt acceptable unto God. For, as God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble (Jam.4.6.) ſo he ſheweth grace, that is, favour, or graceth and adorneth them with his favours. When one ſaid (*Mich.*6.6.) Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord? &c. The Prophet anſwered (*verſ.*8.) He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? That is, as he requireth of thee to exerciſe juſtice toward all men, and mercy to the poor, or any in miſery, ſo to walk humbly with himſelf; that is, to acknowledg thou haſt need of the righteouſneſs of a Saviour, and of the mercy of a God, how much righteouſneſs and mercy ſoever thou haſt exerciſed towards others. When we are low in our own eyes, then we are higheſt in Gods eye; when we, as it were, reject our ſelves, and all that we have done, as unworthy of any acceptation, then are we moſt accepted of the Lord.

Fourthly, Among believers, they are moſt accepted with God, who are moſt fruitful in their lives, and do moſt good in their places, and according to their opportunities. The Lord loveth a fruitful Chriſtian. Many are barren trees, unfruitful ground, little can be ſeen of good which they do; theſe are a burden to God. But, when a Chriſtian (as it is ſaid of Chriſt, Acts 10.38.) goeth about doing good; when a Chriſtian, as Chriſt giveth the account of his own life (John 17.4.) Glorifieth God on Earth, and finiſheth the work which God gives him to do, O how acceptable is ſuch a one to God! And therefore,

Let us labour to know, and do what is acceptable to the Lord. The Apoſtle would have us prove what is acceptable to the Lord (Eph.5.10.) that is, Firſt, ſtudy the Word, to find out what is acceptable to the Lord. Secondly, approve and embrace with our whole hearts, what we find to be ſo, Thirdly, practice and do what we have ſo approved or embraced. And becauſe the Scripture ſpeaks of ſome duties which are ſpecially acceptable to the Lord, I ſhall inſtance the Point in a few particulars.

Firſt, Doing right to every one (*Prov.*21.3.) To do Juſtice and Judgment, is more acceptable to the Lord than Sacrifice. This is true, or may be affirmed of Juſtice, both commutative and diſtributive. To do Juſtice in our dealings with men, called commutative Juſtice, is more acceptable than Sacrifice, that is, than any outward worſhip given to God without this. 'Tis true alſo, of diſtributive Juſtice, which is done by Magiſtrates in rewarding good men, and in puniſhing them that do evil; theſe works of Juſtice alſo, are more acceptable to the Lord than Sacrifice.

Secondly, The true worſhip and ſervice of God, which the Apoſtle calls Sacrifice, is highly acceptable to God (Rom. 12.1.) I beſeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy, acceptable to God; which is your reaſonable ſervice. Theſe firſt Table-duties, which in conſort with thoſe former ſecond Table-duties, are highly honourable, and therefore cannot but be highly acceptable to the Lord. Sacrifice to God, without Juſtice to man, is meer hypocriſie; Juſtice to man, without Sacrifice to God, is no better than Heatheniſh morality: Both united, are the beauty of Chriſtianity.

Thirdly, To ſerve Chriſt, that is, to aim at the honouring, as well as the enjoying of Chriſt, with our Goſpel-priviledges and liberties, is exceeding acceptable. The Apoſtle having ſaid (*Rom.*14.17.) The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and join in the holy Ghoſt, preſently adds (*verſ.*18.) He that in theſe things (that is, in righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt) ſerveth Chriſt, is acceptable unto God; that is, this ſhews he is a perſon accepted with God. The doing of things purely acceptable to God, is a clear and ſtrong argument of our acceptation with him.

Fourthly, To do any good we do, be it little or much, with a willing mind, is very acceptable to God (2*Cor.*8.12.) If there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath. Though it be little that we have, yet if the mind be free, if there be much of the will in it, though but little of the purſe (if we have no more to give, or give according to what we have) if there be much of the heart in it, though but little of the hand (if we do according to the power that is in our hand) the Lord hath a very great reſpect to it.

Fifthly, To be much in prayer for others, eſpecially for thoſe that are in power over us, is very acceptable to the Lord (1 Tim. 2.2, 3.) I exhort that ſupplications, &c. be made for all men, for Kings, and all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlineſs and honeſty; for this is good and acceptable in the ſight of God our Saviour. As it is good and acceptable in the ſight of God, that we ſhould lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlineſs and honeſty, under Kings and all in authority; ſo that we ſhould pray for Kings, and thoſe that are in authority.

Sixthly, When Children do well requite their Parents; that (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 *Tim.*5.4.) is acceptable unto God.

Seventhly, To ſuffer patiently for well-doing, is greatly pleaſing unto God (1 Pet. 2.20.) In a word, they among good men are moſt acceptable of God, who are moſt zealous in doing any thing in a right manner, which for the matter is acceptable unto God.

Obſerve, Thirdly, As the Lord accepteth ſome godly godly men more than others, ſo he accepteth ſome godly men for others.

The Lord doth not ſpeak here of accepting Job ſtrictly for himſelf, but of his acceptation in the behalf of his friends, Him will I accept, that is, for you; I will be intreated by him, I will not give you the honour to be intreated by you, but to him I give it, I will be intreated by him. The Prophet Eliſha ſaid to the King of Iſrael (2 Kings 3. 14.) Were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor ſee thee; he would not vouchſafe that bad King a look, but for the reſpect he bare to good Jehoſhaphat. And it is a truth, that God would not have ſo much reſpect to ſome good men, were it not for the ſake of ſome others, who are better. Yet, that the Lord accepts one mans perſon more than others, or one mans perſon for another, is primarily and principally, in and for the ſake of Jeſus Chriſt. Job had acceptation with God more than his friends, and for his friends; he had the former by his being in Chriſt, and the latter as he was a figure of Chriſt. No mans perſon, no mans work is accepted of, otherwiſe than in relation to Chriſt. The Apoſtle affirms this fully (Eph. 1. 6.) He hath made us accepted in the Beloved. Chriſtians are beloved, but Chriſt only is the beloved: We are accepted in him, the beloved, as to our ſelves; and 'tis in the beloved that any are accepted more than others, or for others.

Take this Inference from the whole.

The Lord accepted Job praying for others; then he will accept a good man praying upon right grounds, and for right ends, againſt another.

It is dangerous to ſtand in the way of their prayers, who are accepted of God. That man is more ſafe, againſt whom a thouſand are acting, than he againſt whom any one godly man upon a juſt ground is praying. The Lord hath done great things againſt evil men, upon the prayers of the faithful, as well as he hath done great things for good men at their prayer. David by one ejaculatory petition, ſpoiled the plot of Achitophel; the Lord, according to that ſhort prayer, turned his counſel into fooliſhneſs, and ſo overturned the whole deſign laid againſt his ſervant David. Thus far of the promiſe which the Lord gave Eliphaz and his two friends for their encouragement, to go unto Job and intreat him to offer up a burnt-offering, and to pray for them, for him will I accept.

Now followeth a threat, in caſe they did not:

Leſt I deal with you according to your folly.

As if the Lord had ſaid, Do not ſlight this advice that I give you, no, nor forſlow it, make haſt to make your addreſs to Job; I will accept him, and I tell you, I will not accept you alone; therefore make haſt, and do as I have commanded, elſe

I ſhall deal with you according to your folly.

There is ſome difference in the reading of theſe words.

Firſt, Some read, Leſt I do or act folly to you. But how can the Lord do or act folly towards any? We may expound this Tranſlation, by that (Pſal. 18. 26.) where David ſaith of the Lord, With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure, and with the froward or perverſe, thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward or perverſe. But how doth the Lord ſhew himſelf froward with thoſe that are froward? There is no frowardneſs in the Lord, he is always in a compoſed and ſedate frame, infinitely beyond any paſſion or perturbation: The meaning is only this, The Lord will deal with men according to what they are; the actings and effects of his providence ſhall be towards a froward man, as if he were froward. If a man will deal perverſely with God, he will deal with him as if he were perverſe; and with the pure, God will ſhew himſelf pure, that is, he will carry it purely towards them; they ſhall receive good, who are and do good. Thus here, go, ſaith the Lord, and do as I bid you, Leſt I deal folly to you. In the Hebrew Language, to do kindneſs with one, is the ſame as to exerciſe or ſhew kindneſs to him. That form of ſpeech is uſed, Gen. 20. 13. & 24. 49. & 40. 14. And ſo to do folly with one, is to ſhew or exerciſe folly to him. The Lord doth folly to them that do folly; that is, he makes them ſee by his wiſe doing, how fooliſhly they have done.

Others expreſs it thus, Leſt I deal fooliſhly with you, or, folly to you; that is, leſt I do that which may be accounted fooliſhneſs in me. You having appeared Advocates in my cauſe, and pleaded for me ('tis folly to pay any man with unkindneſs for the ſervice he hath done us.) Well (ſaith the Lord) look to it, I will not accept you, but deal folly to you, or fooliſhly with you, in the ſenſe of ſome men (poſſibly) but wiſely in my own. The Lord is always to be admired, in his wiſdom, holineſs, and in the ſerenity of his Spirit; yet in the opinion of the wiſe men of this World, he may ſeem to deal fooliſhly, or do folly.

Secondly, The words may be rendred, Leſt I do that which may be diſgraceful to you. Thus the Chaldee paraphraſe readeth, Leſt I put a diſgrace, or an affront upon you, and make it appear, to your ſhame, that you have not carried it aright in this matter, but have been ſhamefully out. The word here uſed, is ſeveral times uſed in Scripture, to note the defiling or diſgrace of a thing (Nahum. 3. 6.) I will caſt abominable filth upon thee, and I will make thee vile, that is, I will diſgrace thee, and (as it followeth) I will ſet thee for a gazing ſtock. So (Micah. 7. 6.) when the Lord would ſhew the exceeding ſinfulneſs of thoſe times, he ſaith, Truſt ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide, keep the door of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy boſom; for the Son diſhonoureth the Father; it is this word, the Son diſgraceth the Father, he dealeth with his Father as if he were a Nabal, a very fool. When a Son knoweth not his diſtance, nor performeth his duty, he diſhonoureth his Father. The Prophet (Jer. 14. 21.) ſpeaks in a way of deprecation. Do not abhor us, for thy name ſake, do not diſgrace the throne of thy glory. The Lord is ſometimes ſo angry with his people, that he even caſteth dirt upon the throne of his glory, that is, upon his Church, in and by which he ſhould be glorified, as upon his Throne. The Lord diſgraceth his Church, the throne of his glory, when his Church diſgraceth him, and diſhonours his glorious name (Deut. 32. 15.) Jeſurun waxed fat, and kicked (that is, Iſrael, the Church was waxen fat; the Lord fed Jeſurun his Church to the full, they had not a lean ſervice of it: But what did Jeſurun?) he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation. The word which we Tranſlate, he lightly eſteemed, is the word of the Text: Now when Jeſurun did lightly eſteem or diſgrace the Lord, he ſoon after diſgraced Jeſurun, his Church, The throne of his glory. This is a good ſenſe of the words, do as I direct, leſt I put a diſgrace upon you. Thus folly is put for the puniſhment of folly, as ſin often, for the penal effects and fruits of ſin; as 'tis ſaid (1 Kings 13. 34.) This thing became ſin to the Houſe of Jeroboam, even to cut it off.

Our reading ſaith, Leſt I deal with you according to your folly; that is, according to your ſin, and the hard cenſures which you have given of my ſervant Job, and, as it followeth, In that you have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right. Theſe things have been your folly; and if you do not ſpeedily repair with your ſacrifice to Job, and get him to pray for you, what you can do your ſelves, will not make amends for your folly, nor mend this breach, but, I will deal with you according to your folly, you ſhall taſte of the fruit of your doings; the reward of your hands, or of your tongues, ſhall be given to you. That's the general ſence of our Tranſlation; as if the Lord had ſaid, Leſt I make you underſtand by your ſad experiences, by the puniſhments and chaſtiſements laid upon you, that you have done very fooliſhly, and were greatly miſtaken in your apprehenſions of me, and of my providences concerning Job. Or thus, ye have declared much folly in the management of this matter with my ſervant Job, ye have offended againſt the common Laws of friendſhip and humanity, inſulting over a man in miſery; and your folly hath been greater, while, againſt the Laws of piety, ye have judged of a mans holineſs, by his outward unhappineſs, and have cenſured him as a bad man, becauſe he hath in this World endured ſo much evil. This hath been your ſin, ye have in this dealt fooliſhly with my ſervant Job; therefore haſten to him, and do as I have ſaid, Leſt I deal with you according to your folly.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sin is folly.

And not only is it ſimple folly, which a man committeth for want of wit, or becauſe he hath little underſtanding (what a man doth for want of wit and underſtanding, is ſimple folly) but ſin is wicked folly, which is the abuſe of wit, and parts, and gifts, yea, the overflowing of luſt. And though we cannot charge theſe men, that they did intentionally uſe their wit and parts to grieve Job, yet it proved ſo; though it was not the end or deſign of them that ſpake, yet it was the iſſue of their ſpeech; they did him a great deal of wrong, and doubtleſs, Satan ſtirred much, or provoked them to uſe their parts and gifts to imbitter the ſpirit of the poor man, and God left them to do it. This was their folly; and all ſuch actings or ſpeakings are no better, nor do they deſerve better or ſofter language. This word folly, is often applied in Scripture, to ſin, eſpecially to great ſins. Another word is uſed in the Proverbs of Solomon; but in ſeveral other places, ſin is expreſſed by this (Gen. 34. 7.) When that great affliction fell upon Jacob, the raviſhing of Dinah, her brethren came home very wroth, ſaying, He hath committed folly in Iſrael. So (Judges 19. 23. & 20. 6.) the abuſing of the Levites Concubine is called the committing of folly. Whoredom is expreſſed by folly (Deut. 22. 21.) And this word, with reference (I conceive) to the ſin of whoredom, which is ſpoken of in that place, is Tranſlated villany (Jer. 29. 23.) All ſin is folly, eſpecially any great ſin is ſo. For,

Firſt, It is a folly to hurt our ſelves. No man can hurt us, if we do not hurt our ſelves by ſin. The Apoſtle Peter ſaith (1 Epiſt. 3. 13.) Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? 'Tis ſtrange, that any ſhould. Though it be true enough that many have had, not only a will to harm them that follow good, but have actually done them many and great outward harms; yet this is a great truth, none can indeed harm them that follow good, becauſe all harms turn to their good. Nothing can hurt us but our ſin.

Secondly, Sin is folly, for in ſinning we ſtrive with one that is too hard for us. Do we (ſaith St. Paul, 1 Cor. 10. 23.) provoke the Lord to jealouſie? (are we ſo ſimple?) are we ſtronger than he?

Thirdly, It is folly to do that by which we can get no good, that's the part of a fool (Rom. 6. 21.) What fruit have ye of thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? What have ye got by them? Have ye made any gains or earnings to boaſt of? The end of thoſe things is death; and is it not folly to begin that which ends in death, and that a never-ending, an eternal death.

Fourthly, It is folly to ſin, for by that, at beſt, we run a hazard of our beſt portion, for fading pleaſures, and periſhing profits. If we have any pleaſure by ſin, it is but pleaſure for a ſeaſon, and that a very ſhort one too. What a fooliſh thing is it to venture things that are incorruptible, for periſhing things? It were a great folly for a man to venture Gold againſt graſs: They do infinitely more fooliſhly who ſin againſt the Lord; for all that they can get by it, is not ſo much, to what they hazard, as graſs to Gold (Matth. 16. 26.) What is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul? Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his Soul? As all fleſh is graſs, ſo all that fleſh luſteth after is no better. What kind of Merchants, what kind of Exchange-men are they, that will traffick or truck away their Souls, for the profits or pleaſures of ſin? And 'tis for one of theſe that moſt, if not all men, traffick away their Souls.

Secondly, Obſerve, When God dealeth moſt ſeverely with ſinners, he dealeth juſtly with them.

What rod ſoever he layeth upon their backs, what ſhame, what poverty, what ſickneſs he afflicts them with, It is but according to their folly, they have but their own, they have no reaſon to complain. The Prophet told the people of Iſrael, as one man, when under grievous afflictions (Jerem. 4. 18.) Thy ways and thy doings, have procured theſe things unto thee: Thou haſt no reaſon to complain, for thy puniſhment is of thy own procurement, that is, thy ſin is viſible in thy puniſhment, thou eateſt but the fruit of thy own doings, how bitter ſoever it is. Another Scripture ſaith (Numb. 32. 23.) Your ſin ſhall find you out, that is, you ſhall ſuffer according to what you have done, and reap what ye have ſowed. And is it not folly to ſow to the (corrupt) fleſh, when of the fleſh we ſhall reap corruption (Gal. 6. 8.) The fleſh is a corrupt thing, and can yield us no better a thing than it is (the effect is like the cauſe) corruption, that is, a miſerable condition both here and hereafter, now and for ever.

Thirdly, Note, The Lord will not paſs by, nor ſpare, no not a godly man, when he ſinneth and repenteth not.

All this is included in the going of theſe men to Job. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will puniſh you Eliphaz, and Bildad, and Zophar for your folly, unleſs ye repent. They that are in a ſtate of grace, cannot expect favour from the Lord, unleſs they turn from their ſin, and give him glory by repenting and believing. Good men doing evil may ſuffer for it, as well as the worſt of men. The Lord will ſee a work of repentance and ſelf-humbling, a work of faith, looking to Chriſt the ſacrifice, elſe he will deal with them, even with them (as he threatned theſe good men) according to their folly.

But what was the folly of Eliphaz and his two friends, for which the Lord threatned to deal ſo ſeverely with them? The latter part of the verſe tells us, what God accounted and called their folly.

In that ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right.

The Lord had told them as much at the ſeventh verſe, My wrath is kindled againſt you, becauſe ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right. Here the Lord pointeth them to their ſin again, and layeth his finger afreſh upon the ſore.

But why doth he ſo?

Take theſe three reaſons why. Probably the Lord repeated theſe words,

Firſt, To ſhew that he was very ſenſible of their ſin, in ſpeaking amiſs of him, and very angry with them for it. They provoked the Lord much, when they meaſured him, as it were by themſelves, or by their own mete-wand, in his ways of Judgment, and procedure with Job; and therefore they muſt hear of it a ſecond time, or (as we ſay) at both ears.

Secondly, The Lord telleth them again of it, that he might faſten the ſenſe of their ſin more upon them. We very hardly take the impreſſion of our follies and failings, we are ready to let the thoughts of them wear off and ſlip from us; they abide not, but glide away as water from a ſtone, or from the ſwans-back, unleſs fixed by renewed mindings: And for this reaſon the Lord repeateth the mention of ſin ſo often, in the ears of his people, by the miniſtry of his word, that the evil of it may more fully appear to them, or that they may the more clearly ſee, and the better know how bad, how baſe, how fooliſh a thing it is to ſin againſt him.

Thirdly, I conceive, the Lord repeated theſe words, to confirm the Judgment which he had given before concerning them in thoſe words, Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right. As if the Lord had ſaid, that which I ſaid before, I ſay again, I do not change my opinion, either concerning you or my ſervant Job; and therefore, I ſay it once more (the repeating of a matter is for the confirmation of it, as Joſeph told Pharaoh about the doubling of his dream) Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right,

Quicquid in divino colloquio repetitur, robuſtius confirmatur. Greg. lib. 35. moral. c. 8.

Like my ſervant Job.] Theſe words alſo are a repetition, yea, a triplication, and more than ſo, this is the fourth time, that the Lord hath called Job his ſervant, in the compaſs of two verſes, three times in this eight verſe, and once in the ſeventh.

But what ſhould be the meaning of this? Why did the Lord call Job his ſervant ſo often, even four times, as it were in one breath?

I anſwer, Firſt, It intimates that Job was the Lords ſteady ſervant, that what he was at firſt he was then at laſt, and what he had been long ago he was ſtill. Some have been called the ſervants of God, who have given it over in the plain field; but here the Lord calleth Job his ſervant, over and over, four times over, as being his ſure ſervant.

Secondly, It was to ſhew that as Job retained the ſame duty and reſpect to the ſervice of God, ſo God retained the ſame opinion of Job, and of his ſervice then as at firſt.

Thirdly, The Lord in repeating this relational title, ſervant, ſo often, would aſſure us that he knew not how (if I may ſpeak ſo) to ſpeak more honourably of him. The Lord gave no other title to Moſes (Numb. 12. 7.) nor to Caleb (Numb. 14. 24.) nor to David (2 Sam. 7. 5, 8.) The Lord did not ſpeak this ſo often, becauſe he wanted other titles to give him, or becauſe he had not variety of phraſes to expreſs himſelf by, but as if he knew not where to find a more honourable title. I grant that title of relation, Son, is more noble, and more endearing; but that is not at all ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament, nor is it given to any particular perſon in the New. Believers, as to their ſtate, or all the Sons of God; but no one believer is ſpoken, either to, or of, under this title, Son. The Apoſtle Paul ſtill called him ſelf only a ſervant of God. He that is the Lords ſervant, is the beſt of free-men. We have enough to glory in, when we are his ſervants. The Hiſtory reports of the French King, That the Ambaſſador of the King of Spain repeating many great titles of his Maſter; the King of France commanded this only to be mentioned of him, King of France, King of France; implying, that this ſingle title King of France, was as honourable as that large roll of titles given the King of Spain. Thus the Lord calleth Job his ſervant, his ſervant, his ſervant, to ſhew that all honour is wrapt up in this word, A ſervant of God.

Fourthly, This repetition may ſignifie, That Job had been a very great, good, and faithful ſervant to the Lord; not only a ſervant, but a laborious and profitable ſervant to the Lord; ſo the Scripture calls thoſe who are laborious in his ſervice, though at beſt, as to the Lord, we are unprofitable ſervants, nor can any be profitable unto him.

Fifthly, The Lord multiplieth this title upon him, becauſe whatſoever a godly man doth, is ſervice to the Lord. This word ſervice is comprehenſive of all duties; to hear the word is, to ſerve the Lord; to pray, to faſt, to give alms, is to ſerve the Lord, all is ſervice to the Lord.

Job was every way a ſervant of the Lord.

Firſt, As he was a Ruler. To rule well in a family is to ſerve the Lord; to rule Nations is to ſerve the Lord much more. Job was a Ruler, and he ruled well in both capacities, as was ſhewed in opening the Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, and Thirty-firſt Chapters.

Secondly, Job was a great ſervant of the Lord, as he was a worſhipper.

Thirdly, Job was a great ſervant of the Lord, as he was a Sacrificer; he had the honour of the prieſt-hood.

Fourthly, Job was great ſervant of the Lord, as a teacher of the truth; he had inſtructed many, as Eliphaz acknowledged (Chap. 4. 3.) And as he was a great ſervant of the Lord in teaching the truth, ſo in oppoſing error; he ſtood firm to his own opinion (the truth) againſt the tenent of his friends.

Fifthly, Job ſerved the Lord as he was a ſufferer. To ſuffer is very great ſervice, eſpecially (as he did) to ſuffer greatly. We ſerve the Lord as much with his croſs upon our backs, as with his yoke upon our necks, or his burden upon our ſhoulders. Job was a great ſervant of the Lords, as in holding forth the doctrine of the croſs, or maintaining that God afflicts his choiceſt ſervants; ſo in bearing the croſs himſelf.

Sixthly, Job was a great ſervant of the Lord in praying for his friends, and in being ſo willing to be reconciled to them: and therefore, the Lord having had ſo many ſervices of him, and ſo many ways, repeateth, my ſervant Job, my ſervant Job, as if he could not ſay this word often enough, My ſervant Job.

Thus we have the Lords command or charge given to Eliphaz and his two friends, what they muſt do for the quenching of that fire which was kindled in his breaſt againſt them, for their folly in dealing with his ſervant Job. How they anſwered that command, will appear in the next words.

Verſe 9. So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, went, and did according as the Lord commanded them: The Lord alſo accepted Job.

This verſe holds out the obedience of Eliphaz and his two friends, to the charge and command which the Lord gave them in the eighth verſe; where the Lord ſaid to theſe three men, Take to you ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams, and go to my ſervant Job, and offer up for your ſelves a burnt offering, &c. This Text anſwereth that command, they went, and did according as the Lord commanded them. Their obedience to the Lords commanded is deſcribed three ways.

Firſt, By the ſpeedineſs of it; They went.

Secondly, By the exactneſs of it; They went; and did according as the Lord commanded.

Thirdly, By the good iſſue and fruit of it; The Lord alſo accepted Job.

So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, went.

Theſe were the three perſons who had to do with Job in that long conteſt opened in the body of this Book; theſe are the perſons againſt whom the Lords wrath was kindled, becauſe they had not ſpoken of him the thing that was right, as his ſervont Job; theſe were the perſons to whom the Lord gave command to bring their ſacrifice to Job, and offer it for themſelves, that reconciliation might be made; theſe perſons went, all three went: As all three were wrapt up in one fault, as all three were in the ſame ſin, ſo they all three joined together and agreed in their obedience to the command of God, and in repentance for their ſin and faultineſs.

They went.] Having received a command to go, they did not tarry and ſtay to conſider whether they ſhould go or ſtay, they did not put in any demur to the matter, but went; which implyeth, firſt (as was ſaid) the ſpeedineſs of their obedience, they went preſently; ſecondly, the willingneſs of their obedience, their minds were in the work; as well as their bodies; thirdly, the cheerfulneſs of their obedience, they went as if they had been to take a pleaſing or pleaſant Journey. They went; and what did they? They went

And did according as the Lord commanded them.

Their obedience was not only ſpeedy, and willing, and cheerful, but exact. Theſe words, They did according as the Lord commanded them, yield us a great example of full, of compleat obedience; they not only did what was commanded, but they did it as it was commanded, yea, and they did it becauſe it was commanded, for that muſt come in to make up the fulneſs of our obedience. Here is then a great example of humility, of modeſty, of meekneſs, and of ſubmiſſion to the will of God, They went and did according as the Lord commanded them. What was that? They brought their ſacrifice, firſt, for kind, and ſecondly, for number, as the Lord had commanded them: The Lord commanded them to bring Bullocks and Rams; they brought them: The Lord commanded them to bring ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams; they brought them as the Lord commanded, both for kind and for number.

Singulare exemplum docilitatis & modeſtiæ, ut qui etiam nec improbitate nec malevolentia ſed per imprudentiam peccarunt. Bez.

Secondly, They brought them to Job. The Lord ſaid, Go to my ſervant Job; they went to Job according as the Lord commanded them.

Thirdly, We muſt ſuppoſe they intreated Job to undertake the Office of a Reconciler, of a Mediator, of a Prieſt, between God and them, according as the Lord commanded. Though this piece of their ſubmiſſion and obedience be not expreſſed, yet it is intimated and implyed; nor could it be omitted, it being not only a part, but the principal part, of that duty which the Lord laid upon them. Thus in all things they ſubmitted and were obedient according to the command of the Lord.

Firſt, In that we have all three named here in this matter of obedience; Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, went,

> Obſerve, It is very good in it ſelf, and very pleaſing to God, when they who have joined in any ſin or miſcarriage towards himſelf or others, join readily together in ſhewing their ſorrow and repentance for it.

It was a bleſſed ſight to ſee thoſe three men coming as one man about this duty, not one of them drawing back, not one of them putting in any plea againſt the command of God. There are three things wherein it is very pleaſant to behold the people of God joining in one.

Firſt, When they join or are one in Opinion and Judgment, when they all think the ſame thing, and are of one mind in the truth.

Secondly, When they join together and are one in affection, when they are all of one heart, though poſſibly they are not all of one mind, or, when they meet in affection, though not in opinion, (Pſal. 133.1.) Behold how good and how pleaſant it is, for brethren to dwell together in unity! And when David had ſpoken admiringly of this goodly ſight, he ſpake declaratively concerning the goodneſs of it (verſ. 2.) It is like the precious ointment upon the head: 'Tis ſo, firſt, for the ſweetneſs of it; 'tis ſo, ſecondly, for the diffuſiveneſs of it (as followeth) that ran down upon the beard, even Aarons beard, that went down to the skirts of his Garments.

Thirdly, (which is the matter in the Text) is a bleſſed thing to ſee them joining together in duty, either as duty is conſidered,

Firſt, In doing that which is good; or, when, as the Apoſtles word is (2 Cor. 6. 1.) they are (among themſelves) workers together in any good work, we ſay (to fill up the Text) workers together with God. That's a bleſſed ſight indeed, when we join with God, and God joineth with us in his work: It is alſo a bleſſed ſight, when all the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, and any as members of Jeſus Chriſt, join in any good work, in this eſpecially, to beſeech all we have to do with, that they receive not the grace of God in vain.

Secondly, In turning from evil, and putting iniquity far from them; in praying for the pardon of ſin, and making their peace with God. In this work the three in the Text joined together. 'Tis a good work to turn away from evil, eſpecially when all who are concerned in it join in it. A great mourning is propheſied (Zech. 12. 11, 12, 13.) And the Land ſhall mourn every Family apart; the Family of the Houſe of David apart, and their Wives apart; the Family of the Houſe of Nathan apart, and their Wives apart; the Family of the Houſe of Levi apart, and their Wives apart, &c. Here's a great mourning with a turning from ſin propheſied of, as alſo the manner of it; Every Family ſhall mourn apart: But though they ſhall mourn apart, yet they ſhall all join in mourning; a whole Family ſhall mourn apart, not a part of a Family; and as the whole of a Family ſhall mourn, ſo all the Families ſhall mourn and repent, and ſeek reconciliation to God, as if they were but one Family, yea, but one perſon. As to join in ſin, and to be brethren in iniquity, is the worſt of unions, indeed a combination againſt God; ſo to join as brethren in mourning for ſin, and repenting of our iniquities, is a bleſſed union, and highly pleaſing unto God.

Secondly, In that it is ſaid, They went and did as the Lord commanded,

> Obſerve, When the Lord commandeth we muſt ſpeedily obey.

We muſt make no excuſe, no delay, we may not diſpute the commands of God, nor may we at all excuſe our ſelves from doing the commands of God: Theſe men did not ſo much as deſire to be excuſed; they ſaid not, it is true, we have failed, but it was through ignorance, or we had a good meaning in what we ſaid, we intended Job no hurt; may we not then be ſpared this coſt and trouble? We hear of none of this, but preſently they did as the Lord commanded. Though the command of the Lord be hard and very unpleaſing to fleſh and blood, yet we muſt ſpeedily obey it. The command which theſe men received was to fleſh and blood a hard command. Is it not hard to fleſh and blood,

Firſt, To confeſs that we have erred, and are out?

Secondly, Is it not hard to fleſh and blood? Goeth it not againſt the grain, to ſubmit to one whom we have wronged?

Thirdly, Is it not hard to fleſh and blood, to honour whom we have reproached and thought light of? All theſe are hard meat to fleſh and blood, and we can hardly digeſt them (as was toucht before) yet theſe men without diſputes and delays went about the work. Abraham received a hard command from God, a far harder command to fleſh and blood than theſe men received: For, Firſt, They received a command to go and offer Bullocks and Rams in Sacrifice; but Abraham was commanded to offer his Son in Sacrifice. Secondly, He was to offer his only Son; that was harder. Thirdly, He was to offer his only Son Iſaac, whom he loved. A man may have an only Son, who is a vexation and a trouble to him: But as he was a Son, and an only Son, ſo a Son whom Abraham greatly loved; yet God layed this hard and grievous command upon him, Go and offer up thy Son, thine only Son Iſaac, whom thou loveſt, upon one of the Mountains that I ſhall ſhew thee (Gen. 22. 2.) When Abraham had received this command from God, to offer up his Son for a Sacrifice, as theſe had received a command to offer up Beaſts in Sacrifice; what did Abraham? He roſe up early in the morning (ſaith the Text) and ſadled his Aſs, and took two of the young men with him, and Iſaac his Son, and went unto the place which God had told him. As here theſe men went, ſo Abraham went, he did not linger, nor lie long in bed, but roſe up early in the morning. This was an amazing work of obedience to the command of God, a very hard and grievous command of God. Abraham had ſhewed an eminent act of obedience to the Lord, before this offering up of his Son; when God called him out of Ur of the Chaldees, he went. The Apoſtle ſaith (Heb. 11. 8.) By faith Abraham when he was called, to go out into a place which he ſhould after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went; he followed God as it were blind-fold. So the Apoſtle yielded preſent obedience, he made no diverſions, no ſtop; When it pleaſed God (ſaid he) who ſeparated me from my mothers womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him amongſt the Heathen; immediately I conferred not with fleſh and blood, neither went I up to Jeruſalem, to them which were Apoſtles before me, but I went into Arabia, &c. (Gal. 1. 15, 16, 17.) He conferred not with fleſh and blood, that is, neither with his own heart, or with his own intereſt, what would be ſafeſt and beſt for him, nor did he go to conſult with other men who were fleſh and blood, but followed his call. Whatever God commands we have nothing to do but to obey. As the Centurion ſaid (Math. 8. 9.) I am a man under authority, and I have Souldiers under me; and I ſay to one, go, and he goeth; and to another, come, and he cometh; and to a third, do this, and he doth it: Such an obedience are we to yield to the commands of God. The Apoſtle giveth a like charge concerning Servants, with reſpect to all their Maſters lawful commands (Tit. 2. 9.) Exhort Servants to be obedient unto their own Maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all things, not anſwering again, that is, not gain-ſaying, or not contradicting, as the word may be Tranſlated. When a Servant receiveth a juſt command from his Maſter, he muſt not contradict, he muſt not put in his advice, thus or thus, but follow the orders given him. Now, if Maſters on Earth ought to receive, in all lawful commands, ſuch obedience from their Servants, how much more is this due to our Lord and Maſter in Heaven? Eſpecially, if we conſider what the commands of the Lord are, under theſe three titles or attributes of them.

Firſt, They are all juſt and good. It is impoſſible for God to command that which is not right to be done, for his command maketh that right which is done, whatſoever it is; his will is righteouſneſs it ſelf, and the rule of it.

Secondly, His commands are not only juſt and good in themſelves, but they are good to us, they are given for our profit and benefit, it is our intereſt as well as our duty to obey them. In keeping them there is a great reward (Pſ. 19. 11.) yea, the keeping of them is a great reward. Do not my words (ſaith the Lord, Mic. 2. 7.) do good to him that walketh uprightly?

Thirdly, The commands of the Lord are eaſie: That's the Apoſtles meaning, when he ſaith (1 John 5. 3.) His Commandments are not grievous. The Lord doth not put grievous things, nor heavy burdens upon his people. My yoke (ſaith Chriſt, Math. 11. 30.) is eaſie, and my burden light. Eaſie and light to a ſpiritual mind; to the new Creature, though grievous to corruption, and burdenſome to the fleſh. Hard things are eaſie, and heavy things light to a ſutable mind, whereas eaſie things are hard, and light things heavy to a mind that is not ſo. Seeing then the commands of the Lord are juſt in themſelves, good to us, and not grievous, he being our Soveraign, we ought ſpeedily to obey whatſoever he commands; and leaving off, or laying aſide all diſputes and excuſes, preſently fall upon the work which he at any time calleth us unto. This was commendable in Eliphaz and his two friends, They went and did as the Lord commanded them.

Thirdly, Obſerve, The Lords commands muſt be done as he commandeth them.

We may do what the Lord commandeth, yet not as he commandeth. The Lords commands muſt be done, as we ſay to a hair, to a tittle, they muſt be done exactly: It is not enough to do what God commandeth, but according as he commandeth. The As is remarkable. Not only muſt we do good, but we muſt do it in a good way, that is, in Gods way. Firſt, The matter muſt be according to his command. Secondly, The manner muſt be according to his command; and this a two-fold manner. Firſt, the external manner muſt be as the Lord hath commanded. David bringing home the Ark (2 Sam. 6. 3.) they carried it on a new Cart, when it ſhould have been carried upon the Levites ſhoulders; that was a failing in the outward manner of that work. Hence that confeſſion of David, when he undertook that work a ſecond time (1 Chron. 15. 13.) The Lord made a breach upon us at firſt, for that we ſought him not after the due order. We muſt worſhip God aright, for the outward manner of his commands and inſtitutions, elſe we diſhonour him, while we intend to worſhip him. Secondly, The inward manner muſt be according to the command of God. 'Tis poſſibly we may hit the outward form of worſhip, yet miſs in the inward manner of it. The Lord ſearcheth the heart, he knoweth what is within, and muſt be worſhipped in ſpirit and in truth (John 4. 24.) that is, according to the truth of the rule made known in the word, and in truth of heart. The inward manner of worſhip is,

Firſt, That we worſhip in faith; Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God (Heb. 11. 6.) If we have not a juſtifying faith, yea, if we have not a perſwading faith (Rom. 14. 5, 23.) that what we do is according to the will of God, our worſhip is not according to what the Lord hath commanded, and ſo becomes ſin to us.

Secondly, That we worſhip in love. Though we do never ſo many holy ſervices to the Lord, if we do them not in love to him, we fail in the inward manner of our worſhip. The ſum of all the Lords commands, is, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy Soul, and with all thy might. It is not hearing and praying, but theſe in love, which is the fulfilling of the Commandment. Every duty muſt be mixt alſo with love to man. We may do many things commanded to men, yet, if we do them not in love to men, we do nothing as the Lord commandeth. Thus the holy Apoſtle concluded peremptorily (1 Cor. 13. 1.) Though I ſpeak with the tongue of men and Angels, &c. and have not charity, I am become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal; and though I beſtow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burnt, and have not charity, it profiteth nothing.

Thirdly, To do all that the Lord commands according to the inward manner, is to do all in humility; that is, Firſt, Acknowledging that we have no power of our own to do any thing; Secondly, That we have deſerved nothing, how much ſoever we have done, or how well ſoever we have done it.

Thus in doing the Lords commands we ſhould labour to anſwer the mind of the Lord fully, and to hit every circumſtance, to omit nothing, no not the leaſt thing. Moſes (Exod. 10. 16.) being to carry the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, would not compound the matter with Pharaoh: Ye may go ſaid Pharaoh (after he had been broken by ſeveral plagues) Only let your little ones ſtay; no, ſaith Moſes, that is not as the Lord hath commanded me. And at another time, he ſaid, Go, only let your Cattel ſtay; no, ſaith Moſes, this is not as the Lord commanded, I will not leave ſo much as a hoof behind me. And ſo ſaid Moſes concerning the obſervances of the Law, For, thus I am commanded, or this is as the Lord commanded, as we read all along the Books of Exodus and Leviticus. We are not full in our obedience, till we obey fully. It is ſaid of Caleb (Numb. 14. 24.) He had another Spirit, he followed the Lord fully, that is, as to matter and manner, as to out-ſide and in-ſide. Let us labour to be full followers of God; not out-ſide followers of God only, but in-ſide followers. Let us not reſt in the in-ſide, when we are not right in the out-ſide, nor pleaſe our ſelves with an out-ſide ſervice, when we are careleſs of the inward. Thus of their obedience, as conſidered in general, They did according as the Lord commanded.

Further, Conſider their doing as the Lord commanded them in that ſpecial matter, their reconciliation, firſt to himſelf, and then to Job.

Hence Obſerve, Fourthly, What the Lord appointeth for our reconciliation, we muſt do, and we muſt do it as he hath appointed.

Though the means which God appointeth ſeem to us improbable and weak, though it be troubleſom and chargeable, as here the offering up of ſo many Bullocks and Rams, yet we muſt do it; Yea, though it put us to ſhame before men, by the acknowledgment of our errors and miſtakes, as here Eliphaz and his two friends alſo did, yet we muſt do it. They who are aſhamed of ſin, will not be aſhamed to acknowledg their ſin. But what muſt we do to be reconciled to God or man?

Cur te pudeat peccatum tuum dicere cum non pudet facere? Bernard in Sentent. Erubeſcere mala ſapientia eſt, bonum verò erubeſcere fatuitatis. Greg. l. 1. in Ezek. hom. 10.

They who deſire reconciliation with God, muſt go out of themſelves, and go to Jeſus Chriſt; they muſt (as Eliphaz, &c. did) bring a ſacrifice to God, not (as they did) of Bullocks and Rams, but which was ſhadowed by thoſe legal ſacrifices) the ſacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, Who by one offering hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified (Heb. 10. 14.)

They who deſire reconciliation with man, muſt do that which God here appointed theſe men, go to him whom they have wronged, and acknowledg their error, or that they have wronged him; they muſt alſo deſire his pardon and prayers. Thus did theſe men, and they did as the Lord commanded for their reconciliation, firſt, to himſelf, and then to Job.

Fifthly, We may conſider this their obedience, as to the ſpring of it. What made them ſo ready, when the Lord commanded them, to go and do as he had commanded them? Doubtleſs this was one thing, the men were now humbled, God had brought them to a ſight of their ſin; Ye have not ſpoken of me the thing that is right, this they were made ſenſible of, and confeſſed, and ſo obeyed,

Hence Obſerve, They who are truly humbled and touched, with a clear ſight and deep ſenſe of their ſins, will do whatſoever the Lord commandeth, and as he commandeth.

They who are made ſenſible of the wrath of God, deſerved by and kindled againſt them for their ſins, will do any thing which he commands for the obtaining of his favour. God may have any thing of an humble Soul; had the Lord commanded theſe men to go to Job, and offer ſacrifice, before he had convinced them of their ſin, they might have flung away over the field, and not have kept the path of his Commandments; but having humbled them they ſubmitted. When Peter had preached that notable Sermon, which prickt his hearers at the very heart (Acts 2. 37.) Then they ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the Apoſtles, men and brethren, what ſhall we do? They were not only ready to do what they were commanded, but did even ask for commands; What ſhall we do? They, as it were, threw down a blank, and deſired the Apoſtles to write what commands they would that tended to ſalvation; as if they had ſaid, we are ready to do what the Lord commandeth, and according as the Lord commandeth: Thus being made ſenſible of their ſins, and of the wrath of God, which they had provoked againſt themſelves, by crucifying the Lord of life, They cried out, what ſhall we do? We will ſubmit to any thing that is fit to be done. Saul, afterward Paul, came out with fury to perſecute the Diſciples of Chriſt; but the Lord having beaten him from his Horſe to the ground, he trembling and aſtoniſhed, ſaid, Lord what wilt thou have me to do? (Acts 9. 6.) He was fit to take any impreſſion, and to be moulded into any form, by the hand of God. They who have been made to know what it is to break commands, are willing to obey and keep them. This was the firſt ſpring of their obedience; God had humbled them.

There was a ſecond ſpring of their obedience, which will yield a ſixth Obſervation; For, as the Lord had convinced them of their ſin, ſo he had given them hopes of mercy in the pardon of it, and of reconciliation to himſelf. So much was intimated in that gracious counſel given them; Take unto you ſeven Bullocks and ſeven Rams, and go and offer up a burnt-offering for your ſelves, &c. This was a comfortable word, and doubtleſs they underſtood it ſo, and ſaid in their own hearts, God might have made us a Sacrifice, but he commands us to offer a Sacrifice: And what doth this ſignifie? Surely, that he will be gracious to us, and is ready to pardon us. Having theſe hopes of pardon, they went and willingly did what the Lord commanded, they went to Job, they ſubmitted to him whom they had contemned, they honoured him whom they had deſpiſed before.

Hence Note, The intimations of mercy, and hopes of pardon, prevail mightily upon the Soul of a ſinner.

The Lord did not only ſhew them their ſin, and terrifie them with kindled wrath, but ſhewed them a Sacrifice, and this preſently won upon them. The love of God is more conſtraining than his wrath; and hopes of pardon and ſalvation, than the fear of puniſhment and damnation: Both have their effects, and are ſtrong motives, wrath and love, but the ſtrongeſt is love. As when the Apoſtle beſeeched the Romans (Rom. 12. 1.) to preſent themſelves a living Sacrifice, he beſought them by the mercies of God: So when the Lord commanded theſe men to offer up ſlain Beaſts in Sacrifice, hope of mercy was the motive. 'Tis mercy which moves moſt effectually, to offer both our ſervices and our ſelves a Sacrifice unto God; that's the ſame Apoſtles argument again (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Wherefore having theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves (that is, uſe all means of cleanſing our ſelves, let us go to Chriſt for the cleanſing of our ſelves) from all filthineſs both of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of the Lord. The end of the Commandment is charity (1 Tim. 1. 5.) that is, 'tis charity or love which gives the Commandment its end. What is the end of the Commandment? It is that we ſhould obey and fulfil it. To what end doth the Lord give us Commandments? It is that we ſhould keep them. Love is the end of the Commandment, and it gives the Commandment a compleating end. Now, whence comes our love, either to God or man? Surely from the manifeſtation of Gods love to us. So that, when the Lord manifeſteth his love to us, raiſing and confirming our hopes by promiſes, then our love appeareth in doing and keeping Commandments; and therefore, love is therefore joined with faith unfeigned, a faith without hypocriſie or deceit. Now, the work of faith in God for pardon and reconciliation, is grounded upon a Sacrifice. Thus, an Evangelical obedience is better than legal, ſo mercy revealed in the Goſpel, quickens to obedience, more than wrath revealed in the Law. The ſight of mercy, and the ſenſe of the love of God, in ſending his own Son to be a Sacrifice for us, works more upon us, than if the Lord ſhould threaten to make us a Sacrifice, or to conſume us in the fire of his wrath for ever. It was the Sacrifice which made theſe men go to Job and humble themſelves, they perceived there was hope now, and that though they had failed, yet the Lord was ready to receive them, and would not deal with them according to their folly, as he told them he would, if they did not (according to his command) go to Job with their ſeven Bullocks, &c. and offer up a burnt-offering. They went and did as the Lord commanded them.

But what came of it? How did they ſpeed? What was the iſſue of all? The Text ſaith,

The Lord alſo accepted Job.] This may ſeem a ſtrange connection; they going and doing as the Lord commanded them, one would have thought, it ſhould be ſaid, And the Lord accepted them, whereas the Text ſaith only thus, The Lord alſo accepted Job.

But were not Job's friends accepted? Shall we think that they loſt their labour? Not ſo neither; without all queſtion theſe three bringing their Sacrifice according to the command of God, both for matter and manner, were accepted too: Yet, becauſe it was at the requeſt and prayer of Job for them, therefore the Text ſaith not, The Lord accepted them, but, The Lord alſo accepted Job; that is, he offering Sacrifice, and praying for them, they were accepted. This ſheweth us the great myſtery, or the ſum of the Goſpel; the Lord did not accept them in themſelves, but he accepted Job in ſacrificing for them, and all in Chriſt. And conſider, it is not ſaid, the Lord accepted the Sacrifice, or the prayer of Job, but, The Lord accepted Job; his perſon was accepted in and through the Sacrifice or interceſſion of Chriſt, and his Sacrifice and interceſſion for Eliphaz and his two friends were accepted alſo in him.

Accepit Jehovah perſonam Jobi ſacerdotio jungentis nomine Chriſti ſacerdotis, & victimæ ſempiternæ noſtræ quam iſta figurabant. Jun.

How the Lord teſtified his acceptance of Job, whether by conſuming his Sacrifice with fire from Heaven, or by any other outward token of his favour, is not here expreſſed, and therefore to us uncertain; only this is certain, and that is enough for us to know, that God accepted him.

What it is to accept, was ſhewed in opening the former verſe.

In brief, to be accepted, is to have favour with God, our petitions anſwered, and the things done which we move or petition for. The Lord alſo accepted Job.

And when 'tis ſaid, The Lord alſo accepted Job, this implyeth, that Job did willingly undertake the ſervice and duty for his three friends. Thought it be not ſaid, that Job offered Sacrifice and prayed for them, yet both are wrapt up and underſtood in this concluſion, The Lord alſo accepted Job. This gives evidence or witneſs to the goodneſs of Job, and his eminence in grace; how full of love, how ready to forgive was he! He did not inſult over Eliphaz, &c. nor ſay, now I have got the day, God hath determined the matter for me; he did not tell them, ye have wronged and abuſed me, ye have unjuſtly cenſured and reproached me; but putting their unkindneſſes into oblivion, and laying aſide the thought of them, he laid out his Soul to the utmoſt for the healing or making up of the difference (ariſing from their folly) between God and them.

Rogavit Job & Dominus ignovit; profuit illis amicitia, quibus obfuit inſolentia. Ambroſ. 3. Offic. c. ult.

Amicè ut amicos illos amplexus eſt.

For the better improvement of theſe words,

Firſt, Let us compare them with thoſe in the eighth verſe. Here it is ſaid, The Lord alſo accepted Job; and there the Lord ſaid, Him will I accept; there it is a promiſe, here a performance.

Hence Note, Whatſoever the Lord promiſeth to do, he will certainly perform and do.

A word from God is as ſure as his deed: our hope upon promiſe, as good as poſſeſſion; In hope of eternal life, which God who cannot lye, promiſed before the world began (Tit. 1. 2.) Chriſt will be Amen, that is, performance (2 Cor. 1. 20.) to all the promiſes (2 Cor. 1. 20.) As they are all made in him, ſo they ſhall every one of them, and in every thing, be made good by him, unto the glory of God by us; that is, we ſhall at laſt have abundant cauſe of glorifying of God in performing and making good of all the promiſes, upon the undertaking of Jeſus Chriſt for us. No man ſhall fail of acceptance, that is under (as Job was) a promiſe of acceptation; get under promiſes, and you ſhall partake the good promiſed.

Secondly, Whereas upon their doing according as the Lord commanded, preſently it followeth, The Lord alſo accepted Job.

Note, Though the Lord will ſurely perform what he hath promiſed, yet if we would have the good promiſed, we muſt do the duty commanded, otherwiſe our faith is but preſumption.

If Eliphaz and his two friends had not done as the Lord commanded them, they could not rightly have expected God ſhould do what he promiſed, accept Job, and ſo themſelves. There are promiſes of two ſorts. Firſt, of preventing grace; theſe are made to the wicked and unconverted. Secondly, there are promiſes of rewarding grace; theſe are made to the godly, who muſt perform the duty commanded, if they would receive the mercy promiſed. As many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy (Gal. 6. 16.) If you will have peace, you muſt walk according to rule; the Lord is not bound to fulfil promiſes, if we take liberty to break Commandments, or neglect to do them. And they who have true faith in the truth, and faithfulneſs of God to fulfil the one, can never take liberty to break the other. None are ſo ſure to the Command, as they who have fulleſt aſſurance in the Promiſe.

The Lord alſo accepted Job.] Here are but few words, yet much matter; and who knoweth how much mercy? Here is much, yea, all in a little, The Lord accepted Job.

Hence Note, Thirdly, To be accepted of God, is the anſwer of all our prayers and deſires, a full reward for all our ſervices.

Acceptation with God is the happineſs of man, and ſhould be his ſatisfaction. If we are accepted in our ſervices, we are bountifully rewarded for them; and if our perſons are accepted, we ſhall be everlaſtingly ſaved. When the Lord accepted Job, he heard his prayer for his friends, they were reconciled. This good news, The Lord alſo accepted Job, was enough to make their hearts leap for joy. Acceptation is a reviving word, the ſum of all that we can wiſh or pray for; 'tis enough and enough to confirm our faith, and to wind up our aſſurance to the very higheſt expectation of a ſupply to all our wants and of pardon of all our ſins. All the kindneſſes of God are comprehended in this one word, Acceptation.

Fourthly, The Lord accepted Job. Here is no mention at all of accepting his Sacrifice, yet that was accepted too.

Hence Note, The Lord having reſpect to our perſons, cannot but have reſpect to our ſervices.

If our perſons are accepted, our ſervices are; and if the ſervices of any are not reſpected, it is becauſe their perſons are not. 'Tis ſaid (*Gen.*4.45.) The Lord had reſpect unto Abel, and to his offering; but unto Cain and his offering, he had no reſpect. Reſpect or no reſpect to what is done, always begins with the perſon of the doer.

Yet further, Job was accepted; but upon what account? Or how was Job accepted? Not in himſelf, nor for himſelf, but in Chriſt the promiſed Meſſias.

Hence Note, Fifthly, That any mans perſon is accepted, is from free grace, through Jeſus Chriſt.

When we have done all, we deſerve nothing, we are only accepted. The Lord accepted Job, not for his own ſake, not for the worth of his ſervice, not for the worthineſs of his perſon, but for him whom he in that action repreſented, and in whom he believed, Jeſus Chriſt. Job himſelf needed Chriſt for his acceptation; 'tis in and through him that any are accepted. The word Acceptance plainly implieth, that there is nothing of merit in us; acceptation notes grace and favour. This reſpect to us, is not for any deſert in us.

From the whole, we may infer,

First, If the Lord accepted Job when he offered Sacrifice, and prayed for his friends; how much more doth he accept Jeſus Chriſt, who offered himſelf a Sacrifice for ſinners, and ever liveth to make interceſſion for them, whoſe Sacrifice he is.

Did the Lord preſently accept Job and his friends, or Job for his friends? Then what confidence may we have, that Jeſus Chriſt, who is our everlaſting Sacrifice and Advocate, who is entred into the holieſt, the Sanctuary of Heaven, and there pleads for us with his own blood, is accepted for us, and we through him. Chriſts ſuit ſhall never be refuſed, nor ſhall we, while we come to God through him. This act of divine grace, was, as I may ſay, but a ſhadow or figure of that great work of Jeſus Chriſt, in reconciling ſinners, and making them accepted with the Lord; and therefore, as often as we pray, Chriſts everlaſting Sacrifice ſhould come to our remembrance, for the confirmation of our faith, and our encouragement againſt fears. We may argue down all our doubts about acceptation by Chriſt, upon this account, that Job's friends were accepted at his ſuit, and their acceptation not bottom'd on him, nor in his Sacrifice, but as both ſhadowed Chriſt. Where the Reconciler is accepted, they that are in him, and for whom he makes requeſt, are accepted too. What the Lord ſpake from Heaven (*Matth.*3.17.) This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed, reacheth all believers to the end of the World; whoſe head and repreſenter Chriſt is. Let us adore, and ever be thankful, that we have received ſuch grace in Chriſt; for, though Jeſus Chriſt in his perſon is of infinite worth, and his Sacrifice of ſo great a value, that it became a price ſufficient for the ranſom and redemption of all ſinners: Yet, it was of free grace that Chriſt was made a ranſom for ſinners, and we accepted through him.

Secondly, Take this Inference:

If the Lord be ready to hear a Job for his friends, then the Lord will much more hear a Job for himſelf.

That the prayers and ſupplications which Believers put up to the Lord, obtain mercy and good things for others, may ſtrengthen faith, that they ſhall obtain for themſelves.

Thirdly, We may infer,

Job was become a great favourite with God, after his humiliation and ſelf-abhorrence.

He no ſooner fell out with himſelf for his former miſcarriages, but the Lord, as it were, fell in love with him afreſh. What a favourite was he grown, who could thus readily get an anſwer, and obtain favour for thoſe, againſt whom the Lord ſaid, My wrath is kindled?

Thus much concerning the judgment and determination of God in this matter, which put a period to the long continued controverſie between Job and his three friends, and reconciled both parties both unto God and between themſelves. O how bleſſed is the iſſue of the Lords Judgment and undertaking towards his Servants and Children! When once he was pleaſed to appear in the caſe, he ſoon ſilenced both ſides, and made them in the concluſion both of one heart, and of one mind.

And no ſooner was this humbling and reconciling work done and over, but reſtoring and reſtitution work followed, as will appear in opening the third and laſt part of this Chapter, which is alſo the laſt part of the whole Book.

VERS. 10.

And the Lord turned the Captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: Alſo the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before.

THis verſe begins the third part of the Chapter. We have ſeen Job humbled before God in the firſt part; we have ſeen Job's friends reconciled to God, and his anger turned away from them in the ſecond: In this third, we have Job himſelf reſtored, or the reſtitution of Job to as good, yea, to a better eſtate than he had before, and this was done when he prayed for his friends: The Crown is ſet upon the head of prayer.

The reſtitution of Job is ſet down two ways.

Firſt, More generally, in this verſe, where it is deſcribed three ways.

Firſt, By the Author of it, The Lord; it was he that turned the Captivity of Job.

Secondly, By the ſeaſon of it; When he prayed for his friends.

Thirdly, By the degree and meaſure of it: Alſo the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before. His was not a bare return or reſtitution, but with advantage, and that to a duplication.

And the Lord turned the Captivity of Job.

Before I open the words as Tranſlated by us, I ſhall briefly mind the Reader of another Tranſlation. The word which we render Captivity, is by ſome rendred Repentance; and there is a twofold interpretation of that rendring.

Firſt, Some refer it to God, and read the word thus, The Lord was turned to repentance concerning Job: And then the meaning is, the Lord repented or changed his diſpenſation with reſpect to the affliction of Job, when he prayed for his friends. The Scripture ſpeaks of the Lords repentance two ways.

Firſt, That he repenteth of the good which he hath done for, or beſtowed upon man (*Gen.*6.6.) It repented the Lord that he had made man; he ſeemed as one troubled in his mind, that ever he had ſet up man in ſuch a condition. And as there the Lord repented of his making mankind in general in that good natural ſtate, ſo elſewhere he is ſaid to repent of his doing good to ſome men in particular, as to their civil ſtate (1*Sam.*15.11.) The Lord repented that he had made Saul King, that he had ſet him upon a Throne to rule men on Earth, who had no better obeyed the Rule given from his own Throne in Heaven.

Secondly, The Lord is ſaid to repent of the evil which he hath either actually brought upon man, or threatned to bring upon him. In the former ſenſe Moſes ſaith (Deut. 32. 36.) The Lord ſhall judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants, when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left; that is, when they are in an afflicted low condition, the Lord taketh the opportunity or ſeaſon to reſtore them, and then he is ſaid to repent concerning any afflictive evil brought upon his people. In the latter ſenſe (as he is ſaid to repent of the evil threatned) it is ſaid of repenting Nineveh (Jonah 3. 10.) The Lord repented of the evil that he had ſaid that he would do unto them, and he did it not. Thus the Lord is turned to repentance with reſpect to evil, either brought or threatned to be brought upon a people; for which we have that remarkable promiſe (Jer. 18. 7, 8.) At what inſtant I ſhall ſpeak concerning a Nation, and concerning a Kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to deſtroy it; if that Nation againſt whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil I thought to do unto them. If they turn, I will turn. Another word is uſed in the Hebrew there, but it imports the ſame thing. Repentance in God is not any change of his Will, Counſel, or Purpoſe; it only notes a change in his Providences and Diſpenſations. The Lord is of one mind, who can turn him? (Job 23. 13.) But he is not always of one way; he repenteth, that is, he changeth his way ſometimes, and ſo he did towards Job: He once caſt him down, and left him as a Captive, bound hand and foot under the power of Satan, as to his outward man, and worldly enjoyments; but the Lord turned and repented; that is, turned his Captivity. This ſenſe and reading is much inſiſted on by ſeveral Interpreters, and it is a comfortable truth; yet I am not ſatisfied that it is the truth intended in this place.

Secondly, Others who follow that Tranſlation, refer this repentance to Job; and ſo the ſenſe is this, The Lord turned at the repentance, or upon the repentance of Job, when he prayed for his friends; of which repentance we read in the former part of the Chapter. The Obſervation which naturally ariſeth from this interpretation, is clear from many other Texts of Scripture.

When perſons or Nations pray and depart from iniquity, when they joyn true repentance with prayer, the Lord turneth to them in mercy, and turneth evil away from them.

The Lord turned in mercy to repenting Job when he prayed for his friends. And this was promiſed to Gods peculiar people, the Jewiſh Nation (2 Chron. 7. 14.) If my people which are called by my Name ſhall humble themſelves, and pray, and ſeek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear in Heaven, and will forgive their ſin, and will heal their Land. This was performed to the Ninevites, a Heathen Nation, when they repented of the evil which they had done, God repented of the evil which he threatned to do unto them, or bring upon them, and did it not, brought it not. But I ſhall not ſtay upon this uſeful point here, becauſe it is grounded upon a Tranſlation which is not (as I conceive) ſo clearly grounded upon the Original as our own.

The Lord turned the Captivity of Job.

In Hebræo eſt pulchra paranomaſis, nam שׁוּב eſt vertere aut convertere, & שְׁבוּת captivitas. שׁבוּת שָׁב את

Jehova reſtituit, quod captum fuerit Jobo. Jun. Captivitas ponitur pro ipſis captivis. Druſ.

The Hebrew is very Elegant, He turned the turning or captivity of Job. Why his Captivity? Job was never led Captive in perſon, he was not carried away Priſoner by the Chaldeans and Sabeans, who captivated his Cattle. How then is it here ſaid, The Lord turned the Captivity of Job?

I anſwer, Theſe words, The Lord turned the Captivity of Job, may be taken two ways.

Firſt, thus, He turned that to Job (whatſoever it was) which was led into Captivity. So ſome tranſlate, The Lord reſtored that which was taken from Job. His Cattle, which were taken away by violent men, and his Children, which were taken away by a vehement wind, were returned or reſtored to him again. The word Captivity is elſewhere in Scripture taken tropically for things or perſons captivated; that which is captivated is called captivity. The Lord turned the Captivity of Job, that is, he returned that which was captivated, or taken away. Take a Scripture or two for that ſenſe of the word Captivity (Judg. 5. 12.) Awake, awake Deborah, awake, awake, utter a Song; Ariſe Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou Son of Abinoam. That is, bring them back who were taken Captives; or thus, lead thoſe captive who have taken thy people captives. So (Pſal. 68. 18.) which is quoted by the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4. 8.) When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive. The Pſalmiſt gives us a Propheſie, and the Apoſtle reports the Hiſtory of the glorious Aſcenſion of Chriſt. When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive. Which Text, as the former, may be taken two ways.

Firſt, Chriſt aſcending, led thoſe captive, who had led poor ſouls captive, that is, the Devils; which the Apoſtle expreſſeth thus (Col. 2. 15.) And having ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, he made a ſhew of them openly, triumphing over them in it, that is, in his Croſs or ſufferings; or (as our Margin hath it) in himſelf: And as Chriſt ſpoiled thoſe Principalities and triumphed over them, not only really, but openly in his Paſſion; ſo he led them captive, and triumphed over them more openly in his Aſcenſion.

Secondly, He led thoſe that were captives, ſinful men, captive; he brought them out of a miſerable captivity into a bleſſed captivity, that is, from the captivity of Sin, Satan, and the World, into a captivity to himſelf. The Apoſtle ſpeaks ſo of the mighty power of the Word in the Miniſtery of the Goſpel: The weapons of our warfare (that is, the weapons with which we, the Miniſters of the Goſpel, make war upon ſinners to convert them) are not carnal (that is, weak) but mighty through God, to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, caſting down imaginations, &c. and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt (2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) Not only are our perſons, but our thoughts captivated to Chriſt, by the power of the Spirit miniſtred in the Goſpel. Thus the Scripture ſpeaks of captivity in both theſe notions: the captivaters and the captivated are called captivity. Here in this place, we may take it in the latter ſenſe, the Lord turned the captivity of Job; that is, what was captivated, or taken away, the Lord, as it were, fetcht back again, and reſtored it to him. In this ſenſe Abraham, when he heard that his Nephew Lot was taken captive, led captivity captive (Gen. 14. 16.) He purſued them that had taken him captive, he brought back Lot, and the reſt of the Priſoners, together with the ſpoils. Thus the Lord did not only deliver Job from all thoſe evils which he was under, but reſtored the good things to him which he had loſt, or were carried away.

Secondly, We may take it thus, The Lord turned the captivity of Job; that is, he took away, or called in Satans Commiſſion, which he had given him over Jobs Eſtate and Body, and by which Satan held Job in captivity, or as his captive; for as we read (Chap. 2. 6.) Satan could not touch him till he had leave, or a Letter of Licence from God; till God ſaid, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power, only upon himſelf put not forth thy hand (Chap. 1. 12.) Nor could he touch his perſon, till his Commiſſion was inlarged; and the Lord ſaid again, Behold, he is in thine hand, but (or only) ſave his life (Chap. 2. 6.) So as ſoon as his Commiſſion was taken away, or called in by God, he could trouble him no longer. The Lord forbidding the Devil to meddle any more with him, Turned the captivity of Job.

Hence obſerve; Firſt, To be in any affliction, is to be in bonds or captivity.

The afflicted condition of Job was a captivity. Troubles in our Eſtate, troubles in our Relations, troubles in our Bodies, troubles in our Souls, are like Bonds and Priſons. It is a very uneaſie and an uncomfortable condition to be in priſon, and ſo it is to be in any afflicted condition conſidered in it ſelf. Job ſpake as much of himſelf, while his affliction continued upon him ſtrongly (Chap. 13. 27.) Thou putteſt my feet in the Stocks, and thou lookeſt narrowly unto all my paths. Job was not only as a man in captivity, but as a man in the Stocks, which is a great hardſhip in captivity. David calleth ſuch an Eſtate an impriſonment (Pſal. 69. 33.) The Lord heareth the poor, and deſpiſeth not his priſoners. Some are priſoners ſtrictly, being under reſtraint; all are priſoners largely, or (as we ſay) Priſoners at large, who are in any diſtreſs. The Lord maketh many Priſoners by ſickneſs and weakneſs of body, as alſo by poverty, and the want of bodily comforts and conveniences. The afflicted condition of the Church in any kind is expreſſed by captivity, as captivity, in kind, is ſometimes the affliction of the Church. The ten Tribes were led into captivity by Salmanazar, Judah by Nebuchadnezzar. Hence that promiſe (Jerem. 30. 18.) Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacobs Tents: And that prayer (Pſal. 14. 7.) O that the ſalvation of Iſrael were come out of Sion. When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob ſhall rejoyce, and Iſrael ſhall be glad. This Scripture may be taken both ſtrictly, as a prayer for their return out of proper captivity, and largely, for their deliverance out of any adverſity: So (Pſal. 126. 1.) When the Lord turned the captivity of Sion, we were like them that dream. Read alſo (Zeph. 2. 7.)

of

Secondly, From the Author of this turn, The Lord turned the captivity, &c.

Obſerve; Deliverance out of an afflicted ſtate is of the Lord.

He is the Author of theſe comfortable turns, and he is to be acknowledged as the Author of them. The Pſalmiſt prayed thrice, Turn us again (Pſal. 80. 3, 7, 19.) The waters of affliction would continually riſe and ſwell higher and higher, did not the Lord ſtop and turn them, did not he command them back, and cauſe an ebb. Satan would never have done bringing the floods of affliction upon Job, if the Lord had not forbidden him, and turned them. It was the Lord who took all from Job, as he acknowledged (Chap. 1. 21.) and it was the Lord who reſtored all to him again; as we ſee here the ſame hand did both in his caſe, and doth both in all ſuch caſes (Hoſ. 6. 1.) Let us return to the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up. David aſcribed both to God (Pſal. 66. 11, 12.) Thou broughteſt us into the Net; thou layedſt affliction upon our loyns; thou haſt cauſed men to ride over our heads, we went through fire and through water. The hand of God led them in that fire and water of affliction, through which they went; but who led them out? The Pſalmiſt tells us in the next words, Thou broughteſt us into a wealthy place; the Margin ſaith, into a moiſt place. They were in fire and water before. Fire is the extremity of heat and drineſs; water is the extremity of moiſtneſs and coldneſs. A moiſt place notes a due temperament of heat and cold, of drineſs and moiſtneſs; and therefore elegantly ſhadows that comfortable and contentful condition, into which the good hand of God had brought them, which is ſignificantly expreſſed in our tranſlation, by a wealthy place; thoſe places flouriſhing moſt in fruitfulneſs, and ſo in wealth, which are neither over-hot, nor over-cold; neither over-dry, nor over-moiſt. And as in that Pſalm David acknowledged the hand of God in this, ſo in another, he celebrated the Lords power and goodneſs for this (Pſal. 68. 20.) He that is our God is the God of ſalvation; and unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death; that is, the out-lets or out-gates from death, are from the Lord; he delivereth from the grave, and from every grief. The Lord turned the captivity of Job, not only preſerving him from death, but filling him with the good things and comforts of this life.

Thirdly, note; The Lord can ſuddenly make a change or turn.

As he can quickly make a great change from proſperity to adverſity, and in a moment bring darkneſs upon thoſe who injoy the ſweeteſt light; ſo he can quickly make a change from adverſity to proſperity, from captivity to liberty, and turn the darkeſt night into a morning light. For ſuch a turn the Church prayed (Pſal. 126. 4.) Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the ſtreams in the South, that is, do it ſpeedily. The South is a dry place, thither ſtreams come, not by a ſlow, conſtant current, but as mighty ſtreams, or land-floods, by a ſudden unexpected rain; like that (1 Kings 18. 41, 45.) Get thee up (ſaid Eliah to Ahab) for there is a ſound of abundance of rain, and preſently the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. When great rains come after long drought, they make ſudden floods and ſtreams. Such a ſudden income of mercy, or deliverance from captivity, the Church then prayed for, and was in the faith and hope of; nor was that hope in vain; nor ſhall any, who in that condition wait patiently upon God, be aſhamed of their hope. The holy Evangeliſt makes report (Luke 13. 16.) that Satan had bound a poor woman eighteen years, all that time he had her his priſoner; but Jeſus Chriſt in a moment made her free. Ought not this woman, being a Daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, loe, theſe eighteen years, be looſed from this bond on the Sabbath day? The Devil, who had her in his power eighteen years, could not hold her a moment, when Jeſus Chriſt would turn her captivity, and looſe her from that bond. If the Son undertake to make any free, whether from corporal or ſpiritual bondage, they ſhall not only be free indeed (as he ſpake, John 8. 36.) at the time when he is pleaſed to do it, but he can do it at any time, in the ſhorteſt time, when he pleaſeth. We find a like turn of captivity is deſcribed (Pſal. 107. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.) ſuch as ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron, becauſe they rebelled againſt the Word of the Lord, &c. Theſe (verſ. 13.) cryed unto the Lord in their trouble, and he ſaved them out of their diſtreſſes: He brought them out of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death, and brake their bands in ſunder. Thus far of the firſt particular conſiderable in Jobs reſtitution, the Author of it, The Lord turned the captivity of Job.

The ſecond thing to be conſidered, is the ſeaſon which the Lord took for the turning of Jobs captivity; the Lord did it, ſaith the Text,

When he prayed for his friends.

Some conceive the turn of his captivity was juſt in his prayer-time, and that even then his body was healed. I ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak further to that afterwards upon another verſe. Thus much is clear, that

When he prayed,] That is, either in the very praying time, or preſently upon it, the Lord turned his captivity. Poſſibly the Lord did not ſtay till he had done, according to that (Iſa. 65. 24.) It ſhall come to paſs that before they call, I will anſwer; and while they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear. Or according to that (Dan. 9. 20.) While I was ſpeaking, and praying, and confeſſing my ſin, and the ſin of my people Iſrael, and preſenting my ſupplications before the Lord my God, for the holy Mountain of my God: Yea, while I was ſpeaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had ſeen in the Viſion at the beginning, being cauſed to fly ſwiftly, touched me, about the time of the Evening Oblation, and he informed me, and talked with me, and ſaid, O Daniel, I am come forth to give thee skill and underſtanding; at the beginning of thy ſupplications the Commandment came forth, and I am come to ſhew thee, &c. What Commandment came forth? even a Command for the turning of their captivity. Thus here (I ſay) poſſibly the Lord gave out that word of Command, for the turning of Jobs captivity, at that very time when he was praying for his friends.

But without queſtion, theſe words, when he prayed for his friends, note a very ſpeedy return of his prayers; that is, ſoon after he had done that gracious office for them, he found matters mending with himſelf, and the anſwers of prayer in the mercies of God coming tumbling in thick and threefold. His captivity fled far away when he had thus drawn near to God; he had, as a very full and ſatiſfactory, ſo a very ſpeedy anſwer,

When he prayed.] Prayer is the making known our wants and deſires to God. It is a ſpiritual work, not a meer bodily exerciſe; it is the labour of the heart, not lip-labour. Jobs prayer was a fervent working, or effectual prayer (as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, Chap. 5. 16.) not a cold, ſlothful, ſleepy prayer; when he prayed, he made work of prayer. Many ſpeak words of prayer, that make no work of prayer, nor are they at work in prayer. Job prayed in the ſame ſenſe that Saul (afterwards Paul) did (Acts 9. 11.) when the Lord Jeſus bid Ananias go to him, for, Behold he prayeth, implying, that he was at it indeed. He had been brought up after the ſtricteſt rule of the Phariſees, who prayed much, or made many prayers; but he prayed to ſo little purpoſe before, that we may well call that his firſt prayer, and ſay he had never prayed before. Job prayed for his friends, as Paul for himſelf; he was very earneſt with God for them, and prevailed. Extraordinary caſes call for extraordinary layings out in duty. It was an extraordinary caſe, When he prayed

Singulare partitivum pro plurali. Merc.

For his friends.] The Hebrew is, When he prayed for his friend. It is uſual in the Grammar of the holy Text, to put the ſingular for the plural: 'Tis ſo here; either, Firſt, becauſe he prayed for every one of them diſtinctly, and by name; or, Secondly, becauſe he looked upon them all as one, and bound them up in the ſame requeſts, When he prayed

O, raram & ſingularem virtutem, quæ in pauciſſimis vel Chriſtianis reperiatur. Merc.

For his friends.] They are called his friends, to ſhew the eſteem that he had of them, notwithſtanding all their unkindneſs and unfriendlineſs towards him. He prayed for them in much love, though they had ſhewed little love to him; and his heart was ſo much towards them, that the Text ſpeaks as if he had forgot himſelf, or left himſelf at that time quite out of his prayers. Doubtleſs Job prayed for himſelf, but his great buſineſs at that time with God, was, for his friends.

Now, in that Jobs prayer is ſaid expreſly to be for his friends, not for himſelf, though we cannot doubt but that he prayed, and prayed much for himſelf;

> Obſerve; A godly man is free to pray for others, as well as for himſelf, and in ſome caſes, or at ſome times, more for others than for himſelf.

He ſeldom drives this bleſſed Trade with Heaven for ſelf only, and he ſometimes doth it upon the alone account of others. 'Tis a great piece of ſpiritualneſs, to walk exactly, and keep in with God to the utmoſt, that ſo our own perſonal ſoul-concerns may not take up our whole time in prayer, but that we may have a freedom of ſpirit to inlarge for the benefit of others. Many by their uneven walkings, exceedingly hinder themſelves in this duty of prayer for friends, and of praying for the whole Church. Uneven walkings hinder that duty in a twofold reſpect.

Firſt, Becauſe they indiſpoſe the heart to prayer in general; which is one ſpecial reaſon why the Apoſtle Peter gives that counſel to Husband and Wife (1 Pet. 3. 7.) to walk according to knowledge, and as being Heirs together of the ſame grace of life, that (ſaith he) your prayers be not hindred; that is, leſt your hearts be indiſpoſed to prayer.

Secondly, Becauſe uneven walkings will find us ſo much work for our ſelves in prayer, that we ſhall ſcarce have time or leiſure to intend or ſue out the benefit of others in prayer. He that watcheth over his own heart and ways, will be and do moſt in prayer for others. And that,

Firſt, For the removing or preventing of the ſorrows and ſufferings of others.

Secondly, For the removing of the ſins of others; yea, though their ſins have been againſt himſelf, which was Jobs caſe. He prayed for thoſe who had dealt very hardly with him, and ſinned againſt God in doing ſo; he prayed for the pardon of their ſin, God being very angry with them, and having told them he would deal with them according to their folly, unleſs they made Job their friend to him. This was the occaſion of Jobs travelling in prayer for his friends; and in this he ſhewed a ſpirit becoming the Goſpel, though he lived not in the clear light of it. And how uncomely is it, that any ſhould live leſs in the power of the Goſpel, while they live more in the light of it? To pray much for others, eſpecially for thoſe who have wronged and grieved us, hath much of the power of the Goſpel, and of the Spirit of Chriſt in it. For, thus Jeſus Chriſt, while he was nailed to the Croſs, prayed for the pardon of their ſins and outrages, who had crucified him, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do (Luke 23. 34.) Even while his Crucifiers were reviling him, he was begging for them, and beſeeching his Father that he would ſhew them mercy, who had ſhewed him no mercy, no, nor done him common Juſtice. And thus (in his meaſure) Jobs heart was carried out in his prayer for his friends, that thoſe ſins of theirs might be forgiven them, by which they had much wronged him, yea, and derided him (in a ſort) upon his Croſs, as the Jews did Chriſt upon his. This alſo was the frame of Davids heart, towards thoſe that had injured him (Pſal. 109. 4.) For my love they are my adverſaries (that's an ill requital; but how did he requite them? we may take his own word for it, he tells us how) but I give my ſelf unto prayer; yea, he ſeemed a man wholly given unto prayer. The Elegant conciſeneſs of the Hebrew is, But I prayer; we ſupply it thus, But I give my ſelf unto prayer: They are ſinning againſt me, requiting my love with hatred, but I give my ſelf unto prayer. But for whom did he pray? doubtleſs he prayed, and prayed much for himſelf; he prayed alſo for them. We may underſtand thoſe words, I give my ſelf unto prayer, two ways. Firſt, I pray againſt their plots and evil dealings with me (prayer was Davids beſt ſtrength always againſt his Enemies) yet that was not all. But, Secondly, I give my ſelf to prayer, that the Lord would pardon their ſin, and turn their hearts, when they are doing me miſchief; or, though they have done me miſchief, I am wiſhing them the beſt good. David (in another place) ſhewed what a ſpirit of charity he was cloathed with, when no reproof could hinder him from praying for others (in ſome good men, reproofs ſtir up paſſion, not prayer) (Pſal. 141. 5.) Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs (ſmite me, how? with reproof; ſo it followeth) Let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oyl, which ſhall not break my head, for yet my prayer ſhall be in their calamities; that is, if ever they who are my reprovers fall into calamity, though they may think they have provoked me ſo by reproving me, that they have loſt my love, and that I have caſt them out of my prayers, or that I will never ſpeak well of them, or for them again, yet I will pray for them with all my heart, as their matters ſhall require; I will pray for them when they have moſt need of prayer, even in their calamity. Some heighten the ſenſe thus; The more they ſharpen their reproof, the more I think my ſelf bound to pray for them. It ſhews an excellent ſpirit, not to be hindred from doing good to others, by any thing they do or ſpeak againſt us, nor by their ſharpeſt (though perhaps miſtaken) reproofs of us. Thus it was with this good man, Job prayed for his friends, who had ſpoken much againſt him, and not only reproved him without cauſe, but reproached him without charity; and God turned his captivity when he prayed for them.

> Hence obſerve, Secondly; Prayer for friends, eſpecially for unkind friends, is very pleaſing to God, and profitable to us.

We never reap more fruit or benefit by prayer our ſelves, than when we lay out our ſelves in prayer for others; and then moſt, when we pray for thoſe who have deſerved leaſt at our hands. Prayer for unkind friends, is the greateſt kindneſs we can do them, and the nobleſt way of recompencing their unkindneſs. Holy David was much in this way of duty, and found the benefit of it (Pſal. 35. 12, 13.) They rewarded me evil for good, to the ſpoiling of my ſoul; but as for me, when they were ſick, my cloathing was ſackcloth, I humbled my ſoul with faſting (that is, I was greatly affected with, and afflicted for them in their affliction; and ſee what followed) My prayer returned into my own boſom. There is ſome difference about the Expoſition of thoſe words; but I conceive that is clear in it ſelf, as well as to my purpoſe, that David received fruit and a good reward for thoſe prayers. As if he had ſaid, If my prayer did them no good, it did me good; if it did not profit them, it profited me; my prayer returned into my own boſom, I found comfortable effects of it. We never gain more by prayer, than when we pray for thoſe by whom we have been loſers; we never find more comfort by prayer, than when we pray heartily for thoſe by whom we have found much ſorrow: whatever good we pray for in the behalf of others, falls upon our own heads; and the more we pray for good upon the heads of thoſe that have done evil to us, the more good is like to fall upon our own heads and hearts. Chriſt ſaith (Mat. 10. 13.) When ye come into an houſe, ſalute it (Chriſt means not a Courtly complemental ſalute, but a Chriſtian ſpiritual ſalute, wiſhing them mercy and peace, as is plain by that which followeth) and if the houſe be worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. As if he had ſaid, When ye come into an houſe, good or bad, ſalute it; if the houſe be good, they ſhall receive the benefit of your prayer; if not, you ſhall have the benefit of it your ſelves; though they get no good by your good wiſhes to them, or prayers for them, yet you ſhall. This is more expreſly aſſured us again by our bleſſed Saviour (Luke 10. 6.) Into whatſoever houſe ye enter, firſt ſay, peace be to this houſe (beſtow a prayer upon them) and if the Son of peace be there, your peace ſhall reſt upon it; if not, it ſhall turn to you again; your prayers ſhall not be loſt, nor ſhall ye be loſers by your prayers.

> Hence take theſe two Inferences: Firſt, If when we pray for friends, for unkind friends, God be ready to do us good, then he will be much more ready to do us good, when we (as he hath commanded us) pray for profeſſed or real Enemies.

The worſe they are (if not ſo bad as to be paſt prayer, by the Apoſtles rule, 1 John 5. 16.) for whom we pray, the better are our prayers, and an argument, as of our greater faith in God, ſo of our greater love to man.

Yet this is not to be underſtood, as if we ſhould pray for the proſperity of Enemies, or evil men, in their evil purpoſes or practices (this were to pray at once for the miſery of Sion, for the downfal of Jeruſalem, and the diſhonour of God.) Our prayer for Enemies ſhould only be, that God would change their hearts, and pardon their ſins, as was touched before. I grant we may (in ſome caſes) pray, Lord, overturn, overturn them; or (as David againſt Achitophel) Lord, turn their counſels into fooliſhneſs; yet even then we ſhould alſo pray (with reſpect to their perſons) Lord, turn them, turn them. The Goſpel teacheth us to do ſo (Luke 6. 28.) Bleſs them that curſe you, pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you: Not that we ſhould pray for a bleſſing on them as they are Curſers and Deſpiſers, but that they may repent, and give over their curſed curſings and deſpiteful uſages. The Apoſtle is full for this (Rom. 12. 14.) Bleſs them that perſecute you, bleſs and curſe not (verſ. 19.) Avenge not your ſelves. And as we ſhould not avenge our ſelves, ſo we ſhould be ſparing in prayer, that God would take vengeance; and if ever we put up ſuch prayers, beware they flow not from a ſpirit of revenge. We, indeed, are ſometimes afraid to be over-gentle and kind-hearted towards them that offend us; and this bad Proverb is too much remembred, If we play the Sheep, the Wolf will eat us up; as if to do our duty, were to run further into danger, and that it muſt needs turn to our wrong, not to avenge our wrongs. But know, if we carry it meekly like ſheep, we have a great Shepherd who will take care of us, and is able to preſerve us from the Wolf. Conſider theſe two things in praying for Enemies, or for thoſe that have any way wronged us.

Firſt, If by prayer we gain them ('tis poſſible by prayer to turn a Wolf into a Sheep) then it will be well with us, they will be our friends.

Secondly, If they continue Wolves and Enemies ſtill, God will be more our friend, and turn the evil which they either intend, or do us, to our good.

> A ſecond Inference is this: If God be ready to deliver us from evil, and do us good when we pray for others, then he will be ready to do us good, and deliver us from evil, when we pray for our ſelves.

This Inference appears every where in Scripture. And as the Lord himſelf hath often invited or incouraged us to the duty of prayer for our ſelves by this promiſe; (Pſal. 50. 15.) Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me; that is, thou ſhalt have both occaſion and a heart to glorifie me. So the Lords ſervants have often had experience of his power and goodneſs in delivering them; or, as 'tis here expreſſed concerning Job, of turning their captivity; take one inſtance for all (Pſal. 34. 4, 6.) I (ſaid David) ſought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears. This poor man cryed, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles. The Lord, who doth us good when we pray for others, cannot but do it when we pray for our ſelves. The Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends.

But ſome may ask, will the Lord turn any mans captivity, when he prayeth for his friends? whoſe prayer, and what prayer is it that obtains ſo high a favour?

I anſwer in general; It is the prayer of a Job. That is,

Firſt, The prayer of a faithful man, or of one who is perfect and upright with God. It is not the prayer of every man that prevails with God (Jam. 5. 16.) The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man (only) availeth much. Nor is it the prayer of a meer morally righteous man that availeth; he muſt be an Evangelically righteous man, that is, a man eſtated by faith in the Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt.

Secondly, As 'tis the prayer of the faithful, ſo the prayer of faith; as it is the prayer of one in a ſtate of grace, ſo of one acting his graces, eſpecially that grace of faith. It is poſſible for a man that hath faith, not to pray in faith; and ſuch a prayer obtaineth not (Jam. 1. 5, 6, 7.) If any man (ſaith that Apoſtle) lack wiſdom; we may ſay, whatſoever any man lacketh, let him ask of God; but let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for let not that man (the man that wavereth) think that he ſhall receive any thing (that is, any good thing asked) of the Lord. To ask without faith, may bear the name, but is not the thing called prayer; and therefore ſuch receive nothing when they ask.

Thirdly, It is the prayer of a perſon repenting, as well as believing. Job was a Penitent, he repented in duſt and aſhes for the evil he had done, before he obtained that good for his friends, and for himſelf by prayer. If my people (ſaith the Lord, 2 Chron. 7. 14.) which are called by my name, ſhall humble themſelves, and turn from their wicked ways (there's compleat repentance) then will I hear from Heaven, and forgive their ſin, and heal their Land (there is compleat mercy.) Some pretend, at leaſt, to be much in believing, yet are little, if at all, in repenting and humbling themſelves under the mighty hand of God. How can their prayers prevail for the turning away of their captivity, who turn not from iniquity? If I (ſaid David, Pſal. 66. 18.) regard iniquity in my heart (his meaning is, if I put it not both out of my heart and hand, by ſound repentance) God will not hear me; that is, he will not regard, much leſs favourably anſwer my prayer. It is a piece of impudence, I am ſure, ſuch a piece of confidence, as God will reject, and wherein no man ſhall proſper, to expect good from God by prayers, while our evils are retained, or abide in our boſoms unrepented of. God hath joyned faith and repentance together; woe to thoſe who put them aſunder. They who either repent without believing, or believe without repenting, indeed do neither; they neither repent, nor believe, nor can they obtain any thing of God by prayer. But the prayer of a faithful man, made in faith, and mixed with ſound repentance, will make great turns; ſuch a one may turn the whole world about by the Engine of prayer.

But, what is there in ſuch a prayer, that ſhould make ſuch turns, and move the Lord to change his Diſpenſations, or our conditions? I anſwer;

Firſt, Such prayer is the Lords own Ordinance or appointment, and he will anſwer that. When we meet God in his own way, he cannot refuſe us; he ſeals to his own Inſtitutions, by gracious anſwers.

Secondly, As prayer is the Ordinance of God, ſo he hath made promiſe to hear and turn the captivity of thoſe that pray, as was ſhewed before. Promiſes are ingagements to performance. God will not be behind hand with man, as to any ingagement; for, as he is powerful, and can, ſo he is faithful, and will do whatever he hath ingaged himſelf to do by promiſe. A word from the God of Heaven, is enough to ſettle our ſouls upon for ever, ſeeing his word is ſettled for ever in Heaven (Pſal. 119. 89.) Half a promiſe, or an half promiſe, an it may be (Zeph. 2. 3.) from God, is better ſecurity than an abſolute promiſe, than an it ſhall be, yea, than an oath from any of the Sons of men.

Thirdly, Prayer honours God. Our ſeeking to him in our wants and weakneſſes, in our fears and dangers, is an argument that we ſuppoſe him able to help us, and that all our ruines may be under his hand: Such a ſeeking to God, is the honouring of God; and therefore, God is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, and call upon him. Our coming to God in all our wants, ſhews, that he is an inexhauſtible fountain; ſo thick a cloud, that we cannot weary him, nor he ſpend all his waters, how much ſoever he ſhowers down, or ſpends upon us. He can diſtil mercies, and drop down bleſſings everlaſtingly. We often want Veſſels to receive, but he never wants Oyl to give. It is the glory of Kings and Princes, that ſo many come with Petitions to them; that they have many Suiters at their Gates, may poſſibly burden them, but undoubtedly it honours them; doth it not ſignifie, that they have a Purſe to relieve their neceſſities? or Power to redreſs their wrongs and injuries? O thou that heareſt prayer, is a title of honour given to God (Pſal. 65.2.) To thee ſhall all fleſh come. As God hath ſaid (Pſal. 50. 15.) they that call upon him, ſhall glorifie him for help received; ſo they do glorifie him, by calling upon him for help: No marvel then, if he turn a Jobs captivity, when he prayeth.

Fourthly, Prayer is the voice of the new Creature. The Lord loveth that voice; 'tis Muſick, the beſt Muſick, next to praiſe, in his Ear. Let me hear thy voice (Cant. 2. 14.) that is, let me hear thee praying, or thy prayer-voice; let me ſee thy countenance: for ſweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely. The Lord delighteth in prayer; therefore the Lord will turn the captivity of a Job when he prayeth.

Fifthly, Prayer is not only the voice of the New Creature, but it is the voice of the Spirit with the New Creature. The Spirit himſelf maketh interceſſion for us (Rom. 8. 26.) 'Tis the holy Spirits work to form requeſts in our hearts to God. As the Spirit it ſelf witneſſeth with our ſpirits, that we are the children of God (Rom. 8. 16.) ſo he prayeth in the Spirits of Gods Children. The prayer of a believer hath the power of the holy Spirit in it, and therefore it muſt needs make great turns. God turned the captivity of Job when he prayed.

Sixthly, Jeſus Chriſt preſents ſuch prayers, the prayers of Faith, the prayers of Repentance unto God his Father. Chriſts interceſſion gives effect, or gets anſwer to our ſupplications. The Father hears the Son always (Joh. 11.42.) and ſo he doth all them whoſe prayers are offered to him by the Son (Rev. 8.3.) The Angel came and ſtood at the Altar, having a Golden Cenſer, and there was given unto him much Incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all Saints, upon the Golden Altar which was before the Throne. The Angel there ſpoken of, is the Angel or Meſſenger of the Covenant, propheſied of (Mal. 3. 1.) that is, Jeſus Chriſt, 'tis he, he alone, who offers the Incenſe of his own prayers, with the prayers of all Saints, upon the Golden Altar which is before the Throne; and being there repreſented doing ſo, preſently (as it followeth, ver. 5.) There were Voices, and Thunders, and Lightenings, ſignifying the wonderful effects of prayer, till it ſhould come (after many turnings in the world, or, as I may ſay, after a world of turnings) to the Lords turning of Sions captivity, as here of Job's.

Seventhly, Jeſus Chriſt doth not only preſent the prayers of believers to God, but alſo prayeth in them; when Saints pray, he prayeth in them, for he and they are myſtically one: And as Chriſt is in believers the hope of glory (Col. 1. 27.) ſo he is in them the help of duty; and ſo much their help, that without him they can do nothing (John 15. 5.) Now a believers prayer being, in this ſenſe, Chriſts prayer, it cannot but do great things.

Laſtly, As Jeſus Chriſt preſents the prayers of believers to the Father, and prayeth in them, or helps them to pray by the bleſſed and holy Spirit ſent down, according to his gracious promiſe, into their hearts; ſo he himſelf prayeth for them, when they are not actually praying for themſelves. For (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 7. 25.) He ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. The beſt believers do not always make ſupplications for themſelves; but Chriſt is always making, as well as he ever lives to make interceſſion for them. The Apoſtle (ſpeaking of Chriſts interceſſion) uſeth the word in the preſent tenſe or time, which denoteth a continued act (Rom. 8. 34.) Who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us. The Sacrifice of Chriſt (though but once offered) is an Everlaſting Sacrifice; and this other part of his Prieſtly office, his interceſſion, is Everlaſting, as being often, yea always, or everlaſtingly offered. The way or manner of Chriſts making everlaſting interceſſion for us, is a great ſecret; it may ſuffice us to know and believe that he doth it. Now it is chiefly from this everlaſting interceſſion of Chriſt, that both the perſons of the Elect partake of the benefits of his Sacrifice, and that their prayers are anſwered for the obtaining of any good, as alſo for the removal of any evil, as here Jobs was for the turning of his captivity.

Thus I have given a brief accompt of this inference, that if prayer prevails to turn the captivity of others, then much more our own. Prayer hath had a great hand in all the good turns that ever the Lord made for his Church: And when the Lord ſhall fully turn the captivity of Sion, his Church, he will pour out a mighty ſpirit of prayer upon all the Sons of Sion. The Prophet foreſhewed the return of the captivity of the Jews out of Babylon (Jerem. 29. 10.) After ſeventy years be accompliſhed, at Babylon I will viſit you, and perform my good word towards you, in cauſing you to return to this place; for I know the thoughts that I think towards you, ſaith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. But what ſhould the frame of their hearts be at that day? the 12th verſe tells us, And ye ſhall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken. Theſe words may bear a twofold ſenſe. Firſt, The ſenſe of a command; Then ſhall ye call upon me, and then ſhall ye go and pray, that is your duty in that day. Secondly, I conceive they may alſo bear the ſenſe of a promiſe; then ſhall your hearts be inlarged, then I will pour out a ſpirit of prayer upon you, And ye ſhall go and pray unto me; and I will hearken. We may conclude the approach of mercy, when we diſcern the ſpirits of men up in and warm at this duty. Many inquire about the time when the captivity of Sion ſhall fully end? we may find an anſwer to that queſtion beſt, by the inlargement of our own hearts in prayer. David ſpeaking of that, ſaid (Pſal. 102. 17.) He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute (the meaneſt and loweſt ſhrubs in grace, as the word there uſed imports) and not deſpiſe (that is, he will highly eſteem, and therefore anſwer) their prayer: How much more the prayers of the tall Cedars in grace, or of the ſtrong Wreſtlers, when they call upon him, and cry unto him with all their might, day and night? The Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends.

Nor was it a bare turn. As Job did not offer a lean Sacrifice to God in prayer, but the ſtrength of his Soul went out in it; ſo the Lord, in giving him an anſwer, did not give him a lean or ſlight return, but, as it followeth;

Alſo the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before.

The Hebrew is, The Lord added to Job to the double. Some tranſlate too barely, The Lord made an acceſſion, or an addition; but that doth not reach the ſenſe intended: For, a little more than he had before, had been an addition to what he had before; but double is more than a little, or the common notion of an addition; the Lord gave him twice as much, or double, to that great Eſtate which he had before. This doubling of his Eſtate may be taken two ways.

Firſt, Strictly, as four is twice two, and eight twice four. In that ſtrict ſenſe it may be taken here, as to his Perſonal Eſtate; but as to perſons it will not hold, the number of his children was the ſame as before. If we compare this Chapter with the firſt Chapter (verſ. 3.) we find his Eſtate doubled in ſtrict ſenſe: Whereas Job had then ſeven thouſand ſheep, now ſaith this Chapter (verſ. 12.) he had fourteen thouſand ſheep; and whereas before he had three thouſand Camels, now he had ſix thouſand Camels; and whereas before he had five hundred yoak of Oxen, now he had a thouſand yoak of Oxen: And laſtly, whereas before he had five hundred She-aſſes, now he had a thouſand She-aſſes. Here was double in the letter; the Lord added all his Cattle double in number: Yet we need not tye up the word double, or twice as much, ſtrictly to that ſenſe. Therefore,

See the wild conceits of the Jewiſh Rabbins, about the doubling of Jobs Eſtate, in Mercer upon the place.

Secondly, Double may be taken largely, and ſo double, or twice as much, is very much. He added to him double, that is, he made a very great addition, poſſibly in ſome things treble, yea, fourfold to what he had before. And thus the Lord made good what Bildad had ſpoken to Job, cloſely hinting, that ſurely Job lay in ſome ſecret ſin, and was not right with God, becauſe God let him lye in that forlorn condition, and did not ſo much as reſtore him to the ſame, much leſs raiſe him to a better Eſtate than he had before (Chap. 8. 6, 7) If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely, now

In duplum, i. e. in plurimum. Quam plurimum? numerus finitus pro infinito. Jun.

now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous: Though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhould greatly increaſe. It is uſual in the Hebrew, to ſay thoſe things are double, which excel and are great. Thus ſpake Zophar (Chap. 11. 6.) O that God would ſpeak and open his lips againſt thee; and that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, that they are double to that which is. Know therefore, &c. The ſecrets of Divine Wiſdom are double to what is, namely, to what they appear, or are apprehended to be: The Wiſdom of God is double, yea, an hundred-fold more than what man is able to conceive it to be: The ſecrets of Gods Wiſdom are unſearchable, and paſt any Creatures finding out. Thus in other Scriptures donble is put for very much (Iſa. 40. 2.) Speak ye comfortably to Jeruſalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accompliſhed, that her iniquity is pardoned, for ſhe hath received of the Lords hand double for all her ſins. We muſt not think that Jeruſalem made ſatisfaction to the Lord for her ſins, much leſs may we imagine that Jeruſalems ſufferings did exceed her ſins, or the deſert of her ſins: For 'tis ſaid (Ezra 9. 13.) Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities deſerve. And (Lam. 3. 22.) It is of the Lords mercies that we are not conſumed. But the meaning of double there, is plainly this, ſhe hath received a very great puniſhment, the Lord hath made her feel the ſorrowful effects of her ſin fully: For ſaid Daniel (Chap. 9. 12.) Under the whole Heaven hath not been done, as hath been done unto Jeruſalem. This is called a double recompence by another Prophet (Jerem. 16. 18.) I will recompence their iniquity, and their ſin double, becauſe they have defiled my Land. And thus Jeremy prayed againſt the Oppoſers and Deſpiſers of his Propheſie (Chap. 17. 18.) Deſtroy them with double deſtruction. So then, when it is ſaid, the Lord added double, or twice as much to Job as he had before, it noteth, at leaſt, a very great addition to the proſperous Eſtate which Job had before, even in outward things.

Hence obſerve, Firſt; When we are abont Spirituals, the Lord takes occaſion to miniſter to us in Temporals. The Lord not only turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends, but gave him twice as much.

Job did not pray for the doubling of his Eſtate, or for great things in the world; we find him many times giving up his hopes as to Temporals, when he would not give up his hopes as to Spirituals and Eternals: Though he kill me, yet will I truſt in him; he alſo ſhall be my Salvation. He ſubmitted his life to God, in hope of a better life, but he had little or no expectation about the things of this life; yet the Lord gave him abundance with his life, as alſo an abundant, or long life, as we read at the end of this Book. There are two ſpecial reaſons why the Lord gave Job a great increaſe in Temporals.

Firſt, Becauſe in thoſe Old-Teſtament times, the Promiſes went much in Temporals.

Secondly, Becauſe Job having loſt his credit in the world, when he loſt his Eſtate, ſpiritual ſupplies would never have ſet him right in the eye of the world, he had ſuffered, as to his Reputation in ſpirituals, by his loſs in temporals; and therefore the Lord doubled his Eſtate, to vindicate his Reputation in the eye of the world. And the Lord did this unſought, and unthought of by Job; thereſore (as the point ſaith) it is a truth, that while we are careful about ſpirituals, the Lord takes care of our temporals (*Mat.*6.33.) Seek ye firſt the Kingdom of God, and his Righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.

Secondly, Note; The Lord is a bountiful Rewarder of his ſervants, and a liberal repairer of their loſſes.

The Lord is a bountiful Rewarder two ways.

Firſt, For what we do, we ſhall not loſe our labour in ſerving him. God gives good and great wages (1 Cor. 15. 58.) Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; foraſmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord; that is, labour abundantly, for your labour ſhall have an abundant reward: Not only ſhall it not be in vain, but richly rewarded. The Lord is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love (Heb. 6. 10.) The Lord ſhould be unrighteous to forget our labour of love; not becauſe any labour of ours can indebt him to reward us, but becauſe he hath freely promiſed to reward us.

Secondly, The Lord is a bountiful Rewarder of us for what we ſuffer: And that, Firſt, When we ſuffer under his own hand. Secondly, When for his ſake we ſuffer peaceably and patiently under the hand of men. Job was a great ſufferer both ways; he ſuffered greatly under the afflicting hand of God, and he ſuffered greatly under the violent hands and reproachful tongues of men, and the Lord was to him a bountiful Rewarder, with reſpect to both: For he did not only heal his wounded ſtate, and make him up as well as he was before, according to that in (Jerem. 30. 17.) I will reſtore health unto thee, and I will heal thy wounds; but he did it double, inſomuch, that he, who in the days of his former proſperity, was only the greateſt of all the men of the Eaſt, became in the days of his latter proſperity, greater than he had been himſelf. The Lord hath plentiful rewards for the godly, and ſo he hath (though of another kind) for the wicked. He (ſaith David) plentifully rewardeth the prond doer (Pſal. 31. 23.) There is a reward of wrath, as well as a reward of favour. Wrath is the reward of proud men. Thus the Lord will plentifully reward proud Babylon, at one time or other, by ſome hand or other (Revel. 18. 6.) Reward her, even as ſhe rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: In the Cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double. Babylon ſhall at laſt loſe double blood, for the blood that ſhe hath drawn; yea (as the Text ſaith) double, double, that is four times as much; and who knows how much that double unto her donble means? For 'tis ſaid (ver. 7.) How much ſhe hath glorified her ſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her. Now as no man can tell nor imagine, how much ſhe hath glorified her ſelf, nor how deliciouſly ſhe hath lived; ſo no man can tell how much torment and ſorrow ſhe ſhall have! Yea, we read not only of a double, and quadruple, but of a ſeven-fold reward of wrath for evil men (Pſal. 79. 12.) Render unto our Neighbours ſeven-fold in their boſom. And ſurely that Scripture means bad Neighbours. Now as the Lord doth plentifully reward the proud and evil doers in a way of wrath, ſo he will plentifully reward well-doers and well-ſufferers, whether under his own hand, or the hand of man, in ways of mercy. And if ſo, then,

Firſt, Fear not to loſe by God, and that in a twofold reſpect. Firſt, When he cometh to borrow of you for the poor. He that hath pity on the poor, lendeth to the Lord (Prov. 19. 17.) Every time we are asked to give to the poor, upon due occaſion, God ſends to borrow of us, and he will ſurely repay what he hath borrowed; therefore fear not to loſe by God, when he borrows of you for the poor. Secondly, Fear not to loſe by God, when he takes all from you, and makes you poor. Sometimes God doth not come a borrowing, but he cometh a taking; he will have all, whether you will or no: He will ſometimes take all away by fire, by loſſes at Sea or Land; in theſe, and ſuch like caſes, fear not to be loſers by God: But, Firſt, Truſt him as Job did. Secondly, Be patient, as Job was. They that have an intereſt in God and a portion in the Promiſe, need not fear they ſhall loſe a thread or a ſhoe-latchet by God, though his Providence takes all away, and ſtrips them (as it did Job) naked. What God takes from his ſervants, he keeps for them, and will reſtore to them, either in the ſame kind with much more, as he did to Job at laſt, or in ſome other kind, which is much better, as he did to Job at firſt. While Job was deprived of all his worldly good things, God gave him much patience at firſt, ſo that when all was loſt and gone, he could not ſay, Naked came I out of my Mothers Womb, and naked ſhall I return thither: The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. While this frame of heart laſted, it was better than all that he had loſt; and though through the extremity of his pains and temptations it was ſomewhat abated, and his patience ſomewhat ruffled, yet it was never wholly loſt; and when it was worſt with him, his Faith failed not, which was beſt of all.

Now what the Apoſtle ſpake concerning thoſe troubles which befel the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, They happened for examples (1 Cor. 10. 11.) So all theſe troubles and takings away, happened to Job as our example, or (which the Greek word ſignifieth) as a type, that we ſhould be patient under the Lords hand in taking; and remember for the incouragement of our Faith, the Lords bounty in reſtoring. For this end the Apoſtle James calleth us to conſider this dealing of God with Job (Jam. 5. 11.) Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord. What is that to us (may ſome ſay) that Job was patient? Yes, all the matter is to us, it was written for our example and admonition; and ſaith the Apoſtle, ye have not only heard of the patience of Job, but have ſeen the end of the Lord. Here is an exerciſe of thoſe two Noble Senſes, Hearing and Seeing, mentioned, and doubtleſs for great purpoſes both. But why doth he add, Ye have ſeen the end of the Lord? Some interpret theſe words as a ſecond inſtance; the Apoſtle mentioning Job in the former words, and Chriſt in theſe, Ye have ſeen the end of the Lord; that is, how it was with Chriſt in his ſufferings. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt was well rewarded for all that he ſuffered, God highly exalted him (Phil. 2. 7.) becauſe he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs. 'Tis a truth, if we take thoſe latter words of the verſe, Ye have ſeen the end of the Lord, for the iſſue of Chriſts ſufferings. But I rather conceive, that the whole verſe relateth unto Job; and ſo the end of the Lord, in the latter part, is the end which the Lord made with Job. As if the Apoſtle James had ſaid, Hath it not been ſet before your eyes, what end the Lord made with him? or how he gave him double in the end? Be not afraid to loſe by God, either borrowing or taking, for he is a bountiful Rewarder.

Secondly, As we ſhould not be afraid to loſe by God (when he comes either to borrow a part, or (as the caſe was with Job) to take all from us) ſo, let us not be afraid to loſe for God (which was toucht before, together with the former Inference, upon the 11. verſe of the 41. Chapter.) We have no ground in the world of fear, when all that we have in the world is taken from us for Gods ſake, that is, for Righteouſneſs ſake, ſeeing God who here reſtored to Job double, all that himſelf had taken from him, hath alſo promiſed to give his faithful ſervants double for all that is taken from them (upon his account) by men, or which they loſe for him. That's the meaning of the Prophet (Iſa. 61. 7.) For your ſhame ye ſhall have double, that is, ye having ſuffered ſhame, or been put to ſhame for Gods ſake, or for doing that which is honourable and commendable in it ſelf, ſhall receive double. What double? As by ſhame we are to underſtand any evil ſuffered, ſo by double any good promiſed as a reward for ſuffering that evil, eſpecially ſuch good as ſtands in direct oppoſition to that evil. As if it had been ſaid, ye ſhall have double honour for ſhame, and double riches for poverty, and double health for ſickneſs, and double liberty for impriſonment and captivity. 'Tis much to have double reparation of any loſs; yet this doubling is a poor matter to what is promiſed in another place, to thoſe who loſe for God. We have Chriſts word, with an aſſeveration for it (Mat. 19. 28, 29.) Verily, I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me in the Regeneration, when the Son of man ſhall ſit in the Throne of his glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve Thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael: And every one that hath forſaken houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my Name ſake, (here are great ſufferings, but behold a greater reward followeth; not like Jobs, twofold, but an hundred-fold; ſo ſaith that Text) ſhall receive an hundred-fold, and (which is ten-thouſand-fold more than that) ſhall inherit everlaſting life. Be not afraid to loſe for God. Job had double, who loſt by God, and ſo may you; but if ye loſe for God, here is an hundred-fold for you. But ſome may ſay, this hundred-fold is a great way off, in the next life. I anſwer, If it be ſo, yet do not think ye ſhall be loſers; for if ye ſhould never ſee good day more in this world, yet if ye are aſſured of everlaſting life in the world to come, is not that enough? What pittiful ſpirits have they, that are not willing to take their hundred-fold in the life to come! Yet mark it, Jeſus Chriſt doth not put us off ſo neither; therefore another Goſpel expreſſeth the Promiſe fully, to meet with this objection (Mark 10. 29, 30.) when ſome told Chriſt, they had left all to follow him, Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, there is no man that hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my ſake, and the Goſpels, but he ſhall receive an hundred-fold; now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with perſecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life. Jeſus Chriſt gives preſent recompences, as well as future; in this time, as well as in the time, or rather Eternity to come. And that there is a kind of Synchroniſm, or near joyning, in time of payment and loſs, of ſuffering and rewarding, ſome have found in the letter; they have had great worldly exaltations, ſoon after their depreſſions in this world. And Jeſus Chriſt, who made this promiſe, hath made it good in ſpirituals, to the experiences of many thouſands, who have loſt all for him; they have had that at preſent given into their ſouls, which hath been to them, or in their eſtimation, an hundred fold better than what they loſt. They that have indeed ſuffered loſs for Chriſt, never complained of their ſufferings or loſſes; they have often triumphed in them, and rejoyced (as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, 1 Epiſt. 1. 8.) with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory. If any think they do fooliſhly, who ſuffer worldly loſſes for Chriſts ſake, let them remember this return of a hundred-fold, and be aſhamed of their own folly in thinking ſo. It is not fooliſhneſs, but true wiſdom, to loſe much for the gain of more. Are not they wiſe, who loſe one, upon good aſſurance to get an hundred? have we not Chriſts word for it? and is not that good aſſurance that it ſhall be ſo? Sure, no Merchant can put off his goods at a better Market, than he that putteth them all off for God. How rich would men be, if they could get an hundred for one? Such a rich Trade hath Chriſt opened, and they are the wiſeſt Merchants now, who venture in it, and will be ſo accounted in the end, even by thoſe who now call them Fools and Mad-men. That which is loſt for Chriſt, is ſown; and though the ſeed that is caſt into the ground may ſeem caſt away, yet it will ſpring up again. Light is ſown for the righteous, and gladneſs for the upright in heart (Pſal. 97. 11.) And what Chriſt ſaith of the good ground, is moſt true in this caſe, that ſeed of light is ſown in ſuch ground as will bring forth, to ſome thirty, to ſome ſixty, to ſome an hundred-fold. Therefore to conclude this Inference, Be not afraid to loſe for God; he will not only ſee you indempnified, but (at leaſt) doubly rewarded. Job, who once loſt by God, or by the hand of God upon him, was repayed by the ſame hand with him, double in kind; and if we have double in a better kind, double faith in God, and double love to God, and double zeal for God, and double peace in our own Conſciences, this is an hundred-fold better than all we can loſe for him, in or of this world.

VERS. 11.

Then came there unto him all his Brethren, and all his Siſters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his houſe; and they bemoaned him, and comforted him, over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him; every man alſo gave him a piece of Money, and every one an Ear-ring of Gold.

IN the former verſe we have the bleſſed turn of Jobs ſtate in general; The Lord gave him twice as much as he had before: In this verſe begins the particular account of Jobs reſtorings. There were four things wherein Job ſuffered loſs.

First, He ſuffered the loſs of his Eſtate.
Secondly, The loſs of his Children.
Thirdly, The loſs of his Health.
Fourthly, The loſs of his Friends.

Jobs repair begins with his laſt loſs; his Friends were the laſt that he loſt in the day of his affliction, but the firſt that he recovered in the day of his reſtoration. The firſt budding or ſpring of Jobs felicity, after ſo long and ſharp a Winter of ſorrow as he had gone thorough, was the putting forth of freſh and fragrant acts of love from his Ancient Friends, that of late had forſaken him, and left him in the hour of his temptation.

Inter adverſitates Jobi quaſi præcipua erat quod fuerat ab amicis ſuis deſertus, & ideo hujus adverſitatis primò remedium ponitur. Aquin.

This verſe, wherein the account is given about this firſt mercy, I may call, or entitle, The Addreſs of Jobs Friends; and in it we may conſider, Firſt, How they are deſcribed, or what they are called.

Firſt, as to their Relation, His Brethren, his Siſters, and acquaintance came. Secondly, in their quantity and number, they came all: Here is all, all, all; All his Brethren, and all his Siſters, and all that had been of his acquaintance before; there was not one miſſing, not one that forbore to make this friendly addreſs unto him.

Secondly, As we have an account who they were that came to him, ſo what they did when they came; and that is ſet forth four ways in this one verſe. Firſt, They did eat bread with him. Secondly, They bemoaned him. Thirdly, They comforted him. Fourthly, They were very bountiful, and very reſpectful to him; They gave him every one a piece of money, and every one an Ear-ring of gold. Thus you have the ſtate and parts of this verſe, which I call, The addreſs of Jobs friends unto him.

Then came there unto him all his Brethren, and all his Siſters.

Then.] The word in the Hebrew, is the ordinary Copulative And, which hath various rendrings in Scripture, according to the ſtate of the place. Here we tranſlate it Then, which may have a double reference. Firſt, to the turn of his captivity, Then they came. Secondly, to his prayer for his friends, and the Lords acceptance of him, when God had ſo eminently declared his favour to him, and his friends, upon his interceſſion, Then there came unto him.

All his Brethren, and all his Siſters.] Brethren and Siſters are taken two ways in Scripture.

Firſt, Strictly; and ſo they that are of, or have the ſame Parents, at leaſt one of them, are Brethren and Siſters.

Secondly, Brethren and Siſters are taken largely, for all of the Kindred. The Kindred of Chriſt are called his Brethren (Mark 3. 31.) Then came his Brethren, and his Mother, ſtanding without, that is, his Kindred; for whether Chriſt had any Brother, in a ſtrict ſenſe, as born of the ſame Mother, we have nothing from Scripture to affirm; it is generally agreed that he had not, his Brethren were his Kindred at large. Abraham ſpake truly, though not the whole truth (Gen. 20. 12.) when he called Sarah his Siſter, that is, his Kinſwoman. Moſes called Iſrael Brother to the Edomites, who were diſtant from that people many degrees; they deſcending from Eſau, theſe from Jacob (Numb. 20. 14.) Thus ſaith thy Brother Iſrael; that is, Iſrael that is of thy blood, though a great way off, Iſaac being their common Father. Thus here, all Jobs Brethren and Siſters are all his Kindred; and not only theſe, but,

All that were of his acquaintance before.] The Hebrew is, All that knew him before, that is, had familiarity and converſe with him before. Chriſt (Mat. 7. 22.) ſaid of thoſe that did ſo hotly preſs acquaintance upon him, I know you not, ye are not of thoſe that I know, or have had fellowſhip with, you are none of my acquaintance. So that there was a collection of all Jobs Relations and Friends at that time, they all flockt to him, and thronged about him, as to and about ſome ſtrange ſight; the fame of his reſtoration was ſoon blown all the Country over. Hence the Septuagint render the words paraphraſtically; All his Brethren heard all that had befallen him; and ſo they came.

Audierunt omnes fratres, quæcunque acciderant ei, & venerunt. Sept.

But, where was his Wife? There is no mention here of her return; ſhe had ſpoken as a fooliſh woman (Chap. 2. 10.) and did not anſwer the duty of her relation after that, as he complained (Chap. 19. 17.) My breath is ſtrange to my Wife, though I intreated for the Childrens ſake of mine own body; yet doubtleſs ſhe returned to her duty, and honoured him as her Head and Husband, now at laſt, elſe the mercy had not been compleat, but defective in a very conſiderable part of it.

Now, in that Jobs reſtoring, or the repair of his loſſes, began with the return of his friends:

> Obſerve; The loſs of friends is a great and grievous loſs.

He that loſeth the affection of friends, loſeth a great poſſeſſion, a great intereſt. Friends indeed are great helps, great helpers; to be in a friendleſs condition, is to be in a helpleſs condition; to have friends, is a very valuable mercy. Let us bleſs God that we have men to friend us, above all, that God is our friend.

Secondly, Theſe words, Then came all his Brethren, imply, that when he was in an afflicted condition, none of his friends came at him, neither thoſe that are here called his Brethren and Siſters, nor thoſe that are called his acquaintance.

> Hence obſerve; In times of affliction worldly friends will leave us, and godly friends may prove ſtrange to us.

Doubtleſs, among thoſe Brethren, Siſters and acquaintance of Job, ſome, that I ſay not, many, were godly, yet even they left him in the day of his diſtreſs. Men are but men, and they oftentimes ſhew themſelves unconſtant to man. As Chriſt had thoſe that followed him for the loaves, ſo have we too. Friendſhip followeth the purſe, the bag; and when all is gone, ſuch friends are gone. When Chriſt himſelf was in affliction, thoſe that were in near relation to him, his very Diſciples, left him; they all left him, and Peter denied him. When the Apoſtle Paul was in a great affliction, and ſtood as a priſoner, to anſwer for his life before Nero, his friends durſt not appear; At my firſt anſwer (ſaith he, 2 Tim. 4. 16.) no man ſtood with me, all men forſook me. He had not a friend that would own him, nor appear for him, in the time of his affliction and perſecution; and he prayed that God would not lay it to their charge, that they had been thus unfriendly to him.

Then, Firſt, Let us not truſt in friends, no, not in a Brother; and not only, not in a Brother at large, but not in a Brother in the ſtricteſt ſenſe, not in a Brother of the ſame blood and bowels with us, no, not in a Brother of the ſame faith with us (Mich. 7. 5.) Truſt ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy boſom. Truſt not in neareſt friends, no, not in godly friends; they may fail: Though we are to truſt them ſo, as not to ſuſpect them, yet we are not to truſt to them ſo, as to relye upon them, or to make them our ſtrength; for then they prove Egyptian Reeds, which will not only not ſupport, but wound us. That's good counſel (Iſa. 2. 21.) Ceaſe ye from man (let him be who he will, though a Brother, though of moſt intrinſick and neareſt acquaintance, though never ſo great and potent, yet ceaſe from him; the reaſon there given is) his breath is in his Noſtrils; the man is frail, his life is ſhort and uncertain, he may not laſt long. And we may take another reaſon from the point in hand; his love is uncertain, as well as his life, and his affections ſeldom laſt long; let us therefore have weaned affections from thoſe that affect us, and are friendly to us.

Then, Secondly, 'Tis our wiſdom to get Chriſt for a friend; he is a friend for ever: He that would have a friend to ſtick to him in adverſity, as well as proſperity, let him get Chriſt to be his friend, who is unchangeable, whoſe love fails not; that's our greateſt and ſureſt intereſt. Chriſt having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end (John 13. 1.) That's the ſpirit of unfeigned friendſhip (Prov. 17. 17.) A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity. That's true of a real friend, who lives up to the rule of friendſhip, He loveth at all times; and therefore to the end. When the Prophet Malachy ſaith (Chap. 1. 6.) A Son honoureth his Father, his meaning is, a Son ſhould or ought to honour his Father; or, a Son who knoweth his duty, will honour his Father; ſo a friend ought to love at all times, and a true friend will: yet that Scripture in the Proverbs is chiefly true of Chriſt, and abſolutely true of him only; he alone is ſuch a friend as loves at all times. Hence that Divine Challenge (Rom. 8. 35.) Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? And then the Apoſtle proceeds from who, to what. As no perſon, ſo no thing, can ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt. Shall tribulation, or anguiſh, or peril, or ſword? ſhall theſe ſeparate us from the love of God? no, theſe ſhall not, theſe cannot; theſe cannot make Chriſt ſtrange to us, nor love us the leſs; he loves in tribulation, as well as out of tribulation; in ſtreights, as well as in our greateſt inlargements; in ſickneſs, as well as in health; in diſgrace with men, as well as when moſt honoured and cryed up by them; when naked, as well as when cloathed; as well in rags, as in the richeſt array. Hence that confident concluſion (verſ. 38.) I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. And if ſo, then we ſee where our true intereſt lieth: Let us make ſure of Chriſt; he will never leave us, all Earthly friends may. Friends are a great mercy, but they are not a ſure mercy.

Again, Conſider Jobs friends, who came not at him when in that afflicted condition; yet as ſoon as ever God turned his captivity, and made him proſper in the world, then they would own him, then they came.

Hence note, Thirdly; Such as are no friends in adverſity, will readily ſhew themſelves friendly in proſperity.

That they came then, is an intimation, if not a proof, that they came not before; but then they came. What Chriſt ſpake in another caſe, I may apply by way of alluſion to this; Where the carkaſs is, thither will the Eagles be gathered together. When Job was up, his friends appear'd. All are ready to worſhip the riſing Sun. When the face of things and times change with us, then the faces of friends change towards us, then they have other reſpects and countenances for us; this ſpirit of the world hath been anciently obſerved, even by Heathens; If you be happy, or reſtored to happineſs, you ſhall number many friends, though you had none before. Such friends, are like thoſe birds that viſit our Coaſts in Summer, when 'tis warm weather, when every thing flouriſheth, and is green, then ſome birds viſit us, who all the Winter, when 'tis cold, Froſt and Snow, leave us.

Si fueris fœlix multos numerabis amicos. Tempora ſi fuerint nubila ſolus eris.

Farther, it may be conceived, that ſeveral of Jobs friends left him, not only upon the occaſion of his poverty and want, but upon the ſuppoſition of his hypocriſie and wickedneſs; many of them might have the ſame opinion of him, which thoſe three had, who particularly dealt with him, that ſurely he was a bad man, becauſe the Lord brought ſo much evil upon him. Now when the Lord reſtored Job, they had another, a better opinion of him, the Lord alſo giving a viſible teſtimony of his accepting Job.

Hence note, Fourthly; God will one time or other vindicate the integrity of his faithful ſervants, and ſet them right in the opinion of others.

God ſuffered Jobs integrity to lie under a Cloud of ſuppoſed hypocriſie, but at laſt the Lord reſtored him to his Credit, as well as to his Eſtate, and made his unkind, and not only ſuſpitious, but cenſorious friends, acknowledge that he was upright and faithful. The Lord promiſeth (Pſalm 37. 6.) To bring forth the righteouſneſs of his ſervants as the light, and their judgment as the noon-day; that is, a right judgment in others concerning them, as well as the rightneſs of their judgment in what they have done and been, or his own moſt righteous judgment in favour of them. They who had a wrong judgment, and took a falſe meaſure of Job (meaſuring him by the outward Diſpenſations of God, and judging of his heart by his ſtate and of his ſpirit by the face of his affairs) theſe were at laſt otherwiſe perſwaded of him. 'Tis, as the way, ſo the ſin and folly of many, to judge upon appearance, upon the appearance of Gods outward dealings; they conclude men good or bad, as their outward condition is good or bad; and therefore the Lord to redeem the credit of his faithful ſervants that lie under ſuch miſapprehenſions, ſends proſperity, and manifeſts his gracious acceptance of them, that men of that perverſe opinion may be convinced, and delivered out of their errour.

Note, Fifthly; The Lords favouring us, or turning the light of his countenance towards us, can ſoon cauſe men to favour us, and ſhine upon us.

See what a change the Lord made at that time, both in the ſtate of things, and in the hearts of men, when the Lord outwardly forſook Job; friends forſook him, children mockt him, acquaintance deſpiſed him, his very ſervants ſlighted him; yet no ſooner did the Lord return in the manifeſtations of his favour, but they all return, deſiring to ingratiate themſelves with him, and ſtrive who ſhall ingage him moſt. God can quickly give us new friends, or reſtore the old. The hearts of all men are in the hand of the Lord, who turns them from us, or to us, as he pleaſeth. When God manifeſts his favour, he can command our favour with men. Though that which is a real motive of the Lords favour to his people, their holineſs, and holy walkings, gets them many Enemies, and they are hated for it by many; yet the Lord diſcovering or owning the graces of his ſervants, by ſignal favours, often gets them credit, and ſets them right in the opinion of men. Thus it was with Job; all his friends returned to him, upon the Lords high reſpect to him in turning his captivity.

Explent contumelias honoribus, detrimenta muneribus, execrationes precibus.

Again, in that Jobs friends came to him;

Obſerve, Sixthly; It is the duty of friends to be friendly, to come to and viſit one another.

Cui dominus favet; ei omnia favent.

It is a duty to do ſo in both the ſeaſons, or in all the changes of our life: It is a duty to do ſo in times of proſperity, when God ſhines upon our Tabernacle. When any receive extraordinary mercies, it is the duty of friends to ſhew them extraordinary courteſies, and to bleſs God for them, and with them. When Elizabeths Neighbours and Couſins heard how the Lord had ſhewed great mercy upon her, they rejoyced with her (Luke 1. 58.) It is a duty to rejoyce with thoſe that rejoyce, and to come to them that we may rejoyce with them. It is a duty alſo to viſit thoſe that mourn, and to mourn with them. Friendly viſits are a duty in all the ſeaſons of our lives.

Once more. Then came all his Brethren, &c. It was late e're they came, but they came.

Hence note; It is better to perform a duty late, than not at all.

They had a long time, even all the time of his long affliction neglected, or at leaſt ſlackned this duty of viſiting Job; yet they did not reaſon thus with themſelves; It is in vain to viſit him now, or our viſiting him now may be thought but a flattering with him, or a fawning upon him: No, though they had neglected him before, they would not add new to their old incivilities. We ſay of repentance (which is a coming to God) Late repentance is ſeldom true, yet true repentance is never too late. None ſhould think it too late to come to God, though they have long neglected him; nor ſhould ſinners, who have long neglected God, be diſcouraged: Though it be beſt for us, and our duty, to repent betimes; yet God will not refuſe a ſinner at any time, who indeed repents. Now as late repentance, ſo any late duty, is better than none, or than a total neglect of it. Jobs friends came to him, though late, and were friendly received. But what came they for? or what did they when they came? That's ſet forth in four things, as was ſhewed in opening the Text.

Firſt, The Text tells us, They did eat bread with him in his houſe.

I ſhall not ſtay upon that nicety which ſome take notice of, that when bread and water are named together, they always ſignifie poor fare (1 Kings 18. 4.) Obadiah fed the Prophets whom he ſecured from the fury of Jezabel in Caves, with bread and water: He could not feaſt them there, but gave them what might keep them alive. So that threatning (Iſa. 3. 1.) imports they ſhould not have neceſſaries. But when bread is put alone, that ſignifieth (ſay they) a full, or at leaſt a very competent and comfortable proviſion (2 Sam. 9. 7.) And ſo to eat bread together, is to feed liberally together. Yet I find theſe two, bread and water, put together, and ſignifying a full Table in one place of Scripture. When that Syrian Army, ſmitten with blindneſs, was led by Eliſha into Samaria, the Prophet ſaid (2 Kings 6. 22.) Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink; then it followeth, He (that is, the King of Iſrael) prepared great proviſions for them. The greatneſs of the proviſion which the King prepared for them, is not ſpoken of only with reſpect to their number, (an Army being many, cannot be fed with a little) but with reſpect to the Nobleneſs of their Entertainment; which yet I conceive was but anſwerable to what the Prophet deſired, when he ſaid, Set bread and water before them. As if the meaning were, Make them good chear: So that bread and water may imply plenty, as well as bread alone. Jobs friends

Did eat bread with him.] Not the bread of Mourners (as ſome expound) of which we read (Deut. 26. 14. Hoſ. 9. 4.) but the bread of rejoycers. I ſhall not omit to mind the Reader of what one of the Ancients meditated upon this paſſage. Job (ſaith he) doth here preſigure Chriſt after his Reſurrection, reſtored to his honours, and honoured, not

Præfigurat hic Jobus Chriſtum poſt reſurrectionem, honoribus reſtitutum, honoratum non tantum ab Apoſtolis, ſed etiam patribus Judæis & Gentilibus fidelibus, & in domo ejus Eccleſiæ convivantibus, Paſſionem ipſius cum dolore recolentibus, & in cœleſti aula cum ipſo panem vitæ comeſturis. Greg. l. 35. Moral. c. 9, 10, 11.

not only by his Apoſtles, but alſo by the Fathers, both Jews and Gentiles, the faithful flocking to him, and feaſting with him in his houſe the Church, there with ſorrow remembring his ſufferings, and in that Heavenly Court eating with him the Bread of Life. Chriſt after his Reſurrection called his Apoſtles to eat bread with him; as here, after Jobs reſtitution, which may be called his Reſurrection, 'tis ſaid, All his friends came and did eat bread with him in his houſe.

Hence note; For friends to eat, yea, to feaſt ſoberly together, is not only lawful, but ſometimes a duty.

The Creatures are given to us, not only for our neceſſity, but for our comfort, and to maintain ſociety. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 8. 15.) Then I commended mirth, becauſe a man hath no better a thing under the Sun, than to eat, and drink, and to be merry. He ſpeaks not of a ſenſual mirth and eating, like voluptuous Epicures, but of eating with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, as 'tis noted of the Primitive Saints (Acts 2. 46.) There is no worldly thing better than to eat and drink with ſobriety in the uſe of the Creature, and with ſingleneſs of heart one towards another. To uſe what we have, is better than the having of it. To eat together is good, with theſe limitations or cautions. Firſt, If we eat to the glory of God (1 *Cor.*10.31.) Secondly, If we eat with joy in God (*Eccl.*9.7.) Thirdly, If we eat taſting and remembring the goodneſs of God (*Deut.*6.11,12.) Fourthly, If we eat fearing to offend God, and wrong our ſelves with exceſs (*Prov.*23.1,2. *Luk.*21.34.) Fifthly, If we have a ſenſe of the afflictions of others (Amos 6.6.) eſpecially of thoſe who have nothing to eat. Sixthly, If we eat with thankfulneſs, or giving thanks to God who ſatisfies our hunger (Mark 8.6. John 6.11.) Seventhly, If we eat with charitableneſs, giving a portion of what we have in plenty, to thoſe that are in want, and hungry (*Jam.*2.15,16.)

Again, They came to eat bread with Job in his houſe. See the nobleneſs of Jobs ſpirit. Doubtleſs when they came, they made their Apologies, pleaded their Excuſe, and confeſſed that they had failed in friendſhip, and had not lived up to the Law of Love. Courteous and noble-ſpirited Job took all well, paſt by all diſcourteſies, welcomed and imbraced them: He did not only not upbraid them with former unkindneſſes, why came ye not to me in the day of my trouble and affliction, in the day of my diſtreſs and ſorrow? where were ye then? Thus ſome would have rounded them; ye come to me when all is well with me; but where were ye when I wanted comfort and company? Job, I ſay, did not only not upbraid them with their former unkindneſſes, when they came to him, but took their coming kindly. When the Elders of Gilead came to Jepthah, to deſire him to be their Captain againſt the Children of Ammon, he ſaid (*Judg.*11.7.) Did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my fathers houſe? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in diſtreſs? Jepthah caſt their ill carriage towards him in their teeth, and only not rejected them and their requeſt. Thus Job might have ſaid, why did you leave me in the time of my diſtreſs? &c. but we have no ſuch language from this good man, not a word of that.

Hence note; It becomes us to accept the love of formerly unkind friends, and not to twit them in the teeth with their unkindneſſes.

Job well underſtood that it was a part of his tryal and burden from God, that his friends forſook him, and were once uncivil to him; therefore he would not burden them with it. A godly man conſiders, it is of the Lord if friends prove unfriendly to him, and that it is for tryal whether he can truſt upon and cleave unto God alone when friends leave him. Thus to receive unfriendly friends, is to be perfect (in our meaſure) as God is perfect. How unkindly have we dealt with God! and yet when we come to him he accepts of us. They that are ſenſible how they have refuſed the Lord ſometimes, and that he hath yet graciouſly accepted of them, they (I ſay) will be ready to accept of friends that have been froward and unkind to them: It is much the will of God that we ſhould do ſo, and 'tis a great part of our conformity unto God when we do ſo. It was very well that Job gave fair reſpect to his friends, and treated them lovingly when they came to him; and it was well, and but their duty that they came to him.

Yet this was not all they did; Jobs friends did not only come and eat bread with him (that had been but according to the cuſtom of common friends) they went further,

They bemoaned him.] That's the ſecond friendly office which they did him. The word ſignifies, to ſhake the head; ſo the Latine Tranſlation renders it, His friends came to him, and moved their heads over him, ſo expreſſing their compaſſion. That geſture of moving the head was uſed ſometimes in deriſion, ſometimes in admiration, in which latter ſenſe the Septuagint take it here, They comforted him, and wondered at all the evils that God had brought upon him. It might well move wonder, that ſo good a man ſhould ſuffer ſo much evil; yet this geſture of ſhaking the head, is rarely, if at all uſed in way of admiration; whereas, in way of compaſſion, nothing is more uſual, and it complieth fully with our tranſlation, they bemoaned him. As they feaſted with him, ſo they bemoaned him, and condoled his former ſad ſtate; and to do ſo, is a proper act of ſincere love and friendſhip.

Moverunt ſuper eum caput. Conſolati ſunt eum & mirati ſunt ſuper omnibus, &c. נוד eſt propriè migrare, unde pro condolere ſumitur; quod qui aliquem ſolari volunt & ejus vicem dolere, è loco ſuo ut id faciant ſoleant migrare.

Hence note; It is our duty to pity and bemoan the afflicted.

We read of Ephraim bemoaning himſelf (*Jer.*31.18.) and there is a twofold bemoaning of our ſelves. Firſt, With reſpect to the ſins that we have committed. Secondly, There is a bemoaning of our ſelves, as to our afflictions; and poſſibly both are to be underſtood in that place concerning Ephraim. 'Tis a duty alſo with reſpect to others; we ought to bemoan thoſe that are in ſufferings, and thoſe that have ſinned, as well as our own ſins or ſufferings. And though that which gives us the greateſt occaſion of bemoaning others is their ſin, yet 'tis a great duty alſo to bemoan thoſe that are under ſufferings, and to have bowels of compaſſion, or a fellow-feeling of their afflictions.

But it may be objected, what need had Jobs Brethren to bemoan him now that he was delivered out of his afflictions, and his captivity turned? were not theſe bemoanings improper and unſeaſonable?

I anſwer, Firſt, Though Job was come out of his afflictions, yet he was but very lately come out of them; he was yet, as it were, upon the borders of ſorrow, and was come only a ſtep out of his troubles; ſo that his tears were then ſcarce wiped away, or dried up, and the ſorrow of his late adverſity was even forced to intermingle with the joy of his newly begun proſperity: The remembrance of his affliction was, doubtleſs, yet very ſtrong upon him, and the pain of it ſcarce off him; he had, as yet, a taſt of the wormwood and gall of that moſt bitter Cup, of which he had, a little before, drunk ſo deeply; his wound was but in healing, not quite healed; and therefore they might well bemoan him, as to his former afflictions, in that morning or day-break of his mercies. Joy and ſorrow uſe to conflict together, and ſtrive for maſteries, whether the one ſhall keep, or the other get the ground, at the beginning of all great changes.

Secondly, This act of Jobs friends in bemoaning of him, might reſpect not only the abiding ſenſe of his former affliction, but the ſharpneſs and ſoreneſs of it, while it was upon him; ſo that, as his own remembrance of his former ſufferings might ſtill hang upon him, ſo while his Brethren, and other Viſitants, remembred how grievous and tedious his ſufferings had been, it might well ſtir their compaſſions, and cauſe them to bemoan him.

Thirdly, Job had none to bemoan him, while the affliction was actually upon him; Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, ſaid he in the 16th Chapter, yet found little or no pity from any. Now that being a great part of his ſuffering, that he had none to pity him while he ſuffered, the Lord ſent his Brethren to him, when he was new come out of his ſufferings, to perform that duty to him, which ſhould have been done him while he ſuffered.

Further, Becauſe we ought not only to pity and bemoan our friends in adverſity, but to help them out, and make a perfect cure; therefore Jobs friends proceed to that duty alſo: For, having bemoaned him, the Text ſaith,

They comforted him.] That is, they uſed all the means they could to comfort him, they gave him comfortable words, cordial conſolations. Job himſelf had been a great comforter of others (as Eliphaz acknowledged in the 4th Chapter) and now he hath his comforters; even they comforted him concerning his former miſeries, who formerly had been miſerable comforters.

From the method of their proceeding: Firſt, They bemoaned him; and, Secondly, They comforted him;

Note; We can never truly comfort others, till we have pittied others.

Comforting begins at pitying. It is poſſible to pity one, and not to comfort him: Some will give bemoaning words, yet are not able to miniſter real comforts; ſo then, there may be-pitying without comforting, but there cannot be comforting without pitying. God himſelf is thus expreſt (2 Cor. 1. 3, 4.) Firſt, He is called, The Father of Mercies; that is, he is full of pity, full of compaſſionate bowels. And then, Secondly, He is called, The God of all Conſolation. He is a comforting God, becauſe a pitying God. If God were not pitiful and compaſſionate, we ſhould have no comfort from him: ſo it is with men, if we pity not others, we cannot comfort them. Job called his friends miſerable Comforters (Chap. 16. 2.) They came to mourn with him, and to comfort him (Chap. 2. 11.) but had they more affectionately mourned with him, they would have more effectually comforted him. They did not pity him enough in his miſery, and ſo they proved but miſerable comforters to him.

Secondly, From the work it ſelf,

Obſerve; To comfort thoſe that are in affliction is our duty, and a work of charity.

To miniſter comfort to the ſorrowful, is a greater point of charity, than to miniſter bread to the hungry, or cloathing to the naked. As the ſoul is better than the body, ſo thoſe acts of charity, which offer relief to the ſoul in any kind, are better than thoſe by which the body is relieved. Though to give bread be more coſtly to us than good words (we uſe to ſay good words are cheap) yet good and comfortable words are worth much more than bread, they are better than gold, yea, than fine gold, ſweeter alſo than the honey, and the honey-comb. The Apoſtle gave this duty in charge to believers (1 Theſ. 5. 11.) Comfort your ſelves together, and edifie one another. And at the 14th verſ. Now we exhort you, Brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak. The weak, in the latter words, are the ſame with the feeble in the former; and the ſupport ſpoken of in the one, is nothing elſe but the comfort ſpoken of in the other. Comfort to a feeble mind, is like a Prop or a Pillar to a feeble building, the ſupporter of it.

And becauſe it is ſo important a work to comfort feeble minds, I ſhall briefly name ſome ſpecial caſes, wherein the mind of man is feeble, and then hint what word of comfort is moſt proper for its ſupport, in each caſe.

Firſt, If the mind be infeebled by outward wants, apply that comfortable Scripture (Mat. 6. 32, 33.) Your Father knoweth that ye have need of thoſe things; which if received by faith, will give the mind great ſupport in that caſe.

Secondly, In caſe of the loſs or death of friends, the Apoſtle hath put words into our mouths for the comforting of ſuch (1 Theſ. 4. 13.) chiefly theſe two ways. Firſt, By remembring that their friends are only aſleep in Jeſus, or gone to ſleep in the boſom of Jeſus. Secondly, That they ſhall be raiſed again at the coming of Jeſus.

Thirdly, In caſe of ſuffering and perſecution, read comfort and ſupport, Mat. 5. 11, 12, 13. 1 Pet. 4. 12, 13, 14.

Fourthly, In caſe of bodily ſickneſs, or any chaſtenings from the hand of God, we have a ſtore or treaſure of comforting words, Heb. 12. from the 5th to the 14th verſe.

Fifthly, In caſe of deſertion, or Gods hiding his face, take comfort from Iſa. 50. 10. Iſa. 54, 7, 8.

Sixthly, When any are under the ſenſe of Divine Wrath for ſin, they may take comfort by meditating all thoſe Scriptures which hold out the free grace of God to ſinners, and the full ſatisfaction which Chriſt hath made for ſin to the Juſtice of God, and ſo for deliverance from the wrath which is to come (1 Theſ. 1. 10.) Theſe are the principal caſes wherein we need a comforter; and moſt of theſe, if not all, met in Jobs caſe. He was poor, and had loſt all, that was the firſt caſe; his children were dead, that was the ſecond; he was perſecuted, vexed, and reproached, that was a third; he was ſick and weak in body, that was a fourth; he was under grievous deſertions, that was a fifth; he was alſo under the ſenſe of wrath, the Arrows of the Almighty drunk up his ſpirits. All theſe evils God brought upon him, and ſome of them in the higheſt degree; and though he were then got out of them all, yet (as was ſaid before) being got but a little way out of them, he needed comfort, and therefore his new-come old friends and acquaintance, bemoaned and comforted him, as a man newly come out of great affliction.

And we ſhould be much in this duty of comforting others, upon theſe conſiderations.

Firſt, Comfort upholds the Soul, when burdened or weakned, from ſinking.

Secondly, Comfort quiets the Soul, when toſt up and down as with a Tempeſt; comforts wiſely and ſeaſonably miniſtred, will make a great calm. Comfort is the repoſe and reſt of the Soul.

Thirdly, Comfort quickens and revives the Soul when dying away with ſorrow; comforts are cordials: For which cauſe we faint not (2 Cor. 4. 16.) And what the cauſe was which kept them from fainting, we may find both in the verſe going before, in thoſe words, All things are for your ſakes (verſ. 15.) and in the verſe following, Our light affliction, &c. (verſ. 17.) Comforts either prevent and keep us from qualms and ſwoonings, or bring us out of them again. Give wine to him that is of a heavy heart; let him drink and forget his ſorrow (Prov. 30. 6, 7.) Give him this wine of comfort, and it will renew his ſpirit more than wine.

Fourthly, Comfort confirms and eſtabliſheth the Soul, when we are ready to let go our hold. The Apoſtle ſent Timotheus, to eſtabliſh and comfort the Theſſalonians concerning their faith (1 Epiſt. 3. 2.) that is, to eſtabliſh them in the faith (both in the doctrine and grace of faith) by comforting them.

Jobs friends might ſee cauſe of comforting him upon many conſiderations, poſſibly upon moſt of theſe: The Text ſaith only, They comforted him

Over all the evil which the Lord had brought upon him.

The Plaiſter was as broad as the ſore, or they adminiſtred as many Plaiſters as there were ſores; They comforted him over all the evil, &c. This directs us to a great point of holy prudence in comforting the ſorrowful, even to comfort them in or about every thing, which hath been an occaſion of their ſorrow. When we are to ſtop the holes of a leaking Veſſel, if we ſtop three or four, and leave but one, we indanger all the liquor in the Veſſel; you were as good ſtop none at all, as not ſtop all: ſo it is in this caſe; therefore ſee how wiſely Jobs friends carried it, They comforted him over all the evil

Which the Lord had brought upon him.] And all that was the evil of ſuffering. The Lord is the bringer of ſuch evils upon all that ſuffer them, even upon his deareſt and moſt faithful ſervants; thoſe evils come from him who is only good, and altogether good: The Lord takes theſe evils to himſelf, I create evil (Iſa. 45. 7.) and ſaith the Prophet (Amos 3. 6.) Shall there be evil in a City, and the Lord hath not done it? As the Lord owns theſe kind of evils, ſo we honour God in acknowledging him the Author of them. Our croſſes are of God, as well as our comforts; our poverty, as well as our riches; our ſickneſs, as well as our health. This point hath occurred more than once from other paſſages in this Book, and therefore I ſhall add no more now.

This was the third labour of love which the Brethren of Job beſtowed upon him, They comforted him over all the evil which the Lord had brought upon him.

Yet this was not all, they did not only beſtow a mouthful of good words upon him (I ſpeak not lightly of good words, they are a weighty piece of charity) Good words are much better (as was toucht before) than Gold and Silver, and may be much more beneficial and uſeful to the Receiver, than thouſands of Gold and Silver: Yet, I ſay, Jobs friends did not only beſtow a mouthful of good words upon him, for the removal of his inward grief, but they brought their handsful of good things to beſtow upon him, for the making up of his outward loſſes; and this was the fourth act or office of love which they did him, as it followeth;

Every man alſo gave him a piece of money, and every one an Ear-ring of gold.

Here was real kindneſs, as well as verbal. Though good words (as was ſaid) be a great charity, yet 'tis no charity to give nothing but good words where more is needed, unleſs this be our caſe, that indeed we have nothing more to give. The charity of ſome is only in words, to thoſe who are in extream need of more; and it is only ſo, not becauſe they have no more in their hands to give, but becauſe they have no hearts to give more. To ſay to a naked or hungry one, be cloathed and fed, or to give a large parcel of condoling & bemoaning words, and then do nothing, no not give a doit, for the ſupply of his wants, is this love or charity? Jobs friends loved him now, not in word, and in tongue only, but indeed, and in truth; their deeds ſhewed the truth of their love.

They gave him every one of them a piece of money.

There are two readings of this clauſe. The word which we here render a piece of money, ſignifies alſo a ſheep; according to which Mr. Broughton tranſlates, and ſo do others, They gave him each one a Lamb, we ſay, a piece of money; the ſame word ſignifying both, as is plain from other Scriptures (Gen. 37. 19.) And he (that is, Jacob) bought a parcel of a field, where he had ſpread his Tent, at the hand of the children of Hamor, Shechems Father, for an hundred pieces of money, or lambs, as we put in the Margin. The ſame thing is reported again, in the ſame words (Joſh. 24. 32.) Now the reaſon why that word is rendred both a lamb, and a piece of money, is, ſay ſome, becauſe money in thoſe times bare the ſtamp or figure of a Lamb upon it; as in ſome times and places money or Coyn was ſtamped with the figure of an Oxe; from whence came that Proverb, The Oxe is upon his tongue, that is, he ſpeaks as he is bribed. A ſecond reaſon given of it is, becauſe the riches of the Ancients was moſt in Cattle; and that kind of riches being as money, by which all things are valued, and by which they made their payments, therefore the ſame word was uſed for Cattle, and for Coyn or money. The Latine word for Money, is alſo derived from another, which ſignifies Cattle. And it is reported by Pliny, that Severus firſt ſtampt money with the Effigies or Image of Sheep and Oxen.

Dederunt ei quiſque pecudem unam. Bez.

Pecunia à pecore dicta eſt. Plin. *l.*18. *c.*3. Severus rex ovium boumque effigie primus as aſſignavit. Plin.

They gave him every one a piece of money, or a lamb.

Some are moſt for that reading, they gave him a Lamb, becauſe that ſeems moſt anſwerable to the loſs of Job; he loſt all his Cattle, and now every one brought him a Lamb: But it is not much to the matter, whether we take their reading or ours. If it were a Lamb, it was worth a piece of money; and if it were a piece of money, it would buy a Lamb.

But why did they bring Job either a piece of money, or a Lamb? I anſwer.

Firſt, To teſtifie their renewed friendſhip, or as a ſignification of their love, and ſo to ingratiate themſelves with him.

Secondly, It might be towards the repair of his loſſes; every one brought him ſomewhat; yet I conceive they beſtowed thoſe gifts upon him, rather as an honour than a relief, yet poſſibly they might intend both in giving them. Upon the one account or the other, or upon both, the Lord brought over Jobs friends to congratulate him with theſe preſents. It hath been an ancient uſage to preſent Princes with gifts, in way of honour and homage, as appears plainly from what is ſaid of the refuſal of ſome called Sons of Belial (a Title of diſgrace beſtowed by the Spirit of God upon none but the worſt of men) to bring preſents unto Saul, the firſt King of Iſrael (1 Sam. 10. 27.) And many Superiours in any kind think themſelves ſlighted, if they have not gifts from their Inferiours. Job was a Prince, the greateſt man of the Eaſt, and for that reaſon it was but a duty in his friends to bring him preſents. Every one gave him a piece of money (or a lamb.)

And every one an Ear-ring of gold.] There is ſome diſpute what this Ear-ring of gold was. The word is tranſlated (Iſa. 3. 21.) A Noſe-jewel; which was not a Jewel to hang upon the Noſe, but a Jewel that was faſtned upon the Forehead, and hung down towards the Noſe. In other places it is called an Ear-ring (Gen. 24. 47. Gen. 35. 4. Exod. 35. 22.) Such Jewels were doubtleſs uſed, and worn by great perſons in the Land of Uz, where Job dwelt, and was chief among them. Jobs friends brought him not only Preſents of Money or Cattle, which are uſeful to all, but Jewels, which are Ornamentals, and uſed only by perſons of Noble Quality, or of great Eſtate. An Ear-ring, in ſome mens Ears, would be no more becoming, nor better placed, than a Jewel in a Swines Snout; to which Solomon compares beauty in a woman without wit, diſcretion, and underſtanding. A Jewel, or an Ear-ring, is not for every mans wearing. The preſents brought Job, ſhewed him a perſon of honour. Every one alſo gave him a piece of money, and every one an Ear-ring of gold.

Gemmas à fronte pendentes. Vulg. Monile demiſſum. Sept.

Honoraria obtulerunt. Jun. Munera hæc erant, tum amicitiæ, tum obſequii ſymbola. Sic enim viri principes muneue ſalutabantur.

Hence note, Firſt; To ſend or bring gifts in many caſes, is not only lawful, but neceſſary, and a duty.

Though both the giving and taking of gifts, heareth ill in Scripture and common language, yet there are ſix ſorts of gifts which may lawfully be given and taken; and there is a ſeventh ſort, which none ought either to give or take.

Firſt, Gifts of pure charity, or Eleemoſynary gifts, ſuch as are beſtowed upon, and diſtributed among the poor, are a duty. We ſhould be much in gifts of charity for this very reaſon, becauſe to give them is not ſo much a bounty, as a duty: A part of all we have, is due to thoſe that have nothing.

Secondly, There are gifts of reſpect to thoſe who are not in want, yea, to thoſe who abound; theſe are honorary gifts. 'Tis lawful, and a duty alſo to bring gifts to Kings and Princes, as was ſhewed in opening the words. When Chriſt is ſpoken of as a King, the Scripture ſaith, The King of Tarſhiſh, and of the Iſles, ſhall bring Preſents; the Kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts (Pſal. 72. 10.) And as that holy Propheſie ſaith it ſhould be ſo, ſo the holy Hiſtory ſaith it was ſo; the wiſe men of the Eaſt came with gifts to Chriſt, as ſoon as he was born (*Mat.*2.)

Thirdly, There are gifts of courteſie from equals. One friend ſends a gift to another, in teſtimony of love and kindneſs, or as rejoycing in the goodneſs and kindneſs of God to them, in delivering them from any evil (as Jobs caſe alſo was) Theſe are congratulatory gifts.

Fourthly, There are gifts of bounty, ſuch are from Superiours to Inferiours, to teſtifie their greatneſs and magnificence.

Fifthly, There are gratulatory gifts, in token of thankfulneſs for benefits and favours received.

Sixthly, There are gifts of incouragement to thoſe that are induſtrious, and deſerve well, which we may call Remunerative gifts: Theſe are as Oyl to the wheel of ingenuous ſpirits in a good work; it is lawful at any time, and ſometimes neceſſary, to beſtow ſuch gifts.

Seventhly, There are gifts of bribery, which pervert Juſtice, and put out the eyes of Judges: They are not the rewards of induſtry, but the wages of unrighteouſneſs; ſuch as Balak would have given Balaam, he offered him great gifts, I will promote thee to honour. But what was it for? even to hire him to curſe the people of God. Let all take heed of giving or taking gifts to pervert Juſtice, or to incourage any in the doing of any wickedneſs or unworthineſs; theſe are corruptive gifts.

Further, Whereas they gave not only a piece of money, or a lamb, but every one an Ear-ring of gold, which we may conſider not only as to the matter, as it was gold, but as to the form, as it was an Ear-ring, or an artificial piece of gold, and that an ornamental piece of gold; they might have given gold (and probably they did) in the pieces of money which they gave him, but they gave him Ear-rings alſo, in which the faſhion or uſe is moſt conſiderable, and the workmanſhip more worth than the metal.

Hence note; It is lawful to wear Ornaments.

Not only may we wear that which ſerves for a covering to the body, but that which is for the adorning of it. An Ear-ring is an Ornament. As all are to wear cloaths to hide their ſhame and nakedneſs, ſo ſome may wear robes, to ſhew their ſtate and greatneſs. Job received Ear-rings; he did not caſt them by as vain things. When Abraham ſent his ſervant to take a wife for his Son Iſaac, he ſtored him with Cabinets of precious Jewels to beſtow upon her (Gen. 24.) and when he found Rebekah at the Well, and found who ſhe was, he took a golden Ear-ring of half a ſhekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten ſhekels weight of gold, and gave them to Rebeccah. And afterwards, when her Parents had given conſent to the Marriage, then (verſ. 53.) The ſervant brought forth Jewels of Silver, and Jewels of Gold, and Raiment, and gave them to Rebeccah, &c. Abraham would not ſend ſuch things to a Wife for his Son, had they been vain in their own nature, or ſinful in their uſe. Yet take the point with theſe cautions. We may wear ornaments, but,

Firſt, We muſt not be proud of them.

Secondly, We muſt not ſet our affections upon them.

Thirdly, We muſt beware of an affectation in wearing them.

Fourthly, We muſt take heed of waſtfulneſs; we may not laviſh out an eſtate upon ornaments, nor make our ſelves poor, to make our ſelves fine.

I grant ſome Scriptures ſpeak negatively in appearance, as to the uſe and wearing of jewels and Ornaments (1*Tim.* 2. 9.) In like manner alſo let women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel, in ſhamefaſtneſs and ſobriety, not with broidered hair or gold, or apparel, or coſtly array. The Scripture ſeems to croſs the point directly, and ſo doth that other (1 Pet. 3. 3.) Whoſe adorning (ſpeaking of women) let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, and of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart. How then can good women wear theſe ornaments?

I anſwer, Theſe Scriptures do not abſolutely forbid the wearing of ornaments, but only as to thoſe exceptions before given, to wear them in pride, or to ſet our affections upon them, or to affect them, or to wear them waſtfully, beyond our purſe and place; ſuch wearing of ornaments is indeed unlawful. Again, it is not ſinful to have or uſe ornaments, but to make them our ornaments, that is ſinful; our adorning muſt be the hidden man of the heart, that muſt be grace: That this is the Apoſtles mind is clear, becauſe he ſaith their adorning muſt not be the putting on of apparel, as well as not the plaiting of the hair, and wearing of gold. Therefore the negation is not abſolute, but comparative; let not them count theſe their ornaments, but grace or the hidden man of the heart. As the Lord ſaith, I will have mercy and not Sacrifice, that is, mercy rather than Sacrifice; ſo, I will have the hidden man of the heart, not coſtly jewels and apparel, your ornament; that is, I eſteem the one much rather than the other, and ſo ought you to eſteem both your ſelves and others accordingly.

Take this caution further. Times of affliction and ſuffering, are very unſeaſonable to wear ear-rings of gold and ornaments. When there is any great appearance of the diſpleaſure of God againſt a people, then how unſutable are all our pleaſant things! The Lord ſaid to the people of Iſrael, Put off your ornaments, that I may know what to do with you (Exod. 32.) When we live in ſuch a time, in humbling days, or are called to humbling duties, we ſhould be very watchful about theſe things, and rather appear in rags than robes, with duſt upon our heads, rather than with ornaments upon our backs.

Thus far of the firſt part of Job's reſtauration, the return of his friends, and the ſignifications of their friendlineſs towards him, eating bread with him, bemoaning him, comforting him, and preſenting him with gifts of honour, if not of enrichment, pieces of money, and ear-rings of gold: Yet all their civilities and bounties reached but a little way, if at all towards that reſtauration which the Lord intended him, the doubling of his whole eſtate, which he ſoon received in full meaſure, heaped up, preſſed down, and running over, as will appear in opening the two next verſes, and thoſe which follow to the end of the Chapter.

VERS. 12, 13.

So the Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: For he had fourteen thouſand Sheep, ſix thouſand Camels, and a thouſand yoak of Oxen, and a thouſand She-Aſſes.

He had alſo ſeven Sons and three Daughters.

IN theſe two verſes we have the ſecond and the third part Job's reſtauration: His friends were reſtored to him in the former verſe; his further reſtauration is ſet down in theſe two verſes.

Firſt, Generally at the beginning of the twelfth verſe: So the Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning.

Secondly, Particularly; and

Firſt, With reſpect to his Cattel or outward eſtate; for he had (ſaith the Text) Fourteen thouſand Sheep, and ſix thouſand Camels, &c.

Secondly, With reſpect to his iſſue or Children (verſ. 13.) He had alſo ſeven Sons and three Daughters.

Verſe 12. So the Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning.

In theſe words we may take notice of four things.

Firſt, The means, or as I may call it, the procuring cauſe of Job's increaſe, or of his growing and flowing proſperity; it was a bleſſing.

Secondly, We have here the Author or Fountain of this bleſſing; it was the Lord.

Thirdly, We have the Subject of this bleſſing, as here expreſt; and that was the latter end of Job, or Job in his latter end.

Fourthly, We have the quantity or greatneſs of this bleſſing, which is expreſt comparatively, it was more than his beginning. The Lord bleſſed his beginning, but his latter end was more bleſſed.

I ſhall conſider the two firſt together, the cauſe of his flowing proſperity, a bleſſing; and the Author, or Fountain of it, the Lord, the Lord bleſſed. There is a twofold way of bleſſing.

Firſt, A wiſhing or deſiring of a bleſſing: We are not thus to underſtand it here, as if the Lord did only wiſh a bleſſing upon Job.

Secondly, There is a commanding of a bleſſing, and ſo we are to underſtand it here. The Lord bleſſed, that is, the Lord commanded a bleſſing, or effectually poured out a bleſſing upon Job. The word bleſſed (The Lord bleſſed) hath two things in it.

First, It implyeth plenty and abundance, a copious and a large proviſion of good things. For as the word [abundare] in Latine, and to abound in Engliſh, comes (ſay Grammarians ab unda) from water, becauſe waters abound and flow; ſo this Hebrew word [Beracah] which ſignifieth a bleſſing, comes from, or at leaſt, is near in ſound to the word Berecah, which ſignifieth a Fiſh-pond, where there is a great confluence of waters, and a great multiplication of Fiſhes, or, a Fountain, from whence waters flow continually. So that to bleſs, notes the bringing in of abundance, or of a great increaſe, like the waters of a Fiſh-pond, or Fiſh in the waters. To increaſe as Fiſh, is to increaſe abundantly. It is ſaid of the Children of Iſrael, They multiplied like Fiſh (that's the ſignificancy of the word uſed, Exod. 1. 12.) while they were under the oppreſſion of the Egyptians.

Sicut abundare ab undis Latini dicunt; ita videri poſſunt Hebræi ברכה quaſi affluentiam denominare à fonte aut piſcina, quam appellant Berecah.

Secondly, This expreſſion, The Lord bleſſed, imports a powerful effect following it. The Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job; that is, he made his latter end very bleſſed. As the Lords ſaying is doing, as his word is operative, and will work; ſo the Lords bleſſing or well-ſaying, is well-doing; his ſaying is doing, whether for good or hurt. Man bleſſeth man by wiſhing or praying for a bleſſing upon him, or that God would do him good: Man bleſſeth God, when he praiſeth him for his goodneſs, and for the good which he hath done, either to himſelf or others: But when God bleſſeth man, he doth more than wiſh, he makes him bleſſed. Man bleſſeth man miniſterially; God bleſſeth man effectually, as he alſo did the ſeventh day (Gen. 2. 3.) And therefore the Lord is ſaid to command the bleſſing (Levit. 25. 21.) eſpecially in Sion, even life for evermore (Pſal. 133. 5.) Nor was it leſs than a command, by which The Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning.

Dei benedicere idem eſt quod benefacere. Beatum non facit hominem niſi qui fecit hominem. Auguſt. Epiſt. 52. ad Macedon.

Hence Note, The good word or bleſſing of God, is enough to procure the good of man.

Every word of God hath its effect; he ſpeaks no vain words: His Word going out of the mouths of his Miniſters, returns not to him void, but accompliſheth that which he pleaſeth, and proſpers in the thing whereunto he ſends it (Iſa. 55. 11.) that is, either for the conviction or converſion of thoſe that hear it. Surely then, the word of bleſſing going out of his own mouth, ſhall not return to him void, or without effect. David ſpake thus of, or to God (Pſ. 145.16.) Thou openeſt thine hand, and ſatisfieſt the deſire of every living thing. When the Lord opens his hand, he alſo opens his heart: And when his heart and hand open, his mouth opens too; that is, he gives forth a word of bleſſing, and he gives it forth to ſatisfaction, Thou ſatisfieſt every living thing. And again (Pſal. 104. 28.) Thou openeſt thine hand, they are filled with good. They, that is, whatſoever lives upon the Earth or in the Sea; wait upon thee (as it is ſaid, *verſ.*27.) that thou maiſt give them their meat in due ſeaſon; that thou giveſt them, they gather; thou openeſt thy hand, they are filled with good. The hand of of God is full of good, and his bleſſing fills all with good, out of his hand.

This may comfort the godly in their loweſt condition. What was it that raiſed Job from poverty to riches, from weakneſs to ſtrength, from the dunghil to the throne? Only this, The Lord bleſſed him. Though all be loſt, his word of bleſſing will reſtore all again. If eſtate be loſt, his bleſſing will make us rich; if health be loſt, his bleſſing will make us well; if ſtrength be loſt, his bleſſing will renew it; if credit be loſt, his bleſſing will repair it, and get us honour for diſgrace or reproach. The bleſſing of the Lord is every good thing to us, and doth every good thing for us. As it is dreadful to ſtand under the droppings of a curſe; to be curſed is very evil; ſo happy are they who ſtand under the ſweet influences of a promiſe; to be bleſſed is every good. And if God bleſſeth us, the matter is not much, who curſeth or wiſheth ill to us. The curſe cauſeleſs ſhall not come, nor can any curſe come where God hath bleſſed.

But ſome may enquire, who are they that the Lord will bleſs? To be bleſſed, is not every mans portion. A man may be rich, yet not bleſſed; great, yet not bleſſed; healthful, yet not bleſſed: A man may have many bleſſings, for the matter, yet not be bleſſed. This then is a material queſtion, Who are they that may expect a bleſſing from God upon their Souls, upon their Bodies, upon their eſtates, upon their families, upon their all?

I anſwer, Firſt, In general; They that are in a ſtate of grace, they that are in the Covenant, or as the Apoſtle calls them (Heb. 6. 17.) Heirs of promiſe: Theſe are the bleſſed of the Lord; and theſe, both great and ſmall, the Lord will bleſs (Eph. 1. 3.) Bleſſed be God, who hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things in Chriſt. Being in Chriſt, we are in Covenant; and being there, we cannot miſs being bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and with whatever is a needful bleſſing, in outward things too: He that bleſſeth in the greater, will not with-hold his bleſſing in the leſs, according to our need.

Secondly, As they are the general ſubjects of the bleſſing, who are in the Covenant of grace, or in Chriſt, ſo are they more ſpecially, who act graciouſly, and walk as they have received Chriſt; for a perſon that is in a ſtate of grace, may hinder the bleſſing from flowing down upon his Soul, upon his Body, upon his Eſtate, upon any thing, upon every thing he hath and doth, by acting ſinfully, and walking unevenly. David put the queſtion (*Pſal.*24.3.) Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord? &c. and anſwered it (verſ. 4, 5.) He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart, who hath not lift up his Soul to vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully; he ſhall receive the bleſſing from the Lord, and righteouſneſs (that is, a righteous reward, or a reward according to righteouſneſs) from the God of his ſalvation. Solomon aſſerts the preſent performance of what is only promiſed in this Pſalm; he ſaith not, The juſt ſhall receive the bleſſing, but they have actually received it (Prov. 10.6.) Bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt. By the juſt man we may underſtand; Firſt, him that is in a juſtified ſtate, or him that is juſt by faith; Secondly, him that walks in a juſt way, or that doth juſtly: And they who are indeed juſtified, are not only engaged by that high act of grace to do juſtly, but are either conſtantly kept in doing ſo, or are ſoon brought to ſee they have not done ſo, and to repentance for it. Juſt and upright men, in theſe two notions, are ſo much bleſſed, that they are a bleſſing (Prov. 11. 11.) By the bleſſing of the upright, is the City exalted. As an upright man wiſheth and prayeth for a bleſſing upon the City where he liveth, ſo he is a bleſſing to it, and that no ſmall one, but to the greatning, enriching, and exaltation of it. He that is good in his perſon, becomes a common good to Cities, yea, to whole Nations; ſuch are a bleſſing, becauſe they receive ſo many bleſſings (Prov. 28. 20.) A faithful man ſhall abound with bleſſings. This faithful man is one that acts and doth all things faithfully, as appears by his oppoſition (in the ſame verſe) to him that maketh haſt to be rich, of whom the Text ſaith, he ſhall not be innocent; that is, he muſt needs deal unfaithfully or unrighteouſly; for in making ſuch poſt-haſt to riches, he uſually rides (as we ſay) over hedg and ditch, and cannot keep the plain way of honeſty.

Thirdly, As they who are in a ſtate of grace, and they who act graciouſly in that ſtate, ſo they who worſhip holily, or holy worſhippers, have a ſpecial promiſe of the bleſſing. As Sion is the ſeat of holy worſhip, ſo there the Lord commandeth the bleſſing upon holy worſhippers (Pſ. 133. 3.) And again (Pſal. 115. 12, 13.) He will bleſs the houſe of Iſrael, he will bleſs the houſe of Aaron, he will bleſs them that fear the Lord, both ſmall and great; that is, the generality of holy worſhippers ſhall be bleſſed. The fear of the Lord is often put in Scripture, for the worſhip of the Lord; and ſo they that fear him, are the ſame with them that worſhip him.

Fourthly, They are the bleſſed of the Lord, who truſt the Lord for all, and ſo make him the all of their truſt (Pſal. 34. 8.) O taſt and ſee that the Lord is gracious; bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him; that is, in him only or alone, being convinced of the utter inſufficiency of the Creature. That man is curſed, who truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh his arm (Jer. 17. 5.) therefore, pure truſt in God hath the bleſſing.

Fifthly, They that are a bleſſing unto others, ſhall have the bleſſing from the Lord. What it is to be a bleſſing to others, read at large in the Twenty-ninth Chapter of this Book (*verſ.*11.) and in the Thirty-firſt Chapter (*verſ.*20.) They that do good to others, they eſpecially who do good to the Souls of others, are a bleſſing to others. Now, they who do good, they ſhall receive good themſelves (Prov. 11. 25.) The liberal ſhall be made fat, and he that watereth, ſhall be watered alſo himſelf. He that watereth is a common good, a bleſſing to the place where he lives, a bleſſing to the rich, a bleſſing to the poor, a bleſſing to relations, a bleſſing to ſtrangers; upon ſuch, the Scripture aſſures the bleſſing of the Lord.

Sixthly, They who promote the worſhip and ſervice of God, they that are friends to the Ark of God, ſhall be bleſſed (2*Sam.*6.11.) The Lord bleſſed the houſe of Obed-Edom, becauſe he entertained the Ark, ſhewed kindneſs to the Ark, and was ready to do any ſervice for the Ark of God; he will be a friend to the true friends of his Church.

Seventhly, They ſhall receive a bleſſing of God, who ſtrive in prayer for his bleſſing. Jacob was bleſſed; but he wreſtled for it. They that would have it, muſt ask it with a gracious importunity; they that ſeek it diligently, ſhall find it.

Theſe are the chief characters of the perſons whom the Lord will bleſs. And ſeeing his bleſſing is ſo effectual for the procurement of our good, we ſhould above all things labour to procure his bleſſing. When Jacob wreſtled with the Angel, he asked nothing of him but a bleſſing (Gen. 32. 26.) He did not ſay, I will not let thee go, except thou deliver me from my brother Eſau; he did not ſay, I will not let thee go, unleſs thou make me rich, or great; he only ſaid, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me; let me be bleſſed, and let me be what thou wilt, or I can be. What ſhould we deſire in compariſon of the bleſſing of God, ſeeing his bleſſing (ſtrictly taken) is the fruit of his fatherly love! A man may be rich, and great, and honoured among men, yet not beloved; but he that is indeed bleſſed, is certainly beloved of God. Eſau could not obtain the bleſſing: Now what ſaith the Lord by the Prophet of him, as the Apoſtle quotes the Prophet? (*Rom.*9.13.) Eſau have I hated. Eſau got much riches, but he could not get the bleſſing, for he was hated of the Lord; and therefore it is ſaid (*Heb.*12.17.) He found no place for repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears; that is, he could not make Iſaac repent of bleſſing Jacob (though through a miſtake, yet) according to Gods appointment; he could not prevail with him, no, not by tears, to take off the bleſſing from his brother Jacob, and place it upon himſelf: And the reaſon why the bleſſing remained with Jacob, was, becauſe he was loved of God. The bleſſing muſt go, where the love goes. The loved of the Lord, are and ſhall be bleſſed; and they who are bleſſed, have all good with a bleſſing. (Read, Gen. 24. 35. & 26. 13. & 28. 3. 2 Sam. 6. 11. Pſal. 107. 38.) Yea, as God giveth all good with a bleſſing, ſo he giveth himſelf, who is the chief good, beſt of all, and bleſſed for evermore, to thoſe whom he bleſſeth.

Then how ſhould we deſire the bleſſing of God, or to be bleſſed by God? It is wonderful, how paſſionately, and even impatiently, the Votaries of Rome deſire the Popes bleſſing; they think themſelves made men, if they can but have his bleſſing. I have read of a Cardinal, who ſeeing the people ſo ſtrangely deſirous of his bleſſing, ſaid, Seeing this people will be deceived, let them be deceived. But we cannot be too deſirous of a bleſſing from the Lord; if we have a bleſſing from him, and he bleſs us, we cannot be deceived; we can never miſs of comfort, if he bleſs us.

Quandoquidem populus hic vult decipi, decipiatur.

But whence is it then, that ſome look ſo much after Creature-helps, not minding the bleſſing of God? Doubtleſs it flows or ſprings from one of theſe three bad fountains or bitter roots.

Firſt, From ignorance; they know not what the bleſſing of God means; for, as Chriſt told the woman of Samaria (Acts 4. 10.) If thou kneweſt the gift of God, thou wouldſt have asked, &c. So, did they know what it is to be bleſſed of God, they would ask it above all things. It proceeds,

Secondly, From a ſpirit of profaneneſs in many; they deſpiſe God in their hearts, and think it below them to call for his help or bleſſing. Of ſuch David ſpeaks (Pſal. 14. 6.) Ye have ſhamed the counſel of the poor, becauſe the Lord is his refuge; or, becauſe ('tis all one in effect) he lives upon the bleſſing of God, you are aſhamed of this; this is poor counſel, think you, as it is the counſel of the poor; this truſting in God, this making God our refuge, this living upon the bleſſing of God, is a pitiful life, ſay you. The wicked through the pride of his countenance, will not ſeek after God, God is not in all his thoughts, or not at all in his thoughts, to ſeek unto him, and depend wholly upon him (Pſal. 10. 4.) As Ezra was aſhamed to require of the King a band of Soldiers and Horſemen, to help them againſt the enemy in the way, becauſe he had ſpoken unto the King, ſaying, the hand of our God is upon all them for good, that ſeek him, &c. (Ezra 8. 22.) So, profane perſons are aſhamed to ask help of God, and his bleſſing at any time, but then eſpecially, when they have bands of Souldiers and Horſemen to help them, as will appear further in the next thing. For,

Thirdly, This mindleſneſs and regardleſneſs of the bleſſing of God proceeds in ſome, from confidence in an arm of fleſh, even their own or others. The Prophet reproved the Jews for this in the day of their trouble (Iſa. 22. 8, 9, 10, 11.) And he (that is, God) diſcovered the covering of Judah (that is, what Judah covered himſelf with, or thought himſelf ſafely ſheltered by from all danger; what was that? The next word tells us) thou didſt look in that day to the armour of the houſe of the Forreſt; ye have ſeen alſo the breaches of the City of David, that they are many, ye have fortified the wall, &c. but ye have not looked to the maker thereof, neither had reſpect unto him that faſhioned it long ago. The meaning of all is this; ye relied upon, and put confidence in your own ſtrength, but looked not after, nor ſought unto me for my bleſſing; ye thought ye ſhould do well enough, if your magazines were well ſtored, and your City well fortified, and therefore neglected me. The ſame Prophet (Chap. 31. 1.) ſhews the ſame reaſon why they neglected God, why they looked not to the holy One of Iſrael, nor ſought the Lord; it was, becauſe they went down to Egypt for help, and ſtayed on Horſes, and truſted in Chariots, becauſe they were many, and in Horſemen, becauſe they were very ſtrong. We cannot truſt in God, and Creatures too. If God alone be not truſted to, he is not at all truſted; and they who put their truſt in any Creature, withdraw it from God, and make that Creature their God. They cannot ſo much as mind, much leſs ſeek a bleſſing from the true God, who chuſe to themſelves another God.

Again, ſeeing the Lords bleſſing is effectual, then whatever our ſucceſſes and increaſes are, let us aſcribe all to his bleſſing. Do not ſacrifice to your own nets, nor burn incenſe to your own drags, but ſay, this hath God wrought, the bleſſing of the Lord hath brought it to paſs. As the Apoſtle ſpake about ſpirituals (1 Cor. 3. 6.) I have planted, Apollo watered, but God gave the increaſe; ſo 'tis in temporals, all our increaſes are of God: Therefore let us ſay with the Pſalmiſt, Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy Name be the praiſe. Do not thank your wit for riches, nor your induſtry for increaſe, nor your ſtrength for victory, nor any humane help for any of your attainments: The race is not to the ſwift, nor the battel to the ſtrong, neither yet bread to the wiſe, nor yet riches to men of underſtanding, &c. (Eccleſ. 9. 11.) All is of God, it is his bleſſing upon the means, which makes the means ſucceſsful.

But ſome may ſay, are all men to aſcribe all their ſucceſſes and increaſes to the bleſſing of God?

I anſwer, Negatively, All increaſes and outward ſucceſſes are not to be aſcribed unto, nor fathered upon God. A man may increaſe in riches, and double his eſtate, as Job's was, yet not by the bleſſing of God: Only that comes by a bleſſing from God, which is got in Gods way, or by good means, according to the characters before hinted of the perſons whom the Lord will bleſs; for they who either make a profeſſion of diſhoneſty, or are diſhoneſt in their profeſſion, let them take heed of pinning their ſucceſſes upon God, and of thanking him for them. Many ſay in their hearts, and ſome are not aſhamed to ſay it with their mouths, Honeſt dealers muſt die beggars. They never came by riches in the way of a bleſſing, who ſay honeſty is the way to poverty; much leſs, they whoſe conſciences know and tell them (though others know it not, and ſo cannot tell them) that they have enriched themſelves by the wrong, or raiſed themſelves by the ruine of others.

Job was enriched and raiſed high, and the Text aſſures us what enriched him, what raiſed him; The Lord bleſſed

The latter end of Job, more than his beginning.

We have ſeen the Author of this bleſſing: Theſe words ſhew the ſubject of this bleſſing, The latter end of Job, or Job in his latter end, together with the quantity and abundance of this bleſſing, More than his beginning. The Lord bleſſed

מראשתו Præ initio ejus.

The latter end of Job.] That is, Job in the latter part of his life; and he bleſſed it more than his beginning, that is, than the former part of his life. God bleſſed, and greatly bleſſed in the former part of Job's life, for he was the greateſt man of all men in the Eaſt; but now Job ſhall be greater than Job, he ſhall be greater than himſelf. His affliction razed down his houſe, and all he had, to the very foundation; but when God would hold the plummet in his hand, and rebuild him, to what an amazing height did his houſe ariſe! The Lord bleſſed his latter end, more than his beginning. The words are plain, and need no comment. From them we may Obſerve, > Firſt, The latter part of a good mans life, is the beſt part of his life.

It is often ſo, I do not ſay, it is always ſo, in outward things, God deals not with all alike; but it is often ſo, God gives them their beſt at laſt, even in the things of this life. As the Governour of the Feaſt ſaid to the Bridegroom (John 2.) Thou haſt kept the beſt wine till now. So the Lord often keeps the beſt wine of outward comforts, to the very laſt of our lives. Bildad put it only as a ſuppoſition to Job (Chap. 8. 7.) If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely then he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous; though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhould greatly increaſe. But we may reſolve it as a Poſition concerning Job; ſurely he was pure and upright, for God did awake for him, and made the habitation of his righteouſneſs proſperous; his beginning was (comparatively) ſmall, but his latter end did greatly increaſe, or he had a great increaſe at his latter end. And though this be not always true, as to outward things, that the Lord bleſſeth the latter end of a good man more than his beginning; yet it is always true, as to ſpiritual things, it is always true, as to the beſt things. The Lord gives his people their beſt Soul-bleſſings at laſt; though they have great good before, yet greater good, or their good in a greater meaſure then; he gives them more grace, more of his Spirit, more of his comforts, and their latter end is moſt bleſſed, as it is the beginning of endleſs bleſſedneſs. Abraham ſaid to the rich man in the Parable, Son, remember thou haſt had thy good things, and Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. The Lord deals beſt with all his people at laſt, one way or other; to be ſure, all ſhall be well with them in the latter end. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 7.8.) Better is the end of a thing, than the beginning. And he ſaid ſo, not becauſe all things end better than they begin; but becauſe when things or perſons end well, it is then ſurely well with them, whatever their beginning was. That is well, which ends well.

Hence, let us be minded not to judg the work of God before the latter end. The works of God ſeem croſs many times to his people; but he will ſet all right, and make them amends for all at the latter end. The Apoſtle James calls us to conſider Job's latter end (Chap. 5. 11.) Ye have heard of the patience of Job (that is, you have heard of his ſufferings in the fleſh, and of his ſuffering ſpirit) and ye have ſeen the end of the Lord; that is, what end the Lord made for him. Some give another interpretation of theſe latter words (as was ſhewed formerly) but this I conceive moſt clear to the context, Ye have ſeen the end of the Lord, that is, what end the Lord made for Job: Though the middle part of his life was very grievous, yet God changed the Scene of things, and his end was very glorious. David (Pſal. 37. 37.) would have the end of upright men marked and well conſidered; Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, the end of that man is peace. Poſſibly he hath had a great deal of trouble in his way, but his end is peace. Let not us be offended at the croſſes which we meet with in the courſe of our lives, but look to the promiſed Crown at the concluſion of our lives. Let us not ſtay in the death of Chriſt, nor in the grave of Chriſt, but look to the Reſurrection and the Aſcenſion of Chriſt. You may ſee thoſe who are Chriſts on the Croſs, and in the Grave, but mark and you ſhall ſee their Reſurrection and Aſcenſion. The two witneſſes are repreſented ſlain, yet raiſed, and then aſcending up to Heaven in a Cloud, their enemies beholding them (Rev. 11. 11, 12.) Deſpiſe not the day of ſmall things (Zech. 4. 10.) the latter end may have a great increaſe; deſpond not in the day of ſorrowful things, for the latter end may be full of joy. There are three things which ſhould much comfort us in our afflictions.

Firſt, That they cannot laſt always, they will have an end.

Secondly, That while they laſt, or before they have an end, they are medicinal and healthful, they are for our good while they continue upon us, or we in them.

Thirdly, (which we have in the Text) we may expect, that as they ſhall ſurely have an end, ſo that they will end comfortably. No chaſtning for the preſent (ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 11.) ſeemeth joyous, but grievous; nevertheleſs, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, unto them which are exerciſed thereby. God will not only bring our troubles to an end, but he will give us ſweet fruit at the end of them, as a recompence for all our troubles. God will not only bring our ſufferings to an end, but to ſuch an end as will make us gainers by them. Thoſe are even deſirable and lovely loſſes, which iſſue in ſuch advantages.

Secondly, In that the Lord gave Job ſo great an advance in worldly things, > Obſerve, The Lord ſometimes gives his people much more of this World, than they deſire, or ever looked after.

Job was far from praying for ſuch an increaſe, he never deſired that his Earthly ſubſtance ſhould be doubled in his latter end: Indeed, we find him once wiſhing that it were with him as in his beginning, but he wiſhed not for more (Chap. 29. 2.) O that it were with me as in the months paſt, as in the day when the Lord preſerved me, when his candle ſhined upon my head, and by his light I walked through darkneſs. Job wiſhed that he were in as good a condition as he once had, but he never wiſhed that all might be doubled, or that his latter end ſhould be more than his beginning; yet the Lord gave him more, gave him double to his beginning, God exceeded his prayers and his wiſhes. As the Lord is able to do exceeding abundantly for us, above all that we ask or think (Eph. 3.20) ſo he often doth; and uſually, therefore, moderates the deſires and askings of his people, as to the things of this World, that he may out-give their askings, and out-do their deſires.

Thirdly, The Lord made Job the greateſt man in the Eaſt in his beginning, but he bleſſed his latter end more than his beginning,

> Hence Note, How much ſoever the Lord gives at one time, he can give more at another.

God gave Job good meaſure before, but now according to that expreſſion (Luke 6.38.) he gavo him good meaſure, heaped up, preſſed down, and running over. Let us not ſay, when God hath given us much, or done much for us, he can give or do no more for us: He hath more in his treaſure of temporal good things, and he hath more in his treaſure of ſpiritual good things, than he hath yet given out to any; he can give more faith, how much faith ſoever he hath given; he can give more patience, how much patience ſoever he hath given, and ſo of every grace and good thing. The Lords ſtock and treaſures can never be drawn dry; he is an ever over-flowing fountain. If you had much at the beginning, you may have much more at the latter end. So much of theſe words, as they hold out the reſtoring of Job's eſtate in general; the particulars are ſumm'd up in the cloſe of the verſe:

> For he had fourteen thouſand Sheep, and ſix thouſand Camels, and a thouſand yoke of Oxen, and a thouſand She-Aſſes.

The increaſe of his eſtate is here ſet forth in Cattel only, as his firſt eſtate was (Cattel were the riches of thoſe times and Countries) yet doubtleſs his eſtate increaſed in every thing or kind. Firſt, his family and Servants increaſed, to look to ſo many Cattel. Secondly, his Lands and Paſtures increaſed to feed them. Thirdly, his Houſe and Buildings increaſed, to receive and lodg ſo numerous a Family. Fourthly, his Honour and Dignity increaſed. Some affirm, that whereas before, he had only ſome ſmall principality under his government, now he was declared King over all the Land of Uz. Thus all ſorts of good things were given him double; but whether at once, or by degrees, is not expreſt.

Some of the Rabbins have a fancy, and it is a wild one, that Job's Cattel which were taken from him, were not carried quite away, but only driven into ſome other Country, and there kept; ſo that when he was reſtored, they were brought home to him again, with this double increaſe. This may well go for a fancy; for, not his own Cattel, but Cattel of the ſame kind, were reſtored to him double. There is no difficulty in theſe words. The Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more than his beginning, giving double or twice as many Sheep, Oxen, Camels, Aſſes, as he had befor.

> Hence Note, Outward good things, Sheep and Oxen, Houſes and Lands, Gold and Silver, are a bleſſing, as they come from God unto his Servants.

Here is nothing ſaid of the beſt things; all was but Sheep and Oxen, yet in this Job received a bleſſing. The Lord (Deut. 28. 4.) made large promiſes of bleſſings to his obeying people, or to his people in caſe of obedience, and all in outward comforts; Bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the City, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the Field; bleſſed ſhall be the fruit of thy Body, and the fruit of thy Ground, and the fruit of thy Cattel, the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy Sheep; bleſſed ſhall be thy basket, and thy ſtore. Spiritual things are the beſt bleſſings; ſpiritual things are not only the nobleſt, but the moſt neceſſary bleſſings. The favour of God, the light of his countenance, pardon of ſin, grace in our hearts; theſe are excellent bleſſings, and theſe make us exceedingly bleſſed; and no doubt but Job did chiefly look after theſe bleſſings; this good man deſired the light of Gods countenance, the ſhinings of his face upon him, the workings of his grace and ſpirit in him, the evidences of his love to him, infinitely above Cattel, Corn and Wine. A godly man accounts himſelf but in a poor condition, if he were to reckon all his eſtate in Houſes and Lands, in Sheep and Oxen; yet theſe are a bleſſing from the Lord upon him, and ſo he accounts them. And ſtill it muſt be remembred, which hath already been touched, that before the coming of Chriſt, before there was a full diſcovery, and a clear manifeſtation of the grace of God in Chriſt to his people, they in thoſe times were much led and fed with promiſes of temporal bleſſings. The faithful were allured to Heaven by Earthly things. Jeſus Chriſt (who came down from Heaven to lift us up thither, who took our Nature, that we might partake of the divine Nature, who was clothed with our fleſh, to ſhew that God dwelleth in us, and hath joined us to his glory and immortality; Jeſus Chriſt, I ſay) was known only in ſhadows and remote propheſies, in thoſe times, and therefore it was neceſſary the Lord ſhould deal with them accordingly, and allure them by promiſes of Cattel, and Corn and Children, eſpecially by the promiſe of long life (which hath the greateſt reſemblance to, and bears the faireſt image of eternal life) and all becauſe the heavenly life was not then ſo perfectly diſcovered, as it is now in theſe Goſpel-times. For though it be a truth, that all the good things of the World are not ſufficient to make a love-token, yet God gives thoſe good things to his people as tokens of his love, and they ſee love in them; and theſe leſſer good things are then beſt to us, when we can look on them as bleſſings coming from the love of God, which we may do,

Firſt, When we can ſay we have got and kept them with a good conſcience.

Secondly, When we uſe and order them with prudence.

Thirdly, When we diſpenſe them charitably and freely, according to the needs and neceſſities of others. When we truly and intentionally honour God with our ſubſtance, in doing acts of love, it ſhews that he hath given it us in love.

Fourthly, When the Lord with increaſe of riches, gives us an increaſe of grace, when our Souls thrive as well as our eſtates, then we may look upon riches as coming to us in love. Sheep and Oxen, Gold and Silver, without a juſt, and wiſe, and gracious poſſeſſing and uſing of them, prove curſes at laſt, not bleſſings, ſnares not favours. There are none ſo unhappy as fooliſh rich men, none ſo baſe as covetous rich men, none ſo intolerable as proud rich men, none ſo vile and deſpicable as ſluggiſh voluptuous rich men, none more ungodly and irreligious, than they who having riches, truſt in them, and dote upon them; only when the Lord gives ſpiritual things with temporal, grace with goods, they are mercies to us. When Luther received a favour from a great Prince, he began to be afraid that God would put him off with ſuch things. A godly man receives a portion in Earthly good things, but he will not take all the good things of the Earth for his portion.

Now, as all ſpiritual things are better than temporal, ſo among temporals, ſome are better than others. Job received good things when his Cattel were doubled, but he had better bleſſings of this life reſtored to him than thoſe; his eſtate reſtored double in Cattel was nothing to his Children reſtored ſingle, as it follows in the next words.

Verſe 13. He had alſo ſeven Sons, and three Daughters.

This is the third part of Job's reſtauration, Sons and Daughters. We may conſider this bleſſing, Firſt, In the number, Secondly, In the Sex. In number, his Children were ſeven and three. As to Sex, they were both Sons and Daughters; he had ſeven Sons and three Daughters, in all ten, juſt the number he had before, as we read at the ſecond verſe of the firſt Chapter.

Some of the Jewiſh Rabbies (before ſpoken of) ſay, his former Children were not indeed ſlain, but removed during the time of his affliction, and that, being ended, were reſtored the ſame both in number and perſon. This is as groundleſs a dream as the other about his Cattel, and ſo I leave it. For,

That his Children were really ſlain with the fall of the Houſe where they were feaſting, the Hiſtory makes evident in the firſt Chapter; and that he had the ſame number of Children (not the ſame Children) reſtored, is all that is evident in this.

Only here a queſtion ariſeth, and ſome trouble themſelves much about it, to little purpoſe, how to make good that of verſ. 8. where 'tis ſaid, The Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before, when as he had but juſt ſo many Sons and Daughters as he had before. Here is no doubling of them, and it may be thought, that the Lord, being now bleſſing his latter end more than his beginning, ſhould have given him more Children, double Children, becauſe the more Children the greater is the bleſſing.

I anſwer, Firſt, Negatively. The reaſon why his Children were not double, though his Cattel were, was not, Firſt, Out of any want of power in God, he could have doubled his Children as well as his Cattel. Nor was it, Secondly, For want of love or good will to Job. Nor was it, Thirdly, (As, one of the Ancients, Tertullian, gives the reaſon) that Job might never want ſomething to exerciſe his patience with while he lived, foraſmuch as he ſaw himſelf ſhortned in that mercy. Nor was it, Fourthly, (As Aquinas conceived) becauſe, if his Children had been doubled as well as his eſtate, then his Children would not have had a double eſtate, nor more than they ſhould have had before. Forty proportionably divided among twenty, yields each of them no greater a portion, than twenty will do to ten. Nor was it, Fifthly, Becauſe the Lord would not have him over-burdened with cares about their education; none of theſe were any reaſon, why Job's Children were not doubled to him in number, as well as his Cattel. And therefore,

Tertul. lib. de patientia, c. 1.

I anſwer affirmatively,

Firſt, For the word double, or twice as much, in the Text, which this ſeems not to come up unto, we may eaſily ſalve that difficulty, for the Text ſpeaks not of perſons, but of things, or of his ſubſtance, with reſpect to doubling or a twice as much. As for his Children they come in with an alſo, as an additional bleſſing to all the reſt; He had alſo ſeven Sons, and three Daughters.

Secondly, Thoſe words twice as much, need not be taken ſtrictly, as was ſhewed before; Job might, and doubtleſs did receive a double mercy in his Children, though their perſons were not doubled nor multiplied, as will appear further afterwards.

Thirdly, I anſwer, it was the pleaſure of the Lord, to give him no more than the ſame number of Children, and that may ſuffice us.

Fourthly, Some of the Ancients are much pleaſed with this other anſwer, ſaying, Job, in a ſence, had his Children doubled; for his ſlain Children were not loſt, but gone before, and lived ſtill in a bleſſed ſtate: They having immortal Souls, and being the ſeed of the righteous, their Father had reaſon to believe them ſafe in Abraham's boſome. Thoſe Children are not loſt to their Parents when they die, who are not loſt to God, or are not themſelves loſt Children.

Fifthly, Though Job's Children were not doubled in number as his Cattel were, yet we may judg them doubled to him in goodneſs and vertuous qualities. The beauty of his Daughters is expreſly noted in the following words: And ſhall we think that God, who had a bleſſing for Job, bleſſed his Children only with fading bodily beauty? Doubtleſs their minds were more richly indowed, and their Souls more beautiful than their Bodies. And if Job's Daughters were ſuch, we may well conceive his Sons were not inferiour to them in gracious qualifications, and that they much exceeded the Sons he had before his affliction. Some have ſpoken doubtfully, at leaſt, of Job's former Children, as if (though good, yet) not very good; and they give two reaſons for it out of this Book. Firſt, Becauſe, when they went to feaſt at each other Houſes Job uſed to offer Sacrifice, fearing his Children had curſed God in their hearts. Secondly, Bildad (Chap. 8. 4.) ſeems to lay a blot upon his former Children, If thy Children (ſaith he) have ſinned againſt him, and he have caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion, &c. which may intimate the ſinful miſcarriages of his former Children in the courſe of their lives, as well as that dreadful accident by which they died. Yet, I conceive, we need not caſt any ſuch blot upon them; they might be good, though theſe were better, and ſo a double mercy to their Father. He had alſo ſeven Sons, and three Daughters.

Tibi non perit qui Deo non perit. Non numero ſed valore, quod occultè inſinuatur in filiabus, quæ pulcherrimæ fuiſſe leguntur. Aquin.

Hence Note, Children are great bleſſings.

When the Lord told Abraham (Gen. 15.2.) I am thy ſhield, and exceeding great reward, Abraham ſaid, Lord what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? As if he had ſaid, what is an inheritance without an heir? Children are a bleſſing which God many times denieth his own Children: God denied Abraham that bleſſing long, yet gave it him at laſt. Abraham's ſervant reported the bleſſings of God beſtowed upon his Maſter, put this as chief (Gen. 24.35.) The Lord hath bleſſed my Maſter greatly, he is become great, he hath given him flocks and herds, Silver and Gold, men-ſervants and maid ſervants (what follows?) and Sarah my Maſters Wife, bare a Son to my Maſter, when ſhe was old. Abraham's ſervant counted this the complement of all his Maſters outward bleſſings, that as the Lord had given him a great eſtate, ſo a Son to inherit and poſſeſs it after him. And if Children be a bleſſing? Let all who have them take heed of looking upon them as a burthen.

And ſeeing they are a bleſſing of the Lord, ſeeing they come from him, let all who have them be admoniſhed to bring them up for him, or, as the Apoſtle directs, In the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Whatever we receive from God we ſhould uſe for him, and return to him; our eſtates ſhould be ſerviceable to the Lord, and above all we ſhould labour to make our Children ſerviceable to him.

Thus we have ſeen the three parts of Job's reſtauration. Firſt, His friends; Secondly, His wealth; Thirdly, His Children, were reſtored to him. But Job had four loſſes, and we hear nothing about the reſtoring of the fourth. Firſt, He loſt his ſubſtance; Secondly, His Children; Thirdly, His health; Fourthly, His friends: Here's a reſtoring of three of them, but noting is ſpoken of the fourth, which I place third, the reſtoring of his health. Now health being the chief of outward bleſſings, better than Sheep and Oxen, and whatever we can have in this World, why was not the reſtoring of that mercy mentioned?

I anſwer, Though the reſtoring of his health and ſtrength be not expreſt verbally, yet it is expreſt equivalently or vertually; for when it is ſaid he offered Sacrifice, when it is ſaid he did eat bread with his friends in his Houſe, theſe are proofs of his health; and what was laſt ſpoken, that he had ſo many Children, proves it much more. So then, though this fourth part of his mercy, be not mentioned, yet it is implied in all that went before.

But, that being granted, 'tis further queried, when his health was reſtored? Whether before he prayed for his friends, or in the time of his prayer for his friends? Or whether after all was done? Some make hot diſputes about this matter, which ſurely is not much material, if we knew the certainty of it; nor do I know how any ſhould attain the certain knowledg of it; ſeeing the Scripture is utterly ſilent, as to any determination of it.

There is one queſtion more. The Text ſaith, God gave Job twice as much in Cattel, &c. but here is nothing ſaid of his twice as much in grace, here is no mention of any amendment in his ſpiritual ſtate; his goods were doubled, but was not his goodneſs? Did Job recover only in temporals?

I anſwer, Firſt, The graces of Job were never loſt, as his Cattle and Children were; and therefore there needed no mention of the reſtoring of his graces. Satan, by the Lords permiſſion, put him to it, and tried all his graces, but could not rob him of one.

Secondly, Job's graces were not only not loſt, but doubled in that exerciſe or combate. True grace increaſeth by the ordinary uſe of it, much more by the extraordinary trials of it. And doubtleſs Job, who was ſo eminently gracious, increaſed in every grace, while he continued in this fiery trial. He ſaid of himſelf (*Chap.*23.10.) When he hath tried me I ſhall come forth as Gold. I ſhall come out better than I came in. He loſt droſs and corruption in the trial, but no grace, nor any degree of grace; his graces were doubled or increaſed. A believer thrives (as to the inner man) in affliction, how much ſoever he loſeth and goeth backward as a man. As the time of affliction is a ſpecial time for the uſing of grace, ſo for the increaſing of it: Grace never grows more in a gracious heart than in a day of trouble. And though poſſibly a godly man doth not ſenſibly, or to appearance grow in grace preſently, yet he truly doth ſo, and in due time it will appear that he hath done ſo: We may take this Chapter for a proof of it. God himſelf found Job much bettered in his graces, elſe he had not uſed him as a mediator for his friends, which was as high a ſpiritual honour as could be put upon him, acceptance being promiſed and given him in that work. Nor would the Lord have uſed that endearing word, My ſervant, my ſervant Job, four times in one verſe, had not Job improved in his ſervice, which could not be but by the improvement of his graces. God called Job ſervant once in the firſt Chapter; ſurely he was become a better ſervant now that the Lord ſeemed ſo much delighted to call him ſervant in this laſt Chapter of the Book, when he had taken full trial of him by ſuffering, as formerly by doing. We may well conclude, Job was become a more humble ſervant, a more profitable ſervant, a more holy ſervant, a more ſpiritual ſervant, than ever he had been, when we find the Lord inſiſting ſo much upon, and ſo often repeating that relation to him, My ſervant Job. His ſufferings had mended his ſervice, and his paſſive obedience had fitted him more for active. God was ſo much pleaſed with his ſervice, that he took pleaſure to call him ſervant. So then, we may anſwer the query propoſed; Job's increaſe was not only in Cattel (that had been but a poor increaſe) his increaſe was alſo in grace and goodneſs; and he who was a ſervant of the Lord before, was then a more approved ſervant.

The Lord having told us, in the cloſe of this verſe, how many Sons and Daughters Job had, he is pleaſed to give us a character or deſcription of his Daughters in the two verſes following.

VERS. 14, 15.

And he called the name of the firſt Jemima, and the name of the ſecond Kezia, and the name of the third Keren-happuch.

And in all the Land were no women found ſo fair as the Daughters of Job; and their Father gave them inheritance among their Brethren.

THE former verſe gave us the account of Job's Children; He had alſo ſeven Sons and three Daughters: Nor is any thing more ſaid of his Sons, but that they were ſeven; but much more is ſaid of his Daughters in theſe two verſes, than that they were three; and more is ſpoken of his Daughters in three particulars.

Firſt, They are ſet forth by their names.
Secondly, By the comlineſs of their perſons.
Thirdly, By the greatneſs of their dowry.

Their names are expreſt at verſ. 14.

He called the name of the firſt Jemima, and the name of the ſecond Kezia, and the name of the third Keren-happuch.

The comlineſs of their perſons is ſhewed at the beginning of verſ. 15.

And in all the Land were no women found ſo fair as the Daughters of Job.

The greatneſs of their dowry is ſet down at the cloſe of verſ. 15.

And their Father gave them inheritance among their Brethren.

Some have queried, why no more is ſaid of the Sons of Job, than how many they were? To ſuch, this anſwer may ſuffice, it was the Lords pleaſure to have no more ſpoken of them; and where no more is ſaid, why ſhould we expect more?

If any ſhall further enquire; but were not his Sons worthy perſons, that they are put off thus ſlightly, and mention made only of their number, not of their weight? Were they not worthy to have ſo much as their names recorded? Which honour, and much more, is done their Siſters, the Daughters of Job.

I anſwer, We may upon good ground believe, that Job's ſeven Sons were worthy perſons, becauſe they were a great part, yea, the chief part of his reſtored happineſs; for as Children are better than riches, ſo among Children, Sons are better than Daughters, as being the more worthy Sex. Yet Sons, if not well qualified, are not only leſs worthy than Daughters, but a great croſs to their Father: And therefore it would have been a diminiſhing of Job's felicity, to have had Sons equal in number with the former, yet inferior in vertue and man-like qualities; we may, for this reaſon, ſafely conclude, that (though nothing be ſaid of their worth) that Job's Sons were worthy perſons, or perſons of praiſe-worthy qualities. But ſeeing we have nothing from divine authority, but only from well-grounded reaſon, to aſſert concerning Job's Sons, I ſhall not ſtay the reader in any further diſcourſe about them; but proceed as the Text doth with the Daughters, concerning whom we have many things to ſay from divine authority. And, Firſt, Their names muſt not be paſt with ſilence.

And he called the name of the firſt Jemima.

He, That is, Job, I ſay, it was he. Though ſome make a queſtion whether it was he or no? Or whether Job gave the name, or the people? I ſhall determine it upon Job; he Called the name of the firſt.] The Hebrew is he called the name of one. Every firſt is one, but every one is not firſt; and therefore to diſtinguiſh who this one was, we render the word Firſt. 'Tis uſual in Scripture to call that one which is Firſt. Thus ſpake Moſes, deſcribing the works of Creation (Gen. 1. 5.) So the evening and the morning were the firſt day: The Hebrew ſtrictly is, The evening was, and the morning was, day one. Any day is one day, the fifth day was one day, and the ſixth day was one day, as well as the firſt; but the fifth or ſixth were not the firſt day; therefore we Tranſlate for one day, the firſt day. Thus here he called the name of one, that is, of the firſt Jemima.

There is a twofold firſtneſs. Firſt, In order of time. Secondly, In order of honour. Firſt here is firſt in time. The other two might equal, yea, exceed the firſt in worth and dignity; but this was Job's firſt-born Daughter, his firſt in time. He called the name of the firſt Jemima.

Hence Note, Firſt, It is a duty to give names to our Children.

'Tis not meerly matter of prudence, 'tis not an humane invention to give names. God himſelf gave the name to the firſt man; God called him by the name, which, doubtleſs himſelf had given him, when he called him Adam. The proper name of the firſt man, is a name common to all men; Adam ſignifying Red-earth, ſheweth us of what matter all men are made. And as God called the firſt man by that name Adam, ſo Adam gave a name to the firſt woman, his wife (Gen. 3. 20.) He called his wiſes name Eve, becauſe ſhe was the mother of all living, And as God gave the firſt man a name, and he named the firſt woman, ſo God appointed the firſt man to give names to all living Creatures (Gen. 2. 19.) The Lord brought all the Beaſts of the Field to Adam to ſee what he would call them; and whatſoever Adam called every living Creature, that was the name thereof. The Lord would have nothing nameleſs, or without a name; ſurely then, he would have men and women known by their names. Abraham was once called Abram, a high father; but God changed his name, and would have him called Abraham, the Father of a multitude. Were it not for names we ſhould be in a great confuſion, both about perſons and things; we could not diſtinguiſh men had we not names to call them by; and therefore the Latines ſay the word (nomen) ſignifying a name, comes from (notamen) a word which ſignifieth a mark of diſtinction. Whatſoever God is made known by, is called his name in Scripture, becauſe men, and all things elſe, are known by their names. Though ſome in a ſpecial manner are called men of name in Scripture (Gen. 6. 4.) which we therefore Tranſlate men of renown; and men of no account or reputation among men, are called men of no name: Yet the pooreſt, the obſcureſt man hath a name, by which he is known and diſtinguiſht from other men.. And as by names we diſtinguiſh perſons at preſent, ſo we preſerve the memory of perſons, and of their actions, and of their ſayings, whether good or bad for hereafter. How can it be told who did, or who ſaid, this or that, unleſs we had their names who ſaid or did it.

Nomen quaſi notamen. Shem, quaſi Sham, poſitum.

Secondly, He called, that is, Job called the name of, &c.

Hence Note, It is the Fathers priviledg to give the name to his Children.

To give a name is an act of power; and therefore the Lord, as I ſhewed before, brought all the Creatures to Adam as their Lord: Having ſaid (Gen. 1. 28.) Have thou dominion over the Beaſts of the Earth, and the Fowls of the Air, and the Fiſh of the Sea, He brought them to Adam, as their Lord, to receive their names (Gen. 2. 19.) It is an act of great power either to give or to change names. When Saul (Acts 9.) was converted or changed, the Lord changed his name, he was no more called Saul, but Paul; being now become the Lords ſervant, and (as it were) one of his menial or houſhold ſervants, he gave him a new name. The Prince of the Eunuchs changed the names of Daniel, and his three companions; He gave unto Daniel the name of Belteſhazzar, and to Hananiah of Shadrach, &c. (Dan. 1. 7.) Yet we read in Scripture that women very often gave names to their Children. 'Tis conceived that Eve gave the name to Cain, I have gotten a man from the Lord (Gen. 4. 1.) yea, as ſome expound her meaning in thoſe words, ſhe thought ſhe had gotten, That man the Lord, even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the promiſed ſeed (Gen. 3. 15.) and then ſhe had gotten ſomewhat indeed, a poſſeſſion to purpoſe, as the name Cain ſignifieth. In the Hiſtory of Jacob, we find the Mothers, Leah and Rachel, ſtill giving the name (Gen. 29. 32, 33, 34, 35. & 30. 6, 8. &c. 1 Sam. 1. 20.) But as it is well diſtinguiſhed, though the nomination was often from the Mother, yet the impoſition or confirmation of the name, was always from the Father: The Mother deſired the name, the Father ratified it; as is plain in the caſe of John the Baptiſt (Luke 1. 59, 60, 61, 62, 63.) Friends preſent at his circumciſion called him Zacharias, after the name of his Father; his Mother anſwered, not ſo, but his name ſhall be called John. How was this matter determined? They made ſigns to his Father, how he would have him called, he muſt end the matter; and he called for a writing Table, and wrote, ſaying, his name is John. There have been many nominations from the Mother, but the impoſition ever was from the Father; and uſually, the Father only is mentioned in giving the name (Gen. 5. 3. 29.) as alſo here in the Text, 'tis ſaid of Job alone, He called the name of the firſt

In ſignum herilis poteſtatis.

Nominatiò à matre, impoſitio nominis à patre.

Jemima, and the name of the ſecond Kezia, and the name of the third Keren-happuch. I ſhall, Firſt, Conſider the ſignification of theſe names in the original Language.

Secondly, Give ſome account why Job gave them theſe names; for we muſt not think they were given (as we ſay) at a venture, nor in a fancy.

He called the name of the firſt Jemima.

The root of this name in the Hebrew, ſignifieth Day, or, the light of the day, and ſo both the Septuagint and the Vulgar Latine Tranſlate: As if we ſhould render it in Engliſh, He called the name of the firſt, Day.

Ἡμέραν Sept. Diem. Vulg. A Radice יום

He called the name of the ſecond Kezia.

That in the Hebrew, ſignifieth a Spice or Perfume, a very fragrant and pleaſant ſpice, of which Naturaliſts ſpeak much, and is commonly known by the name Caſſia, and ſo rendred (Pſal. 45. 8.) All thy garments ſmell of Myrrh, Aloes and Caſſia: As if in Engliſh Job had called his ſecond Daughters name, Sweet ſpice or perfume.

And the name of the third Keren-happuch.

That's a compound word, from Keren, which ſignifieth a Horn; and Happuch, which among the Learned hath a double ſignification.

Firſt, It ſignifieth a pouder, of which they made a kind of ointment, wherewith proud ones painted themſelves, called in Latine Stibium. Some ſay it was a mineral; others ſay it was a plant growing in the Sea, which being ground to pouder, was of an excellent redneſs in colour. Here the word Keren ſignifying a Horn, is prefixed to it, becauſe they uſed to preſerve ſuch painting-pouder in a horn. We find this word Happuch made uſe of in the Verb (2 Kings 9. 30.) where it is ſaid, that Jezebel hearing Jehu was come to Jezreel, Painted her face, and tired her head, &c. The Prophet alſo maketh uſe of it (*Jer.*4.30.) when he would ſhew how unable any thing ſhould be to do them good, the Lord being provoked by their evil deeds. True bodily beauty cannot, much leſs can a painted face procure them favour with men, with whom the Lord is angry for their wickedneſs and Soul-pollutions; and therefore, ſaith the Prophet there, Though thou cloatheſt thy ſelf with crimſon and deckeſt thy ſelf with ornaments of Gold, though thou renteſt thy face with painting, in vain ſhalt thou make thy ſelf fair, thy lovers will deſpiſe thee, they will ſeek thy life. When he ſaith, Though thou renteſt thy ſelf with painting, it is only to ſhew, that though they did their beſt, and uſed their utmoſt skill to make themſelves look fair, though they ſhould rub their faces with this vermillion, till they crack'd their very skin, yet it would do them no good, the enemy would not be enamoured with them, nor pity, nor ſpare them for their fine cloths and fair faces.

Secondly, Others derive this word Happuch from a root, which ſignifieth to turn, and then the ſence of the Text is, He called the name of the third Keren-happuch; that is, the horn of converſion, or of turning. I ſhall give the reaſon of that Tranſlation by and by. The Septuagint render it by a word which ſignifieth Plenty, the horn of plenty. But I conceive our rendring moſt proper: He called her name Keren-happuch, that is, The horn of beauty, alluding to the cuſtom of proud women, who to make themſelves look fair, and ſo to enſnare others with their beauty, anointed or painted themſelves with that tincturing ſtuff. Thus we have the ſignification of theſe names.

But why did Job give his Daughters ſuch names as theſe?

Firſt, I ſuppoſe this may be given as a reaſon of it, That he might in theſe names remember, or be minded of, his wonderful reſtoration. God having brought him out of a low and miſerable eſtate, to a very high and comfortable one; He therefore called the name of the firſt Jemima, that is, Day, to ſignifie that he who before was in a night, a dark night of ſadneſs and ſorrow, of trouble and adverſity, was now come to a comfortable day of proſperity. The Scripture ſaith, Light is ſown for the righteous. They may be in the dark, in a dark day, in a day as dark as night, and where the very light (as Job ſpake, Chap. 10.) is as darkneſs; but there is a Day coming, Light is ſown for the righteous. Job might ſay, I have been in the dark night of affliction, but now 'tis break of day with me; and therefore that I may remember this goodneſs of God, my firſt Daughter ſhall be named Day, that her name may help me to remember the goodneſs of God all my days.

Again, When he called his ſecond Daughter Kezia, that alſo might refer to his new ſtate. As if he had ſaid, My former condition of ſtink and filth is paſſed away; I once ſate (as it were) upon a dunghil, being little better than dung my ſelf, full of ulcerous ſores; my breath ſavour'd ſo ill, that my Wife could not endure me, and I was an offence to all neer me: But now the Lord hath renewed my fleſh, as the fleſh of a Child, now I am ſweet and clean, my ſavour is like a perfume; and therefore my ſecond Daughters name ſhall be Kezia, Spice or perfume.

Job might alſo ſay, My late affliction was a ſtate of deformity, I was black and uncomely, my face was all as a ſcab, and my Body as a ſore, my countenance was ſlurr'd with tears and weeping (as he complained, *Chap.*16.16.) there was no beauty in me; Job might ſay of himſelf in that ſtate, as it is ſaid of Chriſt in the Propheſie, When we beheld him there was no beauty, no comelineſs in him: But now my ſores are healed, now I have recovered my former ſtrength, freſhneſs and comlineſs; and therefore, the name of this Daughter ſhall be, The horn of beauty, to mind me how the Lord hath given me beauty for aſhes, and garments of joy for a ſpirit of heavineſs. Thus he might very well, and very piouſly, give his Children theſe names, to mind him of the bleſſed change which the Lord had made in his outward condition. And this is the reaſon of that Tranſlation before mentioned, of the name of the third Daughter, called Keren-happuch, The horn of Converſion, intimating how great a change the Lord had made in his horn; his horn was in the duſt before, it was empty and had nothing in it but filth, whereas now it is become or turned to be a Horn of plenty. Job's eſtate was changed from poverty to plenty, and his horn raiſed from the duſt to honout and dignity; and therefore he called the name of his third Daughter Keren-happuch, the horn of Converſion, or, The change of the horn. Thus Job might have great reaſon to call his Daughters by theſe names, with reſpect to the change of his condition.

Hence Obſerve, Godly Parents do well, when they give ſuch names to their Children, as may be memorials of the providences of God towards them.

Joſeph had a mighty turn in his eſtate, as the Pſalmiſt epitomizeth the Hiſtory of Moſes in Geneſis concerning him (Pſal. 105. 17, 18, 19, 20, &c) He was ſold for a ſervant, his feet were hurt with fetters, he was laid in Irons, until the time that his word came; the word of the Lord tryed him: The King ſent and looſed him, he made him Lord of his houſe, and Ruler of all his ſubſtance, &c. This Joſeph had two Sons in the Land of Egypt, after this turn of his eſtate; but what were their names? The Text anſwers (Gen. 41. 51, 52.) And he called the name of his firſt-born Manaſſeh, which ſignifieth forgetfulneſs; and he giveth this reaſon of it; for (ſaid he) God hath made me forget all my toil, and all my fathers houſe. And the name of the ſecond called he Ephraim, which ſignifieth fruitful; for (ſaid he) God hath cauſed me to be fruitful in the Land of my affliction. He was once very much afflicted, and now he was very fruitful; therefore, he called the name of his younger Son, Ephraim, that he might remember the kindneſs of God to him, as often as he beheld or ſpake to, or of, that Son. So Moſes called his Son Gerſhom (ſtranger) for he ſaid, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange Land (Exod. 2.22.) We find alſo names given to things, as well as to perſons, by way of remembrance. Thus (1 *Sam.*7.12.) after a great victory obtained againſt the Philiſtines, Samuel ſet up a ſtone, and gave it a name, He called it Eben-Ezer, or the Stone of help: The reaſon was, for (ſaid he) hitherto the Lord hath helped us. The name of the ſtone, was, to mind them of the Lords conſtant readineſs to help them, even unto that day. So Moſes (Exod.17.) after that great deliverance from the Amalekites, built an Altar, and called it Jehovah niſſi, which ſignifieth, the Lord is my Banner, to put them in remembrance how the Lord went forth as a man of War, and mightily confounded their enemies. There is a prudence to be uſed in the names, both of things and perſons. We read (Gen. 10. 25.) Unto Eber were born two Sons, and the name of the one he called Peleg; and why Peleg? for in his days (ſaith that Text) was the Earth divided. Peleg ſignifieth diviſion. The whole World, which lay before as one common field in his days, was divided and cantoniz'd into ſeveral Countries, therefore his name was called Peleg. And, as many names have been given from paſt or preſent providences, ſo ſome names have been given, as it were, by Propheſie, with reſpect to after providences (Gen. 5. 29.) Lamech lived an hundred eighty and two years, and begat a Son, and called his name Noah, which ſignifieth reſt. Why ſo? Not from a providence that was paſt or preſent, but from what he believed ſhould be; For this ſame (ſaid he) ſhall comfort us concerning our work and toil of our hands, becauſe of the ground which the Lord hath curſed. Thus much of the names of Job's Daughters, as they ſignified the providences of God towards him, and the turn of his ſtate.

Secondly, We may conſider theſe names with reference to the perſonal qualifications or endowments of his Daughters, and thoſe twofold; Firſt, their corporal and external qualifications. Secondly, their ſpiritual and internal qualifications, which we may well conceive Job had a chief reſpect unto, in giving them theſe names.

Firſt, He called the name of the firſt Jemima, or, Day, thereby ſignifying, Firſt, the clear natural beauty of that Daughter, or the brightneſs of her complexion like the brightneſs of the day, or as if ſhe ſhined in beauty like the day, when beautified by the beams of the Sun. Thus Chriſt ſpake of the Church (Cant. 6. 10.) Who is ſhe that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the Moin, clear as the Sun? Job's eldeſt Daughter looked forth as the day, ſhe was of a reſplendent comelineſs: And we may well ſuppoſe, Job, who gave her this name, had prayed ſhe might have, and hoped ſhe would have, and doubtleſs in her time ſhe had not only a beautiful face, and a comely feature of Body; but (which is far better) a beautiful Soul, a well-featured diſpoſition of mind, much grace and goodneſs; in which ſenſe, the Church (in the place laſt mentioned) is ſaid to look forth as the morning, to be fair as the Moon, and clear as the Sun. The name Day, doth very well ſhadow, both the virgin beauty of the Body, and the divine unſpotted beauty of the Soul. Secondly, he might call her ſo, thereby ſignifying, that as the day is ſweet and pleaſant, ſo was ſhe, both as to her bodily aſpect in comelineſs, and the aſpect of her Soul in holineſs. Thirdly, (ſay ſome) he called her name Day; becauſe beauty (bodily beauty they mean) is of no long continuance, it is but, as it were, for a day; like a flower, which a day opens and withers.

Una dies aperit, ſuſtulit una dies.

He called the ſecond Kezia, or as one of the Ancients renders, Caſha, ſignifying ſpice and perfume, to note that ſhe was of a fragrant temper, of a winning diſpoſition and converſation, grace and vertue yield the ſweeteſt ſmell in the noſtrils of God, and of all good men. The Church (Cant. 1. 3.) ſaith of Chriſt, Becauſe of the ſavour of thy good ointments, thy name is an ointment poured forth; therefore do the virgins love thee. Theſe ointments were the precious graces of Chriſt. 'Tis ſo in ſome proportion, with all the godly; their ointments (the unction of the Spirit poured upon them) caſt a delightful ſavour. Solomon ſaith (Eccl. 7. 1.) A good name is better than precious ointment. A good name, ariſing from good qualities, from grace received and acted, is the moſt precious ointment, more precious than all the ointments which affect the ſenſe. To be Jemima, beautiful in Body as the day, and not to be Kezia, not to have a ſpirit ſweet as Caſſia, what is it, but a piece of pageantry, or gilding upon a common poſt?

Job called the name of the third Keren-happuch, or, Horn of beauty; Firſt, with reſpect to her out-ſide, intimating, that ſhe was a great beauty. Some ſay, ſhe was called Keren-happuch by an Antiphraſis, becauſe ſhe needed not, much leſs uſed, the horn of beauty to make her ſelf beautiful; ſhe was even beauty it ſelf: Her natural beauty exceeded all that artificial beauty which proud women make ſhew of, by painting their faces. She was alſo a horn of beatty, as to her graces and ſpiritual endowments. Thus Job might give his Daughters theſe names, not only with reſpect to the change of his condition, but conſidering the conditions of his Daughters, both with reſpect to their bodily beauty, and the divine excellency of grace beſtowed upon their Souls.

Hence Note, It is good to give names, exciting to vertue and to duty.

Nomina bona calcar ad virtutem habent.

The names of Job's three Daughters, Day, Perfume, Horn of beauty, might ſtir them up to approve themſelves ſuch as their names imported. Vertuous names, or names of vertue, ſhould mind us to do vertuouſly. 'Tis alſo a piece of ſpiritual prudence and policy, to put, as the names of excellent things, of graces and vertues, ſo of excellent perſons, ſuch as have excelled in grace and vertue, upon our Children, that they may be provoked to imitate and follow their examples, whoſe names they bear. The good wiſhes and deſires of Parents concerning Children, may be ſilently (if I may ſo ſpeak) expreſſed in their names. They who would have their Children excel in ſuch a grace or good way, may do well to fix it in their names, as prophecying or hoping, at leaſt, they will really be what they are in name, or what their names promiſe. One of the Ancients reports this practice of the Ancients; We give names (ſaith he) wherein we hold forth our wiſhes and deſires, and pray to God that our Children may anſwer the ſignification of their names. Many Scripture-names have myſterious meaning in them. Haſea, ſignifieth a Saviour, his Parents therein prophecying (as it were) and ſhewing their faith, that he would be a Prophet, and prove inſtrumental for the ſalvation of others. Obadiah, ſignifieth the ſervant of God; his Parents gave him that name (we may ſuppoſe) hoping he would, and wiſhing he might be a faithful ſervant of God. Zachariah, ſignifieth the memory or remembrance of God; his Parents earneſtly deſiring, that God would both rememember him (which is all mercy to man) or that he might always remember God (which is all duty to God) Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth; that is, perform all duty to God.

Apud nos votiva & quaſi ob virtutis auſpicium ponuntur vocabula, ſc. Victoris, Caſti, Pii, Probi; ſic apud Hebræos, Micheas, & Habdias & Zacharias cæteraque his ſimilia ex virtutum vocabulo liberis à parentibus imponuntur. Hieron. in Proœm. Comment in lib. Mich.

We ſee then, it hath been uſual among godly Parents, to give ſignificant names to their Children, either that they might be minded of the mercies of God to them, or of the duties which they were to perform to God.

Nomina erant quaſi omina vel monita vel vota rei futuræ.

I ſhall only add for the cloſe of the point, this ſhort admonition to all, to women eſpecially (becauſe the Text ſpeaks of them) that, As it is uſeful and uſual for Parents to give good names to their Children, ſo Children ſhould have a gracious ambition to make good the ſignification of their names. What will it advantage a man to be called John, which ſignifieth grace, if himſelf be graceleſs? Or to be called Obadiah, which ſignifieth a ſervant of God, if he neglect to ſerve God? Or to be called Zechariah, which ſignifieth the remembrance of God, if he forget God? Again, what will it benefit a woman to be called Suſanna, which ſignifieth a Lilly (a beautiful flower) if ſhe be not like that Lilly among Thorns, the Church (Cant. 2. 2.) but only a Lilly in the Wilderneſs of this World? What will it benefit a woman to be called Tamar, which ſignifieth a Palm-tree, tall and ſtrait, if her ſelf be of a low, baſe, and crooked diſpoſition. 'Tis better to be a crooked ſhrub in bodily ſtature, than a tall ſtrait Palm-tree with a crooked mind, and a low ſpirit. To be named Jemima, as fair as Day; to be named Kezia, as ſweet as ſpice or perfume; to be called Keren-happuch, as beautiful as the very horn of beauty; what will it advantage any women, unleſs they have real vertues, and gracious qualities anſwering theſe names? Yea, theſe names will be real witneſſes againſt them at laſt, and fill their faces with ſhame. To profeſs our ſelves to be, or to have a name to be, what we are not, is to be deeply hypocritical; and to bear that in our names which we are not, nor take any care to be, is highly diſgraceful. But when names are fulfilled in perſons; when men and women, who wear good names, are or do the good ſignified by their names, how precious are their names! And their memories, how honourable! And when the good or vertues of the three feminine names in the Text meet and center in the perſon of any one woman; when Jemima, the day-light of true knowledg and underſtanding is joined with Kezia, the perfume of reputation, aſcending from Keren-happuch, ſtore of beautiful graces, put forth in the gracious actions of a ſpotleſs and unblameable converſation; what Pencil is able to draw to the life the raviſhing features of ſuch a perſon? Such, I believe, were theſe noble Ladies, Job's Daughters, named in the Text, which was the joy of their fathers heart, and the ſtaff of his old age.

Thus much of the names of Job's Daughters, and of the ſignification of them; both in reference to the then preſent change of Job's eſtate, and the hope he had of their future good eſtate; with reſpect to the beauty and gracefulneſs of their bodies, but eſpecially to the beauty and graciouſneſs of their Souls or minds.

Now as the beauty and vertues too of Job's three Daughters were implied, and wrapt up in their names, ſo their beauty is plainly expreſſed in the next words.

Verſe 15. And in all the Land were no women found ſo fair as the Daughters of Job, and their Father gave them inheritance among their Brethren.

In this verſe we have two things concerning Job's Daughters. Firſt, The ſupereminency of their beauty. Secondly, The greatneſs of their dowry or portions, beſtowed on them by the bounty of their Father. The former we have at the beginning of the verſe.

And in all the Land were no women found ſo fair as the Daughters of Job.

When 'tis ſaid, in all the Land; we are to underſtand it of all the Land of Uz: Yet the Septuagint extend it to all Land all the World over, rendring all under Heaven; but the word in the Original will not reach ſo far, though the truth might. But in all that Land were no women (or women kind, as Maſter Broughton reads) found ſo fair, that is, none were ſo fair as they. The word found is to be taken as in that of Moſes (Exod. 35. 23.) Every man with whom was found (that is, with whom there was, or or who had) blue and purple, &c. brought them : And as in that which is ſpoken of Chriſt (Phil. 2. 8.) He was found (that is, he was or appeared) in the form of a man. So (Mal. 2. 6. 2 Chron. 19. 3.) For we are not to conceive that there was an iniquity or ſearch made amongſt all the women of the Land of Uz who was faireſt, and that upon the return, none were found ſo fair and beautiful as Job's daughters: The meaning is only this, none were known ſo fair as they, or they had no known Peers in fairneſs ; and this is a ſufficient proof, that thoſe notable names were not given Job's Daughters without a cauſe, either ſeen or foreſeen, at leaſt deſired, the iſſue anſwering the deſire ; In all the Land there were none ſo fair as they.

Ἐν τῇ ὑπ' οὐρανόν. In ea qua ſub cœlo. Sept. Tota terra eſt ſub cœlo; hic autem reſtringitur ad certam Regionem. Druſ.

There is a bodily fairneſs, and a Soul fairneſs, The word into which we render the Hebrew ſignifieth properly the fairneſs of the face or body : But the Septuagint Tranſlate it by a word ſignifying the Souls fairneſs ; They ſay, No women were found better than the Daughters of Job. Their goodneſs without queſtion, as it was far more excellent in it ſelf, ſo more contentful and delightful to him than their fairneſs. But we may very well take in both, as was hinted before, namely, that his Daughters were excellent, both for the one beauty and for the other. Yet, I conceive, the fairneſs here ſpoken of, was that of the body ; and we muſt reckon it as a part of Job's renewed felicity, not only that he had three Daughters as he had before, but that his Daughter were fairer than any in the Land.

Non ſunt inventæ juxta filias Job meliores eis. Sept. Pulcritudo terrena fœlicitatis eximia portio eſt, ad diſpenſationem veteris teſtamenti pertinens.

Hence Note, The bodily beauty of our Children is a gift of God, and no ſmall one.

Beauty is not only one of the excellencies of nature, but ſome part of Gods image in man, and much reſpected in women. The beauty of the body, bears the image of a beautiful mind, and is a figure of holineſs ; hence that Scripture phraſe, The beauty of holineſs. It is ſaid of Moſes, He was a goodly Child ; and of Sarah, that ſhe was a very beautiful woman ; ſo beautiful, that Abraham was afraid her beauty might endanger him among ſtrangers. Rebecca alſo was beautiful, and very fair ; and though beauty is no grace, yet it is a grace to grace. Beauty is, and duly may be, a great attractive of love and affection : Though we know it is often an incentive to luſt, yet it is an attractive of true love. What is ſaid of the Church (Pſal. 45. 11.) So ſhall the King greatly deſire thy beauty, thy ſpiritual or inward beauty, is true alſo of outward or corporal beauty. Beauty to ſome is a portion among men ; to others, a favour from God. Beauty is a ſilent eloquence, a tacit perſwaſion, it works much. But conſider, I ſpeak of that beauty which is natural, not artificial ; I ſpeak not of beauty out of a box, but of that which is laid on by the hand of God, that's a bleſſing and a mercy, then eſpecially, when it is joined with better beauty. Only remember, though bodily beauty be a bleſſing, it is but an inferior bleſſing ; it is a gift of God, yet an inferior gift ; And there are many conſiderations which may keep them humble in their own thoughts, who are moſt beautiful in the eyes of others.

Species corporis ſimulacrum eſt mentis & figura probitatis. Amb. l. 2. de virgin. Gratior eſt pulchro veniens è corpore virtus.

For, Firſt, As beauty is a bleſſing, ſo it is a ſnare oftentimes ; and that in two reſpects.

Firſt, It proveth a ſnare to them that have it, If they have not grace, it maketh them proud and vain ; ſuch are often given up to new-fangled inventions ; their natural beauty will not ſerve them, they muſt have artificial ſet-offs. Again, much beauty maketh many diſdainful of others ; and they who are ſo, are under the diſdain of God ; and it had been much better for ſuch, if they had been the verieſt Doudes (as ſome call unhandſome ones) or the moſt deformed Creatures in the World. Therefore (I ſay) remember there is a ſnare in beauty to thoſe that have it ; yet by how much beauty hath the more temptation in it, by ſo much are they the more to be commended, who being beautiful, overcome thoſe temptations, and continue humble, modeſt, chaſt, diſcreet, and diligent, avoiding evil, with all the occaſions of it, turning from every vanity, and doing good.

Faſtus ineſt pulchris, ſequiturque ſuperbia formam.

Secondly, Beauty is often a ſnare to others. When the Perſian Captive Ladies were preſented to Alexander the Great, he called them, The ſores or pain of the eyes ; He was afraid they might wholly conquer him, who had conquered ſo great a part of the World. What reaſon have any to be proud of that, which may inſnare, and ſo undo, both themſelves and others ?

Secondly, Conſider there is nothing more frail, nor ſooner loſt than bodily beauty. A little ſorrow, a few tears, ſpoil and ſully a fair face ; a fit of ſickneſs withereth beauty, and, inevitably, old age will do it ; at beſt, 'tis quickly gone, and every day, when once at beſt, abates it ; the longer you have it, the leſs you have of it. Some conceive (as I toucht before) that Job called his eldeſt Daughter Jemima, Day, becauſe beauty laſteth but as it were a day ; one day bloweth it, and another day blaſteth it.

Eſt exigui donum breve temporis. Sen. in Hippol.

Thirdly, Beauty endangers the weaker Sex to become a prey to the luſts of adulterous men, who often lie inwait for ſuch a booty. So then, though beauty be a bleſſing, yet we have little reaſon to be proud of it, if theſe three things be true (as who can deny the truth of any one of them) which have been ſaid of it ; and three times three things more might be ſaid of it, with as much truth, to take all off from over-much valuing it, or to abate our valuation of it.

Formæ omnes inſidiantur.

Therefore, above all, let us look to the beauty of the mind, that's a beauty worth the ſtriving after ; and that is the trueſt bodily beauty, which is adorned with Soul-beauty, or when the beauty of comelineſs is aſſociated with the beauty of holineſs. It had been no great matter of commendation to Job's Daughters, that they were the faireſt women in all the Land, if they had not been the holieſt. The beauty of the mind is ten thouſand times more commendable than that of the body ; the King of Heaven deſires ſuch beauty. It is not a naturally fair face that will make the Lord Jeſus deſire you ; and as for an artificially fair, that will cauſe the Lord Jeſus to abhor you. The Kings Daughter is all glorious within (Pſal. 45. 13.) her glory is a ſpiritual glory. Solomon hath told us what natural beauty is without ſpiritual (Prov. 11. 22.) As a jewel in a ſwines ſnout, ſo is a fair woman which is without diſcretion ; eſpecially, that fair woman is ſo, who (as the Margin hath it) departeth from diſcretion. They are truly beautiful and lovely, who have beautiful diſpoſitions, and follow beautiful and lovely actions. The Lord ſaid of the Jewiſh Church (Ezek. 16. 14.) Thy renown went forth among the Heathen for beauty ; for it was perfect through my comelineſs which I had put upon thee. But what was the comelineſs which God had put upon her ? It was the comelineſs of divine gifts and graces planted in her, and exerciſed or held out by her. That's the ornament with which the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, the good women in the old time adorned themſelves, even the hidden man of the heart, a meek and quiet Spirit (1 Epiſt. 3. 4, 5.) And let men as well as women ſtrive for theſe ornaments. They that are deformed in perſon, may more than make it up, by being conformed to Chriſt in their ways and works. Better be deformed in body, and conformed to Chriſt, than to have a well proportion'd comely body, and no conformity unto Chriſt. It hath been ſaid of ſome wiſe and worthy men, that their Souls were ill-houſed, that is, they had ill ſhap'd or unhandſome bodies. But though the houſe of the body be mean and deſpicable, yet if the inhabitant, or the Soul, be wiſe and good, that makes amends for all outward deficiencies, yea, for deformities and monſtroſities ; whereas if the houſe of the body be never ſo well framed and built, yet if it be inhabited by a proud, unclean, ignorant, impious Soul, how doth that ſpoil, defile and diſhonour that body, and make it no better than a darkſome Dungeon.

So far concerning the names of Job's Daughters, who being qualified in body and mind according to the import of their names, were themſelves portion enough to any Husband ; yet Job did not put them off ſo, but gave an honourable ſhare of his plentiful eſtate to them, as it followeth,

And their Father gave them inheritance among their Brethren.

And well they deſerved it. Their Father gave them. He made the diſtribution to prevent contention, which often falls out among Children (and poſſibly might among Job's) about their Fathers eſtate. This was a high favour, and ſomewhat unuſual, to give Daughters inheritance among their Brethren ; they uſe only to inherit, when they have no Brethren. For among the Jews, and probably among the Idumeans, it was a cuſtom, and it paſt into a Law among the זכר

נשה

the Jews, that Sons ſhould have the whole Inheritance; the reaſon was, becauſe their Families and Inheritances were preſerved diſtinct by the Male, not ſo by the Females. The Hebrew word for a Male ſignifies Remembrance, but that for a Female Forgetfulneſs; becauſe Daughters loſe the name of their Family in Marriage, and therefore Daughters did not inherit, but when there was no Male iſſue. Thus it was in the caſe of the Daughters of Zelophehad, their Father left no Son, and ſo they inherited (Num. 27.7.) An immoveable inheritance came not to Daughters; they had only a moveable inheritance. But Job giving his Daughters inheritance among their Brethren, implieth (as ſome Interpreters conceive) that they had an equal inheritance in Lands with their Brethren, which is alſo the opinion of our Annotators; as if out of love to them, and in reward of their vertues, he gave to every one of them, as to his Sons, a portion of Land to inherit, ſo that they ſhared proportionally with their Brethren, by their Fathers Will and Teſtament, and were Coheirs with them in his Eſtate equally.

Illud Inter. vel ut in Hebræo eſt in medio fratrum æqualitatem quandam & communem rationem denotat. Pined.

Yet thoſe words, among or in the midſt of their Brethren, note, ſaith another Expoſitor, only an equality in their good qualities and vertues. I ſuppoſe, if you take equally in a ſtrict ſenſe, that is, juſt as much, foot for foot, peny for peny, they did not inherit equally; but if we take it in a common or large ſenſe, ſo they had as great an inheritance as their Brethren, they had as much for Daughters, as their Brethren for Sons. Their Fathers gave them inheritance among their Brethren.

Inter fratres ſc. ad deſignandum convenientiam virtutis in utriſque. Aquin.

Hence note, Firſt; It is the Fathers duty to provide for his Children.

(1 Tim. 5.8.) If any provide not for his own, and ſpecially for thoſe of his own houſe, he hath denied the faith, and is worſe than an Infidel. The Apoſtles meaning is, in that point, he hath denied the Faith, and doth not carry it like a believer; no, nor ſo well as unbelievers or Infidels commonly do.

Secondly, Their Father gave them inheritance.

Hence note; It is the Fathers priviledge to diſpoſe of his Eſtate to his Children.

Children muſt not take their portions; their Father muſt give it them. Children muſt not carve to themſelves: It is the priviledge of the Father to diſpoſe of what he hath, according to right and reaſon, and the Law of the place.

Thirdly, Who were they that had this gift, they were his Daughters, Their Father gave them inheritance.

Hence note; Daughters are to be provided for, as well as Sons.

Some Fathers are all for their Sons, and neglect their Daughters altogether. Sons ſhould not be denied their priviledge, and Daughters ſhould not be unprovided for. Sons bear up the name of the Family, and Daughters may bring both ſtrength and honour to the Family, by matching into worthy Families.

Note, Fourthly; The better Daughters are, the better ſhould Parents, Father or Mother, do and provide for them.

The reaſon why Job went ſo high, to give his Daughters inheritance among their Brethren was, becauſe his Daughters were not only beautiful, but dutiful, and though Women by Sex, yet of a maſculine ſpirit. The very Grammar of the Text (as ſome take notice) leads us to this ground of their Fathers bounty and nobleneſs to them; he dealt with them as with Sons, becauſe they had the vertues of Sons; for in three places the Holy Ghoſt uſeth the Maſculine affix (ם mem) where (according to ordinary rule) he ſhould uſe the Feminine (ן nun) to ſhew (ſay they) that Job was not moved by fond affection to his Daughters, but ſound judgment; he ſeeing them exceed their Sex in vertue, equall'd them in his Fatherly proviſion, with thoſe who were of a more excellent Sex, and dealt with them as with Sons in their degree.

Laſtly, Obſerve; Children ought to be ſatisfied with their Fathers pleaſure, in diſpoſing his Eſtate among them.

We do not hear that there was any diſcontent in the Sons, becauſe the Daughters had ſo much; nor in the Daughters, becauſe they had no more: both reſted in what their Father was pleaſed to do for them. How much more ſhould we reſt content with that portion and inheritance which our Father in heaven provides for us? and indeed he will give all his Daughters at laſt inheritance among his Sons: For as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh with reſpect to grace, ſo 'tis true in reſpect to glory, There is neither male nor female, but Chriſt is all, and in all. The grace of God is not more to the Male than to the Female; and, as it is in the giving of grace here, ſo it will be in the diſtribution of glory hereafter: Brethren and Siſters, Husbands and Wives, who are Heirs of the ſame grace of life, ſhall be all Heirs together in the life of glory, or in the glorious life; and therefore let us be content with what portion or inheritance our heavenly Father is pleaſed to give us, to allot, or allow us in this life.

VERS. 16, 17.

After this lived Job an hundred and forty years, and ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even four Generations. So Job died, being old, and full of days.

These two Verſes conclude the Hiſtory and whole Book of Job, and in them we may conſider theſe ſix things.

Firſt, The length of Jobs life, or how long he lived, even an hundred and forty years.

Secondly, From whence we are to date this account of his life; After this, ſaith the Text, lived Job an hundred and forty years.

Thirdly, We have here the great increaſe of his Family; he had not only Sons of his own, but ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even four Generations.

Fourthly, We may conſider the comfort and content in which he ſpent this long life, and run out thoſe many years, which is implied in thoſe words, He ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even four Generations.

Fifthly, We have the cloſe of his life, So Job died.

Sixthly, The ſtate of life in which he died, ſet forth two ways; Firſt, Being old (or an old man). Secondly, Full of days: So Job died, being old (or an old man) and full of days.

Verſ. 16. After this, Job lived an hundred and forty years.

He ſurvived all his ſorrows, and ſaw a very bleſſed Reſurrection of his comforts and injoyments. After this, that is, after this unparallell'd affliction was over-paſt, after the Winter of his ſorrows and troubles was over-blown, after the dark night of his calamity was full ſpent, After this lived Job an hundred and forty years. The Septuagint make this Expoſition their tranſlation, rendring the Text thus out of the Original, After this Plague or blow lived Job, &c. So that here we have not the account of the whole Race of his life, but of his new life, as we may call it, or, of his life, in the third edition of it: For, as there are (if I may ſo ſpeak) three Editions of mans life in general, whereof the firſt was a happy one in Adam, as created; the ſecond, miſerable, by Adam, as fallen; the third, more happy than the firſt, as we are reſtored by Chriſt, the ſecond Adam: So there were three Editions or Volumes (at leaſt) of this one mans life, whereof the firſt was very proſperous, the ſecond very troubleſome, the third more proſperous than the firſt. This proſperous Edition or ſtate of Jobs life, continued an hundred and forty years.

But have we no gheſs about the computation of his whole life, or how long he lived in all?

I anſwer, We have none from the holy Scriptures; and therefore, where the Scripture hath not a tongue to ſpeak, I would ſay but little: Yet give me leave to report the opinion, both of the Jewiſh Writers, and of ſeveral others, both Greek and Latine, concerning that point.

Firſt, It is generally agreed by the Jewiſh Writers, and by moſt of the Latines, that Job was threeſcore and ten years old at the concluſion of his trouble; and if he were ſeventy when his trouble ended, adding an hundred and forty more after the end of his trouble, it makes up juſt two hundred and ten years, as the general account of his whole life. Thus the Jewiſh Doctors conclude the Race of Jobs life, as long as the abode of the Children of Iſrael in Egypt, after their coming thither, till their going out.

Secondly, The ſeventy Interpreters give another reckoning, both of the time he lived after his affliction, and of the time before, and ſo conſequentially of his whole life; for thus they tranſlate, After this trouble, Job lived an hundred and ſeventy years; and all the days which Job lived, were two hundred and forty years. Thus they render Text, but by what Warrant I do not underſtand. The ground of this addition, by which ſome endeavour to preſerve the credit of that tranſlation, is this; The Septuagint (ſay they) by after this, do not underſtand only the time when Job was juſt come out of his troubles, but, by after this, they mean the whole time that Job was recovering out of his trouble, and growing up into that greatneſs. As if the meaning of thoſe words, after this, were to be taken thus: After Jobs Cattle were doubled, and his Family was compleated, after he had ſeven Sons and three Daughters born unto him, and after his Daughters appeared to be according to their names, and the report made of them in the former Context, the faireſt women in all the Land of Uz; and after he had diſpoſed of them in Marriage, to his comfort and content, after all this was in doing and done, he lived an hundred and forty years. Now, for the doing of all this, they allow thirty years, which being added to the hundred and forty years in the Text, make up the full ſum of an hundred and ſeventy years, as they tranſlate; to which, if we add ſeventy years, which is ſuppoſed to have been the time of his life, when his troubles ended, then the total amounts to two hundred and forty years, which the Septuagint in their tranſlation ſay he lived.

But it may ſuffice to mention this, it being only the opinion, and poſſibly the miſtake of thoſe Ancient Tranſlaters. We have no more in Scripture, but that he lived an hundred and forty years after his troubles were ended; and taking it ſtrictly ſo, he muſt needs be a very old man, for he was a perfect man, and had ten Children before his troubles began.

After this lived Job an hundred and forty years.

But why doth the Spirit of God reckon up his years? Surely to ſet forth a further bleſſing beſtowed upon Job, than as yet had been named, even the bleſſing of long life. All that is ſpoken of him, is in a way of mercy; and to make the meaſure of his mercies full, this is added or caſt in, that he lived, after the days of his trouble were ended, an hundred and forty years.

Hence note; Long life is to be reckoned among divine bleſſings; and 'tis a right-hand bleſſing (Prov.3.16.)

Job had many bleſſings of this life, but his long life on Earth was the chiefeſt of meer Earthly bleſſings. The firſt Ages of the world had very long livers: Adam, the firſt man, lived well towards a thouſand years, compleat nine hundred and thirty years, after he was Created (Gen. 5.5.) which being in a perfect mans eſtate, we may well reckon him as a man of near a thouſand years old, and nearer to a thouſand than Methuſalah, when he died. That whole Chapter is a clear proof, that all before the Flood lived to a great age.

Four reaſons may be aſſigned, why the thread of mans life was drawn out to ſo great a length, in thoſe early Ages of the world.

Firſt, That they might learn the works of Creation, and be skilled in the courſe of nature, which, having no Books, nor antecedent ſtudies of men, they muſt collect by obſervation.

Secondly, They lived long, that they might inſtruct others in what themſelves had obſerved.

Thirdly, They lived long, that mankind might be multiplied; for of thoſe long livers (Gen. 5.) when the firſtborn is mentioned, it is ſtill added, they lived ſo many hundred years after, and begat Sons and Daughters.

Fourthly, They lived very long, that they might both invent and perfect thoſe Arts and Sciences with which the world afterward abounded, when drawn into writing, and ſet forth by rule. And though after the Flood, the years of the longeſt livers were much ſhort of theirs, yet the holy Patriarchs received a great ſhare of this bleſſing. Abraham lived an hundred ſeventy and five years (Gen. 25. 7.) Iſaac lived ſomething longer, an hundred and fourſcore years (Gen. 35. 20.) Jacob lived an hundred forty and ſeven (Gen. 47. 28.) Joſeph lived an hundred and ten years (Gen. 50. ult.) Job, if we take in that common account of the antecedent part of his life, lived longer than any of theſe, even two hundred and ten years. The fifth Commandment hath this promiſe (Exod. 20. 12.) Honour thy Father and thy Mother, that thy days may be long in the Land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. And the Apoſtle calls that the firſt Commandment with promiſe (Eph. 6. 2.) that is, the firſt Commandment with an explicite promiſe (all the Commandments have promiſes implied to thoſe that obey them) Eliphaz aſſured Job of this bleſſing, in caſe of his repentance (Chap. 5. 26.) Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of Corn cometh in his ſeaſon: And in this he was a true Prophet.

Now, that long life is a bleſſing, I would ſhew briefly, under theſe ſix conſiderations.

Firſt, It is a bleſſing to have a long opportunity of doing good, of being uſeful and ſerviceable to our Generation; long life gives an advantage for that.

Secondly, It is a bleſſing to have opportunity to gain experiences: Firſt, of the various Providences of God towards men, whether in ways of judgment or of mercy. Secondly, to get experiences of the manners of men, of the vanity, unfaithfulneſs, and inconſtancy of ſome men, and of the goodneſs, faithfulneſs, and conſtancy of others. Though we ſometimes ſmart in getting our experiences, yet it may be a great bleſſing to have them.

Thirdly, It is a bleſſing to have an opportunity to hold forth the Grace of God to us, and the Graces of God in us, by a holy example. The longer we live in a natural life, the more we may manifeſt the power of a ſpiritual life, to thoſe among whom we live.

Fourthly, It is a bleſſing to have opportunity for improvement and growth in Grace, to attain the higheſt ſtature in, and pitch of holineſs. This benefit we may make of long life, even increaſe in Grace, as our years increaſe, and grow better as we grow older.

Fifthly, It is a bleſſing to have opportunity to bring up our children in the nurture and fear of God; long life gives liberty for this.

Laſtly, It is a bleſſing to behold the bleſſing of God upon our Poſterity; long life gives us opportunity for this bleſſing, and this was Jobs bleſſing eminently. In all theſe reſpects, and many more might be added, long life is a bleſſing.

Yet let me give this corrective, Long life is but a common bleſſing; it is no diſtinguiſhing bleſſing, it is not a certain love-token from God to man. Bad men have lived long, as appears both in ſacred and common Hiſtories. Old age is then a bleſſing, and good indeed, when we are old in goodneſs, or grow old doing good. Solomons concluſion reacheth this fully (Prov. 16. 31.) The hoary head is a Crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteouſneſs. And Solomon tells us in Eccleſiaſtes, Better is a Child that will be ruled, than an old and fooliſh King that will receive no counſel. When we may ſay of any, as the Lord ſaid of ſome (Ezek. 23. 43.) O ye that are old in Adulteries; when any are old in ſin, woe to ſuch an old age. Better to die young, than live to old age, and then die in ſin. To live to be old men, the old man not dying in us, O how ſad! To ſee ſin young, when the man is old, how odious a ſight is that! Then only old age is good, when we are good in old age. They only die in a good old age (as it is ſaid of Abraham, Gen. 25. 8.) who are good dying old. The ſinner of a hundred years old ſhall die accurſed (Iſa. 65. 20.) So then, it is knowing, not ignorant old age; it is prudent, not fooliſh old age; it is gracious, not vicious old age, which is indeed the bleſſing; and therefore, though it be a bleſſing, look upon it as a common bleſſing. As riches are good to us, our ſelves being good, ſo is old age, ſuch is a life of many years in this world, good only to thoſe who are good, and do good.

Secondly, When it is ſaid, Job lived an hundred and forty years, we are not to take his living for a bare continuance or indurance in life, for ſo many years; but we are to underſtand his life or living ſo long, with the cloathing of it, with the good of it; he lived, that is, he lived comfortably, honorably, peaceably, this hundred and forty years. We commonly ſay, To live, is to be well; to live, is to flouriſh. Some live, whoſe life is a kind of death. As they who live in (ſinful) pleaſure, are dead while they live, ſo alſo are they who live in great worldly ſorrow. Job lived comfortably and contentedly all that long time of his latter life, even an hundred and forty years.

Hence note, Secondly; Long life, in health, peace and proſperity, is a bleſſing indeed.

To live long in the injoyment of good, is very good. What man is he (ſaith David, Pſal. 34. 12.) that deſireth life, and loveth many days, that he may ſee good? Keep thy tongue from evil, &c. To live long, and ſee good, that is, injoy good, is the utmoſt that can be deſired in this life. That's the bleſſing, or the good promiſed in the renewed ſtate of Jeruſalem (Iſa. 65.) where, after the Lord had ſpoken of new Heavens, and new Earth, he adds, at the two and twentieth ver. They ſhall not build, and another inhabit; they ſhall not plant, and another eat; for as the days of a tree, are the days of my people, and mine Elect ſhall long injoy the work of their hands. He doth not ſay, they ſhall live long, but they ſhall injoy long; that which they have built and planted, none ſhall invade nor take away from them. Some conceive, this hath reference to the thouſand years propheſied of (Rev. 20.) wherein the Church ſhall injoy perfect felicity in this world. To live long in the ſweet injoyments of health, honour, peace and plenty, for ſoul and body, is a full bleſſing. I grant, ſome good men live long, who yet do not always injoy good; their old age eſpecially is accompanied and incumbered with many bodily diſtempers, and grievous pains. Though grace ſets us above the decays of nature, and the troubles of this life, yet grace doth not exempt nor give us priviledge from either; ſo that greedineſs after many years, is commonly a greedineſs only after many infirmities. Iſaac was a good old man, yet 'tis ſaid of him, that when he was old, his eyes waxed dim, ſo that he could not ſee (Gen. 27. 1.) Old age, and dim eyes, and deaf ears, ſhaking hands, and pallied trembling joynts, with manifold diſeaſes, are ſeldom found aſunder: Therefore Job had an extraordinary bleſſing, to live long and free from all theſe evils, and ſo have any who do ſo. Barzillai was a good old man, yet (2 Sam. 19. 25.) he was ſo benummed, and his natural ſenſes ſo infeebled, that he did not injoy his life; Can I (ſaid he to David, who invited him to a Court-life, Can I) any more taſt what I eat or drink? &c. That's a bleſſed old age, when we live long, and injoy comfort with our lives, chiefly when we injoy the comforts, and act the duties of a ſpiritual life.

Thirdly, Conſider, Job was afflicted but a few months we are ſure, not many years, but God gave him an hundred and forty years of proſperity in this world, after his affliction.

Hence note; God ſometimes doth, and always can recompence our ſhort ſufferings with long comfortable injoyments, even in this life.

Joſeph, for his thirteen or fourteen years ſlavery and impriſonment in Egypt, had fourſcore years liberty and high advancement there. And though the Lord doth not always, nor often make ſuch compenſations in this world; yet he will compenſate all the ſufferings of his faithful ſervants, with longer, not only comfortable, but glorious injoyments; yea, with an eternal injoyment of glory in the world to come (2 Cor. 4. 17.)

Fourthly, Note; The Lord can make our old age, our extream old age, even a youth to us, or as comfortable to us as our youth.

He can give health and ſtrength to the very laſt, he can give a Spring in the Winter of our age. Thus it was with Job; he did not only live long, but flouriſhed in the health of his body, as much as in the plenty of his Eſtate. The Lord can forbid diſeaſes, he can forbid the Gout, the Stone, or any other pain, to touch the perſon of an old man, if he pleaſeth. Some are even afraid to be old, becauſe of the infirmities of old age; but God, who continues life, can prevent or preſerve us from the natural, as well as the providential evils of it. Solomon (Eccl. 12. 1.) calleth old age, the evil day, and the years wherein there is no pleaſure; and he uſeth it as an argument to move thoſe who are young, to remember their Creator: yet God is able to make old age a good day to us; and to lengthen out our pleaſures (thoſe pleaſures that are ſutable to old age) as long as he is pleaſed to lengthen out our lives; ſo that the comforts and contentments of our lives, ſhall run parallel with the length of our lives, to the end of our lives. Thus Job lived, he lived comfortably, he lived healthfully, the Lord preventing the decays or uſual dilapidations of his houſe of Clay, as will appear further in the next words. After this Job lived an hundred and forty years,

And ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even four Generations.

That is, Job lived to be a Great Great Grandfather; he ſaw his Sons, and his Grand-children, and his Great Grand-children, and his Great Great Grand-children, four Generations. Joſeph (Gen. 50. 23.) lived to ſee but the third Generation; he was only a Great Grand-father. Many among us live to be Great Grand-fathers, and Great Grand-mothers; but to be a Great Great Grand-father, that is, to ſee the fourth Generation, is very rare. This is recorded of Job, not only to ſet forth the greatneſs of his age, but alſo to ſhew the greatneſs of his bleſſing, and the exceeding greatneſs of the mercy and goodneſs of God to him, in multiplying his Family; he ſaw a numerous Iſſue, to take comfort in all that latter part of his life. He ſaw (ſaith the Text) his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even four Generations. The Learned in that Language take notice, that the Hebrew word rendred ſaw, implieth delight; and doubtleſs, Job had a moſt delightful ſight of his Sons, and his Sons Sons. It is no where ſaid, that Job ſaw his Sheep, or his Oxen, or any of his Riches, to take delight in them; but Job ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons; this ſight was a thouſand times more pleaſing to him, than the ſight of his fourteen thouſand Sheep, or of his thouſand yoak of Oxen.

Quartam generationem intelligo incluſive, ita ut intelligatur vidiſſe etiam abnepotes, hi enim ſunt in quarto gradu à progenitore ſcil. Abavo. Piſc.

Verbo videndi jucundiſſimus filiorum ac nepotum conſpectus ſignificatur.

Hence note; To have and injoy a numerous family, is greatly contentful to man, and a great bleſſing of God.

Job received a great bleſſing, when he had Sons and Daughters of his own, as many as before; but when he ſaw his Sons, and his Sons Sons, even to the fourth Generation, that was the Crown of all his outward bleſſings. Eliphaz fore-ſpake this of him, upon ſuppoſition of his repentance, and profiting under the correcting hand of God (Chap. 5. 25.) Thou ſhalt know alſo that thy ſeed ſhall be great, and thy off-ſpring as the graſs of the Earth. The children of all men, or all the children of men, are as graſs for fadingneſs (Iſa. 40. 6.) But when Eliphaz ſaid, Thy off-ſpring ſhall be as the graſs of the earth; his meaning was, they ſhall flouriſh as the graſs, and they ſhall be many, very many, as the graſs of the earth. David (Pſal. 127. 3, 4, 5.) ſpeaks of this great bleſſing, the multiplying of the ſeed of the righteous, as their great contentment; Loe, children are the Heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the Womb is his reward. As Arrows in the hand of a mighty man, ſo are children of the youth: happy is the man that hath his Quiver full of them; that is, he hath a great outward happineſs. Many children may contribute to our happineſs many ways, though ſome have had many unhappineſſes in one. The next Pſalm inſiſts upon the ſame mercy, under other metaphors; Thy Wife ſhall be as the fruitful Vine by the ſides of thy houſe, thy Children like Olive-plants round about thy Table; Loe, thus ſhall the man be bleſſed that feareth the Lord. And (verſ. 6.) Yea, thou ſhalt ſee thy Childrens Children, and peace upon Iſrael. It is a great affliction, a grief of eyes, yea, a breaking of the heart, to behold bad children; but how ſweet a ſight is it, to behold good and obedient children, and them many! There are two conditions very grievous to ſee our children in. Firſt, To ſee them in miſery. Rachel (Jer. 31. 15. Mat. 2.) mourned for her Children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they were not; ſhe ſaw them murdered before her eyes. Such a ſight had Zedekiah (Jer. 50. 10.) the King of Babylon brought his children, and ſlew them before his eyes; he made him ſee that horrid ſpectacle, and then put out his eyes (verſ. 11.) Secondly, To ſee children ſin, and going on in a courſe of ſin, that is a greater, a far greater affliction than the former. It is ſaid (Gen. 26. 34.) When Eſau was forty years old, he took to Wife Judith, the Daughter of Berith the Hittite, which was a grief of mind to Iſaac and Rebecca. To ſee their Son match among the prophane and uncircumciſed, both in heart and fleſh, was a cut, a wound, a deep wound in their ſpirits. Again (Chap. 27. ult.) Rebecca ſaid to Iſaac, I am weary of my life, becauſe of the Danghters of Heth. If Jacob take a Wiſe of the Daughters of Heth, ſuch as theſe which are of the Daughters of the Land, what good ſhall my life do me? Better be out of the world, than ſee my Sons miſcarry. Theſe two ſights, to ſee children ſuffering, or to ſee them ſinning, are a pain, not only to the eyes, but to the hearts of Parents. But to ſee them, Firſt, Proſperous in their way; Secondly, Pious, keeping the way of the Lord; to have and ſee ſuch children, and childrens children, to the third and fourth Generation, how delightful is this! The Apoſtle John profeſſed (3 Epiſt. ver. 4.) I have no greater joy, than to hear that my children walk in the truth. He means his ſpiritual children, thoſe whom he had converted to the Faith, and begotten to Chriſt in the Miniſtery of the Word. O what a joy was it to that holy Apoſtles heart, to ſee them walk anſwerably to the Profeſſion of the Goſpel, and his expectation! Now as that was ſo great a joy to him, that he had no greater; ſo 'tis an unſpeakable joy, when gedly Parents ſee their natural children ſpiritual, and walking in the truth. To ſee children new born to ſee them gracious, and to ſee them proſperous alſo, what a bleſſed ſight is this! And this was the ſight doubtleſs which Job had, he ſaw his children, His Sons, and his Sons Sons, to the fourth Generation. His bleſſedneſs, as to all without him in this life, was at the higheſt, when he ſaw the proſperity of his children, both in ſoul and body. Thus Job was bleſſed every way, he was bleſſed with riches, bleſſed with long life, bleſſed in the multiplication of his family; he was bleſſed alſo in his death, as appeareth in the next and laſt words of this Chapter and Book.

Verſ. 17. So Job died, being old, and full of days.

As Solomon ſaid (Eccleſ. 12. 13.) Hear the concluſion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his Commandments. So I may ſay now, Hear the concluſion of all men. To fear God, and keep his Commandments, is the conſummating end of our lives, but to die, is the conſuming end of all our lives, and to a good man 'tis an entrance into eternal life; Such, and ſo Job died. The Lord having ſpoken of his life, is not ſilent about his death; The ſtory, the holy ſtory brings Job to his grave: and that could not but be a bleſſed death, which was the cloſe of a gracious life. So Job died. Death is the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body; 'tis the ſleep of the body in the grave, and the reſt of their Souls in heaven who die in the Lord. There is no difficulty in theſe words; take a note or two from them.

Firſt, Death takes all ſooner or latter.

Mors ultima clauſula vitæ. Mors ultima linea rerum.

Job lived a long time, but he did not out-live death; he injoyed an hundred and forty years proſperity in this world, yet he left the world; He lived long, yet a day came when he could not live a day longer. 'Tis ſaid of all the long livers (Gen. 5.) They died. Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, and he died. Seth lived nine hundred and twelve years, and he died. Methuſelah (the longeſt liver in this world) lived nine hundred ſixty and nine years, and he died. Here Job lived an hundred and forty, and ſo he died. David put the queſtion of all men (Pſal. 89. 48.) What man is he that liveth, and ſhall not ſee death? How great, or how good, how rich, or how wiſe, how ſtrong, or how valiant ſoever any man living is, he muſt die. How long ſoever any man hath lived in this world, he muſt die, for the world muſt die; there muſt be a diſſolution of all things, and therefore a diſſolution of all men (Pſal. 82. 6, 7.) I ſaid, ye are Gods, but ye ſhall die like men. Kings and Princes, who have the priviledge to be called Gods, have not the priviledge of God, not to die like men. This is a common Theam, I intend not to ſtay upon it; only, let me tell you, death will overtake us all ſooner or latter, upon a double account.

Firſt, Becauſe it is appointed.

Secondly, Becauſe it is deſerved. It is appointed unto men once to die (Heb. 9. 27.) and all men have deſerved to die, to die eternally; and therefore much more to die naturally (Rom. 5. 12.) As by one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin, and ſo death paſt upon all men, for that all have ſinned. Now ſeeing the condition of all men is a dying condition, receive theſe four Cautions.

Firſt, Prepare for death. There is no avoiding it at the long run, therefore be ready to entertain it at laſt; and, becauſe we may die at any time, be preparing for death at all times. How miſerable are they who are ſo old that they cannot live, and yet ſo unprepared, that they are afraid to die? Job died, and we muſt: If ſo, Is it not our wiſdom to prepare for death?

Secondly, Submit quietly to the arreſt of death. There is no ſtriving with the Decrees of God. Our death is under a Divine appointment (Eccleſ. 8. 8.) There is no diſcharge in that war, no priviledge to be pleaded, no exemption, no preſcription. Your ſtrength cannot ſtand againſt the aſſaults of death, your prudence and policy cannot find any way of eſcape from it, nor can your piety or godlineſs deliver you out of the hands of natural death. As there is no work, nor knowledge in the grave whither we are going (Eccleſ. 9. 10.) ſo there is no knowledge, no device, no wiſdom, can keep us from going into the grave, no, not our Graces. Grace is as ſalt to the Soul, preſerving it from moral corruption for ever: But it cannot keep the body from natural corruption in this world, becauſe our Graces in this world are mingled with corruption. Death is domeſtical to us, that is, we have the ſeed of it within our ſelves, we carry it daily in our bowels, and in our boſoms; therefore ſubmit quietly to it, for there is no avoiding it.

Mors eſt nobis nimis domeſtica, utpote quam in viſceribus noſtris circumferimus. Plutarch. in Conſol. ad Apoll.

Thirdly, Seeing all muſt die, get that removed which is the trouble of a Death-bed, and the ſting of Death; get that removed which makes Death bitter, get that removed which makes Death, The King of Terrours, ſo terrible, that is, ſin. This ſhould be our ſtudy all the days of our life, to get rid of ſin, to be dying to ſin daily; becauſe we muſt die at laſt, and may die, for all that we know, or can aſſure our ſelves, any day we live (1 Cor. 13. 56.) The ſting of death is ſin. Whenſoever, or in what way ſoever we die, it will be well with us, if the ſting of death be firſt pulled out; aud whenſoever we die, after never ſo long a life, it will be miſerable, if we die in our ſins; as Chriſt told the Jews in the higheſt threat, I go away, and ye ſhall die in your ſins (John 8. 21.) They that die in their ſins, die a double death at once, a temporal and an eternal death together. And to thoſe who have got the ſting of death pulled out, that is, the guilt of ſin removed and waſhed off by the Blood of Chriſt, I would,

Fourthly, Take this caution. If you would have death eaſie to you, die more and more to ſin daily. Some, who are dead to ſin, may find much life of ſin remaining in them; and they who have much of the life of ſin in them will never die eaſily, they will find ſtrong bands in their death, which, in another ſenſe, ſome wicked men find not (Pſal. 73. 4.) While either ſin, or ſelf, or the world are lively in us, death will be grievous to us: Therefore let them who are dead to ſin, never think themſelves dead enough to it while they live; they who are moſt dead to ſin and the world, have the ſweeteſt and moſt comfortable paſſage out of the world. So Job died,

Being old.] It muſt needs be that Job was an old man, when he had lived an hundred and forty years after all his changes before this change came: Why then is it added, he died, being old, or being an old man? Surely, to teach us this Leſſon.

Old age and death cannot be far aſunder.

'Tis a truth, young men and death are not very far aſunder, youth and death are at no great diſtance; but when we ſee an old man, we may conclude, that death and he are very near Neighbours. While we ſee an old man with his ſtaff in his hand, we may ſay, he carrieth a Rapper in his hand, by which at every ſtep he knocks at the door of the grave. There is no man, not the youngeſt man, that can reckon certainly upon one day beyond what he hath; and therefore Solomon admoniſheth us. (Prov. 27. 1.) Boaſt not of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. And the Apoſtle James checks thoſe who would reckon upon a day; he tells them upon the matter, That they reckon without their Hoſt (James 4. 13.) Go to now, ye that ſay to day, or to morrow we will go into ſuch a City, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain: And then at the 14th verſe, Whereas ye know not what ſhall be on the morrow; for (ſaith he) What is your life? it is even a vapour that appeareth for a little while, and then vaniſheth away. They that are youngeſt have not a day, nor an hour in their power to reckon upon; what then have they that are old? We may ſay of them, They are even paſt their reckoning. A Woman near her time will ſometimes ſay, She hath but a day to reckon; and ſome will ſay, they have never a day to reckon: old men may ſay ſo, they have not a day to reckon. Young men may die; old men muſt die: Then let old men be much in the meditation of death, let them be often looking into their graves; their grey hairs that do ſo, are found in the way of wiſdom. Job died, being old: There was no longer ſtaying for him in this world. Once more,

Job died, being old,

And full of days.

There is a twofold fulneſs.

Firſt, A fulneſs of ſatiety.

Secondly, A fulneſs of ſatisfaction.

They are full in a way of ſatiety, who loath that which they are filled with, 'tis burthenſom to them. They are full in a way of ſatisfaction, who having enough, are pleaſed, and deſire no more. Some expound this Text of Job, in the former ſenſe, he was full of days, that is, he had a fulneſs of ſatiety upon him, he had lived ſo long, that his life was a burden to him, he had lived till he was weary of living, his life was tedious and grievous to him. It is ſaid (Revel. 9. 6.) In thoſe days ſhall men ſeek death, and ſhall not find it; and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them. That which moſt flee from, ſome purſue, and it fleeth from them. None are ſo unfit to die, as they who upon the account ſpoken of in that Text, ſeek death, and deſire to die. I do not conceive, that Job was full of days in the former notion, as the ſtomach may be full of meat and loath it, or be burthened with it, but as having had enough of it, though well liked to the laſt morſel. And I am ſure he was not full of days when he died in the latter notion, as one wearied with the troubles of his life; for all his latter days were a bleſſing to him, and he bleſſed in them all: His laſt days in this world being his beſt days of worldly injoyment, he could have no reaſon, upon any worldly account, to deſire a departure out of the world.

I grant, a good man though he hath not lived many days may be full of days, even to wearineſs, by reaſon of his temptations, corruptions, and ſins; of which kind of wearineſs the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Cor. 5. 2.) In this (earthly houſe of the body) we groan earneſtly, deſiring to be cloathed upon with our houſe, which is from heaven. And upon this account poſſibly, Job himſelf might be weary of his life, and deſire the death of his body, that he might be delivered from the body of that death. But Jobs worldly life was as ſweet as it was long, he was as full of bleſſings as he was of days; and therefore, doubtleſs, he was only ſatisfied with living, not tired with it: He did not loath his natural life, nor did he hunger after a longer life in this world; he hungred after Eternity, not time: He did not hunger after a longer life, as they do who have their portion in this life, how long ſoever they have lived. A worldly man is never ſatisfied with living in the world; he never hath his belly full of living here, while he ſees he may (as Job might) fill his belly with the good things of this life. But as Job had lived very long, and very well on Earth, ſo he knew there was a better life to be had in Heaven; and therefore was full of days, both as having had many, and as having no deſire after more on Earth. As he was not (which David deprecated, Pſal. 102. 24.) taken away in the midſt of his days; ſo he was willing to come to the end of his days; and for that reaſon might well be ſaid to die, being old, and full of days.

Secondly, Theſe words, ſo Job died, being old, and full of days, may note as his willingneſs to die, ſo the eaſineſs of his death; he was come to a full ripeneſs for death. Fruit that is fully ripe is ſoon gathered, and ſometimes drops off alone from the Tree. Job was every way ripe for death; his body was ripe, he was full of days; his ſoul was ripe, he was full of grace: ſurely then his was a ſpontaneous death; a very ſweet way of dying. His natural ſtrength was not much (being old) to make reſiſtance againſt death; and his ſpiritual ſtrength was ſo much, that it cauſed him to make no reſiſtance againſt it, or rather at once joyfully to imbrace and overcome it.

Thirdly, Theſe words, ſo Job died, being full of days, may have this ſpiritual meaning; His days were full. He did not live empty days, or void, blank days; but as he was full of days, ſo his days were full, full of good works and holy duties. That mans days are empty, though he be full of days, or how many days ſoever he hath lived, who hath lived in vanity, and done little good with his life. But we have reaſon to ſay, Job died full of days, becauſe his days were full of good done, as well as of good received; he had not a long being only, but a long life in the world, living to good, yea, his beſt in duty both to God and man. Thus Job died, being old, and full of days. From this latter part of the verſe, Obſerve; Firſt, When a godly man dieth, he is ſatisfied with the time he hath lived, he hath his fill of days, he craves no more.

Though no length of this life can ſatisfie him, yet he is ſatisfied with the length of his life. A godly man in ſome caſes may crave a little more time; He may ſay, as (Pſal. 102. 24.) O take me not away in the midſt of my days; and (as elſewhere) O ſpare me a little, that I may recover my ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more (Pſal. 39. 13.) Yet this is a truth ſpecially as to good old men (living as Job had done) when they die, they have had their fill of living. A Heathen ſaid, and he ſpake it after a Heatheniſh manner, If any God would give me the priviledge to be young again, and to cry in a Cradle, I would not thank him for it, I have had living enough. If a vertuous Heathen hath ſaid ſo by the light of Reaſon and Morality; then, doubtleſs, a godly Chriſtian may much more ſay ſo through the power of Faith and Grace. It cannot be ſaid of all men who die (as Job did) being old, that they in this notion died (as Job did) full of days: For as ſome godly young men have been fully ſatisfied with a few days, and have ſaid they have lived as long as they deſired, and could ſay with Paul, We deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt, which is far better (Phil. 1. 23.) Yet ſome old men are very much unſatisfied with their many days; ſome old men would be young again: This argues they have made but little improvement of their days, or that they have got little, if any thing, of that all their days, which ſhould be the ſtudy of every day, an intereſt in the death of Chriſt, and ſo a readineſs for a better life. For an old man to wiſh himſelf young again, is like one who with great labour hath clamber'd up a ſteep hill, and wiſheth he were at the foot or bottom of it again; 'tis as if a man, who (having been long toſt in a Storm, between Rocks and Sands) is got near a ſafe Harbour, ſhould wiſh himſelf out at Sea again. They have not a true taſt, much leſs a lively hope of that life which is to come, who would return to this upon ſuch hazardous and uneaſie terms?

Si mihi quis Deus largiatur ut ex hac ætate repueraſcam, & in cunis vagiam valde recuſem. Cato.

Secondly, As theſe words note a readineſs or a willingneſs to die;

Obſerve; A good man is willing to leave this world.

He is not thruſt nor forced out of it, but departs; he is not pluckt off, but falls off like ripe fruit from the tree; His ſoul is not required of him (as 'tis ſaid of the rich man, Luke 12. 20.) but given up, and reſigned by him; he is not taken, but goes out of the world. It is ſaid indeed (Pſal. 57. 1.) Merciful men are taken away (by Gods Commiſſion given to death) from the evil to come; but they are not taken away from (as being unwilling to part with, and leave) any preſent good. A gracious man hath uſually a readineſs to die, in a twofold notion. Firſt, As readineſs ſignifies preparedneſs: Secondly, As readineſs ſignifies a willingneſs to die: And always the firſt readineſs promotes the ſecond. The more prepared any one is to die, the more willing he is to die. That man can ſay, Lord, now let thy ſervant depart in peace, whoſe eye of faith hath ſeen his ſalvation. We (ſaith the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of believers, 2 Cor. 5. 8.) are willing to be abſent from the body, that is, to die. And the word there uſed ſignifies not only the freeſt choice, but (if I may ſo ſpeak) the good will or good pleaſure of mans will, as it often ſignifies Gods. As a godly man hath a peculiar way of living, ſo of dying; and the reaſon of both is, becauſe he ſees bleſſed

Εὐδοκοῦμεν.

Eternity beyond time, and himſelf, by a well-grounded (that is, a Scriptural) hope, a partaker of the bleſſedneſs of it.

Thirdly, Note; They die full of days, who fill their days, or whoſe days are full.

That is, who fill their days with, or whoſe days are full of the fruits of righteouſneſs, of faith and repentance, of love and charitableneſs. Stephen (Acts 6. 8.) was full of faith and power. They die full of days in old age, who, as it is ſaid (Pſal. 92. 14.) Bring forth (ſuch) fruit in their old age; who die as Dorcas (Acts 9. 36.) full of good works, and Alms-deeds which they have done. It was ſaid of a famous Painter, No day paſt him without drawing a line. A Roman Emperour ſaid, I have loſt a day, when he did no good that day. We may well reckon thoſe days loſt in which we do no good, in which we draw not ſome white line, ſome golden line of grace and holineſs. Then what account will their days come to, who paſs not a day, but they draw black lines, filthy lines of ſin and wickedneſs, or whoſe days are all blotted with the worſt abominations of the day they live in? If thoſe days are empty and loſt, wherein we do no good, and are not made better; what then becomes of their days, and where will they be found, but in the Devils Almanack, who do nothing but evil, and daily become worſe and worſe? So then, they only die full of days, who live doing the will of God, and denying their own; who live mortifying corruptions, and reſiſting temptations; who live exerciſing their graces, and anſwering their duties to God and man: This, this is to live our days, and to die full of days.

Nulla dies ſine linea. Apelles. Diem perdidi. Veſpaſian.

Again, as their days are full, who are full of grace in themſelves, and of good works towards men; ſo are theirs who are full of the mercies and bleſſings of God, eſpecially theirs, whoſe days are full of ſoul-mercies and bleſſings, whoſe hearts are full of peace with God, full of joy in God, full of aſſurance of the glory of God. They whoſe days are filled with theſe divine injoyments, die full of days, how few days ſoever they have lived in this world. They who live thus, live many days in one day; they who live thus, have the taſt and firſt-fruits of Eternity every day; and therefore cannot but be ſatisfied with their days, be they many, or be they few.

He that dwelleth in the ſecret place of the moſt High (Pſal. 91. 1.) that is, who truſteth fully in God for ſafety by Chriſt in this world, and for ſalvation in the next, ſtands under the ſhadow and ſweet influences of many promiſes, mentioned in that Pſalm for the preſervation and prolongation of his life, in the midſt of a thouſand deaths and dangers; all which are ſummed up in that promiſe given at the 16th or laſt verſe of the Pſalm, With long life will I ſatisfie him, and ſhew him my ſalvation. The Hebrew is, with length of days will I ſatisfie him: Which as it is true, and firſtly intended in that Pſalm, of a long life here, and hath in that ſenſe been often fulfilled to thoſe who truſt in God fully; God gives to ſuch not only a preſent eſcape from death in a time of Peſtilence, but gives them long life, or their fill of living afterwards even in this world; yet that which doth chiefly ſatisfie them is, that long life, of which the longeſt life in this world is but a ſhadow, and to which it is a very nothing. What is this long life? Surely, not a life of an hundred and forty years long, as Jobs was. Job was ſo ſatisfied with the length of his life, that he was willing to die (as hath been ſhewed) but Job was not ſo ſatisfied with it, as to take that for his long life. Every man would be ſatisfied; but what doth ſatisfie a godly man? what doth he hunger after for ſatisfaction? Is it after honours? No; Is it after many riches? No; Is it after pleaſures? No; Is it after many days here? No; What is it then? Nothing can ſatisfie the hunger of a gracious Soul, but life after this life, the long and bleſſed life of Eternity; and that is chiefly intended him in that promiſe, With long life will I ſatisfie him, and ſhew him my ſalvation. No length of life can ſatisfie us, but as in it we have the fore-ſights and fore-taſts of everlaſting life, or of that long life, which is Eternal Salvation: With this Job was ſatisfied, with this the old Patriarchs were ſatisfied. It is ſaid of Abraham (Gen. 25. 8.) He died in a good old age, an old man, and full (of years.) Of Iſaac alſo it is ſaid (Gen. 35. 28, 29.) He died, being old, and full of days: both had their fill of time; but that which filled them both, and that which only can fill any, whoſe lives are yet meaſured by time, is the hope of a bleſſed Eternity.

I ſhall cloſe the Point with an anſwer to this queſtion; why no more is ſaid of Job, but, That he died, being old, and full of days; whereas in both thoſe places laſt named, concerning Abraham and Iſaac, it is not only ſaid, that they died being old, and full of days, but this is added, And were gathered to their people. Abraham died, and was gathered to his people: Iſaac died, and was gathered to his people: Why is it not alſo ſaid of Job, ſo good a man, dying full of days, and fuller of graces, that he was gathered to his people?

I anſwer, Abraham and Iſaac lived and died among a people, who were (as themſelves were) in Covenant with God; whereas Job lived among the Idumeans, ſome affirming him to be of the Poſterity of Eſau, others of Abraham, by his ſecond Wife Keturah: Now all the Sons which Abraham had by her, he ſent away from Iſaac his Son (while he yet lived) Eaſtward into the Eaſt Country (Gen. 25. 6.) So that it being doubtful (at leaſt) whether the people among whom Job lived were a godly people or no, and that they were not, being more probable (as was ſhewed, if not concluded, in opening the firſt verſe of the firſt Chapter; for this reaſon I ſay) we may ſuppoſe (for the Scripture determines nothing in this matter) that when the death of Job was ſpoken of, nothing was ſpoken of his being gathered to his people. So Job died, being old, and full of days.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, A ſorrowful man, yea, even a man of ſorrows (for a time among men) as ſome expound his name.

Secondly, A man hated (by Satan at all times) as others expound his name.

Thirdly, A man highly approved and loved of God, as appears by the teſtimony which he gave of him, both firſt and laſt.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, Famous for the afflictions with which God exerciſed and tryed him to the utmoſt.

Secondly, More famous for his patience and conſtancy under thoſe afflictions and tryals.

Thirdly, Moſt famous for his wonderful deliverance out of thoſe afflictions and troubles.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, Famous for his riches and proſperity.

Secondly, More famous for his vertues and integrity.

Thirdly, Moſt famous for his victory over Satan in his deepeſt adverſity.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, Reviled by his Wife.

Secondly, Reproached by his Friends.

Thirdly, Deſerted by his neareſt Relations, in the day of his greateſt need.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, Unjuſtly accuſed of, charged with, cenſured for the worſt of iniquities.

Secondly, Who ſtoutly maintained his own Innocency againſt all thoſe Cenſures and Charges.

Thirdly, Who was clearly acquitted from them all, by the teſtimony of his own Conſcience always, and by the teſtimony of God himſelf in the end.

This is that Job, who was,

Firſt, Greatly diſtreſſed by the malice of the Devil, through the permiſſion of God.

Secondly, Mightily ſupported againſt the malice of the Devil, by the power of God, in all his diſtreſſes.

Thirdly, Fully reſolved to truſt in God with all his heart, though he died under his hand, in never ſo great diſtreſs.

This is that Job, who,

Firſt, In the greatneſs of his pain, expoſtulated ſometimes with God over-boldly; yet,

Secondly, At the laſt ſubmitted and humbled himſelf at the foot of God meekly.

Thirdly, Was honoured as a Mediator for his miſtaken friends, and accepted in it by God graciouſly.

Once more, This is that Job, who,

Firſt, After his reſtoring, was filled with the bleſſings of this life.

Secondly, Lived long, even to fulneſs of days, in the full injoyment of thoſe bleſſings.

Thirdly, Died peaceably, and paſſed ſweetly into the injoyment of a better, of a longer, even an Eternal life.

Thus I am come to the end of Job, and to the end of the Book of Job; yet before I end, let me leave theſe five words, as ſo many Uſes of the whole Book of Job.

Firſt, While you live in this world, live in the expectation of, and preparation for changes: Job met with them, and who may not?

Secondly, Be patient under all the troubleſom changes which you meet with in this world: Job is your pattern.

Thirdly, Never meaſure the heart of God towards you, by his hand upon you; judge not of your ſpiritual Eſtate, by what appears in your temporal. That was the grand miſtake of Jobs friends, and it was his honour to withſtand them in it, and to ſtand faſt to his integrity in the loweſt fall of his Eſtate in this world.

Fourthly, Whatever God doth to you, or with you, ſubmit freely to him: So did Job at firſt.

Fifthly, and laſtly, How low ſoever you are brought, yet hope for a good iſſue, poſſibly in this life, aſſuredly in that life which is to come. Job found both at laſt.

To cloſe all, There are examples of two ſorts recorded in the holy Scriptures. Firſt, for caution, To the intent we ſhould not luſt after evil things, as they alſo luſted. Secondly, for imitation, To the intent we ſhould do good things, which they alſo did; and ſuffer evil things, with the ſame mind, and in the ſame manner, as they likewiſe ſuffered. Holy Job may be to us an example of caution in ſome things, for even he had (and who hath not) his failings: He alſo may be an example in many things, how both to do good, and ſuffer evil. And among all imitable examples (except that of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of whom in ſome reſpects Job may be called a Type, and the things which hap'ned to him in his ſufferings, may be called (as the Apoſtle uſeth the word in another caſe, 1 Cor. 10. 11.) Types of what hap'ned to Chriſt in his; I ſay, among all imitable examples, except his) this of Job is one of the moſt eminent in doing, and the moſt eminent of all in ſuffering. Let him therefore be our Pattern to do and ſuffer by, our Copy in both to write by, our Mirrour or Looking-glaſs to obſerve the diſcompoſures, and compoſe the features and motions, both of our outward and inward man by; let us admire and follow his unſpotted integrity in Morals, his fervent zeal about Spirituals, his unſhaken faith, and hope for Eternals; let us admire and follow his moderation in a high Eſtate, his contentation in a low Eſtate, his ſtedfaſtneſs with, and for God, in every Eſtate.

He that ſtayeth in the bare ſpeculation of what is written by inſpiration from God in the Text, or of what is written through the help of God, by the ſtudy of man in the Expoſition of this Book, is like unto a man, beholding his natural face in a glaſs ('tis the Apoſtle James his compariſon, in the firſt Chapter of his Epiſtle to the ſcattered Tribes) for he beholdeth himſelf, and goeth his way, and ſtraightway forgetteth what manner of man he was; that is, he forgets his own ſpots and defects, and ſuffers them to increaſe to more ungodlineſs: But he that reduceth or brings down his ſpeculation to action at all times, and to a preparation for ſuffering, and free ſubmiſſion to the Will of God, without any hard thoughts of God, in hard times, and ſo conforming himſelf to what he ſeeth in this glaſs, continueth in it; this man ſhall be bleſſed (as Job was, though not in the ſame manner as Job was) both in doing and ſuffering; and after he hath ſuffered a while, ſhall be perfected and lifted up far above the reach of ſuffering, and (which is far better) above the fear of ſinning any more for ever.

L

A
TABLE
DIRECTING TO Some Special Points
Noted in the Precedent
EXPOSITIONS.

A

ABhorrence of ſin is the property of a godly man. Folio 312. Two grounds of this abhorrence, 318. Abhorrence of ſin is much more than our forbearance to commit it. 505 Abhorrence of things, or perſons, under a threefold notion, 982. Men abhor thoſe whom God highly eſteems. ibid.
Abhorring, what it imports, 2301. Five effects of abhorring ſinful ſelf, 2305. Four things cauſe an abhorrence of ſinful ſelf, ib. 2306. Two Motives to ſelf-abhorrence. 2307
Abortive, what, 1996. In what ſenſe the Apoſtle Paul calls himſelf an Abortive, or one born out of due time. ibid.
Abraham, a threefold gradation in his name. 1065
Acceptation with God is our higheſt priviledg, 1282. Two things required to it, 2330. God accepts the perſons of ſome, yet is no accepter of perſons, 2335. It is a high priviledg to be accepted with God, ibid. A twofold acceptation with God, ib. 2336. Three things ſhew why it is a great mercy to be accepted with God, and we ſhould be ſo fearful of loſing acceptance with him, 2336, 2337. Some godly men are more accepted, than others that are godly, 2337. Among godly men, four ſorts are moſt accepted, ib. 2338. Seven acts of a godly man, or ways of acting, very acceptable to God, 2338. God accepts ſome godly men for others, 2339. To be accepted with God, is a full reward of all our ſervices, and an anſwer to all our prayers, 2351. All our acceptation is by Chriſt. ibid.
Accepting of perſons, wherein the ſinfulneſs of it is, 1119, 1120. To accept perſons in prejudice to the truth, is a high offence, 1120. Some ſpecial ways wherein we run into this ſin, 1121, 1122, 1385. God is no accepter of perſons. 1386
Account, all muſt come to an account for what they have done, 867. Three periods of this account, 868. Sinners will be at their wits end when God calls them to account, ibid. God giveth no account to man, 1190. All men muſt give an account to God. ib. 1226. God will call all men to account. 1403. vid. Judgment.
Accuſation, whatſoever a man is accuſed of comes under three heads, 1025. Wrongful accuſations are matter of honour, rather than of diſgrace, 1026. Two ſorts of wrongful accuſations, ibid. Accuſations not to be taken up haſtily, or meerly by hear-ſay. 1159
Actions, good or bad, like ſeed ſown. 2066
Adam, three things in Adams ſin, 218. Sin of Adam fallen upon his whole Poſterity three wayes, ibid. The word taken two ways. 986
Adding to a thing, what it imports. 295
Addition of ſin to ſin proper to the wicked, 1490. It is very dangerous to make ſuch additions. 1491
Adonai, one of Gods Titles, the derivation of it, and how often given to God in Scripture. 1902
Adoration. See Worſhip. 940
Adultery, the kinds of it, 150. The extream wickedneſs of it, ſet forth many wayes. 150, 151
Adulterer hath a waiting eye, which implieth three things, 154. Adulterers, and all unclean perſons, often meet with ſtrange puniſhments, 809, 810. The juſt puniſhment of Adultery, what, 848. Adultery is a heynous crime, 852. The greatneſs of the ſin of Adultery ſhewed divers ways, 853, 854. Adultery to be puniſhed by the Magiſtrate, 854. Three reaſons why, ibid. 855. Adultery a fire, what it conſumes, 856, 857. The effects of Adultery very ſad and dangerous, 857, 858. Eleven particulars named which are conſumed by the fire of Adultery, ibid. The Adulterers caſe almoſt deſperate, 859. If Magiſtrates neglect to puniſh Adultery, God will not. ibid.
Adverſity, a night. 1416
Advocate, to be one for God a great honour, as well as a duty, 1587. Three wayes of being an Advocate for God, ibid. 1588. They who are Advocates for God, ſhould have audience, and may have courage. 1588
Ægypt, why called Rahab, 265. Worldly men, how like the Land of Ægypt, 617. Ægypt why not looking to Heaven for rain. 1974
Æneas, why called Matutinus, or a morning-man. 1907
Æolus, the Heathen God of the Winds. 463
Æquinox, when. 1933
Æthiopia, two Countries ſo called, which are famous for the Topaz. 441
Ætna, the top of it ſaid to be covered with Snow. 1761 Affliction doth uſually vent it ſelf by complaints and groans, 6. Afflictions abide long upon ſome who are eminently godly, 8. The afflictions of ſome exceed all their complaints, 9. There are two things which a godly man may ſee in his greateſt afflictions, which are matter of thanksgiving, 16. God ſweeteſt to the ſoul in affliction, 14. Affliction drives the godly nearer to God, 15. Affliction a tryal, 46. Afflictions fore-appointed by God, 80. God hath variety of afflictions in his hand to exerciſe his children with, 83. We deſerve more and ſorer afflictions than God layeth upon us, ibid. A godly man may be unable to bear afflictions any longer, 89. Affliction is bitter, 306. A godly man ſees the hand of God in them, 308. He hath good thoughts of God in them, ibid. Saints afflictions often very deep, ibid. A godly man hath another ſpirit in affliction, than a wicked man hath, ſhewed in three things, 334. Afflictions teach and fit us to teach others, 357. Affliction common both to good and bad, 363. Afflictions, how like waters, 386. How and when afflictions unfit us for duty, 520. Wicked men rejoyce at the affliction of the godly, 679. The impiety of rejoycing at affliction, 680. Affliction is our humiliation, 687. The afflicted are often deſpiſed, 695 696. Affliction hath its day, 723. Affliction may continue long. 724. Saints have affliction-dayes, the wicked an Eternity of affliction, ibid. Affliction will come in its day, ibid. Affliction will not let us go till God bids it, 725. Extream afflictions befall the beſt Saints, 728. Affliction compared to mire, there God teacheth us, 732. Great afflictions ſhew us what we are, and even make us what we were and ſhall be, 734. We can never be brought ſo low by any

any affliction, but God can bring us up again, 735. Affliction puts the ſoul upon crying to God, 736. A godly man ſometimes cannot ſee any ſpecial reaſon why he is afflicted, 773. Afflictions uſually prevent, good men they think them further off than they are, 776. Unexpected afflictions afflict us moſt, ibid In times of affliction the moſt pleaſant Creatures give no content, 778 Great afflictions ſpoil bodily beauty, 785. Affliction to be choſen rather than ſin, 996. Affliction muſt not be added to the afflicted, 1104. The afflictions of ſome men more eminently from the hand of God, 1105. Thoſe afflictions which are moſt eminently from God, ſeem to bear the greateſt witneſs of the ſinfulneſs of man, ibid. Four grounds of it, ibid. 1106. Yet it is no concluding argument, 1106. Godly men moſt afflicted, ſeven ends God hath in afflicting them, ibid. What uſe we ſhould make of it when we ſee godly men much afflicted, 1107. In affliction it is better be found bewailing our ſin, than reporting our Innocency. 1166. We hardly keep good thoughts of God, when we are afflicted, and ſuffer hard things, 1173. Afflictions put a double reſtraint upon us, 1174, 1175. How affliction carrieth in it matter of diſgrace, 1175. God ſpeaks to us by affliction, 1235. Nine deſigns of God in afflicting man, 1237, 1238. Times of affliction muſt be times of confeſſion, 1293. Afflictions deſigned for the good of man, 1304. No pleading of our Innocency or righteouſneſs for our freedom from affliction, 1327. The Lord takes liberty to afflict them greatly, whoſe ſins are not great, 1333. We muſt not complain of the greatneſs of our affliction, how little ſoever our ſins are, ibid. In affliction we ſhould ſpeak humbly and meekly to God, 1469. The hand of God muſt be acknowledged in our afflictions, 1470. Affliction or chaſtening muſt be born, ibid. What it is to bear affliction, ſhewed many wayes, 1471, 1472. We muſt pray for the taking away of an affliction, while we are willing to bear it, 1472. What it is to be exerciſed under affliction, 1473. The ſin and danger of breaking out of an affliction, 1475. Who may be ſaid to break from, or out of an affliction, 1476. Affliction tryeth us, 1502. How it may be lawful to pray or wiſh for affliction to fall upon others, ibid. Affliction, many cry and complain in it, who look not to God in it, 1548. God comforts his in affliction, 1552. To cry in affliction, and not to repent, is very ſad, 1560. The ſoreſt afflictions of this life are little to what God might lay upon ſinners, 1574. God expects the work of Faith and Patience in affliction; and if he ſee it not, he will afflict more, 1577. God looks for two things in time of affliction, ibid. God afflicts his Children with Fatherly anger, 1578. A good man under great affliction, may not be ſenſible of Gods hand, 1582. Who are ſenſible in affliction, ibid. Ends of affliction, ibid. 1583. The beſt men may fall into the worſt of afflictions, 1629. Afflictions are grievous to the fleſh, 1630. How God ſhews us our work in affliction, 1631. Afflictions are perſwaſions, 1635. Affliction hath a loud voice, 1636. Gods deſign in affliction, ibid. Not profiting by leſſer, draws on greater afflictions, 1646. Affliction a ſeaſon for prayer, 1654. They that are humbled in affliction, are near deliverance from affliction, 1660. Hard to keep our ſelves from ſin in times of great affliction, 1681. Any affliction is to be choſen rather than ſin, 1685. Six wayes affliction good; ſin not at all, ib. 1686. Affliction compared to cold weather, 1773. God can afflict us by any of his Creatures, 1784. In what ſenſe God may be ſaid not to afflict, ſhewed in four things, 1845, 1846. God doth not afflict man in extremity, 1846. God ſometimes afflicteth the wiſeſt and holieſt men, 1854. Affliction like cold and froſt, in four reſpects, 1987, 1988. No unlooſing our ſelves from affliction, till God doth it, 1994. Affliction increaſeth knowledge, 2283. God uſually reveals himſelf much to us after great afflictions, or ſufferings, 2300. In affliction friends are apt to forſake us, 2368. Three things may comfort us in affliction, 2383. In affliction grace is not only tryed, but increaſed. 2387

Africa, called Ammonia, and why. 1807

Ageſilaus, why derided by the Egyptians. 577

Ah, ha, or Ha, ha, what it imports in the ſpeaker. 2107

Air, how it may be called an empty place, 244. Air deſcribed. 460

Alexander's Souldiers, how ſaid to be winged, 393. Alexander the Great, why he would not ſuffer the Perſian Captive Ladies to be brought into his preſence, 797. Alexander the Great, his Speech to a Souldier of his own name. 1064

Alienation, or eſtrangement from God, the worſt of all puniſhments, 807. A twofold alienation from God, 807, 808. Six ſteps of the Lords alienation from ſinners, 808, 809

Almes not to be given of that which is vile and corrupt, 882. We ſhould call that but little which we give in Almes, how much ſoever we give, 883. Good counſel and inſtruction a good, yea the beſt Almes, 886. Almes, like ſeed ſown. 2066

Almighty, notes two things in God, 306. It is not for want of power that God doth not preſently help. 307

Amazement, what. 1111

Anarchy, the miſery of it, 690. Anarchy, the worſt of National Judgments. 1447

Anaſtaſius the Emperour ſlain with Thunder. 1755

Anchorets, ſee Hermites.

Anchoriſm, or a ſolitary life againſt the nature of man. 669

Angels Gods Armies or Hoſt, 210. Angels how they may be called the Pillars of Heaven, 259. Angels, good Angels, how like the Fowls of the Air, 448. Angels, good or bad, ſent to deſtroy, 1247. How the Angels come to know the myſtery of the Goſpel, 1272. Angels, how called Stars, 1909. And morning-ſtars, ib. Angels, how and why called Sons of God, 1910. Three things conſiderable in the Angels, 1911. Angels are of one mind. 1912

Anger is a bitter thing, 306. Anger, 'tis dangerous to mingle anger with ſorrow, 780. Anger, full of heat, 1063. Anger in the cauſe of God is good, 1065. Anger prevails moſt in thoſe who have leaſt reaſon, 1072. They who give counſel muſt bridle anger, ib. We ſhould ſee good reaſon to be angry before we are, 1079. Anger, how the Lord is angry with his Children, and viſits them in anger. 1578, &c.

Angry Diſpenſations of God make all tremble. 261

Anſwer, unleſs we anſwer home, we give no anſwer, 1101. A fourſold way of anſwering. 1179

Anſwering, taken three ways, 1021. Anſwering, how taken in Scripture, 1870. Two kinds of anſwering, 2133. Anſwering in Logick three wayes, ib. Anſwering in Law, how, ib. Where God is Opponent, no man can anſwer. 2139

Antelunares, why ſo called. 1889

Antiquity will not bear us out in errour, or falſe worſhip. 936

Apoſtacy of Angels. 1915

Apoſtates, who are ſo, 1380. Apoſtacy or turning back from God, 1422. Apoſtates grow worſe and worſe every day, 1425. Apoſtates, their caſe deſperate. 1673

Apparel not to be prided in. 731

Appeals to Conſcience, or to experience, are very convincing, 361. Appeals to our ſelves very convincing. 1515

Appearances of evil muſt be avoided. 504

Appetite, ſtrong in young ones. 2017

Appointment, how all things are under a Divine appointment, ſhewed by ſeveral inſtances, 80, 81. Appointment of God, death is ſo, and therefore chearfully to be ſubmitted to. 755, 756

Arabia, why ſo called. 2041

Archimedes much tranſported with joy, and why, 1103. Archimedes his boaſt. 1893

Arcturus, what. 1997

Ariſtotle puzled about the reaſon of natural things, 436. Ariſtotle, why he caſt himſelf into the Sea. 1945

Ark, why called the glory of Iſrael. 922

Arm, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1543. Arm notes ſtrength, 1940. Arm of God, what, 2152. Arm of God ſpoken of in Scripture for a fourfold uſe. 2153, 2154

Armes, or weapons of two ſorts. 2266

Armies of God, what they are, 210. All Creatures the Armies of God, upon a threefold conſideration. 211

Arnoldus Bootius, his opinion about the Beaſt commonly called the Unicorn. 2049, 2050

Arrow, put for a wound, 1331. Two ſorts of arrows. ibid. Arrows, why called the Children of the bow. 2267

Art perfects nature. 411

Artaxerxes, long-hand, why ſo called. 1535

Aſhtaroth, what it was an Idol of. 933

Aſmodeus, conceived to be the evil Spirit of uncleanneſs, why ſo called. 857

Aſs, wild Aſs, how ſaid to be ſet free, and looſed from bands. 2037, 2038. Aſſes, or wild Aſſes, the reſemblance between them and the wicked, ſhewed in ſeveral things. 117

Aſſurance of what we would have, breeds great joy. 2108

Aſtrologers their opinions of the cauſe of the winds. 461

Athanaſius, his ſaying concerning the troubleſome Reign of Julian, 1830. Athanaſius his Prophetical anſwer to thoſe that jeered him with the croaking of a Raven over his head. 2021

Attention, the beſt men may need to have their attentions quickned. 1344

Attila called the ſcourge of God. 1784

Attributes of God how diſtinguiſht. 1607

Augurs what they were among the heathen Romans. 449

Auguſtus Ceſar, his fearfulneſs of Thunder. 1742

Authority the Magiſtrates cord. 686

B

Baal, who, and what it ſignified. Folio 933

Babylon, dangerous being in it, becauſe threatned with falling, or with a fall. 1668

Balances of two ſorts, 820. The Balance hath hath a kind of ſacredneſs in it, ib. St. Michaels Balances among the Papiſts, what, 821. What care we ſhould uſe to weigh both perſons and actions in a right balance. 822, 823

Balancing, or weighing, three or four things which God is ſaid in Scripture to balance. 1803

Barachel, what that name ſignifieth. 1064, 1065

Barren Land, a curſed Land. 167

Barrenneſs of any Land, whence, 2041. Barren places have their uſe. 2042

Baſe men of two ſorts, 675. Wickedneſs renders men baſe. ibid.

Bath col, what. 1753

Beaſts, evil men are like beaſts, or beſtial in their diſpoſitions and actions, 117. Beaſts, wicked men like wild beaſts, ravening for their prey, 587. Beaſts of the Earth how they teach us, 1553. How we are taught more than the beaſts of the Earth, ib. 1554. Men act ſometimes below the beaſts, 1556. Beaſts affected with the Providences of God in changes of weather, 1766. This a reproof to many men, ib. 1767. Beaſts, ſome beaſts have a kind of willingneſs to ſerve man, 2055. That any of the beaſts will not ſerve man, is to be aſcribed to the ſin of man, as the procuring cauſe, 2056. Thoſe beaſts which will not ſerve man, have yet their uſe; ſhewed in three things, ib. 2057. Labour of beaſts very profitable to man, 2065. Among beaſts, ſome wiſer than others; what their wiſdom is, 2084. A ſhame for man to be excelled in any good by beaſts. 2197

Beauty, chaſtity is moſt aſſaulted by beauty, 797. Beauty, how it is deceitful, 841. It deceives two wayes, 842. Beauty, what, 2156. Two ſorts of beauty, 2395. Beauty a gift of God, ibid. Three conſiderations ſhould keep them humble, who are moſt beautiful, 2395, 2396. Inward beauty moſt deſirable. 2396

Beda, the ſtones witneſſed to his preaching, if we may believe it. 1031

Beginning, taken two wayes. 2193

Behemoth, deſcribed ſix wayes, 2184. Behemoth may ſignifie all the beaſts of the field, 2185. Why, though a word of the plural number, applicable to one, 2186. Behemoth, how the chief of the wayes of God, 2193

Behold, a fourfold uſe of it in the Scripture, 1298, 1299. To behold, taken two wayes in Scripture. 1400

Beholding a far off, may import four things, 1699. Beholding of things or perſons, twofold. 2168

Belial, who are the ſons of Belial, who ſons of Nabal, 674. Belial, what it ſignifieth, and who may be called Belial, 1384, 1385. Belial, ſon of Belial, who. 1522

Belief, that which is much deſired, in ſome caſes, is hardly believed, 2105. Why the ſame word ſignifieth to ſtand faſt or ſteddy, and to believe. 2106

Believer, he hath no opinion of his own ſtrength, 28. Believers why called the firſt-fruits of Gods Creatures, 1982. A believer mounts high like the Eagle, eſpecially in two things, 2117. Believers do not only mount high, but abide on high. 2118

Beloved ſin, a godly man cannot have, 1009. Beloved ſin, how it may be known. 1010

Benefits, common benefits of God to be much acknowledged. 1592

Bernard, his deſcription of an Opinioniſt in his time. 117

Beſt, not barely good, but the beſt things to be looked after and choſen. 1324

Binding, the great uſe of it for healing. 1375

Birth, new birth, three things in it. 2035

Bitterneſs, a threefold notion of it in Scripture. 306

Bladders, wicked men, how like them. 1418

Blaſpheming the Name of God, what. 1532

Bleſſing of God makes all we do and have proſper, 601. Bleſſing, how man bleſſeth, and how God, 891, 892. Bleſſing, two wayes of bleſſing one 2378. The bleſſing of God effectual for the good of man, ibid. Seven characters of thoſe whom the Lord will bleſs, 2379, 2380. They who are bleſſed, are alſo loved of God, 2380. Three things whence it is that many mind not a bleſſing from God, 2381. All ſucceſſes are not from the bleſſing of God, 2382. Temporal things are bleſſings, but ſpiritual things are the beſt bleſſings, 2384. How we may know when temporal things are a bleſſing, and come to us in love. 2385

Bleſſings of the wicked are curſed to them, 368. Act of bleſſing, applied three wayes in Scripture. 562

Blindneſs, what may be one comfort to the blind, 798. Blindneſs ſpiritual, or of the underſtanding, to be ſmitten with it, how ſore a judgment. 1422

Blood of Chriſt, what kind of ſinners that will not ranſome. 1673

Blot, ſin is a blot. 660

Boanerges, why two of the Diſciples called ſo. 282

Boaſting, man is very apt to boaſt of himſelf, 1102, 1103. Man is apt to boaſt in the evil he doth, much more of the good he doth, ib. His boaſting of wiſdom. 1103

Bochartus his opinion, that Behemoth is not the Elephant, but Hippopotame. 2187

Body, in what ſenſe every ſin that a man doth, except Adultery, is without the body, 152. Body of man, how called vile, 677. The body of man curiouſly faſhioned, 870. God is the maker of mans body now, as well as in the firſt Creation, ib. Three inferences from it, that our bodies are faſhioned by God, 870, 871. Bodily members, how to be uſed, 899. They who abuſe the members of the body, may juſtly loſe the uſe of them. 900

Bodies of the wicked ſhall be raiſed immortal, though not incorruptible. 242

Boldneſs and confidence of ſpirit, is the light of a mans countenance, 621. Boldneſs of the righteous, in what ſenſe like that of the Lyon, 500. Boldneſs, a believer hath a Princely boldneſs with God through grace. 1029

Bones, the ſtrength of the body, 725. Pain in the bones notes extremity of pain, 726. Bones, what they are to the body, 1234. Pain in the bones grievous. 1234, 1235

Book of the living, what meant by it; as alſo what by the Book which God hath written. 178

Booth, what it is. 381

Borrowing, fear not to loſe what God borrows of us. 2365

Boſom, what it ſignifieth. 987

Bounty of God to us, 666. Bounty of God, he thinks nothing too good for his good ſervants. 1664

Bow ſignifies a threefold ſtrength. 602

Bowels, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 774

Bread, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 370, 420. Bread, or what we eat when it is our own, or may be ſaid to have paid for it. 1036

Breath is the beginning and continuance of life, 308. Breath, and ſpirit, their difference, 1365. Breath of the Lord, what. 1773

Brethren and Siſters, two wayes taken in Scripture. 2367

Bribe received, doth two things to the receiver. 833

Bridle of the tongue, what. 687

Brother, notes ſometimes nothing but likeneſs, 782. We may be called the Brethren of any whom we reſemble in quality. 784

Building, two things moſt conſiderable in it, both eminent in Gods building the World. 1897

Burden of the Lord, what; how that word was abuſed by the Jews. 902, 903

Burial, to be buried as ſoon as dead, is a note of ignominy, 372. Want of burial reckoned a great puniſhment, 383, 384. Burial though a mercy, yet but a common mercy, 384. They who neglect their ſouls, are uſually moſt careful for the burial of their bodies. ibid.

By-word, what it is to be a By-word. 680

C

Calamity, when the people of God are in any calamity, the wicked would add to it, 699. Two grounds of it, 700, 701. They are pleaſed with the calamity of the godly, as if it were a profit to them, 701. The greatneſs of their ſin who add to, or are pleaſed with the calamity of others. 702

Call of God, it is dangerous to refuſe, or not hearken to his firſt call. 1198

Callings, how ſome excuſe their ſins by them. 1001

Canaan, why ſpecially called the Land of the living, 432. How the people of God are like Canaan. 617

Candle of God taken three wayes in Scripture. 528

Canutus his Anſwer to his flattering Courtiers. 1924

Captivity, how taken in Scripture, 2353. Any affliction is a kind of captivity. ibid.

Care to be caſt upon God, 1958, 1959. Care of God over the beaſts of the Earth, and fowls of the Air, ſhould convince man that God will take care of him, 2013, 2017, 2018. Care of God to provide for the vileſt Creatures, 2021. Care of God for his people ſeen in two things. 2204

Carefulneſs what to be avoided. 2258

Carnal men judge of God by themſelves. 2304

Cato, how reverenced amoag the Romans, 552. Cato, his anſwer to a voluptuous perſon. 1321

Cattle, foreſhew weather-changes, 1737. Why God hath given them ſuch a natural inſtinct. ibid.

Cauſes, natural cauſes produce natural effects, and ſo do ſpiritual cauſes ſpiritual effects. 1978

Cenſure, the beſt of men may fall under the hardeſt cenſures. 34

Cham, the name of one of Noahs ſons, what it ſignifies. 1807

Change, twofold made in a ſinner by grace, 216. Change, all things how ſubject to it, 522. Change, or turning of a man into another man, twofold. 1086

Changes of time or ſeaſon, none beyond this world, 257. Changes, the beſt eſtate of man in this life is ſubject to changes, 646. In what ſenſe any change is in God, 742. His Providences to us, change not his heart, 744. God can quickly change our mirth into mourning, 789. Changes, God can quickly make the greateſt changes both in natural and civil things, 1276. Changes, God gives warning of them, 1736. Changes in all things, both natural and civil, 1810. Changes, the ſtate of the righteous ſubject to them in this world, 1630. No condition ſo bad, but God can change it to a good one. 1643

Charity, how it covereth ſin, 985. Charity to the poor, vid. Poor. They that have ability ſhould abound in charity, 890. How charity is to be extended unto all, ib. 891. Every act of true charity hath a tongue in it, 892. What we give in charity muſt be our own, 893. Charity, a great tryal of it. 2327

Charities done rightly, produce a great increaſe. 1352

Chaſtiſements are documents, 1235. What properly a chaſtiſement is, 1469. Chaſtiſement is for amendment, 1473. When God chaſteneth us, we ſhould promiſe amendment, 1474. In what ſenſe we may promiſe (being chaſtened) to offend no more. ibid.

Chearfulneſs is the light of the countenance. 620

Chelidonian winds, why ſo called. 463

Children, a bleſſing, yet ſometimes the children of good men are not bleſſed, 368. When children ſuffer, Parents ſuffer, 369. To have dutiful children, a great bleſſing, 541. Children, the loſs of children is the greateſt outward loſs, 837. Children not to charge their Parents, when able to help themſelves, 2037. They who excel in any thing, are elegantly called the children of it, 2276. Children a great bleſſing, 2387. Parents duty in naming them. See Names. How it is a bleſſing to have many children, 2402. Good children a great joy. 2403

Chiromancy, an unwarrantable Art. 1764

Chirurgion, three things required in him, anſwerably thoſe three in thoſe who would cure the ſoul. 1110

Choice, ſin muſt not be our choice, whatever we are put to chuſe. 1683

Chooſing, or chuſing of Inſtruments, how it differs from Gods, 1089, 1090. Chuſing, or Election, what it is, 1322. The chuſing of judgment, what, ib. It is not enough to know or do good, unleſs we chuſe it. 1323

Chriſt, how he cometh as a Thief, 149. Chriſt, why ſo often ſet forth by ſenſible things, 443. That Chriſt is the Eternal Son of God proved, 483. That he is ſo, is the great Pillar of our Faith, 485. Chriſt, how not heard in prayer, 739. What comfort riſeth to a Chriſtian by it, ib. Without Chriſt no creature yields comfort to a troubled ſoul, 779. How Chriſt is our cloathing, 888. Nothing can ſatisfie a believer but the full injoyment of Chriſt, 978. Chriſt, remembrance of his humbling himſelf, a great means to humble us, 1228. Chriſt the Angel of the Covenant, 1252. We muſt have uniou with Chriſt, elſe we can have no benefit by him, 1282. Chriſt the only hiding place for ſinners, 1408. Sinners under a fourfold conſideration, may hide themſelves in Chriſt, ibid. Chriſt his Eternity, 1890. He is the Corner-ſtone, 1903. Chriſt a light for two great ends, 1930. Chriſt compared to a Lyon, in four reſpects, 2014. Chriſt reſembled by the Hind in three things, 2030. Why Chriſt is called a Horn of Salvation, 2067. Chriſt like the Eagle, ſhewed in ſeven things, 2123, 2124. Chriſt a relief againſt all evil, 2206. Chriſt the beſt friend. 2368

Chryſtal deſcribed. 439

Church, why called Heaven in Scripture, 1815 Church, a vain thing to oppoſe it, 2227. Church ſet out by Chriſt in her ſpiritual excellencies, 2245. God terrible in the Church. 2249

Churches of the Gentiles to be warned by the ſevere dealings of God with the Church of the Jews. 1420, 1421

Cicero, why upbraided by Lactantius. 931

Circumſtances of an affliction increaſe it much, 388. God knows how to circumſtantiate his judgments, ſo as to make them moſt dreadful, 389. Circumſtances increaſing ſin, 1634. Conſideration of circumſtances do exceedingly heighten both our ſins, and the mercies of God. 1702

City, two myſtical Cities, how built. 1532

Clapping of the hands, what it ſignifies. 396, 397

Clay, that all men are clay, how it ſhould work. 1155

Cloathed, to be cloathed with any thing, what it imports. 2091

Cloathing, two great uſes of it, 888. To cloath the naked a great act of charity. 889

Clouds, what they are, 249. Why appropriated unto God, ibid. That waters are contained in the Clouds, a great wonder, in three things, 250. Three inferences from it, 251. Clouds, their differences and ſpreading, 1723. Three queſtions anſwered about the Clouds, 1724, 1725. Uſes of the Clouds, both natural and ſpiritual, 1725. Clouds without water, like the promiſes of the world, 1726. Clouds the Tabernacle of God, 1727. The ſame word ſignifieth a hand and a Cloud, why, 1732. Cloud, how it may be ſaid to be wearied, 1775. Preachers of the Word compared to Clouds, 1776. Clouds are moved by the Counſel of God, 1778. Clouds have their work, or ſomewhat to do, 1779. Clouds are faithful ſervants, they do all that God commands, 1780. Inferences from it, 1780. &c. Clouds ſent for correction, 1783. 'Tis a Divine Power which balanceth the Clouds, 1802. Cloud, how a garment to the Sea, 1919. Clouds called the Arcenal of Heaven, why, 1966. The wiſeſt men can neither tell how many the Clouds are, nor fully what they are. 2009

Cock, why crows at mid-night, 1999. He is a natural Clock. 2008

Cold comes at Gods call, 1773. Cold, how both uſeful and hurtful, ibid. Cold compared to affliction in the effects of it, ibid. Cold is a ſtraitner, 1774. True in ſpirituals, as well as in naturals, 1774. Cold, whether natural or ſpiritual, is a great binder. 1993

Comforts, ſmall comforts are welcom to us in times of great affliction, 124. Comforts, the beſt in the Creature vain. 1239

Comforting the ſorrowful a great duty, 2373. Six caſes which call us to comfort others, together with ſo many wayes of miniſtring comfort to them, 2373. Four conſiderations moving to this duty. 2374

Comelineſs, it conſiſteth in three things. 2244

Command of God twofold, 1635. Command of God creating. 1296

Commands of others will not bear us out in doing evil. 985, 996

Commendation of our ſelves, or ſetting out our own good deeds, when and how lawful. 567

Communion with God in ſecret, moſt ſweet and deſirable. 535

Company, to chuſe ill company the ſign of an evil man, 1338, 1340. To be much in the company of good men, a ſign of goodneſs, 1339. In what ſenſe a good man may be ſaid to go in company with evil men, 1339. Company, no company pleaſeth, but ſuch as is ſuitable. 2045

Compaſſion due to thoſe who are in affliction, 767. A threefold ground of it, ibid. Compaſſion to them in miſery, muſt be accompanied with action for their relief, 768. Three ſorts act contrary to this duty of compaſſion, 769. We ſhould compaſſionate the troubles of others when we our ſelves are freeſt from trouble, ibid. He that pitieth others in affliction may comfortably look for it in his affliction, 773. A gracious heart is full of compaſſion to thoſe that want. 885

Complaining, to complain more than we have cauſe is very ſinful. 9

Compulſion grievous to beaſts, much more to men. 2045

Concealment, the word or truths of God muſt not be concealed. 360

Condemn, to condemn thoſe whom we cannot anſwer, how ſinful, 1073, 1074, 1075. To condemn God the great wickedneſs of it, and in what ſenſe many do it. 1379, 1380

Condemnation, God will for ever acquit the righteous from it, 34. Condemnation ſuppoſeth a man to be wicked, 1073. To condemn and make wicked the ſame in Scripture, ib. 1074. Condemnation out of our own mouth, muſt needs ſtop the mouth, 1159. Condemnation of ſelf, what good. 2152

Conditional acts of grace. 1266

Confeſſion two fold, 947. Confeſſion of ſin a duty, 1005. A right confeſſion hath three things in it, 1006. Why ſin muſt be confeſſed to God, though he know it, ibid. Requiſites in confeſſion, 1007, 1008. Confeſſion three-fold, 1291. Sin muſt be confeſſed, 1292. Whether a general confeſſion be enough, 1293. Confeſſion of ſin, when right. 2141, 2142

Confidence of many proceedeth only from ignorance, 86. Confidence about an earthly felicity, when ſinful, and when not, 593. Good men are apt to be over-confident about it, 595, 596. Confidence, the fulleſt reſt of the ſoul, 912. Confidence apt to grow up in us upon worldly abundance, 913. Confidence in Gold or any earthly thing embaſeth the mind, 916. Confidence or truſt in man, a ſtrong argument againſt it from mans weakneſs. 1570

Conſcience, Gods Deputy in man, 161. Conſcience hath an upbraiding or accuſing power, 326. Conſcience hath four offices, ibid. An inlightned conſcience will vex for ſin, 327. How he that is good may have a bad conſcience, ibid. A godly man fears the chidings of conſcience, 328. A godly man is careful not to give his conſcience any matter againſt him, ibid. The comfort of a good conſcience, ibid. Conſcience, they who have an ill one are fearful, 672. Why it is ſo terrible to fall into the hands of Conſcience, 908. While Conſcience ſpeaks us well, we need not fear who ſpeaks ill of us, 1024. Conſcience, how terrible to be under the terrours of it when God is angry. 1834

Conſideration, what it is, 1426, 1429. Not to conſider the wayes and word of God very ſinful, 1429. The duty of conſideration preſt, 1431. Conſideration, what it is, 1791. Conſideration oppoſed to two things. ibid.

Conſtantine, his great moderation at the Council of Nice. 985

Contempt, we may not contemn the meaneſt perſons, 651, 652. Bare greatneſs no bar againſt contempt. 653
Contending, of two ſorts, 2127. How man contendeth with the word, how with the works of God, 2127, 2128. There is a ſpirit in weak man, ready to contend with the ſtrong God, 2128. In two caſes we are apt to contend with God about his works, 2129. Four conſiderations moving us to beware of all contendings with God, ibid. 2130. In what way we may contend with God, 2131. They who contend with God would ſeem wiſer than he. ib.
Contention about worldly things, to be carefully avoided. 104
Contentment, graceleſs men being in want have no content, the godly have. 659
Continuance, things which continue but a little while, are but of little worth. 193
Converſion, the work of God, not of man, 1105. Converſion, what done to a ſinner in it, 1534. Converſion, why ſo difficult a work. 2056
Conviction, moſt ſinners have a ſecret conviction upon them, that what they do is not good, 160. Conviction, what, or when a perſon may be ſaid to be convinced. 1098, 1099. Three great convincers ſhewed, 1099, 1100.
Coral deſcribed. 440
Cord, what meant by it, and what the looſing of it is. 686
Corruption or luſt, a godly man is not ſatisfied to ſee it abated, he would have it quite deſtroyed. 979
Covenant from the notation of the Hebrew word, by which it is expreſſed what it is, 793. Cutting or ſtriking of a Covenant, what it ſignifies, ibid. To ſin againſt a Covenant is a great aggravation of ſin, 797. Covenant of works, how ſtrict, 821. Covenant, the benefit of the new Covenant, 1639. Covenant, Hebrew word notes two things, and why. 2219
Covering of ſin twofold, 984. A fourfold good covering of ſin, 984, 985. Man loves to cover his ſin, 988. Many wayes of covering it, 990, 991, &c. Caution againſt them all, and to go to Chriſt for covering. 1004
Covetouſneſs knoweth no bounds, 126. Covetouſneſs and hypocriſie uſually go together, 338. Covetouſneſs after the world greateſt when going out of the world, 377. Covetouſneſs inſatiable, ibid. He that keeps covetouſly what he hath got honeſtly, indangers the loſs of it, 379. Covetouſneſs, why called the luſt of the eyes, 794, 910. It is unſatiable, 829. It cannot be puniſhed by the Judge, 944. Covetouſneſs makes men cruel, and murderous. 1038
Counſel, the excellency of good counſel, 227. Good and gracious counſel ſhould be given the weak, 228. Counſel, what it is, 609. Good counſel is precious, ibid. 'Tis the honour of man, eſpecially of Magiſtrates, to be able to give counſel, ibid. Counſel, to give good counſel and direction, a great charity, 886. Counſel, ill counſel from friends or ſervants, is very inſnaring, 976. Counſel, what it is, 1879. The word counſel, put abſolutely or alone, notes Gods counſel, 1880. Counſel of God may ſoon be darkned by us, 1882. Some do it intentionally, the greatneſs of their ſin. ibid.
Counſels of God, two ſorts, 360. They who ſet the counſels of God at nought ſhall be dealt with as a thing of nought, 400. Stability of the counſels of God. 480
Countenance, light of the countenance, what it is, ſhewed in four things. 620
Courage, where God gives courage, man cannot make afraid, 2097. True courage fears not preſent danger. 2109
Court of Juſtice ſhould be publick, and open for all comers. 546
Courteſies, they watch for a diſcourteſie, who ask courteſies of us beyond our power. 1167
Craft, ſome Creatures full of it, 2019. What ſome cannot do by ſtrength, they do by craft. ibid.
Creſus, the Anſwer which the Oracle gave him ambiguous. 1141
Creation, we ought joyntly to acknowledge the Father, Son, and Spirit, in the work of Creation, 272. Creation and Providence, the works of both ſhould lead us to God, 472. Creation, the ſole work of God, 1812. An inference of comfort from it, ibid. Creation, that work calls us to praiſe God, 1913. Four things in Creation move us to praiſe God. 1914
Creature, the goodneſs and glory of the Creature is nothing compared with God, 221. Creatures, all to be viewed and conſidered for two reaſons, 928, 929. They are burdened with, and cry out againſt ſin, 1031. Creature, that God hath made man a new Creature, a ſtrong plea with God, 1550 Creatures neceſſary to one another, but none to God, 1537, God can correct us by any of his Creatures, 1784. God hath a care of all his Creatures, 1785. God diſpoſeth the motions of every Creature, 1795. Creatures, God can make any of them hurtful to us, 1964. Two things ſhew the power of God in the Creature, 1965. Several degrees of Excellency in the Creatures, 2194. An inference from it, ibid. God can eaſily ſubdue the ſtrongeſt creatures, 2201. Two inferences from it, ibid. God to be magnified in the qualities and quantity, or bigneſs of his creatures, 2216. All creatures made ſerviceable to man, 2220. Some creatures terrible to man, 2230. An inference from it, ibid. God pleaſed in ſetting forth the natural excellencies of his creatures, 2245. The excellencies of the creature ſhew the excellency of God, ibid. God would have man know the excellencies of the creature. 2246
Crocodile, not tongueleſs. 2215
Croſs of Chriſt; both that which he bare for us, and which we bear for him, to be rejoyced in. 923
Crown of Iſrael, how profaned. 733
Cruel, who; cruelty declares it ſelf two wayes. 742
Cruelty of man to man boundleſs. 125
Cry, to cry is to pray with ſtrongeſt intention, 341. Cry of the Poor twofold, 568. Cry of ſin, 1230. Cry of the oppreſſed will go up to God, 1432. Their affliction hath a cry, though they cry not, ibid. They are the worſt of wicked men, who cauſe the poor to cry, 1433. God graciouſly heareth the cry of humble oppreſſed ones, 1434. Vide oppreſſed.
Crying, in prayer very powerful, a wonder if it be not heard, 736. Crying, of three ſorts. 1652
Curioſity, very natural to man to be enquiring into times. 95
Curſe, ſin brings a curſe with it, 167. They who are generally under the curſe of men, are often under the curſe of God too, ibid. Why ſin doth not always bring a curſe, 168. How the wicked are always curſed, even in their greateſt proſperity, ibid. Curſe, the ſame Hebrew word ſignifies an oath and a curſe, why, 970. A curſe is the worſt we can wiſh to our ſelves or others, ibid. A curſe upon the ſoul, the worſt of curſes, ibid. We are apt to curſe or wiſh ill to others, 971. To curſe any, though an enemy, is very ſinful, ibid. Objections anſwered. 972
Cuſtom hath a great power both in good and evil, 886, 887. Cuſtom takes away admiration. 1794

D

Danger, every creature would get out of danger, or harms way, 1767. Inferences from it, both for inſtruction and reproof, ib. 1768. Danger, to leave any thing in danger, and not provide againſt it, is great folly, 2078. Dangers put all creatures to their utmoſt ſhifts, 2087. They who think themſelves out of danger, deſpiſe danger, ibid. Danger is the Element of courage, 2100. It is beſt not to do or quickly give over doing that which is dangerous, 2224. They are cruel to themſelves, who run upon danger unadviſedly 2231. Great dangers may make the ſtouteſt afraid, 2262. Great dangers put bad men upon repentance. 2264
Darius, glad of puddle water to drink. 664
Darkneſs very grievous, 388. Man ſets an end to much darkneſs, God will ſet an end to all darkneſs, 415. Darkneſs what it ſignifies in Scripture, 530. Darkneſs twofold, 1044, 1818. Improper darkneſs taken four wayes in Scripture, ibid. 1819. Darkneſs or obſcurity, how in the word of God, 1822. Darkneſs what. 1954
Day and Night, in what ſenſe they end after the end of this preſent world, 257. Day, or to day, taken two wayes in Scripture, 4. Dayes of God, or day of God, what in Scripture, 96. Day of Judgment like to be a terrible day, 1875. It will be a diſcovering day, 1932. Days, when and whoſe days may be ſaid to be full, 2406. Day-light never riſeth two days together exactly in the ſame place. 1933
Death, the territory of it as large as that of ſin, 173. Death hath more power over great ſinners, ſhewed two wayes, 174. Some remembred after death, chiefly for the ſtrangeneſs of their death, 176. The death of a wicked man is violenr to him, though he die in his bed. Death of Chriſt purgeth from dead works, 302. Death; the ſoul of the hypocrite is pulled from him in death, 337. The death of the wicked is alwayes violent to him, two reaſons of it, 340. To be buried in death, what it ſignifies, 372. All that we get in this world muſt be left in death, but what we have got by Faith or unbelief, 384. Death is a departure, 391. Good men are apt to put death a great way off, 598. Death brings us back to what we once were, and ſhews us what we are, 750. Death ſpecially to be meditated on when we are ſick, 751. A godly man may be miſtaken in his perſwaſions that he ſhall die, 752. He ſpeaks comfortably of death, ibid. Death at the diſpoſe of God, ibid. All that live muſt die and go to the grave, 753. The rich, the wiſe, the godly cannot eſcape, 754. Objections from Scripture anſwered, 755. We die by appointment both as to time and place, ibid. Death how to be prepared for, ibid. 756. How we may pray againſt death, ibid. God takes notice what becomes of us, when we were dead, ibid. Death cauſeth a cry, 760. Death puts an end to all our worldly troubles, 761. Death is good to thoſe that are good, 762. Comforts in death, ibid. 763. Death is a going down to the pit, 1268. Sickneſs hath a tendency to death, ibid. When man dieth he is gathered to God, 1366. Death is called a gathering in a threefold ſenſe 1367. No man hath priviledge againſt death, 1368. Death of two ſorts, 1391. Death of any ſort may befall all ſorts of men, ibid. Death comes ſuddenly upon many men, and may upon all men, ibid. Violent death ſweeps away many in a moment, ibid. Death, they who live like the wicked ſhall have their death, 1656. Death, how an aſcending, 1678. How ſad their condition is, who ſeek relief by death, 1679. To wiſh for death in moſt a vain wiſh, ibid. Death when terrible, 1834. Death, the gates of it, what, 1946, 1947. No man knoweth how or in what manner he ſhall die, ibid. Death takes all, and that upon a twofoldg round, 2403. Four cautions from it, 2403, 2404. A good man willing to die. 2406

Deceit, carefully to be avoided, 817. Two things ſhew the odiouſneſs of Deceit. 818
Declaration of a thing made two ways. 476
Declining in reference to the ways of God twofold, 53. Some decline in them, others decline from them, 53, 54. Declining from the ways of God twofold; firſt, to the right hand; ſecondly, to the left, 54, 55 Whether a godly man may decline or no, 55. Declinings in grace, ſeveral cauſes of it, 56. All ſin is a declining from the ways of God, 57. Declining, how a good man may decline and grow worſe. 1506
Decree and appointment of God, whatſoever God doth was before appointed and decreed, 80. Decrees what they are. 467
Deering, his diſcourſe upon his Death-bed. 1954
Defer, God ſometimes defers to do his ſervants right, 1329. Deferrings are very afflictive. 1329
Deficiencies of the beſt men two ways to be conſidered for their humbling. 1228
Delaying and deferring the differences between them, 738. Delaying, we muſt not delay to do good, 878. Long delays a great affliction, 879. Delaying dangerous, though God be patient, 1302. Delays in buſineſs may be no ſtop in it. 1310
Deliberate ſinning the way of the wicked, 154. Deliberate ſinning the worſt, 312. Deliberation about ſin makes it the worſe, 846, 851
Delight, what the proper matter of it, 348, They who are godly delight in God, 349. Wicked men cannot delight in God, 350. Onely they who delight in God are heard of God in prayer, 351. Delight of God, who and what, 484. Delighting in God, what. 1341
Deliverance from evil is the work of God, 1658. Deliverance in, though not out of affliction, 1659. Deliverance out of trouble is Gods work, 2355. He can ſoon work it, ibid. Deliverances of five ſorts, 1267. Deliverance is from God onely, 1269. God conveys deliverance by man or means uſually, ibid. Our deliverance from ſin is coſtly, 1272. Deliverances are obtained three ways, 1273. Temporal deliverance by Chriſt alſo, ibid. Great deliverances give us a new life. 1303
Demanding, of two ſorts. 2295
Denying, to deny, taken four ways in Scripture, 947. To deny God is a moſt heinous ſin, 948. A twoſold denying of God, ibid. Five ways of practical denying, ibid. 949.
Dependance of man upon God for every thing. 1734
Deriſion, to be derided is a great affliction, 645, 648. eſpecially when a man hath been formerly much reſpected, 648. A deriding ſpirit is a wicked ſpirit, 649. It is moſt ſinful to deride the aged, and then eſpecially when they are in miſery, ibid. Wicked deride the godly in affliction, 678, 679
Deſertion, God is every where preſent, yet often not preſent to the apprehenſion of his people, 13. Deſires of Saints often quickeſt after God in a time of deſertion. 14.
Deſire, they who truly deſire to find God, are diligent in ſearching after him, 16. Where God is chiefly to be found, 17. Deſire is diligent in enquiries, 41. Deſires, true deſires are always followed with hard and hearty labours, 426. Deſire ſometimes overcomes all fear, 512. Deſire, ſtrong deſires put us on to ſtrong endeavours, 845. Deſire is the hunger of the ſoul, ibid. What deſire is, God onely can ſtop the deſire of man, 874. They who are full of wants, are alſo full of deſires, 876. Deſire, what we moſt deſire we would fain be at. 2098.
Deſpair of the end, puts an end to endeavour, 1061. Deſpair in creatures, yet hope in God. 1333
Deſpiſing, what it imports, 861, 862. Deſpiſing, what it is, 1602. Who are not deſpiſed by God. 1603
Deſtruction and death taken ſeveral ways, 453. Deſtruction, in whoſe deſtruction God hath pleaſure. 1481
Devil, in what conſideration made by God, 275. Devil, why called the God of this world, 410. Devils, why called the fowls of the air, 448. Devil, the beginner and author of ſin, 508. What the works of the Devil are, ibid. Devil, ſome excuſe their ſins by accuſing the Devil, 1002, 1003. How we may, and how we may not charge the devil with our ſins, ibid. The devils temptations hurt us not unleſs we conſent, ibid. Devil cannot force our conſent to his temptation, ibid. Devil in bonds always, 1925. Devil like the hawk, 2115. With what weapons we may prevail againſt him, 2269. Devils ſin and condemnation, what? 1103
Dew, what; and what it ſignifies in Scripture, 600. Dew how cauſed: two things conſiderable in the falling of the dew, ibid. 1983. God the Father of it, 1983. The great benefit of dew, ibid. 1984. A three fold alluſion of the dew. 1984, 1985
Diadumenus, his reſolution. 1064
Differences, what hinders the healing of them. 1310, &c.
Difficulties, an evil heart will run through all difficulties to find a way to his ſin, 170. Difficulties, great works meet with great difficulties, 419. Difficulties muſt not hinder us, but we muſt remove them. 420
Diligence, good in a good way, 120. Diligence the way to thriving, 924. yet ſinful to aſcribe our thriving to our diligence, 925, 926. Diligence how it makes rich. 1388
Diſcipline, what. 1634
Diſcontent the Devils ſin. 1088
Diſdain or deſpiſing, who moſt apt to do it. 2276
Diſeaſes have a great force, 729, 730. Diſeaſes and death not far aſunder, 1242. Diſeaſes are deſtroyers, 1244. Diſeaſes at the command of God. 1269
Diſhonour fallen upon man by ſin. 224
Diſpleaſure of God renders all outward comforts nothing to us. 1240
Diſpoſition twofold. 2244
Diſputing tough and hard work. 1059
Diſputation the true law of it. 1158
Diſſatisfaction, worldly things much deſired always conclude in it. 922
Diſtreſs puts all men upon calling upon God, yet few do it aright. 1548
Diſtruſt queſtions all that God is. 1577
Diſtruſtful thoughts and fears about worldly things moſt uncomely for a godly man. 593
Dividing the word of God, aright what. 232
Divination about future events, how made by the heathen. 449
Diviſions among men ſent as a puniſhment from God, 267. Diviſions among good men very bad. 2253
Doctrine or preaching of the truth, how like rain, 469. Falſe doctrine is worthleſs. 201
Dog, a term of greateſt diſgrace, 650. Falſe Teachers how like dogs. 651
Dominion of God what; Three things in it, 203. Dominion of God conſidered four ways, 203, 204. The dominion of God calleth us to a twofold ſubjection. 204
Don, the Spaniſh word for a Lord, whence derived. 1902
Double, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 2362
Dragons, their nature diſcovered, 782. They make a mournful cry. 783
Drawing twofold, 182. Drawing and withdrawing, two gracious acts of God towards man. 1214
Dream what it is, 1204. Natural dreams cauſed four ways, 1205. Diabolical dreams, ibid. Divine dreams, five meſſages upon which they are ſent, 1205, 1206. It hath been the uſe of God to reveal himſelf by dreams, 1207. Five reaſons why God revealed himſelf in dreams, ibid. Dreams the way of Gods revealing himſelf to the Church of old, 1208. Luthers prayer about dreams, ibid. 1209. A profitable uſe may be made of dreams at this day. 1209
Drinking, what it ſignifieth in Scripture, 1335. A threefold meaſure of drinking, ibid. To drink ſcorning like water, what it imports, 1336. Drinking much in brutes is from their conſtitution, not from their luſts. 2209
Droppings, why the Sermons of the Prophets were expreſſed by it, 612. Dropping the Word, what it notes. 1721
Duſt, what it is to be like duſt, 734. Good to remember that we are duſt, 735. Duſt, in what ſenſe all men are but duſt, 1369. Humbling conſiderations from it, ibid. 1370
Duty, to caſt off duty is to haſten on miſery, 387. They who are ſloweſt to duty, would run faſteſt from danger, 396. Duty, man ſeldom miſſeth trouble from God, when God miſſeth duty from man, 1524. Duty, God would have us do our beſt in every duty, 1886. Two things needful to it, ibid. Better do duty late, then not at all. 2370
Dwellings appointed by God to every creature, ſutable to his nature. 2041
Dye, to die in our neſt, what, 591. A godly man thinks of dying while in proſperity, 592. To die in peace a deſirable mercy. ibid.

E

Eagle, how ſhe reneweth her ſtrength, 1277. What the Hebrew word imports, 2115. Exceeds any Hawk in three things, ib.

ib. 2116. Two reaſons why the Eagle mounts ſo high, 2116. Four reaſons why ſhe makes her neſt on high, 2118. What food ſhe moſt delights in, 2120. The quickneſs of the Eagles eye-ſight, 2121. How ſhe tryeth her young ones, ib. 2122. Eagles preſage, or ſmell a Battle long before, 2122. The ſimilitude between the Eagle and Chriſt in ſeven particulars, 2123. The ſimilitude between an Eagle and a true Chriſtian, opened in ſeven things, 2124, 2125. Two wings of a great Eagle, are ſaid to be given the Church. 2125

Ear, to give ear, notes five things in Scripture, 604. Ear twofold, 1209. The ear naturally ſtopt againſt the teachings of God, 1210. Seven Ear-ſtoppers, ibid. God openeth the ear by four means, 1210, 1211. Ear how it trieth words, 1318. The uſe of the ears, 1419. How the word muſt be tried by the ear, before 'tis ſubmitted to, 1320, 1321. The reproof of thoſe who uſe their mouths more then their ears, 1321. Ear, its power, 1501. Ear, the opening of it, what, 1634. Ear opened by affliction. 1635

Earth, in what ſenſe the earth is founded upon the Sea, 245. What the foundation of the earth is, 245, 246. The earth is upheld by the infinite power of God, ibid. Inferences from it, 246. How the Earth may be called the pillar of Heaven, 259. Earth, in what ſenſe called vile, 677. Earth, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1357. Earth, how immoveable, 1893. The earths foundations, 1891, 1893. God the maker of the earth, five Inferences from it, 1894, 1895. Three things in the making of the earth, ſhould ſtir us up to praiſe God, 1896. The form and firmneſs of the earth, ſet forth four ways, 1897. Meaſures of the earth, different opinions about it, 1898. Five things admirable in the frame of the earth, 1900. Inferences from it to thankfulneſs, and an exact frame of life on this earth, ſo exactly framed for us, 1901, 1902. What are the garments or clothing of the earth, 1938. Breadth of the earth, 1948. Two Inferences from the greatneſs of the earth. 1949

Earthly things, we have no aſſurance of them, 382. They never befriended any man for Heaven. 446

Earthquake, whence it is. 259

Eaſineſs to follow or be led by others very dangerous. 1109

Eaſt-ward, why it is called forward. 36

Eaſt-wind, two things noted of it in Scripture, 390. Eaſt-wind much under the dominion of the Sun. 1970

Eclipſes of Sun and Moon, why wondered at, and not their ordinary ſhining and motion. 1794

Effects, God can ſtop the effects of all natural cauſes. 1810

Eldership twofold. 1077

Election, the terms of mans election and Gods are quite different, 319. Election cannot be made without conſideration, 465. Election an act of abſolute free grace, 1265, 1266. Election as an act of man, vide chooſing. Election of free grace, not of fore-ſeen works. 2236

Elements, their natural order. 1917

Elephant, the manner of his eating graſs deſcribed, 2190. Twelve things for which the Elephant is eminent above other beaſts, 2195, 2196. Four Inferences from it, 2196, 2197

Elihu, what that name ſignifieth. 1063

Eloquence, how it may be burdenſom. 1157

Empty, how a place may be ſaid to be empty. 244

Encreaſe in the field, five things needful to produce it. 2065

End of a thing taken two ways, 415. End, God is to be made our higheſt end, 907. The end of a godly and of a wicked man are contrary in a two-fold notion, 954. Ends of our works to be looked to, eſpecially the end of Gods works, 1703. Ends of the earth, why called wings, 1749. What the great ends of Gods works are. 1704

Enemy, not to rejoyce at the fall of an enemy, ſhews a high degree of charity and goodneſs, 951. Man is apt to rejoyce at the fall of an enemy, or of him that hateth him, 955. How we may or may not rejoyce at the hurt of an enemy, 956. Enemies of two ſorts, ibid. Enemy, no wiſdom in provoking one too ſtrong for us, 2231. Enemies to be prayed for, and how. 2359

Enemies of two ſorts, 329. Let this be to my enemy, what it imports in Scripture. 330

Entreaty, the ſtrong will not uſe entreaties. 2219

Epicurus, his wicked opinion concerning thunder and lightning, 470. Epicurus his opinion. 715

Error will have the worſt at laſt, 294. The vanity of maintaining an Error, 362. An Error cannot always be maintained, 1112. Errors both of underſtanding, will and ways, many times ſecret to us, 1485. Error, wiſe and good men may err. 2321

Eſau gave the moſt for a meſs of meat of any man in the world. 665

Eſtabliſhment as well as preferment is from God. 1626

Eternity, God ſaw all things from eternity, 474, 475. Eternity of God hath a double reſpect, 1711. Eternity what it is, ibid. Inferences from the Eternity of God, 1712, 1713. Thoughts of eternity ſhould take us up, 1714. Eternity, three ſorts of beings, 1892. God onely abſolutely eternal, ibid. Eternity, what. ibid

Eteſian winds, what they are. 1772

Eve, how deceived by the eye, ſhe having no ſin in her before. 831

Ever, the ſaddeſt or ſweeteſt word in the whole Bible. 34

Evil of ſin, how it muſt be departed from, 504. Evil or ſin, the nature of man is ſo forward to it, that he needs no helper, no perſwader to it, 703. Some will do that which is evil in it ſelf, and unto others, though they ſee they can get no good by it, 704. No good to be gotten by doing any evil, 802. Evil of two ſorts, 770. Two reaſons why God ſends evil upon us, 773. Evil, not to know to do evil, or to be a bungler at it is beſt, 1125, 1126. The ſpirit of a good man is ſet againſt it, 1126. They that do evil have reaſon to expect evil, 1129. Evil of trouble prepares for the receiving food. 1659

Euroclydon, what. 390

Exacters of two ſorts. 2045

Exaltation of wicked men ſhall not continue, 192. Exaltation of ſeveral ſorts, all from God, 1689. God can exalt thoſe that are loweſt. ibid.

Examples very drawing, 56. A godly man doth example himſelf by God, 51. Example of others will not excuſe us if we do amiſs, 1001. Example of Superiors in doing evil very powerful, 1463, 1464. Examples of Gods judgments are to be eyed and marked, 1415. Exemplary puniſhment, all beholding, 1419, 1420. Three reaſons why ſome are puniſhed ſo, 1420. Examples of two ſorts recorded in Scripture. 2409

Excellent, things which are ſo in themſelves prove often hurtful to man. 4[illegible]3

Exceſſiveneſs or exceedingneſs of ſin opened. 1633

Excuſes, for ſin very ſinful, 993. The various excuſes and Apologies which men make for their ſins, ſhewed, 994, 995, &c. They who excuſe a fault, ſhew they have a mind to continue in it. 1343

Exerciſe of the Soul under affliction, in what it doth conſiſt. 1471, 1472

Expectation even of good men often croſſed, 771. How God may be ſaid to fail our expectation, ibid. The difference between the failing of the expectation of a godly and wicked man, 772. Expectation croſſed, afflicts much. 1040

Expedition coſts ſome dear. 877, 8[illegible]8

Experience, experimental knowledge beſt. 2282

Extenuation of ſin, very ſinful. 993

Eye of God upon a place or perſon notes his care of them, 189. Eye much in adultery, 153. Eye, the eye is an inlet to ſin, eſpecially to the ſin of uncleanneſs, 79[illegible]. The eye are to be well watched and guarded, 79[illegible]. That which is in the eye, gets quickly to the heart, 798. Eye-ſervice either of God or man, how unacceptable, 813. How the heart is ſaid to walk after the eyes, 828, 829. The eye doth often miſlead the heart, ibid. Four ſpecial ſins to which the eye doth miſlead the heart, 829, 830. Eye muſt be watched and looked to, 832. Eye of a woman deceives man, 842. Eye provokes to Idolatry, 829. Eyes of God, what they ſignifie, 1399, 1400. Eyes ſee more then an eye, 1498. Eyes of God, what. 1619. A fivefold eye of God upon the righteous, ibid. 1620, &c. How the eyes of God are always upon his people, 1622. Objections anſwered, ibid. 1623. The happineſs of the righteous ſhewed in this, 1623. The duty of the righteous never to withdraw their eyes from God, 1624. A threefold eye to be kept always upon God, ibid. Eye, hath a great force upon the heart in three things, 2229, 2230. The eye called the light of the body in two reſpects. 2255

Ezekiel, why ſo often called and ſpoken to by God, under this name, Son of man. 222

F.

Face of a thing, what it notes in Scripture, 251. Face of a man, why put for his perſon, 1119. Face of God what, and what it is to ſee his face, 1283, 1284. Face of God ſometimes hid from [illegible] people, and why, 1285. It is the ſole priviledge of the favorites of God to ſee his face, ibid. It is our greateſt joy and happineſs to ſee the face of God, ibid. 1286. Face of God what it ſignifieth, 1436. The hiding of Gods face notes three things, ibid. 1437. How the face of God may be ſeen, 1437. Not to behold the face of God, what it imports, ibid. 1438. Hiding of Gods face from Nations; vide Nations. The hiding of Gods face is exceeding grievous to his people, 1451, 1452. Caution to beware of provoking God to hide his face, 1451. Face, hiding of it in ſecret, what. 2175

Failings, God overlooks them in his upright ſervants. 1959

Faith, how faith is our ſtrength to reſiſt temptation, 30. Faith, without faith no prayer is heard, or duty accepted by God, 346. Faith, the eſſential act of it, 707. The eye eye of faith raviſheth Chriſt, 842. Faith gives boldneſs, 1029. Faith, our faith not to be pinn'd upon men, how great or ancient ſoever, 1093. Faith is our viſion of God in this life, 1284. Faith appropriates God as our own, 1592, 1593. Faith ſhould be great, becauſe God is great, 1707. Faith quiets the mind, 1790. The ſtrength and firmneſs of faith, like what, 1813. How needful faith is in our coming to God, 1822. Faith the onely way of underſtanding the worlds creation, 1893. Faith is the eye of the ſoul, 2229. Onely faith keeps down the prevailings of fear, 2263. All muſt be done in a twofold faith, 2347. Faith and repentance muſt go together. 2360

Faithful, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 488

Falls of men, eſpecially of Great men, much talked of, yet ſeldom duly conſidered. 681

Fame taken two ways. 454

Families, who are the coatempt of them, 1012. Three ways by which men become the contempt of families. ibid.

Famine cauſed three ways, 658. Famine forceeth to eat uncouth meats. 664

Father taken two ways in Sripture, 482. Father, what it imports, 650. Father, a relation or title of great honour and comfort. 1500

Fatherhood, God the fountain of it, ibid. 1501

Fatneſs, what it ſignifieth in Scripture. 1663

Fault, God will not charge any man beyond his fault. 1883

Favour of God or man, called the light of the countenance. 620

Favorites to God, who, 1281. A godly man is uſed by God like a favourite, ibid. 3281, &c. Favourites, God ſhews favour to all good men, yet ſome are his favourites. 2333

Fear threefold, 85. Fear ariſeth two ways, 86. God would be more feared, if he were more known, ibid. Fear is with God upon a threefold conſideration, 205. God can ſtrike man with fear when he pleaſeth, 206. Fear of God, a doctrine and a duty for all men, 486. Eſpecially for Magiſtrates, ibid. What the fear of the Lord is, 487. 'Tis wrought by God himſelf, 488. How it is our wiſdom, and what kind of wiſdom it is, 488. There is a fear which is not our wiſdom, the ſorts of it, 489. Natural fear what it is, ibid. Sinful and ſuperſtitious fear deſcribed, 490. Slaviſh fear deſcribed, 491. Spiritual holy fear taken two ways in Scripture, 493. Why fear is promiſed by name in the Covenant of grace rather then faith, 494. Fear hath reſpect to the word in a threefold notion, 495. A threefold effect of fear as it reſpects the word, ibid. How this fear is exerciſed about the works of God, ordinary and extraordinary, whether of mercy or of judgment, 496. How fear examines our thoughts, 498. Moral honeſty avails not without this fear, ibid. Four fruits or effects of this fear, 499, &c. Holy fear the ſpring of courage, 501. Whence it is, that there is ſo little of this fear, ibid. Fear of God how our wiſdom, 502. Three Arguments opened to ſhew that it is ſo, ibid. Fear of puniſhment to be made uſe of to keep us from ſin, 804, 810. Fear of God, not of man, keeps a good man from doing wrong, 866. Fear of evil to be endured, a good motive to keep us from doing evil, 867. Fear twofold, 1080. A good fear what, they ſeldom do amiſs who fear they may, 1081. Fear, how in Heaven, 1835. Fear of God, what, 1850. It is the duty of all men to fear God, ibid. Fear of God ſet in a fourfold oppoſition, ib. God to be feared when afflicting us, ibid. Why it may be ſuppoſed that all men fear God, 1851. God is to be feared, becauſe he is ſo powerful and juſt, ibid. God is to be feared, becauſe ſo gracious and merciful, 1852. Three effects of the true fear of God, ibid. Fear, of two ſorts, 2082 A due fear puts us upon the uſe of means for the preſervation of our ſelves and others, 2 83. Fear put for the thing feared, 2100. That which is not feared is uſually derided, 2101. Fear, what it is, 2262. Fear diſturbs reaſon, 2263, 2264. The leſs natural fear, the more perfection. 2274

Feared, God is much to be feared, 205. God is to be feared as great, and as good, 205, 206

Feaſting, moderate, lawful, 2371. Seven cautions about it. ibid.

Feathers, goodly feathers the gift of God to Birds, 2070. Three Inferences from it, ibid. All Birds are not of a feather. 2071

Feet, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 817

Fetters and Bonds, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 1629

Finding of tree ſorts. 959, 960

Finiſhing of a thing twofold. 1640

Firmament, what it is. 465

Fiſhes of the Sea, three things moſt conſiderable about them. 239

Flatterers will leave us when other things leave us. 682

Flattering and reproaching one another, two extreams to be carefully avoided. 223, 224

Flattery is iniquity, 1123. A twofold flattery opened, ibid. 1124. The other extream to be avoided, 1124, 1125. Flattery is a wrath-provoking ſin, 1128. To ſuffer our ſelves to be flattered is very dangerous, ibid. To give flattery hath a double danger, ib. 1129. More ſinful to flatter thoſe that do evil, then to do evil. 1178

Fleſh taken four ways in Scripture, 973, 974 Fleſh, what meant by it in Scripture, 1240, 1241. Fleſh called graſs in two reſpects, ibid. Six practical Inferences from the fadingneſs of the fleſh, 1243, 1244. Man not called fleſh till after the fall. 1367

Flight, or to flee for our lives, is a grievous judgment. 1395

Floods what in Scripture, and what the Lords ſitting upon them implieth. 466

Folly, the ways of ſin and unrighteouſneſs are full of folly, 133. Folly put in Scripture to note ſome notorious ſin, 134. Folly of ſinners, 161. Folly, refuſal of obedience to God the folly of man, 1091. Folly, ſin is folly, ſhewed four ways. 2341

Food, God gives food to all creatures convenient to their natures. 2046, 2203

Fools, who are ſo, 673. Two ſorts of fools, 674. A wicked man is a fool, ibid. Three reaſons why a wicked man is a fool. ibid.

Fore-ſeeing of evil, how by a prudent godly man. 1737, 1738

Forgetfulneſs, what implied by it, 178. Forgetfulneſs, how aſcribed to the foot, to the hand, 418. Forgetfulneſs, we may be ſaid to forget that which we never had, as well as that which once we had. 2084

Forgiveneſs of ſin: Vide Pardon. Forgiveneſs, God is ready to forgive, 2328. We ſhould be ready to forgive one another. 2330

Fortune and fate, what they are, and how ſome caſt their ſins upon them, 1000. Fortune, the wickedneſs of aſcribing any thing to it. 1361

Foundation of a building, four Attributes of it, 1890. What the foundations of the earth are, 1891. Why the earth is ſaid to have foundations, ibid. What the foundations of the earth are, ſhewed further, 1894. A different word in the Hebrew ſignifying a foundation, 1902. Acclamations uſed at the laying of the foundation of great buildings. 1905

Freedom, ſome creatures are free from, others bound to ſervice by Gods appointment, 2038. Inference from it, 2039. To be free from labour and ſervice is but a low priviledge, ibid. To deſire freedom from duty and ſervice, is very ſinful, 2039. A mercy to be free from three yoaks or bonds, 2040. To be free to ſerve, is better than to be free from ſervice, ibid. to be forced is grievous. 2045

Free-will offerings onely acceptable to God. 346

Friends, their loſs a great loſs, 2367. In times of affliction, worldly friends will leave us, and godly friends may prove unkind to us, 2368. Two Inferences from it, ib. Friends ſhould be friendly. 2370

Froſt, how like aſhes, 1761. what froſt is, 1773. Why the ſame word ſignifies froſt and baldneſs, 1774. Froſt the gift of God, ibid. Froſt and Ice from God, 1985. Froſt compared to aſhes in three reſpects, 1986. The force of froſt, ib. 1987. A twofold reſemblance of froſt and Ice. 1987

Fruit, the fruit of every thing is the ſtrength of it. 1035

Fruitfulneſs, how the Wilderneſs will witneſs againſt unfruitful Profeſſors, 1978. What ſpiritual good fruits are. 1979

Fulneſs or abundance, how it helps on our luſts, 543. Fulneſs, of two ſorts. 2405

G.

GAin, to get gain by unrighteouſneſs a vain thing, 816. This ſhewed ſeveral ways, ibid. Unrighteous gain cleaves faſt to the hand, men loth to part with it, 832, 833. Gain of worldly things a ſtrong temtation. 1295

Garments, what the Hebrew word ſignifies, and how it leads us to conſider our firſt fall in Adam, 1806. A fourfold uſe of Garments, 1807. That our garments warm us is from the bleſſing of God, 1808. Garment natural, what, 2247. Every creature hath ſome kind of garment or other, 2248. Chriſt and his graces the beſt garment. ibid.

Gates have a fourfold uſe, 545. Gates of death, what; vide Death.

Gemms or precious Stones full of light, yet called ſtones of darkneſs, and why. 416, 417

Germans, the old Germans law againſt Adultery. 855

Giants terrible, why called Rephaim. 237

Gifts of God which he repenteth of, what they are, 69. Gifts or bribes their power to pacifie anger and pervert Juſtice, 914. Gifts of the mind, wiſdom and underſtanding come from God, 1086, 1087. Gift, a gift, what, 1535. Nothing can be given to God or received by him as any addition to him, 1536. Gifts or endowments; God gives not all to any one creature, and why, 2087, 2088. Gifts or preſentments, a duty to ſend them in ſome caſes, 2376. Six ſorts of gifts lawful, a ſeventh utterly unlawful. ibid.

Glory of God ſuch as man cannot bear or behold it, 253. Glory, what it is, 602. Glory of God the end of all his works, 1704. Glory, ry, that which any creature excels in is his glory, 2097, 2164. Glory of God twofold. 2166

Gluttony kills more then the ſword. 1250

Goats, the ſignification of the word both in Hebrew and Latine, 2027. Seven things wherein wild Goats reſemble a godly mam. 2028, 2029

God hath put it into the nature of all men to ſeek after him, 16, 17. God is often doing great things when we ſee him not, 39. God appeareth onely to ſuch as himſelf pleaſeth, 40. God is one, 66. God doth whatſoever he will, 77. God, why called living, 302. How God is honoured as the living God, ibid. We ſhould be ready to die for the living God, 303. There is no contending with God, 365. God caſts himſelf upon the wicked, to cruſh them, 394. God himſelf in wrath is the portion of the wicked, as in mercy he is the portion of toe godly, ibid. God, how he is ſaid to hide himſelf, 450. God takes notice of every thing, 451. God declares himſelf three ways, 477. God had a perfect account of things in himſelf from everlaſting, 478. God often ſpoken of in Scripture without any expreſs mention, 685. God to be looked to in all our evils, 694. Though God be exceeding merciful, yet his outward actings to us may be exceeding ſevere, ev[illegible] cruel, 744. God uſeth much liberty in dealing with his people, 748. Nothing hard to God, he can do the hardeſt things with eaſe, 758. God uſually ſpoken of in Scripture as being above, 801. How God is ſaid to know this or that in time, 823, 824. How God is ſaid to ariſe, 865. The Highneſs and Greatneſs of God, ſhould make all things little and low in our own eyes, 906, 907. We make that our God, to which we aſcribe any efficiency, 925. God, how he is ſaid to be above in Scripture, 949, 950. Many caſt their ſins upon God, why and how, 1000, &c. God is to be eyed in all our ways, 1130. God who gives us life, fits us alſo for all the ſervices of this life, 1147. God ſo good that he never ſeeks occaſions or advantages againſt us, nor needs he, we give him too many, 1169, 1170. We are apt to have hard thoughts of God, when we ſuffer hard things, 1173. We ſhould maintain good thoughts of God when we ſuffer evil, 1174. God is great, the uſe of it, 1179, &c. Vide Greatneſs of God. His power and dominion abſolute, he gives no account, and why, 1190, 1191. His word of command is effectual, 1277. God uſually deals with men according to what they do, 1287. Unworthy thoughts of God ſhould be rejected with indignation, 1346. God neither doth nor can do any unrighteouſneſs, 1347, 1358. Two Inferences from it, 1355. Thoſe four things which cauſe men to do wrong, are at furtheſt diſtance from God, 1356. All things and times as preſent to God, ibid. Power of God primitive and unlimited, ſhewed in five particulars, 1359, 1360. A fourfold univerſality of the power of God, ibid. 1361. Admonition to thoſe that are in and under power, from that conſideration, 1362. God can eaſily do whatſoever he hath a mind to do, 1365. Two Inferences from it, ibid. 1366. God is moſt juſt, ſhewed in three things, 1378, 1379. That God is juſt in puniſhing, proved by ſeven particulars, 1379. God can do the greateſt things alone, 1398. Two Inferences from it, ibid. God how he hideth himſelf, 1406. Juſtice of God; vide Juſtice. What God hath a mind to do, he can and will do, 1416. All ſhould follow after God, 1423. God his teaching; Vide Teaching. God is expreſſed in Scripture by a word of the plural number, and what that may import, 1548. God, no unrighteouſneſs in the dealing of God with man, 1519. God ſelf-ſufficient needs nothing, receives nothing of man. 1537. Heathens had ſuch apprehenſions of God, ibid. Four Inferences from it, ibid, 1538. How God is or may be ſeen, 1568. Sight or diſcovery of God to the Soul very ſweet, ibid. 1569. God knows the right of every mans cauſe, and will do every man right, 1571. Whom God doth not, whom he doth deſpiſe, 1603. God hath a due regard to all ſorts of men, ibid. God hath a wonderful magnificent Heart or Spirit, 1610. The magnificence of Gods Heart diſcovered in three things, ibid. 1611. The Will of God the Rule of righteouſneſs, 1695. His righteouſneſs in all things, ibid. 1696. How God may be ſaid to increaſe, 1706. Greatneſs of God, ibid. In what ſence God is not known, 1709. God eternal, 1711. God is a liberal houſe-keeper, 1730. Motions of all creatures under his command, 1750. It is eaſie to God to do great things, 1758. God can do all with a word, 1762. Inferences from it, ibid. God is very liberal, 1776. God is not onely a juſt but a bountiful Maſter, 1786. God perfect in knowledge, the perfection of knowledge ſhewed ſeven ways, 1804, 1805. Five Inferences from it, ibid. How men ſpeaking to God muſt be ſwallowed up, ſhewed in three things, 1826. How we may ſpeak to him and not be ſwallowed up, unleſs in his love, ibid. How God cannot be found out, 1837. In what he cannot be found out, ſhewed ſeveral ways, ib. 1838. Three Inferences from it, ibid. Power of God excellent two ways, 1839. God cannot be ſeen, 1856. God is preſent with his in troublous diſpenſations, 1876. The outward appearances of God very terrible, when he intends nothing but mercy, ibid. God is the firſt being, 1892. God an eternal being, ibid. God is the fountain of all being, ibid. None like God, 1894. God the proprietor and poſſeſſor of all things; Inferences from it, ibid. 1895. All creatures are at the command of God, 2004. Contendings with God. See Contending. God hath terrible ways of revealing himſelf, 2144. God hath a mighty power, 2153. A threefold gradation in expreſſing it, 2153. God is full of Majeſty, beauty and glory, 2156. Inferences from it, 2157. God terrible to ſinners, 2230, No ſtanding before God four ways, 2232, 2233. God is in no mans debt, 2234. God ſelf-ſufficient, 2235. All things are his by a fourfold title, 2238. The excellencies of God muſt not be concealed, 2247. God terrible, 2249. God is good at any work that is good, 2283. God is omnipotent, 2284. God hath right to do whatſoever he doth, 2286. Not a thought of his can be diſappointed, ibid. Two Inferences from it, 2287. How God may be ſeen ſhewed four ways. 2299

God forbid, the Scripture ſence of it opened, 316. A caution about uſing that form of ſpeaking. 317

Godly men moſt likely to be acquainted with what God is doing in the world, for two reaſons, 100. Godly, their failings embolden others in ſin, 999. Godly, not always ſenſible of their defects and failings in grace, 1581. Godly man like the Hind in five things, 2030, 2031. The latter end of a godly man beſt. 2382

Godlineſs is Godlikneſs, or an imitation of God. 52

Gold the moſt excellent metal in five reſpects, 48. Gold the King of Metals, 402. The ſpecial places of Gold, 405. Gold beautiful to the eye, 406. Gold droſſy till refined, ibid. The ſeveral excellencies of Gold, 412. It is the ſhadow of Grace and things Spiritual, 412, 413. Gold corrupts man, ibid. Gold will not buy the beſt things, 438. Gold ſhut up two ways, ibid. Gold the covetous mans God, 442. Gold, how made our hope, 909, 910. To make Gold our hope is exceeding ſinful, 911. The covetous man deſcribed ſaluting his gold. 914

Golden age, laſt according to the Scripture, or it ſhall return at laſt. 414

Good things many of them a trouble to evil men, 159. Good, every man is that good which he doth and procureth to another, 582. Good, there is a threefold good, 770. What kind of good the beſt things of this world are, 917. Worldly things are called our Goods, but they are not our good, 918, 919. Good, what is properly our good, 1324. Goodneſs and ſtrength where they meet, how uſeful, 1346. Good, in the doing of it many ſins are mingled, as well as it is ſinful not to do good, 1485. Good, doing good: They conſult their own good beſt who do moſt good. 1643. Three fruits of doing [illegible]. ib.

Good men often hated by the world, 953. Good men they that are truly good and gracious, are willing to know and ſee the worſt of themſelves, 1488. Good men apt to make ſad concluſions againſt themſelves. 1569

Goodneſs of God fivefold, 214. God gives out goodneſs freely, ibid. Goodneſs of God how ſinful it is not to fear God becauſe of it, 497. Goodneſs of God twofold, 801. Goodneſs of God, two things ſhewed in it. 2328

Goſpel known from the beginning, 1273. Goſpel light, how it hath removed or been taken from many places, 1734. Goſpel where it comes makes a great change, 1938. Goſpel-rain ſent upon the Heathen, who are as a wilderneſs, 1976, Why God takes away the rain of the Goſpel from any place, 1978. The Goſpel onely gives both liberty and ability to repent of ſin. 2308

Government, a ſpirit for it the moſt proper gift beſtowed npon Princes, 1086, 1087. God taketh care of the government of the world, or to maintain government. 1414

Grace renders a man precious, ibid. The glory of grace is, that it continueth, 193. Grace like Gold in three things, 412. Grace much better then the beſt things of the world, 445. Grace better then all ornaments of Gold and Silver, 579. Grace where ſtrongeſt, retains not always the ſame ſtrength, 746. Grace gives us a good title to, but no aſſurance of earthly things, 774. They that are higheſt in grace, may act ſometimes below reaſon, 784. Grace works betimes in ſome, 884. Graces of Believers, how different from the ſeeming vertues of Heathens, 960. Grace, though it abideth always, yet it doth not act always alike, where it is, 1186. Two eminent acts of grace in God towards man, 1214. All our mercies flow from the free grace of God, 1264. That all comes from grace implyeth five things, ibid. God uſually gives out acts of grace when we repent, &c. 1265. Grace free to the beſt and wiſeſt, 1855. Grace, called glory, 2164. Grace preventing; God is aforehand with us, 2235. Grace received may occaſion pride, 2252. Increaſe in grace is the beſt increaſe. 2388

Graciouſneſs of God opened, 1262, 1263. To be gracious notes two things in God, 1263.

Two ſorts of gracious acts. 1265, 1266

Grave, how the houſe appointed for all living, 753. No recovery from the grave as to this life. 759

Gravity the light of a Magiſtrates countenance, 620. The uſual poſture of a Magiſtrate. 624

Graſhopper his motion, 2094, 2095. What the Hebrew word for a Graſhopper ſignifieth, and why. 2096

Great men cannot want helpers, or inſtruments to do evil, if they have a deſire to do it, 897. They have uſually ſuch about them as provoke them to revenge, 975. Great mens bad examples draw many after them, 998, 999. Great men, wiſdom not always found with them, 1092. Therefore no taking things upon truſt from them, 1093. Great things cannot ordinarily be done by ſmall means; God can. 2216, 2217

Greateſt and ſtrongeſt as eaſily caſt down by God as the leaſt or weakeſt, 197. Greateſt eſtates have greateſt turns. 382

Greatneſs of men or their abilities, either to reward or hurt us, muſt not turn us from the right, 1121. Greatneſs of God opened, 1180. Five Inferences from it, 1180, 1181. We may both ſay and believe that God is great, and yet not anſwer it in our practice, 1182. Who they are that indeed acknowledge God in his greatneſs, 1182, 1183. Our not laying to heart the greatneſs of God, cauſeth our unſubmiſſion to him, 1183. Greatneſs, the great God is no enemy to greatneſs, as ſuch, 1609. The greatneſs of God, wherein, 1706. Several Inferences from the greatneſs of God, both for direction and conſolation. ib. 1707

Growth of grace. 55

Guilt, a godly man is as careful to avoid the act of ſin, as to be freed from the guilt of it. 1474

H.

Habitation, an ill one is a great affliction. 670

Hail, what it is, 1960. God hath ſtore of hail and ſnow, ibid. Hail and ſnow uſed by God as his Artillery, to fight againſt evil men, 1965. Five Inferences from it, 1966, 1967

Halting of two ſorts. 1169

Hand of God notes his help, 357. How dreadful a thing it is to fall into the hand of God, ſhewed, 395. Hand, the right hand, a threefold ſignification of it, 695. Hand of God his power, the greatneſs of it, 743. Stretching out the hand, what it ſignifies, 757. Lifting up the hand, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 894, 895. The hand the great inſtrument of action, 924. We are more pleaſed with what we get by our own hand, then with what deſcends to us from others, ibid. Hand how made our God, 939, 940. Hand, ſtriking the hands together in a twofold ſignification. 1417, 1418. Hands, clapping of them in a threefold ſence, 1506. Hand taken two ways in Scripture, 1157. To be taken away without hand, what, 1390. To do a thing without hand notes there things, 1396. Hand of God and man, how they differ, 1535, Hand and ſtrength ſignified by the ſame word. 1764

Happineſs of eternal life made up of three things. 1950

Hard things eaſie to God, 1758. Hard dealing; they that deal hardly with others, are hardned againſt them, 2080. They are very hard-hearted, who deal hardly with thoſe that are young and tender, ibid. To be hard to neer relations, is very unnatural. 2081

Hardned ſinner, how like Leviathan. 2269

Hardneſs of heart in ſin, when the ſinner can feed upon it, 107. Hard heart trembles not at the reproof of God, 262. Hardneſs of heart of ſeveral ſorts, 500. How cauſed by caſting off the fear of God. 501

Hardſhip, good for Chriſtians to inure themſelves to it. 2270

Harlot, how expreſſed in Scripture. 852

Harmony or muſick in the motions of the Heavens, what. 2010

Harrow ſpiritual, twofold. 0206

Haſte, they which make much haſte in a buſineſs can hardly avoid ſin, 819. Haſte often doth hurt. 1310

Haters of all good, many ſuch. 1376

Hawk, what the Hebrew word ſignifies, 2111. Hawks flie ſwiftly along, 2112. The Hawk hath her skill in flying from God, ibid. 2113. Sun repreſented by the Hawk, 2114. A twofold reſemblance of the Hawk. 2115

Health, we ſhould be thankful for it, 732. Health to be prayed and praiſed for, 1249. Health to be carefully preſerved, 1249, 1250. Health and ſtrength of body the gift of God, 1276. Health twofold. 2226

Hear, what it is for God not to hear, 737. Not to be heard when we pray is a great temptation, 738. Hearing, they that do not hear well, do not hear at all. 1020

Hearers, ſeveral ſorts of faulty hearers, 1133, 1134. Six conſiderations upon which the whole mind of God is to be heard, 1134, 1135. He that would be a profitable hearer, muſt be an attentive hearer, 1306. The moſt prudent ſpeakers are alſo patient hearers, 1310. The ſin of thoſe who either hear and do not, or do not hear, 1321. Hearer, a good hearer of the word may ſometimes want an awakening word, 1788. Patience neceſſary in a good hearer, and that in a double reſpect, 1789. Compoſure of ſpirit neceſſary in a hearer. 1790

Hearing, to hear another well is an honour to him, 605. Hearing, good men may be dull of hearing, 1318. The ſenſe of hearing is a great mercy, and of great uſe to mankind, 1319, 1321. Hearing twofold. 1744

Hearkning more then hearing, 1133. What it is to hearken 1134. 1306.

Heart, the word to be hid in the heart, 61. Soft heart, what, ſeveral ſorts of it, 87. Heart, teacheth the whole man, 312. Continual entercourſe between the heart and tongue, 314. The heart is put for the conſcience, 326. Heart how enlarged by fear, 501. Heart how it walketh after the eyes, 829. How ſin is from the heart, and how from the eye, 831. Heart of a natural man led by his eye or by ſence, ibid. Heart and eye to be diligently watched, 832. Heart the ſpring of ſin, 839. The heart though the great deceiver, yet is often deceived, 840. Heart and tongue ſhould go together, 1136. Three ways in which men ſpeak againſt their own hearts, 1137. Heart of man prone to and fixt in evil, 1214. Setting of the heart upon any thing, what it notes, 1363. Heart the ſeveral ways of it, 1400. Heart hard, power of God in ſoftning it, 1987. Why the ſame word in Hebrew ſignifies the Heart, and a Picture, as alſo a Cock, 2008. Heart, the fleſh of it harder then the fleſh of any other part of the body, 2260. Hardneſs of heart threefold. 2261

Heartleſs man, who. 1344

Hearty man, or man of heart, what it ſignifieth. 1345

Heathens how afflicted with ſuperſtitious fears. 490, 491

Heaven and Hell know no changes, 257. Heavens, what the garniſhing of them is, 271. Viſible heavens are full of beauty, 272. Several Inferences from it, 273, Heaven how to be looked upon, 1526, 1527. The heavens are a divine Glaſs, a natural Alphabet, &c. 1527. Heavens declare five things concerning God, ibid. 1528. Heavens are ſtrong and tranſparent, 1813. Heavens as a Looking-glaſs, how, 1814. In the Heavens we may ſee God in five of his excellencies, ib. In them we may ſee our ſelves, ibid. 1815. Heaven, Ordinances of Heaven of two ſorts, 1998. What Laws or Ordinances the heavens give the earth, ibid. The heavens under a Law in three reſpects, ibid. The Ordinances of heaven are a ſecret to man, ibid. Inference from it, 1999. What the dominion of heaven is in the earth, ibid. 2000. Opinion of ſome Aſtronomers about the dominion of the heavens, 2000. Caution about this, ibid. Heaven why called a City. 2044

Heedfulneſs how neceſſary, 1680. Five things to be heeded. ibid.

Heliogabalus, a chief diſh at one of his great ſuppers. 2084.

Heliotrope a flower, why ſo called. 1999

Hell, in what ſence it conſumes thoſe who are caſt into it, 175. What meant by Hell in Scripture, 239. Hell is deſtruction, 240. Hell expreſſed by eight words in Scripture, 242. Hell ſignifieth the loweſt and worſt condition, as Heaven the higheſt and beſt, 393. Hell how both large and ſtreight. 1661

Helpleſs condition the worſt condition, 569. To help the helpleſs is the nobleſt way of helping. 570

Hercules Statue how adored. 940

Hereſie like a flood, yet bounded by God. 256

Hermites, their way of life not approveable, 2043. Two caſes wherein we may deſire ſolitude. ibid

Hidings of God from his people, 40, 41. God hideth himſelf five ways, ibid. God will be as hid to his people ſometimes, after the uſe of much means to find him, 42. Hiding our ſelves proceeds from a threefold cauſe, 552. Hidings of God, the lot ſometimes of good men. 1569

High places of God, what they are, 207. High ones; a godly man how high ſoever he is, remembers he hath one above him. 866

Highneſs of God deſcribed, 904, 905. Five Inferences from the conſideration of Gods highneſs, 905, 906, 907. The higheſt have reaſon to tremble at the Highneſs of God. 907

Hinde, what the Hebrew word ſignifies, 2029. A twofold alluſion of the Hinde, 2030. How the number of their Moneths is a ſecret, 2033. Hindes have ſore pain in bringing forth their young, 2034, 2035. The help ſhe hath in that condition, 2035. Inference from it, with reſpect to women in travel. ibid.

Hinderers of others in doing good, how bad they are 699

Hire; vide Wages.

Hiſſing at others, or for others, what it notes in Scripture. 397

Holineſs hath boldneſs with God, 19. Holineſs gives us weight and honour, 164. Holineſs, the way of holineſs the beſt way ſhewed by ſeveral properties of it, 827. Holineſs, two things argue much the holineſs

neſs of any mans heart, 1066. Holineſs conſiſts in our keeping cloſe to and imitation of God. 1425

Holy-Ghoſt, ſin againſt the Holy-Ghoſt what it is in general. 140

Holy things, the iniquity of them not eaſily diſcerned. 1485

Honours have ſpoiled moſt mens manners, 589. Honour among men is one of the greateſt tryals of man, 647. Honour how to be given to all men. 1124

Hope taken three ways in Scripture, 334. Where there is no hope in God, there can be no delight in God, 350. Hope; ſee Expectation. Hope of the wicked periſhing, 771. It is exceeding painful to loſe our hopes, 775. They can have no preſent hope, who are not under the promiſe, 802, 803. Hope deferr'd troubles much, 879. Hope deſcribed, 910. God under a twofold notion is the object of hope, ibid. To make Gold our hope implyeth four things, ibid. The natural man makes gold his hope, 911. The natural man makes all earthly things his hope, ibid. The ſinfulneſs of making any thing but God our hope, ibid. The Anchor of hope muſt not be caſt downward, 912. Hope in vain, three ways, 2226. Hope puts us upon action, 2227. It is vain to act when we ſee no hope of ſucceſs, ibid. Two Inferences from it, ibid. Loſt hope is the greateſt loſs. 2228

Horſe, ſix ſorts of Horſes, 2089. The ſtrength of a horſe Gods gift, 2089. The goodneſs of God in making ſo ſtrong a creature ſerviceable to man, ibid. Five Inferences from the ſtrength of the horſe, ibid. 2090. Man very apt to truſt in horſes, 2091. What meant by thunder, with which his neck is ſaid to be clothed, 2092, 2093. The horſe in his rage is terrible, 2093. How the motion of a horſe may be compared to that of a Graſshopper, 2095. Horſe a valiant beaſt, 2096. The horſe how an emblem of a bold and hardned ſinner, 2109. How the horſe is an emblem of a bold Saint or ſervant of God. ibid. 2110

Hoſpitality is a duty, 880. How Miniſters ſhould uſe hoſpitality, 881. The hoſpitality of good men is chiefly for the poor and good, ibid. The duty of hoſpitality much urged in Scripture. 982

Houſes, God hath two ſpecial houſes. 273

Humble, God is highly pleaſed with the humble, 1281. Humble, a Soul truly humbled and made ſenſible of ſin, will do any thing at the command of God. 2348

Humbled, a truly humbled Soul much in the exerciſe of a fourfold duty. 1477

Humiliation, not to humble our ſelves when the hand of God is upon us, is very ſinful. 787, 788

Humility, low thoughts of our ſelves beſt, 1081. Three degrees of humility, 1124. Humility, the better we are, the lower thoughts we have of our ſelves, 2137. The dealings of God with man, aim much at the humbling of him, ibid. God ſhews moſt favour where he ſees moſt humility, 2138. Two things humble us, 2304. A great tryal of humility, what. 2327

Hunger will make meat of any thing, 664. Spiritual hunger makes us glad of the meaneſt ſpiritual things, 665. Hunger cauſeth man to take any pains for food, ibid. 'Tis ſo in ſpirituals, ibid. Hunger makes induſtrious, 2047, 2120. Hunger after the Word, when ſad. 2120

Hypocrites, ſome not diſcovered in this world 20. Hypocrites fear the judgment of God, or to be tryed by God, ibid. An Hypocrite cannot rejoyce that God knoweth him, ſhewed in three things, 45. Hypocrites cannot hold out when they come to the tryal, 48. Hypocrite, what his gain may be, ſhewed in five particulars, 335. The Hypocrites reſt is not good, 336. The Hypocrite may be full of hope, and his hope may live as long as he lives, ibid. The hypocrites hope grounded both upon temporal and ſpiritual things, ibid. Death puts an end to the hypocrites hope, 337. Hypocrites often great worldly gainers, 338. A hypocrite may deſire to die, but he is never willing to die, 340. Trouble ſhall come upon the hypocrite, 342. He will pray in trouble, 343. He hath no delight in prayer, but would get eaſe by it, 344. God doth not regard the hypocrites prayer, 345. He doth not delight in God, 348. He cannot delight in God, 350. Three reaſons why he cannot delight in God, ibid. A hypocrite cannot perſevere in prayer; two things make him give it over, 353, 354. Hypocrites much diſcovered by ſickneſs and affliction, 1245. What the Hebrew word for a hypocrite imports, 1453. Two ſorts of hypocrites, ibid. A hypocrite is hated of God, and hurtful to man, 1454. The nature of an hypocrite, ibid. A threefold diſtinction of hypocrites, ibid. 1455. A fourfold deſign of hypocrites opened in their making profeſſion of religion, 1456, 1457, &c. Four things by which hypocrites may be diſcovered, 1458, 1459, &c. They love to be ſeen, and are very cenſorious, 1459, 1460. Several conſiderations moving all to take heed of hypocriſie, 1461, 1462. Hypocrites rarely converted, 1462. Hypocrites are high-minded, and look after great things, ibid. Hypocrites under the power of covetouſneſs and ambition, 1463. Hypocrites getting power abuſe it to the wronging and enſnaring of the people, ibid. They enſnare two ways, ibid. 1464. A hypocrite is moſt unfit for publick ſervice, 1465. Hypocrite, an Hypocrite in heart, who meant by it, ſhewed in three particulars, 1648. The bad condition of an hypocrite in heart, ſet out in three things, ibid. 1649. The hypocrite in heart grows worſe by affliction, 1650. Policies of hypocrites will avail them nothing, 1651. God extreamly angry with them, ibid. 1652. Hypocrites humble not themſelves though God humble them, 1652. The cloſeſt hypocrite ſhall fare no better then the deboiſteſt ſinner, 1657. Hypocrite like the Oſtrich in five particulars. 2074, 2075.

J.

Jackal, a little beaſt that is ſaid to hunt the prey for the Lion. 2013

Ice; ſee Froſt.

Idleneſs brings poverty. 658

Idolatry, there is a ſtrong inclination in the heart of man to it, 930. Why called Adultery, 931. Two reaſons why the nature of man is ſo forward to it, ibid. What Idolatry is, 932. Idolatry a very great ſin, ibid. Idolatry in worſhipping the Sun and Moon, very ancient, 932, 933. The eye an inletto Idolatry, 936. Idolatry begins at the heart, 937. Idolatry is a grand iniquity, 941, 942. Idolatry is a ſin to be puniſhed by the Magiſtrate, 943, 944. Several ſorts of Idolatry, 945, 946. Idolatry of the Jews, why worſe then the Idolatry of the Gentiles. 2164

Idols but toyes for children, and the more ſerious any are at them, the more childiſh they are, 937. Idols, how and why called terrible things. 1155, 1156

Jealouſie, guilt makes men full of it, 184. Jealouſie a fire, 857. Jealouſie; vide Suſpicion.

Jehovah, what it ſignifieth, and why the Lord repeated himſelf to Job by that name, in the latter part of this Book. 1869, 1870

Jeruſalem, warning of its ruine by the Romans. 1736

Jeſurun, Iſrael, why ſo called. 919

Jews, their abuſe of two Scripture expreſſions, 702, 703. How full of Faction when Jeruſalem was beſieged by the Romans. 978.

If's and thoughs with a difference to the godly and the wicked. 368

Ignorance, wicked men love it, 138. A twofold Ignorance, 142. Ignorance, it is the duty of the moſt knowing to confeſs their ignorance, 1486. Sins of ignorance need pardon, ibid. They who have but little knowledge, are little troubled at their ignorance, ib. Ignorance, what ignorance inconſiſtent with godlineſs, 1646. Heedleſs ignorance an undoing to many, 1647. Ignorance is darkneſs, 1819. Six things which a man cannot ſee how to order becauſe of the darkneſs of ignorance, 1820. Three Inferences from it. ibid. 1821. Duties ariſing from this notion of ignorance, 1821. Much darkneſs of ignorance remains in the beſt while in this world, ibid. Three Inferences from it, ibid. Ignorance is a great hindrance in our approaches to God, 1822. Ignorance, our ignorances are to be bewailed and confeſſed before God. 2293

Images, their worſhip much later then of the Sun and Moon, 935. How Image-worſhip crept into the world. ibid.

Imitation of God our duty, 51. Imitation, none to be imitated againſt the rule, 999. Imitation, it is not good to imitate any in what they do ill, 1109. Imitation of God is our holineſs. 1425

Immortality of the Soul ſhewed. 715

Impatience and diſtruſt, provoking ſins, 1577. Hard to keep from impatience in hard times, 1681. Impatience our ſin though troubles great, 1682, 1685. Impatience floweth from ignorance. 2292

Impenitent perſons their danger. 1673

Imprecations how or when lawful. 836

Impunity preſent, no aſſurance of future indemnity. 1963

Incendiaries, why ſome called ſo. 966

Inconſtancy of a carnal man ſhewed two ways. 164

Incorruptibility twofold. 1146

Indians, their modeſty in not ſpeaking before their Elders. 1083

Indifferent, nothing is ſo when once done by us. 828

Induſtriouſneſs of the wicked in ſinning. 119

Inferiors, their duty conſiſts in two things, 996

Infirmities, it is uncharitableneſs to take much notice of them in others, but holineſs to take notice of them in our ſelves, 1171. God is not ſtrict to take notice of our infirmities. 1172

Inheritance, of two ſorts. 801

Iniquity takes hold of us three ways, 386. Iniquity, what ſtrictly, 162, 163. Iniquity and a vain thing expreſſed by the ſame word, 1636. 1681. To have any regard to iniquity is the mark of a wicked man. 1682

Injuſtice, the ſinfulneſs of it. 1247, 1249

Innocency of the faithful not always cleared up by God, 305. To betray or give up our own innocency, is very ſinful, 313. Innocency is our ſafety. 1162

Inſpiration of God what meant by it, 1085.

The inſpiration of God ſufficient to qualifie all men for all duties, and without that nothing can, 1086, 1087. Seven uſeful Inferences made from it. 1087, &c.

Inſtruction and good counſel like rain, ſhewed in ſeveral things, 615, 616. It ſhould be as welcom to our ſouls as the latter rain to the earth, 616. The rain of inſtruction never falls in vain. 617

Inſtruments, God can furniſh ſuch as he calleth to his work, with gifts proper for their work, 1116. Why God uſeth inſtruments, 1361, 1362. God can work without inſtruments. 1396

Integrity what it is, 322. It is of great price, ibid. A godly man prizeth his integrity highly, ibid. We ſhould do nothing to prejudice it, 323. Integrity what it is, a twofold ſignification of it, 824. God will not take ſtrict notice of ſin, where he ſees integrity, 825. A man of integrity is willing God ſhould know him throughly. ibid.

Interceſſion of Chriſt ſues out our deliverance, 1273. Interceſſion what it is, 1733. Interceſſion of Chriſt ever prevailing for us. 2361

Interpreter taken three ways, 1254. A threefold Interpreter, ibid. The Miniſtars of Chriſt are the Interpreters of the mind of God to ſinners, ibid. 1255. Miniſters are the peoples Interpreters to God four ways, 1255. Two inferences from it, ibid. True Interpreters very rare, 1256. Interpreters or Miniſters few, in a twofold reference, with the reaſons of it, ibid. 1257. Interpreters in truth but few, compared with thoſe who are ſo in title, ſhewed five ways, 1257, 1258. Faithful Interpreters to be much prized, 1258. The great work of an Interpreter or Miniſter, is to ſhew man his uprightneſs, or how he may ſtand upright with God, 1260. The Interpreter ſhould be very tender towards troubled Souls. 1262

Job, his Goſpel charity, 951. Job, his innocency had a threefold teſtimony, 1164. Five things in favour of him, while he ſpake ſo much of his own innocency, 1164, 1165. His patience how to be conſidered. 1184

John, what it ſignifieth, and why the Baptiſt was ſo called. 1263

John Baptiſt, why called a voice. 470

John of times, why ſo called. 1081

Joy, what it is, and how cauſed, 917. Our Joy or rejoycing in worldly good things, when and how ſinful, and when and how lawful, 918, 919. Our joy about earthly things doth uſually exceed and go out of compaſs, 920. To rejoyce much in the beſt or greateſt worldly things is very ſinful, 921. Several conſiderations to take us off from inordinate joy about worldly things, 921, 922. Nine things to be chiefly rejoyced in, 922, 923. It is ſad to ſee them rejoyce, who have nothing but worldly things to rejoyce in, 923. When we have much of worldly glory, not to rejoyce in it, ſhews a very gracious frame of ſpirit, 926. Joy in God is the pureſt part of worſhip. 936

Iron, the plenty of it, 406. It is the beſt and worſt Metal. 407

Irreſolution, what it is. 721

Iſaiah the Prophet, how and why put to death. 2298

Iſſue of actions to be remembred before we act. 2224

Judge; God the moſt deſirable Judge to the godly and ſincere,. five grounds of it, 19, 20. A godly man reſts in the Judgment of God, 23. God is every way fitted to be a righteous Judge, 45. In a Judge two things ſpecially needful, ibid. Judge, a godly man deſires to have God his Judge, three reaſons of it, 1022. Judge, two parts of a Judges office. 2321

Judges, it is abominable for them to do unrighteous things, 1349. Judges blind two ways. 1844

Judging, we muſt judge of men according to what they are and do, 319. Judging, before we judge we muſt hear diligently, 1317. We muſt take time to judg of things, 1320, 1323. Judging, it is our duty to judge our ſelves, 1566. Three things required to a right ſelf-judging, ibid. Self-judging preſerves us from raſh judging the ways of God or his dealings with us, ibid. Self-judging keeps us humble, 1567. Judging or to judge, taken three ways in Scripture. 1729

Judgments of God ſhould cauſe us to fear him, 496. Why the judgments of God upon the wicked are not viſible, 101. Judgment taken two ways, 303. God hath variety of judgments, 373. Judgments of God are irreſiſtible, 391. Judgments of God come with violence upon the wicked, 392. Nothing can ſecure ſinners againſt them, ibid. The wicked would fain flee from them, 396. Judgment will overtake the wicked, 959. Judgments of God muſt needs be all right, 1403. Viſible Judgments make ſecret ſins viſible, 1416. Judgment taken two ways in Scripture, 1092. 1322. A threefold notion of judgment in Scripture, 1327, 1328. Judgment how it is taken from a man, 1328. Judgment taken three ways in Scripture, 1570. Judgment of the wicked, in what ſenſe a good man may be ſaid to fulfil it, 1666. Judgment day terrible to ſinners, 1835. Judgment taken four ways in Scripture; how God excels in every one of them, 1840, &c. Why God doth not preſently execute Judgments upon the wicked, 1842. Judgment, God will bring every one to a reckoning, 1880. Judgment-day will bring all things to light, 1932. Judgment of God, why his providential dealings are ſo called, 2148, 2149. It is impoſſible to ſtop or reverſe the judgment of God, 2149. When we do not ſubmit to the judgment of God, we may be ſaid to reverſe it, 2150. Mans pleas for his diſſatisfaction with the judgment of God. ibid.

Julian the Apoſtate, his miſeable end, 400. Julian his ſcornſul ſpeech when he ſpoiled the Chriſtians, 916. Julian once a great pretender to Chriſtianity, 1458. Julians purpoſe of having the Temple at Jeruſalem rebuilt, prevented by an earthquake and thunder. 1755

Juniper, fire made of it extream hot and laſting. 664

Jupiter Hammon, why ſo called. 172

Juſt, ſome think they are juſt enough if they give man his right, though they deny God his right every day. 1178, 1179

Juſtice, the Magiſtrates beſt robes, 577. Juſtice muſt be done ſpeedily and impartially, 578. Juſtice, why pictured hood-winkt, 829. Fear of great men hinders juſtice, 1018. Near relations often prove an obſtruction to juſtice, ibid. Juſtice, nothing ſhould weigh with us but truth and right, and that in a fivefold oppoſition, 1120, 1121. Juſtice perverted five ways, 1346. Four things cauſe men to pervert juſtice, 1356. Some men are haters of juſtice, 1375. To hate juſtice is a moſt hateful thing, 1376. Juſtice-haters are moſt unfit to be Governours, 1377. The juſtice of God ſhewed divers ways, 1378, 1379. God will not allow any man a liberty to complain of his juſtice, 1409. God never wronged any man, 1410. God doth Juſtice upon ſome ſinners openly, 1419. A threefold reaſon of it, 1420, 1421. Juſtice of God, 1571. God is righteous though it appear not, 1572. That God is juſt ſhould cauſe us to truſt him, 1574. Juſtice and Judgment how or whether they differ, 1667. There is no avoiding divine Juſtice, 1668. Juſtice a ſcarce commodity among men, 1843. Plenty of Juſtice in God, ſhewed five ways, ibid. 1844. Two Inferences from it, 1845. Juſtice to be done ſpeedily. 1937

Juſtifie, how man may be ſaid to juſtifie man, and when it is ſinful ſo to do, 319. We muſt not juſtifie a good man when he doth evil, 220.. Juſtifie, to juſtifie our ſelves layeth us open to the reproof of others, 1067. To juſtifie is taken four ways in Scripture, ibid. In two caſes a man may juſtifie himſelf, 1067, 1068. Five ways ſhewed wherein men juſtifie themſelves ſinfully, 1069. How God is ſaid to juſtifie the ungodly, ibid. To juſtifie our ſelves rather then God, very blaſphemous, 1070. When or how we may be ſaid to juſtifie our ſelves rather then God, 1070, 1071. Two Inferences about this ſin, 1071. Juſtifie, he that is much in juſtifying himſelf under the afflicting hand of God, ſeems to condemn God, 2151. We ſhould juſtifie God in all things. ibid.

Juſtification what it is, 216. Man hath nothing of his own to juſtifie him before God, two grounds of it, 217, A twofold juſtification, ibid. Juſtification, how by our words, 967. A threefold juſtification of ſin by man, 992. Juſtification, wherein it conſiſts, 1067. Juſtification of our ſelves two ways; what lawful, what unlawful, 1067, 1068. Juſtification an act of abſolute free grace. 1266

Juſtified perſons have confidence to look up to God, 1286. Such are righteous, 1288. A juſtified perſon, when and how he may loſe the ſight of his righteouſneſs, ibid. When that ſight returns, Joy returns. 1289

K.

Keeping the way of God twofold, 53. Keeping a man back three ways, 1229.

Key of the Clouds in Gods hand. 1718.

Kings, among all the Kings of Iſrael not one good, 589. Kingly power a great temptation, ibid. King how taken in Scripture, 690. Kings and Princes, it is moſt uncomely and ſinful to revile them in word, 1383. 'Tis a degree of blaſphemy, 1384. With what tenderneſs (though with plainneſs) and by what rules the faults of Princes are to be reproved, ibid. 1385. Kings reſembled by the Lion in five things. 2014

Kiſſing of two ſorts ſpoken of in Scripture, 939. Kiſſing uſed among the Heathens, as a token of adoration. 940

Know, man is deſirous to know what is hidden, and careleſs to know what is revealed, 451. Know, not to know, taken three ways, 1125. The choiceſt ſervants of God may be ſhort of knowing many things, which it much concerns them to know, 1484. We know but little of that we know, and there is much that we know not, 1485. Know, to know taken three ways, 1580, 1581. Not to know, or we know not, ſignifieth two things, 1758. It is a ſhame not to know ſome things, 1796.

1796. It is a preſumption to ſeek the knowledge of other things. ibid.

Knowers of God, or they who know God, who they are, 96. Every godly man is a knower of God, 98. Some godly men know God much more then others who are godly too. ibid.

Knowing and underſtanding taken two ways. 22, 42

Knowledge, the moſt ſecret ways of man, even the way within is known to God, 43. A general Inference from this knowledge of God, ibid. It is the Joy of the upright that God knows their moſt ſecret ways, ibid. That God knows the ways of a godly man, aſſures him of three things, 44. Knowledge, evil men will act againſt their own knowledge, 139. Nothing is hid from the eye or knowledge of God, 241. All our knowledge of the ways and works of God is but in part, 278. Knowledge, what we know of the mind of God, we ſhould make known, 560. Three ſorts of men fail in making known the things of God, ibid. We are chargeable with ſinning againſt the knowledge we might have had, as well as what we have, 362. Some curious after the knowledge of ſecrets, neglect what is plain, 436. God hath given the knowledge of all things neceſſary, 437. Two great points of knowledge plainly revealed, ibid. God hath purpoſely hid ſome things from the knowledge of all living, 449. There are two great vanities in men concerning knowledge, 450. Knowledge makes man proud, ibid. Knowledge put for perſwaſion or aſſurance, 750. Knowledge, much knowledge ſhould be in thoſe who have enjoyed much means of knowledge, 1082. Knowledge ought to be communicated, 1083. Knowledge or what we know is to be communicated, 1095. Two things hinder ſome from communicating what they know, ibid. What and whoſe knowledge puffeth up, 1103. A man of knowledge, who properly, 1316. A twofold knowledge, 1322. Sinning againſt the light of knowledge very ſinful, 1433. Knowledge the fountain of ſpeech, 1497. Knowledge of God over all; Vide Omniſcience. Knowledge, not to do according to what we know, is very ſhameful, 1557. Knowledge fetcht from afar, what, 1589. Knowledge is worth our longeſt travel, 1590. What the perfection of knowledge is, or, who is perfect in knowledge, 1595, 1596. Knowledge of God, 1606, 1607. In what ſence a good may die, without knowledge, 1646, 1647. In what ſence God is not known by any, 1709. Inferences from it, 1710. Yet this muſt not diſcourage us in ſeeking after the knowledge of God, nor will it excuſe any who neglect to know him, ibid. 1711. Men know little of the work or ways of God, 1796. Knowledge but in part here, 1821. Knowledge, we know not the all of any thing, or any thing fully, 1949, 1950. Perfect knowledge our happineſs in the next life, 1950. How knowledge is ſaid to vaniſh in the next life, 1951. Man by reaſon of his ſhort life hath little knowledge, 1958. God hath given irrational creatures a knowledge of what is beſt for their own preſervation, 2114. God hath not concealed the knowledge of himſelf and of his will from man, 2247. Knowledge oppoſed not onely to Ignorance, but to leſſer degrees of knowledge, 2281. Knowledge a growing thing, 2282. A twofold encreaſe in knowledge, ibid. Experimental knowledge beſt, ibid. Afflictions a means to encreaſe knowledge, 2283. 'Tis a good degree of knowledge to confeſs we know little, 2294. Our profiting in knowledge is according to the meaſure of Gods revealing himſelf to us, 2300. Knowledge of our ſelves humbleth us. 2304

L.

Labours, it is a ſore judgment not to enjoy the fruits of our labours, 378. Thoſe things which have onely a natural excellency in them, cannot be got without much labour, 411. Man is willing to beſtow any labour for earthly things, 412. Hard labour gets all, 425. Labour, nothing cheap but poor mens labour, an ill proverb, 1037. Labour, food not to be had without labour, 2059. Labour taken two ways in Scripture, 2062, 2063. Labour in vain, what and and when. 2082, 2683

Labourer not to be wronged, 129. Nothing cheap but poor mens labours, why ſaid ſo, 130. It may be a dangerous thing to be the Labourers purſe-bearer but for a Night, ibid. Labourers, in what ſence Owners. 1038

Labour, not to eat the fruit of our own labours, a great affliction. 836

Lacedemonians, their ſtrict diſcipline towards youth, 554. Lacedemonians, three ill wiſhes uſed by them. 849

Lamentation, to die unlamented is a lamentable death, 375. They deſerve to be moſt lamented who need it leaſt. 376

Land, four things may make a mans land cry againſt him, 1032, 1033. Land, what Land God eſpecially owns as his. 1785

Land-marks, the removing of them very ſinful. 104

Laughter three fold in Scripture, 618. Laughter, what lawful, what ſinful, 622, 623. Holy laughter ariſeth three ways. 623

Laughing, thoſe men moſt miſerable at whom God laughs, 1400. Laughing at any thing, ſhews we ſlight it or fear it not. 2268

Law, how it convinceth, 1099. Two ways of keeping the Law, 1382. Law of God how written in the heart by Grace, 1438. Law, no iniquity in acting according to Law. 1695

Laws, good Laws without good Judges cannot make a people happy, 578. Laws, bad Laws great ſnares. 1463

Left-hand declining, what it importeth. 55

Leviathan or Whale, the mighty power of God in forming the Leviathan, 276. An Inference from it, 277. Leviathan, what the word ſignifies, 2213. What Leviathan is, ibid. Leviathans greatneſs, 2216. None upon earth like him in two things, 2273. His pride. 2276

Liberty; ſee Freedom. Liberty better then Plenty. 2045

Life of man, in what ſence it ſhould always hang in doubt to him, 184. How no man is ſure of his life, 184, 185. Life is of God, 309. and depends wholly upon him, 310. Our life is but breath in our noſtrils, ibid. Life of man hath a threefold meaſure in Scripture, 519. Long life a great bleſſing, 597. Life and a dead body ſignified by the ſame Hebrew word, and why, 720. Life of a man a kind of Checquer-work, 723. Life of man ſhort in this world, therefore his troubles cannot be long, 762, 763. Life of man full of ſorrow, 770. Life may be ſaid to be loſt two ways, 1038. Life of man in this life, at longeſt, ſhort, 1079. Several diviſions of mans life, 1080. Life is the gift of God; a threefold Inference from it, 1146, 1147. The life of man is at the call of God, 1366. Life and Soul how they differ, 1230. Life a great bleſſing, 1297. Life, ſhortneſs of it, 1713. Yet man hath an Eternity to wait for, 1714. Life of man, ſhortneſs of it, 1891. Mans life nothing comparatively, ibid. Life ſhort, 1958. Two things as to our life ſhould humble us, ibid. Long life a bleſſing, 2399. Why they before the Flood lived ſo long, ibid. Six conſiderations, ſhewing, that long life is a bleſſing, 2400. Long life in proſperity is a great bleſſing. 2401

Light of God fourfold, 213. Light internal, againſt which the wicked rebel, twofold, 136. Holy truth is light, 137. How divine truth is like light, ſhewed in ſeveral reſemblances, ibid. Wicked love not the light, neither to ſee what good they ſhould do, nor to be ſeen in the evil they do, 138. Sinning againſt light exceeding ſinful, 140. Four degrees of ſinning againſt light, 140, 141. They who ſin againſt light are ready for every ſin, 141. Light of God, what. God the Fountain of light, 529. Light of God enough to lead us through all darkneſs, 530. Two things to be avoided, that we may walk in the light of God, 532. Light, to ſee light, what it imports, 1297. Light within us of great force, 1516. How that Principle is abuſed, ibid. Light, God loves to entitle himſelf to light, 1729. Light about ſeven things needful in thoſe who come to God in any duty, 1822. Light properly not ſeen; 1827. Light of Gods countenance ſometimes hidden, 1828. Light, God the Author of it, 1928. Light wonderful, in five reſpects, 1929. What light is, hard to ſay, ibid. Light, how uſeful, 1930. Light how comfortable, ibid. Eight Inferences from it, 1930, 1931. Light of the Goſpel, how great a mercy, 1932. Light ſwift, preſently ſpreads it ſelf all over the face of the earth, 1935. Wicked men hate light, 1936. Light diſcovers, ibid. Light, how it makes a change in things, 1937. Light, where it dwelleth, how anſwered by Geographers, how by Aſtronomers, 1952. Light and darkneſs have their bound, their appointed places, 1953, What is the place of ſpiritual light and darkneſs, 1954. Light and darkneſs, whether natural or figurative, are at Gods diſpoſe, ib. 1955. The work of God in ordering light and darkneſs is wonderful, ſhewed ſeveral ways, 1956. Four things conſiderable in the light, 1968. Light how parted, 1969. God diſpenceth light where he pleaſeth. 1969

Lightning, what it is, 469. Why the Lightning is ſeen before the Thunder is heard, ibid. Lightning, what it is, 1749. Two things wonderful in it, ibid. The ſwiftneſs of it, 1750. Lightning at the command of God. 2004

Limb of the body, the loſs of it very great, 899. Three Inferences from it. ibid.

Limbus patrum, what. 1946

Line, what the ſtretching of it forth ſignifies in Scripture, ſhewed in four things. 1899

Lion, he bears four reſemblances in Scripture, 2014, 2015. Lion is greedy of prey, 2016. God provides prey for Lions, ibid. Two Inferences from it. 2017, 2018

Living, land of the living, what meant by it. 432

Loadſtone gives out its vertue by Iron. 149

Locuſts, why ſo called. 2096

Look of God twofold, 190. Look and See, what theſe two words joyned import. 1526

Looking, how attributed to God. 456

Looking-glaſs, how the Heavens are ſo. 1814

Love, we cannot be conſtant in that which we do not love or affect, 142. Love of thoſe who are holy argues holineſs, 330. Love the weight of the Soul, 460. Love twofold, 952. Five ſteps or degrees of love, 953. Love unſatisfied till it hath attained higheſt enjoyment, 978. Love, and to love; not to love God and good things is to hate them, 1376. Love of God to man, what and how great is little known, 1485. Love to God ſhould be great, becauſe he is great, 1707. Love, it ariſeth from likeneſs, 2024. Love, all duty muſt be done in love to God and man. 2347

Loyns, how the loyns of the poor are ſaid to bleſs their Benefactors, 891. Loyns, girding of them what it imports, 1884. A fourfold uſe of girding the loyns. ibid.

Lurdane, who, and why ſo called. 2057

Luſt or corruption, may preſs a godly man very hard to do or ſpeak amiſs, 962. The power of luſt appears chiefly in two things, 963. By what degrees the judgment of God and the luſts of men work toward their enſlaving under ſin. 965

Luſts and corruptions like a ſtormy Sea within us, 269. Luſts in the underſtanding as ſtrong as thoſe in the ſenſual appetite, 1081. Luſts of ſinners ſtick cloſe together like Leviathans ſcales. 2258

Luther, Eraſmus, Melancton, their different character, 1089. Luther how he thought himſelf rebuked by God, 1109. Luther a man of great courage, 1116. His prayer about two things, 1208. How he confeſſed himſelf an Apoſtate, 1422. Luthers godly fear and reſolution, 1665. Luthers meditation upon a cloud, 1725, 1726. Luther ſaw a circular Rain-bow, 1799. His opinion when the Rain-bow began. ibid.

Lye, falſe doctrine is a lye, 200. To lye, what it ſignifieth in Scripture, 1329, 1330. To lye or bear falſe witneſs againſt our ſelves is very ſinful, 1330. Lye, to deceive with a lye the worſt deceit. 1163

Lyars, men are made Lyars two ways. 200. The worſt that can be ſaid of a man is, that he is a Lyar. 201

Lyes, officious lyes dangerous. 575

Lying, what it is. 991

M.

Magiſtrates, They are the eyes of the people, 167. They are the pillars of the Earth, 262. Magiſtrates out to be much in the fear of God, 486. Magiſtracy hath been held up and ſubmitted to in all ages, 547. Light of Nature ſhews it in three things, ibid. Light of Scripture for it, 548. Objections anſwered, ibid. Magiſtracy conſiſts in two things, 549. The uſefulneſs of Magiſtracy, ſhewed in ſeven things, 550. There is a Majeſty in Magiſtrates, 553. 'Tis the duty of all to honour Magiſtrates; three things oblige to it, 554 Good Magiſtrates are willingly honoured by good people, 555. 564. It is a great happineſs to Magiſtrates when they have the heart and good will of the people, 565. It is the peoples duty to pray for their Magiſtrates, and to give a good teſtimony to them that are good, 565, 566. Magiſtrates ſhould chiefly take care of the poor fatherleſs and helpleſs, 569. They will not relieve any by wrong to others, 575. Righteouſneſs is their beſt cloathing, ſhewed in three things, 576. Magiſtrates in all ages have had their ſpecial robes and emblems of honour, 577. They ſhould appear much for the poor, 581. Their care ſhould extend to all, ibid. They ſhould carry the affection of a father to their faithful ſubjects, 583. They muſt ſearch out every cauſe which they know not before they give ſentence about it, 584. They muſt inform themſelves of what is amiſs, though it be not complained of, 586. They muſt do right to unknown perſons, ibid. They muſt puniſh as well as relieve, 588. They muſt be impartial in puniſhing, ibid. It is much of God when their authority remains freſh and renews daily in their hand, 603. Reverence due to Magiſtrates, 624. They ſhould be able to chooſe out the way of the people, 627. They ſhould have ready obedience, 628. They ſhould comfort their people, ibid. Magiſtrates their terrour upon evil doers 660. They are to be ſubmitted to for ſeveral reaſons, 689, 690. It is of God that Magiſtrates retain or loſe their reſpect with the people, 691. Righteous Magiſtrates will not oppreſs how much opportunity ſoever they have for it, 897. Magiſtrates ſhould conſider, not what will paſs among men, but what is right in it ſelf, and in the ſight of God, ibid. Magiſtrates work more in protecting then puniſhing, 898. A good Magiſtrate will do righteous things, though he provoke all men by it, 1117. Magiſtrates, how they ſhould be to men like a harbour to Ships, 1162. Why expreſſed by the ſame word in the Hebrew which ſignifieth both binding and healing, 1374, 1375. God highly diſpleaſed when they miſgovern a people, 1464. Magiſtrates why called Shields in Scripture, not Swords. 1546

Magnifying of God two ways, 1696. Our magnifying the works of God, a moſt neceſſary duty, 1701. How or when we magnifie the works of God, ſhewed in five things, 1703. Five ſorts fail in magnifying the works of God, 705. Three motives to it. ibid.

Majeſty of God, dreadful to his own people, 86. Majeſty of God terrible, 1111. Majeſty and glory of God, man not able to bear it, 1825. Majeſty of God, ibid. It is terrible, 1832. Two Inferences from it, 1833. Majeſty proper to Kings, 2163. God is full of majeſty, 2165. What that ſhould work in man, ibid. 2166. The majeſty of God is from himſelf; mans from God, 2167. Majeſty of man little to God. 2168

Maker, God is the Maker of all men in a threefold conſideration, 1126. It is good to remember God as our Maker, ibid. God is the Maker of our bodies, 1142. Three Inferences from it, ibid. 1143. That God is the Maker of all men, ſhould make all men meek one towards another, 1148. Maker, God is ſo to us three ways, 1548. It is good to look to God as our Maker at all times, ſpecially in affliction, 1549. Five duties from the conſideration that God is our Maker, ibid. God is to be honoured as our Maker, 1592. The Maker of all men can be unrighteous to no man, 1593. Maker, God loves to be owned as a Maker. 2198

Malefactors, their faces covered. 1448

Mallows, their nature and uſe. 663

Man is a very poor thing, 222. Man compared to the meaneſt things, ibid. To a worm, 223. Man a frail creature, 723. Man expreſſed by three words in Scripture, 986. Man and man are of a meaſure, 1153. Two Inferences from it, ibid. Man a frail creature, 1155. Men, not made by God all of a rank, 1383. All men are the works of Gods hands in a twofold reſpect, 1387. All men divided into three ſorts by the Papiſts in reſpect of their Soul-ſtate. 1482. Men, in what ſence all men are alike, 1540. Shewed in four things, ibid. Men of two ſorts, 1698. Man, to do a thing like a man, what it ſignifieth, 1884. Man is vile, and how: See Vile.

Manner how duty is to be performed, as conſiderable as the duty it ſelf, 229. That which is not done in a right manner, is not done at all. ibid.

Many or one make no difference with God. 1438

Marius, what he was to the Romans. 1468

Maſters; vide Servants. Why Maſters ſhould carry it meekly towards their Servants, 872, 873. Maſters of two ſorts. 1074

Maſchil, the title of ſome Pſalms, what it ſignifieth. 1426

Mazaroth, what. 1995

Means, God can do the greateſt things without any viſible means. 246

Meaſuring, what things are properly meaſured. 465

Meat, dainty meat, two cautions about our uſing it, 1240. Meats, ſeveral forbidden the Jews, and why. 2111

Meditation, why aſcribed to the tongue and mouth, 312. Meditation, two things ſhould be the daily Meditation of a Chriſtian, 1640.

Meekneſs both in hearing and ſpeaking the word, how neceſſary, 1110. It is good to uſe meekneſs, towards all, eſpecially the afflicted, 1132. 1156, 1157. 1177. Meekneſs, to be high in Power and meek in Spirit, ſhews a God-like Spirit, 1604. Meekneſs in dealing with others, an imitation of God. 2323

Meetings, of two ſorts. 775

Merchants in Hebrew called Canaanites, and why. 2222

Mercy, the wicked ſhall have Judgment without Mercy, 394. Mercy ſhould cauſe us to fear God, 497. Mercies uſually more prized when removed, then when enjoyed, 521. Mercy of God how it endures for ever, 744, 745. Mercy, God declares himſelf more inclined to it, then to wrath and judgment, 1481. Mercies of God, unleſs we are bettered by them, it had been better for us not to have received them, 1704. Mercy prevails with ſinners, more then wrath. 2349

Merciful men have ſpecial favours from God. 1787

Merit, no merit in the beſt of men. 1855

Method in ſpeaking, how uſeful. 1150

Michtam, the title of ſeveral Pſalms, what it ſignifieth. 439

Mid-night trouble, what it ſignifieth. 1393

Mighty men, of three ſorts, 1395. The mightieſt men have no might againſt God, 1397. God can eaſily overthrow the mighteſt men of the world, 1412, 1413. Mighty men apt to deſpiſe others. 1605

Mightineſs of man fourfold, 1544. Mightineſs of God in two things, or of two ſorts, 1597. The mightineſs of God ſet forth in ſeven aſſertions, 1598. Five Inferences from the mightineſs of God. 1600, 1601

Mill, grinding in the Mill a puniſhment for Captives. 847

Minerals and Metals, the wiſdom of man in finding them out, 402. The art of finding and fining Metals hath been very ancient, 407. The skill by which man finds and fines them, is the gift of God, ibid. Thoſe four Metals, Gold, Silver, Iron and Braſs, ſhadow dow both the civil changes in the world, and ſpiritual in the Church. 414

Mind of man, man would have his own mind; vide Will.

Minerva, the Inſcription of her Temple. 448

Miniſters of the Goſpel, a good pattern for them in preaching the word, 1019. Miniſters ſhould ſpeak as in Gods ſtead, 1153. and are ſo to be heard, 1154. Their meekneſs in dealing with Souls, 1157, 1158. Miniſters are Meſſengers, 1252. How they ſhou'd ſpeak, 1253. They ought to be heard, and how becauſe Chriſts Meſſengers, ibid. Vide Interpreter.

Miniſtery of man nothing without God. 1487

Miracles, God doth not Miracles to preſerve or deliver the wicked, 1614. Miracles as eaſie to God as his ordinary works. 1794

Mire what meant by in Scripture, and what it is to be caſt into it, 732. Sin the worſt mire. 734

Mirth, honeſt mirth allowed in the Goſpel. 622

Miſery, it is a great miſery to have been, and not be happy. 645

Miſ-interpretation; Two ſorts of words and actions moſt liable to miſ-interpretation. 7

Miſ-judging one another, very common. 1062

Miſts always accompanied with calms, why. 1920

Moderation of Spirit proceeds from true greatneſs of Spirit. 1611

Moderator or Compoſer of differences between others, four things required in him. 1110, 1111

Modeſty a great vertue, and the grace of all our graces. 1596

Moment, what it ſignifieth in Scripture. 1390

Money, how it anſwereth all things, 914. Money, why expreſſed in the Hebrew, by a word which ſignifies a Lamb or Sheep. 2375

Moneths, meaſured by the Moon or Sun, their difference. 2032

Moon, in what ſence it ſhineth not, 219, 220. Moon, the vain cuſtom of ſome at the firſt ſight of the new Moon, 930. Moon, the power of it upon earthly things. 2000

Morning, God ſhould have morning or early praiſes and ſervices, 1913. Morning light, why the cleareſt light is expreſſed by it, ſeeing noon light is clearer. 2255

Moſes, his body or burying place, why hidden by the Lord. 449

Moth, how wicked men are like a Moth in building their houſe. 380

Mother-Father, by whom God was ſo called, and why. 1985

Motions, of the creature, moſt violent and in appearance contingent, under the dominion of God. 1750

Mountains, to remove them, what it notes, 423. Mountains what and how they melt and flow down. 749

Mourning proper for the dead, 375. To have none mourn when we die, a ſign of an ill life, ibid.

Mouth, opening the mouth, what it imports, 614. Mouth well watcht, may be kept from offending, 966. The mouth or tongue of man a very great inſtrument of ſin, 966, 967. Mouth, the opening of the mouth imports four things in Scripture, 1135. Mouth, what meant by laying the hand upon it. 2140

Multitude apt to oppoſe that which is good, and thoſe that are good. 1016

Murder committed upon two grounds. 144. The greatneſs of the ſin of murder ſhewed two ways by Scripture, 145. Nine other conſiderations ſhewing the greatneſs of the ſin of murder. 146

Murderer, how hateful. 1267

Murmuring at the works of God, the ſinfulneſs of it, 482. Murmuring, no cauſe to murmur at any of the dealings of God, ſhewed in four things. 1410, 1411

Muſcovia, the ſuddain change there in the Spring. 1988

Muſculus a little fiſh, the Whales guide. 2222

Muſick an ancient Art, 787. Muſick is not onely an ancient, but a lawful Art, ibid. When the uſe of Muſick is ſinful, ibid. 788. Muſick ſaddens a ſorrowful heart. ibid.

Mutability of man in his natural and civil ſtrength. 257

N.

Nakedneſs; that we are naked when we want protection, 342. Nakedneſs or want of clothing, a great affliction. 887

Names, the giving of ſignificant Names to children, very uſeful, 1064. Name of God, what, 1552. Names, it is a duty to give names to our children, 2389. Parents do well when they give names to their children, which may mind them of the providence of God to them, 2392. It is good to give names exciting to duty and vertue. 2393

Nations have their ſpecial ſin: Several of them noted, 1008, 1009. Nations, God ſometimes hideth his face from whole Nations, 1443. Three things noted concerning Gods hiding his face from a Nation, ibid. 1444. What thoſe miſchiefs and evils are which throng in uſually upon a Nation, when God hideth his face from them. 1445

Nature, uncleanneſs of nature runs through all men, 218. Sinfulneſs of nature conſiſteth chiefly in two things, 219. Nature, ſome things in it beyond mans reaſon, 436. God hath made ſome things in nature more excellent then others, 443. Nature will live with a little, and that which is coarſe, 666. Nature, works of God in nature ought to be ſearched, 1590. Nature, courſe of nature keeps time conſtantly, 1928. Nature is content with a little, 2042. It is hard to change nature. 2056

Natural, no natural power in man to do good. 884

Neceſſary food, what. 62

Neceſſity, no man neceſſitated to chooſe a ſinful evil. 1662, 1663

Neck, ſtiff-neck, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 2257

Neeſing what, and how cauſed, 2254. Neeſing a good ſign of two things, ibid. 2255

Negative commandments and threatnings of God always imply the affirmative, and ſo uſually do the negative practices of men, 181. Negative duties and commandments include the affirmative, 506. Negatives in Scripture often carry a ſtrong affirmation. 1593. 1612

Neighing of a horſe, like thunder. 2093

Nero, his ſeeming clemency. 1846

New-birth; ſee Birth.

Night, trouble coming upon us in the night is more grievous, 388. A threefold aggravation of it, ibid. Of all Nights, Day-night is the worſt, ibid. When men turn day into night, morally, God will do it judicially, 389. Night-pains moſt grievous, 727. Night, God gives his people occaſions of rejoycings in the night as well as in the day, 1551. God gives his people a rejoycing frame of ſpirit in the night, ibid. Night taken two ways. 1677

Nimrod, whence ſo called. 136

Northern-part of the World, why called the place where God worketh, 37. God works more in the Northern-parts of the World, then in the Southern, ibid. The Goſpel hath been more cleerly taught in the Northern then in the Southern-parts of the World. 38

North-wind makes fair weather, 1832. why promotion is ſaid to come out of the North. ibid.

O.

Oaths; Chi Eloah, the great Oath, 299. Oaths are lawful, ibid. There is much of Divine worſhip in Oaths, ſhewed in ſix particulars, 300. Oaths are to be uſed onely in weighty matters, ibid. God onely is to be ſworn by, ibid. Four things render an Oath ſinful, 301. A twofold fearing of an Oath, 498. Oath, A godly man how he ſpeaks always as if he were upon his Oath. 817

Obedience a very different thing from ſubjection in ſome caſes, 996. Obedience to the Law, if not univerſal is not obedience, 1429. Obedience twofold, takes in the whole duty of man, 1471. Obedience due to the call of God either by his word or works, 1637. Obedience to God profitable to man, 1643. No obedience where no ſervice, 1645. Good men fail in obedience, ibid. Obidience, we ſhould yield ready obedience to all the commands of God, 2004. Full and compleat obedience, what, 2344. We muſt obey without diſputes or delays, when God commands, 2345. The manner as well as the matter of obedience, what. 2347

Obeying and hearing expreſſed by the ſame word. 1637

Obſtinate perſons not to be further dealt with, 1061. They muſt be left to God. 1105

Occaſions, or acts leading to ſin are to be avoided as well as the ſin it ſelf, 105. 505. 796. Occaſion, God loveth to ſee occaſion of doing good to men, 1291. Occaſions, to ſeek occaſions againſt others a great piece of uncharitableneſs, 1167. How to do ſo is againſt the law of love, ſhewed by ſeven ſteps, 1168, 1169. It is a ſign that we look upon a man as an enemy, when we ſeek occaſions againſt him, 1163. Occaſion, we ſhould be watchful over that which hath been an occaſion or inſtrument of ſin. 2140

Oecolampadius his dying ſpeech about light. 1954

Old age of two ſorts, 655. Old age how it may be ſaid to periſh in a man, ibid. Old age taken for the adjuncts of it, 656. Old age in youth, ibid. Old men if imprudent are to be numbred among children, ibid. Some old men having nothing of old age in them, but the infirmities of it, ibid. It is the ſhame of old men to be without wiſdom, 657. Old age doth not make men wiſe, 1092. Spirit of God not tied to any age, 1093. Old men, a twofold ſtamp of God upon them, 1077. Old men elegantly called Men of days, 1081. How old men ſhould ſpeak, 1082. Old men have reaſon to be wiſer then the young, ibid. Old men ſhould be apt to teach, 1083. 'Tis a reproach to old men to be ignorant, ibid. Old age when a bleſſing, 2400. Old age uſually accompanied with many infirmities, 2401, God can make old age comfortable ibid. Old age and death cannot be far aſunder, der, 2404. Some old men wou'd be young again. 2406

Omiſſion-ſins, or the neglect of doing a duty eaſier to be obſerved then failings in doing a duty. 1485

Omnipotency of God; It is as eaſie with him to do a thing, as to deſire to do it, 77. Omnipotency of God, or that he can do all things, how to be underſtood, 2284. Gods Omnipotency limited by his Will: Inference from it, 2286. That God can do whatſoever he willeth, a twofold uſe of it. 2287

Omnipreſence of God; God is every where, yet ſomewhere eſpecially to be found. 17

Omniſcience of God, 811. There is nothing of man hid from or a ſecret to God, ibid. That God knows all the ways of men, is an aſſurance that he will puniſh all evil ways, 812. A gracious heart conſiders himſelf always under the eye of God, ibid. How the Scripture ſpeaks of God as beginning to know, 823, 824. Omniſcience of God, caution from it, 1175. God knoweth all our goings, 1351. The exactneſs of Gods knowledge of all things, 1401. The everlaſtingneſs and univerſality of Gods knowledge, 1402. Five Inferences from it. 1403, 1404

Once, taken three ways in Scripture. 1197, 1198

Oneneſs of God both in his nature and mind. 66

Onyx-ſtone deſcribed. 439

Opinion, the Opinion of men concerning one another, very changeable, 646. This cauſed often by a change in our outward condition, 647. What all men ought to do in caſe of difference in opinion, and what the Magiſtrate, 945, 946. Opinion, our opinion or what we hold, is to be ſhewed, and how, 1095. Nine honeſt ends in ſhewing our opinion. 1095, 1096

Opportunity, a wicked man watcheth it to do evil, 149. Opportunity, a gate for action. 2106

Oppreſſed perſons will be crying and complaining, 1559. Some under oppreſſion do nothing but cry and complain. ibid.

Oppreſſion of the poor, the moſt ſinful act of oppreſſion, 110. The promotion of the wicked, proves the oppreſſion of the righteous, 113. Poor moſt ſubject to oppreſſion, ibid. Oppreſſion falls often upon the innocent under pretence of ſome wickedneſs, 122. Oppreſſion is a crying ſin, and makes the oppreſſed cry, 131. Oppreſſion, a godly man will not uſe his power to oppreſs the meaneſt, 854. Oppreſſion a crying ſin, 1033. Oppreſſion crieth, though the Oppreſſed do not, 1433. Oppreſſion will cauſe a cry, ibid. Cry of the Oppreſſed brings vengeance upon Oppreſſors, 1434. Oppreſſion of three ſorts, 1543. Oppreſſion a common ſin, 1544. Oppreſſion is a crying ſin, 1545. Power is commonly abuſed to oppreſſion, ibid. Yet when poor oppreſs, that worſt, 1546. It is beſt to have recourſe to God when oppreſſed by men, 1549. Oppreſſion cannot bring down the pride of man. 1560

Oppreſſors are mighty, but God is Almighty, 364. They will not ſatisfie thoſe whom they have wrong'd till forced, 588. Oppreſſors mind not God. 1546

Oracles of the Devil doubtful. 1141

Orders of men ſeveral by Gods appointment. 561

Ordinances of worſhip, why called the face of God. 1283

Organ, how expreſſed in the Hebrew. 786

Orion, the nature of that Conſtellation. 1993

Ornament; God hath given us creatures not onely for neceſſity, but for ornament and delight, 444. Ornaments and Jewels may be worn, 2376. Four cautions about wearing them. ibid.

Oſtrich, five ways deſcribed, 2073. Oſtrich, why expreſſed by a word which ſignifies a Feather, 2074. The evenneſs of her feathers the emblem of juſtice, ibid. The Oſtrich reſembleth a Hypocrite in five things, 2074, 2075. That the Oſtrich, a fooliſh Bird, hath ſuch fine feathers, three Inferences from it, 2075, 2076. Her Eggs great and uſeful, yet ſhe careleſs of them, 2077. Some give two reaſons why ſhe leaves her eggs in the duſt, which agree not to the Text, ibid. Her eggs many, 2079. How ſhe is hardned againſt, and hardneth her young ones, ibid. The Oſtrich, how ſaid to be without fear, though a very fearful creature, 2082. Oſtrich hath little brain, and is very deaf, 2084. Her ſwiftneſs in running, a Proverb. 2086

Outward diſpenſations alike to all. 66

Owls, their nature deſcribed. 783

P.

PAgan may deny Chriſt, but cannot deny a God. 2246

Pain, the extremity of it, may make the moſt patient man ſpeak uncomely, 745. Pain and ſorrow in the creatures bringing forth young, an effect of ſin. 2034

Palm-tree lives long. 597

Pambus, why he wept ſeeing a Harlot dreſſing her ſelf. 717

Pambo, his confeſſion about keeping the tongue. 2140

Parables, ſpeeches full of wiſdom, ſo called for three reaſons, 296. Parables are Similies, 297. A Parable taken four ways in Scripture. ibid.

Pardon of ſin, the covering of it, 888, 984. Pardoned ſins cannot hurt the ſinner, 1027. Pardon, God pardoneth greateſt ſins, 1181. Free grace extendeth to the pardon of the worſt ſinners, 1294. Pardon of ſin, proper to God, 1478. How man is ſaid to forgive or pardon him that hath wronged or offended him, ibid. The pardoning grace of God is boundleſs, ibid. God pardoneth preſently, and continually, 1479. Pardon takes ſin off from us, ibid. Pardon is free, not clogg'd with hard terms, 1480. God will never deſtroy any whom he hath pardoned, 1482. Pardon of ſin takes away two things, ibid. Pardon of ſin is a precious mercy, ſhewed upon four grounds, ibid. 1483. The conſideration of Gods readineſs to pardon ſin, ſhould make us reſolved not to ſin, 1483. Pardon of great ſins, what may encourage us to aks it, 1708. The greatneſs of Pardoning mercy in God. 1847

Parents, their image as to morals is uſually enſtampt upon their children, 676. Why Parents ſhould carry it reverently before their children. 999

Paſſions of the mind viſible in the eyes, 877. Paſſion, we muſt not anſwer nor reprove with paſſion, but reaſon, 1110. Paſſion, not to be quieted without reaſon. 1713

Patience, to cry out in pain is not inconſiſtent with patience, 780. Patience provoked turns to greater paſſion, 1079. Patience of God towards ſinners, 1301. Patience of God, 1962. Patience and quietneſs in every condition, why. 955, 1956

Peace of Nations, the ſpecial gift of God, 1439. That Peace conſidered two ways, ibid. 1440. If God will give peace to Nations, none can ſtop it, 1441. Three ſorts of men moſt likely to do it, cannot, ibid. Two reaſons why not, ibid. A wonder that the Peace of our Nation is continued; four conſiderations why, 1442, 1443. Peace of particular perſons twofold from God, 1448. Peace perſonal of Believers, how it comes from the Father, Son and Spirit, ibid. The peace of Believers how an inſuperable peace, 1449. Two demonſtrations of it, 1450. Peace of Believers in what ſenſe perfect, ibid. How we are tenants at will for our peace with reſpect to God, 1452. Peace, holding our peace or ſilence, what it may ſignifie, 1307, 1308. A twofold holding of our peace, 1308. In three caſes eſpecially we ſhould hold our peace, ibid. 1309. It is a great point of prudence to know when to hold our peace, 1309. Peace, haſten to make peace with God. 1967

Peace-making is the work of God, 208. Peace ſtands in a fivefold oppoſition, ibid. Where God is moſt eminently, there is moſt peace. 209

Peacock beautiful and proud, 2070. What the Hebrew word ſignifieth, ibid. Proud men like the Peacock, ſhewed in ſix things. 2072

Pearls deſcribed. 440

Pegaſus, what. 2088

Pelagian Error, what. 998

People, how their voyce is the voyce of God, 1017. People troubled, and in a tumult deſcribed. 1392, 1393

Perdition, the wicked are Sons of perdition in a double notion. 901

Perfection of things is the uſe of them, 415. Every creature hath a perfection in it, which man may attain to, ibid. Perfection of natural things not to be found without pains, 416. Perfection, three reaſons why God calls us to it, though we cannot attain it in this life, 1325. Perfection twofold. 1596

Periſhing taken three ways, 571. A bleſſed work to help thoſe who are ready to periſh, 572. They who have been delivered from periſhing, ſhould bleſs their deliverer, 574. Periſhing, what it implies in Scripture, 654. Periſhing twofold. 1368

Perſecution and Perſecuters bounded by God. 256

Perſeverance, the duty and honour of a godly man, 53. Not to perſevere in a good way, the mark of evil men, 143. Perſeverance, a gracious heart perſeveres in doing good, 885. We are to do good often and always, 886, 887. Perſeverance is our beſt or our worſt. 1490

Perſon, the ſtate of every perſon to be conſidered to whom we ſpeak. 232

Perſwaſion, more then a moral perſwaſion in converſion of a ſinner to God, 182. The power of perſwaſion, 74. Perſwaſion, that we have ſinned by the perſwaſion of others, will not excuſe us, 994, 995. Perſwaſion, what it is. 1661

Peſtilence or Plague called death eminently, 373. It is a very ſore judgment. ibid.

Phantaſie, the power of it in ſleep. 1204

Phariſæi Shechemitæ, why ſo called. 1457

Phocas, the prayer of a good man about him, how anſwered. 1467

Phœnix, apprehenſions of the Ancients about her long life. 597

Pillars of Heaven, what, 259

Pit, and deliverance from it, what, 1297

Pity, to have none to pity us in miſery is a great aggravation of it, 399. Pity, ſee Compaſſion. Pity ſhould be ſhewed to the afflicted. 2372

Place, a twofold place of every man decreed, 1911

1921. Good for all to keep their places. ibid. 1933

Planets, and conſtellations of Heaven, ſinful to aſcribe either our good or bad ſucceſs to them. 927

Play, a playing life, the life of a beaſt. 2204

Pleaſing of men ; how we may, how we muſt not pleaſe men. 232, 233

Pleaſure diſtinguiſhed of, in what pleaſures to ſpend our days is a mercy, 1641. How that Promiſe of ſpending their days in pleaſure, is made good to the godly, 1642. Pleaſure, God gives man ſome creatures for pleaſure, 2112. Some diſpleaſe God moſt when they are taking their pleaſure, eſpecially Falconers. 2113

Pledge, taking a pledge when ſinful, ſhewed in two things. 109

Pleaides what, 1990. Their ſweet influence, what. ibid.

Plenty, the greateſt plenty of outward good things is ſometimes the portion of good men, 543. Plenty and ſcarcity are at the diſpoſe of God, 1730. God uſeth natural means as the cauſe either of plenty or ſcarcity. ibid.

Pliny, his complaint of intemperance and luxury. 1964

Plowing before ſowing, both in a natural and ſpiritual ſenſe. 2059 2060

Polytheiſm is Atheiſm. 949

Poor, ſome will oppreſs the poor to enrich themſelves, 109, 110. The ſinfulneſs of taking from the poor, ſhewed in two things, 110. Poor, dangerous to put them off with I know you not, 573. Poor muſt not be helped by injuſtice to the rich, 575. Poor full of wants and deſires, 583. Poor of two ſorts, 652. Wicked poor how contemptible! ibid. Relief given to the poor three ways, 874, 875. It is our duty to relieve the poor, 875. Poor to be relieved with that which is good and wholſom, 830. We ought not onely to help the poor, but to help them ſpeedily, 878. Poor to be invited to our tables rather then the rich, 881, 882. The poor ſhould bleſs their Benefactors, 892. Poor, in what ſenſe Owners of the rich mans land, 1038. Poor men of two ſorts, 3186. Poor men are as much the work of God as the rich, 1387. It is the Lord who makes men poor or rich, 1388. The fall of a poor man oppreſſed makes a loud cry, 1433. What cries of poor men are not heard by God, 1434. 'Tis dangerous medling with Gods poor, ibid. Poor in Spirit how pleaſing to God, 1616. Poor taken two ways in Scripture, ibid. Poor ſhall have right done them by God, 1617 Objections anſwered. ibid. 1618

Pope, his great cheat put upon the World. 1093

Portion, God hath a portion in ſtore for all ſorts of men, 365. Portion of Believers, where laid up. 801

Poverty it ſelf an affliction, and the poor afflicted by others. 1616

Power of God twofold, 24. The greatneſs of the power of God ſhewed in four things, 25, 26. The power of God is no way terrible to a godly man, 26. Power twofold, 183. The rule by which wicked men act is their power, ibid. Power, when evil men are in power, all good men are in danger, 185. Power ſupream proper to God, 203. Three arguments of the power of God, 246, 247. Power, to have power in our hand to do wrong, is a great temptation to do it, 896. It ſhews much grace not to do that evil which we have a power to do, 1015. ibid. Power, men in power caution'd, 1362, 1363. Power of great uſe to do good, and a great temptation to do bad things, 1546. Power of three ſorts, 1689. They who have power are apt to do wrong, 1695. Power of God in commanding and working, how excellent, 1839. Power of God mighty, 2153. How far God ſheweth or putteth forth his power, 2154, 2155. Inferences from it, 2155. The power of man is nothing to the power of God, 2157, Power of man not to be truſted for any good it can do us, nor feared for any hurt it can do us, ibid. 2158. Power of God to be much meditated upon in two caſes, 2158. Power twofold. 2244

Praiſe, God fearful in praiſes, 1833. Praiſe due to God for the work of Creation upon ſeveral accounts, 1896. Liveleſs creatures praiſe God four ways, 1908. Then men ſhould much more, ibid. God ſhould be praiſed at the firſt appearance of any great work, 1913. Praiſe angelical work. ibid.

Prayer is ſtrong work; a threefold ſtrength needful in prayer, 31. God moſt willing to hear the prayers and pleadings of the righteous, 32. God is not changed by our prayers, 73. God will not ſometimes be at all entreated by prayer, 75. Caſe anſwered how we can pray in faith, ſeeing God is not altered, from any thing he intended, by prayer, 76. Prayer, the hearing of it, what, 341. The worſt of men will call on God in times of trouble, 343. They will pray hard in trouble, ibid. Wicked men have no delight in prayer, 344. A godly man prayeth when out of trouble, as well as when in it, ibid. Whoſe and what prayer God hath promiſed to hear, ſhewed in four particulars, 345, 346. Not to have prayer heard in trouble, is worſe then all troubles, 347. Unleſs we pray always, we are never heard, 352. It is our duty to pray always, ibid. Eight reaſons why we muſt pray always, 352, 353. Though a godly man gets no anſwer, yet he continueth in prayer, 354. In all that we ask in prayer, we muſt aim at the doing of the will of God, 482. Prayer a pouring out of the Soul, 721. Two reaſons why it is ſo, 722. There is no eſtate ſo low, but a godly man may have acceſs to and freedom with God in prayer, 736. Affliction provokes the Soul to pray with utmoſt fervency, ibid. The power of fervent prayer; winged prayers have winged anſwers, 737. How God doth not hear prayer ſometimes, and how that may ſtand with his promiſe of hearing prayer, 738. When prayer in affliction is not heard, it afflicts much, ibid. Why the prayer of a godly man is not always heard preſently, 738, 739. How we may know that we are heard in prayer, ſhewed in four things, 739. It is the priviledge of a godly man to be heard in prayer, 740. Believers will pray perſeveringly, 741. Affliction encreaſing upon prayer is a ſtrange temptation, 745, 746. Prayer cannot keep them alive whom God hath appointed to death, 760. Why the ſame word ſignifies to pray, to judge, and to appeaſe, 662. Prayer, good things muſt be asked of God, 1087. Endeavour muſt be joyned with prayer, 1088. There are but two reſtrictions upon the grant of whatſoever we pray for, 1134, 113 . Prayer, how a battel fought in Heaven, 1150. Strong prayer, 1278. Sickneſs is a ſpecial ſeaſon for prayer, 1279. God onely the object of prayer, ibid. We muſt ask mercy if we would have it, 1280. The Lord is ready to hear and give when we pray, ibid. Till the perſon is accepted, his prayer is not, 1282. Length of prayer not diſproved by Chriſt, if other things be right, 455. We muſt pray for the removing of our affliction, while we bear it cheerfully, 1472. Prayers of the proud and impenitent are not heard, 1560, 1561. The prayers of vain perſons are vain things, 1563. What prayers are vain, ſhewed in ſeveral particulars, ibid. 1564. How much God values holy prayers, ſhewed three ways, 1564. Holy prayer not always preſently anſwered, but never diſregarded, ibid. A dreadful judgment not to have prayer regarded, 1565. Not to pray in time of affliction, very ſinful, ſhewed in three things, 1654. Prayers of the wicked not eſteemed by God, 1675. Prayer obtains Rain, 00 . We may pray for all that God hath promiſed, 2154, 215 . God gives beyond our prayers, ibid. The power of God ſhould encourage us in prayer, 2156. Senſe of wants put us upon prayer, 2256. Prayer prevails much with God, not onely for our ſelves, but for others, 2332. Prayers of others may prevail with God for us, when our own cannot, 2333. Prayers of good men for us, a great mercy, ibid. How prayer for another doth not profit, unleſs he be good, 2334. Prayers of good men, though over-bold, yet graciouſly anſwered, 1870. Neceſſity puts meer nature upon prayer, 2026. If we would have, we muſt ask of, and pray to God, ibid. Prayer, what it is, 2356. A godly man ready to pray for others, and prays ſometimes more for others then for himſelf, 2357. Uneven walking hinder prayer in a twofold reſpect, ibid. Prayer for unkind friends, yea, for enemies, a duty, and very pleaſing to God, 2358, 2359. What and whoſe prayer pleaſing to God, 2360. Seven things in prayer make it ſo pleaſing to God. ibid. 2361.

Precious things mingled with the vile, 424. Wiſe mans eye diſtinguiſheth them. ibid.

Preparation for all things made by God from everlaſting, how to be underſtood, 478. Preparation to duty needful, eſpecially to great duties. 1885, 2147

Preſence of God moſt deſired by the godly, 13, 14. God can quickly make his preſence terrible and grievous to us, 85. Preſence of the Lord, or the Lords being with us, how taken in Scripture, 537. Preſence of the Lord twofold, ibid.. The ſpecial ways of Gods preſence or being with his people, 538. That queſtion anſwered in ſix particulars, why ſeeing God is preſent with his people, they ſuffer ſo much. 539

Preſervation, ſeveral conſiderations and diſtinctions about the works of God in preſerving us, 523, 524. Mans whole preſervation is of God, 524. The way and manner of our ſpiritual preſervation, ibid. Spiritual preſervation a ſpecial priviledge by Chriſt, 525. They are ſafe whom God preſerves, ibid. Preſervation, God hath given all creatures means to preſerve themſelves. 2099

Preſumptions of evil men deſcribed, 1569, 1570. Preſumption to do or ſpeak amiſs, not fearing God, ſhould know it; 1823. Other preſumptions of evil men. 157

Preſumptuous ſinner, 501. Preſumptuous ſin, what. 1532

Price of any thing riſeth four ways. 43, 432

Pride ſeen in the eye, 191. Pride cauſeth contention, 268. Pride cauſeth man to cover his ſin, 988, 989. Pride, man naturally proud, 1102. God hideth pride from man two ways, 121 . Pride, why put for all ſin, ibid. Man very prone to pride, 1218. Pride

ſhews

ſhews it ſelf three ways, ibid. Eleven things named of which men are proud, 1218, 1219. Five conceits as ſo many roots of pride diſcovered, 1221. Pride is a vile and odious ſin, ſhewed upon ſix conſiderations, 1221, 1222. Great, wiſe and rich men moſt ſubject to pride, 1223. Pride the greateſt ſin for four reaſons, ibid. God by various means gives check to pride, 1224. Four pride-ſubduing conſiderations, 1224, 1225. Seven means to cure man of pride, 1225, &c. Pride; oppreſſion cannot bring down the proud heart of man, 1560. Pride a bad mother of three bad children, 1602, Pride and high-mindedneſs the ſame, 1754. Pride; fine feathers make proud birds, and men too, 2072. See Peacock. Much pride in the heart of man, 2131. Pride a very provoking ſin, ſhewed four ways, 2173, What any one is proud of, may be called his pride, 2250. There is a kind of pride in Brutes, 2251. Great attainments and enjoyments occaſion pride. ibid.

Princes what they ought to be, 1383. Princes and people, their ſins produce mutual ill effects towards one another. 1467

Prometheus his heart fed upon by an Eagle, what it ſignified. 762

Promiſes, a wicked man hath not one of them to friend, 342. Promiſes about temporal good things are a ground of hope for them, 594. How ſuch promiſes are to be taken, ibid. Promiſes, the ground both of faith and hope, 803. Abſolute promiſes not made to, but concerning wicked and unregenerate perſons, ibid. Promiſes of God always performed, 1410. Promiſes, ſome make them not minding to perform them, 1845. Four things aſcribed to God in Scripture, which aſſure us he will perform his promiſes, ibid. Promiſes made by God ſhall ſurely be performed, 2350. Promiſes of two ſorts. ibid.

Promotion comes uſually in a ſecret way. 1832

Pronouns, how the ſweetneſs of the Goſpel lieth in them, 1500. Pronouns, mine, thine, have a great emphaſis. 1592

Property, our property to any thing makes us love it the more. 1500

Prophaning the Name of God, what. 1532

Prophecy ſignified by the hand of God. 358

Propitiatory or Mercy-ſeat, what it ſignified, 984

Proprietor, God is ſo of all things in the world, by a fourfold title, 2238. Thirteen Inferences from it. ibib. 2239

Propriety in lands and goods given by God, 103. Objections againſt it anſwered. ibid.

Proſperity and honour a great tryal or temptation, 46. Many have declined in goodneſs by outward proſperity, 56. Proſperity, a godly man will own God as the Author of it, 529. Proſperity, why called a riding upon the wind, 747. Proſperity, what, 1640. Promiſes of outward proſperity, moſt in the Old Teſtament, 1642. Outward proſperity given many Godly, 1665. Proſperity of bad men ſhould not offend good men 2075, 2076

Protection, when the Lord withdraweth it from us, every evil is ready to invade and prevail over us, 706. Protection from ſin the beſt protection, 1162. Protection of God towards man, twofold. 1614

Proud men always in danger of falling, 268. Proud men ſhall be ſmitten, 270. Proud men far from God, 433. Proud men ſcornful and contentious. 1337. Proud men, how Gods eye upon them, 2169. God caſts down the proud, 2170. God can eaſily do it, 2171. Inferences from it, ibid. Who may be called proud, 2171, 2172. Proud ones, why not to be feared nor envied, 2172. What proud ones do, 2173. Proud and wicked the ſame, 2174. The true knowledge of God and of our ſelves, will keep down pride. 2304

Providence of God hath many ſecrets, 359. 409. It extends to the leaſt things, 457. Providence of God, what it doth in the world, 458. Two Inferences from it, ibid. The leaſt as alſo the moſt boiſtrous things are under the hand of providence, 472. Providence of God over man is perfect and diſtinct, 473. Providences work out promiſes, 801. Providence a continued creation, 1143. Not to conſider the works of providence, is the mark of an ungodly man, 1430. Providences when they ſeem to croſs promiſes and prophecies, yet truſt, 1573. Providence of God governs all, 1894. We ſhould reſt in his diſpoſal of things, ibid. Providences of God cannot be altered by man, 1994. Providence extended to meaneſt creatures, 2024. Providence preſerves that which is left in danger, 2078. Providences ſhall at laſt appear ſpotleſs, 2131, 2132. Providential works of God beautiful and orderly. 1904

Providential care of God towards his people is perpetual, 1621. Some works of providence very plain; 1700. The providence of God reacheth to all places, 1751. The Government of the world is as much of God as the creation of it, 1795. Heathens dark about providence, aſcribed all to Fortune and ſecond Cauſes, ibid. Comfort to the godly that all things are under the providence of God. 1796

Provocation, not to do that evil to which we are provoked, a ſign of much grace, 976. Provocation doth not excuſe, yet ſomewhat abate a ſin committed. 1165

Puniſhment, ſome whoſe ſins are very great, are puniſhed very little in this life, 134. Puniſhment of loſs a great miſery, as well as that of ſence, 169. Eternal puniſhment why juſt for ſin committed in time, 172. Puniſhments unuſual and ſtrange, fall upon ſome ſinners, 806. Sins puniſhed by ſin have the greateſt puniſhment, 850. The nature of ſin ſeen in the puniſhment, 859. Puniſhment of ſin in this life is not equal to ſin, 1294. Humbled ſinners confeſs their greateſt puniſhments leſs then their ſin, 1295. The juſtice of God in his puniſhments ſhewed ſeven ways, 1379. Wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed, 1403. No man ever puniſhed by God beyond deſert. 1410, 1411

Purgatory, what. 1946

Purpoſes, the good purpoſes of good men are for ever, 313. The purpoſes of a godly man againſt doing evil are peremptory, 321. Purpoſes of evil, man is very forward to them, 1214. Until God withdraw him, he will go on in them, ibid. Five ways by which God withdraweth men from evil purpoſes, 1215. It is a great mercy to be hindred in evil purpoſes. 1216

Pythagoreans opinion of Muſick made by the motions of the Heavens. 2010

Q.

QUeen of Heaven, who meant in Scripture. 933

Queſtion, it is good to put queſtions to our own Souls, 797. Queſtions how put in Scripture, 215. Queſtions which are unprofitable, 1081. Queſtion, one queſtion put more then twenty times to Job, and why, 1794. Queſtions which in Scripture ſignifie rebuke and contempt, 1877, 1878. Theſe queſtions, What is man? and, Who art thou? what they import in Scripture. 1881

Quietneſs of the dead and living, what, 1435 Quietneſs oppoſed to War: vide Peace, 1440. Quietneſs of the Air, much more of mens Hearts, is of God, 1809. Chriſt can make the heart quiet in the midſt of all outward unquietneſs. ibid.

R.

RAin, natural rain is under a divine Law or Decree in a fourfold reſpect, 468. Much more in ſpiritual rain, 469. Latter rain why ſo much deſired, 614. Good counſel and inſtruction are to the mind of man, as rain to the earth, in two reſpects, 615. Rain, five things ſpoken of it, 1715. Rain comes firſt from the earth, 1717. The cauſes of rain, ibid. God can withhold the rain when he pleaſeth, ibid. Four Inferences from it, ibid. 1718. That the water falls from heaven in drops of rain, is of God, 1719. God hath ſtore of rain in his treaſury, 1721. Rain, a compariſon between that and the word of God, 1722. Rain ſmall and great, 1760. Great rain of Gods ſtrength, what, ibid. In what quantity ſoever the rain falls, it is by the ſpecial appointment of God, 1762. For what purpoſe rain is ſent, 1786. Rain undeſerved, 'tis of free mercy that we have rain, ibid. Rain ordered and diſtributed by God, 1972. Rain ſent to places uninhabited, 1975. and why, ibid. God hath rain enough in ſtore for all places, 1978. Who the father of rain? Four reaſons why God propounded that queſtion to Job, 1980. God alone is the father of the rain, ibid. 1981. Four Inferences from it, 1981, 1982. Rain got by prayer, 2002. God onely ſtayeth the clouds from raining, 2010. He knows when the earth hath had rain enough, 2001

Rain-bow, the ſignification of it, 1799, 1800. The form and cauſe of it, 1799. Why expreſſed in the Greek by a word that ſignifieth to ſpeak or ſhew forth, 1799. Whether the Rain-bow were before the Flood, ibid. The fitneſs of the Rain-bow to aſſure mercy, ſhewed in ſeven particulars, 1800, 1801.

Ranſom, who and what our ranſom is, 1270, 1271. The deliverance of ſinners by a ranſom, is the invention of God, 1271. God is to be highly honoured for this invention, 1272 That we are ranſomed ſhould mind us of five things, 1274. Ranſom, what it is, ſeveral ſorts of it: Nothing but the blood of Chriſt can ranſom ſinners, nor will that deliver ſome ſinners. 1673

Rare, thoſe things are moſt valued by men which are moſt rare. 412

Ravens, why the killing of them near Cities is prohibited, 2020. The ſignification of Hebrew and Greek words, 2021. The Raven provided for by God, ibid. How their young ones cry to God, ſhewed three ways, 2023. Whence it is that old Ravens neglect to feed their young ones. 2023

Reaſon, we ought to hear reaſon whoſoever ſpeaks it, 1095. Reaſon, mans natural reaſon is the gift of God. 2006

Rebellion, what it is, or what they do who rebel, 5. How there may be rebellion againſt God in complaining under affliction, 7. Rebellion againſt light, the higheſt wickedneſs, 136. Rebellion, when any ſin becomes a rebellion, 986. Rebellion, when a ſin may be called rebellion. 1504, 1505
Reconciliation to thoſe whom we have wronged, neceſſary, 2321. What we muſt do for our reconciliation to God and man. 2348
Redemption, the benefit of it ſet forth two ways. 1303
Reins, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 910
Rejoycing at the calamity of the wicked, how it is lawful, 398. Rejoycing at the fall of an enemy, how we may, 957. Conſiderations to keep down undue rejoycing at the hurt of an enemy, 958. Rejoycing at the good of others, very good, 1914. We are apt to rejoyce in that wherein we excel, 2099. We ſhould rejoyce in nothing but God. ibid.
Relations cannot change God, 76, 77. Relations, when neereſt natural relations leave us, God will not, 2026. Not to take care of relations, how unnatural. 2081
Remember, taken two ways. 1696
Remembred, ſome are onely upon the account of judgments upon them, 176. Not to be remembred, as it is a curſe, taken two ways, ibid. Not to be remembred, in what ſence, it is the portion of the wicked. 177
Repentance properly taken, what it is; how repentance may be ſaid to have been in God, 70. Repentance, a truly penitent perſon is reſolute againſt ſin, 1489. Continuance in any known ſin, is inconſiſtent with true repentance, ibid. Repentance; ſee Sin: bad men think of repentance in eminent dangers, 2264. 'Tis a duty to repent in times of danger, 2265. Repentance or repenting, why expreſſed in the Hebrew by a word ſignifying both grief and joy, 2302. Repentance hath a twofold change in it, ibid. Repenting in duſt and aſhes, what it implyeth, ibid. True repentance is joyned with ſelf-abhorrence, 2304. Five Inferences from it, 2306. What repentance is, opened and deſcribed in four things, 2307. New ſins call for new repentings, 2309. Open ſins muſt have open repentance, 2310. True repentance ends in joy three ways, 2312. Repentance in God, what. 2352, 2353
Rephaim, what it ſignifies. 237
Reports four advices given to thoſe who are under ill reports. 1026, 1027
Reproach, three things in the perſon reproaching encreaſe the ſence of our reproach. 649
Reproof two fold, 260. Reproof, a godly man will take a reproof well from the meaneſt man, 1015. Reproof, there muſt be proof before there can be reproof, 1099. Negative reproofs more eaſie then Affirmative, 1177. Reproof to be tempered with meekneſs, ibid. Reproofs ſhould be given with plainneſs, 1178. Reproof to be taken with humble ſilence, 1343. A good man will take reproof with patience, 1499. Reproving implyeth two things, 2133. There are two ſorts of reproving commendable, and a duty, ibid. Reproof not to be deferred. 2314
Reſolution, they who are reſolved to do any evil, are guilty of it, though they do it not. 846
Reſurrection from affliction eaſie with God, 736. Reſurrection why called the day of Redemption, 761. Reſurrection, ſhadows of it. 1277, 1278
Retaliation, God deals with men as they have done, or do to others, 395, 400. Retaliation, God doth often puniſh ſin that way. 836
Revenge, the deſire of it very ſtrong in man by nature, 955. To rejoyce at the hurt of an enemy, is an act of revenge, ibid. 956. Revenge how hungry and unſatiable, 974. Revenge is cruel, 978. Malice reſtleſs till it hath gotten utmoſt revenge, ibid. Revenge, the higheſt acts of revenge from God are but the awards of juſtice. 1105
Reverence is the band of obedience between man and man, 688. Reverence due to Magiſtrates. 689
Reward, good works are a reward, nor can they loſe a reward, 892. Rewards both good and evil, ſuch as men are, and according to what they do, 1287. What God renders to man according to his work, is called a reward, in a four fold reſpect, 1349. Reward and puniſhment, without them Religion would vaniſh, 1521. Reward of wrath. 2364
Rewarder, God is a bountiful Rewarder of his ſervants, 2363. He rewards both for doing and ſuffering, 2363. Inferences from it. 2364
Rewarding, if the Lord ſhould not reward thoſe that ſerve him, he were unrighteous, 1347. Righteouſneſs ſhall not be unrewarded. 1403
Rhinoceros, What kind of beaſt, 2048. Two things noted of him. ibid.
Rhodians, how they honoured the Sun, and why. 1931
Rich and poor, how they meet together. 872 Rich and poor men of two ſorts, 1386. What rich men are not, what are regarded by God more then the poor, ibid. 1387. How men make themſelves, and how God makes them rich. 1388
Riches make men reſtleſs, yet ſome get reſt in riches, 335. Riches avail not in the approaches of death, 338. The work of a worldly man is to gather riches, 376. We are very willing to labour after them, 412. To venture through all dangers for them, 417. The extream deſire that is in man after riches, 422. Four grounds of mans inſatiable deſire after riches, 426. A lamentation to ſee men ſo laborious for worldly riches, and ſo ſlight about heavenly, 427. Riches, they that make haſt to be rich run into ſin, 819. Man is apt to truſt in riches, 913. To be proud of riches, ibid. Three demonſtrations, that riches are apt to work up the heart of man in pride and confidence, 914. Three advices to thoſe who have riches, 915. Confidence in riches a very vanity, ibid. That it is ſo, ſhewed in five things, 915, 916. Riches many ways hurt and endanger the Soul, 916, 917. That riches are vain and dangerous, may be ſome comfort to the poor, 917. Riches, God regardeth not men for their riches or any outward greatneſs, 1674, 1675. Riches, why ſaid to make themſelves wings like an Eagle. 2115
Riding upon the wind and clouds and high places of the earth, what it ſignifies, 746, 747
Right, what it is, 1292. What it is to pervert right, ibid. Right, how God gives it the poor. 1617
Righteous, there are three ſorts of righteous perſons, 1059, 1960. How a man in a good ſence may be righteous in his own eyes, 1060. How being righteous in our own eyes, is hateful both to God and good men, 1062. A juſtified perſon is righteous, 1288. Righteous, man righteous three ways, 1534. A twofold notion of the righteous, 1524. The righteous always under Gods eye, 1619, 1620. Righteous highly eſteemed and exalted by God. 1625
Righteouſneſs twofold, 323. What that righteouſneſs is which we ſhould hold faſt, 323, 324. A godly man maintains his righteouſneſs ſtrongly, 325. Several ſorts of righteouſneſs explained, 575. To be cloathed with righteouſneſs or juſtice, implyeth three things, 576. How righteouſneſs is diſtinguiſhed from judgment, 577. Righteouſneſs how it delivereth from death, 1290. Righteouſneſs, twofold, 1287. Why the ſame word in the Hebrew is uſed to ſignifie Alms and righteouſneſs, ibid. Righteouſneſs how it cannot be loſt, 1288. ſeveral ſorts of righteouſneſs, 1325. Moſt dangerous to be proud of or truſt to our own righteouſneſs, 1326. Righteouſneſs eſſential to God, 1519. Righteouſneſs of two ſorts, 1518. The righteouſneſs or righteous actings of men contribute nothing to God, 1535. Three grounds of it, 1536, &c. How and whom righteouſneſs doth profit, 1541. Cautions about it, ibid. Righteouſneſs when and how aſcribed to God, 1590. Righteouſneſs, no ſtanding before God in our own righteouſneſs, 2232. How our righteouſneſs is to be abhorred, 2305. Why a repenting perſon abhors it, 2306
Right-hand, turning out of the ways of God as dangerous as left-hand turning. 54
Rods of two ſorts. 1783
Romans, their ſeverity againſt thoſe who removed Land-marks, 104. Romans, how they puniſhed ſuch as made abuſive ſongs. 679
Rome, whence ſo called. 191
Root of a thing, what it notes in Scripture. 599
Ruby deſcribed. 441
Rulers, their actions very exemplary. 560
Running with God, and in the ways of his commandments, what it implyeth. 1341

S.

Sacrifice muſt be offered by a Prieſt, 2327. Sacrifices for ſin were appointed by God, not deviſed by man, 2329. Every ſin muſt have a ſacrifice, 2329. Why the ſacrifice was called ſin, ibid. Why ſeven bullocks, &c. ſometime commanded for ſacrifice. 2330
Safety is a great outward mercy, 187. even the ſafety of a wicked man is of the Lord, ibid. Outward ſafety is the foundation of a wicked mans peace, ibid. Safety to be ſought on high. 2087. Nature teacheth us to provide for it. 2119
Salt-land is a barren land, 663. Salt-land, the ſame with barren land in Scripture. 2041
Salvation twofold, 718. How our ſpiritual ſalvation may be ſaid to paſs away in this life, ib. 719. Salvation neither corporal nor ſpiritual by man, 2180. God can ſave alone, ib. Three Inferences from it, 2181. To ſave by a ſelf-power the ſole prerogative of God, 2181. To imagine that we can ſave our ſelves, how ſinful, ſhewed in four things. ibid. 2182.
Saints, difference among them. 444
Sand, to multiply as the ſand notes the greateſt multiplication. 597
Saphire-ſtone, the excellency of it deſcribed. 421
Satan, what it ſignifieth; the Devil why ſo called. 743
Satiſfaction the beſt thing, 503. Satiſfaction, not to have ſo much as ſatiſfaction, is as bad as to have nothing, 371. To have much and not to be ſatisfied, is worſe then to have ſo little that it cannot ſatisfie, ibid. Satisfaction, what it is. 1976

Saxons their law for the puniſhment of Adultery, 855. The Idolatry of the old Pagan Saxons. 933

Saying, often notes reſolving in Scripture. 591

Scandal, a godly man is careful to clear himſelf from ſcandalous ſuſpicions and aſperſions. 1030

Scholars great, not always the wiſeſt men. 1606

Scorners are the worſt ſort of men. 1337

Scorning two ways taken. 1336

Scourge, God can make any creature a ſcourge to man. 1729

Scripture parting it ſelf into four heads, 231. Scripture-language, how pure, it wraps up unclean things in clean expreſſions, 850 Scriptures have dark places in them, yet not dark. 1882

Sea, the mighty power of God in bounding it, 255. Inferences from it, 256. Sea, called proud: God can calm the Sea in its greateſt rage and pride, 268. This a comfort in our ſtorms at Land, ibid. Two other Inferences of comfort from it, 269. Sea, a twofold reſtraint of it, 1915. Two ſorts of Sea-doors, 1917. What the womb is out of which the ſea brake, ibid. Sea, how it reſembles God in four things, 1918. the world, in three things, 1919. the heart of man in three things, ibid. God rules the ſea as eaſie as a Nurſe the Child, 1920. the Lord hath made a place for the ſea, 1921. Doors and bars of the Sea, what, ibid. the ſea left to it ſelf would overflow all, 1922. God onely keeps the ſea in compaſs, 1923. Inferences from it, 1924 A fivefold metaphorical ſea to which the Lord puts bounds, 1925. the ſea exceeding deep, 1943. the ſea an emblem of obſcure and hidden things, 1944. three wonders in the fiſh of the ſea. 2216

Sealing in Scripture hath a threefold ſignification, 1763, 1764. Sealing up of the hand, what it ſignifieth. 1764

Seals, a threefold uſe of ſealing, 1211. Sealing of inſtruction, what it is. 1211, 1212

Search made upon three grounds. 480

Seaſons, how doing of evil hath its ſeaſon as well as doing of good, 155. wicked men very careful to hit thoſe ſeaſons, ibid. Seaſon to be obſerved for ſpeaking, 1113. ſuch ſpeak to moſt advantage, ibid. Seaſon, to hit a right ſeaſon of ſpeaking, very advantageous, 1076. Seaſon, the danger of neglecting it, 1211. Seaſon, the Lord appears in the fitteſt ſeaſon, 1869. We ſhould do all in ſeaſon. 1996. 2314

Secrets, ſeveral ſecrets of the Lord with them that fear him, 99. Secrets, God hath ſome reſerved to himſelf alone, 430. 433. three ſorts of Divine ſecrets, 435. Men very deſirous to know ſecret things, 451. three reaſons why God is pleaſed to keep many things ſecret from man, 452. Two ſorts of Gods ſecrets, 534. Saints are acquainted with the ſecrets of God, 535. Secret bleſſing, and ſecret curſe, ibid. Secrets, nothing a ſecret to God, 1944. Secrets, ſome, man muſt not ſearch into. 1948

Secrecy, the moſt ſecret acts are obvious to God. 938

Security, carnal men are always ſurprized by the judgments of God, though warned of them, 389. Security of the latter days foretold, 777. Security of ſinners at all times. 960

Seed taken two ways. 2064, 2065

Seeing applyed to the underſtanding, 361. to ſee, more then bare looking. 424

Self-love might move us to do good, and to avoid evil, 804. what ſelf-love is good, ibid. Self-love, a bad Glaſs for any man to ſee himſelf in. 1221

Self-ſufficiency of God, 2235. comfort and inſtruction flowing from it. ibid.

Senators, who, and why ſo called, 656. 1077

Sences may quickly be over-acted upon the creature. 935

Senſuality eſtrangeth the heart from God. 756

September, how expreſſed in the Hebrew, and why. 1748

Serpent, crooked ſerpent, who, or what, 274

Servants, what contendings of theirs with their Maſters to be permitted, 863. Differences may ariſe between maſters and ſervants in well-ordered families, ibid. Servants muſt not be ſlighted, ibid. 864. what the condition of ſervants was in ancient times, 864. three conſiderations under which maſters and ſervants are all one, 869, 870. God is as much the Maker of the meaneſt ſervant as of the greateſt lord, 871. Servants often prove tempters, 975, 971. How far ſervants are bound to obey their maſters, 995, 996. Servant, what it ſignifies, every believer a ſervant, 1639. Servant, honourable to be Gods ſervant, 2323. profitable and eaſie to be ſo, ibid. 2324. Six things ſhewing who are Gods ſervants. 2324

Service of God, to account it unprofitable, how ſinful, 1342. Service and Worſhip often the ſame in Scripture, 1638. God expects our ſervice, and then eſpecially when we ſuffer under his hand, ibid. To ſerve God, what, or the ſervice of God deſcribed, ibid. 1639. to ſerve God, our freedom, 1639. Service of God pleaſant and eaſie in a twofold reſpect, 1639. Service of God not lean but profitable, ibid. 1640. Service ſhould be done willingly both to God and man, 2052. Service ſhould be rewarded. 2055

Seven, a number of perfection. 2326

Shadow, what properly it is, and what it ſignifieth in Scripture, 160. Shadow of death, why precious things are ſaid to be there, 417. Shadow of death, what it ſignifieth in Scripture. 1405

Shekel, why ſo called. 460. 820

Shewbread, why ſo called. 1286

Sick perſons ſhould be wiſely minded of death, 1246. they ſhould pray and deſire prayers, 1279. A ſick man being recovered ſhould report the goodneſs of God to him. 1291

Sickneſs, when we are very ſick, 'tis good to look upon our ſelves as dying, 751. Sickneſs, three expreſſions gradually ſetting it forth, 1233. Sickneſs comes not by chance, nor onely from natural cauſes, 1236. Sickneſs brings down the ſtrongeſt men, ibid. Several ends for which God ſends ſickneſs, 1237, 1238. In ſickneſs all creature-comforts are vain and taſtleſs to us, 1239. Sickneſs brings great decay upon the body, 1241, 1242. Sickneſs, in what ſenſe called a ſpending time, 1244. Sickneſs makes a wonderful change in man, 1245. Sickneſs neer the Grave: three Inferences from it, 1246, 1247. Other cautions from the nature of ſickneſs. 1249, 1250

Sight or knowledge of God, four Aſſertions about it, 458. Sight of God, five properties of it, 476. Sight, twofold, 1484. Sight of God twofold, immediate, mediate, and that by a threefold means, 1567. the ſight of God, or his diſcovery of himſelf to us very ſweet to the Soul, 1568. Sight ſpiritual of Divine truths, notes three things, 2308. Sight of any thing which we much deſire pleaſeth us much, 2211. Sight of the eye a clearer evidence then hearing. 2297

Signs of changes in the weather, and other natural things, 1736. Inferences from it as to other things, ibid. Signs why given by God. 1802

Silence comely in women, eſpecially in widows, 181. Silence ſometimes a duty, 557. A twofold ſilence, 607. Silence commendable upon ſeven grounds, 608. Such ſilence ſtands in a ſixfold oppoſition, ibid. 609. Silence, or holding our peace: Vide Peace. Silence twofold. 2262

Silver hath its Vein, 404. It hath as it were roots and branches, ibid. Silver is expreſſed in the Hebrew by a word which ſignifieth Deſire, and why, ibid. We ſhould moderate our deſires after ſilver, 405. Silver hath made more conqueſts then Iron, ibid. Silver is bright, but it draws black lines upon the body, and blacker upon the mind. 413

Sin; a ſin is the greater by how much the matter about which it is committed is the leſs, 111. Some will ſin though they get nothing by it, 144. A wicked man ſins with reſolution, 154. Sin befools the ſinner, 161. Speedineſs of wicked men to ſin, 165. Evil men would ſin always, 171. Sin hath degraded man, 224. Sin, a godly man is utterly reſolved againſt it, 321. Sin bereaves us of our ſafety, 342. How we are to depart from the evil of ſin, ſhewed in five particulars, 504, 505. Departure from the evil of ſin, what it is, 506. The greatneſs of the evil of ſin demonſtrated many ways, 507, &c. Sin is the greateſt puniſhment, 509. What ſin doth both to God and our ſelves, 510. Why, though ſin be ſo evil, we are ſo hardly diſſwaded from it, 511. When we may be ſaid to have departed from the evil of ſin, 512. that to depart from ſin is our underſtanding, 513. ſeveral demonſtrations of it, ibid. Three pleas of ſin why we ſhould not leave it, 513, 514. Sin makes men unfit for the meaneſt ſervices, 651. Sin drives men into a wilderneſs, 652. Sin makes men unfit for the company of men, 667. Coverings of ſin vain, 672. Effects of ſin ſad even in this life, ibid. Sin is very deceitful, 673. Sin hath more credit with many then God hath, ibid. Sin makes men viler then the vileſt things, 677. Sin hath brought in death, 753. the nature of men exceedingly prone and bent to ſin, 793. the beſt men ſubject to be tempted to the worſt ſins, 794. A gracious heart engageth himſelf to the utmoſt againſt ſin, ibid. Three degrees of ſin before acted outwardly, 789. that we may avoid ſin, there are ſeven things to be done, and four things to be avoided, 789, 790. Notorious ſinners make ſin their buſineſs, 809. Sin is vain in three reſpects, 815. Sin deſtroyeth two ways, ibid. Man naturally makes haſt to ſin, 819. Sin is a turning out of the way, 827. Three ſteps of ſin, 829. Sin conſidered two ways, 831. Sin is a blot; three things in ſin, 833. There are degrees of ſin, 851. Deliberate ſins the worſt, ibid. Two things much abate, though not totally excuſe ſin, 852. the more ſinful any ſin is, the more certain are the woful effects of it, 859.

859. the effects of ſin may be looked to as well as the nature of it, to keep us from it, 860. Sin conſumeth all, ibid. It ſhews great ſtrength of Grace, not to do a ſinful evil when we have power to do it, 896. Secret ſins obvious and odious to God, 938. Secret ſins ſhall not go unpuniſhed, ibid. Moſt men ſuffer themſelves to ſin, when they might avoid it, 963. the oppoſition which moſt make againſt ſin, is not to conqueſt; two reaſons of it, 966. Sin well covered four ways, 983, 984. Man loves to cover his ſin, 988. two reaſons opened, ſhewing why man loves to hide his ſin, ibid. 989. Man finds many ways to cover ſin, 989. Six coverings of ſin opened, 990, 991, &c. How ſome caſt their ſin upon God himſelf, 1000. Many ways ſhewed how this is done, ibid. 1001, &c. To cover ſin, is ſin, 1004. Sin encreaſeth two ways by concealment, ibid. Every man hath ſome ſpecial ſin, 1008. A godly man cannot have a beloved ſin, 1009. Difference between a ſpecial and a beloved ſin opened, ibid. Sin lived in, or loved, will prove an inſupportable burden, 1024. Senceleſs creatures will bear witneſs againſt ſin, 1031. Four ſorts of crying ſins, 1031, 1032. Sin how it changeth the natural courſe of things, 1040. Sin, to ſay we have no ſin, how extreamly ſinful it is, ſhewed in four things, 1163. that ſhewed further, 1326. Sin, three things in it, 1074. How man is ſinned againſt; God onely ſinned againſt properly, 1144. All ſin reducible to three heads, 1161. Sin a defection from God, ibid. Sin is a defilement, ibid. Sin a hurtful thing three ways, 1162. Every ſtep in ſin, is a ſtep to miſery, 1231. What ſin is, 1292, 1296. Sin pretends to bring in profit to the ſinner, 1295. No good can be gotten by ſin, ibid. Sin is exceeding dangerous and deſtructive, 1296. Sinners ſhall confeſs at laſt, there is no profit in ſin, ibid. The heart ſtrongly ſet to ſin, 1305. the more eaſily any man ſinneth, the greater is his ſin, 1337. Sins of others how, they may become ours, 1350. Sin unpardoned, a great burden, yet by ſome unfelt, 1479, 1480. we have many unknown ſins, 1485. A godly man deſires God would ſhew him his ſins, 1488. A godly man may live free from groſs ſins, 1489. Sin conſidered three ways, 1490. A godly man may commit ſin after ſin, but he doth not add ſin to ſin, ibid. the addition of ſin to ſin, a great and moſt dangerous ſin, 1491. to ſin rebelliouſly, what, 1504. when a ſin may be called rebellion, ſhewed in four things, ibid. 1505. 'tis the burden of a godly man to ſin, and tis his care not to ſin, ibid. Sin, how ſinful it is to ſay, there is no profit in leaving ſin, 1522. the benefit or profit of leaving ſin 1523. God receives no hurt or damage by the ſin of man, how many or how great ſoever his ſins are, 1530. Yet ſinners ſhall be dealt with as if they had hurt him, and why, ibid. How the ſins both of good and evil men turn to the Glory of God, ibid. Sin conſidered in a threefold oppoſition, 1531. Sin doth ſix things to God, yet cleared how no damage to him, ibid. 1532. the leaſt ſin hurtful, 1539. Sin hurts the whole Creation, but chiefly man, ibid. the ſad effects of ſin, as well as the filthy nature of it, ſhould move us to avoid it, ibid. Sin hurts others, but thoſe moſt who commit it, ibid. Sin is vocal, 1562. God doth not ſeverely mark the ſins of his people, 1475. Sin mans work, 1631. God doth not ſuffer ſin to grow potent in his people, 1632. there is an exceſſiveneſs in ſome ſins, ibid. In what ſenſe ſin may reign in a righteous man, 1633. Sin may be ſeen, and not the exceedingneſs of it, ibid. the exceedingneſs of ſin ſhewed in three things, ibid. 1634. Sin a vain thing, how, 1635. God will not indulge ſin in any, 1667. Sin ſhould have no reſpect, 1682. Sin not to be choſen in any caſe, 1683. Sin ſtrictly taken cannot be choſen, ibid. Upon what account ſin is choſen by many, 1684. they make a very bad choice who chooſe ſin rather then affliction, 1685. Sin worſe then any the worſt affliction, ibid. 1686. Sin deprives us of God, 1940. Great ſins haſten judgment, ibid. A good man may ſin often, but he will not take leave to ſin once, 2141. Sin heartily repented of, is not perſiſted in, ibid. Sin dangerous, 2225. It is a vain thing to ſin, 2227. they who venture upon ſin are cruel to themſelves, 2231. No ſtanding before God in ſin, 2232. Sin makes God and many creatures terrible to us, 2250. Two things ſhew the greatneſs of ſin. 2329

Sincere, they who are ſo, delight in God in worſt times, 354. Sincere perſons do not affect to be ſeen. 1456

Sincerity will hold out in holding the truth, 296. Sincerity is willing to be tryed and weighed. 821

Singing an act of Praiſe, 1697. Singing a part of worſhip, an expreſſion of joy. 1907

Sinners, ſome ſin ſo faſt and much as if they only were ſinners, 174. Sinners are fooliſh, 674. Sinners would but cannot hide themſelves either from the eye or revenging hand of God, 1406, 1407. Sinners would but cannot hide themſelves upon a twofold account, 1407. Four things upon which ſinners think themſelves hid from God, 1408. Sinners obſtinate make war with God, 1964. Sinners puniſhed with that which is moſt croſs to their luſts. 2176

Sinning, ſome will ſin for the meaneſt advantage, 110. Sinning is the work of wicked men, 118. Sinning with a high hand, what, 1940

Sirnames or titles of two ſorts. 1125

Skie, two things conſiderable in it, clearneſs and ſtrength, 1812. How the skie may be ſaid to be ſtrong. ibid.

Skill of man in all ſorts of lawful arts is the gift of God. 407

Slander, to ſlander the good ways of others, is to marr and deſtroy them, 698. Slanderers are man-eaters- 728

Sleep, what it is, 1206. Three words in the Hebrew ſignifying ſleep. ibid.

Sloth, mans ſloth in ſeeking out ſpiritual things taxed. 412

Slothful man, how brother to a waſter. 782

Smoak, what it is. 2256

Snow, what it is, 1760. when it uſually falleth, ibid. Six things wonderful concerning the ſnow, 1761. ſnow how like wooll, ſhewed in three things, ibid. Snow and Rain at the command of God, 1762. Snow by whom firſt uſed to cool his drink. 1964

Society, to be driven from the ſociety of men, a great puniſhment, 667, Man was made for ſociety. 668, 669

Socinians, in what ſenſe they ſay Chriſt is the Son of God. 484

Sodomites how expreſſed in the Hebrew. 1656

Soft-heart, of five ſorts. 87

Solitarineſs, five cauſes why men abandon company and live ſolitary, 659, 660. Solitude or a ſolitary life, when to be choſen. 2043

Solſtices, when. 1933

Songs, what it is to be made a ſong, 678. to make abuſive ſongs of others is a great wickedneſs, 679. Song in the night, what, 1550, 1551

Sorrows of life may be more bitter then death, 90. Sorrow, burning with ſorrow, how, 766. Much of our life is ſpent in ſorrow, 778. Some have ſorrow without any comfort, 779. Sorrow affects ſolitarineſs. 783

Soveraign or chief Magiſtrates, are chiefly concerned to ſee juſtice done. 578

Soveraignty of God ſhewed, 1191. 1474. Man is never diſpleaſed with what God doth, till he forgets what himſelf is, 1475. Soveraignty of God in afflicting the moſt innocent perſon, 1327. The Soveraignty of God ſhewed in five things, 1359, 1360. three Inferences from it, 1360. God hath an abſolute power to pull down and ſet up whom he pleaſeth, 1414. Soveraignty of God over all creatures, three Inferences from it- 1521. 1524.

Soul, the ſouls deſiring or hating, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 66. Soul how and why it ſhould be garniſhed, 273. Soul how vexed, 306. they are miſerable who loſe their ſouls, whatever they get in or of this world, 339. the ſoul is at Gods call, ibid. Soul put for the whole man, 712. the ſoul is chiefly purſued by the Devil, 713. the ſoul of man is the principal part of man, ibid. this ſhewed in many reſpects 713, 714, 715. Soul ſleeps not when the body dies, 716. A complaint and lamentation that the ſoul is ſo much neglected, ibid. 717. Soul, divers acceptations of it in Scripture, 719. 721. 970, 971. Soul of man why called the breath of the Almighty, 1145. the ſoul floweth immediately from God, ibid. 1146. three Inferences from it, 1146. Soul put for the whole man, 1246. Soul how taken in Scripture, 1654. Soul, why mans glory. 2164

South, why expreſſed by a word that ſignifies a ſecret place, 1769. Whirlwinds come from it, ibid. South, why the Hawk ſtretcheth her wings to the South, 2113. the allegorical ſenſe of it, ibid. 2114

Sparing conſidered two ways as to an affliction 394. Not to be ſpared is worſe then to be ſmitten, ibid. Sparing mercy, God will not ſpare his own if they obey not. 1646

Speaker, he that ſpeaketh is at the mercy of his hearers, 1334. Speaker, two things the grace of a Speaker. 1882

Speaking, that we may ſpeak to profit, five things muſt be conſidered, 233. Speaking twofold, 1082. 'tis very painful not to ſpeak in ſome caſes, 1116. He that ſpeaketh his mind, eaſeth his mind, 1117. the right end of ſpeaking, ibid. to neglect ſpeaking where duty calls, very dangerous, 1118. A fourfold conſideration is to be had of what we ſpeak, 1135. We ſhould firſt try and taſte what we are about to ſpeak, 1136. three ſorts who ſpeak amiſs doctrinally, 1138, 1139. How or when God is ſaid to ſpeak, 1196. Several ways of Gods ſpeaking to man, ibid. Speaking, two things of great uſe in it, 1587. Speaking of two ſorts, 1587.

Spears, of two ſorts. 2268

Speech; vide Tongue: wickedneſs of ſpeech, 312. Speech, they who have moſt ability are uſually moſt ſparing of ſpeech. 1081

Sphinx, why placed before the Egyptian Temples. 448

Spirit, many ſpeak the words of the Prophets, who ſpeak not in their ſpirit, 234. Spirit of God taken two ways in Scripture, 270. Spirit of God onely makes the word ſpoken effectual, 357, 358. Spirit often taken for the Soul of man, 1084. Spirit of God free, not tyed to age nor to any order of men, 1092. Spirit, an impoſing ſpirit how bad, 1158. Spirit of God mightily overpowers ſome men both to do and ſpeak, 1117. Why our making is attributed to the ſpirit, 1142. The ſpirit of God is God, 1143. Eight reaſons from Scripture proving that the Holy Ghoſt is God, 1143, 1144, 1145. The Spirit ſupplies the abſence of Chriſt in the Church. 1414

of

Spirit, a threefold work of the Spirit upon the Soul of man. 1992
Spiritual things are not diſcernable by a natural man, 409. A fourfold account why they are ſo, 409, 410. Spiritual things not well underſtood by us, but as compared to and ſhadowed by the beſt temporal things. 442. Spiritual things are not underſtood by a natural or unregenerate man, 1202. two reaſons of it, ibid. they that are ſpiritual do not always perceive ſpiritual things, ibid. three grounds of it. 1202, 1203
Spirits of men weighed by God. 1803
Spitting in the face, what it imports in Scripture. 683
Stag or Hart, two things obſerved of him by Naturaliſts. 2030
Standing up, a fourfold ſignification of that poſture, 740. Standing-ſtill twofold, that of the mind to what oppoſed. 1790
Stars and their aſpects, how ſome excuſe their ſins by them, 1000, 1001. Stars, morning ſtars why ſo called, 1907. In what ſenſe ſtars may be ſaid to ſing, ibid. three ways they ſing, 1908. God hath planted a vertue in the ſtars, 1991. No man can ſtop the vertue or influences of the ſtars from falling upon the earth, ibid. two Inferences from it, ibid. 1992. Influences of the ſtars as beneficial to man as their light, 1992. the ſtars have their ſeaſons of appearing appointed them by God, 1996. an Inference from it, ibid. the ſtars have a guide. 1997
Star-gazers, their vanity. 1527
Statutes, how God gave ſuch as were not good. 830
Stealing, all falſe dealing is ſtealing. 818
Stedfaſtneſs in good, the honour of the godly. 53
Steps taken two ways in Scripture, 5. Steps what they are in Scripture, and how they may be numbred, 1027. Step of man twofold. 826
Stewards, how all are ſo. 1881
Stork good and full of pity, as her name in the Hebrew ſignifies. 2073
Storms in the hearts of men allayed by God. 1809
Strange, it is a ſtrange thing to ſome to meet with ſorrow, 806. God can make thoſe quickly acquainted with ſorrow to whom it hath been moſt ſtrange. ibid.
Strangers and Travellers ſubject to much hardſhip, 982. all the people of God are ſtrangers in this world, ibid. it is a duty to ſhew kindneſs to ſtrangers, ibid. Heathens exerciſed a kind of religiouſneſs in the entertainment of ſtrangers. ibid.
Streight, who may be ſaid to be in it, 1662. no ſtreight ſo great but God can deliver out of it. ibid.
Strength, God puts ſtrength into an humble ſoul; eſpecially for five things, 28. &c. Strength, men uſually proud of any kind of ſtrength, 267. our ſtrength lies much in the ſence of our weakneſs, ibid. Strength of hand is given to profit withall, 653. ſtrength of body not to be boaſted of, 730. ſtrength of heart, wherein it conſiſts, 1605. 1610. ſtrength of wiſdom in God, twofold, 1605, 1606. there is no ſtrength againſt the Lord, 1676. Strength, great ſtrength needful for great work, 2061. Great ſtrength may do great work, ibid. ſome have great ſtrength, yet not to be truſted with any work, ibid. How ſtrength may be truſted, 2062. three ſorts of men to be conſidered with reſpect to ſtrength, ibid. A willing mind better then great ſtrength, 2064. Strength is of God, 2089. Great ſtrength makes us joyful in ſorrows. 2259
Strife, ſome are great lovers of ſtrife and contention. 1023
Striving fourfold deſcribed, 1184, 1185. Man is apt to ſtrive with God, 1187. Four ways ſhewed in which man ſtriveth with God, 1188. Striving with God very uncomely and ſinful, ibid. 1189. Striving with God a preſumptuous ſin, 1189. Striving with God an irrational thing, ibid. Striving with God of two ſorts, 1191, 1192. Seven conſiderations why we ſhould not ſtrive with God, 1193. Seven preſervative againſt ſtriving with God, ibid. 1194. Three things to be ſtriven with. 1194, 1195
Subſtance, a mans ſubſtance what it is, 748, 749. Man hath nothing ſo ſubſtantial, but God can quickly melt it, 749, 750. Onely ſpiritual ſubſtance abides. 750
Submiſſion of mind due to God, 905, 906. Submiſſion with ſilence to the will of God always a duty, 1308. Submiſſion twofold, 2330. How we muſt ſubmit even to Inferiours whom we have wronged. ibid.
Suddenneſs of divine judgments. 1671
Sufferings, they who do like beaſts, ſuffer like beaſts, 671. No ſuffering condition ſo low and ſordid but God ſometimes caſts his choiceſt ſervants into it, 733. Sufferings, we may not will our ſufferings, though we muſt ſuffer willingly, 1471. Sufferings did not hurt the Martyrs, and why, 1540. Suffering, we have no cauſe to fear loſs by ſuffering for Chriſt. 2365, 2366
Suitableneſs between the heart and any work makes it pleaſing, 819. Suitableneſs of any thing to us, is the cauſe of delight, 2021. 2045
Sun and Moon, how it is ſinful to behold them, 929. they have been worſhipped as Gods, 932, 933. The Hebrew word for the Sun ſignifieth a ſervant, why, 934. what moved to the worſhip of the Sun and Moon, 934, 935. Sun expreſſed by three words in the Hebrew, their ſignifications, 778. Sun in its brightneſs cannot be looked upon, 1831. Sun, the light of it wonderfully extenſive and diffuſive, 1934. Sun why called the Father of the winds, 1970. the power of the Sun upon the earth, 1999. why the Egyptians pictured a Hawk to repreſent the Sun, five reaſons of it. 2114
Superſtition, the forwardneſs of mans nature to ſuch worſhip, 120, 121. Superſtition is very ceremonious. 941
Suſpicion, a godly man ſuſpects himſelf, that he is worſe and hath done worſe then he knows by himſelf. 1488, 1489
Swadling-band of the Sea, what. 1920
Swearing, the Lords ſaying as much as his ſwearing. 1802
Sword what it notes in Scripture, 367. three ſpecial ſorts of the Sword, ibid. Sword put for all violent calamities, 1230. Sword how taken in Scripture, 1645. Sword hath a terrible face, 2102. Sword of God, any thing that he uſeth to deſtroy by. 2200
Syrophanes an Egyptian, how the occaſion of Image-worſhip. 935

T.

Tabernacles, why the ancient people of God called all their dwellings ſo, 973. Tabernacle, what. 1727
Talent, not to be hid. 1095. 1114
Teachers, ſhould be leaders, 1314. Teacher, God is pleaſed to be a Teacher of his people, 1690. The teachings of God above all teachings, 1691. How God exceeds all teachers, ſhewed in ſeven things, ibid. 1692. three Inferences from it, 1692, 1693. ſeveral evidences of our having been taught of God. 1693. &c.
Teaching, to teach the ignorant is a great duty, 356. Afflictions fit us to teach others, 357. we need the help of God to teach others, ibid. Teaching of God twofold, 1486. God onely can teach effectually, 1487. we ſhould pray and wait for the teachings of God, ibid. Teaching, 'tis mans ſhame when he acts not according to the teachings of God, 1557. Teaching is to make us knowing, 1816, there are two ſorts of perſons who call for teaching, 1817. Teaching of God neceſſary, elſe mans profiteth not, 1874. 2297. Gods teaching is effectual for all purpoſes; ſeven eſpecially. 2297
Teachableneſs, or a willingneſs to learn, ſhews an humble and gracious ſpirit. ibid.
Tears ſtopt by great ſorrows, 374. Tears how perſwaſive. 764
Temptation prevaileth eaſily over carnal men, 165. Comfort in temptation, what, 269. Temptation to the worſt ſins in the world makes no man guilty unleſs he conſent, 1002, 1003. Temptation, the reſiſtance of it ſhews ſtrength of grace, 976. Temptation, Satan tempts us much to two things. 2133
Terribleneſs of God to ſinners in four ways. 1833
Terror taken two ways, 386. No outward comfort can bear up the heart againſt terror, 387. Terrors what they are, 710. A godly man may be under terrors, ibid. Inward terrors are more grievous then all outward troubles, 711. A twofold terror, 900. Terror, good men may ſometimes ſee the terrible appearances of God, 2145, God will not ceaſe them, till he hath brought man to his purpoſe, ibid. The terror of God againſt the wicked, 2146. 2249
Thankfulneſs, thanks ſhould be returned when benefits are received, 892. If they who have received good by us, do not thank us, yet we ſhall not loſe our thanks. ibid.
Thieves, ſlothful perſons are to be numbred with them, 669. Thieves a hateful generation in all ages. ibid.
Theodorick his zeal for Juſtice. 586
Theodoſius his pity to poor priſoners. 572
Thinking, we hardly think of thoſe things which we do not ſee. 798
Thoughts, evil thoughts very ſinful when kept in, yet worſe to let them out, 315. Thoughts, that which is much in our thoughts, is apt to go out in words, 688. Inordinate thoughts are ſins, 798. Evil thoughts their ſinfulneſs and danger laid down in five concluſions, 789. 880. A gracious heart is watchful againſt evil thoughts, 800. It is an excellent cellent means to keep our ſelves from ſinful acts, to look to our thoughts, ibid. Thoughts of man all known to God, 2288, three Inferences from it, 2299. Eight ſorts of thoughts to be taken heed of. 2289

Threatnings of uſe to the godly, as well as the promiſes, 860. Threatnings uſed by men will not excuſe us if we ſin againſt God to avoid them, 997. Threatnings it is good to think of them. 1130

Throat of the wicked, why called an open Sepulchre. 967

Throne of God what, 18.251. In what ſenſe God ſpreadeth a cloud upon his Throne, 252. God manifeſteth himſelf in Heaven as Princes manifeſt themſelves upon their Thrones. 253

Thunder, a reproof from God, 261. Thunder of Gods power, what, 281, Thunder what it is, 469. Thunder and Lightning call us to acknowledge the power of God, 470. Natural and ſpiritual ends of Thunder, 471. Thunder doth not fly at random, but by Gods direction, ibid. Great Thunder at the publication of the Law, mild Thunder at the declaration of Chriſt in the Goſpel, ibid. The great things which God will do, expreſſed by Thunder, ibid. Thunder and Lightning ordered by God, 1973. To thunder, what it ſignifieth in Scripture, 2159. A thunder or mighty power goeth out in a tenfold voice of God. ibid. 2160. Thundring Legion, 1755. Thunder a terrible thing, 1742. Thunder the Voyce of God, 1744. Thunder called the Voyce of God in a twofold reſpect, 1745. Six Inferences from it, 1746. Word of God like Thunder, ſhewed in five things, ibid. 1747. Thunder Gods Herald, 1752. Thunder how it followeth Lightning, 1752. why we ſee the Lightning before we hear the Thunder, ibid. Six degrees or ſorts of Thunder, ibid. 1753. Thunder deſcribed, 1753. Marvels in Thunder, 1755. the effects of the Word like thoſe of Thunder, ibid. 1756. two Inferences from it. 1757

Tiberius, his judgment of the Roman Empire, 589. Tiberius the Roman Emperour, his Character. 1845

Time ſhort in all the three notions of it, 790. Times, bleſſed changes of times, promiſed, 1041. Time at the diſpoſe of God, 1712. Time, all creatures keep time better then man, 1928; 1933. Time weakens the ſtrongeſt earthly creatures. 2019

Times, God hideth times from men as he pleaſeth, 94. why God hideth times, or keepeth them in his power, 95. Times are perfectly known to God. 97

Titius his bowels eaten by a Vultur, what it ſignified. 762

Titus Veſpatian, his compaſſion to the miſerable Jews. 680

Tongue, two evils of it, 311. Meditation how aſcribed to the tongue in Scripture, 312. A great care is to be had of the tongue, that we offend not in word, 314. Tongue cleaving to the roof of the mouth, what it implyeth, 560. Tongue, ſee Mouth: Why the Tongue is called mans glory, 967. Tongue-ſins eaſily fallen into; reaſons of it, ibid. 968. Tongue, he hath a great command over his ſpirit, that can command his Tongue, 1166. Tongue an unruly member, 1334. Tongue, why called the glory of man, 1909. 2156. Tongue hard to be ruled. 2141

Topaz, a precious ſtone deſcribed. 441

Trajane the Emperour, his benignity to his Subjects. 866

Treaſures or treaſuries of any thing, what they import. 1959

Trees, ſome love watry grounds, others dry. 2205

Trembling, what, 1742. Great appearances of God ſhould make us tremble, 1743. A fourfold trembling. ibid. 1744

Troubled minds have much to ſay. 21

Troubles both national and perſonal at the command of God, 1393. Troubles overtake many when they leaſt expect, ibid. Troubles are ſtreights, 1662. Trouble hath its time, 1963. Times of trouble are ſpecially known to, and appointed by God, ibid. God can make a time of trouble either terrible or comfortable. 1965

Truſt, what may be given to ſtrength, what not, 2061. Three things required in thoſe we truſt with any buſineſs, 2063. Truſt in man, or in any meer creature, a threefold evil iſſue of it. 2157

Truſting in God a duty in darkeſt times, 1573. Truſt in God fixes the heart, ibid. Some not to be truſted, 1574. We ſhould truſt God more upon experience of what he hath wrought, 1704. The Eternity of God a ground of truſting him. 1712

Truths of Scripture like light, ſhewed in ſeveral things, 137. Truth is full of authority and power, 138. Evil men utter enemies to the diſcoveries of holy truth, 140, Truth is not afraid to be tryed, 200. Truth ought to be ſpoken out, or all the truth muſt be ſpoken, 231. Truth hath a reviving power in it, 235. Truth cannot be prevailed upon, 295. A ſincere heart will maintain it to the end, 296. A twofold ground of this, ibid. Truth hath a commanding power in it, 298. A good man muſt not be ſpared while he oppoſeth truth, 333. It is a vain thing to oppoſe truth, 362. Truth twofold, in which we are to call upon God, 345. Truth of God confirmed by the fall of wicked men, 399. Truth of any ſort, the preciouſneſs of it, 818, Truth muſt be held, and held to in all caſes, 1120, 1121. Clear truth ſhould be ſpoken, 1140. We ſhould ſpeak truth clearly, ibid. Truth to be maintained with all our might, 1151. A good man ſeeks not victory but truth, 1312. we ſhould grow up into higheſt confidence about the truth, 1354. why ſome truths are and ought to be often repeated, 1355. Truth will prevail though many be againſt it, 1525. No matter if we are alone, ſo Truth be on our ſide, ibid. Some ſpeak truth with falſe hearts, others ſpeak falſly with a true heart, 1594. To ſpeak truth a high commendation of the Speaker, ibid. Truth taught us by God, four effects of it, 1693. Some truths are ſpecially to be attended to. 1788

Tryal taken of man three ways, 46. A godly man is no loſer by coming to his tryal, 48. the ſincere are willing to be tryed, 50. Tryal, word preached to be tryed before it be received,, 1320. Tryal of two ſorts, 1501. A perſon tryed may be truſted, ibid. Tryal by affliction. 1502

Turning back from God, how ſinners do ſo, 1422. Three ſorts of them who turn back from God, ibid. 1423. How ſome good men, and how all unregenerate men turn back from God, 1423. the whole life of a perſon unregenerate is a turning from God. 1424

Twice, conſidered three ways, 1199. Twice, Thrice, what it implyeth. ibid.

Twylight twofold. 155

U.

Unanimity, uſually wicked men are unanimous in doing evil. 706

Unbelief hinders the confeſſion of ſin, 989. Unbelief a ſtriving with God, 1188. Unbelief is the root of Apoſtacy. 1424

Unchangeableneſs of God ſet out in ſix particulars, 67. &c. Objections againſt the unchangeableneſs of God anſwered, 70, 71. As God ,is unchangeable, in himſelf, ſo nothing can change him. 73

Unclean perſons are vigilant, 844. they will not refuſe any pains to enjoy forbidden pleaſures. 845

Underſtanding of man taken two ways, 1085. God can furniſh the weakeſt man with much wiſdom and underſtanding, 1089. In what ſenſe every man hath not an underſtanding, 1372. Three attributes of the underſtanding, 1371, 1372. Onely a ſpiritual underſtanding can receive ſpiritual things, 1373. what we hear we ſhould labour to underſtand, 1372. Underſtanding, how an underſtanding may be ſaid not to underſtand, 1556. Underſtanding, to know is the work of it, 1896. The underſtanding is the maſter-wheel turning all the faculties of the ſoul, ibid. Underſtanding ſhould go before ſpeaking, 1897. How irrational creatures may be ſaid to have underſtanding. 2085

Unicorn, what the Hebrew word ſignifieth, 2048. Some deny that there is any ſuch beaſt in the world, ibid. He is very ſtrong, 2058. Unicorn, by whom and in what reſembled. 2066, 2067

Union, a threefold union or joyning together in one, very pleaſing to God. 2345

Unity among the Saints, the great argument moving to it, 1148. Unity among the Miniſters of the Goſpel, how deſirable, 1912. Unity a great means of ſafety. 2253

Unkindneſs from men occaſions the godly to have more intimacy with God. 15

Upright men heard in prayer. 346

Uprightneſs; a man may do that in uprightneſs which is not right, 333. Uprightneſs of heart in ſpeaking, ſtanding in a threefold oppoſition, 1137. Uprightneſs of man what it is, and how ſhewed him, 1259, 1260. Many good men ſee not their uprightneſs, 1260. What the uprightneſs of our ſtate is, and what the uprightneſs of our life ſhewed, 1260, 1261. Caution to Miniſters about ſhewing man his uprightneſs, 1261. Uprightneſs, that which is not done uprightly, will not be done conſtantly. 1655

V.

Valentinian, his zeal and advancement. 1625

Vanity, to depend upon that which is not, or to oppoſe that which is, 362. Vanity, what it is, 814. what it is to walk in vanity, 814. 815. Sin is vanity in all the notions of it, 815. Vanity of the creature conſiſts chiefly in two things, 935. Vanity of vanities, all worldly things are ſo in three reſpects, 815, 816. Vanity of all earthly greatneſs, 1413, 1414. Vanity, what and who. 1562

Vein for Silver, what. 404

Vertues, eminent Vertues draw reverence. 552

Vile, to be vile notes three things, 2134. Man at his beſt eſtate is vile, 2135. Man is vile in three reſpects, ibid. Four Inferences from it, 2136. The more God reveals himſelf to us, the more our vileneſs appears to us. 2138

Viſion of God in this life, what it is. 1284

Viſitation, the ſeveral uſes of it. 865, 866. 1357. 1576. 1942

Vocation an act of abſolute free Grace. 1266

Voyce of God, a tenfold voyce of God exceeding powerful. 2159, 2160

Vow; though we may not vow never to ſin, yet we may vow not to commit this or that ſin wilfully or knowingly. 313

W.

WAges, to detain the Labourers wages very ſinful, 129. Wages of the Labourer detained three days, 130. Wages of the Labourer, how great an oppreſſion it is to detain it. 1036

Waiting notes a threefold act of the mind, 606. Waiting on man, in three caſes neceſſary, 1176. Waiting imports three things, 1096. Waiting on God in hardeſt times. 1573

Walking, what it imports, 814. A godly man may ſtep into, but he cannot walk in a ſinful way, 816. Walking with God, what, 1338. 1425. Walking as a man, what. 1338

Wanton love or wantonneſs aſcends by five ſteps. 153

Wantonneſs, victory over temptations to wantonneſs, is rare and great. 839

War, a day of battel and war, is eminently a day of trouble. 1964

Warnings, God graciouſly gives them once and again, 1199. We have no ground to expect frequent warnings, ibid. No man knoweth how oft he ſhall be warned, 1200. Warnings by words being neglected, blows follow, 1235. The puniſhment of others ſhould be our warnings, 1420, 1421. Warnings, God gives them before he ſends great Judgments, 1736. Warning, God gives warning before he ſtrikes. 1752

Watchfulneſs, a godly man watcheth againſt ſin, 966. A gracious heart hath a watchful eye over his own ways. 1028.

Waters twofold, 249. Waters are in the hand of God, 465. Three things wonderful in the waters, 467. Water, to drink iniquity like water, what it ſignifieth, 1336. Water of two ſorts, 1722. Water held up in the Air by the power of God, 1724. Water in the clouds divided to the earth as God pleaſeth, 1972. The Lord orders the waters in four reſpects. 1974

Way of God how taken in Scripture, 53. Way of a godly man right forward, 59. Way, God hath appointed man a way to walk in, 826. Five properties of the way which God appoints, 827. A natural man loves to wander out of Gods way, ibid. A wrong way is no way, 828. Every moral act is a ſtep either in or out of the way, ibid. A godly man would not go a ſtep out of the way, ibid. Way of God, what it is. 1694

Ways of a man twofold, 1400. Ways of God twofold, 1426. Ways of God not regarded by wicked men, 1429. Not to conſider the ways of God, a great ſin. ibid.

Wealth a growing thing, 917. the ſame word ſignifieth wealth, ſtrength and ſubſtance, why, ibid. How it is or is not ſinful to rejoyce in wealth, 918. Man is very apt to rejoyce in worldly wealth, 920. worldly men aſcribe their wealth to their own getting, 925. Several rules about the getting, keeping and uſing of worldly wealth. 926

Weeping of two ſorts. 764, 765

Weighing, an act of the underſtanding, 464. Weighing of perſons and actions, much care to be taken in it. 822

Weight of any thing, what it is. 160

Whales caſt upon unuſual coaſts, are a warning to them. 2278

Whirlwind, what, 1769, 1770. Whirlwind, what, 1871. Three opinions concerning the whirlwind, out of which God anſwered Job, ibid. 1872. why God anſwered Job out of a whirlwind. 1872

Wicked men make ſin their work or their buſineſs, ſhewed four ways, 118, 119. Wicked men are not preſently ſtopt in their evil ways, 134. Wicked, to be wicked, is to be in the worſt condition imaginable, 331. Two things ſhew the miſery of the wicked, 332. 'Tis blaſphemy to think that God hath approving thoughts of the wicked, ibid. Wicked may eſcape a reckoning with men, but not with God, 365. A wicked mans labours are often inherited by the righteous, 378. Wicked men care not whom they wrong, ſo they may get, 380. The fall of wicked men is the rejoycing of all men, 397. When the wicked fall, they are every way miſerable, 399. God rejoyceth at their ruine, 400. Wicked men how called wickedneſs, and ſinners ſin, 508. Wicked men ſlander and oppreſs the Godly, when in a low condition, 709. the miſery of wicked men greateſt when they die, though they often pleaſe themſelves to think that death will put an end to all their miſeries, 762. They ſhall be afflicted for ever with the loſs of their hopes, 775, 776. Wicked men doing wickedly, have no ground to hope for any good from God, 802. God hath no portion in a wicked man, 803. 'Tis their nature to hate the Godly: There are five contrarieties between a godly and a wicked man, 954, 955. Wicked men, they who do like the wicked, ſhall be dealt with by God as wicked men, 1418. the ſame word ſignifies to be wicked, to condemn and trouble, why, 1436. A good man may in ſome things and at ſome times act and ſpeak like a wicked man, 1503. Every man naturally is wicked, yea, a man of wickedneſs, ibid. Wicked men out of Gods protection, he takes not care of them, 1613. How God doth and doth not preſerve the lives of the wicked, ibid. 1614. Wicked not ſo much preſerved as reſerved, 1614. Wicked men of two ſorts, 1615. their life ſad, ibid. God will at laſt utterly deſtroy them, 1615. God will not be taken off by any outward reſpect from deſtroying them, 1672. Wicked men have a title to good things, 1939. they ſhall be broken, though high and ſtrong, 1940. they are like the Hawk in three things, 2115. Wicked, who in a large ſenſe, who in a ſtrict ſenſe, 2174. the wicked ſhall come to a ſad concluſion, 2177. God will at laſt rid the world of wicked men, 2177. No outward advantage ſhall ſecure the wicked from miſchief. 2178

Wickedneſs what. 1539

Widow, why expreſſed in the Hebrew by a word that ſignifieth both to bind and to be ſilent, 181. Widow, her ſtate a ſorrowful ſtate, 574. Widow, the widows cauſe muſt not be deferr'd. 878

Wife, to chooſe a wife by the eye is a kind of adultery. 795

Wilderneſs of two ſorts. 1974

Will or mind of God, to be ſubmitted to, and ſhould pleaſe us in all things, 73. Will of God the onely bound of all his Actions, 77. How unſafe it is that it ſhould be ſo with men, though good men, ibid. Dangerous to have mans will the rule of what he doth 106. Will, man hath not onely a weakneſs or a wound, but rebellion in his will, 1203. the will of man is naturally bent againſt the ways of God, 1427. Will more then the action alone, 1341. the will of a natural man is weak againſt the doing of evil, and for the doing of good, 1489. two proper acts of the will, 1493. Man would have all things go according to his will, 1494. that man would have his will, ſhewed in four things, ibid. the ſinfulneſs of deſiring things to be after our mind or will, ſhewed by a threefold evil ſpring of it, 1495. the abſurdity of deſiring to have our will, ibid. God will not give man his will, 1496. Will, a kind of will in beaſts, 2055. Service ſhould be done with the will, ibid. A willing mind doth much, 2064. Will of God the foundation of the earth, and of all things, 1854. Will of a godly man againſt all ſin. 2141

Willingneſs, what we are willing to do, we put all things in a readineſs to do. 983

Winds, affliction like them, 390. Wind deſcribed, how God is ſaid to make a weight for it, 460. How the winds are divided, 461. What is the cauſe of the winds, ibid. the motion of the wind is diſpoſed by God, ibid. why the winds are ſaid to have wings, ibid. Three acts of God concerning the winds, 462. the exactneſs of Gods care in ordering the winds, ſhewed in three particulars, 462, 463. Wind, three notes about its motion, 717, 718. what it is to be lifted up to the wind, 746. Winds, four Cardinal, 1769. what the wind is, ibid. Winds come at Gods appointment, 1770. God makes a twofold uſe of the wind, ibid. Six uſes of it for mercy, or for the good of man, ibid. 1771. Winds the Brooms of Heaven, 1770. Afflicting effects of the wind, 1771. Seven Wonders obſervable in the winds, 1772. what the wind is, 1828. Cauſes of the wind, 1829. Life preſerved by the wind, ibid. Winds under the command of God, 1970. the way of the wind a ſecret. 1971

Wings of the morning, what. 1934

Wiſdom threefold, 403. Wiſdom of God cannot be found out to perfection, 401. the greateſt ſecrets in Nature nothing to it, 403. Greateſt natural parts cannot reach it, 409. Wiſdom ſeen of God from eternity, 475. the Son of God is the eternal wiſdom of God, 483. Wiſdom of God, what, 430. How wiſdom and underſtanding may be diſtinguiſhed, 431. Wiſdom not to be found among ſenſual men who are given to pleaſure, 433. Wiſdom better then all worldly things, 445, Three Corollaries from it, 446. Wiſdom how hidden, and from whom, 447. Place of wiſdom, what it is, 456. Wiſdom twofold, 1082. Wiſdom moſt probably to be found in old men, ibid. 1083. Wiſdom or underſtanding is the gift of God, 1085. Man apt to be proud of that which he calls wiſdom, 1103. What that wiſdom was which our firſt Parents ſought, 1103, 1104. Two reaſons why there is ſuch a temptation in wiſdom to pride, 1104. True wiſdom conſiſts chiefly in two things, 1313. Spiritual wiſdom is the beſt leſſon, 1314. Wiſdom is the ſavoury knowledge of things, 1320. the beginning of true wiſdom, 1373. Wiſdom, how aſcribed to the Fowls of the Air, 1554. the wiſdom of Fowls, &c. is of God, 1555. Wiſdom of God, wherein the ſtrength of it conſiſts ſits, 1605, 1606. How God is onely wiſe, 1607. Wiſdom practical, what, 1606. Six Inferences from the wiſdom of God, 1608. Wiſdom, where the ſeat of it in man, 2006. Common wiſdom is of God, 2006. Six Inferences from it, 2007. God makes one man differ from another in wiſdom and underſtanding, 2085. A great mercy to have wiſdom, in ſix things ibid.

Wiſe, a man wiſe in his own eyes, hard to be reduced, 1059. Greatneſs of birth or place can make no man wiſe, 1091. None are ſo wiſe, but they may learn more wiſdom, 1313. Nothing is worth the learning but makes us truly wiſe, 1314. A wiſe man how diſtinguiſhed from a man of knowledge, 1317. The wiſe will hear as well as ſpeak, ibid. Wiſe in heart, of two ſorts, 1853. In what ſenſe God reſpecteth not any that are wiſe, 1854. God regardeth not the wiſeſt men who do not fear him, ibid. the wiſeſt men cannot hinder the Counſels of God by their wiſdom and policy, ibid. Thoughts of the wiſe vain in two reſpects, ibid. None wiſe by nature, nor are any perfectly wiſe in this world though they have grace. 1855.

Wiſh, we are apt to wiſh ill to thoſe who offend us, 971. Wiſh, how we ſhould be and do according to the wiſh of others, 1151. Wiſhes, we apt to make ſtrange wiſhes in times of diſtreſs. 1679

Witches power over the winds onely permiſſive and limited. 464

Witneſs, we ought to give witneſs to thoſe who are good, 565. Witneſs, a falſe witneſs how expreſſed by the Rabbins, 851. Witneſs, to bear falſe witneſs againſt our ſelves very ſinful. 1330

Wives, the juſt puniſhment of abuſing other mens wives, 848. the diſloyalty of a wife a great affliction. 849

Wolf, evening wolf, why ſo called. 1907

Womb, what the womb is out of which the Sea iſſued. 1917

Women have often proved Man-deceivers, 840. the firſt man was deceived by a woman, ibid. Seven ways ſhewed by which women deceive the hearts of men, 841, 842, 843, 844

Word of God, a godly man keepeth cloſe to it, 53. The word of God is the onely rule of life, 60. Word of God taken in a double oppoſition, ibid. A godly man highly eſteems the word, 63. Reverence to the word keeps the heart up in obedience to the word, ibid. The word of God is to be eſteemed for his own ſake, 64. Word of God rightly applyed is mighty, 230. it revives the Soul, or gives a new Soul, 235. Word of God is viſible in his works, 361. Word of God is fitted for all ſorts and ſizes of men, 1317. they who turn from the word of God, turn from God himſelf, 1424. The not minding of the word of God, is the cauſe of all wickedneſs, 1428. Word of God is, and how it is the determiner of controverſies, 1874. Word to be heard with reverence, 1876. Word of God heard, a great mercy, 2299. Word to be heard with diligence, ibid. A fourfold work of the word, 2309. Word of God how powerful to effect what he willeth. 1926

Words, how we are juſtified by them, 315. Words may go wrong while the heart is right, 745. Words ſhould be clean while we ſpeak of unclean things, 850. How we are ſuch as our words are, 967. Twelve ſorts of ſinful words, 968, 969. Words, ſtraining of words, of two ſorts, 1063. Words well meant may ſometimes juſtly fall under an ill interpretation, 1071. Words ſhould be well weighed before they be uttered, 1097. Words acceptable to be ſought, what they are, 1098. Our words ſhould be well-ordered, like an Army, &c. 1107, 1108. An idle word, what, 1133. Hard words as grievous as blows, 1158. Not to offend in word, a great point of perfection. 1166. Words of good men often worſe then their meanings, 1334, 1342. Inconſiderate words render us obnoxious to ſevereſt cenſures, 1343. Words multiplied ſeldom without ſin. 1507, 1508. Words, raſh words turned againſt the Speaker, 1520. Sharp words ſometimes moſt profitable, ibid. Word of God how like Rain, 1722. Word of God preached, how like thunder, ſhewed in five things, 1746, 1747. When the word of God is duly attended, ſhewed in three things, 1747. Three degrees of the words coming to us, ibidem. Word of God, how it may be ſaid to be dark, 1822. Words, ſome light, others weighty, 2134. Words ſhould give light to things ſpoken of, 1880. Darkning words very bad, ibid. Words ſoft and hard, 2219. A few words will pleaſe God, where he ſees much faith, 2280. Our words and underſtandings ſhould go together. 2292

Work of a man and his way, how they differ. 1350

Workers of iniquity, who. 1405

Works of God, three things affirmed of them, 74. Nothing can ſtop the works of God, four things inſtanced in that cannot, 74, 75. Works of God cannot be fully known, 279. the works of God ſhould lead us to God himſelf, 281. Works of God declare his wiſdom, 476, 477. Works, good works ſhould be abounded in, 890. Onely two bounds or limits of doing good works, ibid. Works in what latitude to be taken, when it is ſaid, God will render them to us, 1349. Every man ſhall have according to his works, 1351. Two Objections againſt it anſwered, 1351, 1352. Several Inferences from it, 1352, 1353. Works of God, to ſpeak unduly of them, is to ſpeak againſt God himſelf, 1507, 1508. Works of God to be deeply conſidered, 1300. Works of God perfect, or he will perfect his work, 1301, 1302, Works of God called his ways, 1426. The plaineſt works of God have many wonders in them, 1430. Works of God in Nature to be exactly conſidered, eſpecially the Heavens, 1527. Some works of God beyond our apprehenſion, 1758. Two Inferences from it, 1759. Men ſlow to conſider the works of God, 1765. God would have all men ſtudy his works, ibid. God ſtops men in their work, that they may conſider his works, ibid. 1766. Works of God of all ſorts to be conſidered, 1791. How the works of God are to be conſidered, ſhewed four ways, 1792. Inference from it, 1793. The common and ordinary works of God are full of wonder, ibid. Works, good works how profitable to our ſelves and others, 1541. Work, ours ſhewed us by God in affliction, in a twofold reſpect, 1631. Sin is properly our work, ibid. The faultineſs of our work moſt clearly diſcovered in affliction, ibid. 1632. Works of God of all ſorts are to be magnified, 1697. Works of God viſible or inviſible, 1698. Men apt to forget and have low apprehenſions of the works of God, 1699. It is our duty to magnifie the works of God, 1701. How they are magnified, ſhewed five ways, ibid. 1703. The ends of God in any work, much to be eyed, 1703. What thoſe ends are, 1703, 1704. Works of God, how dangerous to find fault with any of them, 2133. The works, eſpecially the great works of God, are very much to be conſidered, 2185. Works of God, why called his ways, 2193. They are wonderful. 2032

World, a little of the world will not ſerve a worldly mans turn, 377. World, two great failings in men about the things of the world, 790. World, a twofold diſpoſition of it, 1358. World, a godly man is content with a little of, but not ſatisfied with all the world, 1665. World, the Frame of it very beautiful, 1900. Things of the world how like a Sea of Glaſs. 1987

Worldly things, the beſt and greateſt of them are but little, and for a little time, 193. Worldly ſtate of worldly men moſt ſubject to changes, 195. Worldly things; ſee riches. Worldly men, their cares may have ſucceſs, ibid. their ſucceſs ſhall not reach their ends, 378. they highly eſteem worldly things, 442. How we may deſire the reſtoring of worldly things, 520. Worldly men, how married to worldly things, 909. Worldly comforts and mercies, may ſoon meet with a ſtop. 1733

Worm, Man is ſo in five reſpects, 223. Four inferences from it. ibid.

Worſhip, what natural worſhip is, 349. Why the worſhip of God is expreſſed by fear, 488. Worſhip, falſe worſhip, ſee Idolatry. A twofold ſecrecy of worſhip whether true or falſe, 937. The heart is ſpecially to be lookt to in worſhip, 939. Outward worſhip of any creature unlawful, 940. Worſhip, outward and inward muſt be according to the command of God. 2347

Wound without tranſgreſſion, how to be underſtood, 1332. The wounds which God makes, cannot be healed by any Medicines but his own. 1333

Wrath falling upon the wicked in time is from eternity, 365. Wrath of God, a believer may be under dreadful apprehenſions of it, 901. Wrath of God often called a burden in Scripture, 902. How burdenſom the wrath of God is, 903. As none can bear, ſo none can eſcape the wrath of God, 908. Wrath of God makes quick diſpatch with ſinners, 1129. Wrath of God appears highly againſt man, when he ſaith, I will not pardon, 1483. Wrath of God, what and where, 1669. Wrath appears in works of Judgment, ibid. We ſhould by all means beware of the wrath of God, 1670. Wrath of God a fire, infinitely more dreadful then fire, ib. 1671. Wrath of God, 2169. Sin cauſeth the kindlings and diſcoveries of wrath, 2317. God ſometimes declareth againſt thoſe whom he loveth, ibid. God declares the cauſe of his wrath. ibid.

Wrong, what we get by wronging others, we get in our own wrong, 380. Wrong received from others will not excuſe us, if we wrong them, 997, 998. Wrongs muſt be forgiven, 2330. A godly man is ready, both to give and take ſatisfaction in caſe of wrong, 2331. It is a duty to pray for thoſe that have done us wrong. ibid.

X.

Xerxes his vanity in attempting to bind the Sea. 1924

Y.

Year, how expreſſed in the Hebrew, 610. Years, the meaſure of mans life, not of Gods, 1711. The word in Hebrew ſignifieth changes, and why. 1711

Yielding to ſin might be more checkt. 963, 964

Yeſterday, how taken in Scripture. 661

Yoke of Chriſt why called eaſie, 29. Yoke twofold, 885. Yoke, they that will not bear the yoke of Chriſt, ſhall never have any benefit by his Croſs. 1382

Young, to be called young, notes ſmall or little two ways, 645. Young men apt to abuſe themſelves and others, 649. Some young men have the gravity of old men, 656. The ſtrength of young men profits little, if they have not the good qualities of old men, ibid. Young men ready to do evil, 696. Young men ſhould ſhew reſpect to their elders, 1077. Young men apt to run into miſtakes, 1080. What young men ſay or hold, is not to be deſpiſed becauſe of their youth, 1093. Old men when and how to be preferred before young. ibid. 1094

Youth, how ſubject to reproach, 532. Youth taken two ways, 533. Youth a fading ſtate, ibid. To be holy in youth is a great commendation of holineſs, 534. Modeſty a ſpecial vertue in young men, 553. Youth to be dedicated to God, 884. Youth, to die in youth, what, ſhewed three ways, 1655. Youth, what young ones are uſed to, they hold long. 2122

Youthful luſts, which. 1081

Z.

Zaleuchus, his Law againſt Adulterers. 796

Zeal, ſuperſtitious zeal and labriouſneſs of the Iſraelites in worſhipping the Calves in Dan and Bethel, 120, 121. Zeal ſhould kindle for the defence of Thunder. 1116

A
TABLE
OF THOSE SCRIPTURES
Which are occaſionally Cleared and briefly Illustrated in the foregoing
EXPOSITIONS.

The Firſt Number directs to the Chapter, the Second to the Verse, the Third to the Folio.

GENESIS.

Chap.	Verſ.	Folio.
1	2	270
	6	1724
	7	465
	14	271
	16	929
	21	239
	26	272
	31	475
2	1	271
	1,2	1640
	7	308
	7	713
	11,12	407
	15	1780
	18	668
	25	887
3	15	506
	15	953
	17	1306
	19	676
	19	1036
4	5,6	621
	7	546
	10	569
	10	1433
	12	1035
	13	687
	13	1477
	14	667
	21	787
	22	407
	23	148
5	3	218
	3	626
	24	755
6	2	795
	3	1200
	3	1302
	4	323
	5	1400
	5	1945
	6	70
	6	2352
	8	1263
	12,13	1228
	12,13	1241
	17	1368
7	11	1719
	21	974
9	6	147
	12,13	1798
	27	927
	27	938
10	10	2193
11	6	120
	6	2287
12	5	235
14	22	894
	22	1895
15	1,2,3.5	509
	16	1614
16	12	2039
	13,14	741
	14	1621
17	17	622
18	5	880
	11,12	622
	25	316
	25	578
	25	1346
	25	1348
	25	1354
	27	677
19	14	2101
20	5,6	1213
	6	961
	9	852
	11	499
21	6	1576
22	1	2004
	2	2346
	12	494
	12	824
	14	1621
25	8	1657
	21	1278
	32	665
27	8,13	101
	8,13	995
	33	1742
	36	1754
29	1	2031
31	29	896
	29	1545
	42,53	205
32	2	212
	10	223
	24	1877
33	10	1437
35	5	206
	5	386
37	11	1575
38	26	1518
39	9	813
	9	853
	22	1300
41	30	2083
	40	939
	45	97
	49	376
42	15	301
	16	1104
	18	499
	18	867
43	18	707
44	16	2139
	17	1346
45	8	582
	8	1702
47	6	652
	9	723
	22	62
48	14	645
	16	239
49	4	143
	5	782
	8	947
	18	335
	11	542
	14	2193
	20	1641
	24	2156

EXODUS.

1	12	2378
	17	1612
3	2	1873
	7,9	741
	14	1892
4	10,11	1087
	11	1898
	17	1783
	24	1638
5	8	1618
	8	1715
7	23	1364
8	8	344
	9	2153
9	16	1610
	17	696
10	17	344
12	23	1247
	41,42	2033
14	11	1578
	15	341
	21	390
	21	462
15	3	1023
	11	495
	11	1835
	14	715
	14	733
16	21	1152
18	21	486
	21	1571
	22	1612
19	5	2123
20	2,3,5	932
	4,5	1576
	11	775
	18,19	492
21	22	854
22	22,23	1034
23	2	998
	3	575
	13	850
	20	1252
24	11	757
25	10,17,	1270
	21	1270
	30	1286
26	5	2252
30	23	2193
32	10	2130
	23	1214
	25	342
	25	1807
	32	178
	34	866
33	5	787
	19	602
34	6,7	1480
	24	874
38	8	1813

LEVITIC.

4	3	2326
10	1,2,3	1507
	3	23
19	17	2314
	32	1077
25	4,5,	1034
	21	1786
26	11,15,	2301
	30	2301
	15,16	711
	18,24	83
	26	371
	41	1685

NUMB.

9	7	1715
12	14	684
13	18	325
	32	1898
14	17	1611
	24	2348
	34	1169
15	38,39	830
16	45	1640
	46	1660
	48	557
17	2	1783
20	12	1195
	14	2367
	24	1367
21	11	758
23	7,18	29[illegible]

	14	1657
	21	167
	21	1171
	22	2066
25	4	1420
32	23	960
	23	1701
	23	1782
	23	1963

DEUT.

1	16	1020
	16,17	1121
2	25	238
4	2	1715
	13	572
	15,16,	933
	19	936
5	24	1826
	26	974
7	9,10	100
8	2	824
11	12	1621
12	7	349
13	12,13,	585
	14	585
14	29	371
15	7,11	875
	9	569
16	20	1845
17	8	304
19	5	959
	5	1751
	18,19	851
20	3	88
21	1,2,3,4,5, &c.	145
	15,16,	1376
	17	1376
24	14,15	136
	15	867
	15	1037
25	1	1073
	9	684
26	5	571
	6	544
28	23	1717
	24	1719
	63	400
	66	184
29	18	942
	19	501
	19	1490
	21	970
	29	1606
31	2	544
	29	1631
32	4	1347
	5	833
	11,12,	2123
	13	747
	15	918
	15	1748
	15	2340
	25	711
	26,27	487
	26,27	591
	31	854
	31	1515
	34	1764
	36	2353
33	2	1797
	8,9	10
	8,9	18
	9	77
	13,14,	1992
	15	1992
	17	156
	28	1983
34	5,6	449
	7	544
39	29	435

JOSHUA.

1	5	2232
2	9	711
5	9	708
7	21	406
	21	754
	21	829
10	11	1966
	12	1013
22	29	316
24	15,16	316

JUDGES.

2	1,2,3	764
	13	933
	17	1426
4	6,7	182
5	12	2354
	20	211
	20	1966
	21	131
6	37,40	1984
7	2	2181
	12	295
	21	1911
9	9,15	595
	23	1809
10	6	294
16	25	679
17	6	690
19	9	315

RUTH.

1	6	1576
	20	306
2	1	1544

I. SAM.

1	6	2093
	14	721
	15	765
	18	639
2	3	464
	3	823
	3	1401
	3	1571
	3	1595
	3	2258
	9	531
	9	1439
	25	942
	30	693
	31	2153
3	1	412
	1	1256
	21	295
4	21	922
7	2	1444
9	9	98
10	1	939
	6,9,11	1086
	12	1086
12	3	1459
	6	1548
	20,24	492
	21	2227
14	16	748
15	3	700
	11	2353
	11,29	70
	23	942
	23	1505
	23	1652
	29	1501
17	40	2200
22	8	1634
24	2	2027
	6	317
	13	373
	14	2216
25	10	573
	10	881
	25	674
	26	330
26	8	1198
	10	956
28	19	1141
29	7	666
	16	667

II. SAM.

2	22	1438
3	8	051
	36	562
	36	1189
5	6,8	580
	20,21	1127
6	3	2347
	14,20	620
	22	296
8	2	1900
9	7	370
12	13	855
	13	1265
	41	1230
13	2,6	846
	22	951
15	3	1020
	6	388
	31	1854
16	10	694
	10	1702
17	12	1982
20	21	894
22	8	250
	29	528
23	3	1377
	6	589
	15	1640
	16	107
24	14	701
	14	1662

I. KING.

2	4	1680
8	11	2164
10	21	412
11	4	808
	9	1200
12	10	2153
	28,30	120
13	33,34	514
17	1	468
	12	1199
19	11	1873
	18	940
20	1,5	70
	11	1884
	28	1751
21	13	1381
	13	1384
	19	107
	20	965
22	30	730
	34	1750

II. KING.

3	17	1771
4	2	1776
	29	1884
5	7	2182
6	10	1199
	22	2370
	25	664
8	10	374
	13	650
9	25	902
	26	459
10	7	269
	16	1102
16	3	1230
17	15	362
	17	965
19	3	74
	16	604
20	19	23
21	13	1899
22	20	383
23	29	677

I. CHRON.

12	32	1738
14	11	387
15	13	2347
16	25	1706
29	10,16	1536

II. CHRON.

2	5	906
16	8,9	1400
	8,9	1402
	9	457
	9	811
	9	1403
19	6	898
20	12	865
	12	1620
	12	1662
21	20	375
26	15,16	590
28	9	700
	13,22	1651
30	10	622
31	20,21	1838
32	25	596
	25,26	1220
34	28	1367

EZRA.

9	13	2148

NEHEM.

4	6	2087

ESTHER.

3	5	978
4	14	1118
7	3,4	978

PSALMS.

1	1	826
	1	1337
	2	63
	2	1429
	4	601
2	1,2	1530
	3	1630
	4	618
	4	2087
	11	693
	12	1016
	12	1127
	12	1670
4	2	363
	2	674
	4	495
	6	675
	6	1436
	6,7	918
	8	1448
5	3	1150
	4,5,6	667
	4,5,6	808
	5	32
	5	1299
6	2	726
	4,5	759
7	2	719
	3	1616
	5	1230
	8	1067
	9	910
8	2	1090
	3,4	1527
	4	1878
	5	192
9	3,4,5	305
	5	260
	9	1689
	9	1962
	14	2246
	16	435
	18	1435
10	3	331
	3	1102
	3	1604
	3,4	919
	4	13
	4	954
	5	1370
	5,6	594
	8,9	844
	11	1406
	13,14	459
	13,14	812
	14	1431
	16	1712
	18	1015
11	3	1895
	4	1400
	4	1620
12	4	557
	5	1546
	5	1617
13	1	1436
14	2	1853
	4	1338
	6	2219
	6	2381
16	2	349
	3	1535
	8	812
	8	1140
	8	1624
	10	961
	10	1229
	11	1436
17	3	47
	3	1552
	11,12	405
	13	367
	13,14	1784
	14	338
	14	1248
18	5	776
	7,8,9	1873
	10	718
	11	1727
	14	261
	21	2141
	23	1215
	26	2339
	33	2030
	40,41	346
	41	1561
19	1	477
	4	1953
	5	438
	5	934
	6	277
	9	499
	10	63
	11	1342
	12	1485
	12	2293
	14	347
21	8,	12
22	Tit.	2030
	13	89
	17	477
	21	2068
	27	1935
23	1,2	2046
	4	1405
	6	712
24	1	1895
	6	17
25	4,5	1487
	10	744
	10	1426
	10	1519
	11	1479
	11	1708
	14	99
	14	433
26	2	910
	9	1366
27	1	593
	2	978
	8	983
	8	2004
	10	2078
	12	920
28	3	1129
29	1,2,3,	470
	&c.	1755
	3	281

	3	281
	8,9	2032
	10	258
	10	466
30	2,3	760
	4	1579
	5	724
	5	1927
	6	187
	6	591
	7	1436
31	6,7	1661
	15	1712
	19	801
	23	1844
	23	2364
32	1	43
	1	888
	1	984
	3	726
	5	1479
	5	1837
	6	344
	6	386
	7	1620
	8	458
	8	531
	9	1557
	19	688
33	6	1143
	9	1926
	17	2090
34	5	1438
	6	341
	7	212
	9	501
	10	2017
	14	712
	16	1283
	20	727
35	12,13	2358
	13,14	768
	15	678
	21	2107
	28	312
36	1	499
	4	318
	4	840
	4	1682
	6	100
	6	1944
	8	1641
	8	1667
	9	302
	9	1437
	9	1892
37	4	351
	5	707
	6	44
	6	2369
	13,18	724
	13,18	725
	16	370
	25	370
	36	1394
	37	1450
	37,38	342
	37,38	954
38	4	903
	16,17	1169
39	1	114
	1	512
	1,2,3	1116
	4	598
	4	1891
	4	2032
	5	734
	5	1607
	7	378
	11	381
	11	1233
	11	1237
40	5	2287
	6	1134
	12	103
	12	386
	15	2107
41	1,2,3	774
	9	329
	12	305
42	1,2,	85
	5	458
	8	562
	8	1552
44	1	454
	17,18	56
	19	804
45	2	968
	6	18
46	1,2,10	459
	2	345
	2	1893
	9	208
	9,10	1192
	10	1688
	10	1790
47	9	898
48	2,3,4	38
49	1	674
	4	297
	6	913
	7,8,9,	753
	10	753
	10	378
	11	595
	11	715
	14	174
	18	675
	20	117
	20	1371
	20	1556
50	3,4	1875
	17	1428
	18,19	1341
	19	965
	20	704
	21	2303
51	1	1478
	4	2128
	5	218
	8	726
	12	718
	12	1382
	12	1610
	15	966
	15	1222
	17	862
	17	906
52	1	1015
	1	1604
	1	1545
	7	397
	7	913
55	17	737
	19	490
	19	497
	23	175
	23	1614
56	8	478
57	1	1767
	8	967
58	1,2	1845
	2	809
	3	696
	10	398
	10	1421
	11	435
62	1	1013
	8	722
	10	363
	10	913
	10	1363
63	1,2,	349
	1,2,	522
64	9,10	1421
65	1	1900
	5	1876
	5,6,7	256
	7	466
	8	1930
66	9,10,	468
	3	1708
	8,9	309
	11	1200
	11,12	2355
	18	1682
68	5	880
	5	885
	8,9	1716
	13	348
	13	620
	13	1281
	18	2354
	20	1947
	20	2355
	32	281
	35	2249
69	4	953
	20	570
	23	2191
	27	964
	27	1490
	28	177
	33	1654
72	1	303
	1	1377
	3	116
	6	613
	6	893
	6	1721
	9,10,11	554
	13	1364
	14	424
73	1	308
	1	1174
	1	1519
	1	1703
	1	2130
	2	57
	15	1174
	16	403
	16,17	403
	16,17	481
	21,22	784
	22	317
	22	1486
	22	2293
	28	1549
74	9	1445
	20	141
	20	1955
75	3	263
	5	2094
	5	2258
	6	1832
	8	365
76	10	473
77	3	86
	5,6	1028
	6	1552
	7	744
	12	1792
	19	436
	19	1944
78	5	1413
	8,32	1704
	36	315
	36	1123
	49	1247
	64	375
	72	2336
79	1	757
80	1	1797
	3,7,19	2171
81	8,11	605
	11	1216
	11	1422
	11	1687
	12	1446
	16	1664
82	6	197
	6	555
	6	689
	7	1392
84	5	115
	6	764
	11	1613
87	4	265
88	10	759
	11	240
	13	2237
	15	236
89	9,10	268
	19	570
	35	1197
	39	473
	46,47	751
	48	753
	70	1011
90	1,2,3	1892
	1,2,3	1249
	3	750
	5	392
	11	903
	11	1580
	11	1669
91	1,2,3,4	342
	6	374
	11	827
	16	1977
92	2	436
	6	1698
	11	597
	12,13,14	55
	15	1247
93	3,4	256
94	5,6,7	55
	12	2283
97	3	2257
	9	1361
	10	515
	11	168
99	4	135
101	4	1125
	8	1937
102	14	1678
	17	1564
	17	2362
	25,26	1711
	25,26	1529
	26	67
103	1,2	1428
	1,5	1277
	10	83
	10	1351
	10	1541
	10	1575
	14	734
	14	1370
104	3	249
	4	2004
	5	1893
	5,6,7,8	266
	5,6,7,8	467
	15	950
	19	1933
	19	1996
	21	2010
	24	276
	25	239
	30	1143
	30,32	78
	32	261
	34,35	1615
105	14	1381
	17,18,	1994
	19	1994
	18	308
	18	970
	23	1995
	44	2063
106	7	1578
	12,13	606
	20	932
	20	2164
	30	854
107	27	748
	41	1689
	42	179
	42	508
	42	2140
108	1	155
	1	1909
109	4	179
	4	2358
	6	695
	7	346
	7	1073
	18	727
110	3	1383
	3	2055
	5	695
111	2	280
	2	435
	2,4	1700
	2,7	1530
	2,7	1531
	4	1300
	10	501
112	1,2,3	594
114	7	262
115	3	1598
116	3	12
	3	725
	3	959
	5	423
	10	1138
	12	1536
118	17	1304
	22,23,	1905
	24	1905
	27	1930
119	6	1428
	7,20	303
	13	614
	14	427
	17	2283
	18	1255
	21	2176
	33,34	2296
	35	2296
	37	796
	48	894
	69	415
	83	785
	104,163	317
	105	527
	108	346
	126	2148
	127	63
	133	877
	160	2193
120	3	704
	4	664
121	3	961
	4	525
	8	544
123	2	877
	2,3,4,	256
	5	256
125	5	55
126	1	2036
	4	1644
	4	1769
	4	2355
	6	2064
127	1,2,3	924
	3	541
	4	2267
128	1,2,3	503
	2	2063
129	5,8	565
130	3	1364
	3	1575
	3	1847
131	1	1218
132	17	528
133	1	706
	1	2345
136	1,2,3,	744
	4.5	744
	2	1781
	25	1367
137	1,4	788
	5	418
	6	919
	7	701
	7	956
138	6	1221
	6	1561
	6	2121
	8	433
139	1,24	50
	1,24	480
	9	1935
	14,15	870
140	3	561
	11	959
141	3	557
	3	689
	3	966
	5	2358
	7	1947
142	4.5	15
144	1,2	553
	3	2136
	5	561
	14	564
145	10	1908
	11	1908
	18	346
146	3	2157
	3,4,	1713
147	4	478
	6	1217
	10,11	1281
	15,16	761
	16,17	1985
	18	467
	18	1775
	20	1186
150	2	1706

PROVER.

1	5	1085
	7	502
	20,21	450
	22	1337
	22	1427
	24	243
	24	1231
2	11,12	526
	16	843
	17	150
	18	237
	19	858

9 893

3	9	893
	15,26	526
	17	827
	20	1982
	27	875
	28	896
	29	1306
4	14,15	505
	17	107
	17	1336
	18	296
	20,21	61
	23,24	314
	25,26,	54
	27	54
5	3	843
	21	811
6	2	855
	6	1553
	6	1557
	11	341
	12,13	1620
	26,27, &c.	151
	30,32	853
	33	2231
7	15	116
	21	843
	25,26	810
	27	810
	27	372
8	15	548
	21	750
	22, to	483
	32	483
	22,52	279
	34	154
	34	607
	36	2231
9	1	2186
10	4	654
	12	985
	15	914
	19	986
	19	1507
	20	163
	22	779
	22	1663
	28	781
	32	2336
11	4	339
	4	778
	4	915
	4	1269
	10	298
	24	379
	26	167
12	10	743
	10	1038
	19	1390
	22	817
	23	1216
	27	379
13	2	106
	3	314
	8	1274
	12	879
	12	910
	20	784
	22	379
14	4	2057
	4	2065
	8	501
	8	2291
	24	915
	31	871
15	3	1400
	9	712
	11	221
	11	244
	13	786
	15	328
	15	2218
	29	1561
16	1	1085
	2	823
	2	1803
	3	1608
	6	499
	11	822
	15	620
	23	312
	26	1157
	31	657
17	11	306
	11	1247
	15	1311
	15	1073
	17	683
	17	2368
	22	786
	23	914
18	1	426
	1	1314
	4	729
	9	325
	9	782
	21	967
	22	1213
	23	1387
19	2	819
	2	1883
	4	683
	12	1984
	14	541
	21	2286
	23	503
20	8	19
	8,26	553
	12	1310
	12	1635
	27	527
	27	774
21	3	2338
	4	852
	5	2061
	6	967
	14	914
	17	1642
	24	1337
	27	1353
	27	1633
	27	1649
	30	1607
22	2	768
	2	871
	2	1126
	3	1737
	4	503
	24	720
23	2	720
	2	1250
	5	718
	5	2115
	6	1152
	10,11	1435
	18	1115
	31	47
	31	104
	31	794
	31	935
24	7	1135
	8	851
	11,12	573
	16	2029
	17,18	958
	21	610
	25	578
	31	1299
25	2	585
	2	984
	13	1760
	19	2063
	20	788
	23	1771
	27	1222
	27	1825
26	1	1760
27	1	458
	6	969
	14	565
	19	1152
	20	240
	21	46
	21	647
	22	2283
28	1	500
	1	1029
	2	1467
	3	1545
	12	185
	14	500
	17	1267
	20	819
	21	1120
	28	113
29	2	564
	7	585
	9	618
	11	1115
	23	2170
30	1	2280
	4	462
	4	1724
	4	1971
	8,9	50
	8,9	62
	9	876
	12	1060
	18	39
	32	315
31	6	572
	15	62
	17	2191
	25	2044
	30	841
	31	893
	31	1700

ECCLES.

1	2	814
	4	1893
	6	1778
	15	1950
2	2	621
	10	830
	10	796
	14	1798
	26	378
	26	1086
5	1	817
	3	1205
	8	364
	10	371
	10	916
	17	915
	17	724
7	2	701
	3	623
	9	1072
	11	915
	12	426
	13,14	1994
	16	1331
	21	979
	24	1256
	26	841
	26	989
	29	1260
8	11	501
	11	1843
	15	2371
9	2	498
	4	26
	6	155
	7	2336
	11	925
	11	2017
	13	657
10	7	747
	16	609
	19	427
	19	618
	19	914
	20	688
11	1	882
	5	436
12	1	272
	1	775
	1	1127
	2	1760
	7	714
	7	756
	7	1146
	10	1097
	10	1823
	13	495
	13	501

CANTIC.

1	1	11
	3	182
	5	778
	5	779
	6	933
	6	2275
	7,8	17
	9	2110
2	10,11,	1988
	12	1988
	12	1908
	14	1281
	14	1564
	14	2361
3	1	1552
	1,2,3,	14
	5	301
4	9	842
	9	1624
	12	1764
	16	1035
	16	1761
5	2	845
	14	421
8	12	1500

ISAIAH.

1	2	1557
	3	1430
	3	1555
	3	1580
	5	1061
	8	381
	10	1384
	11	974
	15	1561
	15,16,	17
	18	32
	23	880
	24	1446
	25,26,	1841
	27	1841
	31	1676
	31	2201
2	9	1483
	19	205
	21	1370
	22	309
	22	310
	22	647
	22	2097
	22	2136
	22	2368
3	1,2,3,4	551
	4,5	691
	5	624
	5	1078
	6,7	1375
	8	982
	9	1005
	11	1615
	12	1465
	14	107
	16	842
	16	844
	18,19	843
4	3	178
	4	1841
5	4,7	1039
	5	705
	6	1617
	8	380
	13	1647
	16	1842
	18	793
	18	1214
	19	903
	20	992
	26	397
6	5	2303
	10	237
	10	1202
7	13	1188
	18	397
8	9	2178
	11	357
	11	378
	16	1783
	19	1115
	20	1517
	21	659
	21	765
9	2	1405
	5	1439
	13	1637
	16	1465
10	1,2	868
	3	1834
	6	1613
	10	12
	13	2181
	15	1361
	25	1586
11	2	1086
	3	1074
	3	2108
	4	1232
	9	2282
	11	1023
	13	269
13	2,3	904
	12	915
14	9,10	384
	10	197
	12	1909
	13	38
	13,14,	392
	15	392
	23	951
	27	1599
16	12	343
17	13	1771
18	2,7	1899
19	18	933
20	5,6	771
	5	2157
21	1	1769
	10	2267
22	2	711
	8,9	2381
	12,13	787
	14	787
	13	723
	18	392
24	1	251
	20	381
	6	1664
25	3	1449
26	7	823
	7	1803
	9	496
	11	1431
	11	1737
	12	1439
	16	343
27	1	276
	4,5	1604
	4,5	1611
	5	1481
	5	1968
	7,8,9	1846
	8	228
	8	1965
	11	77
	11	1142
	11	1550
	11	2085
28	7	1824
	10,11	1586
	16	1501
	16	1903
	21	806
	22	1629
	24	2059
	24,27,	408
	28,29,	408
	26,29,	1607
	29	2294
29	9	260
	9	779
	10	156
	15	45
	15	241
30	1	43
	1	642
	1	990
	1	1491
	7,15	906
	13	1417
	18	1265
	18	1291
	24	1140
	28	1464
	28,29	688
	30	904
31	1	2109
	4	2014
32	2	1407
	2	1965
	3	1306
	4	1090
	4	1692
	5	1387
	7	851
	17	1349
33	1	836
	16	1689
	17	2124
34	7	2067
	11	1899
		1,2,6,7

35 1,2,6,7 1976
5 1319
5,6 582
8 826
36 18 1669
38 11 1570
13 726
18 759
21 374
40 2 1132
2 2358
5,6 974
6 1361
12 464
26 929
26 1997
27 304
27 1437
28 1599
31 2124
41 14 223
14 1248
16 391
23 36
23 1144
23 1606
42 8 932
18 1526
43 3 1672
4 1604
4 2136
13 26
13 74
25 984
44 3,4,5, 1976
5 1123
24 1398
25 1854
25,26 66
25,26 480
45 1 686
4 1123
5 2167
7 508
7 1955
9 871
9 1189
14 1629
15 450
15 1406
19 1565
24 28
46 10 475
10 458
47 3 1446
9 950
48 8 1211
17 1692
49 4 2226
6 582
13,14, 745
15 745
15 2078
15,16 1428
16 1622
22 894
50 2 262
4 97
4 1211
4 1255
4 1883
7,8,9 1026
11 1570
51 9 265
12 1881
12,13 162
16 160
21 779
52 7 1258
53 1 1258
53 1 1543
1 2154
3 1422
54 1 180
7 1579
9 1725
10 58
10 1893
13 1487
16,17 277
17 2268
17 2201
55 4 559
8 278
10,11 617
11 1722
13 1041
56 11 2016
57 1 571
1,2 196
3,4,5 931
16 24
16 89
16 721
17 1400
20 255
20 269
58 1 295
2,3,4,5 1455
5 2258
7 876
7 889
7 2081
9 895
10,11 531
11 726
11 886
11 1255
11 1244
11 1330
59 1 307
1 744
8,9 304
11 671
16 578
16 1599
60 5 501
17 116
17 414
61 7 2365
62 6 1700
63 3 1598
5 570
10 742
12 2153
17 501
64 1 749
2 1987
6 324
6,7 2331
7 1885
8,9 1142
65 1 2155
16 301
20 665
20 1655
66 1 1621
2 457
2 495
2 677
2 1616
2 1874
5 668

JEREM.

1 17 1884
30 2226
2 2 1286
5 360
12 260
13 601
23,24 1214
24 117
24 2032
36,37 526
3 3 614
5 1545
5 2280
4 1 2309
2 299
14 798
14 2288
18 509
18 815
18 2341
22 1125
30 2391
5 1 1843
4,5 1091
5 1345
5 2039
22,23 496
24 496
24 468
25 1735
26 1528
6 6 1544
8 67
10 1344
7 12,14, 1443
15 1443
16 1733
31 295
8 5 322
5 834
6,7,8 1558
8 1737
8 1765
15 1041
15 2226
9 3 200
5 119
10 11,12 1894
13 1749
23 625
24 1579
24 1841
12 1 431
2 343
13 11 813
16 531
16 1406
14 8,9,11 1445
11 75
11 2333
21 2340
22 1981
15 1 740
1 758
7 542
10 1023
19 424
16 16 960
17 5 1370
9 43
9 840
13 1834
17 386
17 711
17 911
18 7,8 2353
18 1092
23 1483
20 10 1026
10 1168
21 3 1937
22 14 1898
15,23 2178
18 375
24 1019
23 23 457
23 1751
25 16 1392
27,28 365
38 2018
29 6 1621
11 2287
12 2362
31 18 87
18 744
18 807
18 1417
18,19, 1265
20 1265
23 564
34 1487
35,36 257
32 15,17, 2285
27 2285
32 1852
39 40
39 424
39 488
33 9 497
36 24 263
41 6 1138
43 13 933
44 27,28 372
47 6,7 1440
48 11 1560
49 16 908
16 1362
50 24 1454
38 1155
51 7 47
25 707
26 1903
59 556

LAMEN.

1 12 1527
12 1531
15 2004
2 6 381
12 722
14 1128
3 4 1241
13 2267
14 680
27 885
28 906
28 1360
33,34 1593
34 1654
37 1441
65 2253
4 3 2081
5 124
6 1391
8 620
17 877

EZEK.

2 4 765
7 1544
3 26 561
4 10,11 473
16 1730
5 5,6,7,8 1420
13 400
6 9 830
7 2 1749
10 1218
11 22
17 2264
9 9 942
13 9 178
18 1128
14 8 961
13 1007
18 25 52
25 217
25 1703
20 23,24 830
25 830
21 6 2191
22 6 1545
14 89
14 262
14 908
18 48
24 13 509
21,22, 374
23 374
28 2 1919
29 20 1613
21 1136
30 21 2158
33 17 464
32 680
34 2,3,4 228
36 20 1531
37 1264
44 5 2299
47 3,4,5 2282

DANIEL.

1 4 2098
27 1105
2 32,33 414
34 1396
44 372
3 29 1658
4 17 1414
19 331
27 1490
30 925
34,35 25
35 1348
5 2 1803
23 309
25 823
6 4,5 1167
22 874
7 2 266
2 1772
7 587
9,10 49
15 336
8 5 165
8 306
13 478
16 2291
9 3 962
24 1764
24 2329
11 6 1544
45 569
12 4 1402

HOSEA.

1 5 391
7 1399
7 2236
2 6 1175
8 1580
14 536
21,22 1977
3 5 497
4 104
4 1061
4 1 98
1 142
11 808
14 848
17 536
17 1414
18 1535
5 1 1464
10 104
13 1333
14 1446
14 1654
15 1446
6 4 719
7 9 533
9 1447
9 1277
9 1581
11 1497
11 1345
14 344
14 1548
14 1560
16 2309
8 5 2039
9 9 852
11 194
13,14 369
10 7 163
11 2059
13 1306
12 7,8 377
8 1544
14 306
13 1 1081
1 1744
2 940
3 719
6 974
7,8 1446
9 815
14 1274
15 390

JOEL.

1 6 587
2 6 620
13 2311
26 58
3 18 1716

AMOS.

2 4 1302
6 110
6 1120
7 110
7 111
14 654
3 3 1338
10 106
4 12 75
12 807
12 1967
13 1967

5	10	545
	13	557
	13	1136
	24	387
	24	581
6	7,10	15
7	2	197
	2	1181
	2	1758
	14	663
8	9,11	1730
	9,11	2120

OBADI.

	3,4	592
	10,11,	955
	12	955
	12	805

JONAH.

1	5	343
	7	301
2	2	736
3	4,10	70
4	1,8	1066
	8	1970
	9	991

MICAH.

2	1,2	117
	1,2	120
	3	58
	3	191
	10	1481
3	6,7	1734
4	2	1440
	2	1487
	6	580
5	7	1984
	8	2014
6	6	905
	6	2337
	9	80
	9	1196
	11	322
7	3	654
	6	2340
	8	955
	17	1080
	18	602
	18	1478
	18	2328

NAHUM.

1	3	26
	3	279
	3	1610
	3	1771
	3	1876
	4	1609
	7	159
	9	805
	9	951
	15	1381
2	10	620

HABAK.

1	7	25
	8	1907
	10	1676
	11	2182
	12,13	190
	14	1400
	16	925
2	3	1076
	3	1713
	3,4	101
	4	1260
	6	377
	9	591
	11	893
	20	608
3	8	1609
	16	2303
	17	1339
	17	1449
	17	2235
	19	2630

ZEPH.

1	12	948
2	1,2	1754
	3	68
3	3	1907
	5	1925
	9	898
	9	1140
	9	1912
	10	1278
	12	260
	12	1617
	14,15	303
	19	580

HAGGAI.

1	5	1430
	6,9	535
	9	1808
	9	603
	9	2226
2	13	720
	17	1967

ZECHA.

1	5	69
	6	102
	6	586
	8	1041
	15	700
2	13	608
	13	1192
	13	2262
3	1	695
	1	2233
	3	731
	9	1623
4	6	906
	7	47
	7	423
	7	1689
	7	1708
	10	293
	10	1899
	12	1412
	12	1831
	14	2233
8	6	2285
	16	545
	19	1595
9	8	189
	11	1274
	14	1769
10	1	614
	1	2002
	3	2110
	11	269
11	8	808
	9	978
	17	2153
12	3	2228
	10	306
	10	2228
	11,12	2228
13	9	49
	9	1501

MALAC.

1	3	1627
	6	1851
	14	1181
	14	1651
2	1,2	368
	2	168
	14	853
	15	1116
	17	331
	17	1842
3	1	1252
	2,3	49
	2,3	1768
	5	69
	10	115
	15	332

MATTH.

2	17,18	760
3	17	1753
	19	1219
5	3	1062
	15	213
	18	1394
	28	795
	34	299
	39	548
	43	952
	44	1911
	45	1927
6	6	937
	22	2255
	24	2324
	27	1189
7	1	319
	1	1323
	3	1460
	6	650
	27	337
	29	1692
8	23,24	268
	26	463
	26	490
9	38	1113
10	13	2358
	14,15	1253
	17	1112
	29,30	476
	29,30	478
	42	1541
11	5	582
	10	1848
	12	706
	16,17	619
	19	1311
	19	1517
	23	733
	25	409
	25	1451
	30	29
	30	2346
12	18,19	228
	31	1145
	32	370
	37	315
	37	967
	43,44	273
13	14	1484
	44,45	445
	44,45	450
15	19	839
	19	938
	26	650
	26	882
16	1,2,3	1736
	17	1241
	18	2228
	22,23,	977
	26	1296
	26	2226
18	15	1098
	19	1498
19	24	446
20	6,7	1930
	28	1673
21	16	1090
	31	1462
	44	394
22	31,32	715
23	2	546
	8	1874
	14	1455
	23	1789
	23	1840
	23	2185
	37	1767
	38	661
24	2	95
	2,3,36	449
	12	1774
	15	318
	20	388
	28	2122
	29	259
	31	1749
	43	389
	51	1462
25	4	1455
	24	122
	29	1269
	34	479
26	50	781
	53	211

MARK.

9	50	133
	50	209
10	24	916
13	32	451
14	33,34	489

LUKE.

1	6	1534
	34	215
	68	1576
	68,78	865
	68,78	866
5	8	497
6	25	315
	25	773
	25	923
	38	773
7	2	864
	29,30	1067
	29,30	1311
	37	174
	47	1480
9	54	234
	54,55	977
10	15	2228
	20	923
12	15	377
	19	1640
	20	198
	20	339
	20	446
	20	1111
	25	1396
14	12,13	881
	18	993
	23	2045
	26	141
	26	1376
15	32	235
16	9	446
	15	243
17	7	149
	10	1222
	22	522
	26,27	777
	37	2122
18	2	1604
	7	737
	14	1062
	14	1517
19	7	174
	15	324
	38,39, 40	1031 1908
21	25,26	1851
	34	1641
	42	890
22	32	30
	32	356
	53	706
23	29	369
24	41	619

JOHN.

1	11	2081
	13	1241
	18	987
2	25	1400
3	8	462
	8	1830
	8	1970
	8	1971
	20,21	137
	21	161
	31	426
4	21	17
	24	2347
5	25	239
	25	1210
	40	1203
6	27	665
	27	1368
	44	182
	44	1214
	44,45	1690
	66	59
7	38	1115
	48,49	1091
8	3,4,9	855
	9	1099
	36	1673
	44	118
	44	174
9	4	1930
	31	345
	31	1561
	39	139
	39	889
	40	1526
	41	1480
12	28,29	1753
	31	1841
13	23	987
14	6	1425
	8	1451
	27	85
	27	1448
15	2	1302
	15	433
	19	2081
16	7	1099
	12	1373
	13	1144
	13	1396
	33	1450
17	12	901
18	6	207
20	15	12
	23	1268
21	17	2288
	21	451

ACTS.

1	6,7	94
	7	1796
	25	1657
2	37	2348
	44	103
	4,5	877
3	19	235
4	19	1516
	19,20	997
	32	2253
5	3	964
	3	1003
	4	103
	36	1220
6	15	621
	15	785
	15	1909
8	9	1220
	22	798
	24	345
9	1	1576
	11	1265
	11	2356
	31	497
	39	889
10	35	2355
12	22,23	1128
	22,23	1397
	23	46
	26	2041

13	48	1067
14	16	964
	17	468
15	18	458
17	8	559
	25	1562
	26	16
	27,28	1424
	28	1892
	28	1981
	30	1575
18	28	1099
20	22	1992
	24	321
	20,27	360
	35	559
23	5	1383
24	26	571
26	11	112
	29	330

ROMANS.

1	18	1669
	19,20	1528
	20	1913
	22	493
	22	496
	23	932
	23	2164
	26	1687
	26,28	409
	26,28	849
	26,28	964
	28	1427
	28	1517
	32	702
2	14,15	1517
	14	136
	15	44
	17,22	1220
	19	548
	24	1531
3	4	1591
	4	2128
	5,6	1346
	8	704
	8	1684
	14	971
	19	1301
	25,26	27
4	1	1241
	5	319
	5	1069
	5	1345
	17,18, 19	248 248
5	7 8	1672
	20	993
6	12,13	963
	19	2040
	21	[illegible]
	21	815
	21	2227
	23	569
7	1	1796
	8,11	1168
	13	507
	21	793
	22	317
8	7	140
	7	204
	7	1494
	13	30
	15	491
	22	2034
	26	1563
	28	1304
	31	693
	33	34
	33,34	1449
	34	2362
	38,39	2087
9	3	178
	14	1347
	15,19	1191
	18	26
	20	1881
	22	100
	22	1610
10	3	2306
	16	454
	17,18	438
	21	757
11	17	1664
	32,33	435
	35	2236
12	1	906
	1	940
	1	1704
	3	1221
	10	1124
	14	971
	15	767
	19	548
13	1	689
	1	1246
	3	327
	3	710
	3	1156
	5	690
	7	1124
	14	888
	14	1243
14	12	1226
	13	1168
	18	2338
	23	505
15	3	2046
	18	1147
16	20	2174
	27	1607

I. COR.

1	26	247
	26	409
	26	1090
	27	1089
2	10,11	1144
	12	1284
	14	409
	14	436
	14	1726
	16	1255
3	2	338
	5	1105
	13	49
	13	96
	18	436
	18	1088
	19	1608
4	5,6,	44
	6,7	2252
	7	1088
	7	2071
	9	1419
	14	1312
5	4,5	1502
6	7	548
	13,14, &c.	1452
	19	1142
	20	871
	20	899
7	20	1001
	21,22, 24	2040 2040
	29	789
	30	649
	31	646
8	1	452
	1	1103
	2	2293
	5	905
9	2,3	1212
	9	2017
	19,20, 21,22	233 233
	25	468
10	5,6,11	398
	11	1415
	13	29
	13	1409
	14,15	1516
	22	908
	22	1601
	26,28	2239
11	31,32	1566
	32	1729
12	26	767
	26	899
13	6	1312
	7	1167
	8	1951
	9	1485
	9,10	280
	12	1568
14	19	1118
	33	209
15	8	1996
	31	301
	32	117
	32	589
	44	1370
	54	591

II. COR.

1	9,10	752
	9,10	760
	12	338
	20	2350
	23,24	1157
	24	200
2	5	1824
	16	235
	17	360
	17	1594
3	6	1487
	12	1882
	14	1211
	17	1286
	18	1425
	18	2164
4	4	410
	6	18
	6	602
	6	477
	6	1568
	16	714
	17	903
	18	193
	18	648
	18	832
5	1	1397
	4	339
	4	755
	4	762
	4	1825
	6	716
	7	1285
	9	1282
	9	2335
	10	1835
	10,11	1875
	11	1569
	13	1068
	14	936
	14	1115
	16	1122
	17	1692
	20	1132
	21	2329
6	1	1912
	1	2345
	2	17
	4,8	171
	11	614
	14	1340
	14,15	1381
7	1	495
	1	2349
	6	694
	9	1524
	11	317
	11	779
8	5	2061
	9	768
	12	2338
9	8	1601
10	4	1676
	4,5	2160
	8,13	1899
	12	1227
	12	2162
11	13,14	1139
	24	1410
	29	776
	29	885
12	2,3	1595
	7	152
	10	28
	10	268
	14	1244
13	8	1594

GALAT.

1	10	1124
	15,16	2346
	16	2005
3	9	488
	10	821
	10	2308
4	26	2040
	27	180
6	1	1110
	1	1132
	3	1221
	7	835
	10	890
	12	1243

EPHES.

2	2	1338
	3	1650
	9	2252
	10	1126
	14	1903
	16	224
	16	669
3	8	1838
	15	1500
	19	1485
	19	1580
	20	1600
4	4,5,6	1148
	8	2354
	20	41
5	10	2338
	12	138
	15	814
	27	1276
	29	2081
6	6	813
	9	863
	10,11	30

PHILIP.

1	9,10	424
	9,10	446
	16,17, 18	1139 1139
	19	28
	23	716
	23	1662
2	3	653
	3	1124
	12	494
	12	901
	13	2083
	15	1931
	20	1455
3	2	651
	3	1241
	7,8	2305
	6,7,8, 9	323 323
	12,13	59
	19	1102
	21	677
	21	1369
	21	2135
4	7	507
	11	1643
	12	543
	13	29

COLOS.

1	6	616
	16	1625
	21	1648
2	3	1354
	5	1812
	11	1397
	12	488
	18	931
3	3	447
	3	1406
	11	869
	18	451
	22	996
	6	968

I. THES.

2	13	615
3	3	80
4	9	703
	15,16	95
5	2	149
	2	388
	18	10
	18	58
	20	862
	22	504

II. THES.

1	9	18
	9	87
	9	394
2	3	901
	6,7	1735
	11	510
3	1	1704
	2	162

I. TIM.

1	5	2349
	9	117
	9	1381
2	8	834
	8	1564
	8	2330
	9	2377
	11,12, 13	840 840
3	2	881
	6	1103
4	2	1139
	12	1077
5	5	661
	8	2081
	13	181
	24,25	1407
6	5	338
	6	1643
	7	384
	9	819
	9	911
	10	727
	10	779
	10	1039
	11	126
	15,16	1607
	16	40
	16	252
	16	715
	16	1146
	17	913

II. TIM.

1	6	1203
	6	1885
2	3	2080
	3,4,5	2176
	6	2270
	15	232
	22	1080
	26	1005
	26	1110
3	1,2,	804
	2	1221
	8,9	256
	9	1113
4	15	2015
	17	29

TITUS.

1	5	881
	16	654
2	9	2346
	14	334
3	1	548
	8	1541

HEBR.

1	1	1196
	5	1910
2	3	141
	7	192
	14	1248
	14	1450
3	2	448
	7,13	1198
	12	1424
	13	678
4	13	240
5	11	131
	11,12	1084
	13	1254
6	6	511
	6	1673
	10	1247
	16	300
	17,18	1197
	19	337
	19	912
7	7	563
9	14	302
	27	1197
	27	1198
	27	1366
10	2	1027
	10,26	1198
	23	53
	24	976
	26	1673
	34	1649
11	1	1098
	3	247
	3	1893
	7	777
	7	1744
	8	2004
	10	1891
	25	1641
	25	1686
	25,26	1322
12	1	54
	1	521
	2	649
	2	962
	4	1195
	5	1099
	9	714
	9,10	1106
	10	1367
	14	667
	14	1285
	16	804
	17	2380
	19	282
	24	1032
	26	1893
	29	897
13	1,2,3	767
	4	859
	5	520
	5	683
	14	1891

JAMES.

1	5	1087
	6,7	2360
	9,10	195
	13	1000
	14	164
	14	938
	14	963
	14,15	509
	17	1086
	17	2007
	18	1982
	20,21	1110
	26	314
	26	965
2	1,2,3,	1121
	4,5	1121
	9	1099
	10	1428
	12	1134
	15,16	768
	16	886
3	2	557
	2	967
	6	968
	8	966
	17	325
4	3,4	921
	9	788
	9	923
	12	908
	12	1481
	12	2179
5	1	1616
	1,2	889
	9	546
	11	2365
	12	299
	13	679
	13	788
	15	760
	15	1266
	16	737
	16	2360
	19,20	985

I. PETER.

1	6	1773
	8	616
	12	448
	12	1271
	13	1885
	15	52
	17	982
	18	1369
2	17	652
	18,19,	996
	20	996
	21	52
3	3	2377
	7	2200
	13	2341
	13,14	419
	19,20	240
	20	1443
4	8	985
	9	881
	11	1140
	11	1882
	17	1107
	17	2146
5	7	1869
	8	2020

II. PET.

1	5,6,7	616
	9	1289
	14	598
	18,19	1197
	21	358
2	9	1614
	14	153
3	16	1063
	16	1883
	18	2282

I. JOHN.

1	1,3	481
	5	137
	9	1347
2	3,4,5,6	98
	16	426
	16	794
	16	839
	19	1138
	20	437
	27	1486
3	6	1569
	7	1060
	8	508
	9	816
	9	2142
	11,12	954
	20,21	44
4	12	2298
	18	491
	18	1835
	18	2263
5	3	2346
	14,15	738
	16	1483
	16	2333
	19	2176

III. JOHN.

	2	970
	2	2403

JUDE.

	1	1615
	6	1224
	6	1913
	6	1963
	10	1557
	14,15	1875
	15	[illegible]
	15	1160

REVEL.

1	17	1713
	18	1947
2	2	47
	2	54
	9	652
	9	1138
	13	1023
3	3	1563
	9	1138
	12	263
	18	1821
4	1	1763
	3	1801
	6	1987
5	5	599
6	8	373
8	3,5	2361
9	6	340
	6	1679
10	1	1701
	8	1255
11	2,3	2033
	3	1199
	8	1884
12	13,14	2043
	15	419
	15	2125
	15,16	256
	16	1614
	16	1703
	16	1801
14	2	1747
	13	1349
15	3	1698
	3	1851
	4	496
	4	1420
	1,15	1803
17	12,13	2253
	13	466
	6,7	2364
18	7	466
	21	733
	21,22,	789
	23	789
20	12	869
21	17	1153
22	15	651
	15	809

FINIS.